And least we should seeme in the worst kinde unthankfull to those singular Patrons of learning, or rather that I may use the words of Eumenius, toward the Parents of our Children: let us summarily rehearse both themselves, and the Colledges also which they founded and consecrated to good Literature, to their honourable memory, and that out of the Cambridge Story. The report goeth, that Cantaber a Spaniard, 375. yeeres before the Nativity of Christ, first began and founded this University: Also that Sebert King of the East-Angles restored it againe in the yeere after Christs birth, 630. Afterwards being other whiles overthrowne and destroyed with the Danish stormes, it lay a long time forlorne and of no account, untill all began to revive under the Normans government.

And not long after, Innes, Hostels and Halles were built for Scholers, howbeit endowed with no possessions. But Hugh Balsham Bishop of Ely, in the yeere 1284. built the first Colledge called Peter-house, and endowed it with Lands: whose example these ensuing did imitate and follow: Richard Badew with the good helpe and furtherance of Lady Elizabeth Clare Countesse of Ulster, in the yeere 1340. founded Clare Hall: Lady Mary S. Paul Countesse of Pembroke in the yeere 1347. founded Clare Hall: The Guild or Society of Corpus Christi Breshren, Corpus Christi Colledge, which is called also S. Bennet Colledge: William Baseman Bishop of Norwich, about the yeere 1353. Trinity Hall: Edmund Gouevil in the yeere 1348. and John Cains Doctor of Physicke in our time, Gouevil and Cains Colledge: Henry the Sixth King of England erected Kings Colledge in the yeere 1441. whereunto he joynd a Chappell, which may rightly be counted one of the fairest buildings of the whole world. His wife Margaret of Anjou, in the yeere 1443. built Zusenes Colledge: Robert Woodlarke Professor of Divinity in the yeere 1459. S. Katharines Hall: John Alcocke Bishop of Ely in the yeere 1497. was the founder of Iesus Colledge: Lady Margaret Countesse of Richmond mother to King Henry the Seaventh, about the yeere 1506. erected Christi Colledge, and S. Johns, enlarged now in goodly manner with new buildings: Sir Thomas Audley Lord Chancellour of England, in the yeere 1542. built Maudslowe Colledge, which Sir Christopher Wray Lord chiefe Justice of England hath lately bewitched with new buildings and endowed with great possessions: And that most pious King, Henry the Eight, in the yeere of our salvation 1546. made Trinity Colledge of three others, to wit, of S. Michaels Hostel or Colledge, which Hervey Stanton in the reigne of Edward the Second built, of Kings Hall founded by King Edward the Third, and of Fishwicks Hostel. Which Colledge, that the Students might inhabit more pleasantly, is now repaired, nay rather new built, with that magnificence, by the carefull direction of Thomas Nevill Doctor of Divinity, Master of the said Colledge, and Deane of Canterbury, that it is become a Colledge for stately greatnesse, for uniforme building and beauty of the roomes, scarce inferiour to any other in Christendome: and he himselfe may bee accounted in the judgement even of the greatest Philosophers Truly * μεγαλοπρεπης, for bestowing so great cost in publicke and not in his owne private uses. Also wherein I congratulate our Age, and our selves in the behalfe of good learning, that honourable and prudent man Sir Walter Mildmay knight, one of the Privy Counsell to Queene Elizabeth, who founded a new Colledge in the honour of Emanuel: and Lady Francis Sidaine Countesse of Suffex, in her last will gave a Legacy of 5000. pounds to the building of a Colledge that should be called Sidney-Suffex, which is now fully finished.

F I let passe here little Monasteries and Religious houses because they were of small note, unless it were Barnwell Abbey, which Sir Paine Peurell a worthy and valiant warrior, Standard-bearer to Robert Duke of Normandy in the holy War against Infidels, translated, in the reigne of Henry the first, from S. Giles Church, where Picot the Sheriffe had ordained secular Priests, unto this place, and brought into it thirty Monkes, Colledges.

John Cains.

* Decently magnificent.

Barnwell.

Historia Barn-
wellensis.

Historia Barn-
wellensis.
* Paganus.

Monkes, for that himselfe at that time was thirty yeeres of Age. The reason of the name Barnwell, you may read if it please you, out of the private History of that place, in these words: * Sir Payne Peverell obtained of King Henry the First, a certaine plot of ground without the Burgh of Cambridge: Out of the very midst of that place there sprang certaine Fountaines very pure and lively, which in English they called Barnwell in those daies, as one would say the wells of Barnes, that is, Children; For that Boyes and Touthes meeting once a yeare there on the Even of Saint Iohn Baptists Nativity, after the English manner exercised themselves in wrestling and other sports and pastimes besitting their age, yea and manerly applauded one another with songs and minstrelsie. Whence it came, that for the number of Boyes and Girls running thither and there playing, grew to be a custome, that on the said daie a multitude of buyers and sellers repaired thither.

Neither was Cambridge, (albeit it was consecrated to the Muses) altogether free from the furies of Mars. For, when the Danes robbed and spoyleed up and downe, many times they wintered here: and in the yeere of Redemption 1010, when the Dane, by most cruell and terrible tyranny, bare downe all before him, they spared not the honour of the place, nor the Muses, (which we read that Sylla did at Athens) but pittifully burnt and defaced it all. Nevertheless at the first coming in of the Normans, it was sufficiently peopled. For, thus we read in the Donchey booke of King William the Conquerour. The Burrough of Gretnbridge is dividid in tenne Wards, and hath 387. Mansion houses. But eghtene houses were destroyed in building of the Castle, what time, as the said King William the First determined to awe the English every where, (whom lately hee had conquered) with Castles, as were with bridles of servitude. Afterwards in the Barons warre, it sustained great losse by the out-lawed Barons out of the Isle of Ely: therefore Henry the Third represseth their outrages caused a deepe ditch to be cast on the East side, which is called Kings ditch.

Here happily there is a secret expectation of some, that I should give mine opinion as touching the antiquity of this University. But I will bee no dealer in this case: For, I meane not to make comparison betweene these two most famous Universities of ours, to whom I know none equall. Howbeit I feare me, they have builded Castles in the Ayre, and thrust upon us devices of their owne brames; who extolling the antiquity thereof farre above any probability of truth, have written that this Camaber of Spaine streight after Rome was built, and many yeeres before the Nativity of Christ erected this University. True and certaine it is, that whatsoever it was first ordained, it was a seat of learning about the time of King Henry the First. For, thus wee read in an old Additament of Peter Blesensis. unto Hugh Abbot. Ioffred sent over to his Monour of Cotenham neere Cambridge, Gislebert the sonne of Monke, and professor of Divinity, with three other Monkes: who following him into the land, being througly furnished with Philosophicall Theoremes, and other primative sciences, repaired daily to Cambridge: and having hired a certaine publike Barne, made confession of their sciences, and in short space of time drew together a great number of scholars. But in the second yeere after their coming, the number of their Scholars grew so great, and from out of the whole Country as the Towne, that the biggest house and barnhouse in the Church whatsoever sufficed not to receive them all. Whereupon sorting themselves in severall places, and taking the University of Orleans for their paterne, every one beganning; Monke Odo a singular Grammarian and Satyricall Poet read Grammar and those of the younger sort assigned unto him; according to the Doctrine of Priscian; Remigius upon him. At one of the clocke, Terricus a most witty and subtle Scholar taught the elder sort of young men, Aristotles Logicke, after the Introduction of Porphyry and the Comments of Averroes. At three of the clocke Monke William read a little Tullies Rhetorike and Quintilians Flores: But the great Master Gislebert, upon Sunday, and Holy-dayes, preached GODS Word unto the People. And from that little Fountaine, which grew to bee a great River, wee see how the City of GOD might come enriched, and all England made fruitfull, by meanes of very many Masters and Teachers proceeding out of Cambridge, in manner of the Holy Paradise, &c.

Ioffred made Abbot of Crowland,
Anno 1109.

Stadium Au-
relianense.

But at what time it became an University by authority, Robert de Remington shall tell you. Under the Reigne (saith hee) of Edward the First, Gransbridge of a Schoole was made an University (such as Oxenford is) by the Court of Rome. But what meane I thus unadvisedly to step into these lists? Wherein long since two most learned old men have encountered one with another: Unto whom verely, as to right learned men I am willing to yeeld up my weapons, and vaile bonnet with all reverence. The Meridian line cutting the Zenith just over Cambridge, is distant from the furthest West poynt twenty three degrees, and twenty five scruples. And the Arch of the same Meridian lying betweene the Aequator and Verticall poynt, is fiftie two degrees and 11. scruples.

Cam from Cambridge continuing his course by Waterbeach an ancient feat of Nuns, which Lady Mary S. Paul translated from thence to Denny somewhat higher but nothing healthfuller, when in a low ground he hath spread a Mere, associateth himselfe with the River Ouse.

But to returne hard under Cambridge Eastward neere unto Sture a little brooke is kept every yeere in the moneth of September, the greatest Faire of all England, whether you respect the multitude of buyers and sellers resorting thither, or the store of commodities there to be vented. Hard by whereas the way was most comberous and troublesome to passengers to and fro, that right good and praise-worthy man G. Hervey Doctor of the Civill Law and M. of Trinity Hall in Cambridge, made not long since with great charges but of a Godly and laudable intent a very faire raised Causey, for three miles or thereabout in length toward Nethercat.

Neere unto Cambridge on the South-East side, there appeare aloft certaine high Hills, the Students call them Gogmagog-Hills: Henry of Huntingdon tearmed them Amanifina montana de Balsam, that is, The most pleasant Mountaines of Balsam, by reason of a little Village standing beneath them, wherein as hee writeth, the Danes left no kinde of most savage cruelty unattempted. On the top of these hills I saw a Fort intrenched, and the same very large, strengthened with a threefold Rampire: an hold surely in those dayes inexpugnable, as some skilfull men in feats of Warre bee of opinion, were it not that water is so farre off. Gervase of Tilbury seemeth to call it Fandelbura. Beneath Cambridge (saith hee) there was a place called Fandelbura, for that the Vandals wasting the parts of Brittain, with cruell slaughter of Christians, there encamped themselves: where upon the very top of the hill they pitched their Tents; there is a Plaint inclosed round with a Trench and Rampire, which hath entrance into it but in one place as it were at a Gate.

Touching the Marciall spectre, or sprite that walked here, which he addeth to the rest, because it is but a meere toyish and fantastickall devise of the doting vulgar fort: I willing over-passe it. For it is not my purpose to tell pleasant tales, and tickle cares. In the Vale under these hills is Salston to be seene, which from the Burges of Burgh-Green, by Walter De-la-pole and Ingaltorp, came unto Sir Iohn Nevill Marquesse

Mont-acute, and by his daughter and one of his heires to the Huddlestons, who have lived here in worship and reputation. More Eastward, first we meete with Hildersham, belonging sometimes to the Busslers and now by marriage to the Parises: Further hard by the Woods, is Hortheath situate, the Possession whereof is knowne by a long descent to have pertained unto the ancient Families of the Argentons and Alingtons, of whom elsewhere I have written, and is now the habitation of the Alingtons. Adjoyning hereunto is Castle Camps, the ancient seat also of the Peres Earles of Oxford, which Hugh Pere held (as the old booke of Inquisition Records) That he might be the Kings Chamberlaine: whereas notwithstanding most true it is, that Henry the First King of England granted unto Aubrey de Vere that Office in these words: The principall Chamberlaine of all England in Fee and Inheritance, with all the Dignities, Liberties, and Honours thereto belonging, as freely and honourably, as Robert Malet held the same, &c. The Kings notwithstanding ordained sometimes one, and sometimes another at their pleasure to execute this Office.

Stourbridge
Faire.

Gogmagog Hills.

A Military
Fort.

Wandlebury.

Salston.

Hortheath.

See in Hertfordshire,
Castle Camps

Magistra Came-
varia Anglia.
Lord Great Chamberlaine.

*
Inq. 6. E. 2.

Ditches.

The Barles of Oxford also, that I may note it incidently, by the heire of R. Saunder held the Manours of Fingrey and Walselmelston by Serjeanty of Chamberlainship to the Queenes at the Coronation of the Kings.

Not far from hence are scene here and there those great and long Ditches which certainly the East Angles did cast, to restrain the Mercians, who with sudden irrodes were wont most outrageously to make havocke of all before them. The first of these beginneth at Hinkeston, runneth Eastward by Hilderham toward Horsbuck, about five miles in length. The second neere unto this, called Brentditch goeth from Melborne by Fulmer.

Where D. Hervies cawsey which I mentioned, endeth, there appeareth also a third forefence or ditch cast up in old time: which beginning at the East banke of the river Cam, reacheth directly by Fenn-Diston, or more truly Ditch-ton (so called of the very Ditch) betweene great Wilberham and Fulburn, as farre as to Balsam. At this day this is called commonly Seauen mile Dyke, because it is seven miles from Newmarket:
in times past, Fleam-Dyke in old English, that is, Flight-Dyke, of some memorable flight there, as it seemeth. At the laud Wilberham sometimes called Wilburgham, dwelt in times past the Barons Lisle of Rong-mount*, men of ancient nobility, of whom John, for his Martiall prowesse was by King Edward the Third ranged among the first founders of the order of the Garter: and of that Family there yet remaineth heire Male, a reverend old Man and full of Children, named Edmund Lisle, who is still Lord of this place.

More East from hence five miles within the Country, is to bee scene the fourth forefence or ditch, the greatest of all the rest, with a rampier thereto, which the common people wondring greatly at, as a worke made by Devils and not by men, then call Devils-Dyke: others, Reck-Dyke, of Reck a little mercate towne, where it be-neth. This is doubtlesse that, whereof Abbo Floriacensis when he describeth the sight of East England, writeth thus: From that part whereas the Sun inclineth Westward, the Province it selfe adjoyneth to the rest of the Island, and is therefore passable: but for many ing overrun with many invasions and invades of enemies, it is fortified in the front with a or rampier like unto an huge wall, and with a Trench or Ditch below in the ground. This for many miles together cutteth overthwart that Plaine which is called Wensham beath, where it lay open to incursions, beginning at Reck: above which the Country is fenny, and therefore impassable: and it endeth nere to Cowledge, where the passage by reason of woods was more cumbersome. And it was the limit as well of the Kingdome, as of the Bishopricke of the East Angles. Who was the author of fozze a peece of worke, it is uncertaine. Some later writers say it was King Canutus the Dane: whereas notwithstanding the said Abbo made mention of it, who died before that Canutus obtained the Kingdome of England: and the Saxon Chronicle, where it relateth the rebellion of Asbelwold against King Edward the Elder, call-it simply Dyke; and sheweth, That King Edward laid waste whatsoever lieth betwixt the Dyke and the river Ouse, as farre as to the North Fennes: also that Asbelwold the said and Eobric the Dane, were at that time slaine there in battell. But they who wrote since Canutus times, termed it, Saint Edmunds limit, and Saint Edmunds Dyke; and verily thinke, that King Canutus cast it up, who being most devoted to Saint Edmund the Martyr granted unto the religious Monkes of Saint Edmunds Bury (for to make satisfaction for the wicked cruelty of Swan his father wrought upon them) very great immunities, even as farre as to this Dyke: whence it is, that William of Malmsbury in his booke Of Bishops writeth thus, The Customs and Toll gatherers, which in other places make foule worke and outrage, without respect or difference of right and wrong, therein handle manner on this side Saint Edmunds Dyke, surcease their quarrels and brayles. And certaine it is that these two fore-fences last named were called Saint Edmunds Dykes. For Ma- thew Florilegus hath recorded that the said battell against Asbelwold, was fought betweene the two Dykes of Saint Edmund.

Nere unto Reck, standeth Burwel, a Castle in later times of the Lord Tiptot, which in those most troublesome times of King Stephen Geffrey Mandevill Earle of Essex, who

Abbo died
anno. 1003.
Canutus began his reigne.
Anno. 1018.
Anno. 905.

Burwel.

A who by violent invasion of other mens possessions lost much honour, valiantly assaulted until that being shot through the head with an arrow, he delivered those countries from the feare they had stood in a long time.

Scarce two miles off, stands Lanbeath, where for these many yeeres the Cottons, right worshipfull Gentlemen of Knights degree have dwelt: From which Wicken is not farre distant, which came to the Family of the Peytons by a daughter and coheire of the Gernons about Edward the Thirds time, as afterward Isleham descended to them by a coheire of Bernard in Henry the Sixth's time, which Knightly Family of Peytons flowed out of the same Male-stocke, whence the Vffords Earles of Suffolke descended, as appeareth by their Coate-armour, albeit they assumed the surname of Peyton according to the use of that age, from their Manour of Peyton-hall in Boxford in the County of Suffolke.

Upon the same Dyke also, is seated Kirtling, called likewise Callidge, famous in these dayes by reason of the principall house of the Barons North, since Queene Ma- ry honoured Sir Edward North, with that title for his wisedome: but in times past it was famous for a Synode held there, what time as the Clergy men were at hot strife among themselves about the celebration of the feast of Easter.

The higher and Northerly part of this Shire is wholly divided into river Isles: and being distinguished by many Ditches, Channels and Draines, with a pleasant greene hew all Summer time contenteth the eyes of the beholders: but in Winter wholly in manner over-covered with water, farther every way than a man is able to ken, re-sembleth in some sort a very Sea.

They that inhabited this fennish Country and all the rest beside, (which from the edge and borders of Suffolke, as farre as to Wainset in Lincolne-shire containeth three score and eight miles, and millions of acres lying in these foure Shires, Cam- bridge, Huntingdon, North-hampton and Lincolne) were in the Saxons time called Girvi, that is, as some interpret it, Fen-men or Fen-dwellers. A kind of people according to the nature of the place where they dwell rude, uncivill, and envious to all others whom they call Vpland-men: who stalking on high upon stilts, apply their mindes, to grafting, fishing and fowling. The whole Region it selfe, which in winter season and sometimes most part of the yeere is overflowed by the spreading waters of the rivers Ouse, Grant, Nen, Welland, Glene, and Wrisham, having not loades and sewers large enough to voide away: But againe when their Streames are retired within their owne Channells, it is so plenteous and ranke of a certaine fatte grosse and full hey, (which they call Lid) that when they have mowen downe as much with the better as will serve their turnes, they set fire on the rest and burne it in November, that it may come up againe in great abundance. At which time a man may see this Fen-nish and moyst Tract on a light flaming fire all over every way, and wonder thereat.
Great plenty it hath besides of Turfe and Sedge for the maintenance of fire: of reed also for to thatch their Houses, yea and of Alders, beside other watery Shrubbess.
E But chiefly it bringeth forth exceeding store of willowes both naturally, and also for that being planted by mans hand they have serv'd in good steed, and often cut downe with their manifold increase, and infinit number of heires (to use Plinies word) against the violent force of the waters rushing against the bankes. Whereof also as well here, as in other places there be baskers made, which seeing the Britains call Baskades, I for my part, that I may note so much by the way, do not understand the Poet Marshall in that Distichon, unless hee meaneth these, among the Presents and Gifts sent to and fro.

Barbara de pictis veni Baskauda Britannia, Sed me jam mavult dicere Roma suam.

By barbarous name, a Baskaud I from painted Britans came,
But now Rome faine would call me hers, although I be the same.

Besides at this the herb, Scordii, which also is called Water Germader, groweth plentifully Lanbeath.

Wicken.

Isleham.

Peyton.

Kirtling.
Barons
North.

977.

The Fennes
and Isle of Ely.

Girvi.

Scordium.

fully here hard by the ditches sides : but as for these Fenny Ilands, Felix a writer of good antiquity hath depainted them forth in these words. There is a Fen of exceeding great largeness which beginning at the banks of the river Grent, arising somewhere in sedge plots in other places with blacke waters yielding a dusky vapour with woods also among the Isles, and having many winding turnes of the banke, reacheth out in a very long trail from South to North-East as farre as to the Sea. And the very same Fenne William a Monke of Crowland in the life of Gislebert hath thus described in verse.

*Est apud Angligenas à Grent a flumine, longo
Orbe per australes stagnosos, & fluviales,
Circumsus palus, Orientalisque propinqua
Littoribus Pelagi, sese distendit ab Austro
In longum versus Aquilonem, gurgite tetra, Morbosus pisces vegetans, & arundine densa
Ventorum strepitus, quasi quaedam verba susurrans.*

A spacious Fenne in England lies from Grent that rivers side,
Among the winding cranks of Lakes and Rivers far and wide,
Y' spread, and nere unto the banks of Easterne Sea doth stretch,
It selfe, and so from Southerne side a long North Eastward reach.
In muddy gulfe unwhollome fish it breeds : as reeds doe shake
There growing thicke, of winds as words a whispering noise they make.

Joyned hereunto if you please thus much out of Henry of Huntingdon : This Fenny country (saith he) is passing rich and plemous, yea and beautifull to behold, watered many Rivers running downe to it, garnished with a number of Meres both great and small, trimly adorned likewise with many Woods and Ilands. And for a finall conclusion of this matter, take with you also these few words of William of Malmesbury speaking of this time. So great store there is here of Fishes that strangers comming hither make a wonder at, and the Inhabitants laugh thereat, to see them wonder. Neither is Water-Fowle lesse plenty, so that for one halfe penny and under, five men as the least may not onely eat to staks hunger and content nature, but also feed their fill of Fish and Fowle.

As touching the drying up of this Fenny country, what discourse and saying oftentimes there hath beene either by way of found and wholsome counsell, or of goodly pretence and shew of a common good, even in the High Court of Parliament, I list not to relate. But it is to be feared least (that which often hath happened to the Pontine Marishes of Italy) it would come againe to the former state. So the many thinke it the wisest and best course according to the sage admonition in the case of Apollo his Oracle, Not so intermeddle at all with that which God hath binde. Upon the naturall strength of this place and plenty of all things there, sedition rebels have often presumed; and not onely the English when they banded themselves against William Conquerour, but the Barons also whensoever they were. Our land, from hence troubled and molested their Kings. But evermore they had ill success, albeit otherwhiles they built fortresses both at Eryth and also at Athered, at this day Andre, where the easiest entrance is into this Isle. And even yet near unto Andre, is to be seene a Military rampire of a meane height, but of a very large compass, which they call Belfars-hill, of one Belisar, I wot not who.

Part of this Fenny country that lyeth more South and is the greatest by farre, which also is counted of this shire, was named in the English Saxon tongue Gig, now The Isle of Ely, of the chiefe Iland, which name Bede hath derived from Ede, and thereupon sometime teamed it Insulam anguillarum, that is, The Isle of Eels. Polydore Virgil fetcheth the originall thereof from the Greek word ω, that signifieth Marsh, others from Helig a Brittain word betokening Willowes or Sallows, wherewith it doth most of all abound. Part of this Region, we read that one Tombert a Prince of the Southern Girvin gave as a dowry to his wife Audry, who after she had left her second husband Pausanias in Corinth.

Audre.

Ely.
Saint Etheldreda common'y, S. Audrye.

A husband Egfrid, King of the Nordan humberland, being fully resolved to serve Christ, built a Monastery for Kunnes Potaries in the principall Iland of these, properly called Ely, which was then reckoned at 600 Hides or Families; and of this Monastery, he also her selfe the first Abbeffe. Yet was not this the first Church in the fenny country. For the booke of Ely recordeth, that S. Austen of Canterbury founded a Church at Cradi-don, which Penda the Mercian afterwards rased : and William of Malmesbury reporteth, that Felix Bishop of the East English had his first See at Sobam, which yet is within the Diocesse of Norwich. Sobam, saith he, is a village situate nere unto a Fen, which was in times past dangerous for those that would passe into Ely by water : now by reason of a way or causeway made through the Fenny ground overgrowne with Reeds, men may goe over thither by land. There be remaining still the tokens of a Church destroyed by the Danes, which with the ruines thereof overwhelmed the inhabitants, who were burnt together with it. At which time also that Monastery of S. Audry was overthrowne by the furious Danes; but Ethelwold Bishop of Winchester reedified it: For he, by a composition betwene the King and him, bought the whole Iland a new, and having cast out the Priests thence, stored it with Monks, unto whom King Edgar, as we read in his letters patents, granted within the Fens, jurisdiction over the secular causes of two Hundreds, and without the Fens, of two Hundreds and an halfe in Wichlaw, within the province of the East-Angles, which are called at this day, The liberties of S. Audry. Afterwards Kings and great Noble men enriched it with large revenewes : and Earle Brithnot especially, Being now ready to joyne battaile with the Danes in the year 999, gave unto the Church of Ely, Somersham, Spaldwic, Trumpinton, Ratindum, Heisbury, Fulburn, Tinerston, Triplestow, and Impetum, (for that the Monkes had in magnificent manner entertained him) in case he should loofe his life in that battaile. But his fortune was to die at Maldun, after hee had fought with the Danes 14. dayes together. And so rich was the Monastery, that the Abbot thereof, as witnesseth Malmesbury, laid up every yeere in his owne purse a thousand and foure hundred pounds. And Richard the last Abbot sonne, to Earle Gislebert, being over-ripled, as it were with wealth, disdainig to bee under the Bishop of Lincolne, dealt with the King, what by golden words, as the Monkes write, and what by great suite and politike meanes, that a Bishops See might be erected here : which, hee prevented by death obtained not. Yet soone after, King Henry the first having gotten allowance from the Pope, made Herveie, who had beene Bishop of Bangor and by the Welshmen cast out of his owne seat, the first Bishop of Ely : unto whom and to his successors he laied for his Diocesse Cambridge-shire, which had belonged before unto the Bishop of Lincolne, and confirmed certaine Royalties in these Ilands. To the Bishops of Lincolne, from whose jurisdiction he had taken away this Iland and Cambridge-shire, he granted for to make amends, The Manor of Spaldwic : or as the booke of Ely hath, The Manor of Spaldwic was given unto the Church of Lincolne for ever, in exchange for the Bishops superintendency over the County of Cambridge. Herveie being now made Bishop, sought by all meanes possible to augment the dignity of his Church.

E He obtained that it might bee every where Toll-free (these are the very words of the booke of Ely) : He set it free from the yoke of service of watch and ward, that it owed to the Castle of Norwich : hee made a way from Exmington to Ely, through the Fennes, fixe miles in length ; he beganne the faire Palace at Ely for his Successours, and purchased to it faire Lands and not a few Lordships. And his Successours by abridging the number of Monkes (for, from three-score and tenne they brought them downe to forty) flowed with riches and wealth in great abundance even unto our time ; and their festivall and solemne Holydayes they celebrated with so sumptuous provision and stately pompe, that they wonne the prayse and prize from all the Abbates in England : whereupon a Poet also in that age wrote these verses not unproperly.

*Prævisis aliis, Elyensis festa videre,
Est, quasi prævisa nocte, videre diem.*

See, after others, Ely feasts, and surely thou wilt say,
That having seene the night before, thou seest now the day.

The

Saint Audries
Libertie.

Ely booke.

The Church likewise, which now began for age and long continuance to decay, they built up by litle and litle, and brought it to that ample statelineffe which now it hath: For, large it is, high and faire, but somewhat defaced, by reason of Noblemen and Bishops tombes (not without most shamefull indignity) are broken downe. And now in stead of that great Covent of Monks, there are established a Deane, Prebendaries, a Grammar schoole, wherein 24. children are maintained and taught. Four speciall things there are about this Church, that the Common people talke much of: The Lanterne. The Lanterne on the very toppe thereof, just over the Quire, supported with eight pillars, and raised upon them right artificially, by John Horbun the Bishop. Under the Church towards the North, standeth Saint Maries Chappell a singular fine peece of worke, built by Simon Montacute, Bishop. On the South side, there is an huge heape of earth cast up round of a great heighth, which they call the Mouns, having had a wind mill upon it. And lastly, a Vine bearing fruit in great plenty, which now is withered and gone. These 4. a Monk of this place in times past knit up within this Hyem.

*Hec sunt Elie, Lanterna, Capella Mariae, Atque molendinum,
Nec non dams vinca vinum.*

These things you may at Ely see,
The Lanterne, Chapell of Saint Marie,
A Winde-mill mounted up on hie,
A Vine-yard yeelding Wine, yeerely.

As for Ely it selfe, it is a small Cittie, nor greatly to bee counted of, either for beauty, or frequency and resort, as having an unwholsome Aire by reason of the Fens round about, although it be seated somewhat higher. Neere to it is Dunham where the Bishop hath his retyring House with a Parke: neere to Dunham is Downham the ancientest seat of the Family surnamed for their habitation heere, Downham De Insula, and first planted here by Nigelus the second Bishop of Ely their Alles in the time of King Henry the First, as is set downe in a Lieger Booke of Ely. Chauvies or Chesterich is not farre hence Westward, were Alwena a devout woman founded a Nunnery upon a coppid ground encompassed with Fens, while her husband founded Ramsay. But higher Northward amidst the Fennes, there stood another Abbay of very great name, called Thorney, of thornes and bushes that grow thick about it, but in times past Ankerige of Ankers or Eremites living there solitarily, where as we finde in Peterborough booke Sexculph a devout and religious man built a Monastery with litle Cels for Eremits: Which being afterwards by the Duke throwne downe, Acthelwold Bishop of Winchester (that he might promote the monastical profession) reedified, stored it with Monkes, and compassed it round about with trees. The place, as writeth William of Malmesbury, Representeth a very Paradis, for that in pleasure and delight it resembleth Heaven it selfe: in the very Marishes being Trees, that for their strenght saluesse, and the same without knots, strive to touch the Skie: Plaine is there as even as the Sea, which with greene grasse allureth the eye, so smooth and flat that if any walke along the fields they shall finde nothing to stumble at. There is not the least parcell of ground that lies waste and void there. Here shall you finde the earth bringing forth for Apple trees, there shall you have a field set with Vines, which either creepe upon the ground, or mount on high upon poles to support them. A mutual strife there is betwixt the nature of husbandry, that what the one forgetteth, the other might supply and produce. What will be said of the faire and beautiful buildings, which it is a wonder to see how the ground amid those Fens and Marishes, so firme and sound, doth beare with sure and steadfast foundations? A wonderful solitary place is there afforded to Monkes for quiet life, that so much the more constantly settle their mindes upon Heavenly things for that they see none very feldome, and so are they scene in their state more mortified and lower brought. A wonder it is to have a Woman

Thorney.

A scene there: if come men thither; there is rejoycing as at so many Angels. In a word, I may truly say, that this Island is an Hottell of Chastity, an harbour of Honesty, and a Schoole or Colledge of Divine Philosophie.

Touching Wisbich, the Bishop of Elies Castle, about 13. miles off, situate among the fennes and rivers, and made of late a prison to keepe the Papiests in hold, I have nothing else to say, but that this towne together with Walepole, was in old time given by the owner thereof unto the monastery of Ely, what time as he consecrated Alwin his little son there to live a monkes life: that King William the First built a Castle there, when the outlawed Lords made rodes out of this fenny country: and that in the yeere of our salvation 1236. when the Ocean being disquieted with violent windes, for two dayes continually together had beaten upon the shore, made an exceeding wide breach and overwhelmed both land and people. But the Castle of bricke that now is scene there, John Morton Bishop of Ely built within the remembrance of our great grandfathers: who also drew as streight as a line in this fenny country a dike, which they call the Newleame for better conveyance and carriage by water, that by this meanes the towne being well frequented might gaine the more and grow to wealth. Which fell out quite contrary: For it standeth now in no great speed, and the neighbour inhabitants complain that the course of Nen into the Sea by Clowcrosse, is by this meanes altogether hindred and stopped.

The first Earle of Cambridge that I can finde, was William the brother of Ranulph Earle of Chester, as wee read in a patent or instrument of Alexander Bishop of Lincoln, bearing date in the yeere 1139. Afterwards, those of the royall blood in Scotland that were Earles of Huntingdon, wee may thinke to have bene Earles of Cambridge also: For that it appeareth certainly out of the Records of the realme, that David Earle of Huntingdon, received the third penny of the County or Earledome of Cambridge. Long time after, King Edward the Third advanced Sir John of Henault brother to William the third Earle of Holland and of Henault to this honour, for the love of Queene Philip his wife, who was cosin to the said Iohn. For whose sake also when Iohn was revolted from him and tooke part with the French, hee honoured with the same title William Marquess of Tuliers, the said Queene Philips sisters son. After the death of these two Forainers, King Edward the Third translated this dignity to his fifth sonne Edmund of Langley, which after he had held foure yeeres (my warrant I have out of an old manuscript, being in the hands of that skilfull Antiquary Francis Thinn) the Earle of Henault cosin to Queene Philip, came into Parliament house, put in a claime for his right, and returned backe well consented. The said Edmund of Langley afterwards Duke of Torke had two sonnes, Edward Duke of Torke, who for a certaine time held the Earldome of Cambridge, and was slaine in the battell of Agincourt: and Richard by the grace and favour of King Henry the Fifth, and consent of his brother Edward, was created Earle of Cambridge. But when he (ungratefull and ambitious man that hee was) contrived the destruction of that good and noble Prince, and so lost his head; the title of Cambridge died the same day that he did, or loked at least wise among other titles of his sonne Richard, who was afterwards Duke of Torke and restored to his blood and estate, as being cosin and heire to his Uncle Edward Duke of Torke.

Wisbich.

Walepole.

Newleame.

Clowcrosse.
Earle of Cambridge.

This Shire containeth Parishes 163.

HUNTING.

Comitatus qui pars fuit
ICE NORVM

Christophorus Saxton descripsit
Wilhelmus Lip Sculpsit

HUNTINGDONSHIRE.

Ext unto Cambridge-shire, lyeth HUNTINGDONSHIRE, in the Saxon tongue huntedunercyne; so situate, that Southward it confineth upon Bedford-shire; Westward upon Northamptonshire: like as Northwards, where by the River * Avon it is parted; and Eastward upon Cambridge-shire, a Country good for corne and tillage: and toward the East, where it is fen-ny, very rich and plentifull for the feeding of Cattaile: else-where right pleasant, by reason of rising hills and shady groves:

* Or Aufon.
1. Nen.

For, the Inhabitants report, that in ancient times, it was throughout befer with woods: and certaine it is, that it was a Forest, untill that King Henry the Second, in the beginning of his raig disforested it, (as we find in an old perambulation) all save Way-bridge Sappell and Hershei, which were Woods of the Lords demaine, and remaine still forests.

The South part thereof; the River Ouse (that I have so often spoken of) runneth by, and bedecketh with flowers. On which River among other of lesse note, there stand some Townes of good note. First, after it hath left Bedford-shire, and is entred into this Country, it visiteth Saint Neots, commonly called Saint Needs, so named of one Neotus, a man both learned and holy, who travailed all his life time in propagating of Christian Religion, whose body was translated from Neotstok in Cornwall hither, and in honour of him, Alfrick converted the Palace of Earle Elfride unto a Monastery. The which Dame Roissa Wife to Richard Lord of Clare, shortly after the coming in of the Normas enriched with many faire Possessions; But before it was named Simulphsbury of one Simulph likewise an holy and devout man, which name continueth still also in one part of it. A little beneath this, at Alneweston a very small Village, there are two little Springs, the one fresh, the other somewhat brackish: of which the neighbours give out, that this is good against scabs and leprosie, the other against the dimnesse of the eye-sight. From thence not farre, Ouse passeth to Bugden a proper faire house of the Bishops of Lincolne, and so by Hinchinbrok, a religious house sometimes of Nuns whom King William the Conquerour translated hither from Elthelley in Cambridge-shire, and now the dwelling house of the Cromwells, knights; cometh to Huntingdon, in the English-Saxon tongue, as Marianus reporteth Hun-

Saint Needs.

Ainsbury.

Holfome and medicabte
wels.

tantum, in the publique seale Huntersdune, that is, the hill or downe of hunters, as Henry Archdeacon of this place, who flourished 400. yeares since, interpreteth it: whence it used in their seale, an hunter; and Leland our Countriman alluding thereunto, hath coined a new Latine word for it, namely Penantodunum. This is the chiefe Towne of all this Shire, (to which it hath given also the name) farre excellling all the Townes about it, the same Archdeacon saith, as well for lightfome and pleasant situation, as for the beauty and faire shew that it hath it selfe: as well also for the vicinity of the Fennes as for great store of Deere and Fish. In King Edward the Confessors time, (that I may note so much out of Domesday booke) There were in this Borrough foure Ferlings, that is, Quarters or Wards: In two of them were 116. Burgessees, paying custome and gelt, and under them 100. Bordarij; in the other two 111. Burgessees for all customes and the Kings gelt. It is seated upon the North-banke of Ouse, somewhat high, stretching out in length Northward, adorned with foure Churches: and it had a little Abbay founded by Maude the Empreffe and Eustace Lowetost: the ruines whereof Eastward I have seene hard under the Towne. By the River neere unto the Bridge which is faire buile of stone, the Mount and Plot of a Castle, is to bee seene, which in the Huntingdon.

yeare of our Redemption 917. King Edward the Elder built anew: and David the Scotlshman, unto whom, as an ancient Historiographer writeth King Stephen had given the Burrough of Huntingdon for an augmentation of his estate, enlarged with many new buildings and Bulwarkes: but in the end King Henry the Second both because it was a place of refuge for seditious Rebels, and for that the Scots and the

T t

Saint

Saint Lizes had oftentimes raised quarrels and contention about it, to cut off all occasions of strife, laid it even with the ground; when as hee, provoked with their unreasonable variance swore an oath, that neither they of Saint Lizes nor the Scotchmen should quarrell any more for it. From these Castle hills, where there is a goodly prospect a great way off, a man may behold below a meadow which they call Per-sholme, environed round about with the River Ouse, the same very exceeding large, and of all others that the Sunne ever shone upon, most fresh and beautifull: when in the Spring time this may be truly said:

Per pingit vario gemmantia prata colore:
The pleasant Spring faire flowers doe yeeld,
Of divers colours, in this field.

With such a delectable variety of gaye colours it pleaseth and contenteth the eye. On the higher banke over against Huntingdon, standeth the mother as it were thereof, from whence it had his Originall, called in Domesday booke Godmundcester, and at this day Good-man-cheister, for Gormoncheister: A very great country Towne, and of as good name for tillage, situate in an open ground, of a light mould, and bending to the Sun. Neither is there a Towne againe in all England that hath more stout and lusty handmen, or more ploughs agoing: For, they make their boast that they have in former time received the Kings of England as they passed in their progresse this way, with nine score ploughs, brought forth in a rustickall kind of pompe for a gallant they. Verily, of our Nation, there be none that apply their mindes so seriously as they doe to husbandry (which Columella termeth the neere cozin of Wisdom) whether you respect their skill therein, or their ability to beare the expences, and their willing mind withall to take the paines. Henry of Huntingdon before named, calleth it a Village, in his daies, not unlovely: and truly writeth, that in times past it had been a noble City. You say nothing of Roman peeces of coine oftentimes there ploughed up, nor of the distance in the old Itinerary, the very signification of the name may probably prove, that this was the very same City, which Anonine the Emperor termed Dux ou PONTE, amisse, in stead of Durosponte. For Durosponte (pardon me I pray you) changing one letter) soundeth in the British tongue, A bridge over the water Ose. And that this River is named indifferently and without distinction, Use, Use, Ose, and Ouse all men confesse. But when this name was under the Danes quite abolished, it began to be called Gormoncheister, of Gormon the Dane, unto whom after agreement of peace King Alfred granted these Provinces. Hereto, this old Verse giveth testimony.

Gormanis a castri nomine, nomen habet.
Gormoncheister, at this howre,
Takes the name of Gormons Towre.

This is that Gormon of whom John Picus an old Author, writeth in this wise: King Alfred conquered and subdued the Danes, so that they gave what hostages hee would for ransom, either to be packing out of the Land, or else to become Christians. Which thing almost effected. For, their King Guthrum, whom they call Gormond, with thirty of his Nobles well neere all his people was baptized, and adopted by Alfred as his Sonne, and by him and Archelstan. Whereupon he remained heere, and the Provinces of the East-Engle and of the Northumbrians were given to him: that continuing in his allegiance, under the Kings protection, he might cherish and also maintain them as his inheritance, which he had formerly overrun with spoile and robbery. Neither would this be omitted, that some also of those ancient Writers have termed this place Gumicester, and Gumicestrum, avoucheth withall, that Machutus a Bishop had heere his Episcopall See. And by the name of Gumicester King Henry the Third granted it to his sonne Edmund Earle of Lancaster.

Ouse making haste speedily from hence, when he was about to enter into Cambridgeshire, passeth through most delightfome meadows hard by a proper and faire town, which sometime in the English-Saxon tongue was called Slepe, and now S. Ives.

Godman-
chester.

Durosponte.

Saint Ives.

was a Persian Bishop, who, as they write, about the yeare of Christ 600. travailed through England, preached diligently the Word of God, and to this Towne, wherein he left this life, left also his name. From whence notwithstanding shortly after the religious persons translated his body to Ramsay Abbey.

Turning aside from hence scarce three miles, wee saw Somerham a faire dwelling house, of late dayes belonging to the Bishops of Ely, which Earle Brithnot in the year 991. gave to Ely Church, and James Stanley, the lavish, and expencefull Bishop, enlarged with new buildings. A little above that most wealthy Abbey Ramsay was situate amidst the Fennes, where the Rivers become standing waters, when they have once found a soft kinde of Soile.

The description of this place have here if it please you, out of the private History of this Abbey. Ramsay, that is, The Rams Isle, on the West side (for on other sides runneth grounds through which one cannot passe, stretch out farre and wide) is severed from the firme ground almost two bow-shots off by certaine uneven and quaggy miry plots. Which place being wont in times past to receive gently within the bosome and brinks thereof, Vessels arriving there with wilde gales of winde in a shallow River onely: now through great labour and cost after the soule and dirty quagmires aforesaid were stopped up with heapes of wood, gravel and stones together, men may passe into on foote on the same side upon a dry causeway: and it lieth out in length almost two miles, but spreadeth not all out so much in breadth: which notwithstanding is beset round about with beautifull rowes of Alder-trees, and reed plots, that with fresh greene canes and streights bulrushes among, make a faire and pleasaunt show: and before it was inhabited, garnished and bedecked all over with many sorts of trees, but of wilde and shes especially, in great abundance. But now after longer tract of time, part of these groves and wood, being cut downe, it is become a rable ground of a very fat and plentifull meadow: for fruit rich pleasant for corne, planted with gardens, wealthy in pastures, and in the Spring time, the meadows arrayed with pleasaunt flowers smile upon the beholders: and the whole Island somewhat embroidered, as it were, with variety of gay colours. Besides that, it is compassed all about with Meres full of Eeles, and pooles replenished with fish of many sorts, and with fowle bred and nourished. Of which Meres, one is called after the name of the Island Ramsay Mere, farre exceeding all the other waters adjoining, in beauty and fertility: but that side where the Isle is counted bigger and the wood thicker flowing daintily by the sandy banke thereof, yieldeth a very delectable sight to behold: in the very gulfs whereof by casting as well of great wide matted nets, as of other sorts, by laying also of hookes baited, and other instruments devised by fishers craft, are caught oftentimes and drawne certaine Pikes of an huge and wonderful bignesse, which the Inhabitants call Hakeds: and albeit the fowlers doe continually haunt the place and catch great store of young water-fowle, yet there is abundance alwaies that remaineth untaken.

Furthermore that History sheweth at large, how Alwin a man of the bloud royall, and for the speciall great authority and favour that hee had with the King, surnamed Half-Koning, that is, Half King, being admonished and moved thereunto by a Fishers dreame built it; how Oswald the Bishop furthered and enlarged it; how Kings and others endowed it with so faire revenewes, that for the maintenance of three score Monkes it might dispend by the yeare seven thousand pounds of our English money. But seeing it is now pulled downe and destroyed, some may thinke I have already spoken overmuch thereof. Yet hereto I will annex out of the same Authour the Epitaph of Alwins Tombe, for that it exhibiteth unto us an unusuall and strange title of a Dignity.

HIC REQUIESCIT AILWINUS INCLITUS REGIS EADGARI COGNATUS, TOTIUS ANGLIÆ ALDERMANNUS, ET HUIUS SACRI COENOBII MIRACULOSUS FUNDATOR.

HERE RESTETH AILWIN COZIN TO THE NOBLE KING EADGAR, ALDER-MAN OF ALL ENGLAND, AND OF THIS HOLY ABBAY THE MIRACULOUS FOUNDER.

From hence to Peterborough, which is about ten miles off, King Cnutus, being travelling that way and finding it very comberfome by reason of swelling Brookes and sloughs, with great cost and labour made a paved Causey, which our Historians call Kings-delfe, not farre from that great Lake Wistlesmere. And as this Abbaye adorne the East side of the Shire, so, the middle thereof was beautified by Salin, which the second Simon de Sancto Lixio Earle of Huntingdon built. From whence farre, is Cunnington, holden anciently of the Honour of Huntingdon: where, within a foure square Trench, are to be seene expresse remaines of an ancient Castle, which as also Saltrie, was by the gift of Cnutus, the feat of Turkill that Dane, who lived here among the East English, and sent for Sueno King of Denmark to make him of England. After whose departure, Waldeuf the sonne of Sward Earle of Northumberland enjoyed it, who married Judith Niece to William the Conqueror by his sister on the mothers side: by whose eldest daughter it came to the royall family of Scotland. For she, by a second marriage, matched with David Earle of Huntingdon (who afterwards obtained the Kingdome of Scotland) being the younger sonne of Malcolm Canmor, King of Scots, and of Margaret his wife descended of the royal line of the English-Saxons: For, shee was Niece to King Edmund Ironside by his sonne Edward surnamed, The Banished. David had a sonne named Henry, and Henry had another named David Earle of Huntingdon, by one of whose daughters, Libel, Cunnington and other lands by right of marriage descended to Sir Robert Brus from whose eldest sonne Robert surnamed the Noble, James King of Great Brittain lineally deriveth his Descent: and from Bernard his younger sonne, unto whom Cunnington with Exton fell, Sir Robert Cotton Knight is lineally descended; whose and beside other vertues, being a singular lover and searcher of Antiquities, having gathered with great charges from all places the Monuments of venerable Antiquity, hath here begonne a famous Cabinet, whence of his singular courtisie, hee hath oftentimes given me great light in these darksome obscurities.

But these Quarters, considering the ground lying so low, and for many moones in the yeare furrounded and drowned, in some places also floating (as it were) under up with the waters, are not free from the offensive noisomnesse of Meres and the unwholesome aire of the Fennes. Here for fixe miles in length and three in breadth that cleare deepe and fishfull Mere named Wistlesmere spreadeth it selfe, which other Meres in this Tract, doth sometimes in Calmes and faire weather sodainly at tempestuously, as it were, into violent water-quakes to the danger of the poor fishermen, by reason, as some thinke, of evaporations breaking violently out of the bowels of the earth. As for the unhealthinesse of the place, wherunto onely Remedyes, and not the natives there are subiect, who live long and healthfully, there is made, as they account it, by the commodity of fishing, the plentiful feeding, and the abundance of turfe gotten for fewell. For, King Cnut gave commandment by Turkill the Dane, of whom ere while I spake, That in every Village Huntingdon the Fennes, there should bee set out a severall Marsh: who so divided the ground, that the Village by it selfe should have in proper use and occupation so much of the very maine Marsh, as the firme ground of every such Village touched the Marsh lying just against it. And ordained that no Village might either digge or mow in the Marsh of another without leave, but that the pasture therein should lye all in common, that is, Home under borne, for the preservation of peace and concord among them. But thus much of this matter.

Kingdelfe.
Sawtry, commonly.
Cunnington.
Saltria.
Turkill the Dane.

Edward Ironside.
Bruse or Brus.

Moffes.

Wistlesmere Lake.

When the sonnes and servants of the said King Cnut, sent for from Peterborough to Ramsey, were in passing over that Lake, *There fell upon them, as they were cheerefull under saile and lifting up their voices with joyfull showings, most untoward and unhappy winds, wherewith a turbulent and tempestuous storme arose, that entlosed them on every side, so that laying aside all hope, they were in utter despaire of their life, security, or any helpe at all. But such was the mercifull clemency of Almighty God, that it forsooke them not wholly, nor suffered the most terrible Gulfes of the waters to swallow them up all quite, but by his providance some of them he delivered mercifullly out of those furious and raging waves: but others againe according to his just and secret judgements he permitted amidst those billowes to passe out of this fraile and mortall life. And when the fame of so fearefull a danger was noised abroad and came to the Kings eares, there fell a mighty trembling and quaking upon him: but being comforted and relieved by the counsaile of his Nobles and freinds, for to prevent in time to come all future mishaps by occasion of that outrageous monster, hee ordained that his souldiers and servants with their swords and spears should set out and make a certaine Ditch in the Marshes lying thereby, betwene Ramsey and Whittlesey, and afterwards that workemen and labourers should skoure and cleanse them: wherupon, as I have learned of ancient predecessours of good credit, the said Ditch by some of the neighbour inhabitants took the name Swerdesdelfe, upon that marking out by swords: and some would have it to be termed Cnut's delfe according to the name of the same King. Yet commonly at this day they call it Steds diche: and it is counted the limit and bound between this County and Cambridge shire.*

In the East side of this Shire, Kinnibantum Castle, now called Kimbolton, the habitation in times past of the Standevilles, afterwards of the Bobuns and Staffords, and at this day of the Wingfields, doth make a faire shew. Under which was Stonesley a prery Abbay founded by the Bigrames. A little from hence is Awkenbury, which King John gave to David Earle of Huntingdon: and John surnamed the Scot, his sonne, unto Sir Stephen Segrave: of whom I am the more willing to make mention, for that he was one of those Courtiers who hath taught us, That there is no power at all in riches. Hardly and with much adoe hee climbed to an eminent and high estate, with great thought and care hee kept it, and as sodainly hee was dejected from it: For, in his youth, of a Clerke he became a Knight, and albeit hee was but of meane fortune, yet through his industry toward his later dayes so enriched and advanced, that being ranged with the great Peeres of the Realme, hee was reputed chiefe Justice of England, and managed at his pleasure after a sort all the affaires of State. But in the end hee lost the Kings favour quite, and to his dying day lay close in a Cloyster: and who before time from a Clerkship betooke himselfe through arrogancy to secular service, returning againe to the office of a Clerke, resumed the shaven crowne which hee had forsaken without the counsell and advice of the Bishop. Not farre from hence is Leighton, where Sir Gervase Clifton knight, lately made Baron Clifton, beganne to build a goodly house, and close to it lyeth Spaldwicke, which King Henry the First gave unto the Church of Lincolne for amends of a losse, when hee erected the Bishopricke of Ely, taken out of the Diocese of Lincolne, as I have before shewed.

But where the River Nen entreth into this Shire, it runneth fast by Elton the seat of the ancient Family of the Sapcons, where is a private Chappell of singular workmanship and most artificiall glasse windowes, erected by Lady Elizabeth Dinham the widow of Baron Fitz-warin, married into the said Family. But a little higher, there stood a little City more ancient than all these, neere unto Walmsford: which Henry of Huntingdon calleth Caer Dorm and Dormecaster upon the River Nen, and reporteth to have beene utterly rased before his time. This was doubtlesse that Durobrivæ, that is, The River passage, that Antonine the Emperour speaketh of, and now in the very same sence is called Dornford neere unto Cheriton, which beside peeces of ancient Coine daily found in it, sheweth apparant tokens of a City overthrowne. For, to it there leadeth directly from Huntingdon a Roman Port way: and a little above Stilton, which in times past was called Stichilton, it is seene with an high banke, and in an ancient Saxon Charter termed Ermingtonstreat. This Street now runneth here through the midst of a foure square Fort, the North side whereof was fenced

Tt 3

with

The little History of Ely.
The foundation of Saltria.

Swerdesdelfe differing from Kings Delfe.

Kimbolton.

Stephen Segrave.
Mat. Paris.

Leighton.

Elton.

Walmsford.

Durobrivæ.

Stilton.
Ermingtonstreet.

Caster in Northampton-
shire.

Bottle Bridge.

* Nigellus.

Earles of Huntingdon.

See the Earles of Northampton.

In the last
booke cap. 16.
John Fordin in Scotocronica l.
8. c. 3. 5. & 39.

Mat. Paris.
1243.

*
See Dukes of Excester.
Pat. 16. H. 6.

with Wals, all the other sides with a Rampire of earth onely. Neere unto which were digged up not long since Coffins or Sepulchres of stone in the ground of Wals, of an ancient house in this Shire. Some verily thinke that this City Wals stood upon both bankes of the River; and there bee of opinion that the little Village Caster standing upon the other banke was parcell thereof. Surely to this opinion of Caster maketh much the testimony of an ancient story, which sheweth that there was place by Nen called Dormund-caster, in which when Kinneburga had built a Monastery, it began to be called first Kinneburga-caster, and afterwards from Caster. This Kinneburga the most Christian daughter of the Pagan King Penda, and when Alfred King of the Northumbrians (changed her Princely State into the service of Christ) I may use the words of an ancient Writer and governed this Monastery of her own Prioreffe or mother of the Nunnies there. Which afterwards, about the year of Salvation 1010. by the furious Danes was made levell with the ground. But when the River is ready to leave this County, it passeth hard by an ancient house called Bottle-bridge (so is it now termed short for Botolph-bridge) which the Draisons and Lords brought from R. Gimels by hereditary succession into the Family of the Shirlins. And to this house adjoyneth Overton, now corruptly called Orton, which being by felony forfait and confiscate, Neele Lovetoff redeemed againe of King John; and the said Neeles sister and coheire being wedded unto Hubert alias Robert de Brounford, brought him children, who assumed unto them the firname of Lovetoff.

This County of Huntingdon when the English-Saxons Empire began now to decline, had Seward an Earle by Office, and not inheritance: For as yet there were no Earles in England by inheritance, but the Rulers of Provinces, after the calling of that age were termed Earles, with addition of the Earldome of this or that Province whereof they had the rule for the time: as this Seward while he governed this County was called Earle of Huntingdon; whereas afterwards being Ruler of Northumberland, they named him Earle of Northumberland. He had a sonne named Waldeof, who under the Title of Earle had likewise the government of this Province, standing in favour as he did with William the Conquerour whose Niece Judith by his sister of the mothers side, hee had married, but by him beheaded for entering into a conspiracy against him. The eldest daughter of this Waldeof (as William Gemmison reporteth) Simon de Senlys or S. Liz took to wife, together with the Earldome of Huntingdon, and of her begat a sonne named Simon. But after that the said Simon was dead, David brother to Maud the Holy, Queene of England (who afterwards became King of Scots) married his wife by whom hee had a sonne named Henry. But in proceffe of time, as fortune and Princes favour varied, one while the Scots, another while the Lixes enjoyed this dignity: First Henry the sonne of David afore said: then Simon, Liz sonne of Simon the first: after him Malcolm King of Scots, sonne to Earle Henry: and after his death Simon sent Liz the third who dying without issue, William King of Scots and brother to Malcolm succeeded: for, so wrote he that theolod, Raphe de Diceto in the year 1185. When Simon (saith hee) the sonne of Earle Simon departed without children, the King restored the Earldome of Huntingdon with the Penances unto William King of the Scots. Then his brother David, and David his sonne John firnamed Scot, Earle of Chester, who dying without issue, and Alexander the third that had married the daughter of our King Henry the Third, having for a time borne this Title, the Scots by occasion of incident warres, lost that honour, and with it a very faire inheritance in England. A good while after King Edward the Third created Sir William Clinton Earle of Huntingdon who dyed issuelesse: And in his roome there was placed by King Richard the Second, Guscard of Engelien, a Gascoine, who was his Governour in his minority: and after his death succeeded Iohn Holland, Iohn his sonne (who was stiled Duke of Excester, Earle of Huntingdon and Ivory, Lord of Sparre, Admirall of England and Ireland, Lieutenant of Aquitain, and Constable of the Towre of London) and his sonne likewise Henry, successively, who were Dukes also of Excester. This is that very same Henry Duke of Excester whom Philip Comines, as himselfe witnesseth, saw begging bare foote in the Low Countries, Countries, while he stood firme and fast unto the house of Lancaster, albeit he had married King Edward the Fourth his owne sister. Then Thomas Grey, who became afterward Marquesse Dorset, a little while enjoyed that honour. Also it is evident out of the Records, that William Herbert Earle of Pembroke brought in againe the Charter of creation, whereby his father was made Earle of Pembroke, into the Chancery for to be cancelled: and that King Edward the Fourth in the seveneenth of his Raigne created him Earle of Huntingdon, at such time as he granted the Tide of Pembroke to the Prince his sonne. Afterward King Henry the Eighth conferred that honour upon George Lord Hastings: after whom succeeded his sonne Francis, and after him likewise his sonne Henry, a right honourable Personage, commended both for true Nobility and Piety. But when hee died without issue, his brother Sir George Hastings succeeded: and after him his Grandchilde Henry by his sonne, who at this day enjoyeth the said honour.

In this little Shire are numbered Parishes. 78.

COR I

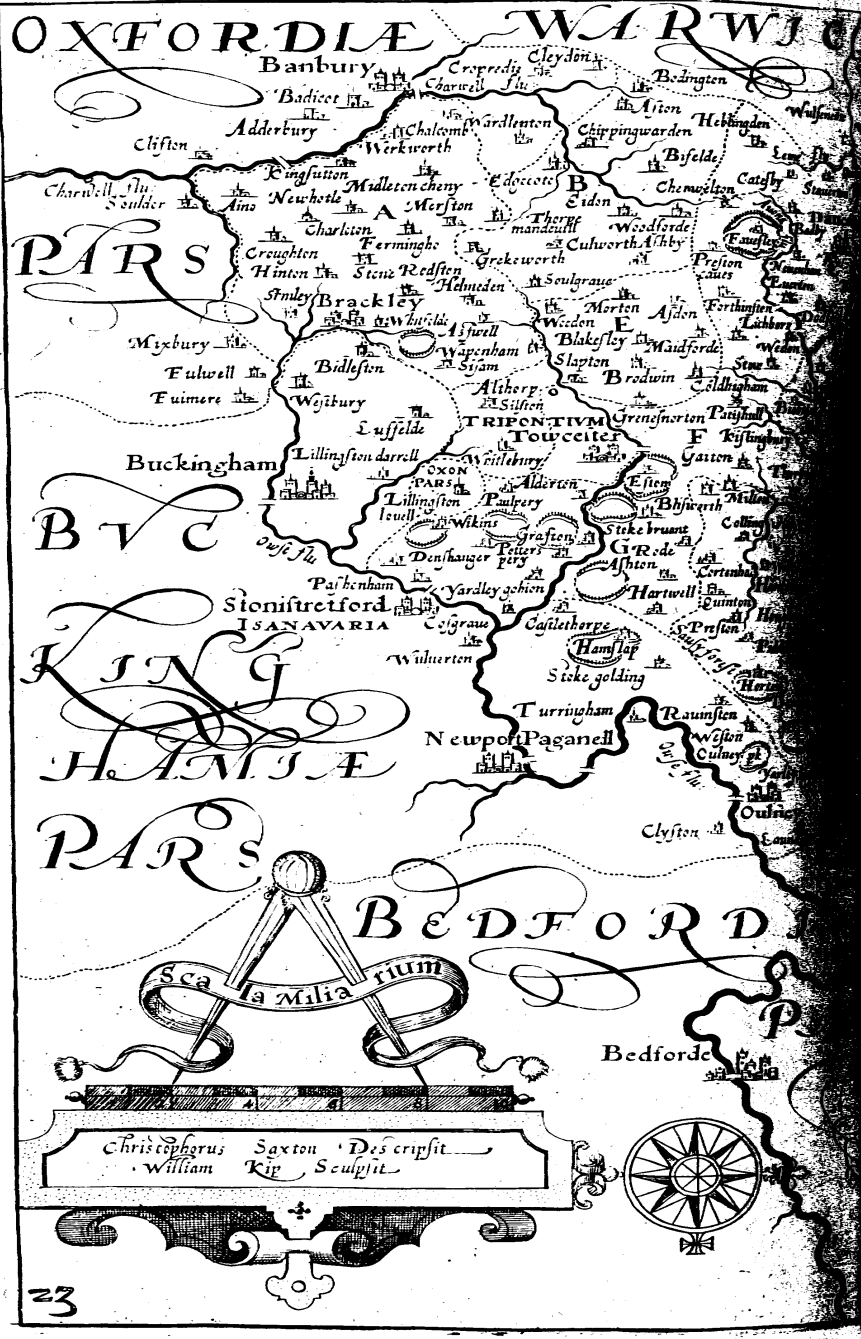

CORITANI.

NOW must wee passe onto the CORITANI, who beyond the ICENI dwelling further within the Land, and spreading themselves every farre through the Mediterranean part of the Island, inhabited as farre as to the German Ocean, to wit in these Countries which now are commonly called NORTHAMPTON-SHIRE, LEICESTER-SHIRE, RUTLAND-SHIRE, LINCOLN-SHIRE, NOTTINGHAM-SHIRE, and DERBY-SHIRE. With the Etymology of this their name I will not once meddle, for feare least putting downe uncertainties for certaine and undoubted trueths, I may seeme to slip into an errour. For, although this People were spread farre and wide, which GUR-TATI signifieth in the British tongue, yet if I would boldly avouch, that these were thence called CORITANI, should I not play hazard at all adventure? Let them, for mee, guesse more safely, who can more happily. As for mee, I will in the meane time according to my purpose survey as diligently as I may these shires which I have now named, each one by it selfe orderly in their severall places.

★

NORTH

NORTHAMPTON-SHIRE.

His County of NORTHAMPTON, in the English-Saxon tongue Nopp-arendon-ripe, and Norhtanton-shire, commonly called Northampton-shire, situate in the very middle and heart, as it were, of England, from the South-West side, where it is broadest, drawing it selfe narrower by little and little, reacheth out in length to the North-East. On the East lie Bedford and Huntingdon-shires: on the South Buckingham and Oxford-shires: Westward Warwickshire: and Northward Rutland-shire, and Lincoln-shire, separated from it by Avon the lesse, and Welland, two Rivers. The East side thereof, from Ouse to Dowbridge, one of the Roman high waies which they call Washing-streat runneth through: The middle and East part the River Nen, which by Writers is named also Ausona, with his gentle streame parteth in twaine: A champion countrey it is, exceeding populous, and passing well furnished with Noblemens and Gentlemens houses, replenished also with Townes and Churches, in so much as in some places there are twenty, and in others thirty Steeples with Spires or square Towres within view at once. The Soile very fertile both for tillage and for pasture, yet nothing so well stored with Woods, unlesse it bee in the further and hither sides. But in every place, as elsewhere also in England, it is over-spread and as it were beset with Sheepe: which according as that Hythodanus merrily said, Were wont to bee so gentle and fed with so little, but now in our daies, as the report goes, be come to bee so ravenous and wilde, that they devour man, they waste and depopulate fields, houses, and Towneships.

Utopia of Sir
Thomas More.

On the South border, where the River Ouse so often mentioned first springeth in a place rising with an easie ascent, and out of which there walme Springs in great plenty, standeth Brakley, as one would say a place full of Brake or Ferne, in old time a famous Mercat Towne and staple as it were for wool: which how large and wealthy it was, it maketh now demonstration to travaillers, only by the ruines thereof, and by a Majer, whom it hath for the chiefe Magistrate. The Zouches Lords of the place, founded a College there: from whom it came successively as a possession in marriage right unto the Hollands and the Lovels. But when Lord Lovell in King Henry the Seventh his time was attainted, the Stantlees became Lords of it by the Kings gift. But the College there, at this day ruinous, belongeth to the Students of Maudlen College in Oxford, who use it for a retyring place. Neither came this place to the least name and reputation that it had, by occasion of the memory of Saint Rumbald a young Infant, who as wee finde written in his life, being a Kings sonne, so soone as ever he was borne, after he had spoken I know not what holy words, and professed himselfe to be a Christian, was forthwith baptised, and so presently dyed, and being canonized by the people amongst the Saints, had his commemoration kept both here and at Buckingham.

From hence Northward, when we had gone six miles forward, and all the way well wooded, first we saw Albuck, where Sir T. Billing sometime Lord chiefe Justice in the Kings Bench with great state dwelt: from whom it descended hereditarily to the Skytes by the ancient Family of the Lovels: then Weden and Wapibam, which the Family of the Pinkneys held by Barony, untill that H. de Pinkney ordained King Edward the first his heire, Whom being a right good and excellent Prince many evill men made their heire: whereas (according to Tacitus) a good father maketh no Prince, but a bad one his heire. Then came we straight waies to TRIPONTIUM, which Antonine the Emperour mentioneth, though not in due place: For, I am of opinion, that this was the very same, which now we call Torchester: and to prove it, there be some arguments of moment as yet remaining. If Trimontium in Thracia had that name of three hills, Tritarrita in Tuscan of three Towtes, and Tripolis like-

Barony of the Pinkneys.

wife

wife of three Cities conjoynd in one; I have no reason to doubt, that this TRIPONTIUM of ours, might be so called of three Bridges. And heere at this Taper the Roman Portway which in many places most evidently sheweth it selfe betweene it and Stony Strassford, is cut through by three speciall Channells or streames that the little River there divideth it selfe into; which in times past, like as at this day had of necessity there severall Bridges over them. Now, if you ask a Brittain, how he saith in his [Three Bridges] you shall heare him by and by answer [Taeu pome]: and there shall you see certaine honest men, from whom I have received heere peeces of Romanes Coins, that constantly avouch, the true name of this place to be Terecester, and think it was called of Tereces. Howbeit Mariannus nameth it Tenecester, if the Booke be true, in whom we read, that this towne was so fortified in the yeer of our Redemption, that the Danes by no meanes could winne it by assault: and that King Edward the first afterwards compassed it about with a stone Wall: yet was with all our seeking could see no tokens of any such Wall. Only there is a Mount remaining called in mens hands, they call it Beribill, now turned into private mens Gardens, and planted on every side with Chery trees. And very time it selfe hath so conquered and beautified the towne, that beholden it is to the situation, to the name, and old Coins, and whiles heere found, for that esteeme which it hath of antiquity. For, no more thing there is in it but one onely Church that it hath, and the same is a faire building, wherein D. Sponde sometime the Parson thereof, by report, a nefactor to Church and towne both, lieth entombed within a tombe of his curious workmanship. But hard by, at Easton-Nesson, there is to be seen, a beautiful dwelling house belonging to the Knightly Family of the Ferrars.

The River that watereth Terecester, as it goeth from hence toward Ouse, on this side Grafton, which now is reputed an Honor of the Kings, but in times past was the seat of the Family of Widdewill: out of which came Richard, a man highly renowned for his vertue and valour: who for that he tooke to wife Jaquet the widow of John of Bedford, and daughter to Peter of Luxemburg, Earle of Saint Paul, wonne the Kings licence, was by King Henry the Sixth fined at a thousand pounds of our money. Yet afterwards he advanced the same Richard to the honorable Title of John Widdewill de Rivers. With whose daughter Dame Elizabeth, King Edward the Fourth secretly contracted marriage: and verily hee was the first of all our Kings, who by Conquest that married his subject, but thereby, he drew upon himselfe and his kinsfolke a world of troubles, as yee may see, in our Histories. The said Richard, the devil Lord of Rivers, Grafton, and de la Mole, by King Edward the Fourth, in Law, was erected (these be the very words out of the Charter of his creation) be Earle Rivers, by cincture of the sword, To have unto him and his heires, within the 20. pounds, by the hands of the Sheriffe of Northampton. And loone after he was exceeding great honour ordained High Constable of England. (I speake of the kings Parent it selfe) To occupy, manage, and execute that Office, either by himselfe, or by sufficient Deputies for terme of life, receiving yearly two hundred pounds of the Exchequer, with full power and authority to take examinations, and to proceed of and concerning the crime of high Treason, or the occasion thereof: also to hear, and in due time to determine the causes and businesses aforesaid, with all things arising from them, incident to them, or conjoynd therewith, even summarily, in any place whatsoever below, without noise or formall order of Judgement, only saving the Truth of the fact, and with the Kings hand and power, if it shall be thought necessary, without all appeals. Moreover about that time he was made Lord of Northampton, England. But he having enjoyed these honours a small while, was loone after quarrell of the king his sonne in Law, aforesaid, taken in the battaile at St Albans, beheaded. And albeit, in his sonnes this offspring, as it were half dead, yet what time as Anthony Earle Rivers was by Richard the third made Duke of York, head, Richard also and his other brethren dead without issue: yet from their bones there did spread forth most faire and fruitfull branches. For, out of them came the royall Race and line of England, the Marquesses of Dorset, the Earles of

Parliament
27. H. 6.

7. Edw. 4.
Constable of England.

Earles of Arundel, Earles of Worcester, Earles of Derby, the last Duke of Buckingham, and Barons of Stafford.

Just behinde Grafton lieth Sacy Forrest stored with Deere and fit for game. More Eastward, the Country all over is besprinkled with Villages and little Townes, among which, these are of greatest name, Blisworth, the habitation of the Wakes descended from that honorable race of the Barons of Wake and Essexville: Pateshull, which gave name to the most worshipfull family in times past of the Pateshulls: Greenes, Norton, so named of the Greenes men in the fore-going age right famous for their wealth: But it was called in foretime (if I be not deceived) Norton Dany, which those Greenes held by knights service, as also a moiety of Asheby Mares in this County, by service, To lift up their right hand toward the King upon Christmas-day every yeare, wherefore the King shall bee in England. Also Wardon, an Hundred, which had Lords descended from Sir Guy of Reinbucourt a Norman, whose inheritance came by the Fellians to Gulscar Leddes, whose Daughter Christian bare unto her husband Henry de Brabant many children: yet Gulscar the eldest of them tooke to him the surname of Leddes from his mother. But shortly after, those faire lands and possessions were by the females parted betweene William and John, both Lastimers of Corby. From John, the Gripins in this Shire, and from William those Lastimers, Barons of good antiquity, in Turkshire, deduced their Descent.

Sacy Forest.
Forst de
Sacy.

Fines 18.
Rich. 2.

Higher into the Country Northward is the head of the River Aufona (for Aven in the British tongue is a general name of all Rivers) which the people dwelling thereby call Nes: and from the West side of the Shire, holdeth on his course with many reaches of his bankes, after a sort through the middle part of this Shire; and all the way along it doth comfortable service. A notable River, I assure you, and if I have any sight into these matters, fortified in times past with garisons by the Romans. For, when as that part of Britain on this side the River, was now in Claudius the Emperors time brought subject to the Roman government, so as the Inhabitants thereof were called Socij Romanorum, that is, the Romans consorts or associates, and the Britans dwelling beyond the river oftentimes invaded this their country, and with great violence made incursions, and spoiled much: when as also that the Associates themselves who could better endure the Romans commands, than brooke their vices, other whiles conspired with those on the further side of the River: P. Ostorius (as saith Tacitus) cinctus castris Antonam (Aufonas I would reade if I might be so bold) & Sabrinam cohibere parat, that is, if I understand the place a right, Hee by placing Forts and Garisons, hard by the Rivers Antona, or Aufona rather, and Severn, determined to restraine and keepe in those Britans on the further side; and these that were Provincials and associates, from conjoyning their forces together, and helping one another against the Romans. Now what River this ANTONA should be no man is able to tell. Lepidus the very Phobus of our age hath either driven away this mist, or else verily a cloud hath dimmed mine eye-sight. He pointeth with his finger to Northampton, and I am of opinion that this word Antona is closely crept into Tacitus, in stead of Aufona, on which Northampton standeth. For the very navill, heart and middle of England is counted to be nere unto it, where out of one hill spring three great Rivers running divers wayes: Cherwell into the South; Leame, Westward, which as it maketh speed to Severn, is straight wayes received by a second Antona; and this Aufona or Nen Eastward. Of which, these two Aufons so crosse England overthwart, that whosoever comes out of the North parts of the Island must of necessity passe over one of these twaine. When Ostorius therefore had fortified Severne, and these two Aufons, he had no cause to feare any danger out of Wales, or the North parts, to befall unto his people, either Romans or associates, who at that time had reduced the nereft and next part of the Island onely into the forme of a Province: as else where Tacitus himselfe witnesseth. Some of these Forts of Ostorius his making, may those great fortifications and military Fences seeme to bee, which are heere seene at Gildesborough and Dunmire, betweene the Springheads of the two Aufons which run divers wayes, and where onely there is passage into the hither part of Britaine without any rivers

to

to hinder it. That fort at Gildsbrough, is great and large, but this at Dantery is greater and larger: For, being foure square, upon an high hill from whence all the country beneath may be seene farre every way about, and having on the East side a hill, which they call Spelwell, it enclōfeth within a banke cast up by mans hand, more than one hundred acres of ground or thereabout. Within which the country people doer whiles finde coined peeces of money of the Roman Emperors, as proofes of the antiquity thereof. Much deceived are they therefore, who will needs have it to be worke of the Danes, and that of them, the towne under it, was named Dantery, which being a through-fare well knowne at this day by reason of the Innes there, had a religious house of the Austen Friars, that Sir H. de Fawesley founded, as I have heard.

At the head of Anson or Nen, standeth Catesby that gave name to an ancient family, but now of foule tainted memory, for a most horrible and damnable plot, never in any age exampled, which that Robert Catesby of Ashby S. Legu, the shame and indelible staine of his house and name, detestably breathing forth rage cruelty in barbarous wife, and compassing impiously the destruction of Prince and Country, devised lately under a specious pretext of Religion.

Of whom, let all times be silent, least by making mention of him, the foule stain and blot of our age appeare unto Posterity, at the naming whereof we cannot do but with horror grieve and groane againe, seeing the very dumbe and liveless figures seeme to be moved and troubled at so hellish Villany imagined by him, and his complices. Hard by it, is Fawesley, where have dwelt a long time the Knights of the County of Stafford: and more Eastward hard by Nen, as yet very small, there is Wedon in the street, sometimes the royall seat of Wolper K. of the Mercians, and cometh into a Monastery by his daughter Werburg a most holy Virgine: of whose might in driving away. Geese from hence, some credulous writers have made many tales. Verily I should wrong the Truth, if I should not thinke, (albeit I have thought otherwise) that this Wedon is the very station that Antonine the Emperour named BANNAVENNA, BENNAVENNA, BENNAVENTA, and once corruptly ISANNAVENTA, withstanding there now remaine no expresse tokens of that name, considering how Time changeth all, both names and things. For the distance from thence to London and Batting Townes which were in ancient times, answereth just: and in the name of BANNAVENNA, the name of the River Anson, the head whereof is found unto it in some sort doth plainly discover it selfe. Likewise, the high Post-way to London maneth streets goeth directly from hence Northward with a bridge or causeway, and worne out; but most of all over against a Village named Creek, where it is necessary that there should be a bridge; but in other places the bridge sheweth selfe also as farre as to Dowbridge, neere Lilborne most apparantly.

Somewhat more Northward wee saw Aliborp, the habitation of the Spenser family, allied to very many and those most honorable and worshipfull families, out of which house Sir Roberts Spenser the fifth Knight in a successive continued Descent, and five lover of vertue and learning, was by our most gracious Sovereigne King advanced to the honour of Baron Spenser of Wormelcighston. Hard by Aliborp is demby house, a faire patterne of stately and magnificence building maketh a glorious shew, which Sir Christopher Hatton one of Queene Elizabeths Privie Counsell, Lord Chancellor of England, and knight of the Order of the Garter, built upon his lands and inheritance of his great grandmother, heire unto the Family of the de Bevis, for the greatest and last monument, (as himselfe afterwards was wont to say) in his youth: A man, to say nothing of him but that which in truth is due, for his religion and godlinesse right devout, of approved faithfulness to the State, of incomparable ty: for almesdeeds of all others most bountifull, and one (which is not the least of his praise) that was most willing and ready to support and maintaine Justice. Who, as he lived a godly life, so as godly he slept in Christ: yet his commendation made knowne by the light some testimony of letters, shall shine forth more gloriously than by that gorgeous Monument right well becomming so great a Personage.

BANNAVENNA, which untill now is called, ISANNAVENTA and ISANNAVENTA.

Aliborp, or Oldborp. Baron Spenser. Sir Christopher Hatton. He died anno 1591.

Sir William Hatton, his adopted sonne, consecrated to his memory, in the Church of Saint Paul in London.

Beneath these places Nen passeth on forward with a still and small streame, and alone taketh in a small Brooke from the North, and is thereby augmented: where, at the very meeting and confluence of both, a City called after the River Northampton, and short, Northampton, is so seated, that on the West side it is watered with the Brooke, and on the South side with the foresaid Nen. Which City I was of late easily induced to guesse, to have beene that ancient BENNAVENTA; but if my conjecture missed the truth, the confession of my errour may save it. As for the name, it may seeme to have beene imposed of the situation thereof upon the North bank of the River Anson. The City it selfe which seemeth to have beene built all of stone, is, I assure you, for houses very faire, for circuit of good largeness, and walled about: and from the Wall yee have a goodly prospect every way to a wide and spacious plaine Country.

On the West side, it hath an old Castle, and the very antiquity thereof giveth a grace unto it, built by Simon de Sancto Lizio, commonly called Senlyze, the first of that name Earle of Northampton: who also joynd unto it a beautifull Church called Saint Andrews, for a place of his owne buriall: and, as men say, reedified the Towne: Simon also the younger, his sonne, founded without the Towne a Monastery commonly called * De la prey, for Nunnes. During the Saxons Heptarchie, it seemed to have lien forlorne and of none account, neither have Writers made any where mention of it, in all those depredations of the Danes, unless it were when Swein the Dane in a furious and outrageous moode made most cruelly havocke throughout all England: for then, as Henry of Huntingdon recordeth, it was set on fire and burnt to the ground. In the Raigne of Saint Edward the Confessour, there were in it, as we finde in the Survey Booke of England, LX. Burgesses in the Kings Domaine, being as many Mansions: Of these, in King William the Conquerours time, Fourteen were waste and void, and forty seven remained. Over and above these, there were in the Barrough forty Burgesses in the Domaine of King William. After the Norman time, it valiantly withstood the Siege layed unto it by the Barons, when they distressed and troubled the whole Realme with injurious wrongs and slaughters, being maliciously bent against King John for private causes, which notwithstanding they so cloked with pretenses of Religion and the common good, that they tearmed themselves, The Army of God and the holy Church; at which time, they say, that Trench and Rampire was made, which they call Hunshil: but it stood not out with like success against Henry the third their lawfull King, as it did against these rebels: for when those Barons being nuzzelled up in sedition, and rebellion, from hence displayed their banners and founded the battaile against him, he made a breach through the Wall, and soone wonne it by assault. After this, diverse times, like as before the kings held their Parliaments here, because it standeth very nere in the midst of England, and in the yeere after Christ was borne 1460. here was a wofull and bloody field fought, wherein (such was the civill division of England in it selfe) Richard Nevill Earle of Warwick, after many a noble man slaine, led away captive that most unhappy king Henry the Sixth in a piteous spectacle, who was now the second time taken prisoner by his subjects. To conclude, the Longitude of Northampton our Mathematicians have described by 22. degrees and 29. scruples, and the Latitude by 52. degrees and 13. scruples. From hence Nen maketh haste away by Castle Ashby, where Henry L. Compton began to build a faire sightly house: close unto which lieth Tardley Hastings, so named of the Hastings, sometimes Earles of Pembroch, unto whom it belonged. And to turne aside, I may not omit Horton, when as king Henry the Eighth created Sir W. Par Lord thereof, uncle and Chamberlaine to Queene Catharin Par, Baron Par of Horton, which honor shortly vanished with him when he left only daughters, who were married into the families of Tresham, and Lane. But to returne: Nen goeth forward to Mercat Wellesborough, in old time Wedlingborough, and Wodlingborough, made a mercat by K. John at the suit of the Monks of Crowland, where there runneth into it a River yet comming

Northampton.

1075. Register of Saint Andrews.

* De Pratis.

Gods host for Army.

* Yardley. Lord Parr of Horton.

Kettering.
The booke of Inquisit. in the Exchequer.

Baron Vaulx.

Higham Ferrers.
Mathew
Parker.

Oundale.

Barnwell.

Fotheringhay.

Cecily Duchesse of York.

comming downe by Rushion and Newton, belonging to the Treshams, by Geddington also where the King had a Castle, and where there remaineth yet a Crosse erected in the honour of Queene Eleanor wife to King Edward the First: by Boughton the seat of the Montacutes Knights: by Kettering a Mercat Towne well frequented, neere unto which standeth Rouwell much talked of for the horse faire there kept: by Burton likewise the Barony (if I mistake not the name) of Alane de Damm: For, king Henry the First gave unto him a Barony of that name in this Shire, for that in single fight he had slaine the French Kings Champion at Gisors: and by Harroden, the Lord whereof named Sir Nicolas Vaulx Captaine of Guines in Picardy, king Henry the Eighth created Baron Vaulx of Harroden.

From hence goeth the Aufon or Nea to Higham, a Towne in times past of the Peverels, and after by them of the Ferrers, from whom it is named Higham Ferrers: who had here also their Castle: the ruines and rubbish whereof are yet seene unto the Church. But, the excellent ornament of this place was Henry Chicheley Archbishop of Canterbury, who built All-soules College in Oxford, and another here, wherein he placed Secular Clerkes, and Prebendaries, and withall an Hospital for the poore. Then runneth it by Addington the possession in old time of the Fres, and by Thorpston commonly called Thrapston, belonging likewise to them: and ver against it Draxton, the house in the foregoing age of Sir H. Greene: but afterwards by his daughter, of John and Edward Staffords, Earles of Wiltshire; but now the habitation of the Lord Mordaunt unto whom it descended hereditarily from the Greenes noble Gentlemen and of right great name in this Country in their time.

Then runneth it, in manner round about a proper little Towne which is given name unto, Oundale they now call it corruptly in stead of Avondale: where there is nothing worth fight, but a faire Church, and a free Schoole for the instruction of children, and an Almshouse for poore people, founded by Sir William Lustin sometime Major of London. Neere adjoyning to this, stands Barnwell, a little Caste, which now of late Sir Edward Montacute of the ancient family of the Montacutes, as may be collected by his Armes, hath repaired and beautified with new buildings. In times past it was the possession of Berengary le Moigne, that is, Monke, and now some thinke, of Berengary of Touraine, the great Clerke, whose opinion of the Sacrament of the Lords Supper, was condemned in a Synode of an hundred and threene Bishops assembled by the Bishop of Rome.

After this, it passeth on by Fotheringhay Castle, environed on every side with most pleasant meadows, which in the Raigne of Henry the Third, when the strong hold encouraged the Lords and Nobles to revolt, William Earle of Aumari surprised upon the Sodaine, and laied all the Country about waste, as Mathew of Paris recordeth. At which time it belonged unto the Earles of Huntingdon who were of the royal Race of Scotland. A good while after, King Edward the Third assigned it as a reward, for an inheritance or appennage as the French tearme it, unto his sonne Edmund of Langley, Duke of Torke, who reedified the Castle, and made the highest fortification or Keepe thereof in forme of an horse-fetter, which both of it selfe, and with a Falcon in it, was his Devise, or Emprese; as implying that hee was locked up from all great hope, as a younger brother. His sonne Edward Duke of Torke in the second yeere of Henry the Fifth his Raigne, and in the yeere of Christ 1415. (as appeareth by an inscription there in rude and barbarous Verses) founded a passing faire Collegiat Church, wherein himselfe, when he was slaine in the battaile at Agincourt, as also Richard Duke of Torke, his brothers sonne, who lost his life at Wakefield, and his wife Cecily Nevil, had stately and sumptuous Tombes, which were profanely subverted together with the upper part of the Church, in King Edward the Sixth his time. Yet in memoriall of them, Queene Elizabeth comming thither commanded two Monuments to be erected in the nether part of the Church, that now standeth which notwithstanding, (such was their pinching and sparing that had the charge of this worke) are thought scarce befitting so great Princes descending from Kings, and from whom Kings of England are descended.

A The forme of the Keepe before said built like a fetter-locke occasioneth mee to digresse a little, and I hope with your pardon, when the gravest Authours in as small matters have done the like: Edmund of Langley Duke of Torke who built that Keepe, and garnished the glasse-windowes there with Fetter-lockes, when hee saw his sons being young scholars gazing upon the painted windowes, asked them what was Latin for a Fetter-locke? They studying and looking silently one upon another, not able to answer: If you cannot tell me, faith he, I will tell you, hic, hac, hic Tacetis, that is, hic, hac, hic, he silent and quiet: and therewithall added, God knoweth what may happen hereafter. This King Edward the Fourth his great Grand-child reported publickely, when he having attained the Crowne created Richard his younger sonne Duke of Torke, and then commanding that hee should use for his Badge the Fetter-locke open to verifie the presage of his great Grand-father. But this by the way.

The said Cecily mother to King Edward the Fourth saw plainly within the compass of a few yeeres what disports unruly and powerfull Fortune (pardon the word, for I acknowledge that God ruleth all) maketh herselfe out of the miseries of the mighty: For she saw Richard Duke of Torke her husband, even then when he thought himselfe sure of the Kingdome, and her sonne the Earle of Rutland, slaine together in a bloody fought field, and some few yeeres after her eldest sonne Edward the Fourth enjoying the regall Crowne, deprived of the same, recovering it againe, and taken away by untimely death, when hee had before made away her second sonne and his owne brother George Duke of Clarence. After that, she saw her other sonne Richard Duke of Gloicester aspiring to the Crowne and making way to it by that lamentable murdering of his Nephewes, and slandering of her his owne Mother, (for he charged her openly with the greatest dishonor incident to a Lady) and afterward she saw him when he was possessed of the Kingdome, within a while slaine in battaile. And these her miseries were so linked together, that the longer she lived the greater sorrow she felt, and every day was more dolefull than other. As for that disaistre which even here befell unto another most mighty Prince Mary Queene of Scots, I had leiser it should be enwrapped up in silence, than once spoken of: Let it be forgotten quite, if it be possible: if not, yet be it hidden, as it may in silence. Under the best Princes some D there are who being once armed with authority, know how by secret flights to set a goodly shew and faire pretense of conscience and Religion, thereby to cke their owne private designs: And there be againe, that sincerely and from the heart tender true Religion, their Princes security, yea and (which is the highest rule and law of all) the publique safety. Neither can it bee denied, but that even the best Princes themselves are otherwhiles violently carried away, as good Pilotes with tempests, against their wills whither they would not. But what they doe as Princes and Kings, let us leave to God who onely hath power over Kings.

Now being now come unto the skirts of Huntingdon-shire, running under a faire stone Bridge at Walmesford, passeth by Dunobriæ, a right ancient City, which being called in the English Saxon Tongue Dormancester, as I said before, tooke up a great space of ground on both banks of the River in both Counties. For, the little Village Caster which stands a mile off from the River, may seeme to have bene a part of it, by the pavements there found, wrought checker wise with small square quarels; although on the Church wall we reade this inscription bearing date of a later time.

XV. KL. MAII DEDICATIO HUI-JUS ECCLESIAE MCXXIII.
THE FIFTEENTH DAY BEFORE THE KALENDS OF MAY, IN THE YEERE ONE THOUSAND ONE HUNDRED TWENTY FOURE, [WAS] THE DE-DICATION OF THIS CHURCH.

And doubtlesse, of greater name and note it was: for in the corne fields ad-joyning, which in steade of Dormanton, they call Narmanton Fields, so many pieces of Romane Coine are turned out of the ground, that a man would verily thinke

Lollham-Bridges.

Upton.

Peterborough.

thinke they had bene sowed there: and two Rode-wayes, whereof the Croft are yet evident to bee seene, went from hence, the one called Forty-foot-way, because it was forty foot broad, unto Stanford: the other named Long-ditch and High-street by Lollham-bridges, (bridges I assure you of great antiquity, whereof eleven arches are in sight, now chinking and chawning for age) through West into Lincoln-shire. At the very division and parting of these two Port-wayes, the deth Upton highly situate, whereupon it tooke also that name: where Sir John Wingfield Knight, descended from that ancient Family of the Wingfields, which brought forth so many worshipfull and worthy Knights, hath a faire house and most lovely walkes.

From Durobrivæ the River Auson or Nen passeth on to Peterborough in the very angle or nouke of this Shire, where Writers report there hath been a gulf or whirlpole in the River, of exceeding great depth, called Medeswell, and some hard by it named thereupon Medeswellhamsted and Medeshamsted, which some, as wee read in Robert de Swapham, was built in an excellent fine place, having of him side fennes, and passing good waters, and of the other many goodly woods, meadows, and pastures: faire and beautifull to the eye every way, and not accessible by land for many miles. The River Nen runneth by at the South side of the Burrough, in the middle of which River, there is a place as it were a gulfe so deepe and cold withall, that even in summer no swimmer is able to drawe or dive unto the bottom. Yet is it never for all the year over in Winter: for there is a spring there; whence the water wellet out. The place called in old time Medeswell, until that Wolpher King of the Mercians built there a monastery in honour of Saint Peter. And seeing the place was all a marsh ground, he laid the foundation, as that Robert writeth, with mighty huge stones, such as might an Oxen would hardly draw one of them, which I saw with mine owne eyes, saith he, when the Monastery was destroyed. Afterward, of this Monastery dedicated to Saint Peter, it began to bee called PETRIBURGUS, or PETROPOLIS, that is, burgh or Burgh, and the said Monastery was very famous and renowned. The occasion, and the building whereof, I have thought it worth my labour briefly to lay downe, out of the said Robert de Swapham, a Writer of good antiquity, that the sonne of Peada, who was the first Christian King of the Mercians, in the year of grace 546. for the propagation of Christian Religion, laid the foundation of a Monastery at Medeshamsted in the Girvians or Fen-country, which hee could not build for that by the wicked practise of his mother, he was made away.

After Peada succeeded his brother Wolpher, who being most averse from Christianity, murdered Wolphald and Rufin his owne sonnes with cruel and inhumanity, because they had devoted themselves unto Christ, and embraced his Religion. But himselfe some few yeeres after, embracing Christian Religion for to expiate and wash away the staine of that his impiety with some goodly worke, set in hand to build up this Monastery which his brother Etheldred, which through the helpe of his brother Etheldred, of Kent, and Kinefrith his sisters, being fully finished in the yeere of our Lord 635. he consecrated unto Saint Peter, endowed it with ample Revenues, and called Sexmuff, a right godly and devout man (who principally advised him to this) the first Abbat thereof.

This Monastery flourished afterward, and had the name and opinion of the world of great holiness, for the space of two hundred and fourteene yeeres or thereabout, until those most heave and wofull times came, of the Danes, who made spoile and waste of all: For, then were the Monkes massacred, and the Monastery quite overthrowen lay buried, as one would say, many yeeres together in the owne rubbish and ruines. At the last, about the yeere of our Lord 960. Archbold Bishop of Winchester, who wholly gave himselfe to the furtherance of a publicall profession began to reedifie it, having the helping hand especially of King Edgar, and Adulph the Kings Chancellour, who upon a pricke of conscience and repentance, for that hee and his wife together lying in bed asleepe had overheard

A smothered the little infant their onely sonne, laid upon the reedifying of this monastery all the wealth he had: and when it was thus rebuilt, he became Abbat thereof.

From which time, it was of high estimation and name, partly for the great riches it had and in part for the large priviledges which it enjoyed: although in the reigne of William the Conquerour, Herward an Englishman being proclaimed traitor and outlawed, made a rode out of the Isle of Ely and rifled it of all the riches that it had gathered together against whom Toreld the Abbot, erected the fort Mont-Toreld: Yet was it esteemed exceeding wealthy even unto our fathers daies, when, King Henry the Eighth thrust out the Monkes in all places, alleging that they declining from the ordinances, which those holy and ancient Monkes held, wasted in riot and excess the goods of the Church, which was the Patrimony and inheritance of the poore; and in their places erected here a Bishopricke assigning thereunto this county and Rutland-shire for his Diocese: and placed withall a Deane and certaine Prebendaries. So that of a Monastery it became a Cathedral Church, which if you well consider the building, is for the very antiquity thereof, goodly to behold. The forefront carrieth a majesty with it, and the Cloisters are very large, in the glasse windows whereof is represented the history of Wolpher the founder, with the succession of the Abbots. Saint Maries Chappell is a goodly large building, full of curious worke, and the quire faire: where as two as infortunate Queenes as any other, Katherine of Aragon repudiated by King Henry the Eighth, and Mary Queen of Scotland being antierred, sought rest and repose there, from all their misteries.

*B*eneath Brayburgh, the river Auson or Nen, which by this time is gone from his spring-head (much about forty five miles, and carrieth along with him all rills, brookes, and land floods occasioned by rains, that he hath taken into his channells, is divided sundry waies. And finding no way to cary his streame, by spreading his waters all abroad in winter time, yea and other whiles most part of the yeere, overfloweth the plaine country, so as it seemeth to be nothing but a vast sea lying even and level, with some few Islands that beare up their heads and appeare above the water. The cause of such inundation the people inhabiting thereby, allege to be this, for that of the three channells or drains, by which so great store of water was belidged into the sea, the first that went directly into the sea by Thorney Abbot, and then a part by Clam, Chaffe and Crowland: the second also by the trench cut by Marion Bishop of Ely, called the Nen drain, and then by Wisbech, have long since beene forlorn and neglected: and so the third which goeth downe by Horsey, Wilsen, Ramsey, methen and Sulhens - Load, is not able to receive so much water: whereby it breaketh forth with more violence upon the flats adjoining: And the country complaineth for trespass done unto them, as well by those that have inore ignored the said drains, as by those that have turned the same aside to their private use: and as the Beast said some time, so doo they, This Nature herselfe hath well provided for man's use: but as she hath given all rivers their courses, and issues, and as well their issues, so shee hath given all rivers their heads and springs. But thus much of this matter may seeme to some over-much.

*E*nough in this place is the County least in breadth, for betweene Nen and the River Wolfer the distance on the North side, is but scarce five miles. Upon Wolfer there is an old castle called Wolfer, neere unto the spring-head, is Wolfer built by Robert, May, Abbot, De Braybrooke, a most inward minion of King John: whose sonne Henry having married Christian Ledes an inheritor of a great estate, hee did some adopted himselfe into the surname of the Ledes: from one of whose posterity his sonne, as I said before, came unto the Ledes, and by the name of the Ledes whole inheritance now it is. Neere unto it among the woods is a fine house of a Monastery, called in times past De Druis, and afterward Wolfer, which William Beauchamp founded in the reigne of Henry the Second for Wolfer Monks. From thence might Rochingham bee seen, were it not for the woods: a Castle sometime of the Barles of Lincoln, built by King William the Conquerour, and since it was a wall, as we finde in his Domesday Booke, fortified with Rampier

Mont-Toreld.

The Fennes.

Braybrooke;
Lords of Braybrooke;

Pipwell,

Rochingham.

and Bulwarkes, and a duple range of Battlements, situate upon the side of an hill within a woody Forest, which thereupon is named Rockingham Forest.

After this it runneth beside Haringworth the seat in old time of the Canibons now of the Lord Zouch: who descended from Eudo a younger sonne of Alan de Zouch, of Abby De la Zouch, have growne up to a right honourable Family of Barons; whose honour and state was much augmented by marriage with one of the heires of * Canlow, as also with an other of Baron Saint Maur, who likewise gave his Pedegree from the heire of the Lord Zouch de Abby, and the Lovels Lord Castel-Cary in Somerfetshire.

Here also I saw Deane, belonging in ancient times to the Deanes, afterwards to the Tindals, which place is worth the remembrance, if it were but for this, that it is now a proper and faire dwelling house of the Brudenells: out of which Family Sir Edmund Brudenell, late deceased, was a passing great lover and admirer of venerable Antiquity. The Family likewise of Engain, which was both ancient and honourable had their seat hereby at Blatberwic (where now the Staffords of Knights grece inhabite, who descended from Ralph the first Earle of Stafford) and the gaines changed their Castle named Hamel before time, into a Monastery and Finitherved. Their issue male failed about two hundred yeares since: but of the heires the eldest was wedded unto Sir John Goldingston, the second to Sir Thomas Pabenham, and the third to Sir William Bernak, all right worthy Knights.

Here also is to be seene Apthorpe, the seat of a most worthy knight, Sir John Mildmay, whose father Sir Walter Mildmay, late one of Queene Elizabeths Counsell, for his vertue, wisdom, piety, and bounty to learning and learning, by founding Emanuel College in Cambridge, hath worthily deserved to be esteemed among the best men in this our age.

Hard by standeth Thornhaugh sometimes belonging to the Family Deane Medardo, contracted into Semars, and now to the right honorable Sir William sonne to Francis Earle of Bedford descended from Simars, whom King Henry for his vertues and faithfull service in Ireland whilke hee was Lord Deputy, advanced to the Dignity of Baron Russell of Thornhaugh.

Neither is the Towne Wellodon to be passed over in silence, considering it went in old time for a Barony, which by Manda the Daughter and Geffrey de Ridell (who together with King Henry the first his sonne was descended from Richard Basset sonne of Ralph Basset, Lord Justice of England, whose race it continued unto King Henry the fourth his dayes: For the females it accrued to the Knevets and Mesburys).

Wellodon being past Haringworth goeth to visit Collingston, where Lady the Countesse of Richmond, King Henry the Seaventh his mother built a faire and stately house: Under which, the neighbour inhabitants use to have plenty of slate stones for their buildings. From whence Wintering runneth out farre into the East, wherein the people there dwelling report Danes long since were discomfited in a memorable battaile and put to flight by this time is Wellodon come to Burgley wheicof the most prudent and able Councellour Sir William Cecil, Lord high Treasurer of England, and a large care and supporter of the same, received the Title of Baron Burgley, great good defects, at the hands of Queene Elizabeth. Which Time hee lived with the lustre of his vertues, and beautified this place with magnificent buildings, adjoining thereto a large Parke encompassed about with wall of a great circuit. Beneath it, there are ancient Quarries of stone, out of which the Abbayes of Peterburgh and of Ramsley were built. (to witte the very words out of the History of Ramsley) The stony Quarries wasten and beke to worke: yet ever still there remaineth work beke, wherein they being refurnished betwene whiles with rest, may be employed and thus wee read in the Charter of King Edward the Confessor, consideration of four thousand Eeles in Lent; the Monkes of Ramsley shall have Haringworth.

See Abby De la Zouch, in Leicester-shire.
Barons Zouch.
* De Cantelupo.
Deane.

Barons de Engain.

Or Hymell.

Apthorpe.

Thornhaugh.

Wellodon.
Basset of Wellodon.

Slate stones.

Burgley.

Quarries
to build coldest.

Quarries

Quarries

A Territory of Saint Peter so much square as stiler stone, as they need, at Berneck, and of rough building (stone for walls, as Burch. Under Berneck that high-way made by the Romans, which the neighbour Inhabitants, of the breadth that it carrieth, call The forty foot-way, from Caster to Stanford cutteth and divideth this Shire, and is to be seene with an high Causey, especially by the little Wood of Berneck, where it hath a Beacon set upon the very ridge, and so runneth forth along by Burgley Park wall toward Stanford.

Some five miles hence, Welland running downe by Maxey Castle, belonging sometime to the noble house of Wake, and by Peag-Kirk, (where, in the Primitive Church of the English Nation, Pega an holy woman who gave name to that place, and sister of Saint Gualak, with other Nuns and devout virgins by their life and example gave good documents of piety and chastity; commeth to the Fennes so often mentioned. And for as much as the banke on the South side thereof is in many places neglected, the River lieth fore upon the lands thereabout with great detriment: and thus being put out of his owne Chanell that before time went by Spalding, he entreth closely into Peag or Anson, and over-chargeth it exceedingly.

Now the lesse Avon, which is the other of the limits, as I said, of this shire Northward, but serveth for a limit onely about five or six miles in length, breaking out of the ground at Avon-well by Naseby, neere by the Springs-head of Welland, runneth Westward by Suleby sometimes an Abbey of Black-Monkes, and by Stanford upon Avon, the habitation of the Corbes Family, out of which there is spread a notable spring with many branches in all that Tract adjoining: also by Elborne, the seat in times past of the Carvilles. Which, that it hath beene in old time a Mansion place or Station of the Romans, I am induced to thinke; by the site thereof hard by one of their Port-waies, by the ancient Trenches there, and a little piked hill cast up: into which when of late dayes some digged in hope of old hid treasure, in stead of gold they found coles: And when this river being as yet but small is once gone under Dun-burgh, it leaveth Northampton-shire and entreth Warwick-shire. By those coles digged forth from under the said hill, what if I should conjecture that this hill was raised up for a limit or bound-marke, seeing Silius Flaccus writeth, that either ashes, or coles, or pot-herds, or broken glasses, or bones halfe burnt, or lime, or plaster, were wont to be put under land-markes and limits: and S. Augustine writeth thus of coles: Is it not a wonderfull thing (saith hee) whereas considering Coles be so bricke, that with the least blow they brake, with the least crushing they are crushed; yet no time, bee it never so long conquere them: in so much as they that pitch Land-markes and limits, were wont to conch them underneath, to convince any litigious fellow whatsoever, that should come never so long time after, and couch that a limit was not there pitched. And so much the rather incline I to this my conjecture, because they that have written of limits, doe write that certain halts or piles of earth which they termed Botontines, were set in limits: so that I suppose most of these mounds and round hills which we every where see and call Burrows, were for this purpose raised, and that ashes, coles, pot-herds, &c. may be found under them, if they were digged downe a good depth into the earth.

The first Earle that this County had to my knowledge, was Waldeuf (sonne of that warlike Shere) who being also Earle of Huntingdon, for his disloyall treachery unto William the Conquerour, lost his head: leaving two daughters onely behinde him by his the Conquerours Niece by a sister of his mothers side. Simon de Saint Lin, being scornfully rejected by Indith the mother for that hee was lame-legged, married the eldest Daughter, and hee built Saint Andrewes Church and the Castle at Northampton. After him succeeded his sonne, Simon the second, who a long time was in fight about his mothers possessions with David King of Scots his mothers second husband: and having sided with King Stephen, in the yeere of our Lord 1152. departed this life with this testimoniall that went of him: A Youth full fraugh with all unlesly wickednesse, and as full of all unseemely lewdnesse. His sonne Simon the third, having gone to law with the Scots for his right to the Earldome of Huntingdon, waisted all his estate, and through the gracious goodnesse of King Henry the Second, married

Forty foot-way.

Maxey.
Peag-Kirk.
Ingulfa.

Stanford.
The Caves.

Bounds or Meere marks in old time.

Lib. de Chel.
Dei 21. cap. 4.

Botontines.
Hence perit:
ventury come our Battines.

Barons of Northampton.

The life of Waldeuf.

married the Daughter and Heire of Gilbert de Gaumi Earle of Lincolne: and in the end having recovered the Earledome of Huntingdon, and disfeized the Scots, dyed childlesse in the yeare 1185. Whereas some have lately set downe Sir Richard G. G. G. to have beene Earle of Northampton afterward, I finde no warrant thereof either in Record, or History: Onely I finde, that Sir Hugh Gobion was a Ringleader in that rebellious rable which held Northampton against King Henry the Third, and that the inheritance of his house came shortly after by marriage to Butler of Woodstock, and Turpin, &c. But this is most certaine that King Edward the Third created William de Bohun a man of approved valour, Earle of Northampton: and when his elder brother Humfrey de Bohun, Earle of Hereford and of Essex, High Constable also of England, was not sufficient in that warlike age, to beare that charge of the Constable, made him also High Constable of England. After him his sonne Humfrey succeeding in the Earledome of Northampton, as also in the Earledomes of Hereford and of Essex, for that his Uncle dyed with issue, begat two Daughters; the one becomen in marriage upon Thomas of Woodstock, the youngest sonne of King Edward the Third, the other upon Henry of Lancaster, Duke of Hereford, who afterwards attained the Crowne by the name of King Henry the Fourth. The Daughter of the said Thomas of Woodstock brought by her marriage this Title of Northampton with others, in the Family of the Staffords. But when they afterwards had lost their honours and dignities, King Edward the Sixth honoured Sir William Parr Earle of Essex, and accomplished Courtier, with the Title of Marquesse of Northampton: who within our remembrance ended this life issuelesse. And while I was writing and penning this Worke, our most sacred Sovereigne King James in the yeare of our Salvation 1603. upon one and the same day advanced Lord Henry Howard brother to the late Duke of Norfolke, a man of rare and excellent wit, and sweet fluent eloquence, singularly adorned also with the best sciences, prudent in counsell, and provident in all, to the state of Baron Howard of Arundell, and the right honourable name, style, and Dignity of Earle of Northampton.

There belong unto this Shire Parishes 326.

LEICESTER

LECESTRIAE

COMITATVS SIVE

Leicestershyre PARS

OLIM CORITANORVM

NOMINA HUNDREDORVM IN COMITATV LECESTRIAE

- A West Goscote Hundred
- B sparkenhoe Hundred
- C guthlakeston Hundred
- D gartery Hundred
- E Est Goscote Hundred
- F Framland Hundred

NOTINGHAMIAE

PARS

Scala Milliarium
Christophorus Saxton descripsit
et William Fyfe Sculp.

LEICESTER-SHIRE.

DN the North side of Northampton-shire boundeth LEICESTER-SHIRE, called in that Booke wherein William the Conquerour set downe his Survey of England, Ledecester-shires: a champion Country likewise throughout, bearing corne in great plenty, but for the most part without Woods. It hath bordering upon it on the East side, both Rutland-shire and Lincoln-shire; on the North Nottingham and Derby-shires; and Warwick-shire on the West. (For, the high Rode way made by the Romanes called Wasling-streets, directly running along the West skirt, separateth it from Warwick-shire;) and on the South side, as I noted even now, lyeth Northampton-shire. Through the middle part thereof passeth the River Soar taking his way toward the Trent: but over the East part a little River called Wreke gently wandereth, which at length findeth his way into the foresaid Soar.

On the South side, where it is divided on the one hand with the River Avon the lesse and on the other with the River Welland, we meet with nothing worth relation, unlesse it be, on Wellands banke, (whiles he is yet but small and newly come from his head) with Haverburgh commonly called Harborrow, a Towne most celebrate heere about for a Faire of Cattaille there kept: and as for Cayleton, as one would say, the husband-mens Towne, (that is not farre from it) wherein (I wote not whether it be worth the relating) all in manner that are borne, whether it bee by a peculiar property of the Soile, or the water, or else by some other secret operation of nature, have an ill favoured, untunable, and harsh manner of speech, fetching their words with very much adoee deepe from out of the throat, with a certaine kinde of wharling.

That Romanie streete way afore said, (the causey whereof being in some other places quite worn and eaten away, heere most evidently sheweth it selfe) passeth on directly as it were by a streight line Northward, through the West side of this Province. The very tract of which street I my selfe diligently traced and followed even from the Tamis to Wales, purposely to seeke out Townes of ancient memory: (laugh you will perhaps, at this my painfull and expencesfull diligence, as vainly curious: neither could I repose my trust upon a more faithfull guide for the finding out of those said townes which Antonine the Emperour specifieth in his Itinerary. This Streets way, being past Dowbridge, where it leaveth Northampton-shire behinde it, is interrupted, first with the River Swift, that is indeed but slow, although the name import swiftnesse, which it maketh good onely in the Winter moneths. The Bridge over it now called Bransford and Bensford Bridge, which heere conjoynd in times past this way, having been of long time broken downe, hath beene the cause that so famous a way for a great while was the lesse frequented: but now, at the common charge of the country, it is repaired. Upon this way lyeth of the one side, Westward, Ceister-Over,

Watlingstreet.

(but it is in Warwick-shire) a place worth the naming, were it but in regard of the Lord thereof Sir Foulke Grevill, a right worshipfull and worthy knight: although the very name it selfe may witnesse the antiquity, for, our ancestours added this word Ceister to no other places but only cities. On the other side of the way Eastward, hard by water Swift which springeth neere Knaptoft the seat of the Turpins a knightly houle descended from an heire of the Gobions, lieth Misterton belonging to the ancient family of the Poulteneys, who tooke that name of Poultney a place now decayed within the said Lordship. Neere to it is Lutterworth a Mercate Towne the possession in times past of the Verdons, which onely sheweth a faire Church which hath beene encreased by the Feldings of knights degree and ancient gentry in this Shire. That famous John Wickliffe was sometime Parson of this Church, a man of a singular, polite, and well wrought wit, most conversant also in the holy Scripture: who for that he had sharpened the neb of his pen against the Popes authority, the Church of Rome, and Ceister-Over.

Ceister.

Lutterworth.

John Wickliffe died 1387.

and religious men, was not onely in his life time most grievously troubled, but also one and forty yeeres after his death, his dead Corps was cruelly handled, being by warrant from the Councell of Siena turned out of his grave and openly burned. Neither is it to be forgotten that neere to this Towne is a spring so cold that within a short time it turneth strawes and stickes into stones.

A spring turning strawes
and stickes into stones.

Cley Cester.
Cleybrooke.

From that Bensford bridge, the foresaid old High way goeth on to High-crosse, called, for that thereabout stood sometime a Crosse, instead of which, is now a very high post with props and supporters thereto. The neighbours there dwelling reported unto me, that the two principall High-waies of England did here, or one another overthwart, and that there stood a most flourishing City there, called Cleycester, which had a Senare of Aldermen in it, and that Cleybrooke, almost off, was part of it: also, that on both sides of the way, there lay under the furrow the corne fields great foundations and ground workes of foure square stone: altho the peeces of Roman money were very often turned up with the Plough: although above the ground, as the Poet saith, Briam ipsa periere ruinae, that is, Even the very ruins are perished and gone. These presumptions together with the distance of this place from BANNAVENTA or WEDON, which agreeth just, and withall the said Bridge leading hitherward, called Bensford, are inducements unto me to thinke verily, that the station BENNONES, or VENONES, was heere, which Antonine the Emperour placeth next beyond BANNAVENTA, especially seeing that Antonine sheweth how the way divided it selfe heere into two parts, which also goeth commonly currant. For, Northward, where the way lieth to Lincolne, the way leadeth directly to RATAE and to VERNOMETUM, of which I will speake anon: and toward the Northwest, Wallingstreet goeth as streight into Wala by MARVESSEDUM, whereof I shall write in his due place in Warwickshire.

Bennones.

Higher, yet neere the same street side standeth Hinkley, which had for Lord, Hugh Granmaismill, a Norman, high Steward or Seneschall of England, during the Raignes of king William Rufus, and Henry the First. The said Hugh had two daughters, Parnell, given in marriage to Robert Blanch-mains (so called of his fine white hands) Earle of Leicester, together with the High-Stewardship of England; and Alice, wedded to Roger Bigot. Verily, at the East end of the Church, there to be seene Trenches and Rampires, yea and a Mount cast up to an eminent height, which the inhabitants say was Hughes Castle. Three miles hence standeth Desford, an ancient Mercat Towne, which liberty together with the Faire S. Richard Harcourt obtained for it at the hands of king Edward the First. Under this town in our great grandfathers daies the kingdome of England lay hazarded upon the chance of one battail. For, Henry Earle of Richmond, with a small power encountered there in pitched field king Richard the Third, who had by most wicked means usurped the kingdome, and whiles he resolved to die the more valiantly, fighting for the liberty of his country, with his followers and friends, the more happy successe he had, and so on came and slew the Usurper: and then being with joyfull acclamations proclaimed King in the very mids of slaughtered bodies round about, he freed England by his happy labour from the rule of a Tyrant, and by his wisdom refreshed and seded it being sore disquieted with long civil dissensions. Whereupon Bernard Andrews of Thelme a Poet living in those daies, in an Ode dedicated unto King Henry the Seventh, touching the Rose his Devise, writ these Verses, such as they are:

*Ecce nunc omnes passere venti
Murmuris, prater Zephyrum septemtem:
Hic Rosas nutrit, nixidolique flores Veris amant.*

Behold now all the windes are laid,
But Zephyrus that blowes full warme:
The Rose, and faire spring-floures in mead
He keepeth fresh, and doth no harme.

Other

Other memorable things there are none by this Street, unlesse it bee Ashby de la Zouch, that lyeth a good way off: a most pleasant Lordship now of the Earles of Huntingdon, but belonging in times past to the noble Family De la Zouch, who descended from Alan Vicount of Roban, in Little Britaine, and Constantia his wife daughter to Conan le Grosse Earle of Britaine and Maude his wife the naturall daughter of Henry the First. Of this house Alane De la Zouch married one of the heires of Roger Seigny Earle of Winchester, and in her right came to a faire inheritance in this Country. But when hee had judicially sued John Earle of Warren, who chose rather to trye the Tide by the sword point than by point of Law, he was slaine by him even in Westminster Hall, in the yeere of our Lord 1269. and some yeeres after, the daughters and heires of his grand sonne transferred this inheritance by their marriages into the Families of the Saint Mauris, of Castle Cary, and the Hollands. Yet their father first bestowed this Ashby upon Sir Richard Mortimer of Richards Castle his cousin, whose younger issue thereupon tooke the surname of Zouch, and were Lords of Ashby. But from Eudo a younger sonne of Alane who was slaine in Westminster Hall, the Lords Zouch of Harringworth branched out, and have bene for many Descents, Barons of the Realme. Afterward in processe of time Ashby came to the Hastings, who built a faire large and stately house there, and Sir William Hastings procured unto the Towne the liberty of a Faire in the time of King Henry the Sixth. Here I may not passe over the next neighbour Cole-Oversen, now a seat of the Beaumonts descended from Sir Thomas Beaumont Lord of Bachewill in Normandy, brother to the first Vicount. This place hath a Cole prefixed for the forename which Sir Thomas, as some write, was bee, who was slaine manfully fighting at such time as the French recovered Paris from the English in the time of King Henry the Sixth. This place of the pit-coles (being of the nature of hardned Bitumen, which are digged up to the profit of the Lord, in so great a number that they serve sufficiently for fewell to the neighbour Dwellers round about farre and neere.

Barons Zouch;
De Ashby.

The family of the Hollands.

Pit-cole or stone coles.

I said before that the River Soar did cut this Shire in the middle, which springing not farre from this Street, and increased with many small rills and Brookes of running water, going a long Northward with a gentle streame, passeth under the West and North side of the cheife Towne or City of this County, which in Writers is called Lege-Cestria, Leogora, Legecester, and Leicester. This Towne maketh an evident faire shew both of great antiquity and good building. In the yeere 680. when Saxwalph at the commandement of King Ethelred divided the kingdome of the Mercians into Bishopricks, hee placed in this an Episcopall See, and was himselfe the first Bishop that sat there: but a few yeeres after, when the See was translated to another place, this Dignity had an end, and therewith the stately part of the Towne by little and little was empaiored, untill that Edelfleda a most vertuous and noble Lady in the yeere after our Saviours Nativity 914. repaired and strongly walled it new about; in so much as Matthew of Paris in his lesser Story wrote thus, Legecester is a right wealthy City and newly well fenced with an indissoluble Wall, which if it had a strong foundation were inferior to no City whatsoever. About the Normans entring into this Land, it was well peopled and frequented, yea and had very many Burgeses in it; out of whom they were bound by an ancient custome (as we read in William the Conquerours booke) To send twelve with the King so often as he went in person to the warres: But if hee made a voyage by sea against his enemies, they sent foure horses to carry armour as farre as to London. This City paid yearly to the King 30. pounds by tale, and twenty in ora, that is, * by weight, also 25. measures called Sextaries of hony. But in the time of King Henry the Second Raigne, it was sore overpressed with a world of great and grievous calamities, and the walls throwne downe, what time as Robert surnamed Bossu, (that is, Crouch backe) Earle of Leicester conspired and rebelled against the King. Which Matthew of Paris sheweth in these words: For the obstinate stubbornesse of Earle Robert spurning against the King, the noble City of Leicester was besieged and overthrowne by King Henry, and the Wall which seemed indissoluble, was utterly cast downe all round about. For, that I may adde thus much out of the lesser History above said, when the Wall of the City

Leicester;

* Or in oile.

1487.
Richard the Third slaine.

City wanting a good foundation was undermined, and the props that sustained it at length burnt, the peeces and fragments of the Wall fell downe, which even to this day (such is the indissoluble tenacity and stiffness of the mortar) remaine fast, and retain the bignesse of round rockes. Miserable also was the imposition of a fine upon the Citizens at that time, and their banishment as lamentable, who having obtained by paying summes of money licence to depart, tooke Sanctuary for extreame feare in Saint Albans and Saint Edmundsbury. The Castle likewise was dismantled of all Fortifications, which verily was a large and strong peece. Beneath which, there is a very faire Hospitall or house for receit of poore people, and a Collegiat Church wherein Henry Earle of Lancaster, and Henry of Lancaster his sonne, who was the first Duke of Lancaster, lie buried. For, the said Duke when he was now stepped farre in yeeres, of a pious minde built this Hospitall for the maintenance of poore folke, and to that end dedicated it. Concerning which, Henry Knighton of Leicester who lived in that age, writeth thus in his story. Henry the first Duke of Lancaster builds a Collegiat Church and Hospitall without the South Gate of Leicester; wherein hee ordained a Deane with 12. Canon Prebendaries, as many Vicars, and other Officers, an hundred poore and feeble people, and poore able women to give attendance upon the said feeble folke; and this Hospitall becometh with sufficient revenewes. As for this Hospitall it continueth in some good state, as another Bede-house in the Towne built by W. Wigetson. But the Collegiat Church which was a magnificent worke, and the greatest ornament of Leicester was demolished when religious houses were granted to the King.

At the other side of the City among most goodly and pleasant meadowes which the River Soar watereth, there was an Abbey, called of that place, De Pre: of which, the said Knighton hath written thus, Robert de Bessu Earle of Leicester (when he began Gerondon Abbey for Cisterians) founded the Monastery of S. Mary De Pre, a Leicester, endowed it richly with Lands, Possessions and Revenewes, and himselfe with the consent of * Amice his Wife became a * Chanon Regular in the same, and, for the space of fiftene yeeres, in habite of a Chanon served God there, and so slept in the Lord; That thus forsooth, he might make amends by repentance in a Chanons weed of that offence, which beforetime hee had committed by rebelling with a traiterous minde against his Liege Prince. What name Leicester had in the Romans time, it is not knowne; In the Catalogue of Ninivius, I thinke it to be that, which is called Caer Lavin: But, that Leir a King, of whom there goe many tales, built it, they that will, may beleve it for mee. But the situation thereof upon the Foss-way, and the distance both from BENNONES and VEROMETUM, agreeth so just with the description of Antonine, that I cannot but thinke it to be that RATÆ which Ptolomee nameth RAGA, although there is neither tippe nor toe remaining in it of the name RATÆ: unlesse peradventure it be in that old long Ditch and Rampire which they call Rat dikes, scarce halfe a mile without the South Gate.

Heere am I at a stand, and looke about me what way to follow for the seeking out of ancient Townes. Ranulph a Monke of Chester recordeth, that the ancient street way went through the waits from hence to Lincoln, but hee telleth us not, through what Waits. The common voice goeth that it went on still full North through Nottinghamshire: Antonine the Emperour (if I have any insight at all) seemeth to insinuate, that it passed North-Eastward through this County into Lincolnshire. And verily, this way there are places of antique memory that by some of their remaines and tokens shew themselves: but the other way, I could not my selfe ever yet meete with any; what others have done I know not, and would willingly learne.

North-West from Leicester, and not farre off is Grooby a large Lordship and Manor which from Hugh Grantmismill whom King William the Conquerour had enriched with great possessions and revenewes, came by the Earles of Leicester, and the Quincies, unto the house of the Ferrers: out of which the Lord Ferrers of Grooby flourished a long time in the honorable state of Barons: and in the end, Isabel the only daughter remaining of the right line, brought it by her marriage into the name of the Greys, from whence it fell againe at the last by Attainder into the Kings hands. But

* Amice.
* Or Priest.

Or Road dikes.

Ferrers and Greies de Grooby.

whiles I was revising of this Worke, our Sovereigne Lord King James restored Sir Henry Grey a worthy Knight to the ancient honour of his noble Progenitors, creating him Baron Grey of Grooby in the first yeare of his Raigne.

Now let us returne to the River Soar, which being past Leicester, first giveth name to Monisfrell, or rather Mont-Soar-hill, a name compounded of Norman and English both: which now is famous onely for a Mercate there kept: but in old time most renowned for the Castle, seated upon a steepe and craggy Hill, hanging over the River, which before time belonged to the Earles of Leicester, but afterwards to Saer de Quincy Earle of Winchester in the Barons warre; at this day nothing but a rude heape of rubbish: For, in the yeere 1217. the Inhabitants of the Towne, when after a long Siege they had wonne it, rased it downe to the very ground, as being the Devils nest, and a Den of thieves, robbers, and rebels. Somewhat higher on the other side of the River standeth Barrow: where is digged lime, commended above all other for the strong binding thereof. After, some few miles from thence, Soar while hee seeketh Trent, leaveth Leicester-shire, a little above Cotes now the habitation of the Family of Skipwith originally descended out of Tork-shire, and enriched many yeeres since with faire Possessions in Lincolnshire, by an heire of Ormesby. On the opposite banke of Soar standeth Lough-borough a Mercate Towne, which adorned one onely man with the name of Baron, to witte, Sir Edward Hastings; and that in the Raigne of Queene Mary. But when shee, of whom he was most dearly loved, departed this life, hee taking a loathing to the World was not willing to live any longer to the World; but wholly desirous to apply himselfe to Gods Service, retired into that Hospitall which hee had erected at Stoke Poges in Buckinghamshire; where with poore people hee lived to God, and among them finished the course of his life devoutly in Christ. That this Lough-borough is that Towne of the Kings named in the Saxon Tongue Lieganbunge, which as Marianus saith Cuthwulph tooke from the Britans in the yeere of Christ 572. the neere affinity of the name may yeeld some proofe. But now among all the Townes of this Shire it rightfully chalengeeth the second place next unto Leicester, whether a man either regard the bignesse or building thereof, or the pleasant Woods about it. For, within very little of it, the Forest of Charnwood or Charley stretcheth it selfe out a great way, wherein is scene

Beaumont Parke, which the Lords of Beaumont (as I have heard) fenced round about with a stone Wall. These Beaumonts descended from a younger sonne of John Countie of Brete in France, who for his high honour, and true valour was preferred to marry the heire of the Kingdome of Jerusalem, and with great pompe crowned King of Jerusalem in the yeere of our Lord 1248. Hence it is that wee see the Armes of Jerusalem so often quartered with those of Beaumont in sundry places of England. Sir Henry Beaumont was the first that planted himselfe in England about the yeere 1308. who advanced to the marriage of an heire of Alexander Comine Earle of Dagban in Scotland (whose mother was one of the heires of Roger Quincy Earle of Winchester) entred upon a very goodly and faire inheritance, and so a great Family was propagated from him. Hee in the Raigne of Edward the Third, for certaine yeeres was summoned to the Parliament, by the name of Earle of Baghan, and John Lord Beaumont in the Raigne of Henry the Sixth was for a time Constable of England, and the first to my knowledge, that in England received at the Kings hands the state and Title of a Vicount. But when William the last Vicount was dead without issue, his sifter was wedded to the Lord Lovel, and the whole inheritance afterwards, which was rich and great, by attainder of Lovel fell into the hands of King Henry the Seventh.

In this North part we meete with nothing at all worth the naming, unlesse it be a little religious house, which Roisie Verdon founded for Nunnes and called it Grace-Dieu, now belonging to a younger house of the Beaumonts: and where the Trent runneth, hard by, is Dunnington, an ancient Castle built by the first Earles of Leicester: which afterwards came to John Lacy Earle of Lincoln, who procured unto it from King Edward the first the priviledge of keeping a Mercate and Faire. But when as in that Mont-Soar-hill.

Historia Minor.

* Skipwith.

Lough-borough.

Charnwood Forest.

* De Bello monte, Beaumont.

The first Vicount of Honour in England.

Dunnington.

great proscription of the Barons under King Edward the Second the hereditaments of Thomas Earle of Lancaster, and Alice Lucy his Wife were seized into the Kings hands, and alienated in divers sorts, the King enforced her to release this Manor unto Hugh Le Despenser the younger.

The East part of this Shire which is hilly and feedeth great numbers of Sheep, was adorned with two places of especiall note; VERNOMETUM or VEROMETUM, whereof Antonine the Emperour hath made mention, and Burton Lazars, both in the ages fore-going of very great name and reputation. VERNOMETUM, which now hath lost the name, seemeth to have stood (for I dare not affirm it) in that place, which at this day men call Burrowhill and Erd-burrow: For, because VEROMETUM and RATÆ, according to Antonine his reckoning are twentie Italian miles; and so many well neere therebe, from Leicester to this place.

The name Burrow also that it hath at this day came from Burgh, which in the Saxon Tongue signifieth, a place fortified, and under it a Towne called Burrough belonging to an old Family of Gentlemen so surnamed. But, (that which maketh not for prooffe) in that very place there riseth up an hill with a steepe and upright ascent on every side, but South Eastward: in the top whereof appeare the expresse tokens of a Towne destroyed, a duple Trench, and the very Tract where the Walls were, which enclosed about eightene Acres of ground within. At this day it is arable ground, and is nothing so famous, as in this, that the youth dwelling round about were wont yeerely to exercise themselves in wrestling and other games in this place. And out of the very name a man may conjecture, that there stood there some great Temple of the Heathen Gods. For, VERNOMETUM in the ancient Gaul language, which was the fame that the old Britans tongue, soundeth as much as Agus Temple; as Venantius Fortunatus in the first booke of his Songs plainly sheweth, writing of Vernometum a Towne of Gaul in these Verses.

Nomine Vernometum voluit vocitare vetustas, Quod quasi sanum ingens Gallica lingua sonat.

In elder time this place they term'd by name of VERNOMET,
Which sounds in language of the Gauls, as much as Temple Great.

Burton Lazars.

As for Burton, surnamed Lazars, of Lazars (for so they used to terme folke infected with the Elephantiasie or Leprosie) was a rich Spittle-house, or Hospitall, under the Master whereof, were in some sort all other small Spittles or Lazer-houses in England, like as himselfe also was under the Master of the Lazars in Hierusalem. Jews founded in the first age of the Normans, by a common contribution over all England, and the Monbraies especially did set to their helping hands. At which time the Leprosie which the learned terme Elephantiasis, (because the skins of Lepres are like that of Elephants) in grievous manner by way of contagion ranne over all England. For, it is verily thought that this disease did then first creepe out of Egypt into this Island: which erst-once had spread it selfe into Europe: first of all in Pompeii Chigius his dayes: afterwards, under Heraclius, and at other times as we may see in the Histories, whether by celestially influence, or other hidden causes I leave to the learned. But so farre as I could hitherto reade, it did never set foote in England before that time. Besides these places before named of great name and marke, we cannot not overpasse neither Melton Monbray neere unto this Burton, a Mercate Towne bearing name of the Monbraies sometime Lords thereof, wherein is nothing more worth the seeing, than a faire Church; nor Skeffington, standing farther off, which as it hath given name to a worshipfull Family, so againe it hath received worship and credit from the same.

The River that watereth this part of the Shire, is by the Inhabitants about it called the Wreken, along which upon resemblance of the name I have sought VERNOMETUM, but in vaine. This Wreken gathereth a strong streame by many lively Brooks resorting unto it, whereof one passeth by Wimondham an ancient habitation of a younger branch of the house of the Lords Barkleis, well encreased by an heire of Dela-Laund, and so on by Melton Monbray before mentioned, by Kirkby Bellers, (where there was a Priory) having that addition of the Bellers, a respective, rich, and noble Family in their time, by Brokesby a seat now of the Villiers of an old Norman race, and descended from an heire of Bellers: which Brokesby imparted formerly the surname to the Brokesbys of especiall antiquity in these parts. Then the Wreken speedily by Ratcliffe high mounted upon a cliffe and within few miles conjoyneth it selfe to Soar, neere unto Mont-Soar-hill, before mentioned.

Wimondham.

Brookesby.

Whatsoever of this Shire lieth beyond the Wreken Northward, is not so frequently inhabited, and part of it is called the Wold, as being hilly without wood; wherein Dally a seat of the old Family of the Neels, of whom I shall speake elsewhere; and Waldum on the Wold, a meane Mercat, are most notable. Through this part as I have bene informed passeth the Fosse-way, made by the Romans from Leming Bridge, by Sogave, which gave surname to the honourable Family often mentioned, and the Lake on the Wold toward the Vale of Bever, but the Tract thereof as yet I know not.

This Shire hath bene more famous from time to time by reason of the Earles thereof have bene very renowned. And seeing it had under the Saxons government Earles by inheritance, I will first reckon them up in order, as Thomas Talbot a skilfull Antiquary hath delivered me a note of them out of the Kings Records. In the time of Æthelbald King of the Mercians, and in the yeere of our Redemption 716. Leofric was Earle of Leicester, whom there succeeded in direct line Algar the first, Algar the second, Leofric the second, Leofric the third buried in Coventry, Alger the third, who had issue two sonnes, Ædwin Earle of March, Morkar Earle of Northumberland, and a daughter named Lucy, first married to Woon Talboys of Anjou, afterwards to Roger of Romara, who begat of her William of Romara Earle of Lincolne. Now when as the issue male of this Saxon Family failed, and the name of the Saxons was troden (as it were) under foot, Robert Beaumont a Norman Lord of Pont Audomar and Earle of Mellent, (after that Simon an officary Earle of Leicester was dead) obtained his Earldome in the yeere of our Lord 1102. at the bountifull hand of King Henry the First: which Robert, A man for skill and knowledge excellent, full spoken, subtil, wise, and witty, and by nature wily, who while hee lived in high and glorious estate, an other Earle carried away his wife from him: whereupon in his old age being much troubled in minde, he fell into deepe melancholy. After him succeeded from father to sonne three Roberts, the first surnamed Bossu because hee was crook-backed, who after he had rebelled against King Henry the First, weary of his loose irregular life, became a Chanon Regular; the second surnamed Blanch-matnes of his lily-white hands, who sided with the young King against King Henry the Second, and dyed in the expedition of King Richard the First to the Holy Land; the third surnamed Fitz-Parnell, because his mother was Parnels daughter and one of the heires to Hugh Grant-mais the last, in whose right hee was Seneschall or Steward of England, and died issuelesse in the time of King John.

The words of Henry Huntingdon in his Epistle De Conscriptumundi.

A few yeeres after, Simon Montfort descended from a base sonne of Robert King of France, who had married the sister of Robert Fitz-Parnell, enjoyed this honour. But after that hee and his were expelled in the yeere 1200. as wholly devoted to the French, Ranulph Earle of Chester attained unto this Dignity, not in right of inheritance, but by his Princes favour. Howbeit, afterwards Simon Montfort sonne of the foresaid Simon obtained this honour, when Almarik his eldest brother surrendered up his right before King Henry the Third. This Simon, stood in so gracious favour with King Henry the Third, that hee called him home againe out of France when he was banished, heaped upon him great wealth, admitted him unto the Earldome of Leicester, granted to him the Stewardship of England, and to honour him the more gave him his owne sister in marriage. But hee, thus over-heaped with honourable benefits, when he had no meanes to requite them (such is the perverse wilfulness of men) beganne hatefully to maligne him, yea and did most wickedly molest the good King having so well deserved, making himselfe Ringleader to the rebellious Petronilla.

Matthew Paris.

See Evesham in Worcester-shire.

rebellious Barons, and with them raising horrible tempests of civill warre, in which himselfe also at length was overthrowne and slaine.

As for his Honours and Possessions, King Henry the Third gave and granted them to Edmund his owne younger sonne Earle of Lancaster. So afterward this honour lay as it were obscured among the Titles of the house of Lancaster: and Mauve the daughter of Henry Duke of Lancaster being married to Henry Duke of Bavaria, Earle of Hennault, Holland, Zeland, &c. added unto his other Titles, this of Earle of Leicester also: For, in the Charter dated the five and thirty yeere of King Edward the Third, hee is in plaine termes stiled William Earle of Henbault and of Leicester: yea and, as we finde in the Inquisition made Anno 36. of the said King Edward the Third, hee by the name of Dutchesse of Bavaria, held the Castle, Mansour, and Honour of Leicester. After whose decesse without issue, that honour reverted to John of Gaunt Duke of Lancaster who had wedded Blanch the other sister of Mauve. From which time it became united to the House of Lancaster, untill in our remembrance it reflowerished in L. Robert Dudley, who was by Queene Elizabeth girt with the sword of the Earldome of Leicester, and extraordinarily favoured: whereupon the States Generall of the united Provinces in their great troubles chose him triumphantly for their absolute Governour, and soone after as contemptuously rejected him, reserving all Sovereignty to themselves. But after a short time he passed on of this transitory life in the yeere 1588. leaving the same onely of his greatness behinde him.

In the great Register of the Dutchie.

Within this Shire are 200. Parish Churches.

RUTLAND

RUTLAND-SHIRE.

UTLAND, in the old English Saxon tongue Roteland, is environed within Leicester-shire, unlesse it be on the South-side, where it lieth upon the river Welland, and on the East-side, where it butteth upon Lincoln-shire. A Country nothing inferiour to Leicester-shire either in fruitfull qualitie of soile, or pleasantnesse, but in quantitie onely, as being the least County of all England. For, lying in forme almost round like a circle, it is in compasse so farre about, as a light horseman will ride in one day. Whence it is, that the Inhabitants tell a tale of I wote not what king, who should give to one Rut so much land as he could ride about in one day: and that he, forsooth, rode about this shire within the time appointed, and so had it given him, and named it by his owne name Rutland. But let such fables bee packing: I would not have the trueth prejudiced with an extravagant tale.

And where as the earth in this shire is every where red, and so red that even the sheepes fleeces are thereby coloured red: whereas also the English-Saxons called Rut in their tongue Roet and Rud; may we not suppose that this Countrey was named Rutland, as one would say a Redland? For, as saith the Poet.

Convenient rebus nomina sapè suis.
The names, as often times we see,
With things themselves full well agree:

Now, that places in all Nations have had their names of rednesse, Rutlan Castle in Wales, built on ashore of red earth, Redbay, Redbill, Redland, The Red Promontory, The Red-Sea also betwixt Egypt and Arabia, Erythra in Ionia, and a number besides may proove most evidently: So that there is no cause why we should give credit to fables in this behalfe. As for this little County, it may seeme to have beene ordained a Shire or County but of late daies. For, in King Edward the Confessors time, it was counted a part of Northampton-shire, and our Historiographers who wrote three hundred yeeres agoe and upward, reckoned it not in the number of Shires.

Wash or Gwash, a little river, which runneth from the West Eastward through the middle of it, divideth it in twaine. In the hithermore or South part riseth Uppingham upon an high ascent, whence that name was imposed, not memorable for any thing else, but because it is counted a well frequented Mercat towne, and hath for to shew a proper Schoole, which together with another at Okeham A. Ianson a Minister of Gods word, in a good and laudable intent, for the training up of children in good literature lately erected, with the money he had gotten together by way of collection. Under this standeth Drystoke, which in no wise is to be passed over with silence, considering it hath been the habitation from old time of a right ancient race of the Digbys: which (I grieve to utter it, but all men know it) hath now caught a deepe steine by Sir Everard Digby drawne into that cursed crew, who most horribly conspired with one divelish flash of hellish Gunpowder to blow up both Prince, and Country. More Eastward upon the river Welland, I saw nothing remarkable, unlesse it be Berobdon, now Barodon, which Thomas Beauchamp Earle of Warwicke held, with South Leffingham, now South Luffingham, and other Hamelets, by service to be the Kings Chamberlaine in the Exchequer.

On the further part beyond the river, among the hills, there spreadeth below a very pleasant and fruitfull vale, named at this day The vale of Catmose, happily of Cost mæs, which signifieth in the Brittish tongue a field full of woods. In the middlest whercof Okeham sheweth it selfe, which by the like reason may seeme to have taken the name from Okes: where, hard by the Church which is large and faire, remaine the crackt and decaying walls of an old Castle: which, Walkelin de Ferras built in the first times of the Norman Kings. And that it hath been the dwelling place of the Ferrars, besides the credit of writers, and generall report, the great horse shoes, which in times past that family gave in their armes, fastned upon the gae and in the hall, may sufficiently proove. Afterwards it belonged to the Lords of Tatleshall: But when King Richard the second had promoted Edward, the Duke of Yorkes sonne, to the Earledome of Rutland, he gave unto him this Castle also. But within our Fathers remembrance it befell unto Thomas Cromwell, and was reputed the seat of his Baronie: whom King Henry the Eighth advanced to the highest pitch of dignity: and streightwaies when by his plotting and attempting of many matters he had cast himselfe into the tempestuous stormes of envy and duplicature, bereft him on a sudden both of life and dignity.

Over against it Eastward, there standeth Burley most daintily seated, and overlooking the vale: A stately and sumptuous house now of the Haringtons, who by marrying the daughter and heire of Colepeper, became Lords of so faire an inheritance; that ever since they have flourished in these parts, like as before time the Colepepers had done, unto whom by N. Green the wealthy and goodly Livelod of the Bruses in part had descended. As for those Bruses, being men of the chiefe Nobility in England, they were engrafted into the Roiall stocke and family of Scotland: out of whom by Robert the eldest brother, the race Roiall of Scotland are sprung: like as by Bernard the younger brother, the Cottons of Connington in Huntingdon-shire (of whom I have written already) and these Haringtons. In which regard and gracious respect King James advanced Sir John Harington branched from that stem that the ancient Lords Harington, to the title of Baron Harington of Exm, a towne adjacent, where he hath also an other faire house.

Moreover, on the East side, by the river Gussh, stands Brigcasterton, whercof I will say more afterward, and Riball: where, when superstition had so bewitched our ancestours, that the multitude of their pety Saints, had well neere taken quire away the true God, one Tibba a pety Saint or Goddesse, reputed to bee the tutelur patronesse of Hauking, was of Foulers and Faulkoners worshipped as a second Diana: Essendon also is neere adjoyning; the Lord whercof Sir Robert Cecil, a good sonne of a right good father (the strength and stay of our Common-wealth in his time) was by King James created Baron Cecil of Essendon in the first yeere of his reigne.

This little County King Edward the Confessor, by his last Will and Testament bequeathed unto his wife Eadith, yet with this condition, that after her death should come to S. Peter of Westminster. For, these be the very words of the said Testament. I will, that after the death of Queene Eadith my wife, ROTELAND with all the appertinances thereto, be given to my Monastery of the most blessed Saint Peter, and be yeelded up without delay for ever unto the Abbot and to the Monkes there serving God: yet King William the Conquerour cancelled and made voide this Testament, who, serving a great part of it to himselfe, divided the rest betweene Countesse Judith, whose daughter was married to David King of Scots, Robert Mallet, Oger, Gislebert, Gaunt, Earle Hugh, Aubrey the Clerk, and others: And unto Westminster, first he left the Tithes, afterwards the Church onely of Okeham and parcels thereunto appertaining.

This County hath not had many Earles. The first Earle of Rutland, was Edward, the first begotten Sonne of Edmund of Langley Duke of Yorke, created by King Richard the Second upon a singular favour that he cast unto him during his Fathers life, and afterwards by the same King advanced to the honour of Duke of Aumarle. This young man, wickedly projected with others a practise to make away King Henry the Fourth, and streight waies with like levity discovered the same: But after his Fathers death, being Duke of Yorke lost his life fighting Barons Cromwell.

See Earles of Essex.

Burly.

Baron Harington.

The Faulkoners Saint.
Baron Cecil of Essendon.

Earles of Rutland.

courageously amid the thickest troupes of his enemies in the battaile of Agincourt. Long time after, there succeeded in this Honour Edward the little young Sonne of Richard Duke of Yorke, and he together with his Father, during those deadly broiles of civill warre, was slaine in the battaile fought at Wakefield.

Many yeeres after, King Henry the Eighth, raised up Sir Thomas Mannours, to be Earle of Rutland, who in right of his Grand-mother Aleonor was possessed of a goodly and faire inheritance of the Barons Roos, lying in the countries round about, and elsewhere. In his roome succeeded his Sonne Henry, and after him likewise Edward his Sonne, unto whom if I should say nothing else, that commendation of the Poet was most aptly and truly applicable.

*Nomen virtutibus aequat,
Nec finit ingenium nobilitate premi.*

His name so great with vertues good, he matcheth equally;
Nor suffreth wit smuthring to lie under Nobility.

But he, by over hasty and untimely death, being received into Heaven, left this dignity unto John his Brother: who also departing this life within a while, hath for his successor, Roger his Sonne, answerable in all points to his ancient and right noble parentage.

This small Shire hath Parish Churches 48.

LINCOLN-

LINCOLNE-SHIRE.

Vpon Rutland on the East side, confineth the County of LINCOLNE, called by the English-Saxons Lincolncyne, and by the Normans Nicol-shire after their comming into the Land, with some transposition of letters, but usually LINCOLNE-SHIRE. A very large Country, as reaching almost threescore miles in length, and carrying in some places above thirty miles in bredth: passing kinde for yeeld of Corne, and feeding of Cattaille, well furnished and set out with a great number of Townes, and watered with many Rivers. Upon the Eastside, where it bendeth outward with a brow fetching a great compasse, the German Ocean beareth on the shore: Northward it reacheth to Humber an arme of the sea: on the West side it runneth upon Nottingham-shire: and on the South it is severed from Norshampton-shire by the River Welland. This whole Shire is divided into three parts, whereof one is called Holland: a second Kesteven, and the third Lindsey. Holland, which Ingulph termeth Holland lyeth to the sea, and like unto that Holland in Germanie, it is so thoroughly wet in most places with waters, that a mans foote is ready to sinke into it, and as one standeth upon it, the ground will shake and quake under his feet: and thence it may seeme to have taken the name: unlesse a man would with Ingulph say that Holland is the right name, and the same imposed upon it, of Hay which our Progenitours broadly called Hoy.

This part throughout beareth upon that ebbing and flowing arme of the Sea, which Ptoleme calleth METARIS, in stead of Maltrish, and wee at this day, The Washes. A very large arme this is and passing well knowne, at every tide and high sea covered all over with water, but when the sea ebbereth, and the tide is past, a man may passe over it as on dry land, but yet not without danger. Which, King John learned with his losse. For, whilest he journied this way, when he warred upon the rebellious Barons, the waters suddenly brake in upon him, so that at Fosse-dyke, and Wellstream he lost all his carriage and princely furniture, as Matthew of Westminster writeth.

Metaris estuarium.
The Washes.

This Country which the Ocean hath laied to the land, as the Inhabitants beleieve, by sands heaped and cast together, they it terme Silt, is assailed on the one side with the said Ocean sea, and in the other with a mighty confluence of waters from out of the higher countries, in such sort that all the Winter quarter the people of the country are faine to keepe watch and ward continually, and hardly with all the bankes and dammes that they make against the waters, are able to defend themselves from the great violence and outrage thereof. The ground bringeth forth but small store of corne, but plenty of grasse, and is replenished abundantly with fish and water-fowle. The Soile throughout is so soft, that they use their Horses unshod: neither shall you meet so much as with a little stone there, that hath not beene brought thither from other places: neverthelesse, there bee most beautifull Churches standing there built of foure square stone.

Certaine it is, that the sea aforetime had entred farther up into the Country, and that appeareth by those bankes formerly raised against the waterwaves then in-rushing, which are now two miles off from the shore, as also by the hills neere Sutton, which they call Salt-Hills. But, of fresh water there is exceeding great want in all places: neither have they any at all but raine water and that in pits, which if they be of any great depth, presently become brackish, if shallow, they dry up as soone. Neither are there Quickfands wanting, which have a wonderfull force to draw to them and to hold fast, as both Shepheards and their poore Sheepe also finde other whiles not without danger.

Salt-hills.

Quickfands.

This Holland or Hailand (whether you will) is divided into two parts. The Lower and the Higher: The Lower hath in it foule and slabby quavemires, yea and most troublesome troublesome Fennes, which the very Inhabitants themselves for all their stils cannot stalle through. And considering that it lieth very low and flat, fenced it is of the one side against the Ocean, on the other from those waters which overwhelm the upper part of the Isle of Ely, with mighty piles and huge bankes opposed against the same. Of which, Southbanke is of greatest name, which least it should have a breach made through it with that infinite masse of water that falleth from the South part, when the Rivers swell, and all is overflowne by inundation, the people watch with great care and much feare, as against a dangerous enemy. And yet for the draining away of this water, the neighbour Inhabitants at the common charges of the country beganne to make a new chanell at Clowes in the yeere 1599. Neere unto this banke afore said, we saw Crowland, which also is called Croyland, a Towne of good note among the Fenne-people, the name whereof soundeth, as Ingulph the Abbat of this place interpreteth it, as much as A raw and muddy Land: A place, as they write, much haunted in times past with I wot not what sprites and fearefull apparitions, before that Guthlake a right holy and devout man led there an Eremitic life. In whose memoriall Esibelald King of the Mercians founded to the honour of God at his great charges, in the yeere of our Salvation 716. an Abbey very famous both for opinion of the religious life of the Monkes, and also for their wealth. Concerning which, take heere, if you please, these Verses of Felix a Monke of good antiquity, out of the life of Guthlake.

*Nunc exercet ibi se munificentia Regis,
Et magnum templum magno molimine condit.
At cum tam mollis, tam lubrica, tam male constans
Fundamenta palus non ferret saxea, palos
Præcipitis infigi quercino robore casos,
Leucarumque novem spacio rate fertur arena;
Inque solum mutatur humus, suffulsiq; sali
Cella basi, multo stat consummata labore.*

His bounty now the King doth there bestow,
An Abbey faire with much expense to reare.
But seeing that the waterish Fenne below,
Those ground-workes laid with stone unceath could beare,
(So quaving soft and moist the Bases were)
He caused piles made of good heart of oke,
Pitch't downe to be with maine commanders stroke:
Then nine leagues off, men sand in Barges brought,
Which once fast ramm'd by painfull workmans hand,
Of rotten earth good solid ground was wrought;
On which foraye such workes might firmly stand;
And thus by this devise of new plantation,
The Church stands firme and hath a sure foundation.

The Devils of Crowland.

If I should exemplifie unto you out of that Monke, the Devils of Crowland, with their blabber lips, fire-spitting mouths, rough and skaly visages, beetle heads, terrible teeth, sharpe chins, hoarse throats, blacke skinned, crump-shoulders, fat and gorg-bellies, burning loines, crooked and hawm'd legges, long tailed buttocks, and ugly mishapes, which heretofore walked and wandered up and downe in these places, and very much troubled holy Guthlake and the Monkes, you would laugh full merrily: and I might bee thought a simple fily-one full worthily. Howbeit, in regard of the admirable situation of this place, so farre different from all others in England, and considering the Abbey was so famous, I am well content to dwell a while in the description of these particulars. Amid most deepe Fennes and standing waters in a muddy and miry ground this Crowland lyeth so shut up and divided round about from all entrance, that there is no access to it, unlesse it bee on the North and East side, and that by narrow Cawties. Seated it is for all the world, if I may resemble great and small things together, like unto Venice. Three streets it hath and those severed one from another by water courses betweene, planted thicke with willowes, and raised upon piles or postes pitched and driven downe deepe into the standing waters, having over them a triangle Bridge of admirable workmanship, under which for to receive the fall of the waters meeting in one confluence, the Inhabitants report there was a pit funke of a mighty depth. Now, whereas beyond the Bridge in solum mutatur humus (as that Monke said) that is, The world is changed, and is become firme and solid ground, there stood in times past that famous Abbey, and the same verily taking up but a small plot of ground: about which, all (save where the Towne standeth) is so rotten and moorish, that a man may thrust a pole downe right thirty foote deepe: and round about it every way is nothing but a plot of reeds; and next unto the Church a place planted with Alders. Howbeit, the Towne is well enough peopled with Inhabitants, who have their Cattails a great way from the Towne, and when they are to milke them, they goe in little punts or boats that will carry but two a peece, (which they call Skerries): yet the most gainfull trade they have is by taking fish, and catching of water-foule, and that is so great, that in the moneth of August, they will spread a net and at once draw three thousand Mallards and wilde Duckes and such like together: and these pooles or watery plots of theirs, they use to terme their Corne fields: for, they see no Corne growing in five miles any way. In regard of this their taking of fish and fowle they paid yeerely in times past to the Abbat, as now they doe to the King, three hundred pounds of our money.

The private History of this Abbey I list not to relate (seeing it is commonly extant and to be scene) out of Ingulph now printed and published: yet my minde serves me well, briefly to record, that which Peter of Blois Vice-chancellor to King Henry the Second reported at large, as touching the new building of this Abbey in the yeere of our Redemption 1112. to the end, that by this one president wee may learne, by what meanes and helpes, so mighty, so huge, and so faire religious houses were raised and built up in those times. Ioffrid the Abbat obtained of the Archbishops and Bishops in England, An Indulgence for the third part of penance enjoyed for sinnes committed, unto every one that helped forward so holy a worke. With this Indulgence he sent out Monkes every way and all about to gather money: wherewith when hee was now sufficiently furnished, to the end that hee might have an happy beginning of this worke from some happy names of lucky presage, hee solemnly appointed the day of Saint Perpetua, and of Saint Felicity, on which he would lay the first foundation. At which day there came flocking in great numbers, the Nobles, the Prelates, and Commons of all the Country thereabout. After the celebration of Divine Service, and Anthems sung in parts, Abbat Ioffrid himselfe layed the first Corner stone Eastward; then the Noble men and great persons every one in their degree couched their stones, and upon the said stones some laid money, others their sealed Deeds of lands, Advowsons of Churches, of Tenths of their Sheepe, and of the Tithes of their Churches, of certaine measures of wheat, and of a certaine number of Workemen, as Masons and Quarriers, whom they would pay. The common sort again and townships for their parts, offered with chearefull devotion, some money, others one daies labour every moneth untill the worke were finished, some the building of whole Pillars, others of the bases to the said Pillars, and others again to make certaine parts of the wals, striving a vie who should doe most. This done, the Abbat after hee had in a solemne speech commended their devout bounty to so holy a worke, granted unto every one of them the fraternity of his Abbey, and the participation besides of all spirituall benefits in that Church: as praiers, blessings, &c. and so when he had entertained them with a very sumptuous feast, hee gave them his blessing and dismissed them chearefully every man to his owne home. But I will dwell no longer in this matter. But hereby you may see how by small contributions great workes arose. From Crowland there goeth a Cawsey planted on both sides with Willows, betwene the River Welland and the deepe Marishes, Northward: upon which, two miles from Crowland, I saw the fragment of a Piramus with this Inscription.

workes

AIO HANC
PETRAO
GUTHLACUS
H ABET SI-
BI METAO.

I SAY, THAT SAINT GUTH-LAKE, THIS STONE HIS BOUND DOTH MAKE.

Spalding.

Higher yet upon the same River is seated Spalding, enclosed round about with Rivers and draines, a fairer Towne I assure you than a man would looke to finde in this Tra& among such flabbes and water-plashes: where Ivo Talbois, whom Inglulph elsewhere calleth Earle of Anjou, gave an ancient Cell to the Monkes of Anjou in France. From hence as farre as to Deeping, which is ten miles off, Egelricke Abbot of Crowland, afterwards Bishop of Durham, made for the ease of travellers, as Inglulphus, through the midst of a vast Forest, and of most deepe Fennes, a scandall of wood and sand, after his owne name called Elrich-road; which notwithstanding this day is not to be seene.

Boston.

In higher Hoiland that bendeth more into the North, first we have in sight Kilton, so named of the Church, which is passing faire; and then, where the River Welland hemnd in strongly with banks on both sides runneth in a maine and full streame toward the sea, flourisheth Boston, more truly named Betolphs-towne. For, it is said that name from one Betolph a most holy and devout Saxon, who at Kilton had a Monastery. A famous Towne this is, standing on both sides of the River Welland, which hath over it a wooden bridge of a great height; and well frequented by the meanes of a commodious haven unto it: the Mercat place is faire and large, and the Church maketh a goodly shew, as well for the beautifull building as the greatness thereof: the towre-steeple of it, which riseth up to a mighty height, doth, as one would say, salute passengers and travellers a great way off, and giveth direction also to the sailers. A lamentable overthrow it sustained in the Raigne of Edward the first. For, when bad and Ruffian-like behaviour rusted at that time over all England, certaine military lusty fellows having proclaimed heere a Justs or running at Tilt, at a Faire time, when there was much resort of people thither, came appaerled in the habit of Monkes and Chanons, set fire on the Towne in most places thereof, brake in upon Merchants with sodaine violence, tooke away many things by force, burnt great deale more; in so much as our Historians write, that (as the ancient Writ record of Corinth when it was destroyed) molten gold and silver ran downe in a streame together. The Ring-leader Robert Chamberlan, after hee had confessed the act, and what a shamefull deed had been committed, was hanged: yet could he not be wrung by any meanes to disclose his complices in this foule fault. But happier times raised Boston againe out of the ashes, and a staple for wooll here setled, did very much enrich it, and drew thither merchants of the Hanse Society, who had here their Guild. At this day it is for building faire, and by good trade rich. For, the Inhabitants give themselves both to merchandise and also to grasing. Nere unto this was the Barony of Crocun or de Credonia, out of which family, Alan de Crocun founded the Priory of Freslon, and at length Parnel heire of the family being twice married transferred no small inheritance, first to the Longchamps, which came to the Pedwardins, and secondly to John.

Robbers in Monkes habits.

Stilyard.

The Register of Freslon,
Barons of Burton Crocun.
De vallibus.

Yorks, from whom the Barons Roos are descended. Beyond it scarce six miles, reacheth Holland: all which Ivo Talbois of Anjou received at the bountifull hands of king William the Conqueror, but Herward an English man, of good hope and full of dourty courage, being sonner to Leofricke Lord of Brane or Burne not brooking his insolvency, when he saw his owne and his Country mens safety now endangered; after he had received the cincture with a military Belt by Brann Abbat of Peterborough, whose stomacke rose also against the Normans, raised warre against him, oftentimes put him to flight, and at length carried him away captive, and suffered him not to bee ransomed but with such conditions that he might be received into the Kings favour, wherein he dyed his liege man. For so deserved his valour, which is always commended even in a very enemy. His Daughter being wedded to Hugh Enemeve Lord of Deeping enjoyed his lands, which afterwards, as I understand, was devolved upon the Family of Wake, which being mightily enriched with the Possessions of the *Esneville*s, was of right great honour in these parts, untill the Raigne of Edward the Second: for then, by an heire Generall, their inheritance came by right of marriage unto Edmund of Woodstocke youngest sonne to King Edward the First, and Earle of Kent. But of a younger sonne, the ancient Family of the Wakes of Blisworth in Northampton-shire yet remaining is descended.

Herwardus Anglus.Ingulph of Crowland.Barons de
Wake.

The second part of this Country commonly called Kesteven, and by Ethelward an ancient Authour, Ceostesnewood, adjoining to Hoiland on the West side; is for aire farre more wholesome, and for Soile no lesse fruitfull. Greater this is and larger than the other, yea and garnished every where with more faire Townes. At the entry thereinto upon the river Welland standeth Stanford, in the Saxon tongue Stean-poppo, built of rough stone, whence it hath the name. A Towne well peopled and of great resort, endowed also with sundry immunities, and walled about; it gave Gold or Tribute, as wee read in Domesday Booke, for twelve hundreds and an halfe, in the army, shipping, and Danegeld, and in it were sixe Wards. What time as King Edward the elder fortified the South bankes of Rivers against the Danes breaking by force into the Land out of the North parts, Marianus recordeth, that hee built a very strong Castle just over against this Towne also on the South banke (which now is called Stanford Baron) yet there appeareth not any one token thereof at this day: for, that Castle which in time of the civill Warre Stephen strengthened against Henry of Anjou, was within the Towne, as both the generall report holdeth, and the very plot also whereon it stood as yet remaining, sheweth. But soone after, the said Henry, being now King of England, gave the whole Towne of Stanford, which was in his Demaine, excepting the fees or Feifs of the Barons and Knights of the same Towne, unto Richard de Humez or Homets, who was Constable to the King, his Sovereigne Lord, for his homage and service. And the same afterwards, held William Earle of Warren by the will and pleasure of King John.

Kesteven.

Stanford.

See Burghley
in the County of Northamp-
ton.

Under the Raigne of Edward the Third, an University, and publique profession of good learning beganne heere, which the Inhabitants count no small credit unto them. For, when there was such hore debate and contention betweene the Northern and Southren Students at Oxford, a great number of Scholers withdrew themselves thither: but after a small while they returned upon the Kings Proclamation, to Oxford, and as they sodainly beganne, so they ended as soone this new University: And thenceforward provided it was by oth, That no Student in Oxford should publiquely professe or reade at Stanford to the prejudice of Oxford. Neverthelesse it flourished with fresh trading and merchandise, untill the civill warre, betwene the two houses of Lancaster and York, grew so hore, that the Northren Souldiers breaking into the Towne destroyed all with fire and sword. Neither could it ever since that time fully recover the ancient Dignity. And yet now it is in good estate: and the civill government thereof consisteth of an Alderman and foure and twenty Burgeses his brethren. Beautified it is with seven Parish Churches or thereabout, and sheweth an old Hospitall and that a very faire house founded by William Browne a Burgesse there, besides another new one on this side the Bridge lately built by that Nestor of

An Academy or University begun at Stanford.

Y y

Britaine,

Britaine, Sir William Cecil Baron Burghley, what time as hee raised that stately and sumptuous house at Burghley, whereof I have spoken already in Norhampton-shire, who lieth entered here in a goodly and gorgeous Tombe within the Parish Church of Saint George, a man (to say nothing else of him) who by course of nature, and for his owne glory lived long enough, but in regard of his Country died oversoone.

Although some tokens remaining of antiquity, and the High-street, made by the Romans, which so soone as you are without the Towne leadeth you the direct way into the North, may sufficiently shew, that sometimes there was a Ferry or Waterfare heere. Yet that this Towne should be that GAUSENNÆ, which Antonine the Emperour placeth not farre from hence, the said tokens of Antiquity doe not afford sufficient proofe. But seeing that a mile from hence there is a little Village called Bridge-casterion (which very name carryeth with it the marke of Antiquity) where the River Gwash or Wash crosseth the said High-street, the affinity of this name Gwash with Gausenna, and the distance also making not against it, hath made mee to thinke that Gausenna was it which now is called Bridge-casterion, untill time bring truth to light. If I should thinke, that Stanford grew out of the ruines of this Towne, and that this part of the Shire was named Kesteven of GAUSENNÆ, like as another part, Lindsey, of the City Lindum, let this I pray you, bee but mine opinion, and judge yee thereof accordingly. It is supposed that this Gausenna was overthrowne, when (as Henry Archdeacon of Huntingdon writeth) the Picts and Scots had spoiled all the Country, as farre as to Stanford: where Hengiſt and his English-Saxons with their unwearied force and singular prowesse hindered the passage of those furious Nations, so that after many of them were slaine, and more taken prisoners, the rest betooke themselves to flight. But let us proceed to the rest.

On the East side of Kesteven which bendeth toward Holland, as wee goe Northward, these places stand in order: First, Deping, that is to say, (as Isidore interpreteth it), Deepe Meadow: Where, Richard de Rulos, Chamberlaine to William Conquerour, excluding the River Welland with raising up an high bank (for it is often overflowed) and building upon the said Bank many Tenements, made great Village. This Deping, or Deepe Meadow, was very fitly so called, for, the plainelying under it, and which taketh up in compass many miles, is of all this fenney Country the deepest, and the very receptacle of most waters. And that which a man would mervaile at, it lyeth farre under the Chanell of the River Glou, which being held in with forced bankes, passeth by from out of the West. Then have you Burne, well knowne by occasion that King Edmund was crowned and the Wakes had a Castle there, who obtained unto this Towne, from King Edward the First, the liberty of a Mercate.

More Eastward is Irtham, a seat of the Barony in times past of Sir Andrew Luttrell. Beyond it is Sempringham, famous in these daies by reason of that passing faire house, which Edward Lord Clinton, afterwards Earle of Lincolne built; but renowned in old time for the religious Order of the Gilbertines, instituted by Gilbert Lord of the place for he, a wonderfull man, & in custodia mulierum gratia singularis, that is, of singular grace in taking charge of women, in the yeere after Christs Nativity 1148, contrary to Jovinians Constitutions, which forbade Double Monasteries, that is to say, of men and women together; howbeit, well backed with the authority of Engenius the third, Bishop of Rome, ordained a Sect consisting of men and women; which so grew and encreased, that himselfe laied the foundations of thirteene religious houses of this Order, and whiles hee lived had in them 700. Gilbertine Brethren, and eleven hundred Sisters; but no honeste than they should be, if wee may beleeve Chaucer, a famous Poet in those daies, who wrote thus of them:

*Harum sunt quadam steriles, quadam parientes,
Virginibusque tamen nomine cuncta regunt.
Qua pastoralis baculi dotatur honore,
Illa quidem melius, fertilisique parit.*

* Commonly called High-Dike.

Gausennæ.

Bridge-Casterion.

Deping.

Deping fen.

Burne.

Luttrell.
Sempringham.

Gilbertine Brethren and Sisters.

*Vix etiam quavis sterilis reperitur in illis,
Donec eis atas talia posse negat.*

Some barren are of these, some fruitfull be;
Yet they by name of Virgins cover all:
More fertile sure and better beareth she,
Who blest is once with crosier pastorall:
Now, scarce of them is found one barren Doe,
Till age debarre, whether they will or no.

Then see you Folkingham, which also is now a Lordship of the Clintons, the Barony in times past of the Gaunts, who were descended from Gilbert de Gaunt, nephew to Richard Earle of Flanders, unto whom by the liberality of King William the Conquerour there fell great revenewes. For, thus we read in an old manuscript: *Memorandum, that with William Conquerour there came in one Gilbert de Gaunt, unto whom the said William gave the Manour of Folkingham, with all the Appertenances and the Honour thereunto belonging: and they expelled a certaine woman named Dunmoch. Of the said Gilbert came one Walter de Gaunt his sonne and heire, and of the said Walter came Gilbert de Gaunt his sonne and heire, also Robert de Gaunt a younger sonne. And from the said Gilbert the sonne and heire, came Alice his daughter and heire, who was espoused to Earle Simon, and shee gave many Tenements to religious men, and dyed without heire of her owne body. Then descended the inheritance to Robert de Gaunt of the said her uncle: and of the foresaid Robert came Gilbert his sonne and heire, and of the foresaid, came another Gilbert his sonne and heire, and of the foresaid, came another Gilbert his sonne and heire, who gave the Manour of Folkingham with the Appertenances to Edward the sonne of Henry King of England. This Gilbert as wee finde in the Plees, out of which this Pedegree is proved, claimed service against Wil. de Scremby. And at length it came by gift of the Prince to Sir Henry Beaumont: For, most certaine it is, that he held it in the Raigne of Edward the Second.*

Necesse unto this, is Screkingham, remarkable for the death of Alfrick the second, Earle of Leicester, whom Hubba a Dane slew. Of which place, it seemeth that Inghelph spake, writing thus: In Kesteven were slaine three great Lords or petty Kings of the Danes, whom they buried in a Village which was called before, Laundon, but now for the Sepulture of three Kings, Tre-King-ham. And more into the East, is Hatber, in this regard onely to be mentioned, that the Busseis or Busseis heere dwell, who deduce their Race from Roger de Busby in the Conquerours time. Then Sleford, a Castle of the Bishops of Lincolne, built by Alexander the Bishop: where Sir John Hussy the first and last Baron of that name created by King Henry the Eighth, built himselfe an house: who having unwittingly and unadvisedly in the yeere 1537. engaged himselfe with the common people in a tumultuous commotion, what time as the first dissention brake out in England about Religion, lost his head. Not many miles from hence standeth Kime, which gave name to a noble family called De Kime: but the possession of the place came at length to the Umfranvills: of whom three were called to the Parliament by the name of the Earles of Anguse in Scotland. But the first of them, the learned in our common lawes would not acknowledge to be Earle, (for that Anguse was not within the limits of the Realme of England) untill hee produced openly in Court the Kings Writ, by vertue whereof he had been summoned by the King to the Parliament, under the Title of Earle of Anguse. From the Umfranvills this came unto the family of Talbois, of whom Gilbert was created by King Henry the Eighth Baron Talbois, whose two sonnes dying without issue, the inheritance was by the females transferred to the Dimocks, Inglebeates, and others. More Westward wee saw Temple Bruer, that is, as I interpret it, Temple in the Heath. For it seemeth to have bene a Commandery of the Templers: considering that the decayed broken Walles of the Church there are seene in forme of the New Temple at London. Hard to it lyeth Blanchenay, the Barony in times past of the D'incourts, who flourished successively a long time one after another from the Normans comming in unto King Henry the Sixth kingham.

Lords of Fol-

Pl. 27. H. 3.
Reg. 13. Line 2.

Inq. 4. 8. 2.
Screkingham.

Bussey, Sleford.
Baron Bussey.

Kime.

Earles of Anguse.

Temple Bruer.

Barons
D'incourts.

Inquis. 2. I. H. 6.

Patent. 1. 6.
Edw. 2.Belvoir or Beaver Castle.

Tony.

Stones
Atroches.The vale of Beaver.

Margidunum.

Marga. I.
Marle Dunum.River Witham.

Sixth his time: For then, their male line determined in one William, who had two sisters for his heires, the one married to Sir William Lovell, the other to Sir Ralph Cromwell. The more willingly have I made mention of this Family, to give satisfaction in some measure unto the longing desire of Edmond Baron D'incourt, who long since being careful and earnest about the preservation of the memory of his name, as having no male Issue, put up an humble Petition to King Edward the Second, Whereas hee foresaw that his surname and Armes after his death would be quite forgotten, and yet heartily desired that after his decease they might be still remembered, that hee might be permitted to enfeoffe whomsoever is pleased him, both in his Manors and Armes also. Which request hee obtained, and it was graunted under the Kings Letters Patents: yet for all that is this surname now quite gone (to my knowledge) and had it not bene continued by the light of learning, might have bene cleane forgotten for ever.

In the West part of Kesteven and the very confines of this Shire and Leicestershire, standeth Belvoir, or Beauvoir Castle, so called of the faire prospect (whose name soever it had in old time) mounted upon the top of a good steepe hill, built by Robert De Todeneie a Norman Nobleman, who also beganne the little Monastery adjoining, from whom by the Albanies out of little Britaine, and the Barons Roos, it came by inheritance to the Manners Earles of Rutland: of whom the first, that is to say, Thomas, as I have bene enformed, raised it up againe with newbuildings from the ground, when as it had for many yeeres lien buried as it were in his owne ruines. For, in despite of Thomas Lord Roos, who tooke part with King Henry the Sixth, it was much defaced by William Lord Hastings, unto whom (after that the said Baron Roos was attainted) King Edward the Fourth had graunted it with very faire Lands. But Edmond Baron Roos sonne of the said Thomas, by the gracious favour of King Henry the seventh recovered this ancient Inheritance againe. About this Castle are found the Stones called Athrites, which resemble little Starrs joyned one with another, wherein are to be seene at every corner five Beames or Rayes, and in every Ray in the middest is small hollowell. This Stone among the Germanes got his name of Vidoria, for that, as Garg Apicula writeth in his Sixth Booke of Mineralls, they are of opinion, that whosoever carryeth it about him shall winne his suite and get victory of his enemies. But whether this Stone of ours, as that in Germany, being put in vinegar, will stirre out of his place, and turne it selfe some-what round, I could never yet make tryall. Under this Castle lyeth a Vale and presenteth a most pleasant prospect thereunto, whereupon it is commonly called, the Vale of Belvoir, which is very large and passing pleasantly beautified with Corne fields, and no lesse rich in pastures, lying stretched out in three Shires, of Leicester, Nottingham and Lincolne.

If not in this very place, yet hard by it, in all probability, stood that MARGIDUNUM, which Antonine the Emperour placeth next after VERNOMETUM, as both the name and the distance also from VERNOMETUM and the Towne PONT or Paunton, betweene which Antonine placeth it, may most plainly shew. It should seeme that ancient name Margidunum was borrowed from Marga and the situation of it: For, Marga among the Britans is a kinde of earth named Marle wherewith they nourished and kept their grounds in heart: and DUNUM, which signifieth an Hill, agreeth onely to places higher mounted than others. And yet in this Etymology of the name I am in a doubt, seeing that Marle in this place is very geason or skant (happily because no man seeketh for it) unless the Britans by the name of Marga teamed Plaster-stone, which is digged uppe hard by, as I have learned: the use whereof in white pargetting and in making of Images, was of especial request among the Romans, as Plinie witnesseth in his Naturall History.

Witham a River plentifull in Pikes but carrying a small streame, watereth this part of the Shire and on the North-side encloseth it. It hath his beginning by a little like towne of the same name, not farre from the ruines of Bitham Castle, which, as we find in an old Pedigree King William the first gave to Stephen Earle of Albemarle and Holderneffe, that he might from thence have wherewith to feed his sonne, as yet a little infant, with fine wheat bread (considering that in Holderneffe they did eate in those daies oten bread onely, although they use now such kind of bread little or nothing at all.) But in the reigne of King Henry the Third, when William de Foribus Earle of Aumarle rebelliously kept this Castle, and thence foraged and wasted the country about it, it was laid well neere even with the ground. Afterward, this was the capitall seat, as it were, of the Barony of the Colvils, who along time flourished in very great honour: but the right line had an end under King Edward the Third: and then the Gernons and those notable Bassets of Sapeot, in right of their wives entred upon the inheritance.

This river Witham presently beneath his head hath a towne seated hard by it named Paunton, which standeth much upon the antiquity thereof, where are digged up oftentimes pavements of the Romanes wrought with checker worke: and heere had the river a bridge over it in old time: For, that this is the towne AD PONTEN, which Antonine the Emperour placed seven miles distant from MARGIDUNUM, the name Paunton, together with the distance not onely from Margidunum but also from Crocalana doth easily convince: for in Antonine, that towne was called CROCO-CALANA, which at this day is named Ancafter, and is no more but a long streete, through which the High-way passeth: whereof the one part not long since belonged to the Pesiers, the other to the Cromwells. At the entry into it on the South part, we saw a rampier with a ditch, and certaine it is, that aforetime it had been a Castle: like as on the other side Westward, is to be seene a certaine summer standing campe of the Romanes. And it may seeme that it tooke a British name from the situation thereof. For it lieth under an hill: and Cruc-maur in British signifieth a Great hill, like as Cruc-accident, a mount in the West, as we read in Giraldus Cambrensis, and Ninnius: But what should be the meaning of that Calana, let others looke. The memory of antiquity in this towne is continued and maintained by the Romane Coines, by the vaults under ground oftentimes discovered, by the site upon the High-street, and by those fourteene miles that are betweene it and Lincolne through a greene plaine, which we call Ancafter-Heath, for, just so many doth Antonine reckon betweene Crocalana and Lindum. But now returne we to the river.

After Paunton, wee come to Grantham, a towne of good resort, adorned and set out with a Schoole built by Richard Fox Bishop of Winchester, and with a faire Church, having a spire-steeple of a mighty heighth, whereof there goe many fabulous tales.

Beneath it, neere unto Herlaxton a little village, a brasen vessell in our fathers time was turned up with a plough, wherein a golden Helmet of a most antique fashion was found, set with precious stones: which was given as a present to Catherine of Spain, wife and Dowager to King Henry the Eighth. From hence Witham passeth with a long course North-ward not farre from Somerton Castle: which Antonine Berr, Bishop of Durham built, and gave to King Edward the First: but a little after it was bestowed upon Sir Henry de Beaumont, who about that time came into England and began the family of the Lords Beaumont: which in the foregoing age in some sort failed, when as the sister and heire of the last Vicount was married to John Lord Level de Tishmergh. But of this house I have spoken before in Leicestershire. From thence, the river bending by little and little to the South-East, and passing through a Fenny Country, dischargeth it selfe into the German Sea beneath Boston, after it hath closed in Kesteven on the North.

On the other side of Witham, lieth the third part of this shire, named Lindsey, which of the chiefe Citie of the Shire Bede called Lindisi: and being greater than Holland and Kesteven, butteth with a huge bowing front upon the Ocean, beating upon the East and North sides thereof. On the West part it hath the river Trent, and is severed from Kesteven, on the South by that Witham aforesaid, and the Fosse Dike anciently Bitham.

Matthew Paris.

Colvill.

Paunton.

Ad Pontes.

Crocalana.

Ancafter.

Grantham.

A golden Helmet.

Somerton.

Durham
booke.Lords of Beaumont.

Lindsey.

Fosse dike.
Hoveden.

Torksey.

Domesday
booke.

Lindum:
Lincolne-Collis an hill.

ly cast and scoured by King Henry the First for seven miles in length from Witbam into Trent, that it might serve the Citizens of Lincolne for carriage of necessaries by water.

Where this Dike entreth into Trent, standeth Torksey, in the Saxon language Tupceig, a little towne, and in these daies of small account, but in ancient times very famous. For, before the Normans comming in, as we finde in that booke written in King William the first set downe his survey of England, there were numbered in it two hundred Burgeses, who enjoyed many priviledges, on this condition, that they should transport the Kings Embassadors whensoever they came this way in their owne Barges along the Trent, and conduct them as farre as YORKE. But where this Dike joyneth to Witbam, there is the principall City of this Shire placed: which Proleme and Antonine the Emperour called LINDUM, the Britans LIND-COIT, of the woods (for which we finde it elsewhere written amisse Lind-cot) Bede, LINDE-COLLINUM, and LINDE-COLLINA CIVITAS, whether it were of the situation upon an hill, or because it hath been a Colonia, I am not able to avouch. The Saxons termed it Lindoo-collyne, and Lind-cyllan-cear-cep, the Normans most corruptly Nicol, we Lincolne, and the Latine writers Lincolnia: whereupon Alexander Necham in his booke intituled, Divine wisdom, writeth thus,

Lindisæ column Lincolnia, sive columna, Munificæ felix gente, repleta bonis.

Lincolne the stay or pillar sure of Lindsey thou maist bee,
Blest for thy people bounteous, and goods that are in thee.

Others will have it to take that name of the river Witbam, which they say was called by a more ancient name Lindis, but they have no authority to warrant them. Neither am I of their judgement: For, Necham is against it, who foure hundred yeres agoe called the said river, Witbam in this verse.

*Trenta tibi pisces mittit Lincolnia, sed te,
Nec dedigneris, Witbama parvus adit.*

The Trent unto thee sendeth fish, O Lincoln, well we see;
Yet little Witbam, I come it not, a riveret comes to thee.

I for my part would rather derive it from the British word Lbin, which with the Britans signifieth a Lake. For, I have been enformed of the Citizens, that Witbam below the Citie, by Swanpole was broader than now it is, and yet is it at this day of a good breadth: and to say nothing of Lindaw in Germanic, by the Lake Acrem, and of Linternum in Italic standing by a Lake; I see that in our Britaine, Talbin, Glan-lbin, and Lbin-lisbquo, are townes by lakes sides. This Citie it selfe being large, well inhabited and frequented, standeth upon the side of an hill, where Witbam bendeth his course Eastward, and being divided with three small chanelles, watereth the lower part of the Citie. That the ancient LINDUM of the Britans stood on the very top of the hill, which had a very hard ascent up to it, and reached out beyond the gate called Newport, the expresse tokens of a rampier and deepe ditches which are yet very evident, doe plainly shew.

In this City, Vortimer that warlike Britan, who many a time discomfited the Saxons and put them to flight, ended his daies, and was heere contrary to his owne commandement, buried. For, he was in a full and assured hope perswaded, that if he were entered in the sea shore, his very ghost was able to protect the Britans from the Saxons, as writeth Ninius, the disciple of Elvodugus. But the English Saxons after they had raised this old Lindum, first possessed themselves of the South side of the hill, at the foot whereof they built, as it seemeth, the gate yet standing compiled of vast stones, and with the ruines of that more ancient Towne fortified it. Afterwards they went downe lower to the river side, built in a place that was called Wickansford, and walled it about on that side which is not fenced by the River: At which time, as saith Bede, Paulinus preached the Word of God unto the Province of Lindsey, and first of all converted unto the Lord, the Governour or Provost of Lincolne City, whose name was Blecca, with his family. In which very City, hee built also a Church of goodly stone worke, the rooffe whereof being either fallen for want of repaire, or cast downe by the violent hand of enemies, the wales are scene standing to this day. After this the Danes wonne it by assault once or twice: First, those troupes of spoiling mates, out of whose hands King Edmund Iron-side wrested it by force: then Canutus from whom Etheldred regained it, when upon his returne out of Normandy, he valiantly forced Canutus to abandon the towne, and beyond all hope recovered England which before was lost. In the Raigne of Edward the Confessour, there were in it, as Domesday booke recordeth, a thousand and seventy Mansions, with lodgings to give entertainment; and twelve Lage men having Sac; and Soc. But in the Normans time, as saith William of Malmesbury, it was one of the best peopled Cities of England, and a place of traffique and merchandises, for all comers by sea and land: and as the same Domesday booke saith, there were at that time counted and taxed in this City 900. Burgeses: and many Mansions were laied waste, 166. for the Castle, and other 74. without the precinct of the Castle, not through the oppression of the Sheriffe and his Ministers, but by reason of mishap, poverty, and casualty by fire. The said King William the Conqueror for the strengthening of it and terrour of the Citizens, raised a passing large and strong Castle upon the brow of the hill: and almost at the very same time, Remigius Bishop of Dorchester for to give credit and ornament thereto translated hither his Episcopall seat from Dorchester, which was in the most remote corner of his Diocesse and a small Towne. And when by this time that Church which Paulinus had built was quite gone to decay, the same Remigius having purchased certaine houses with grounds lying unto them, in the very highest place of the City, neere unto the Castle (as Henry of Huntingdon saith) mounting up aloft with high and stately towers, built in a strong place a strong Church, in a faire plot a faire Church, and dedicated it to the Virgin of Virgins; notwithstanding the Archbishop of Yorke was enraged thereat, who chalenged to himselfe the propriety of the soile: and in it ordained 44. Prebendaries. Which Church afterwards being sorely defaced with fire, as he saith, Alexander that most bountifull Bishop of Lincolne repaired, with skilfull artificiall workmanship. Of whom William of Malmesbury reporteth, because for his little low stature hee was a dwarfse among men, his minde laboured to rise aloft and shew it selfe to the world, with outward workes. And as concerning his bounty a Poet of that time among other things wrote thus:

*Qui dare festinans gratis, ne danda rogentur,
Quod nondum dederat, nondum se credit habere.*

Who hastening frankly for to give, for feare that folke should crave:
He never thought that he had that which yet he never gave.

Besides these two Bishops already mentioned Robert Bloet who sat there before Alexander, R. de Beaumeis, Hugh a Burgundian and their Successours, by little and little brought this Church, which could not bee one Bishops worke, to the stately magnificence that now it carryeth. Certes, as it is built, it is all throughout not onely most sumptuous, but also passing beautifull, and that with rare and singular workmanship: but especially that fore-front at the West end, which in a fort ravisheth and allureth the eyes of all that come toward it. In this Church, although there bee divers Monuments of Bishops and others, yet these onely seeme memorable: That of Copper wherein the bowels of that right noble and vertuous Queene Eleanor wife to King Edward the First are bestowed, who died at Hardby in this Shire: as also these following, wherein lye interred Sir Nicolas Cantlow, one or two of the Family of Burghersh: Lady Catherine Swinford the third wife of John of Gaunt Duke of LANCASTER and mother of the house of Somerst, with whom lyeth buried Joan her daughter, second wife to Ralph Nevill the first Earle of Westmerland, who enriched her husband with many happy children.

The

Sidnacester.

The Bishops Diocesse of Lincolne not content with those streit limits, where with the Bishops of Sidnacester, who had Episcopall jurisdiction over this shire contented themselves in the Primitive Church of the English Nation, contained under it so many countries, as that the greatnesse thereof was burdenous unto it: And although King Henry the Second tooke out of it the Province of Ely, and King Henry the Eighth the Bishopricks of Peterbourgh, and of Oxford, yet still at this day it is counted the greatest Diocesse by farre of all England, both for jurisdiction and number of shires: and the Bishop hath in his Diocesse one thousand two hundred forty seven Parish Churches.

R. Hoveden.

Many and great Bishops since Remigius his time have governed this See, whom to reckon up is no part of my purpose. For, I will not insitt either upon Robert Blac, from whom King William Rufus wrung 50000. pounds, for securing his title in the very City of Lincolne it selfe, which was found defective: nor upon that prodigall and profuse Alexander, who in exceeding stately buildings was so excessively delighted: ne yet upon Hugh the Burgundian Canonized a Saint, whose corps King John, with his Nobles and friends about him, so performe (as mine author faith) a dutifull service to God and that holy Saint, late Bishop, carried upon their shoulders to his buriall. Howbeit, the memory of two Prelates I must needs renew afresh: the one is Robert Grossthead, a man so well scene both in literature and in the learned tongues, in that age, as it is incredible: and to use the words of one then living, A terrible reprover of the Pope, an adviser of his Prince and Sovereigne, a lover of verity, a corrector of Prelates, a director of Priests, an instructor of the Clergy, a maintainer of Schollers, a Preacher to the people, a diligent searcher into the Scriptures, a smelter of the Romanists, &c. The other is mine owne Præceptor, whom in all duty I must ever love and honour, that right reverend Father Thomas Cooper, who hath notably well deserved both of all the learned and also of the Church, in whose Schoole I both confesse and rejoice that I received education. The City it selfe also flourished a long time: being ordained by King Edward the Third for the Staple, as they teame it, that is, the Mart, of Wool, Leather, Lead, &c. Which although it hath not been over-laid with any grievous calamities, as being once onely set on fire, once also besieged in vaine by King Stephen, who was there vanquished and taken prisoner, forced also and won by King Henry the Third, when the rebellious Barons, who had procured Lewis of France to challenge the Crowne of England, defended it against him, without any great damage; yet incredible it is how much it hath been empaired by little and little, conquered as it were with very age and time: so that of fifty Churches which it had standing in our Great-grandfathers daies, there are now remaining scarce eightene. It is remooved, that I may note this also, from the Aequator, 53. degrees and 12. scruples: and from the West point, 22. degrees and 52. scruples.

Highdike.

As that Street-way called Highdike goeth on directly from Stanford to Lincolne, so from hence Northward it runneth with an high and streight causey, (though hence and there it be interrupted) forward for ten miles space to a little Village called the Spittle in the Street, and beyond: By the which as I passed, I observed moreover, about three miles from Lincolne, another High-port-way also, called Ould-street, to turne out of this High dike Westward, carrying a bancke likewise evident to be scene, which, as I take it, went to AGELOCUM, the next baing towne, or place of lodging, from LINDUM, in the time of the Romanes. But I will leave this, and proceed in the course that I have begun.

Barons of Trusbur.

Bardney. Oswalds banner.

Witham being now past Lincolne, runneth downe not far from Wragby, a member of the Barony called Trusbur, the title whereof is come by the Barons Ran unto the Mannours now Earles of Rutland. Then approacheth it to the ruines of a famous Abbay in times past called Beapena, commonly Bardney; where Bede writeth, that King Oswald was Entombed, with a Banner of gold and purple hanged over his Tomb. The writers in the foregoing age, thought it not sufficient to celebrate the memory of this most Christian worthy King Oswald, unlesse unto his glorious exploits they stitched also ridiculous miracles. But that his hand remained heere uncorrupted uncorrupted many hundred yeeres after, our Ancestours have beleeved, and a Poet of good antiquity hath written in this wise,

*Nullo verme perit, nulla putredine tabet
Dextra viri, nullo constringi frigore, nullo
Dissolvi fervore potest; sed semper eodem Immutata statu persistit, morsua vivit.*

The mans right hand by no worme perisht is,
No rottennesse doth cause it putrifie;
Nobinding cold can make it starke, ywis,
Nor melting heat, dissolve and mollifie;
But alwayes in one state persist it will
Such as it was: though dead, it liveth still.

This Abbay, as writeth Peter of Blois, being sometime burnt downe to the ground by the Danes furious outrage, and for many revolutions of yeeres altogether forlorne, that noble and devout Earle of Lincolne Gilbert de Gaunt reedified, and in most thankfull affectionate minde assigned unto it with many other possessions, the rites of all his Mannours wherever throughout England. Then, is Witham encreased with Ban a little River, which out of the midst of Lindsey runneth downe, first by Horne Castle, which belonged in times past to * Adeliza of Condie, and was laid even with the ground in the Raigne of Stephen, afterwards became a capitall seat of the Barony of Gerard de Rodes, and pertaineth now, as I have heard, to the Bishop of Carlisle: From thence, by Scrivel, by a Manour of the Dimockes who hold it hereditarily devolved upon them from the Marmions, by Sir J. Ludlow, and that by service, (to use now the Lawyers words) of Grand Serjeanty, viz. That whensoever any King of England is to be crowned, then the Lord of this Manour, for the time being, or some one in his name (if himselfe bee unable) shall come well armed for the warre, mounted upon a good horse of service, in presence of the Sovereigne Lord the King upon his Coronation day, and cause Proclamation to be made; that if any man will avouch that the said Sovereigne Lord the King, hath not right to his Kingdome and Crowne, he will be prest and ready to defend the right of the King of his Kingdome, of his Crowne and dignity, with his body, against him, and all others whatsoever. Somewhat lower, The Ban at Tatteshall a little Towne standing in a Marsh Country, but very commodiously, well knowne by reason of the Castle, built for the most part of bricke, and the Barons thereof, runneth into Witham. They write that Eudo and Piñs two Noblemen of Normandy, loving one another entirely as sworne brethren, by the liberall gift of King William the Conquerour received many Lordships and faire lands in this tract, which they parted so, as that Tatteshall fell to Eudo, which he held by Barony, from whose posterity it came by Dryby and the Bernwicks unto Sir Ralph Cromwell, whose sonne bearing the same name, and being under King Henry the Sixth Lord Treasurer of England, departed out of this world without issue: but unto Piñs fell Eresby, which is not farre off: From whose progeny, the inheritance descended by the Becks unto the Willoughbbies: unto whom there came also an encrease both of honour, and also of faire Livelods by their wives, not onely from the Uffords Earles of Suffolke; but also from the Lords of Welles, who brought with them very faire possessions and lands of the family de Engain Lords of ancient Nobility, and from the first comming in of the Normans of great power in these parts. Among these Willoughbbies one excelled all the rest in the Raigne of Henry the Fifth, named Sir Robert Willoughby, who for his martiall prowess was created Earle of Yandresme in France, and from these by the mothers side descended Pergerine Berry, Baron Willoughby of Eresby, a man for his generous minde and military valour renowned both in France, and the Low-countries. Witham now approaching neere unto the Sea, enter-taineth out of the North another small namelesse River; at the spring head whereof standeth Bollingbroke Castle, situate upon a low ground, and built of a soft and crumbling stone by William de Romara Earle of Lincolne, taken from Alice Lucy by King

In the Appendix of Ingulph.Hokne Castle;
* Alice.Dimockes
Ing. 23. 6. 31The Kings
ChampionsFines Michai
Anno 1. H. 6.

Tatteshall;

Cromwell;

Eresby; Lords Wil-loughbey.Lords Welles; Lords de Engain.

King Edward the Second, because she married against his will; and ennobled in the
it was the Birth-place of King Henry the Fourth, who thereof was named Bollingbroke.
Bollingbroke. At which time it beganne to be reckoned among those Honorable Ma- nours, which are termed Honours. And Wisham, after it hath received this River, having passed through Boston, as I have said, dischargeth it selfe at length into the German Sea.

From the mouth of Wisham the shore shutteth forth with a mighty swelling here into the German Sea, as farre as to Humber a great Arme of the Sea, being every where flashed and indented with many small Washes and places which the salt water breaketh into: and hath but few Townes upon it, because there be few Havens there: and the shelves or barres of sand lie every where anentst the land. Yet of these few Townes which take up this Coast, some be memorable: and Wainfleet especially, if it were but for this cause onely, that it bred William Wainfleet Bishop of Winchester, a worthy Prelat, founder of Maudslowe College in Oxford, a man that singularly well deserved of learning. Then Alford, which for the Mercate is beholden to Lincoln Welles, who obtained for it this privilege from King Henry the Sixth. This Family of Welles, was very ancient and honourable: and the last of that name had to wife a daughter of King Edward the Fourth, and being by King Henry the Seventh created Vicount Welles, died having no issue. But the inheritance, by the Females came to the Willoughbys, Dimoches, De la Launds, Hoes, and others. More inward are Drby and Ormesby neighbour Townes, which gave surnames to two great families in their times; from the Drbys descended the elder Lords Cromwell, now determined, and from Ormesbys the house of Skipwith, still continuing. After this, ye have Louth a little Mercate Towne well frequented, which had the name of Lud a small River, that runneth under Cokerington the capital place in times past of the Barony of Scotney. And then Grimby, which our Sabins or conceited persons dreaming what they list, and following their owne fantasies, will have to be so called of one Grime a Merchant, who for that hee had brought up a little foundling of the Danes royall blood named Haveloke, when it had beene cast forth to perish, or to take his lucke or fortune, is much talked of, together with Haveloke that lucky foster-child of his: who having been first a skullen in the Kings kitchen, and afterwards promoted to the marriage of the Kings daughter for his heroicall valour in feates of Armes, and I wot not what, worthy exploits. A narration right well becomming and meetest for them that take pleasure to passe out the long nights with telling of old wives tales. But the honour and ornament of this place was the right reverend Doctour Whitgift late Archbishop of Canterbury, a peerelesse Prelate for piety and learning in our daies.

Scarce six miles from hence, more within the country there sheweth it selfe an ancient Castle, which at this day is called Castor, in the old English Saxons Tongue Þuangcæster, and Thong-cæster, in British Caer Egarry: in both languages it is apply-named so of the thing, to wit, of an hide cut into peeces, like as Byrsa, that Castell or Chadell of the Carthaginians so well knowne. For, our Annales record, that Henric the Saxon, after he had vanquished the Picts and Scots, and received very large possessions in other places, obtained also in this tract of Forstigern, so much ground as hee could compass round about with an Oxe hide cut out into very small laners, that we call Þhangs, wherein he founded and built this Castle. Whence it is that one, who hath written in verse a Breviary of the British History, turned Virgils verses in this manner.

*Accepique solum, facti de nomine * Þbangum, Taurino quantum poterat circundare terga.*

And ground he tooke, which Thong he call'd when he did first begin,
As much as he, a Bull hide cut could well enclose within.

From Grimby, the Shore draweth in with a great reach to make way for to admit Humber, by Thornton a religious house in times past instituted for the Worship of God, by William the Grosse Earle of Aumarle: also by Barton, where there is every notable notable Ferry or passage over into York-shire. Hard by, Ankam a little muddy River, and therefore full of Eeles, emptieth it selfe into Humber: neere unto the spring-head whereof is Market-Rasyn, so called of a Mercate there well resorted unto. Somewhat higher stands Angorby, now corruptly called Osgodby belonging in times past to the family of Semarc, from whom it descended hereditarily to the Airmans: also Kelsay, a Lordship in old time of the Hanfards, men of great name in this shire, from whom in right of the wives it came to the family of the Asceghs, Knights. But after this, An- kam hath a bridge over it, at Glanford, a small Mercate Towne, which the common people, of the said bridge, so commonly call Brigg, that the true name is almost quite forgotten. Next unto it, within a Parke I saw Keisley the seat of the worshipfull ancient family of the Tirwhits, Knights, descended from Grovil Oxenbridge, and Eching-

ham. But in times past it was the habitation, as a man may gather by the name, of one Keek which was in the time of the Saxons and Danes an usuall name). For Bye in the English-Saxon language signifieth A dwelling place, and Byan, To dwell: whence it is that so many places both elsewhere in England, and heere especially in this Shire doe end in Bie.

All this Traff over at certaine seasons, good God, what store of fowles (to say nothing of fishes) is heere to be found! I meane not those vulgar birds which in other places are highly esteemed and beare a great price, as Teales, Quailes, Woodcocks, Pheasants, Partridges, &c. but such as we have no Latine names for, the very delicate dainties, indeed, of service, meates for the Demigods, and greatly sought for by these that love the tooth so well, I meane, Puists, Godwits, Knotts, that is to say Cann- tw or Knotts birds, (for, out of Denmarke they are thought to fly thither), Dotterels, so named of their dotish foolishnesse, which being a kinde of birds as it were of an apish kinde, ready to imitate what they see done, are caught by candle light according to fowlers gesture: if he put forth an arme, they also stretch out a wing: sets he forward his legge, or holdeth up his head, they likewise doe theirs: in brieft, what ever the fowler doth, the same also doth this foolish bird untill it bee hidden within the net. But these things I leave to their observation, who either take pleasure earnestly to hunt after Natures workes, or being borne to pamper the belly delight to lend their estates downe the throat.

More Westward, the River Trent also after he hath ended his long course, is received into the Humber, after it hath with his sandy banke bounded this shire from Fesse- dike hither: having runne downe first not farre from Stow, where Godive the wife of Earle Leofricke built a Monastery; which for the low site that it hath under the hills,
Henry of Huntingdon saith to have beene founded Under the Promontory of Lincolne:
Then, neere unto Knath, now the habitation of Baron Willoughby of Parham, in times past of the family of the Barons Darcy, who had very much encrease both in honor and also of possessions by the daughter and heire of the Meinills. This Family of the Darcys proceeded from another more ancient, to wit, from one whose name was Norman de Adrey or Darcy de Nocton, who flourished in high reputation under King Henry the Third, and whose successours endowed with lands the little Nunnery at Abvingham in this County. But this dignity is as it were extinct, for that the last Norman in the right line which is more ancient, left behinde him onely two sisters:
of which the one was married to Roger Pedwardine, the other to Peter of Limburgh.

Then runneth the Trent downe to Gainesborough, a towne ennobled by reason of the Danes ships that lay there at rode, and also for the death of Suene Tiugs-Kege, a Danish Tyrant, who after he had robbed and spoiled the country, as Matthew of Westminster writeth, being heere stabbed to death by an unknowne man, suffered due punishment at length for his wickednesse and villany. Many a yeere after this, it became the possession of Sir William de Valence Earle of Pembroch, who obtained for it of king Ed- ward the first the liberty to keepe a Faire: From which Earle by the Scottish Earles of Arbol, and the Piercies, descended the Barons of Bourough who heere dwelt: concerning whom I have written already in Surry. In this part of the Shire stood long since the City Sidnacester, which afforded a See to the Bishops of this Traff, who were

Barton upon Humber.

Kerleby.
Tirwhitt.

Bye what it is.

Delicate
fowles.

Knotts.
Dotterells.

Stow.

Knath.

Darcy de Nocton and Knath.

Fines 29. E. 3.

Gainesborough.

Barons
Bourough.
Sidnacester.

Bollingbroke.

Wainfleet.

Alford.
Baron Welles.

*

Grimby.

Castor.
Thong-cæster.
Byrsa.

* In Virgil, Byrsam.

Thornton College.

were called the Bishops of Lindisfar: But this City is now so farre out of all knowledge, that together with the name the very ruines also seeme to have perished, for by all my curious enquiry, I could learne nothing of it.

Neither must I overpasse, that in this Quarter, at Melwood there flourished the family of Saint Paul, corruptly called Sampoll, Knights; which I alwaies thought have bene of that ancient Castilion race of the Earles of Saint Paul in France. By the Coat-Armour of Luxemburgh, which they beare, implieth that they are come out of France since that the said Castilion stocke of Saint Paul, was by marriage planted into that of Luxemburgh, which happened two hundred yeeres since thereabout.

Above this place the Rivers of Trent, Idell and Dane doe so disport themselves with the division of their streames, and Marishes caused by them and other Springs, that they enclose within them the River-Island of Axelholme, in the Saxon Tongue Caxalholme, which is a parcell of Lincolne-shire. It carryeth in length from South to North ten miles, and in breadth not past halfe so much. The flat and lower part of it toward the Rivers is marish ground, and bringeth forth an odoriferous kinde of flax which they tearme Gall. It yeeldeth also Pests in the Mores, and dead rootes of fir-wood which in burning give a ranke sweet favour. There also have bene found great and long firre-trees while they digged for Per, both within the Isle, and also without, at Laughton upon Trent banke, the old habitation of the family of Dalison, now contractly called Dalison. The middle parts of this Isle, where it riseth gently with some ascent is fruitfull and fertile, and yeeldeth flax in great abundance: also the Alabastr stone, and yet the same being not very solide but brittle, is more meet for pargetting and plaister-worke, than for other uses. The chiefe Towne called in old time Axel, is now named Axey, whence, by putting to the Saxon word Holme, which they used for a River-Island, the name no doubt was compounded. But scarce deservert it to bee called a Towne, it is so scatteringly inhabited: and yet it is able to shew the plot of ground where a Castle stood, that was raised in the Barons warre, and which belonged to the Mowbrates, who at that time possessed a great part of the Isle.

In the yeere 1173, as writeth an old Chronographer, Roger de Hoveden making his Allegiance to the Elder * King, repaired the Castle at Kinard Ferry in the Isle of Axelholme, which had bene of old time destroyed. Against whom a number of Lincolne-shire men making head, when they had passed over the water in barges, laid siege to the Castle, forced the Constable thereof and all the souldiers to yeeld, and overthrew the said Castle. Somewhat higher is Botterwic, the Lord whereof Sir Edmund Sheffield, King Edward the Sixth created the first Baron Sheffield of Botterwic: who for his country spent his life against the Rebels in Norfolke, having begotten of Anne Vere the Earle of Oxford daughter, a sonne named John, the second Baron, and father to Edmund now Lord Sheffield, a right honourable Knight of the Garter, President of the Councell established in the North. But more into the North I saw Burton Stather standing upon the other side of Trent, whereof I have hitherto read nothing memorable.

This Shire glorieth in the Earles which have borne Title thereof. After Esge who flourished in the yeere 710. and Mercar both Saxons, and who were Earles by office, onely William de Romara a Norman, was the first Earle after the Conquest, in whose roome being dead (for neither his sonne, whereas he died before his father, nor his grand-child enjoyed this title) King Stephen placed Gilbert de Gaunt. After whose decease Simon de Saint Lyz, the younger, the sonne of Earle Simon, (you reade the very words of Robert Montemais, who lived about that time) Wanting lands, by the gracious gift of King Henry the Second tooke his onely daughter to wife, with her husband's gift. After this Lewis of France, who was by the seditious Barons brought into England girt a second Gilbert out of the Family de Gaunt, with the sword of the Earldome of Lincolne: but when the said Lewis was soone after expelled the land, no man acknowledged him for Earle, and himselfe of his owne accord relinquished that title. Then Raulph the sixth Earle of Chester obtained this honour of King Henry the Third, who alive before his death gave unto Hawise or Avis his sister (the wife of Robert De Quincy) by Charter, the Earldome of Lincolne, so farre forth as appertained unto him, that she might bee Countesse thereof: For in this tenour runne the very words of the Charter: She likewise bestowed it upon John de Lacy Constable of Chester, and the heires whom hee should beget of the body of Margaret her daughter. This John had issue Edmund, who dying before his mother left this honour for Henry his sonne to enjoy, who was the last Earle of that line: For when his sonnes were taken away by untimely death, and he had but one little daughter onely remaining alive named Alice, hee affianced her, being but nine yeeres old, to Thomas the sonne of Edmund Earle of Lancaster, with this condition, That if he should fortune to dye without heires of her body, or if they happened to dye without heires of their bodies, his Castles, Lordships, &c. should in Remainder come to the heires of Edmund Earle of Lancaster for ever. But the said Alice had no childe at all by her husband Thomas: But when Thomas her husband was beheaded, shee that by her light behaviour had not a little steined her good name, tooke Sir Enbul le Strange, with whom she had lived before time too familiarly for her husband, without the assent and privy of her Sovereigne, who being here- a highly offended, seized her possessions into his owne hands. Yet both Sir Enbul Strange, and Sir Hugh Frene her third husband, are in some Records named Earles of Lincolne. After Alice, now very aged, was departed this life without issue, Henry Earle of Lancaster Nephew to Edmund aforesaid by his second sonne, entred upon her large and faire patrimony by vertue of that conveyance which I spake of before) and from that time it accrued to the House of Lancaster. Howbeit the Kings of England at their pleasure have bestowed the name and honour of Earles of Lincolne, as, King Edward the Fourth gave it to Sir John De la Pole: and King Henry the Eighth, to Henry Brandon, both the Sonnes of the Dukes of Suffolke, who both ended this life without Issue: the first slaine in the battaile at Stoke, and the other taken away by the swearing sicknesse. Afterward Queene Elizabeth promoted Edward Baron Clinton Lord high Admirall of England, to the said honour, which his sonne Henry enjoyeth at this day.

a little

Lib. Monasterij de Stanlow.

a. Edw. 2.

Effect. 1. E. 3; N. 134.

See Dukes of Suffolke.

Anno 14. Elizabeth.

There are in this Shire Parishes much about 630.

Z 2

NOTTING.

Saint Paul.

Axelholme.

Gals, a shrub.

*

Alabastrites.

* Henry, the Second, in regard of his sonne whom he had made King with him.

Earles of Lincolne.

2. H. 2.

PART E OF YORK E SHIRE

PARTE

O F

DARBY

SHIRE

NOTINGAMLE Comitatus olim pars CORITANORVM

NOTTINGHAM-SHIRE.

Pon the West side of Lincolne-shire confineth the County of NOTTINGHAM, in the English Saxon tongue Nottingaham-rcype, and in English Nottingham-shire, being farre lesse in quantiry; limited Northward with York-shire, Westward with Darby-shire, and in some parts with York-shire, and on the South side with Leicester-shire. The South and East part thereof are made more fruitfull by the noble and famous River Trent, with other Riverets resorting unto it. The West part is taken up with the Forest of Shirewood, which stretcheth out a great way. This part because it is sandy, the Inhabitants tearme The Sand, the other, for that it is clayish, they call the Clay: and so have divided their Country into these two parts.

The River Trent, in the old English Saxon tongue Treontra (which some Antiquaries of small note and account have called Triginta in Latine, for the affinity of the French word Trent that signifieth that number Triginta, that is, thirty) having gone a long journey, so soone as hee is entred into this Shire, and hath (recepto Suro flumine ex agro Leicestrensi, taking in the River Soure from the field of Leicester) runne by Seamford, where I have learned there be many tokens remaining of old antiquity, and peeces of Roman money oftentimes found; and then by Clifton, which hath given both habitation and surname also to the ancient family of the Cliftons, much enriched by one of the heires of Cressy, taketh in from the West the little River Lin, which rising neere unto Newsted, that is, New place, where sometime King Henry the Second founded a small Abbay, and which is now the dwelling house of the ancient Family of the Burons, descended from Ralph de Buron, who at the first comming in of the Normans flourished in great state, both in this Countrey and also in Lancashire; runneth hard by Wallaton rich in veines of cole, where Sir Francis Willoughby a Knight nobly descended from the Greis Marquesse Dorset, in our daies built out of the ground with great charges (upon a vaine ostentation of his wealth) a stately house with artificiall workmanship, standing bleakely, but offering a very goodly prospect to the beholders farre and neere.

Then runneth it by Linton or Lenton, much frequented and famous in old time for the Abbay there of the Holy Trinity, founded by William Peverell, the base sonne of King William the Conquerour; but now all the fame is onely for a Faire there kept. Where, on the other banke at the very meeting well neere of Lin and Trent, the principall Towne that hath given name unto the Shire is seated upon the side of an hill now called Nottingham, (by softening the old name a little) for Nottingaham; for, so the English Saxons named it of certaine caves and passages under the ground, which in old time they hewed and wrought hollow under those huge and steepe clifffes, which are on the South side hanging over the little River Lin, for places of receir and refuge, yea and for habitations. And thereupon Asterius interpreteth this Saxon word Nottingaham in Latine Speluncarum domum, that is, A house of Denes or Caves, and in the British Tui ogo hauc, which signifieth the very selfe same. The Towne for the naturall site thereof is right pleasant: as where, on the one hand lye faire and large Medowes by the Rivers side, on the other, rise hills with a gentle and easie ascent: and is plentifully provided of all things beside, necessary for mans life. On the one side Shirewood yeeldeth store of wood to maintaine fire, although many use for that purpose stinking pit cole digged forth of the ground: on the other, Trent serveth it abundantly with fish. And hence hath beene taken up this od barbarous Verse,

*Limpida sylva facum, * Triginta dat mihi piscem.*
Shire-wood yeelds me fuell for fire,
As Trent yeelds fish, what I require.

Z z 2

The river
Trent.

Lin a riveret.

Byron.
Wallaton.

Lenton.

Nottingham.

*Trent.

At

At a word, for largeness, for building, for three faire Churches, a passing spacious and beautifull Mercat place, and a most strong Castle, it maketh a goodly shew. The said Castle is mounted upon an huge and steepe worke on the West side of the City, in which place it is thought that Castle stood in times past upon whose strength the Danes presuming held out against the Siege of Ethered and Alfrid so long, until they frustrate of their purpose brake up their Siege, trussed up baggage and baggage and dislodged. For when the Danes had taken this Castle, Burthred King of the Mercians (as mine Authour Asterius writeth) and the Mercians, addresse their messengers to Ethered King of the West Saxons, and to Alfred his brother, humbly beseeching them to come and aide them, that so they might give battaile to the fore-named Army, which request they also easily obtained. For, those two brethren slackning no whit their promise, having levied from all parts a mighty Army, assembled their forces, entered Mercia, and fighting with one accord jointly to encounter the enemy come as farre as to Snottenga-ham, and when the Painims keeping themselves within the defense of the Castle refused to give battaile, and the Christians with all their force could not batter the Wall, after peace concluded betwene the Paganes and Mercians, those two brethren with their bands returned home. But after this, King Edward the elder, built the Village Bridgeford just over against it, and compassed the Towne about with a wall, which now is fallen downe, and yet the remains thereof I have seene on the South side. And within very few yeeres after, in King Edward the Confessours time, as wee read in Domesday booke, there were numbered in it one hundred and seventy three Burgeses, and from them Minsters, there were paid forty shillings to the King. Also the water of Trent, the Folke ditte, and the way toward Yorke were warded and kept, that if any man hindered the passing of vessels, he was to make amends with the payment of foure pounds.

As for the Castle which now wee see, it may bee well of great name in regard both of the Founder, and the worthinesse also of the worke: for William of Normandy built it to bridle the English; and so strong it was, as William of Normandy writeth, as well by naturall situation as hand labour, that it is held impregnable (if it have sufficient men to defend it) unless it bee by famine. Afterward also King Edward the Fourth bestowed great cost in the repairing of it, and beautified it with faire buildings: whereto King Richard also the Third set to his helping hand. Neither for all the changes and alterations of times, hath it undergone the common condition or destiny incident to such great Castles, being never forced and wonne by assault. Once was it in vaine besieged by Henry of Anjou, at which time the fouldier lying in Garison set fire upon the buildings joyning unto it. Once also it was suddenly surprisid by Earle Robert de Ferraris in the Barons warre, who spoiled the inhabitants of all their goods. The Castellanes report many stories of David King of the Scots prisoner in it, and of Roger Mortimer Earle of March, taken heere in hollow secret passage under the ground, who because he prized his faith and loyalty to his country lighter than Scottish gold, and with a vaste minde designed other mischiefs, was afterwards hanged. Certes, in the first base Court of the Castle we went downe by many steps or staires with candle light into a Vault under the ground and certaine close roomes wrought out of the very rocke, in the walles whereof are engraven the stories of Christs Passion and other things, by the hand (as they say) of David the Second, king of Scots, who was there imprisoned. But in the upper part of the Castle which riseth up aloft upon a rocke, we came also by many staires into another Cave likewise under the ground, which they call Mortimers Hole, for that in it the foresaid Roger Mortimer lay hidden, when as being guilty to himselfe of wickednesse he stood in feare of his life.

As for the position of Nottingham, it seeth the North Pole elevated fifty three Degrees, and hath the Meridian two and twenty Degrees and foureteen minutes distant from the utmost point of the West, whence Geographers beginne to measure the Longitude.

From hence the Trent runneth with a milde streame and passeth forward by Holme, called of the Lords thereof Holme * Pierpoint, whose Family is both ancient and noble, 1175.

Rog. Hoveden.
Pag. 307.

Mortimers hole.

Pierpoint.
* De. extra ponie.

noble, and out of which Roberts Pierpoint was summoned by King Edward the Third unto the high Court of Parliament, among the Barons of the Kingdome; unto Shefford where Ralph Hanfelin founded a Priory, and the Lords Bardolph had a mansion, but now the seat of the worshipfull stocke of the Stanhopes, knights; whose share in this Tract hath growne great and their name renowned since they matched with an heire of Mallorell. From whence he runneth downe with a rolling streame to Stoke, a little Village, but well knowne for no small overthrow and slaughter that there happened: when Sir John de la pole Earle of Lincolne, who being by King Richard the Third declared heire apparent to the Crowne, seeing by the comming of King Henry the Seventh himselfe debarred of the hope of the Kingdome, heere in behalfe of a counterfeit Prince rebelliously opposed himselfe against a lawfull king, and so resolutely with his friends and followers lost his life. Not farre from hence is Thurgarton where Sir Ralph D'Einconrte founded a Priory, and somewhat higher Smithwell sheweth it selfe aloft, with a Collegiat Church of Prebendaries consecrated to the blessed Virgin Mary, a place not very faire in outward shew, I must needs say, but strong, ancient, and of great fame. Which, as they write, Paulinus the First Archbishop of Torke founded, after he had baptised the Inhabitants of this Shire in the River Trent, and so regenerated them to Christ. Since which time, the Archbishops of Torke have had here a very faire and stately Palace and three Parkes stored with Deere adjoining thereto. That this is the City which Bede calleth Tio-vul-Finga-cestre, I doe the more stedfastly beleve, because, those things which he hath reported of Paulinus baptizing in the Trent neere unto Tio-vul-Finga-cestre, the private History of this Church constantly avoucheth to have beene done in this very place. From thence out of the East, Snite a little Brooke runneth into Trent, which being but small and shallow watereth Langer, a place of name in regard of the Tibetons or Tiptofts Lords thereof, who afterwards became Earles of Worcester: also Wiverton, which from Heriz a worshipfull man long since in these parts, came by the Bress and Caliothes unto the Chaworthes, who fetch their name out of the * Cadwrci in France, and derive their pedigree from the Lord of Walcherwill.

Now doth Trent divide it selfe, neere Averham or Aram an ancient habitation of the Suttons Gentlemen of respective worth, and runneth hard under a good great Towne called Newark, as one would say, The new worke, of the new Castle, which Castle so fresh and of so beautifull building, as Henry of Huntingdon termeth it, Alexander that bountifull minded Bishop of Lincolne built: which Prelate, that I may use the words of an ancient Historian, carrying a most brave and gallant minde, builded both this Castle and another also with most profuse and lavish expense. And because such manner of sumptuous buildings little became the gravity and dignity of a Bishop, he to take away the envie and hard conceit of the world for such building, and to expiate, as it were, the offence thus grew thereby, founded as many Monasteries and filled them with religious Brethren. Nevertheless, this vaine prodigality and lavish spending that was in a military Bishop, was pursued afterwards with condigne punishment. For, King Stephen, who laboured nothing more than to establish his tottering estate in his Kingdome by seizing into his hands all the strongest holds thereof, brought this Prelate, what with hard imprisoning, and, in a fort, with famishing him, to that passe, that will'd hee nill'd hee, at length hee yeelded up unto him both this Castle, and that other at Shefford in Lincolne shire. Neither is there any other memorable matter heere to be related, but that King John finished in this place the most wearisome course of his troublesome life; and King Edward the Sixth incorporated it of one Alderman, and twelve Assitants. From hence the River gathering himselfe againe into one Chanell, runneth directly Northward, beset on both sides with Villages; neither affoordeth it any matter worth remembrance before it come to Littleborough, a little Towne in deed and truly answering to the name, where, as there is at this day a Ferry much used, so there was in times past that Station, whereof Antonine the Emperour once or twice made mention, and which according to sundry Copies is called AGELOCUM or SEGELOCUM.

Barony of Sheleford.

Battaile of Stoke.

Smithwell.

Tio-vul-Fingacester.

Tiptofts.

Chaworths.
* Cahors in Quericy.

1216.

Littleborrough.

Agelocum or Segelecum.

This Towne have I heretofore sought for in vaine, about the Country adjoining; but now I am verily perswaded and assured that I have found it out, both for the standeth upon the old Port High-way, and also because the field lying to it sheweth expresse tokens of Walles; and besides affoordeth unto Ploughmen every day many peeces of the Roman Emperours Coine: which because Swine many times rooting into the ground turne up with their snouts, the country people call Swine-penies. Who also according to their simple capacity are of opinion, that their forefathers in times past fenced and mounded that field with a stone Wall against the water of Trent that useth in Winter time to overflow and make great floods.

In the West part of this Shire, which they rearme The Sand, and where Erne a little Riveret hieth apace into Trent, Strelley, in old time Strellegh sheweth itself, a place that gave both surname and habitation to the Family of the Strellis, commonly called Sturleyes, Knights; one of the most ancient Houses in all this Country. More inward, the Forest Shirewood (which some expound by these Latine names Limpida Sylva, that is, A Shire or Cleere wood; others Praelara Sylva, in the same fence and signification) in ancient times over-shadowed all the Country over with greene leaved branches, and the boughs and armes of trees twisted one within another, so implicated the Woods together, that a man could scarcely goe alone in the beaten pathes: But now the trees grow not so thicke, yet hath it an infinite number of fallow Deere, yea and Stagges with their stately branching heads feeding within it. Some Townes also: among which Mansfield carryeth away the name, as maintaining a great Mercat passing well served, and as well frequented. The name of which Towne, they that delineate the Pedegree of the Graves of the great family of Mansfield in Germany, use as an argument to proove the same, and set downe that the first Earle of Mansfield was one of King Arthurs Knights of the Round Table, borne and bred at this Mansfield. Indeed our Kings used in old time to retire themselves herher for the love of hunting: and that you may reade the very word of an ancient Inquisition, VV. Fauconberge, tenebat Manerium de Cokeney in hoc Comitatu in Sergientia, per Servitium ferrandi Palsfredum Regis quando Rex veniret ad Mansfield, that is, VV. Fauconberge held the Manour of Cokeney in this County in Sergiency, by service to shooe the Kings Palfrey when the King came to Mansfield. And the hereditary Resters or Keepers of this Forest of Shirewood were men in their times of high estimation, viz. Sir Gerarde de Normanville in the time of the Conquest, the Cones and Birkins, by whose heire it came to the *Everingham*s. Of which Family Sir Alan Everingham was summoned to Parliaments in the Raignes of King Edward the Second, and King Edward the Third: At which time they were seated at Lexinton, anciently called Lexinton, where also flourished a great Family so surnamed, whose heires were married into the Houses of Sutton of Averham and Markham.

Out of this Wood there spring many Riverets that runne into the Trent: but the is thought to bee the chiefe: upon which neere unto Idleton in the yeere 616. the felicity and prosperous successe which for a long time had accompanied Eilbert the most puissant King of Northumberland, was overtaken and forsooke him quite. For, whereas before time he had alwaies fought his battailes most fortunately, heere (fortune turning her wheele) he was by Redwald King of the East Angles vanquished and slaine, who in his roome made Edwin then banished from the Kingdome, doe unto him from his Ancesters, Sovereigne Ruler over the Northumbers. This little River Idle runneth downe not farre from Markham, a Village verily but small to speake of, yet gave it name to the Family of the Markhams, which for worth and antiquity hath bene very notable, being descended from one of the heires of Croft, and formerly from an heire of Lexinton, as I lately shewed. The greatest ornament of this Family was Sir John Markham, who sitting Lord chiefe Justice of England, guided the helme of Justice with so even an hand and so great equity (a thing that I would have you to reade in the English Histories) that his honour and glory shall never perishe. Six miles from it Westward, is Workensop, a Towne well knowne for the Liquorice that there groweth and prospereth passing well: famous also for the Shirewood.

Mansfield.

*

L. Everingham.

Lexinton.

Idle the river.

Markham.

Workensop.
Liquorice.

Earle of Shrewsburies House which within our remembrance George Talbot Earle of Shrewsbury built with that magnificence, as becometh so great an Earle, and yet such as was not to be envied. This Workensop from the Lovetosis first Lords thereof, under the Normans Raigne, descended by the Furnivalles and Nevil, unto the L. Talbots with a very goodly inheritance. Of which Lovetosis, G. Lovetost in the time of King Henry the First, founded here an Abbay, the ruines whereof I have seen toward the East side of the Towne, amidst most pleasant and plentifull pastures: and the West part of the Church standeth still passing faire to be seene with two towre steeples. A little higher upon the same River I saw Blithe a famous Mercate Towne, which Bulley or Bassy, a Noble man of the Normans blood, fortified with a Castle: but now the very rubbish thereof is hardly to bee seene, time so consumeth all things. But the Abbay there, was founded by Roger Busby and Foulke De Lisseurs: and this is the farthest Towne almost in Nottingham-shire, Northward, unlesse it bee Scroby a little Towne of the Archbishops of Torke, situate in the very confines and frontiers of Tork-shire.

William surnamed the Conquerour appointed over this Shire William Peverell his base sonne, not with the Title of Earle, but of Lord of Nottingham: who had a sonne that dyed before his father, and hee likewise had a sonne of the same name, whom king Henry the Second disinherited, for that he went about to poison Ranulph Earle of Chesster. Much about this time *Robert de Ferrarj*s, who rifled and ransacked Nottingham, in a Donation which he made unto the Church of Tuttesbury, stiled himself thus, Robertus Comes junior de Nottingham, that is, Robert the younger Earle of Nottingham. But afterwards King Richard the First gave and confirmed unto his brother John the Earledome and Castle of Nottingham with all the Honour of Peverell. Many yeeres after, King Richard the Second honoured John Lord Mowbray with this Title of Earle of Nottingham, who dying a young man without issue, his brother Thomas succeeded after him: He being by king Richard the Second created Earle Mare-shall and Duke of Norfolke, and soone after banished, begat Thomas Earle Mare-shall, whom king Henry the Fourth beheaded; and John Mowbray, who, as also his sonne and Nephew, were likewise Dukes of Norfolke and Earles of Nottingham. But when as their male issue failed, and that Richard the young sonne of King Edward the Fourth, being Duke of Torke had borne this Title with others by his Wife the heire of the Mowbraies, but a small while, King Richard the Third honoured William Vicount Barkley descended from the Mowbraies with this Title of Earle of Nottingham: and whereas hee dyed without issue, king Henry the Eighth bestowed the same honour upon his illegitimate sonne H. Fitz Roy, when hee created him Duke of Richmond; but hee departed this life in the flower of his age, leaving no childe. Afterward this Title lay extinct, untill in the yeere of our Lord 1597. Queene Elizabeth by solempne investiture adorned therewith Charles Lord Howard of Effingham, and High Admirall of England, descended from the Mowbraies, in regard of his service (as appeareth in the Charter of his Creation) right valiantly and faithfully performed against the Spanish Armado in the yeere 1588. as also at the winning of Cala in Spain, where he was Lord Generall of the forces by sea, like as the Earle of Effex, of those by land.

S. Mary of Radford.

Blithe.

Lords and Earles of Nottingham.
Lib. M. Lincol.
Matth. Paris.
p. 126.
See Earles of Darby.
Matth. Paris.
p. 204.
Hoveden. pag.
373. b.Inq. 6. Ric. 2.
See Dukes of Norfolke.

There are in this County Parish Churches 168.

DARBY.

DARBYSHIRE.

DARBYSHIRE, called in old English-Saxon Deopbyr-scire, lieth close to Nottingham-shire Westward, confining with Leicester-shire upon the Southside, like as with Stafford-shire on the West, and York-shire in the North, resembling, as it were, the forme of a Triangle, but not with equall sides. For, whereas about the point of it lying Southward it is scarce fixe miles broad, it so enlargeth and spreadeth it selfe on both sides, that where it looketh into the North it carrieth much about thirty miles in breadth. The River Derwent, that runneth along the middest of it, divideth it after a sort in two parts, which River breaking out of the North limit thereof and taking his course Southward, sometimes with his blacke waters stained with the Soile and earth that it passeth by, rumbleth downe apace into the Trent: For, Trent overthwarteth the said narrow point, that I spake of, lying Southward. The East side and the South parts are well manured, not unfruitfull, and besides, well stored with Parkes; The West part beyond Derwent which they call the Peake being all of it hilly, or a stony and craggy ground, is more barraine: howbeit rich in lead, iron, and coles, which it yeeldeth plentifully, and also feedeth Sheepe very commodiously.

In the South corner the first place worth the naming that offereth it selfe to sight, is Greisely Castle, more than broken downe, which together with a little Monastery was founded in times past in honour of Saint George, by the Greiselyes Lords thereof, who fetching their descent from William the sonne of Sir Niele of Greisely, about the very Conquest of England by the Normans, have flourished unto these dayes in great worship, the which they have not a little augmented long since by marrying with the daughter and heire of the ancient family of Gasteneys. Upon the River Dove, which untill it entreteth into Trent divideth this Country from Stafford-shire, we meet with nothing in this Shire but small country Villages, and Ashburne a Mercate towne, where the house of the Cokains flourished a long time; and Norbury, where the right ancient family of the Fitz-Herberts have long inhabited: out of which, Sir Anthony Fitz-Herbert hath deserved passing well of the knowledge and profession of our Commons law: Not farre from which is Shirley an ancient Lordship of the well renowned Family of the Shirleys, who derive their pedigree from one Fulcher: unto whom, beside the antiquity of their house, much honor and faire lands have accrued by marriage with the heires of the Breoses, the Bassetts of Braillesford, the Stantons, Lovells, &c. And heere stand round about many places which have given name and Habitation to worshipfull Families: as Longford, Bradburne, Kniveton, from whence came those Knivetons of Mercaston and Bradley: of which house Saint Lo Kniveton is one, to whose judicious and studious diligence I am deeply endebted: also Kedelston, where the Cursons dwelt, as also at Crookhall. But whether Sir Robert Curson knighted by King Henry the Seventh, made a Baron of the Empire by Maximilian the Emperour in the yeere 1500. for his singular valour, and thereupon by King Henry the Eighth made a Baron of England with a liberall pension assigned, was descended from these Cursons, I dare not affirme. Heereby is Radbourn, where Sir John Chandos knight, Lord of the place, laid a goodly foundation of a great and stately house: from whom by a daughter it came by hereditary succession unto the Poles, who dwell heere at this day. But these particularities I leave for him who hath undertaken the full description of this Shire.

But upon Trent, so soon as ever he hath taken to him the river Dove, is Rebandunum to bee scene, for so doe our History-writers call it, the Saxons named it hpebandun, and we at this day Repton, which from a great and faire Towne is become a poore small Village. For, in old time very famous it was, by reason both of the buriall of Greisely Castle.

The family of the Greiselys.

The family of the Shirleys.

Baron Curson.

Repton.

Æthelbald

Aethelbald that good King of the Mercians, who through the treachery of his owne people lost his life, and of the other Kings of Mercia: as also for the unfortunate calamity of Burthred the last King of the Mercians, who when hee had enjoyed his kingdome partly by way of entreaty and partly by meanes of bribery, full twenty yeeres, was heere deprived of his kingdome by the Danes, or rather freed and exempted from the glittering misery of princely State, and so became an example to teach men in how ticklish and slippery a place they stand which are underproped onely with money. Then not farre from Trent is Melborn a Castle of the Kings now decaying, wherein John Duke of Burbon taken prisoner in the battaile of Agincourt was detained nineteene yeeres under the custody of Sir Nicholas Montgomery the younger. Scarce five miles hence Northward, the River Derwent hath his walke, who in the utmost limit, as I said before, of this Shire Northward deriving his head out of the Peak hills, being one while streitned betwene crags, and sometimes another while watering and cherishing the fresh greene meadowes, by mossie and morish grounds holdeth on his course for thirty miles or thereabout directly, as were, into the South. Howbeit in so long a course hee passeth by nothing worth looking on, except Chastefworth, a very large, faire and stately house, which Sir William Cavendish, or Cavendish descended out of that ancient house of German in Suffolk, beganne, and which his Wife Elizabeth, and after Countesse of Shrewsbury, hath of late with great charges fully finished.

Chastefworth.
Cavendish.

But where Derwent turneth somewhat Eastward, when it is once past Little Chester, that is, Little City, where old peeces of Roman money are often times gotten out of the ground, Darby sheweth it selfe, in the English-Saxon Tongue named Norþþworching, and by the Danes (as Aethelward that ancient Writer willeth) Deoraby, the chiefe Towne of all this Shire: which name, being taken from the River Derwent and contracted from Derwentby, it hath bestowed upon the whole County. A proper Towne it is, none of the least, not without good trade and reforme to it. On the East side of it, the River Derwent making a very faire shew, runneth downe carrying a full and lofty streame under a beautifull stone Bridge, upon which our devout forefathers erected a faire Chappell, which now is neglected and goeth to decay: Through the South part thereof runneth a prety cleere River which they call Mertenbrooke. Five Churches there be in it: Of which the greatest named All Hallomes, dedicated to the memory of All-Saints, hath a Towre Scepter that for height and singular fine Workmanship excelleth. In which Church, the Countesse of Shrewsbury, of whom erewhile I spake, trusting her selfe better than her heires, providently erected a Sepulture for her selfe, and as religiously founded an Hospitall hard by, for the maintenance of twelve poore folke, eight men and four women.

Memorable in old time was this place, because it had beene a lurking hole and Rendezvous for the Danes, untill Ethelfleda that victorious Lady of the Mercians, by a suddaine forceable surprize, made a slaughter of the Danes and became Mistress of it. In the time of King Edward the Confessor, as wee finde in Domesday booke, that 143. Burgeses, whose number notwithstanding decreased so, that in William the Conquerours Raigne there remained onely an hundred: And these paid unto the King at the feast of Saint Martin 12. * Trabes of Corne. But now all the name and credit that hath, ariseth of the Assises there kept for the whole shire, and by the best nappy ale that is brewed there: a drinke so called, of the Danish word Oela somewhat wrested, and not of Alica, as Ruellius deriveth it: the Britans termed it by an old word Kwya, in steade whereof Curmi is read amisse in Disclorides; where hee saith, that the Welsh (perchance he would have said Hiberni, that is, The Irishmen) in lieu of wine use Curmi, a kinde of drinke made of Barly. For, this is that Barly-wine of ours, which Julius the Emperour, that Apostata, calleth merrily in an Epigramme, πυρρυν, ὁ βελωνικον. This is the ancient and peculiar drinke of the Englishmen and Britans, yea and the same very whollome, howsoever Henry of Aurenches the Norman, Arch-poet to King Henry the Third, did in his pleasant wit merrily jest upon it in these Verses.

* Thraves of corne, as it should seeme.

Ale.
Cervisia in latine, Curmi in Disclorides:
Ale in English, of Oel, a Danish word.

*Nescio quod Stygia monstrum conforme paludi, Cervisiam plerique vocant: nil spissius illa
Dum bibitur, nil clarius est dum mingitur, unde Constat, quod multas facies in ventre relinquit.*

Of this strange drinke, so like to Strygian lake, (Most tearme it Ale) I wote not what to make:
Folke drinke it thicke, and pisse it passing thin,
Much dregges therefore must needs remaine within.

Howbeit, Turnebus that most learned Frenchman makerh no doubte, but that men using to drinke heereof, if they could avoid surfetting, would live longer than those that drinke wine: and that from hence it is, that many of us drinking Ale live an hundred yeeres. And yet Asclepiades in Plutarch ascribeth this long life to the coldnesse of the aire, which keepeth in and preserveth the naturall heat in bodies, when he made report, that the Britans lived untill they were an hundred and twenty yeeres old.

But the wealth of this Towne consisteth much in buying of corne and selling it againe to the mountaines: for all the Inhabitants be as it were a kinde of hucksters, or badgers. Not farre from hence doth Derwent carry his streame, where by Elwaston Sir Ralph Montjoye had lands, in the time of Edward the First: from whence came Sir Walter Blunt, whom King Edward the Fourth advanced to the honour of Baron Montjoye with a pension: whose posterity have equalled the nobility of their birth with the ornaments of learning: and principally among them, Charles, late Earle of Devonshire, Baron Montjoye, Lord Lieutenant General of Ireland, and Knights of the Order of the Garter. Beneath this Elwaston, Derwent disburdeneth himselfe into the channell of Trent, which within a while admitteth into it the River Erewash, that in this part serveth as a limit to divide this country from Nottinghamshire. Neere unto this River standeth Risley, a possession of the Wiloughbeies: of which family was that Sir Hugh Wiloughby, as I have heard say, who whiles hee endeavoured to discover the Frozen Stamere unto Wardbous in Scandia, was frozen to death together with his company, in the same ship. Hard by it also is Sandiacre, or as others will have it, Saint Diacre, the seat of the Family of the Greies of Sandiacre: whose inheritance Sir Edward Hillary in right of his wife was first possessed of; and whose sonne became adopted into the name of the Greies: and a few yeeres after, the one of his daughters and heires wedded to Sir John Leake, and the other to John Welsh.

Turnebus de Vino.

Barons Montjoye.

Greies of Sandiacre.

Codenor
Castle.

Barons Grey
of Codenor.

Alfreton.

The Barons of Alfreton coat of Armes, Staveley.

Freshwell
commonly.

On the East side of this Shire there follow in order Northward these places, Codenor in old time Contenoure Castle, which belonged to the Barons Grey, called thereupon Lords Grey of Codenor; whose inheritance in the foregoing age came to the Zouches by the marriage that Sir John de la Zouch the second sonne of William Lord de la Zouch of Haringworth, contracted with Elizabeth the heire of Henry Grey the last Lord of Codenor. Then, Winfeld, a very great and goodly Manour, where Ralph Lord Cromwell in the Raigne of Henry the Sixth built a sumptuous and stately house, for whose daies. After it, you see Alfreton, which men thinke to have beene built by King Alfred, and of him to have taken that name: which Towne had also Lords, entitled therupon, de Alfreton: of whom the second named Robert, the sonne of Ralph, built in the most remote angle and nouke of this shire the little Abbay De Bel-lacapine, commonly called Beau-chiese; but a few yeeres after for default of heires wailes the Family of Chaworth and the Lathams in Lancashire possessed their inheritance, by two daughters. These bare for their Armes, Two Cheverons, as they tearme them, or, in a Shield Azur: which very same Coat the Musards, that is, The doubters and delaters who were called Barons of Staveley in this County, changing the colours onely gave, who during the Raigne of King Edward the First had an end in Sir Nicholas Maford: and his eldest sister was married to Ancher Freschevill, whose posterity flourisheth heere still at this day. Higher yet in the very East frontier of this County, upon a rough and a craggy Soile standeth Hardwic, which gave name to a Family in which which possessed the same: out of which descended Lady Elizabeth Countess of Shrewsbury, who beganne to builde there two goodly houses joyning in manner one to the other, which by reason of their lofty situation heve themselves, a faire of to be seene, and yeeld a very goodly prospect. This now giveth the Title of Baronet to Sir William Cavendish her second sonne, whom King James of late hath honoured with the honour of Baron Cavendish of Hardwicke.

More inward in the Country, is seated Chester-field in Scardale, that is, in a Dale compassed in with craggies and rocks: For, such rocks the Englishmen were wont to rearme Scarres. Both the new name it selfe, and the ruines of the old Wallerdales proove, that this Chester-field was of good antiquity: but the ancient name thereof by continuance of time worne out and quite lost. King John made it a free Mortuorie when he gave it to William Brierley his especiall favourite. In Writers it is famous only by occasion of the warre betwixt King Henry the Third and his Barons, wherein Roberts Ferrars the last Earle of Darby of that name, being taken prisoner and deprived of his honour by authority of the Parliament, lived afterwards as a private man and his posterity flourished with the Title onely of Barons. Hard to this Chester-field Westward lyeth Walton, which from the Bretons came hereditarily by Leoline to the Foliambes men of great name in this Tract: and Eastward Sutton, where the Leaks held a long time a worshipfull port, in Knights degree.

A little from hence is Bolover an ancient Castle, situate somewhat with the height: which belonged to the Hastings Lords of Abergavenny, in right of marriage with King Henry the Third: who being altogether unwilling that the Earldome of Chester, unto whom this Castle had appertained, should bee divided and beleeved among distaves, assigned here and there other possessions unto the fitters of the last Earle.

The West part beyond Derwent, which throughout riseth high and peaking with hills and mountaines, whence in old time it was called in the old English tongue Peac-land, and is at this day, haply for that cause, named the Peake (for, that work among us signifieth to appeare aloft) is severed from Stafford-shire by the Dove a most swift and cleere River, of which I shall speake hereafter. This part although in some place it hath craggy, rough and bare scarres, and cragges; yet by reason that under the upper crust of the earth there is limestone which supplyeth a bating fruitful flugh, or humour, there be in it greene grassie hills and vales, which bring forth oates, and feed safely both droves of greater beasts, and also many flocks of sheep. For, there is no more danger now from Wolves which in times past were hard and noisome to this Country; and for the chafing away and taking of which here there were that held lands here at Werneshill, who thereupon were named Werneshill, as appeareth plainly in the Records of the Kingdome: But so plentiful is of lead, that the Alchymists, who condemne the Planets as convict of foulesse unto the metall mines, have upon a ridiculous error written, that Saturnus when they make the Lord and Dominatour of lead, is liberally affected to England, in granting lead; but displeased with France, to which he hath denied the same. And verily, I thinke that Pliny spake of this Country when hee said this, In Britannia is very crasse of the ground, without any deepe mining, is gotten so great store of lead, that it is a law expressly made of purpose, forbidding men to make more than to a certain quantity. For in these mountaines, fertile lead stones are daily digged up in great abundance, which upon the hill tops lying open to the West winde, neere unto Udend and Werkef-Worsh (which hereupon tooke name of the lead-works) with the Westerne winde begins to blow (which winde of all others they have been experience found to hold longest) they melt with mighty great fires of wood into lead, in troughs or trenches wch they digge of purpose for it to runne into, and runneth it up into Sowes. Neither onely lead, but Stibium also called in the Apothecaries shops Antimonium, is heere found by it selfe in veins: which mineral the women of Greece used in old time to colour their eye-browes with, whereupon the Poet, Hom in Greeke tearmeth it phrygionem. Millstones likewise are heere hewed out, as also dish.

Baron Caven-

Walton,
Sutton.

The Peaks.

Wolves

Inq. 2. Ed. 2.
Lead.
Brodzus.

Antimony.

MILTONS.

grinde-stones and whetstones, to give an edge unto iron tooles : and sometimes in these mines or quarries is found a certaine white Fluor (for such stones comming out of Mines, that be like unto precious stones, learned minerall men call Fluores) which for all the world resembleth Chrystall.

Befides Workes-worth, lately mentioned, we meet with never another place worth the remembrance, unleffe it be Haddon by the River Wie, the seat for many yeeres together of the Vernons, who as they were very ancient so they became no lesse renowned in these parts, in so much as Sir George Vern knight, who lived in our time, for his magnificent port that hee carried, the open house that hee kept, and his commendable hospitality, gat the name among the multitude of a Pety King in the Peaks. By his Daughters and heires a goodly and great Inheritance was transferred unto Sir John Mannoors sonne of Thomas Earle of Rutland, and to Sir Thomas Stanley sonne of Edward Earle of Darby. There adjoyneth unto this, Bakewell upon the same River, which among these hills maketh it selfe way into Derwent. This was by the Saxons called Baodecanwell: And Marianus writeth, that King Edward the Elder erected there a Burrough. Now whether it borrowed this name or no of the hote waters, which the ancient Englishmen, as also the Germans in their language termed Bade and Baden, whence came Baden in Germany and Buda in Hungary, I know not. Certes, at the spring-head of Wie not farre from hence, there rise and walme up nine fountaines of hote waters, the place at this day is called Buxton well: which being found by experience holmesome for the stomach, sinewes, and the whole body, George Earle of Shrewesbury lately beautified with buildings, and so they are beguine againe to be resorted unto, by concourse of the greatest Gentlemen and of the Nobility. At which time that most unfortunate Lady, Mary Queene of Scots had farewell unto Buxton with this Distichon, by a little change of Casars Verses concerning Feltria, in this wife:

Buxtona qua calida celebrare nomine lymphæ, Fortè mihi posthac non adeunda, vale.

Buxton, that of great name shalt be, for hote and holosome baine;
Farewell, for I perhaps shall not thee ever see againe.

But that these hote waters were knowne in old time; The Port-way or High paved Street named Bath-gate, reaching for seven miles together from hence unto Burgh a little Village doth manifestly shew. Neere unto this Burgh there standeth upon the top of an hillan old Castle sometimes belonging to the Peuerels, called The Castle in the Peake, and in Latin De Alto Pecco, which King Edward the Third together with a Manour and an Honour, gave unto his sonne John Duke of Lancaster, what time as hee surrendered the *Ea*ldome of Richmond unto the Kings hands. Under which, there is a Cave or hole within the ground, called, saving your reverence, The Devils Calse, that gapeth with a wide mouth, and hath in it many turnings and reryng rooms: where in, forsooth, Gervase of Tilbury, whether for wane of knowing much, or upon a delight hee had in fabling, hath written, that a Shepherd saw a very wide and large Country with Riverets and Brookes running heere and there through it, and huge Pooles of dead and standing waters. Notwithstanding, by reason of thefe and such like fables, this Hole is reckoned for one of the wonders of England: neither are there wanting the like tales of another Cave, but especially of that which is called Elden Hole, wherein there is nothing to bee wondred at, but that it is of an huge widnesse, exceeding steepe, and of a marvelous depth. But whosoever have written that there should bee certaine tunnels and breathing holes, out of which windes doe issue, they are much deceived: Neither doe these Verses of Alexander Neckam, which hee wrote as touching the Mervayles of England, agree to any of these two holes.

Est specus Aëolis ventis obnoxia semper, Impetus è gemino maximus ore venit.

A 33

Cogitare

Grindstones.
Whetstones.
Fluores.
Chrysell.

Vernon?

Buxton?

Devils Arise in Peake,

At Elden hole:

Cogitur injectum velamen adire supernas Partes, descensum impedit aura potens.

A Cave, to strong Æolian windes alwaies enthal'd there is;
From two-fold tunnell maine great blasts arise and never misse;
A cloth or garment cast therein, by force aloft is sent,
A mighty breath, or powfull puffe doth hinder all descent.

But all the memorable matters in this high and rough stony little Country, or hath comprised in these foure Verses.

*Mira alto Pecco tria sunt, barathrum, specus, antrum;
Commoda tot, plumbum, gramen, ovile pecus.
Tot speciosa simul sunt, Castrum, Balnea, Chatsworth; Plura sed occurrunt, quæ speciosa minus.*

There are in High Peake Wonders three,
A deepe Hole, Cave and Den:
Commodities as many bee,
Lead, Graffe, and Sheepe in pen.
And Beauties three there are withall
A Castle, Bath, Chatsworth:
With places more yet meet you shall
That are of meaner worth.

To these Wonders may be added a wonderfull Well in the Peake Fort, so farre from Buxtons which ordinarily ebberth and floweth foure times in the space of one houre or thereabout, keeping his just Tides: and I know not whether Tideswell & Mercate Towne heereby hath his name thereof.

The Peverels who I have said before were Lords of Nottingham are also reported to have bene Lords of Darby. Afterward King Richard the First, gave and confirmed unto his brother John the Counties and Castles of Nottingham, Lancaster, Darby, &c. with the honours thereto belonging, with the honour also of Peverell. After him these were Earles of Derby out of the family of Ferrars (so far as I am able to gather out of the Registers of Tisbury, Merivall, and Barton Monasteries) William Ferrar, sonne to the Daughter and heire of Peverell, whom King John with his owne hand, (as we finde in an ancient Charter) invested Earle of Darby: William his sonne who bruised with a fall out of his Coach died in the yeere 1254. And this William sonne, Robert, who in the Civill Warre lost this Title and a great estate by forfeiture, in such sort as that none of his posterity, although they lived in great power and reputation, were ever restored to that honor againe: But most of this Robert possessions K. Henry the Third passed over unto Edmund his owne younger son: and King Edward the Third (I write out of the very originall Record) by authority and advice of the Parliament, ordained Henry of Lancaster, the sonne of Henry Earle of La- ncaster, Earle of Darby, to him and his heires, and withall assigned unto him a thousand markes yeerely during the life of his father Henry Earle of Lancaster. From that time this Title was united to the line of Lancaster, untill King Henry the Seventh, bestowed the same upon Thomas Lord Stanley, who before had wedded Ma- rgaret the Kings mother, to him and the heires males of his body. He had for his successour his Grandsonne Thomas begotten by George his sonne of Ioan the heire of the Lord Strange of Knocking: this Thomas had by the sister of George Earle of Hunting- don, Edward, the third Earle of this Family, highly commended for hospitality and affability, who by the Lady Dorothy Daughter to the first Thomas Howard Duke of Norfolke, begat Henry the fourth Earle, efts-once honourably employed, who left by Lady Margaret Daughter of Henry Earle of Cumberland, Ferdinand, and William successively

*
A strange
Well.
Th. Fitzbert. p. 223.
Lords and Earles of Darby.
Simon Du-
nelm.
Hovenden.
Matthew Paris.
204.

Chart. antiq. T. 3.
Joban.

successively Earles of Darby. Ferdinand dyed in strange manner, in the flower of his youth, leaving by Margaret his Wife Daughter of Sir John Spenser of Althorp three Daughters, Anne married to Grey Bruges, Lord Chandos, Francis Wife to Sir John Egerton, and Elizabeth Wife to Henry Earle of Huntingdon. William the sixth Earle now enjoyeth that Honour having issue by Elizabeth Daughter to Edward late Earle of Oxford.

And thus much of the Counties of Nottingham and Darby: of which they inhabited a part who in Bedes time were called Mercii Aquilonares, that is, The Northern Mercians, for that they dwelt beyond the Trent Northward: and they held, as hee saith, The land of seven thou- sand Families.

Northren
Mercians.

This Country holdeth in it Parishes 106.

Aaa 2

CORNA

CORNAVII.

Having now travailed in order through the Countries of the ancient CORITANI, I am to survey the Regions confining, which in ancient time the people called CORNABII or CORNAVII, inhabited: The derivation or etymologie of whose name let others sift out. As for my selfe, I could draw the force and signification of that word to this and that diversly; but seeing none of them doth aptly answer to the nature of the place, or disposition of the people, I chuse rather to reject them, than heere to propound them. According therefore to my purpose, I will severally runne over those Provinces which after Ptolomees description on the CORNAVII seeme to have possessed, that is to say, Warwick-shire, Worcester-shire, Stafford-shire, Shrop-shire and Cheshire. In which, there remaineth no footing at this day, of the name Cornavij, although this name continued even untill the declining State of the Romane Empire.

For, certaine Companies and Regiments of the CORNAVII served in pay under the later Emperours, as wee may see in the Booke of Notitia Provinciarum.

WARWICK

WARWICI

Comitatus a cor:
naviis olim inha:
bitatus

HVNDREDORVM

NOMINA
A	Hemlingforde
B	Knightlowe
C	Barlichway
D	Kyncton
E	Libertas ciuitatis Couentriae

VIGORNIAE

PARS

Chris Cophorus Saxton descripsit
William Rip Sculpsit

STAFFORD

PARS

GLOUCESTER

PARS

SECESTRIA

PARS

NORTH

HAMPTONIAE

PARS

OXONIAE

PARS

WARWICK-SHIRE.

THe County of WARWICK, which the old English Saxons as well as wee called WARWICK-SHIRE, being bounded on the East side with Northampton-shire, Leicester-shire, and the Wasling-street Way, which I spake of: on the South with Oxford-shire and Gloucestershire, on the West, for the greatest part with Worcestershire, and on the North side with Stafford-shire, is divided into two parts, the Feldon and Woodland, that is, into a plaine Champion, and a woody Country: which parts, the River Avon running crookedly from North-East to South-West, doth after a sort sever one from the other.

The Feldon, lyeth on this side Avon Southward, a plaine Champion Countrey, and being rich in Corne and greene grasse, yeeldeth a right goodly and pleasant prospect to them that looke downe upon it from an Hill which they call Edge-hill. Where this hill enderth nere unto Wormington, we saw a round Fort or military tence cast up of a good bignesse, which, as others of that kinde, wee may well thinke to have beene made for the present, and not long to continue, by occasion of some enemies that in times past were ready to invade those parts. Of the redy Soile heere, come the names of Rodway and Rodley: yea and a great part of the very Vale is thereupon termed The Vale of Red-horse, of the shape of an Horse cut out in a red hill by the Country people hard by Pillerton.

In this part the places worth naming are Shipston and Kinton, the one in times past a Mercate of Sheepe, the other of Kine, whereupon they gat those names: also Compton in the Hole, so called for that it lyeth hidden in a Valley under the Hilles; yet hath it delights and pleasures about it, and from thence a noble Family hath taken the name: out of which the most excellent Prince Queene Elizabeth advanced Sir Henry Compton to the honour of a Baron in the yeere of our Redemption 1572. Likewise Wormelighton, so highly commended, and notorious for good Sheepe-pasture, but now much more notable since that King James created that right worshipfull Sir Robert Spenser, of whom I have already spoken, Baron Spenser of Wormelighton. Moreover, Shugbury, where the stones called Astroites, resembling little Starres, are found, which the Lords of the place firnamed thereupon Shugbury, have long shewed in their Coat Armour: Southam a Mercate Towne well knowne: as also Leamington (so called of Leame a small Brooke that wandereth through this part of the Shire) where there boyleth out a spring of salt water: and Urbindon, now Long Isbindingon, and Harbury. Neither verily are these two places memorable for any other cause, but for that Fremund sonne to King Offa was betwixt them villanously in times past slaine by those that fore-layed him, a man of great renowne and singular Piety to God ward, unto whom nothing else procured envie and evill will, but because in an unhappy time hee bad by happy Conduct quelled the audacious Courage of his enemies. Which Death of his notwithstanding turned to his greater Glorie. For, being buried at his Fathers Palace, now called Off-Church, hee liveth yet unto Posterity, as who being raunged in the Catalogue of our Saints hath among the multitude received Divine Honours: and whose life is by an ancient Writer set out in a good Poeme, out of which let it bee no offence to put downe these few Verses following touching the Murderer, who upon an ambitious desire of a Kingdome, slew him.

Feldon

The Vale of Redhorse

Shipston in Worcestershire, Kinton, Compton

Shugbury, Stones Astroites Sigtean, See in Lincolnshire, Leamington

Off-Church

Non sperans vivo Fremundo, regis honore, Optato se posse frui, molitur in ejus

Aaa 3

Imme-

*Immeritam tacito mortem, gladioque profanus
Irruit exerto servus, Dominique jacens
Tale nihil veritum sevo caput amputat iclu.
Talis apud* Wydford Fremundum palma coronat, Dum simul & Jones occidit, & occidit infans.*

*In some Copies, Redford.

Past hope, whiles Fremund liv'd, to speed of wished regalty,
All secret and unworthy means he plots to make him dyc.
With naked sword, prophane slave he, assaileth cowardly
His Lord unware, and as he lay beheads him cruelly.
At Wydford thus Prince Fremund did this glorious crowne attaine;
While's slaying guilty folke, at once, himselfe is guiltlesse flaine.

Fosse-way:

Thus much of the Feldon, or Champion part, which, that ancient Fosse-way (a thing that would not bee overpassed) cutteth overthwart: the ridge whereof is scene in pastures lying now out of the way, neere unto Chesterston the habitation of that ancient Family of the Peitoes, out of which was that William Peito, a Franciscane Frier, whom Paul the Fourth, Pope of Rome, of stomach to worke Cardinal Pole displeasure (would you thinke these heavenly Wights were so wrathfull) created, though in vaine, Cardinal and Regent of England having recalled Cardinal Pole to Rome before, to bee accused and charged as suspected corrupt in Religion: But Queene Mary, albeir shee were most affectionately devoted to the Church of Rome, interposed or rather opposed her selfe so, that Peito was forbidden to enter into England, and the power Legantine left entire and whole to Cardinal Pole. Heere I wote not whether it would bee materiall to relate, how in the Raigne of Edward the Fourth certaine Writers in Bookes of purpose penned made complaint of Covetousnesse, how that she having assembled heere about flocks of Sheepe as a puissant power of armed forces, besieged many Villages well peopled, drave out the Husbandmen, wonne the said Villages, destroyed, rased, and depopulated them in such miserable fort heereabout, that one of the said Writers a learned man in those daies cryed out with the Poet in these termes.

Roffe and T.B. against the destroyers of Villages.

Quid facerent hostes capta crudelius urbe?
What could more cruelly be done,
By enemies, to Cities wonne?

But nere unto the River Avon, where carrying as yet but a small streame he dolefully entereth into this County, first offereth it selfe Rugby having a Mercat in it standing chiefly of a number of Butchers. Then Newenham Regis, that is, Kings Newenham standing upon the other side of the River, where three fountaines walme out of the ground streined, as it should seeme, through a veine of Alum; the water whereof carrying both colour and taste of milke, is reported to cure the stone: Centes, it procureth urine abundantly, greene wounds it quickly closeth up and healeth, being drunke with salt it looseth, and with sugar, bindeth the belly.

Newenham Regis, Holfome Welles.

Bagginton:

After it, Bagginton, which had a Cattle to it, and belonged sometime to the Bagottes, as noble a Family then, as most other. Within a little whereof standeth Stoncleay, where King Henry the Second founded an Abbey; and just over against it stood in old time a Castle upon Avon called Stoncleay-holme, built in Helmsholme, which was destroyed when the flaming broiles of Danish Warres under king Cnut caught hold of all England.

Stoncleay, Register of Stoncleay Abbey.

Warwick.

Then runneth Avon unto the principall Towne of the whole Shire, which wee call Warwicke, the Saxons Wapping-wyc, Ninnius and the Britans Caer Guarib, and Caer Leon. All which names, considering they seeme to have sprung from Guarib a British word which signifieth a Garison, or from Legions, that were set in certaine places places for Guard and defence thereof, have in some sort perswaded mee (although in these Etymologies I love rather to bee a Scepticke than a Criticke) that this is the very Towne of Britaine, which the Romans called PRÆSIDIUM, where, as wee finde in the Notitia, or Abstract of Provinces, the Captaine of the Dalmatian Horsemen abode under the command of Dux Britannia. This Cohort or Band was enrolled out of Dalmatia; and (to note thus much by the way) such was the provident wisdom and forecast of the Romans, that in all their Provinces they placed forraigne Souldiers in Garison, who by reason of their diversify as well of manners as of language from the naturall Inhabitants, could not joyne with them in any conspiracy: for (as hee writeth) Nations not inured to the bridle of bondage, easily otherwise start backe from the yoke imposed upon them. Heereupon it was that there served in Britaine, out of Africke the Moors; out of Spaine the Asiures and Vettones; out of Germany the Batavi, Nervi, Tangri, and Turnacenses; out of Gaul the lingones, Morini; and from other remoter places, Dalmatians, Thracians, Alani, &c. as I will shew in their proper places: But now to the matter. Neither let any man thinke that the Britans got that word Guarib from the Frenchmen, seeing the originall is an Hebrew word (if wee may beleieve Lazius) and in that Originall most Nations doe accord.

Præsidium.

Florus lib. 4. c. ult.

Forreine Souldiers in Provinces.

But that this was PRÆSIDIUM, that is, The Garison Towne, both the Authority of our Chronicles teacheth, which report that the Romane Legions had their abode heere; and the site also it selfe in the very navell and mids almost of the whole Province doth imply. For equally distant it is of the one side from the East Coast of Norfolke, and on the other side from the West of Wales, which kinde of situation PRÆSIDIUM a Towne of Corfica, had, standing just in the midst of the Island.

And no marvelle is it that the Romans kept heere Garison and a standing Company of Souldiers, seeing it standeth over the River Avon upon a steepe and high Rocke, and all the passages into it are wrought out of the very stone. That it was fortified with a Wall and Ditches it is apparent; and toward the South West it sheweth a Cattle passing strong, as well by Nature as handy-work, the feat in times past of the Earles of Warwicke. The Towne it selfe is adorned with faire houses, and is much bound to Esbelfed, Lady of the Mercians, who repaired it (when as it was greatly decayed) in the yeere 911. In very good state also it was upon the Normans entring into this land, and had many Burgeses, as they tearme them: and twelve of them, as wee finde written in King William the Conquerours Domesday Booke, were bound to accompany the King of England into his Warres. He that upon warning given went not, paid an hundred Shillings to the King: but if the King made a voyage by sea against his enemies, they sent either foure Botswans, or foure pound of Deniers. In this Burgh the King hath in his Demeines one hundred and shireene Burgeses, and the Kings Barons have an hundred and twelve. Roger the second, of the Normans blood, Earle of Warwicke, built after wards in the very heart of the Towne a most beautifull Church to the blessed Virgin Mary: Which the Beauchamps that succeeded adorned with their Tombs: but especially Richard Beauchamp, Earle of Warwicke, and Governour of Normandy, who dyed at Roan in the yeere 1439. and after a sumptuous funerall solemnized, in this Church lyeth entombed in a magnificent Tombe with this Inscription.

Pray

Pray devoutly for the soule whom God assoile of one of the most worshipfull Knights in his daies of Manhood and cunning, Richard Beauchampe late Earle of Warwicke, Lord Derspenfer, of Bergavenny, and of many other great Lordships, whose body resteth heere under this Tombe, in a full faire Vault of stone, set in the bare Roche. The which visited with long sicknesse in the Castle of Roban, therein deceased full Christianly the last day of April, in the yeere of our Lord God 1439. Hee being at that time Lieutenant Generall of France, and of the Dutchie of Normandie, by sufficient authority of our Sovereigne Lord King Henry the sixth. The which body by great deliberation and worshipfull conduct by sea and land, was brought to Warwicke the fourth of October, the yeere above said, and was laid with full solempne exequies in a faire Chest made of stone in the West Doore of this Chappell, according to his last Will and Testament, therein to rest till this Chappell by him devised in his life were made: the which Chappell founded on the Roche, and all the members thereof his Executors did fully make and apparell, by the authority of his said last Will and Testament. And thereafter by the said authority they did translate worshipfully the said body into the Vault aforesaid. Honoured be God therefore.

Blacklow hill, which others call Gavens-
den.

Neere unto Warwicke Northward is Blacklow hill to be seene, on which Piers de Gaveston, whom King Edward the Second had raised from a base and low estate to be Earle of Cornwall, was by the Nobles of the Kingdome beheaded: who presuming of the Kings favor and fortunes indulgence, tooke unto him so great and licentious liberty, that when he had once corrupted the Kings heart, hee despised all the best men, and proudly seized upon the estates of many, and as hee was a crafty and old beaten Fox sowed discords and variance betweene the Prince and the Peeres of the Realme.

Guy-cliffe.

Under this hill, hard by the River Avon standeth Guy-cliffe, others call it Gib-cliffe, the dwelling house at this day of Sir Thomas Beau-fae descended from the ancient Normans line, and the very seat it selfe of pleasantnesse. There have yee a shady little Wood, cleere and cristall Springs, mossie bottomes and caves, medowes always fresh and greene, the River rumbling heere and there among the stones with his streame making a milde noife and gentle whispering, and besides all this, solitarie and still quietnesse, things most gratefull to the Muses. Heere, as the report goes, that valiant knight and noble Worthy so much celebrated, Sir Guy of Warwicke, after hee had borne the brunt of sundry troubles, and achieved many painfull exploits, built a Chappell, led an Eremitic life, and in the end was buried. Howbeit, wiser men doe thinke, that the place tooke that name of later time by farre, from Guy Beauchamp Earle of Warwicke, and certaine it is, that Richard Beauchamp Earle of Warwicke built Saint Margarets Chappell heere, and erected a mightie and giantlike statue of stone, resembling the said Guy.

Charles-cot.

Avon now runneth downe from Warwicke with a fuller streame by Charles-cot, the habitation of the renowned ancient family of the Lucies knights, which place long agoe agoe descended hereditarily to them from the Charlecotts: who upon a pious and devout minde founded a religious House at Thellusford, for entertainment of poore folke and Pilgrims: For, that little River was called Thelley, which by Compton Murdackes, the possession sometime of the Murdackes, and now of the Vernakes, Knights, and by this, Thellusford goeth into Avon, which within a while runneth hard by Stratford, a proper little mercate towne, beholden for all the beauty that it hath to two men there bred and brought up, namely, John of Stratford Archbishop of Canterbury, who built the Church; and Sir Hugh Clopton Major of London, who over Avon made a stone Bridge supported with foureteene Arches, not without exceeding great expences. This Hugh was a younger brother, out of that ancient family which from Clopton a Manour adjoining borrowed this surname, since the time that Walter de Cokesfeld called Knight Mareshall settled and planted both himselfe and his successours at Clopton. The inheritance of these Cloptons is in our time descended to two sisters coheires: the one of which is married to Sir George Carew knight, Vicechamberlaine to our most gracious Lady Queen Anne: whom King James hath entituled Baron Carew of Clopton, and whom I am the more willing to name with honour in this respect, if there were none other, for that hee is a most affectionate lover of venerable antiquity. Neither seeth Avon any other memorable thing upon his bankes, but Bisford a Mercate Towne, and some Country Villages being now ready to enter into Warwickshire.

Stratford upon Avon.

Baron Carew
of Clopton.

Now let us enter into the Woodland, which beyond the River Avon spreadeth it selfe Northward much larger in compasse than the Felden: and is for the most part thicke set with Woods, and yet not without pastures, corne fields, and sundry mines of Iron: This part, as it is at this day called Woodland, so also it was in old time knowne by a more ancient name Arden, but in the selfesame sense and signification, as I thinke. For it seemeth that Arden among the ancient Britans and Gaules signified a Wood; considering that we see a very great Wood in France named ARDEN, a Towne in Flanders hard by another Wood, called Ardenburg, and that famous Wood or Forest in England by a clipped word likewise cleped DEN: to say nothing of that DIANA, which in the ancient inscriptions of Gaule is surnamed ARDVENA and ARDONNA, that is, if I doe not mis-conceive, Of the Wood; and was the same Diana which in the inscriptions of Italy went under the name of NEMORENSIS. Of this Forest, Turkil of Arden, who flourished heere in all honour under King Henry the First, tooke his name: and his offspring which was of great worship and reputation, spread very much over all England for many yeeres successively ensuing. In the West side of this Country, the River Arrow maketh halfe to joine himselfe in society with Avon, by Stedley Castle; belonging sometime to John the sonne of Corbusio. But whether this River Arrow tooke name of swiftnesse, as Tigris in Mesopotamia (for Arrow with us, like as Tigris among the Persians, betokeneth a shaft) or contrariwise, of the still streame and slow course, which Ar in the old French and British Tongue implied, let other men looke who have better observed the nature of this River.

Woodland;

Arden:

Diana Ardvena.

Stedley.

Upon this River standeth Coughston, the principall mansion house of the Throckmorton family of Knights degree, which being spread into a number of faire branches, and fruitfull of fine wits, flourished in this tract especially, ever since they matched in marriage with the daughter and heire of Spencey. Not farre from hence is Ousley, which also was in ancient time well knowne by the Lords thereof, the Butlers, Barons of Wemy, from whom it was devolved hereditarily to the Ferrars of Ousley. Whose inheritance, within a short time, was divided betweene John Lord of Greystoke and Sir Ralph Nevill. Beneath it, upon Arrow, standeth Beauchamps-Court so named of Baron Beauchamp of Penwiche, from whom by the onely daughter of Edward Willoughby, sonne to Robert Willoughby Baron Broke, it came to Sir Foulque Grevill a right worshipfull person both for his Knights degree, and for kinde courttesie: whose only sonne, carrying likewise the same name, hath consecrated himselfe so to true Vertue and Nobility, that in nobility of minde he farre surmounteth his parentage and unto whom for his exceeding great deserts toward me, although my heart is not able either

Coughston:
Throckmorton

Ousley.

Beauchamps
Court.
Grevilla.

ther to expresse or render condigne thankfulness, yet in speech will I ever remember, and in silence acknowledge my selfe most deeply indebted.

Henley.

Under this Towne there runneth into Arrow, the River Alne, which holding only course through the woods, passeth under Henley a pretty mercate towne: a Castle was once whereunto belonged the Family of the Mont-forts, being Noblemen of great name, which for the pleasant situation among the Woods they called by a French name Bell-desert, but this together with the ruines is now buried quite and scantly scene at all. These were defended not from the Almarian Family of the Mont-forts of France, but from Turstan de Baistenberg a Norman: whose inheritance passed at length by the daughters unto the Barons of Sudley, and to the Frevills. In the place where Arrow and this Alne doe meete together, we saw Alncester, by Medina Paris called (and that more rightly) Alencester, which the inhabitants affirme to have beene a most famous and ancient Towne, and thereupon they will have the name to be Oldcester. This, (as we reade in an old Inquisition) was a Frank-burgh of King Henry the First, and the same King gave that Burgh to Robert Corbet for his vice, and when the said Robert died, it came by descent to Sir William of Botreaux, with Alncester.

A booke in the Exchequer.

Sir Peter Fitz-Herbert: and when William of Botreaux died, the moiety of that Burgh by descent into the hand of Sir Reginald of Botreaux as to the heire, who now holdeth it: and when Peter Fitz-Herbert died, that moiety descended into the hand of Herbert, the son of Peter: which Herbert gave it to Sir Robert de Chaundoy: But now it is deemed a very great Towne become a small Mercate of wares and trade. Howbeit exceeding much frequented for the Corne Faire there holden. This hath for a neere neighbour Arrow according to the name of the River, whose Lord Thomas Burdett for his dependence upon George Duke of Clarence, words unadvisedly uttered, and hardly construed through the iniquity of the time, lost his life. But by his grand daughter married to Edward Conway brother to Sir Hugh Conway of Wales a gracious Prince King Henry the Seventh, the knightly Family of the Conways have ever flourished and laudably followed the profession of Armes.

Arrow. Burdett.

Wroxhall. Badefley. Balshall. Register of the Templars, and Order of Saint John of Jerusalem.

But East from the river, and higher among the Woods, which now begin to grow thin, stand these townes under named Wroxhall, where Hugh de Hattin founded a Priory; Badefley belonging in times past to the Clintons, now to the Kings: Al Balshall, sometimes a Commandery of the Templars, which Roger de Mowbray gave unto them; whose liberality to the order of Templars was so great, that by a common consent in their Chapter they made a decree, that himselfe might remaine and pay any of the brotherhood whomsoever, in case hee had trespassed against the statutes and ordinances of that Order, and did withall before him acknowledge the same: yea and the Knights of the Order of Saint Iohn of Ierusalem, unto whom the Templars possessions in England were assigned over (for our Ancestours in those daies held it a deadly sinne to prophane things consecrated to God) granted a shew of thankfulness unto Iohn Mowbray of Arbolme, the successour of the foresaid Roger, that himselfe and his successours in every of their Covents and assemblies should receive and entertained alwaies in the second place next unto the King.

See the Statute of Templars.

Kenelworth commonly Killingworth.

More North-east, where wilde Brookes meeting together make a broad pool among the Parkes, and so soone as they are kept in with banks runne in a Channell seated Kenelworth, in times past commonly called Kenelworde, but corruptly Kenelworth: and of it taketh name a most ample, beautifull and strong Castle, encompassed all about with Parkes, which neither Kenelph, nor Kenelm, ne yet Kenelph but a some doe dreame, but Geffrey Clinton Chamberlaine unto King Henry the First, and his sonne with him (as may be shewed by good evidences) when he had founded there before a Church for Canons Regular. But Henry his Nephew in the fourth degree, having no issue, sold it unto King Henry the Third, who gave it in frankmorteage to Simon Montfort Earle of Leicester together with his sister Almar. And soone after when enmity was kindled betwene the King and Earle Simon: and the flaine in the bloody warres which he had raised upon faire pretexts against his Soveraigne, it endured six moneths siege, and in the end was surrendered up to the King.

aid, who annexed this Castle as an inheritance to Edmund his sonne Earle of Lancaster. At which time, there went out and was proclaimed from hence an Edict, which our Lawyers use to call Dictum de Kenelworth, whereby it was enacted, That whosoever had tooke Armes against the King should pay every one of them five yeeres rent of their lands, &c. A severe, yet a good and wholesome course, without effusion of blood against rebellious subjects, who compassing the destruction of the State, built all their hopes upon nothing else but diffentions. But this Castle through the bountifull munificence of Queene Elizabeth, was given and granted to Robert Dudley Earle of Leicester, who, to repaire and adorne it, spared for no coste: in so much as if a man consider either the gallant building, or the large Parkes, it would scorne (as it were) to be ranged in a third place amongst the Castles in England.

Next after this, to keepe on the journey that my selfe made, I saw Solyhill: but in it, setting aside the Church, there is nothing worth fight: Then, Bremicham, full of inhabitants, and resounding with hammers and anvils, for the most of them are Smiths. The lower part thereof standeth very waterish: the upper riseth with faire buildings: for the credite and praise whereof, I may not reckon this in the last place, that the Noble and martiall Family of the Bremichams Earles of Louth, &c. in Ireland fetched their originall and name from hence. Then, in the utmost skirt of this land fetched their originall and name from hence. Then, in the utmost skirt of this Shire North-westward, Sutton Colfield standing in a woody and on a churlish hard Soile, glorieth of John Poy Bishop of Excester there borne and bred: who in the Raigne of King Henry the Eighth, when this little Towne had lien a great while as dead, raised it up againe with buildings, priviledges, and a Grammar Schoole. As I went downe from hence Southward I came to Coleshull, a Towne sometime of the Clintons, and to Maxstoke Castle neighbouring to it, which acknowledged by a continuall line of hereditary succession for his Lords, the Limsfies, who were also Lords of Wolverley, the Odingells that came out of Flanders, and the Clintons, men of greatest worth and worship in their times.

Bremicham.

* Or Birminghams.

Lower yet, in the mids of this Woodland standeth Coventrey so called, as we take it, of a Crovet of Monkes, considering that we terme in our tongue such a brotherhood, a Covent and Covent: and it is oftentimes in our Histories and Pontificall Decrees named Coventria: as for example in this one passage:  Vel non est compos sui Episcopus Coventriae, vel nimis videtur a se scientiam repulisse*. Yet there be, that would have this name to be taken from that little Brooke that runneth within the City at this day called Shirburn, and in an ancient Charter of the Priory, is written Cuenisford. Well, whence so ever it was so called, in the foregoing age, growing wealthy by clothing and making of Caps, it was the onely Mart and City of trade in all these parts, frequented also and peopled more than ordinarily a midland place: as being a City very commodiously seated, large, sweet, and neat, fortified with strong Wallles, and set out with right goodly houses: among which there rise up on high two Churches of rare workmanship, standing one hard by the other, and matched, as it were, as concurrents, the one consecrated to the Holy Trinity, the other to Saint Michael. Yet hath it nothing within it, that one would say is of great antiquity. And the most ancient monument of all, as it may seeme, was the Monastery or Priory, the ruines whereof I saw neere unto those Churches: which Priory King Canutus founded first for religious Nunnes, who when they were within a while after throwne out, in the yeere 1043 Leislie Earle of the Mercians enlarged, and in manner built anew, with so great a shew and bravery of gold and silver (these be the very words of William Malmesbury) that the walls seemed too narrow for to receive the treasure of the Church, and the coste bestowed there was wonderfull to as many as beheld it: for, out of one beame were scraped 50. Markes of silver. And he endowed it with so great livings, that Robert de Limsie, Bishop of Lichfield and Chester translated his See hither, as it were to the golden land of Lydia: to the end (for so writeth the said Malmesbury) that out of the very treasure of the Church he might by stealth convey, wherewith to fill the Kings hand, wherewith to avoid the Popes business, and wherewith to satisfie the greedinesse of the Romanists. But this See, few yeeres after was removed againe to Lichfield: yet so, as that one and the selfe same Bishop, car-

Homerus 3. cap. 14. Decret. * The Bishop of Coventry is either beside himselfe, or seemeth to have rejected knowledge and learning, too too much.

* Of middle England.

Lords of Coventry.
1050.
Florilegus.

carried the name both of Lichfield and of Coventry: The first Lord of this City, so farre as I can learne, was this Leofricke, who being very much offended and angry with the Citizens, oppressed them with most heave tributes, which he would remit upon no other condition, at the earnest suite of his wife Gediva, unless she would herselfe ride on horse-backe naked through the greatest and most inhabited street of the City: which she did in deed, and was so covered with her faire long haire, that (if we may beleeve the common sort) shee was seene of no body, and thus shee did set free her Citizens of Coventry from many payments for ever. From Leofricke, it came into the hands of the Earles of Chester, by Lucie his sonne Algars daughter: for, shee had beene married to Ranulph the first of that name, and the third Earle of Chester out of this line: who granted unto Coventry the same liberties that Lincolne had, and gave a great part of the City unto the Monkes: the rest and Chilmore, which is the Lords Manour hard by the City, hee reserved to himselfe and to his heires. After whose death, when for want of issue male, the inheritance was divided betweene the sisters, Coventry came at length mediately by the Earles of Arundell unto Roger Mortimer, whose grand sonne Robert, passed over all his right, for defaults of issue male of his body begotten, unto Queene Isabel mother to King Edward the Third: To have and to hold during the whole life of the Queene herselfe, and after her decease to remaine unto John of Eltham the said Kings brother, and to the heires of his body begotten, and for defaults, the mainder to Edward King of England, &c. For thus is it to be seene in the Fine, in the second yeere of King Edward the Third. Now, the said John of Eltham was afterwards created Earle of Cornwall, and this place became annexed to the Earldome of Cornwall. From which time it hath flourished in great state: Kings have bestowed many immunities upon it, and King Edward the Third especially, who permitted them to chuse a Major and two Bailiffes, and to build and embattle a Wall about the City. Henry the Sixth, who laying unto it certaine small Townes adjoining, granted that it should be an entire County corporate by it selfe, (the very words of the Charters in that sort) in deed and name, and distinct from the County of Warwicke. At which time in lieu of Bailiffes he ordained two Sheriffs, and the Citizens beganne to fortifie the City with a most strong Wall: wherein are beautifull Gates: and at one of them called Gosford Gate, there hangeth to bee seene a mighty great Shield borne with a Bore, which any man would thinke that either Guy of Warwicke or the Duke of the Forrest (Arden) slew in hunting, when he had turned up with his snout the ground or pond, which at this day is called Swanwell, but Swinwell in times past, as the authority of ancient Charters doe prove.

As touching the Longitude of this City, it is 25. Degrees, and 52. Scruples: and for the Latitude it is 52. Degrees, and 25. Scruples. Thus much of Coventry: yet have you not all this of me, but (willingly to acknowledge by whom I have profited) of Henry Ferrars of Baddesley, a man both for parentage, and for knowledge of antiquity very commendable, and my especial friend: who both in this place, and so elsewhere hath at all times courteously shewed me the right way when I was lost, and from his candle, as it were, hath lightened mine.

Neere unto Coventry North-west ward are placed Ausley Castle the habitation in times past of the Haistings, who were Lords of Abergavenny: and Brand, the dwelling place in old time of the Verdons: Eastward standeth Caloughdon, commonly called the ancient seat of the Lords Segrave, from whom it descended to the Barons Berkeley, by one of the daughters of Thomas Mowbray Duke of Norfolk. These Segraves since the time that Stephen was Lord chiefe Justice of England, flourished in the honorable estate of Barons, became possessed of the Chaucombes Inheritance, while Armes also they bare, viz. A Lion rampant, Argent crowned, Or, in a Shield Sable, &c. John the last of them married Margaret Dutchesse of Northfolke, Daughter of Thomas Brotherton; and begat Elizabeth a daughter, who brought into the Family of the Mowbraies the Dignity of Marshall of England, and Title of Duke of Norfolke. Brand also is not farre from hence, where stood an ancient Castle of the Mowbraies, to which many possessions and faire lands thereabout belonged: But the very rubbish of Ausley.

Brand.

Caledon.
Barons Segrave.

Segraves Coat of Armes.

Brinklo Castle.

A this Castle time hath quite consumed; as Combe Abbey is scant now apparent which the Camvills and Mowbraies endowed with possessions, and out of the ruins and reliques whereof, a faire house of the Lord Haringtons in this very place is now raised. As you goe East-ward, you meet anon with Ceaster-Over, whereof I spake incidently before, belonging to the Grevills: neere unto which the High-way Waiting-street, dividing this shire Northward from Leicester-shire, runneth on forward by High-crosse, whereof also I have already written, neere unto Nun-Eaton, which in ancient time was named Eaton. But when Amice wife to Robert Basse Earle of Leicester, as Henry Knighton writeth, had founded a Monastery of Nunnes, wherein her selfe also became professed, it began of those Nunnes to be called Nun-Eaton. And famous it was in the former ages by reason of those religious Virgines holinesse, who devoting themselves continually to prayers, gave example of good life.

Combe Ab-
bay.

A little from this there flourished sometimes Astley-Castle, the principall seate of the Familie of Astley out of which flourished Barons in the time of King Edward the First, Second, and Third: the heire whereof in the end was the second wedded Wife of Reginald Lord Grey of Ruthin; from whom came the Gries Marquesses of Dorset: some of whom were entered in a most fine and faire Collegiat Church which Thomas Lord Astley founded with a Deane and Secular Chanons.

Astley, or Rutley.
Baron Astley.

C Somewhat higher, hard by Waiting street (for so with the common people wee call the High-way made by the Romanes) where as the riuer Anker hath a stone bridge over it, stood MANDVESSEDUM a very ancient towne, mentioned by Antonine the Emperour, which being not altogether deprived of that name, is now called Mancester, and in Nimius his Catalogue Caer Mancegued. Which name, considering there is a stone-quarry hard by, I may ghesse was imposed upon it, of the stones digged forth and hewed out of it. For, out of the Glossaries of the British tongue, we finde, that Main in the British language signified a Stone, and Fossad in the Provinciall tongue to digge out: which being joyned together, may seeme very exprefly to import that ancient name MANDVESSEDUM. But what, how great, or how faire (soever it hath been in old time, a very small village it is at this day, containing in it scarce foureteene dwelling houses, and those but little ones, and hath no monument of antiquitie to shew, beside an ancient mount which they call Old-burie). For on the one side, Atherstone a mercate towne of good resort, where there stood a Church of Augustine Friars, now turned into a Chappell (which neverthelesse acknowledgeth Mancester Church for her mother) and Nun-Eaton on the other side, by their vicinity have left it bare and empty. Close unto Atherstone standeth Mery-Vale, where Robert Ferrars erected a Monastery to God and the blessed Virgin Mary, wherein himselfe enwrapped in an Oxe-hide for a shrouding sheet was interred.

Mandevessdum.
Mancester.

Merivall.

Beyond these, Northeastward is Pollesworth, where Modwena an Irish Virgin, of whom there went so great a fame for her holy life, built a religious house for Nuns, which R. Marmion a Noble man repaired, who had his Castle hard by at Shipper-shall. Neere unto this place also there flourished in the Saxons daies, a towne that now is almost quite gone, called then SECANDUNUM, and at this day Seckinton; where Ethelbald King of the Mercians in civill warre about the yeere of our Lord 749. was stabbed to death by Beared: and soone after Offa slew Beared, so that as by bloody meanes he invaded the Kingdome of Mercia, he likewise lost the same suddenly.

Pollesworth.

Seckinton.

It remaineth now that we reckon up the Earles of Warwick: for, to passe over Guere, Marind, Guy of Warwick, of whose actes all England resoundeth, and others of that stamp, whom pregnant wits have at one birth bred and brought forth into the world: Henry the sonne of Roger de Beau-mont, and brother to Robert Earle of Mellent, was the first Earle descended of Normans blood: who had married Margaret

Earles of Warwick.

B b b

garce

garet the daughter of Ernulphe de Hesdin Earle of Perch, a most mighty and puissant man.

Out of this Family, there bare this Honourable title, Roger the sonne of Henry, William the sonne of Roger, who died in the thirtieth yeere of King Henry the Second, Walleran his brother, Henry the sonne of Walleran, Thomas his sonne, who deceased without issue in the fixe and twentieth yeere of King Henry the Third, leaving behinde him Margery his sister, who being Countesse of Warwicke, and Baraine, departed this life: yet her two husbands, first, John Marechal, then John de Plessey or Plessey, in their wives right and through their Princes favour mounted up to the Honourable dignitie of Earles of Warwicke.

Now when these were departed without any issue by that Margery, Walleran Uncle unto the said Margery succeeded them: After whom, dying also childlesse, his sister Alice enjoyed the inheritance: Afterwards her sonne William, called Malduit and Manduit of Hanslap, who left this world and had no children. Then Isabel the said William Malduits sister being bestowed in marriage upon William de Beauchamp Lord of Elmestry, brought the Earledome of Warwicke into the Familie of the Beauchamps; who, if I deceive not my selfe, for that they came of a daughter of Ursus de Abbot, gave the Beare for their cognifance, and left it to their posteritie. Out of this house there flourished fixe Earles and one Duke; William the sonne of Isabel, John, Guy, Thomas, Thomas the younger, Richard and Henry, unto whom King Henry the Sixth graunted this preheminance and prerogative without any precedent, to be the first and chiefe Earle of England, and to carry this stile, Baron Praecomes totius Angliae, & Comes Warwici, that is, Henry chiefe Earle of all England, and Earle of Warwicke: he nominated him also King of the Isle of Wighe, and afterwards created him Duke of Warwicke, and by these expresse words of his Patene, graunted, That he should take his place in Parliaments and elsewhere next unto the Duke of Norfolk and before the Duke of Buckingham. One onely daughter he had named Anne, whom in the Inquisitions wee finde entituled Countesse of Warwicke, and there died a child. After her succeeded Richard Nevill who had married Anne sister to the said Duke of Warwicke, a man of an undaunted courage, but wavering and untruttie, the very tennisse-ball, in some sort, of fortune; who although he were no King, was above Kings, as who deposed King Henry the Sixth (a most bountifull Prince to him) from his regall dignitie, placed Edward the Fourth in the royall throne, and afterwards put him downe too, restored Henry the Sixth againe to the Kingdome, enwrapped England within the most wofull and lamentable flames of civil warre, which himselfe at the length hardly quenched with his owne blood. After his death Anne his Wife by Act of Parliament was excluded and debarred from all her lands for ever, and his two daughters, heires to him, and heires apparant to their mother, being married to George Duke of Clarence, and Richard Duke of Gloucester, were enabled to enjoy all the said lands, in such wise as if the said Anne their mother were naturally dead. Whereupon the name, stile and title of Earle of Warwicke and Sarisbury was graunted to George Duke of Clarence, who soone after was unnaturally dispatched by a sweet death in a Butte of Malvesey by his suspicious brother King Edward the Fourth: His young sonne Edward was stiled Earle of Warwicke, and being but a very child was beheaded by King Henry the Seventh to secure himselfe and his posteritie.

The death of this Edward our Ancestors accounted to be the full period, and final end of the long lasting warre betweene the two royall houses of Lancaster and York. Wherein, as they reckoned, from the twenty eight yeere of Henry the Sixth unto this, being the fifteenth of Henry the Seventh, there were thirteene fields fought, three Kings of England, one Prince of Wales, twelve Dukes, one Marques, eightene Earles, with one Vicont, and twenty three Barons, besides Knights and Gentlemen, lost their lives. From the death of this young Earle of Warwicke this title lay asleepe, which King Henry the Eighth feared as a fire-brand of

Placita E. 3.
Rotulo 234.

Rot. Parl. 23.
H. 6.

24. H. 6.

Ann. 12. Ed. 4.
Dead by Parliament.

Period of the civill warre be-twene Lancaster and York.

of the State, by reason of the combustion which that Richard Nevill, that whip-king (as some tearmed him) had raised, untill that King Edward the Sixth conferred it upon John Dudley, that derived his pedigree from the Beauchamps, who, like unto that Richard abovesaid, going about in Queene Maries daies to turne and translate Scepters at his pleasure, for his Traiterous deepe ambition lost his head. But his sonnes, first John, when his father was now Duke of Northumberland, by a courteous custome usually received held this title for a while: and afterwards Ambrose a most worthy personage, both for warlike prowesse and sweetnesse of nature through the fauour of Queene Elizabeth received in our remembrance, the Honour of Earle of Warwick to him and his heires males, and for defect of them, to Robert his brother, and the heires males of his body lawfully begotten. This Honour Ambrose bare with great commendation, and died without children in the yeere one thousand five hundred eighty nine, shortly after his brother Robert Earle of Leicester.

In this County there be Parish Churches 158.

Bbb 2

WORCES.

STAT
PAR

PIE

PARS

HE RE

FORDIA

PARS

Lydburye

PARS

GLO
CES IE
PARS

Worcester PARSA

PARS

WORCESTER-SHIRE.

The second region of the ancient Cornavii, having now changed the name, is called in Latine Wigorniensis Comitatus, in the English Saxon tongue Wine-cea-ſter-ſcype, and now commonly of the principall Towne in it WORCESTER-SHIRE: the inhabitants whereof, together with those who joyning unto them round about in Bedes daies, before that England was divided into Shires, were termed Wicci.

Wicci.

Which name, if it were not given them of the river having so many windings, which they dwell by (for such turnings and curving reaches of a river, the English Saxons, as I have already said, called Wic) may seeme to have been derived of those Salt-pits, that the old English-men in their language named Wiches. For there be here very notable Salt-pits, and many salt springs often times have been found, which notwithstanding are stopped up, because it was provided (as we read) that for the saving of woods salt should not be boyled but in certaine places. Neither let it seeme strange, that places have their names given them from Salt-pits, considering that wee may meet with many such here and there in every Country, and our Ancestors the Germans, as Tacitus writeth, had a religious persuasion and believe, that such places approach neereſt to Heaven, and that mens prayers were no where ſooner heard of the gods.

Salt-pits.

This County, on which Warwick-shire confineth on the East, Gloceſter-shire on the South, bounded West-ward with Hereford-shire and Shrop-shire, North-east with Stafford-shire, to say all in one word, hath ſo temperate an ayre and ſoile ſo favourable, that for healthfulneſſe and plenty, it is not inferiour to their neighbour Countries, and in one part for deinty Cheeſe ſurpaſſeth them: yeelding ſuch ſore of Peares, as none other the like; and albeit they are not ſo pleaſing to theſe deinty and delicate mouthes, yet out of their winiſh juice, they make a baſtard kinde of wine called Pyrry, which they drinke very much, although it be (as other drinks of that kinde) both cold and full of winde. Neither is it if you reſpect waters, leſſe pleaſant and commodious: for, in every place there be paſſing ſweet rivers, which afford in great abundance the moſt delicate kinde of Fiſhes. And to let thoſe runne by that are of leſſe account, Severne that noble and renowned river carrieth his ſtreame along, through the middeſt of the ſhire, from North to South: and Avon, that cometh downe out of Warwick-shire to meet with Severne, watereth the South part thereof.

Kings Norton.

Pyrry.

Severn, fiſt of all at his very entry, paſſeth betweene Kiddermiſter and Beawdley. This Beawdley worthily ſo called for the beautifull ſite thereof, ſtanderh moſt pleaſantly upon the hanging of an hill, and hovereth over the river on the Weſt ſide: of late daies well knowne for the admirable tallneſſe of trees growing in the Forreſt of Wyre adjoyning, which now in a manner be all gone. Whence our Poet and Antiquary Leland wrote thus.

Kiddermiſter.
Beawdley.

Delicium rerum Bellus Locus, undique floret Fronde coronatus Viriana tempora Sylva.

Beawdley a fine and deinty thing, is goodly to be ſeene.

All dight about with guirland freſh of Wyre that Forreſt greene.

But now is this little Towne in ſpeech and requeſt onely for the pleaſantneſſe and beaurie of it ſelfe; and withall for the Kings houſe Tiken-hall: which King Henry the Seventh built to be a reryring place for Prince Arthur, at which time he granted ſome liberties to Beawdley. But farther from the river banke, Eaſtward is Kiddermiſter over againſt it, called alſo Kidelmiſter, a faire Towne and hath a great Mercate of all commodities, well frequented, parted in twaine by the little River Stowre that runneth through it: and the greateſt ornaments now belonging thereto thereto are first, a passing beautifull Church, wherein some of the worshipfull family of the Corkes lie buried, and the goodly gallant house of the Blounts of knights of greece, descended from those of Kinles: but in old time this place was of most note for the Lords thereof, the Bisshops, men in their time right honorable: whose rich possessions being at length dismembred and divided among sisters, came partly to the Barons of Abergervenny and in part to a Lazarhouse of women in Wiltshire, which one of the said sisters, being her selfe infected with the Leprosie built for them that had the same disease, and enriched it with her owne patrimony and child's part. Afterwards it came to have a Baron, for King Richard the Second created Sir Iohn Beauchamp Sheriff of his household, Baron Beauchamp of Kidderminster, by letters Patents; and he counted the first Baron so created. But he soone after by the Barons (who together with the Commons rose, and contemning the Kings authority, called as they were most deere unto the King to give an account for their misgovernment of the Common-wealth) was with other right worthy persons, in malice to the King, condemned and beheaded.

Severne turning his course somewhat awry from thence, saluteth Hertlebury a Cattle of the Bishops of Worcester not far distant, and goeth amaine to Holt Castle, located of a very thick wood there, belonging sometime to the Abbots; after, to the Beauchamps, who springing from William Beauchamp surnamed the Blind Baron, grew up afterwards to be a most honorable family; the inheritance whereof descended at length to Gysse and Pemysion: from hence runneth Severne downe, feeding such number of fresh-water Lampries, as that Nature may seeme in this place to have made a very pond or Stew for them: such as the Romanes devised in ancient times when they grew lavish in riotous excessse. These fishes we call Lampries of the Latin word Lampetra, as one would say of licking the rocks, are like to Eeles, slippery and blackish, howbeit beneath on their bellies, somewhat blew: on either side of their bodies they receive and let in water at seven holes, for that they want gills altogether. Most commendable they are in the spring time, as being then very sweet: for in Summer, the inner nerve or string, which stands them instead of a backbone, waxeth hard. The Italians make them more delicate in roast, by a speciall and peculiar seasoning: For they take a Lamprie and in Malvesy kill it, the mouth they close up with a nutmeg, fill all the holes with as many cloves: and when it is rolled up round, putting thereto fillbard-nut kernels stamped, crumbs of bread, oile, malvesy, and spices, they boyle it with great care and certaine turnings over a soft and temperate fire of coles in a frying pan. But what have I to doe with such cookery and Apicius?

Beneath Holt, Severne openeth his East banke to let in the river Salwarpe coming a pace toward him. This hath his first veins out of Lickey hill most eminent in the North part of this Shire, neare unto which at Frankley the family of the Littletons was planted by Iohn Littleton, alias Westcote the famous Lawyer, Justice in the Kings Bench in the time of King Edward the fourth, to whose Treatise of Tenures the students of our Common Law are no lesse beholden, than the Civilians to Iustinus Institor. But to returne: This Salwarpe which we speake of runneth downe by Bransgrove, a mercate towne not of the meanest reckoning and not far from Grafton the seat of a younger family of the Talbots, since King Henry the Seventh gave it to Sir Gilbert Talbot, a younger sonne of John, the second Earle of Sherburne: whom also for his martiall valour and singular wisdom he admitted into the society of the Order of the Garter, and made Governor of Calis. Then runneth Salwarpe downe to Dunwich (Dunwich some terme it, of the Salt pits and the wetish ground on which it standeth, like as Hyetia in Bœtia tooke name of the dirty situation) where three fountaines yeelding plenty of water to make Salt of, divided a sunder by a little brooke of fresh water passing betweene, by a peculiar gift of nature spring out: out of which most pure white Salt is boyled for fixe moneths every yeere, to wit, from Midsummer to Midwinter, in many set furnaces round about. Wherewith what a mighty deale of wood is consumed, Fekenham Forest (where trees grew sometime thicker) and the woods round about, if men hold their peace, will by their thinnesse, make manifest more Baron Beauchamp of Kidderminster.

Hertlebury.
Holt, in old English woods.

Lampries.

Littleton.

Grafton.

Dunwich.

Salt Springs.

Fekenham Forest.

more and more. But if I should write that the learned Canonist Richard de la Wiche Bishop of Chichester, here borne, obtained with his fervent prayers these Salt Springs out of the bowels of the earth, I feare me, least some might thinke me both over injurious to the providence of God, and also too credulous of old wives traditions. Yet were our ancestors in their pious devotion so hasty of beleefe, that they did not onely give credit hereto, yea and recorde it in their writings; but in consideration hereof, yeelded unto that Prelate in some sort divine honour, when Pope Urban the Fourth had for his sanctity, and sincere integrity of life canonized him a Saint. But before that ever this Richard was borne, Gervase of Tilbury wrote thus of these Salt Springs, though not altogether truly. In the Bishopricke of Worcester there is a country towne not farre from the City named Wich, in which at the foote of a certaine little hill, there runneth a most fresh water: in the banke whereof are scented a few pits or wells of a reasonable depth, and their water is most salt. When this water is boyled in Cauldrons, it becommeth thicke and turneth into passing white Salt, and all the Province fetcheth and carrieth it, for that betweene Christmas and the feast of S. Iohn Baptist Nativity, good the water floweth most salt: The rest of the yeere it runneth somewhat fresh, and nothing good to make Salt: and that which I take to be more wonderfull, when this salt water is run sufficiently for the use of the Country, scarcely overfloweth it to any waste: also when the time is once come of the saltnesse, the same is nothing at all allaid for all the vicinity of the fresh river water, neither is it found in any place neere unto the Sea. Moreover in the very Kings booke which we call Domesday, we read thus. In Wich the King and Earle have eight salt pits, which in the whole weeke wherein they boyled and wrought, yeelded on the Friday five new Bullions.

Salwarpe having now entertained a small brooke descending from Chedesley, where anciently the family of Foliot flourished, as afterward at Longdon, maketh hast to Severne which hath not passed foure miles farther, before he runs hard by Worcester, the principall City of this Shire, where he seemeth to passe with a slower streame, as it were, admiring, and wondering thereat all the while he passeth by: and worthy it is I assure you of admiration whether you respect either the antiquity, or the beauty thereof. Certes, for antiquity the Emperour Antonine hath made mention of it under the name of BRANONIUM, and Ptolomee (in whom through the negligence of the transcribers it is misplaced) under the name of BRANOGENIUM, after which name the Britans call it yet Cave Wrangon. In the Catalogue of Nimrod, it is named Caer Guoragon, and Caer Guorcom, the old English-Saxons afterward called it Wegape-cear-cep, and Wipe-cear-cep; I dare not say of Wine that woody Forest which in old time stretched farre. Since the Conquest, the Latine writers named it Wigornia and Wigornia. Which name Ioseph the Monke of Excester a right elegant Poet in those daies was one of the first that used (if my memory faile me not:) I meane him that is published under the name of Cornelius Nepos, in these his elegant verses unto Baldwin Archbishop of Canterbury.

In numerum jam crescit honor, se tertia poscit
Insula, jam meminit Wigornia, Cantia dissit, Romanus meditatur apex, & naufraga Petri
Ductorem in mediis expectat cymba procellis.

A mitre third now waits for thee, for still thine honour growes;
Thee Wigorne still remembereth, now Canterbury knowes:
The See of Rome doth thinke of thee, and Peters ship in feare
Of wracke, amid the boistrous stormes expects thee for to steare.

Probable it is, that the Romanes built it, what time as they planted cities at certaine spaces and distances along the East banke of Severne, to keepe in the Britans beyond Severne, like as they did in Germany on the South banke of Rhene to repress the incursions of the Germans. It standeth, in a place rising somewhat with a gentle ascent, by the rivers side that hath a faire bridge with a tower over it: proudly bearing it selfe in old time, as I finde it written in an ancient Manuscript roule, of the Romanes wall: and even now also it is well and strongly walled. But the fame and reputation that it now hath

*
Richard de la Wiche.

Worcester.

Branoegenium.

hath, ariseth from the Inhabitants, who are many in number, courteous and wealthy by the trade of clothing; from their faire and neat houses; from the number of Churches, but most of all from the Bishops See, which Sexwulph Bishop of the Anglians erected there in the yeere of Christ 680. having built a Cathedral Church on the South side of the City, which hath been often repaired, and which the Bishops and Monkes by little and little have drawne out in length Westward, almost to the very brinke of Severn. Truly it is a passing faire and stately building adorned with Monuments and Tombes of King Iohn, Arihur Prince of Wales, and divers of the Beauchamps; and in these daies, it is no lesse notable by the Deane and Chapter, whom they call Prebendaries placed therein, than it was in times past for the Monkes, or the Cloister Priests: For, presently upon the first foundation, likewise in other religious houses of England, married Priests were placed heere, who carrying a long time a great opinion of holinesse governed the Churches, untill that Danistane Archbishop of Canterbury had decreed in a Synode, That from thence forward the religious men in England should live a single life. For then Oswald Bishop of this City who promoted the Monastical life as busily as any whosoever, remooed the Priests, and brought in Monkes. Which King Eadgar testifieth in these words, The Monasteries of old Monkes, as of Virgins have bene destroyed, and quite neglected throughout England, which I have now determined to repaire to the glory of God, for my soules health, and to multiply the number of Gods servants and hand-maides. And now already I have set up four and forty Monasteries with Monkes and Nunnas in them; and if Christ spare me life I am determined in offering my devout munificence to God, for to proceed to fifty, even the just number of a jubilee. Whereupon at this present, that Monastery which the reverend Bishop Oswald in the Episcopall See of Wipe-ceastre amply enlarged to the honour of Mary the holy Mother of God, and by casting out those Clerkes, &c. hath with my assent and favour appointed there Monkes the religious servants of God; I my selfe doe by my royal authority confirme, and by the counsell and consent of my Peeres and Nobles, corroborate and subject to those religious men living a sole and single life, &c. Long time after when the state of the Church and Clergy here, partly by the Danes incursion, and in part by civil dissensions, was so greatly weakened and brought upon the very knees, that in lieu of that multitude of religious persons whom Oswald had heere placed, scarce twelve remained: Wolstan Bishop of this Church about the yeer of the worlds redemption 1090 put to his helping hand, raised it up againe, and brought them to the number of 50. ye and built a new Church for them. Wolstan I say, a man not so learned (the times then were such) but of that simple sincerity without all hypocrisie, so severe also and austere of life, that as he was terrible to the wicked, so he was venerable to the good, and after his death the Church registred him in the number of Saines. But King Henry the Eighth suppressed and expelled the Monkes after they had in all plenty and fulnesse lived more than 500. yeeres, and in their roomes he substituted a Dean and Prebendaries, and withall erected a Grammar-schoole for the training up of youth. Hard by this Church the bare name and plot of a Castle remaineth, which (as we reade in William of Malmesburies booke of Bishops) Ursus appointed Sheriff of Worcestershire by William the Conquerour, built under the very nose and in the mouth well nere of the Monkes, in so much as he cut away from them a part of their Church-yard. But this Castle through the iniquity of time and casualty of fire was consumed many yeeres ago. The City it selfe also hath been burnt more than once: as being set on fire in the yeere of Christ 1041. by Hardy-Cnut, who exceedingly incensed against the Citizens, because they had slain his Huscarles (for so they termed those domestical Gatherers of the Danes tribute) did not only set fire on the City, but slew the Citizens every others sonne, unlesse it were those that saved them selves in Beuepleg an Island compassed in with the River. Howbeit, as we finde written in King William the Conquerours booke, in King Edward the Confessours time, It had many Burgeses, and for fifteen Hides discharged it selfe: when the Mint went, every Minter gave twenty shillings at London for to receive coining stamps of money. In the yeere 1113. a skarfire that came no man knew how, burnt the Castle, caught also with the flames to the roofes of the Church.

Married Priests.
Register of Worcester
Church.
Ann. 964.

S. Wolstan.

Marianus
Huscarles.

Church. Likewise in the Raigne of Stephen, in the time of Civill Warres it was twice on fire: but most dangerously when King Stephen, who had to his owne damage given this City unto Waller and Earle of Mellent, seized it into his owne hands: Anno 1155. Stephen R. howbeit he was not able at that time to winne the Castle. Nevertheless it raised it selfe up againe out of the ashes in a goodlier forme alwaies than it had before: and flourishd in a right good state of civill government, governed by two Bailiffes chosen out of 24. Citizens, two Aldermen, and two Chamberlains, with a Common Council consisting of 48. Citizens. As touching the Geographical position of this City, it is distant in Longitude from the West Meridian 21. Degrees and 52. Minutes: and the North Pole is elevated 52. Degrees and 12. Minutes.

From Worcester the River Severn running on still Southward, passeth beside Pe- From Worcester the River Severn running on still Southward, passeth beside Pe- wick, the seat in times past of Sir Iohn Beauchamp, whom King Henry the Sixth raised up to the state of a Baron: and within a small time, the female heires brought the inheritance to the Willoughbies of Broke, the Reads, and the Lygons: then runneth it through most rich and redolent meadows by Hanley Castle, belonging sometimes to the Earles of Glocester, and by Upton a Mercate Towne of great name: where peeces of Romane money are oftentimes found. Not farre from hence upon the banke on the right hand, the Severn beholdeth Malvern Hills, hills in deed or rather great and high mountaines, which for the space of seven miles or thereabout, doe as it were by degrees rise higher and higher, dividing this Shire from the County of Hertford. On the brow of which Hills, Gilbert Clare Earle of Glocester did cast a Ditch in times past, to make a partition betweene his possessions and the lands of the Church of Worcester; a peece of worke which is at this day seene not without wonder. Over against those hills, and in like distance almost from the other banke, Bredon Hills being farre lesse, yet in emulation, as it were, to match them, mount aloft: among which Emeline Castle belonging sometimes to Ursus or Ursus D'Abiot maketh a goodly shew: by whose daughter and heire Emeline, it came hereditarily to the Beauchamps. At the foot of these hills lieth Bredon a Village, concerning the Monastery whereof Offa King of the Mercians saith thus: I Offa King of the Mercians will give land containing from times five Acres of Tributaries unto the Monastery that is named Bredon in the Province of the Wiccij, and to the Church of blessed Saint Peter Prince of the Apostles there and in that place standing, which Church Eanwulph my grandfather erected to the praise and glory of the ever living God.

Under these Bredon hills Southward you see two villages named Washborne (whence came the surname to a very ancient and worshipfull Family in this Tract) standing in a parcell of this Province dismembred as it were from the rest of the body: of which kinde there be other parcels here and there scattering all about. But what should be the cause, I am not able to resolve, unlesse haply those that in old time were governors, adjoined to their government their owne lands that lay neere unto the Region which they then governed. Now Avon, from above runneth downe and speeds himselfe to Severn, who in this shire watereth Evesham, so called, as the Monkes write, of one Eoves, Swinheard to Egwin Bishop of Worcester, whereas before time, the name of it was Eath-borne and Heath-field. A very proper Towne situate upon a hill arising from the River: in the Suburb, as it were, whereof, was sometime Bengeworth Castle at the Bridge head; which Castle William de Audevill the Abbot recovered by law against William Beauchamp, utterly rased it, and caused the place to be hallowed for a Church-yard. A Towne this is, well knowne by reason of the Abbey, which that noble Egwin, with the helpe of King Kenred the sonne of Wolpher King of the Mercians founded about the yeere of our Lord 700. knowne likewise for the vale under it named thereof, The Vale of Evesham, which for plentiful fertility hath well deserved to be called the Garnary of all these countries; so good and plentiful is the ground in yielding the best corne abundantly. But most knowne in elder time by occasion of the great overthrow of the Barons and our Catiline, Simon Montfort, Earle of Leicester. For, this man being of a lewd disposition and profound perfidiousnesse, hath taught us that which another truly said, That good turnes are so long acceptable, as they

Anno 1155.
Stephen R.

Barons de Pewick.

Hanley: Upton.

Malvern hills.

Bredon hills.

Emeline
Castle.

Bredon.
The booke of Worcester.

Washborne.

Parcell of shires severed from the rest of the body.

Eovesham.

The booke of Evesham Monastery.
About the yeere 1157.

The Vale of Evesham.

Simon Mont-
fort.

they may be requitable. For, when King Henry the Third had with full hand heaped upon him all the benefits he could, yea and given him his owne sister in marriage, what other fruit reaped he of his so great bounty, but most bitter and deadly hate? For, he raised a most dangerous Warre, hee spoiled shamefully a great part of England, under pretence of restoring the common wealth and maintaining liberty: yet ther left he any thing undone, to bring the King under, to change the State, and of a Monarchy to bring in an Oligarchy. But in the end, after that fortune had for a while favourably smiled upon him, he was slaine at this place with many others of his complices by the prowess of Prince Edward: and forthwith, the sinke of lawlesse rebels, being as it were pumped and emptied out of the common weale, joyfull pain which hee had banished, shone againe most comfortably on every side. Upon the same River hard by, standeth Charleston, the possession sometime of the ancient family of Hanfacres, Knights, but now of the Dingleies, or Dingleies, who being descended from that ancient stocke of the Dingleies in Lancashire, came unto this by hereditary succession. More beneath, in the primitive Church of our English Nation, there was another place wherein religious men lived to God, then called Ficotandryc, now, Flatbury: and neere unto it Persbor, in the English Saxons language Pepponum, taking the name from Peares: which, as we read in that worthy Historiographer William of Malmesbury, Egelward Duke of Dorset, a man bearing no niggardly mind, but extending liberall, founded and finished in King Eadgars time. But what detriment hath it sustained? one part of it, the ambition of the rich seized upon, another part obliuion hath buried; but the greatest portion King Edward the Confessor, and King William the First bestowed on the Church of Westminster.

Then receiveth Avon a Riveret from the North, upon which standeth Baldry a feat of the Winters, out of which were Robert Winter and his brother Thomas, who when as they were of the hellish damned crew in the Gunpowder Treason, for their memory lie damned. From thence Avon running gently downe by Sireham to the habitation of the Russels, Knights by degree, of ancient descent, in the end our late King his owne streame into Severn.

Neere to these places, on this South side, is Oswaldslaw Hundred, so called of Oswald Bishop of Worcester, who obtained it for himselfe of King Eadgar. The immunitie whereof, when William Conquerour made a Survey and taxation of all England, was registred in the Domesday booke, after this manner: The Church of Saint Mary of Worcester hath the Hundred called Oswaldslaw wherein lye 300. Hides, out of which the Bishop of the same Church by ancient order and custome hath all the revenues of tithes and all customes or duties there, appertaining to the Lords vicuall, and the Kings forie and his owne: so that no Sheriffe may hold there any action or suit, neither in any pleas in any other cause whatsoever. This witnesseth the whole County.

A place there is about this Shire, but precisely where it should be, is not certainly knowne, called Augustynes-ace, that is, Augustines Oke, at which Augustine the Apostle of the Englishmen and the Bishops of Britaine met, and after they had disputed and debated the matter hotely for a good while, rouching the celebration of Easter, preaching Gods Word also to the English Nation, and of administering Baptisme according to the rites of the Roman Church, in the end when they could not agree, they departed on both sides with discontented mindes, upon their dissenting opinions.

This Province since the Normans comming in, had for the first Sheriffe, Orso de Abbot, unto whom and his heires, King William the Conquerour granted that office together with faire and large possessions. After him succeeded his sonne Roger, who (as William of Malmesbury the Historiographer reporteth) enjoying his fathers possessions, through the high displeasure and indignation of King Henry the first was seized thereof, because in a furious fit of anger hee had commanded one of the Kings Officers to be killed. But this Sheriffedome was by Emeline this Rogers sister, translated hereditarily into the Family of the Beauchamps. For, he was married to Walter Beauchamp, whom king Stephen, after he had put downe Miles of Gloucester, ordained Constable of England. Within some few yeeres king Stephen created Walleran Earle of Meane twin-brother twin-brother to Robert Bassu Earle of Leicester, the first Earle of Worcester, having given unto him the Citie of Worcester: who afterwards, became a Monke and died at Pratella in Normandie, in the yeere 1166. As for his sonne Robert, who had wedded the daughter of Reginald Earle of Cornwall, and advanced the Standard of rebellion against King Henry the Second, and Peter his sonne, who in the yeere 1203, revolted to the French, neither of them used the title of Worcester, but onely of Meane, so farre as ever I could yet read. For King Henry the Second who succeeded Stephen, would not easily suffer that any under him should enjoy the honors received from Stephen an usurper, and his enemy. For (as I finde in the Annales of Worcester Abbey) he put downe those imaginary and counterfeit Earles, among whom King Stephen had inconsiderately distributed, and given away all the revenewes pertaining to the Exchequer. Neither to my knowledge, was there any one that bare the title of the Earldome of Worcester, untill the daies of King Richard the Second. For he bestowed it upon Sir Thomas Percy, who, when he conspired against King Henry the Fourth, was taken at the battaile of Shrewsbury, and there beheaded. Then Sir Richard Beauchamp descended from the Abbots, received afterward this honor at the hands of King Henry the Fifth. Who shortly after in the French war lost his life at the siege of Meaux in Brye, leaving one onely daughter married to Sir Edward Nevill, from whom descended the late Lords of Abergevenny. Afterward King Henry the Sixth created John Tiptoft, Earle of Worcester: But when he presently taking part with King Edward the Fourth, had applied himselfe in a preposterous obsequiousness to the humor of the said King, and being made Constable of England plained the part, as it were, of the butcher in the cruell execution of diverse men of qualitie, himselfe, when as King Henry the Sixth was now repossessed of the crowne, came to the blocke. Howbeit, his sonne Edward recovered that honor when King Edward recovered his Kingdome: But after that this Edward died without issue, and the inheritance became divided among the sisters of the said John Tiptoft Earle of Worcester, of whom one was married to the Lord Roos, another to Sir Edmund Ingoldesthorpe, and the third to the Lord Dudley; Sir Charles Somerset, base sonne to Henry Duke of Somerset, Lord Herbert, and Lord Chamberlaine to King Henry the Eighth, was by him created Earle of Worcester. After whom succeeded in lineall descent, Henry, William, and Edward who now flourisheth, and among other laudable parts of vertue and Nobility, highly favoureth the studies of good literature.

*
Orig. 1. H. 7.
R. 36.

There are in this Shire Parishes. 152.

STAFFORD.

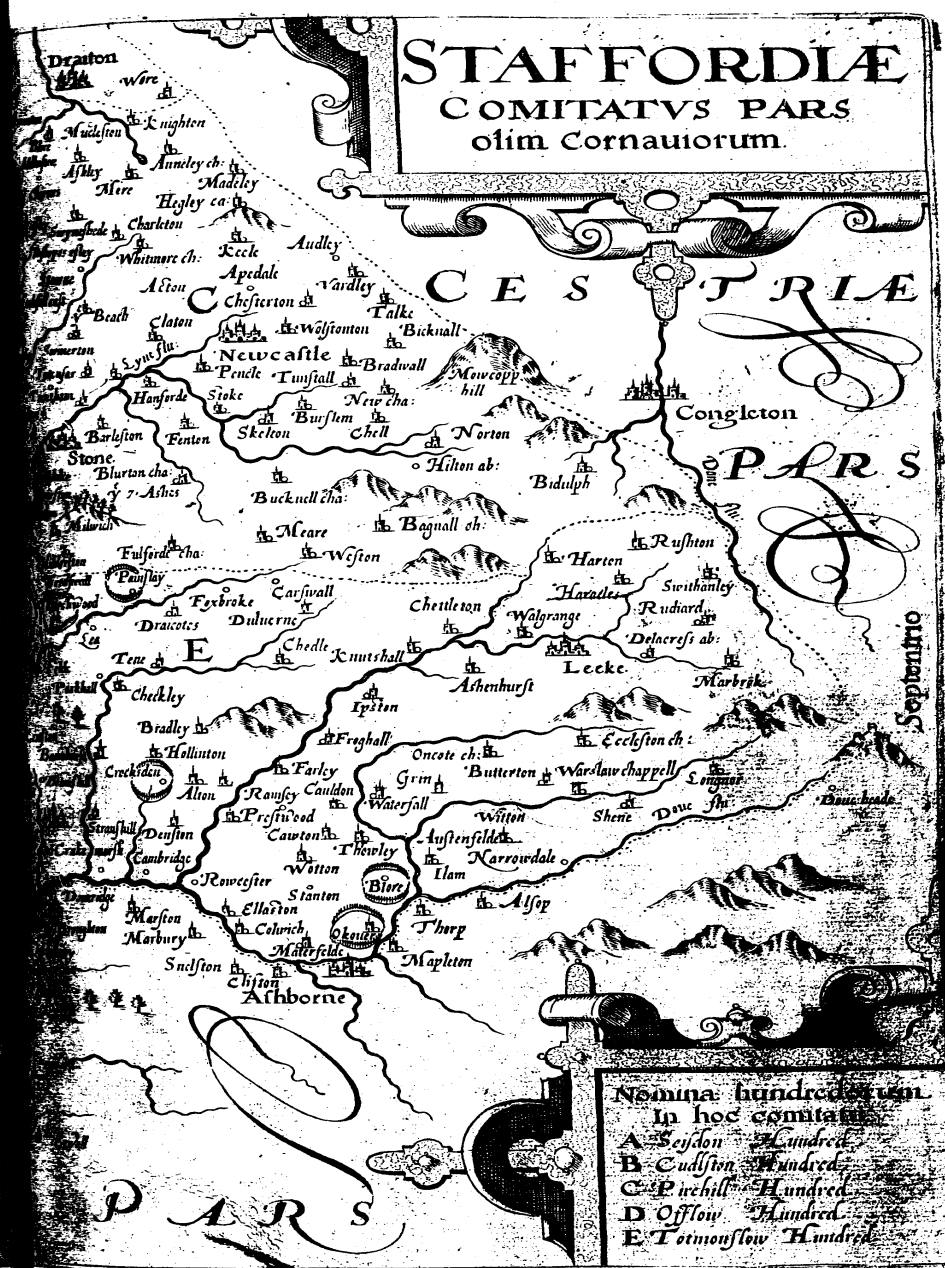

Charleston.

Flatbury.
Persbor.

Oswaldslaw Hundred.

Augustines
oke.
Anno Christi
603.

Earles of Worcester.
Or, D' Abbot.

STAFFORD-SHIRE.

THE third Region of the old CORNAVII, now called STAFFORD-SHIRE, in the English Saxons Language Stafford-ſcepe, the Inhabitants whereof because they dwelt in the middest of England, are in Bede termed Angli Mediterranei, that is, Midland Englishmen, having on the East Warwick-shire, and Darby-shire, on the South side Worcester-shire, and Westward Shropp-shire bordering upon it, reacheth from South to North in forme of a Lozenge, Midland Engliſhmen.

broader in the middest and growing narrower at the ends. The North part is full of Hilles and ſo leſſe fruitfull: the middle being watered with the River Trent is more plentifull, clad with Woods, and embroidered gallantly with Corne fields and medowes: as is the South part likewise, which hath Coles also digged out of the earth and mines of Iron. But whether more for their commodity or hinderance, I leave to the Inhabitants who doe, or ſhall beſt understand it.

Iron.

In the South part in the very confines with Worcester-shire upon the River Stour ſtandeth Stourton Caſtle, ſometimes belonging to the Earles of Warwicke, the name of place of Cardinall Pole; and then Dudley Caſtle towreth up upon an hill built and named ſo of one Dudo, or Dodo an Engliſh Saxon, about the yeere of our Salvation 700. In King William the Conquerours daies, as we finde in his Domeſday Booke, William Fitz-Auſculph poſſeſſed it: afterwards it fell to Noble men ſurnamed Somes; and by an heire generall of them to Sir Richard Sutton knight deſcended from the Suttons of Nottingham-shire: whoſe Poſterity commonly called from that time Lords of Dudley, but ſummoned to Parliament firſt by King Henry the Sixth, grew to a right honourable Family.

Dudley caſtle.

Under this lyeth Penſweth Chace, in former times better ſtored with game; wherein are many Cole-pits, in which, as they reported to mee, there continueth a ſure begunne by a candle long ſince through the negligence of a grover or digger. The ſmoke of this fire, and ſometime the flame is ſcene, but the favour offener ſmell: and other the like places were ſhewed unto mee not farre off. North-Weſt ward upon the Confines of Shropp-shire, I ſaw Pateſhull a ſeat of the Aſſileies deſcended from honourable Progenitours; and Wroteſley an habitation of a Race of Gentlemen ſo ſurnamed, out of which Sir Hugh Wroteſley, for his approved valour, was choſen by King Edward the Third Knight of the Garter, at the firſt institution, and ſo accounted one of the founders of the ſaid honourable Order. Next after this, the memorable places that wee meet with in this Tract, more inwardly, are theſe, Chellington, a faire houſe and Manour of the ancient Family of the Giffards: which in the Raigne of Henry the Second Peter Corbuechin gave to Peter Giffard, upon whom alſo Richard Strongbow, that Conquerour of Ireland, beſtowed in free gift Tachmelin and other Poſſeſſions in Ireland. Theoten hall, which is by interpretation, The habitation of Heathens, or Pagans, at this day Tetnall embued with Daniſh blood in the yeere 911. by King Edward the Elder in a bloody Battaille. Wulfenes Hampton, ſo called of Wulfſuna a moſt godly and devout woman, who enriched the Towne (called before ſimply Hampton) with a religious Houſe: and for Wulfſuna's Hampton it is corruptly called Wulver Hampton: The greateſt name and note whereof, ariſeth by the Church there, annexed to the Warden or Deane and Prebendaries of Windſor. Weadsbury, in theſe dayes Weddsborow fortified in old time, by Eſtbeſſed Lady of the Mercians: and Walſhall a Mercate Towne, none of the meanest. Neere unto which the River Tame carryeth his ſtreame, which riſing not farre off, for certaine miles wandereth through the Eaſt part of this Shire ſeeking after Trent, neere unto Draſton Baſſet, the ſeat of the Baſſets, who ſpringing out

Chellington; Giffards.

Tetnall.

Wolverhampton.

Weddsborow.

Tame River.

Draſton Baſſet.

Ccc

out

Bassetts.

out from Turstan Lord of this place in the Raigne of Henry the First, branched forth into a great and notable Family. For, from hence as from a stocke flourished the Bassetts of Welden, of Wiccomb, of Sapcot, of Cbeddle, and others. But of this of Draison, Ranulph was the last, who being a right renowned Baron had married the sister of John Montfort Duke of Britaine, and in the Raigne of Richard the Second died without issue.

Tamworth.

Then Tame passing through the Bridge at Falkeley (over which an ancient high way of the Romanes went) runneth hard under Tamworth, in the Saxon Tongue Tamaweopd, Marianus calleth it Tamawordia, a Towne so placed in the Confines of the two Shires, that the one part which belonged sometime to the Marmians, is counted of Warwick-shire, the other which pertained to the Hastings, of Stafford-shire. As for the name, it is taken from Tame the River running beside it, and of the English Saxon word Weopoth, which signifieth a Barton, Court, or Ferme-houfe, and also, an Holme or River Island, or any place environed with water: seeing that Keyserweri and Bomelswert in Germanie, betoken as much as Cesars Isle and Bomels Isle. Whiles the Mercians Kingdome stood in state, this was a place of their Kings residence, and as we finde in the Liege Booke of Worcester, a Towne of very great resort and passing well frequented. Afterward, when in the Danes Warre it was much decayed, Edith the Lady of Mercia repaired and brought it againe to the former state: also Edith King Eadgars Sister, who refusing Marriage, for the opinion that went of her holiness was registred in the roll of Saints, founded heere a little house for Nuns and veiled Virgins, which after some yeeres, was translated to Follethorpe by the Marmians of Normandie, Lords heereof; at what time they erected heere a Collegiate Church, wherein are seene some of their Sepulchres, and builded a faire Castle, which from them by the Frevills came to the house of those Ferrars, that descended from a younger brother of the Barons Ferrars of Graby. Those Marmians as wee finde written, were by inheritance the Kings Champions of England. For, whensoever any new king of England is crowned, the heire of this Family was bound to ride armed in compleat harness upon a barbd horse into the Kings hall, and in a set forme of words challenge to combat with whosoever durst oppose himselfe against the kings right and Title. And verily it appeareth upon Records, that Alexander Frevill, under king Edward the Third, by the same service, held this Castle. Howbeit at the Coronation of king Richard the Second, when Baldwin Frevill exhibited his petition for the same, it was adjudged from this Family to Sir John Dimock his competitor, descended also from Marmion, as producing better Records and evidences.

The Kings Champion.

See in Lincoln-shire.

Inquisita. E. 3.

Watling street.

Etocetum.

Wall.

At Falkeley Bridge aforesaid (that I may retire a little) that Romane Highway Watling street, of which I have already spoken and must often speake, enteth into this Shire, and cutting it through (as it were by a freight line) goeth Westward into Shrop-shire. Which Streete I have I assure you thoroughly viewed and perused, to finde out that ETOCETUM which Antonine the Emperour seteth downe for the next station from MANVESSEDUM or Mancceter in Warwick-shire: and surely by good happe I have now found it, and freely confesse that heretofore I was farre wide and quite out of the way. For, just at the same distance that Antonine setteth betwene MANVESSEDUM, and ETOCETUM, I lighted upon the carkasse of an old litle Towne upon the said High way, and scarce a mile Southward from Lichfield, a Bishops See right well knowne. The name of the place at this day is in our common language, Wall, of the Reliques of an old wall there remaining and taking up much about two acres of ground, which they call Castleness, as one would say, The Castle Field. Over against which on the other side of the street the Inhabitants relate by a tradition from their forefathers, that there stood an ancient Towne, destroyed long before the Conquest. And they shew the very place, where by the maine foundation they ghesse the Temple there stood, and with all they produce peeces of money, coined by the Roman Emperours and found there, as most certaine testimonies in this behalfe. But (that which maketh most for the prooffe heereof) from hence leadeth the Romane Way called Watling street, with a faire

a faire, apparent, and continued causey, in manner, throughout, untill it bee broken off with the River Penck, and hath upon it a Stone-bridge at PENNO CRUCIUM, so named of the River, just at the same distance that Antonine setteth downe. Which hath not yet laied away so much as the name, for in steed of PENNO CRUCIUM it is now called Penck-ridge. But at this day it is little better than a Village, famous for an Horse-Faire which the Lord of the place Hugh Blunt, obtained of King Edward the Second. From hence, that way hath nothing memorable upon it in this Shire, but a little way off is Brewood a Mercate Towne, where the Bishops of this Diocesse had an habitation before the Conquest: and then neere unto Weston is a cleere Poole spread very broad, by which that notable way holdeth on a direct course to Oken-Tate in Shrop-shire.

Penck-ridge.

Now are wee to visite the middle part of this Shire which Trent watereth: in the description whereof, I purpose to follow the course and windings of the River, from the very spring and head thereof, as my best guide. Trent that by his due right length to himselfe the third place among all the Rivers of England, runneth out of two Fountaines being neere neighbours together in the North part of this shire among the moores. Certaine unskilfull, and idle headed, have dreamed that it was so named of Trent a French word that signifieth Thirty, and thereupon also have feigned, that thirty Rivers runne into it, and as many kindes of fishes live therein, the names whereof the people dwelling thereby were wont to sing in an English rhyme:

The River Trent.

neither make they doubt to ascribe that unto this Trent, which the Hungarians avouch of their River Tibiscus, namely, that two parts of it are water, and the third fish.

From his spring heads Trent trickleth downe first Southward fetching many a compass, not farre from New Castle under Lime, so called of another more ancient Castle that flourished in times past hard by at Cheesterton under Lime: where I saw tattered and corne the walls of a Castle, which by the gift of King John, belonged first unto Ranulph Earle of Chester, and afterwards by the bounteous favour of King Henry the Third, unto the House of Lancaster. Thence by Trent-ham, sometime Triang-ham, a little Monastery of that holy virgin Saint Werbung of the blood royal, hee hasteneth to Stone a Mercate Towne, which having the beginning in the Saxons time, tooke that name of the Stones, that our Ancestours after a solemn sort had cast on a heape to notifie the place where Wolpher that heathenish King of the Mercians, most cruelly slew his two sonnes Wulfald and Rufin, because they had taken upon them the profession of Christianity.

New Castle under Lyme.

Trentham.

Stone.

In which place when Posterity in memoriall of them had consecrated a little Church, straight wayes there arose and grew up a Towne, which of those stones, had the name Stone given unto it, as the History of Peterborough hath recorded. Beyond Stone runneth Trent mildly by Sandon, the seat in times past of the Staffords, most worthy Knights, but lately by inheritance from them, of Sampson Erdeswicke, a very great lover, and diligent searcher of venerable Antiquity, and in this regard no lesse worthy of remembrance than for that he is directly in the male line descended from Sir Hugh Vernon Baron of Shipbroc, the name being changed, by the use of that age according to sundry habitations, first into Holgrave, and afterwards into Erdeswicke.

Erdeswicke.

Names altered according to divers habitations.

Heere Trent turneth his course aside Eastward, and on the South hath Cankwood, commonly called Cankwood, spread farre and wide, and at length entertaineth the River Sow, which breaketh out in a hard Country neere Healy Castle, built by the Barons of Aldalegh, or Audley, unto whom Hervey Lord Stafford gave that place; like as Theobald Verdon, gave Aldalegh to selfe.

Cankwood.

LL. Audley.

This hath bene a Family of high respect and great honour, and of the same stem out of which the Stanleies Earles of Darby derive their Descent. Strange it is to reade, what lands King Henry the Third confirmed unto Henry Audeley, which were bestowed upon him by the bounty of the Peeres, yea and private Gentlemen, not only in England but also in Ireland, where Hugh Lacy Earle of Ulster gave him lands with build in the yeere of Christ 1148. this most beautifull Church in the honour of the blessed virgin Mary at Saint Ceda, or Chad: and repaired the Castle which now is utterly vanished. As for the towne, it was made first an Incorporation in our Fathers remembrance by King Edward the Sixth, by the name of Bailiffs and Burgeses. It feeth the Pole Artick elevated two and fifty degrees and two and forty minutes: and from the farthest point of the West counteth one and twenty degrees and twenty minutes. This Poole of Lichfield being by and by kept and restrained within banks, and spreading broader the second time, but gathering againe into a channell is quickly swallowed into Trent, who continueth his course Eastward, untill he meeteth with the river of Tame from the South: with whom Trent being now coupled, turneth aside his streame Northward through places that yeeld great store of Alabafter, that he might the sooner entertaine Dow, and so almost insulateth or encompasseth Burton, a Towne in times past of name, by reason of workers in Alabafter, a Castle of the Ferrars built in the Conqueror time; an ancient Abbey founded by Ulfrick Spot Earle of Mercia, and the retyring place of Modwen that holy English woman, who there dedicated her selfe first to the service of God. Concerning which Abbey, the Leger-booke of Abingdon recordeth thus. *A certaine servingant of King Etheldred named Ulfrick Spot, built the Abbey of Burton, and gave unto it the inheritance that came by his Father, esteemed worth seven hundred pounds, and that his donation might stand good and sure, he gave unto King Etheldred three hundred Markus of gold for his confirmation, and to every Bishop five Markus, and beside to Alfrick Archbishop of Canterbury, the Towne Dumbleton. Whereby wee may understand, that there was a golden world then, and that gold swaied much yea in Church matters, and among Church-men. In this abbey, the said Modwen, whose holinesse was much celebrated in this tract, lay buried, and upon her Tombe were engraven for an Epitaph these verses.*

Ortum Modwen a dat Hibernia, Scotia finem.

Anglia dat tumultum, dat Deus astra poli.

Prima dedit vitam, sed mortem terra secunda,

Et terram terra tertia terra dedit:

Auffert Lansfortin quam terra Conallia profert,

Felix Burtonium virginis ossa tenet.

In Ireland Modwen who began, in Scotland rooke her end, England on her a Tombe bestow'd, to Heaven God did her send:
The first of these lands gave her life, the second wrought her death,
And earth to earth in decent sort, the third land did bequeath.
Lansfortin taketh that away, which once Tir-Connell gave,
And Burton blest, whose hap it is this virgines bones to have.

Neere unto Burton, betwixt these three rivers, Dove, Trent and Blith the which watereth and nameth Blithfield a faire house of the ancient and worthy Family of the Bagots; Needwood a very large wood and full of parkes spreadeth it selfe. Whence the Nobility and Gentlemen dwelling thereabout, take their jolly pleasure and sport themselves in hunting. Thus much of the places in the middle part of this shire.

The North part riseth up and swelleth somewhat mountainous, with moores and hilles, but of no great bignesse, which beginning here, runs like as Apennine doth in Italie through the midst of England with a continued ridge, rising more and more with divers tops and cliffs one after another even as far as to Scotland, although sometimes they change their name. For heere they are called Mooreland, and after a while the Peak, Blackstone edge, then Craugh, anon they goe further Stannmore, and at length being parted diversly, as it were into hornes, Cheviot. This Mooreland, so called for that it riseth higher into hils and mountaines, and is withall lesse fruitfull (which kind of places we call in our language Moors) is a small country verily, so hard, so comfortlesse, bare and cold, that it keepeth snow lying upon it a long while in so much as that of the country village named Wotton lying here under Woverhill the neighbor inhabitants have this rime rise in their mouth, as if God, forsooth, had never visited that place.

Alabafter.
Burton upon
Trent.

Who also it named Modwen.

1904.

* Tir Conell.

The River
Blith.
Needwood Forest.

Mooreland.

Wotton under Wover,
Where God came never.

Yet in so hard a soile it breedeth and feedeth beasts of large bulke, and faire spread. The people heere dwelling observe, that when the winde stirreth West, it is alwaies raine: but the East and Southwinde, which in other places brew and broach raine, bring faire weather, unlesse the winde turne from West into the South: and this they ascribe unto the vicinity of the Irish Sea. Out of these Moors most rivers in this shire doe spring, but the chiefe are, Dove, Hanse, Churnes, Teyn, Blith, and Trent himselfe, who receiveth every one of them, and conveierth them all to the Sea. Dow, whose banks are reared out of solid hard lime stone, which they burne and use for compact to manure and enrich their fields with all, doth swiftly runne along the most part of the East side of this Country, and separateth it from Darby-shire, holding on his course in a Cleyish channell without any beds or shelves of mud, through a soile consisting of the said Lime stone: from whence it sucketh out such fertilite, that in the very midst of Winter, the Medowes on both the banks sides carry a most pleasant and fresh greene hew: but if it chance to swell above the banks and overflow the Medowes in Aprill, it battelleth them like another Nilus, and maketh them so fruitfull that the inhabitants use commonly to chant this joyfull note.

In Aprill Doves flood,

Is worth a Kings good.

This river in twelve houres space useth so to rise, that it harrieth and carrieth away with it sheepe and other cattraile, to the great terror of the people dwelling thereby: but within the same time againe it falleth and returnes within his owne banks: whereas Trent being once up and over his banks floweth upon the fields foure or five daies together: but now come we to the rivers that run into it. The first is Hans, which being swallowed up under the ground, breaketh up againe three miles off. Then admitteth he the fellowshipp of the river Churnes, who passeth by De-la-Croix Abby, built by Ranulph the third of that name Earle of Cheshire: by Leike also a well knowne Mercat towne, and by Aulton a Castle in times past belonging to the Barons Verdon (who founded heere the Abbey of Croxden) from whom by the Furnivalls it descended to the Talbots Earles of Shrewsbury. A little below runneth Teyn a small brooke into Dove, which having his head not far from Cheddale the ancient seat of the Bassets, who derive their pedigree from the Bassets of Draiton, creepeth on in such a winding and crooked channell, that within one mile I was faine to passe over it foure times. Neere unto it in Checkley Church-yard, there stand three stones upright erected in maner of a Pyramides, two of them have little images engraven upon them: but that in the midst is highest. The inhabitants report by tradition, that a battaile was fought there betwene two hosts, of which the one was armed, the other unarmed; and that in it were three Bishops slaine, in memoriall of whom these stones were set up. But what Historicall truth indeed lieth heerein enfolded, I know not as yet. As for Blith, it hath in this Mooreland Carewell a Castlet situate upon it which Sir William Carewell built with great ponds having their heads made of square stones, and Draiton, which gave surname to a family of great antiquity in this County.

But Dove after it hath received Tine having a faire bridge made over it of most hard stone, and defended with piles runneth under Utchester, in the Saxons tongue Vvokker-tesp, and Uttens, situate upon the side of an hill with a gentle ascent a towne more rich in gay flowing medowes, and in cattraile, than faire built; which before I saw it (the name was so favourable to my conjecture) I thought, in vain, to have been the ancient Eboraceton. But now, time hath taught me more certainty. After this, when Dove is now come neerer unto Trent, it visiteth Tutbury Castle, in times past a large and stately thing, which also is called Stutesbury, and from an Alabafter hill top on which it stands, threatneth, as it were, the whole country underneath. It was built together with a little Monastery by Henry de Ferrars a Noble man of Normandy, unto whom King William the First had given great lands and renewed in this shire: all which Robert de Ferrars Earle of Darby lost after he had revolted

The River
Dove.

Hans.
Churnes.
De-la-croix.

Aulton.

Teyn.

Checkley.

Utchester.

Tutbury.

volted a second time from King Henry the Third. For, this Robert, when, after many troubles which he had raised in the Barons war, hee was received into the Kings favour, and had bound himselfe with a corporall oth in expresse and formall words that he would continue ever after layall to his liege Lord, yet was the man of such a stirring and restless spirit, that to break and knap in peeces quite that fortune which he could not bend, he put on armes against his Sovereigne, and being at length taken prisoner (that I may use the very words of the Record, according to the forme of his obligation) made this great forfeiture both of his fortunes and dignities. There is in some place of this shire a lake, if Alexander Nesham deceive us not, into which no wilde beast will in any wise enter: but since the place is uncertaine and the thing it selfe more uncertaine, I will onely put downe underneath these his verses, before which he prefixed this Title.

De Lago in Staffordia.

*Rugitu Lacus est eventus praeo futuri,
Cujus aquis fera se credere nulla solet.
Insistit odora canum virtus, mors insidet acerba,
Non tamen intrabit exagitata lacum.*

Of a Lake in Stafford-shire.

A Lake there is that roreth loud, whereby things are fore-showne,
The water whereof once to take wild beasts were never knowne.
Let hounds, let death pursue apace them for to overtake,
For all this chafe and hot pursuite, none enter will the Lake.

Gervase of Tilbury.

Of another Poole or Lake also in this Country thus writeth Gervase of Tilbury in his Olla Imperialis unto the fourth. In the Bishopricks of Coventry and County of Stafford, at the foot of an hill, which the inborne people of the Country have named Mahull, there is a water spread abroad in manner of a Meere, in the territory of a Village which they name Magdalea. In this Meere or Marsh there is a most cleere water (and an infinite number of woods beside joining one unto another) which hath such an effectfull vertue in refreshing of bodies that so often as Hunters have chased Stagges and other Deere untill their Horses be tired, if in the greatest heat of the scorching Sonne they taste of this water, and offer it unto their Horses to drink, they recover their strength of running againe which they had lost, and become so fresh, as one would thinke they had not run at all. But whereabout this is I cannot yet learne by all my diligent Inquiry.

Earles and Barons of Stafford.

As for the title of Stafford, it remaineth ever since Robert de Stafford, whom King William of Normandy enriched with great possessions, even untill our time in his line and progeny. A family as noble and ancient as any other: but upon which forme hath otherwhiles by turnes both frowned and fawned. For, first they were Barons of Stafford, then five of them Earles of Stafford, Ralph created by King Edward the Third, Earle of Stafford, who married the heire of Sir Hugh Audley Earle of Gloucester, Hugh his sonne who died in Pilgrimage at Rhodes and his three sonnes successively, Thomas and William, both issuelesse, and Edmund who married the daughter and heire of Thomas of Woodstock Duke of Buckingham. Afterward three of them were Dukes of Buckingham and Earles of Stafford, &c. as is before shewed. By the attainder of the last of them, those so great inheritances which their most honorable marriages brought unto them, floted away as it were, and scattered heere and there. In lieu whereof hath ensued a more secure quietnesse, which can never cohabite with Greatnesse.

See Dukes of Buckingham.

There are accounted in this Shire Parishes. 130.

SHROP.

SHROPP-SHIRE.

THe fourth Country of those, which, as I said, the CORNAVII in times past inhabited, the English Saxons called Scipyp-ryne and Shpobbe-ryne, wee SHROPP-SHIRE, and the Latinists Comitatus Salopiensis, is farre greater than the rest in quantity, and not inferiour to them either for plenty or pleasure. On the East side it hath Stafford-shire, on the West Montgomery shire, and Denbigh-shire, on the South side Worcester, Hereford, and Radnor-shires, and on the North Cheshire. It is replenished with Townes and Castles standing thicke on every side, by reason that it was a Frontier Country, or (that I may use the tearme of Siculus Flaccus) Ager arcifinius, in regard of repelling and repressing the Welshmen in the Marches bordering heerupon: whereupon our Ancestours by an ancient word, named the Confines of this Shire toward Wales the Marches, for that they were bounds and limits betweene the Welsh and English, and divers Noblemen in this Tract were called Barons of the Marche, and Lords Marchers, who had every one in their Territory a certaine peculiar jurisdiction, and in their owne Courts ministered law unto the Inhabitantes, with sundry priviledges and immunities, and this among other, that Writs out of the Kings Courts, should in certaine cases have no place nor runne among them. Neverthelesse, if any controversie arose about a Lordship it selfe, or the limits of Lordships, they were to resort unto the Kings Courts of justice. These also were in times past named in Latin Records Marchiones de Marchia Wallia, as Marquesses of the Marches of Wales, or Lords Marchers, as appeareth evidently by the Red Booke in the Kings Exchequer, where wee reade, how at the Coronation of Queene Eleonor, Wife to King Henry the Third, Marchiones de Marchia Wallia, &c. that is, The Marquesses of the Marches of Wales, (or Lord Marchers) John Fitz-Alane, Raulph Mortimer, John of Monmouth, and Walter Clifford, in the name of the Marches, said it was the right of the Marches to finde silver speares and to bring them for to support the foure square purple silke cloth at the Coronation of Kings and Queenes of England. But the happy tranquillity of peace betweene Wales and England, and the Kings authority hath by little and little abrogated all those royalties, prerogatives, and priviledges, which the Lords Marchers enjoyed, and insolently exercised over the poore Inhabitantes in the Marches.

The Marchers.
L. Marchers.
Marchiones in old Histories.

Neither yet doe I thinke (I thought good to say so much afore-hand) that all this Country belonged anciently to the CORNAVII, but that part onely which is on this side Severn: as for that on the farther side of Severn, it pertained to the OROVICES, who inhabited heere a great Country in this Tract: a parcell whereof as also some little Territories on this side Severn, which belonged unto the Lords Marchers, were not long since laid to this Shire by authority of the Parliament. For, into these two parts the whole Shire may be finely divided, seeing that the River Severn cutteth it through in the mids from the West to the South-East.

The Canopy.

27. Hen. 8.

In that part beyond Severn, the River Temd, in British Tifidiae, for some space maketh the South limite, into which at length the River Colun, in British Colunwy, and called contractly Clun, issueth it selfe: This River Clun breaking forth farther within the Country, not farre from a prey Towne well frequented, named Bishops Castle, (because it belonged to the Bishops of Hereford whose Diocese and jurisdiction is large in this Shire) giveth name to Clun Castle: which, the Fitz-Alans descended from one Alan the sonne of Flaold a Norman (who were afterwards Earles of Arundell) built, when they were Lords Marchers against the Welshmen, and annoyed them with contrivall inrodes into their Country. But where it meeteth with Temd, among divers doubtfull Fowlds, there mounteth up an Hill of a very ancient memory, which they call Caer Caradoc, because about the yeere of our Salvation

Clun River.

Bishops Castle.

* Coluno castrum.
Clun Castle.

Cat. Caradoc.
King Caratacus.
Tacitus.

variation 53. Caratacus a most noble and renowned British King, raised in the front of it a mighty Wall or Rampire of stone, and with his people resolutely made it good against Ostorius Lieutenant for the Romans and the Legionary Roman Soldiers. Untill the Romans having forcibly broken through that fence of stones so rudely laid, (the remains whereof are to be scene at this day) forced the unarmed Britons, to quit the place, and flie up to the mountaines. Caratacus himselfe notwithstanding escaped by flight, but his wife, daughter, and brethren were taken prisoners: And he afterwards, (as adversity in no place findeth safety) being delivered into the hands of Ostorius by Queen Cartimandua (unto whose protection he had committed himselfe) was carried away to Rome, after he had vexed and wearied the Romans in a long and troublefome warre. Where hee obtained pardon for himselfe and his, of Claudius the Emperour, not by way of any base suppliant intreaty, but by a generous and honourable liberty of speech. For the winning of this hill and taking of this King captive, it was decreed, that Ostorius should have Triumphant Ornaments: neither did the Senate judge the taking of Caratacus lesse honorable, than when Publius Scipio shewed Sipbax, and L. Paulus presented Perfes, two vanquished Kings in triumphant manner at Rome. And although the compiler of our History hath made mention neither of this Warre, nor of this worthy Briton, yet the memory thereof is not quite gone with the common people. For, they confidently give out by tradition, that a King was discomfited and put to flight upon this hill: and in the British Booke entituled Triades, among three of the most renowned Britons for warlike exploits, Caradoc * Vrichfrus is named first; so that, as I thinke, wee should make no doubt, but that he was this very Caratacus. Then Endlow, in British formerly named Dinan, and in later ages Lys-twyfoc, i. The Princes Palace, standeth upon an hill at the meeting of the same Temd with the River Corve, a Towne more faire than ancient. Roger Montgomery first laid unto it a Castle no lesse beautifull, than strong, which hangeth over Corve, and then raised a Wall about the Towne that taketh about a mile in compasse. But when his sonne Robert was attainted, King Henry the First kept it in his owne hands: and afterwards, when it was besieged, it valiantly endured the assaults of King Stephen: and during that streight siege, Henry sonne of the King of Scots, being plucked from his saddle with an iron hooked engine, had like to have bene haled violently within the Towne walls, had not Stephen person rescued him, and with singular valour delivered him from so great a danger. After this, King Henry the Second gave this Castle together with the Vale underneath along Corve, which commonly is called Corvesdale, to Sir Foulque of Dinan. Afterwards it belonged to the Lacies of Ireland, and by a daughter fell to Sir Giffrey de Teneville a Poitevin, or, as some will have it, of the house of Lorain: from whose heires it descended againe by a daughter to the Mortimers, and from thence hereditarily to the Crowne. Then the Inhabitants in proceffe of time, built in the very bofome of the Towne, and on the highest ground a very faire Church, and the onely Church they have. And so it beganne to be of great account and to excell other neighbour Townes adjoining. And although by King Stephen, Simon Montfort, and King Henry the Sixth it suffered much damage in the civill Warres, yet it always flourished againe: and now especially, ever since that King Henry the Eighth ordained the Councell of the Marches, not unlike to those Parliaments in France: the Lord President whereof doth for the most part keepe Courts and Terme here: which a man could hardly have scene at any time without Suites, whether it were for the great state and authoriry that it carryed, or because the Welshmen are so forward and hote to goe to Law. This Councell consisteth of the Lord President, so many Counsellors as it shall please the Prince to appoint, a Secretary, an Attorney, a Solicitor, and the foure Justices of the Counties in Wales.

Somewhat lower, upon the River Temd, is scene Burford, which from Thurricke Saie and his Posterity, came unto Robert Mortimer, and from his posterity likewise unto Sir Geffrey Cornwall, who derived his Descent from Richard Emek Cornwall and King of the Alemans: and his Race even unto these daies hath flourished

See the 43. and 44. page.

* With the strong arme. Ludlow.

Iron hooked engine.

Jeneville.

The Councell in the Marches.

Burford.

Cornwall.

A rished under the name of Barons of Burford (but not in the dignity of Parliamentary Barons) whereas it is holden (as we read in the Inquisition) of the King for so finde five men for the Army of Wales, and by service of a Barony. As for those (that I may note thus much by the way) who held an entire and whole Barony, they were commonly in times past reputed Barons; and as some learned in our common lawes are of opinion, Barons and Barony, like as Earle and Earldome, Duke and Dukedome, King and Kingdome, were Conjugata, that is, Originally yoke-fellows. When Temd now is leaving Shroppshire behinde it, not farre from the bankes thereof, there raise themselves up Northward certaine hills of easie ascent, Cleebill they call them, much commended for yeelding the best Barly in great plenty, neither are they without iron mines: at the descent whereof, in a Village called Cleybury, Hugh Mortimer built a Castle, which King Henry the Second forthwith so raised (because it was a house of sedition) that scarce there remaine any tokens thereof at this day: also hard by standeth Kinlet where the Blunts flourished. Their name in this Tract is very great, so firnamed at first of their yellow haire; the Family noble and ancient, and the branches thereof farre spread. Then saw we on the right hand banke of Severn, Brug Morfe (commonly, but corruptly called Bridg-North), so called of Burg or Burrough, and Morfe, a Forest adjoining, whereas before time it was named simply Burgh. A Towne, fortified with wals, a ditch, a stately Castle, and the Severn, which betweene the Rockes runneth downe with a great fall: seated also upon a Rocke, out of which the waies leading into the upper part of the Towne were wrought out, Abelsfleda Lady of the Mercians first built it, and Robert de Belesme Earle of Shrewsbury walled it: who, trusting to the naturall strength of the place rebelled against King Henry the First, like as afterward Roger Mortimer against King Henry the Second: but both of them with ill successe, for they were both forced to yeeld, and submit themselves, absolutely to the Kings command. At the Siege of this Castle, (as we read in our Annales) King Henry the Second being levelled at with an arrow, had bene shot therewith quite through the body, had not Sir Hubert Syncler a noble and trusty Servitor to the King interposed himselfe, and to save the King received both the arrow and his death wound withall.

D Before time also Sir Ralph de Pitchford bare himselfe so valiantly heere, that King Henry the First gave unto him the little Burgh hard by, To hold by service, for so finde drynd for the great chamber of the Castle of Burgh against the coming of his Sovereigne Lord the King. Willeley or Willey is not farre from hence, the habitation in old time of Sir Warner de Willeley, from whose Posterity by the Harleis and Peshall, it came to the notable Family of Lacon; advanced by marriage long since with the heire of Passelew, and of late by the Possession of Sir I. Blunt of Kinlet.

There be in like manner other Townes and Castles heere and there in this Tract, as Newcastle, Hopton Castle, Shipton, and upon the River Corve, Corvesham, which Walter Clifford had by the gift of King Henry the Second, also Brancroft and Holgot, commonly Hawgate: which belonged sometime to the Manduits, then, to Robert Blunt Bishop of Bath, and afterwards to the Lovells. More higher, are Wenlocke, now knowne for the lime, but in King Richard the Second's time for a mine of Copper there: But much more knowne in the Saxons dayes for a most ancient Nunnery, where Milburga that most holy virgin lived in great devotion, and was entombd: the which Nunnery Earle Roger de Montgomery repaired and replenished with Monkes. In later times Sir Iohn Winell, called also Wenlocke because he heere inhabited, for his faithfull service to King Henry the Sixth, was by him advanced to the state and honor of Baron Wenlocke, and elected knight of the Garter; in whose cause he manfully lost his life in the Battaille of Tewkesbury, leaving no issue: but from his cozin and heire generall the Lovells of this County are lineally descended. A little more West is Alton Burnell, a Castle of the Burnells, and after of the Lovells, made famous by the Court of Parliament there held in the time of King Edward the First. This Family of the Burnells was in old time of great name and antiquity, very much enriched also by that Bishop aforementioned. But it failed and had an end in the Raigne of Inquil. 40. Ed. 3.

Baron and Earl Conju-gata.

Cleebill.

Blunt in the Norman language signifie eth yellow haire of the head.
Bridg-North.

* De Seneca Clara.

Lib. Inquil.

Willeley or Willeley.

Lib. Inquil.

Wenlocke.

William Malmesbury.

Or Wivell.

Lord Wen-locke.

Clau. 17.
Edw. 4.

Alton Burnell.

of Edward the Second, when Mande the heire was married unto John Lovell first, and secondly to John Handlow, whose sonne Nicholas assumed to himselfe the name of Burnell: from whom the Ratcliffes Earles of Suffex and others draw their pedigree. Scarce a mile from hence standeth Langley, seated very flat and low in a Parke full of Woods, the dwelling place of the Leas, which may well challenge to be ranged among the Families that are of the better worth and greater Antiquity in this Isle. Next unto these is Condover, a Manour sometime of the Lovells, but of late, the possession of Thomas Owen, Justice of the Common Pleas and a very great lover of learning. But he hath now taken his quiet sleepe in Christ, and left his sonne Sir Roger Owen, for his manifold learning, a right worthy sonne of so good a father. This is holden of the King, as we read in the Records, In chiefe, to finde two footmen one day in the army of Wales, in time of warre. Which I note heere once for all, to this end, that I may give to understand, that Gentlemen and Noblemen heereabout held their inheritances of the Kings of England by this tenure, to be ready in service, with Souldiers for defence of the Marches, whensoever there should be any warre betweene England and Wales. Neere unto this, there is a little Village named Pichford, that imparted the name in times past to the ancient Family of Pichford: now the Possession of A. Oteley, which our Ancestours (for that they knew not pitch from Bitumen) so called of a fountaine of Bitumen there in a private mans yard; upon which there riseth and swimmeth a kinde of liquid Bitumen daily, skumme it off never so diligently, even as it doth in the Lake Asphaltites in Jewry, in a standing water about Samosata, and a spring by Agrigentum in Sicilie. But whether this bee good against the falling sickness, and have a powerfull property to draw, to close up wounds, &c. as that in Jewry, none that I know as yet have made experiment. More Westward, you may see Pouderbach Castle, now decayed and ruinous, called in times past Pulrebach the son of Sir Raulph Baile a younger sonne of Raulph Baile Lord Wem, from whom the Doulers of Woodball in Hertford-shire are lineally descended. Beneath this, Hockliff Forest, spreadeth a great way among the mountaines: where, at Stipperston, hill there be great heapes of stones, and little rockes as it were, that rise thicke together: the Britans call them Carneddau tewion. But whereas as these seeme naturall I dare not with others so much as conjecture, that these were any of those stones which Giraldus Cambrensis seemeth to note in these words: Harald in person being himselfe the last footman in marching with footmen, and light Armour, and victuals answerable for service in Wales, valiantly went round about and passed through all Wales, so as that he left few or none alive. And for a perpetuall memory of this Victory, you may finde very many stones in Wales erected after the antique manner upon hillocks, in those places wherein had bene Conquerour, having these words engraven.

HIC FUIT VICTOR HARALDUS.

Heere was Harald Conquerour.

More Northward, Caurse Castle standeth, which was the Barony of Sir Peter Corbet; from whom it came to the Barons of Stafford: and Routon Castle neere unto it, the most ancient of all the rest, toward the West borders of the Shire, not farre from Severn, which Castle sometimes belonged to the Corbets, and now to the ancient Family of the Liffers. Before time it was the possession of John le Strange of Knocking, in despite of whom Llewellyn Prince of Wales laid it even with the ground, as we read in the life of Sir Foulque Fitz-Warin. It flourished also in the Romans time under the same name, rearm'd by Antonine the Emperour, RUTUNUM. Neither can we mistake herein, seeing both the name and that distance from URICONIUM a towne full well knowne, which he putteth downe, doe most exactly agree. Neere unto this are Abberbury Castle and Walesbury, which is come from the Corbets to the noble family

A family of the Leightons Knights. As for the name, it seemeth to have taken it from that High Port-way called Waiting street, which went this way into the farthest part of Wales (as Ranulph of Chester writeth) by two little Townes, of that street called Strattons: betweene which in a valley, are yet to be seene the rubbish of an old Castle called Brocards Castle, and the same set amidst greene meadows, that before time were fish-pooles. But these Castles with others which I am scarce able to number and reckon up, for the most part of them are now ruinate not by the fury of warre, but now at length conquered even with secure peace, and proesse of time.

Now crossing over Severne unto that part of the shire on this side the River, which I said did properly belong to the ancient CORN AVII. This againe is divided after a sort into two parts by the river Terne running from the North Southward: so called, for that it issueth out of a very large Poole in Stafford-shire, such as they of the North parts call Tearnes. In the hither part of these twaine, which lyeth East, neere to the place where Terne dischargeth his waters into Severn stood the ancient URICONIUM (for so Antonine the Emperour termeth it) which Ptolomee calleth VIROCONIUM, Alanius, Caer Uraach, the old English Saxons Wpeken-Cear-cep, wee Wrecke and Wroxcetter. This was the chiefe City of the CORN AVII, built as it seemeth by the Romans, what time as they fortified this banke of Severn in this place where the river is full of foulds, as it is not elsewhere lower toward the mouth thereof. But this being sore shaken in the Saxons warre, fell to utter decay in the Danish broiles: and now it is a very small country Towne of poore Husbandmen, and presenteth often times to those that aire the ground, Roman Coines, to testifie in some sort the antiquity thereof. Besides them I saw nothing of antiquity but in one place some few parcels of broken walles (which the common people call The old worke of Wroxcetter) This Wall was built of rough stone distinguished outwardly with seven rowes of British bricke in equal distance, and brought up with arched worke inwardly.

I conjecture, by the uneven ground, by the Rampires and the rubbish of the wall heere and there on either side, that the Castle stood in that very place where these mines remaine. But where the plot of the City lay (and that was of a great compass) the Soile is more blackish than elsewhere, and plentifully yeeldeth the best barley in all this quarter. Beneath this City that Port-way of those Romans, knowne by the name of Waiting street, went, as I have heard say, directly (albeit the ridge thereof now appeareth not) either through a fould, or over a Bridge (the foundations whereof were of late, a little higher, discovered, when they did set a Weare in the River) unto the Strattons, that is to say, Townes upon the Strete, whereof I spake even now. The ancient name of this decayed URICONIUM, sheweth it selfe very apparently in an hill loftily mounting neere thereunto, called Wreken hill (some Writers terme it Gilberts hill) from the top whereof, which lyeth in a plaine pleasant klevel, there is a very delightful prospect into the Country beneath on every side.

This Hill runneth out in length a good space, as it were attired, on the sides, with faire spread trees. But under it, where Severn rolleth downe with his streame, at Bildwas, commonly Bildas, there flourished a faire Abbay, the Sepulture in times past of the noble Family of the Burnells, Patrons thereof. Higher into the Country there is a Mansion or Baiting Towne named Waiting street of the situation upon the foresaid Rode way or streets. And hard by it are seene the Reliques of Castle Dalaley, which after that Richard Earle of Arundell was attainted, King Richard the Second by authority of the Parliament annexed to the Principality of Chester, which hee had then erected.

And not farre from the foote of the foresaid Wreken, in an hollow Valley, by that high street before mentioned, Oken-yate, a little Village well knowne for the plentifulle dese there of pit-cole, lieth so beneath, and just at the same distance as Antonine placeth VSOCONA both from URICONIUM and also from PENNOCRUCIUM: that no man need to doubt, but that this Oken-yate was that USOCONA. Neither doth the name it selfe gainesay it: for, this word Ys, which in the British tongue significth Lowe, may seeme added for to note the low situation thereof. On the other

Ddd side,

Langley.

Condover.

Pichford.

A fountaine of Pitch, or Bitumen.

Pouderbach.

Stipperston, Or Welshmen.

Caurse, Routon.

Rutunium.

Brocards Castle.

Uriconium.

Wroxcetter.

Strattons.

Wreken-hill.

Bildas.

Dalaley.

Usocona, Oken-yate.

Charleton.

Tong.

side, beneath this Hill, appeareth Charleton Castle, in ancient times belonging to the Charletons, Lords of Powis: and more Eastward next of all unto Staffordshire, Tong Castle, called in old time Tong, which the Vernons not long since repaired, as also the College within the Towne, which the Pembridges, as I have read, first founded. Neither have the Inhabitants any thing heere more worth shewing, than a Bell for the bignesse thereof very famous in all those parts adjoining. Hard to this, lieth Albrighton, which in the Raigne of King Edward the First, was the seat of Sir Ralph de Fitzford, but now of the Talbots, branched from the Family of the Earles of Shrewsbury. But above Tong was Lillehal Abbey in a woodland Country, founded by the family of Beurmeis, whose heire was married into the house of De La Zouch. But seeing there is little left but ruines, I will leave it and proceed forward.

Draiton.

1459.

Inq. 2. 10. E. 2.

Beyond the river Terne, on the brinke thereof standeth Draiton, where in the civil warres between the houses of Lancaster and Torke, a field was fought that cost many a Gentleman of Cheeshire his life. For they, although the battaile was given up almost on even hand, when they could not agree among themselves but rooke part with both sides, were slaine by heapes and numbers on either side. Beneath this Draiton, and nere enough to Terne, lieth Hodnet, wherein dwelt sometimes Gentlemen of the same name, from whom hereditarily it is come by the Ludlows unto the Vernons. It was held in times past, of the Honour of Mont-Gomery, by service, to bee Seneſchall or Steward of the same Honour. After this, Terne, having passed hard by certaine little rurall Townes, taketh in unto him the River Radon, and when hee hath gone a few miles further, nere unto Uriconium, of which I spake even now, falleth into the Severn. Upon this Radon, whiles hee is but new come from his spring head, standeth Wem, where are to be seene the tokens of a Castle long since begun there to be built.

Wem.

This was the Barony, after the first entry of the Normans, of William Pantulph, from whose Posterity it came at length to the Builers, and from them by the Forers of Ousley, and the Barons of Grey-Hock, unto the Barons D'acre of Gillesland. Within a little of this, upon an high hill well wooded, or upon acliffe rather which sometime was called Radcliffe, stood a Castle mounted aloft, called of the reddish stone Red-Castle, and in the Normans language Castle Roux, the seat in old time of the Andeles, through the liberall bounty of Lady Mande Le Strange. But now there maineth no more but desolate walles, which yet make a faire shew. Scarce a mile from hence lyeth all along the dead carcasſe, as it were, of a small City now well nere consumed. But the peeces of Romane money, and those bricke which the Romans used in building there found, doe testifie the antiquity, and founders thereof. The neighbour Inhabitants use to call it Bery, as one would say Burgh, and they report that it was a most famous place in King Arthurs daies, as the common sort ascribe whatsoever is ancient and strange to King Arthurs glory.

Morton Corbet.

Then, upon the same River Morton Corbet, anciently an house of the Family of Turris, afterward a Castle of the Corbets, sheweth it selfe, where within our remembrance, Robert Corbet, carryed away with the affectionate delight of Architecture, began to build in a barraine place a most gorgeous and stately house, after the Italians modell: But death prevented him, so that he left the new worke unfinished and the old Castle defaced. These Corbets are of ancient Nobility in this Shire, and held Lordships by service, of Roger Montgomery Earle of this County, about the coming in of the Normans, for Roger the son of Corbet held Haclebec, Hundeſtit, Alton, Emleg, &c. Robert, the sonne of Corbet, held land in Uleſtanton, Reſlingſhop, Branton, and Udeſcot. And in later ages this family farre and fairly propagated received encrease both of renews and great alliance by the marriage of an heire of Hopton. More Southward standeth Arcoſ the habitation of the Newports knights of great worth, descended from the Barons Grey of Codnor, and the Lords of Atothway, and nere unto it is Hagmond Abbey, which the Lords Fitz-Alanes if they did not found, yet they most especially endowed.

Corbet, a forname.

Not much lower upon Severn standeth most pleasantly the famous City (for so it was called in Domesday booke) of this Shire (risen by the ruine of Old Uriconium) which which wee at this day call Shrewsbury and Shrowsbury, having mollified the name, whereas our Ancestours called it Scrobber-byrig, for that it was anciently a very thicket of shrobs upon an hill. In which sense both the Greekes tearmed their Bessa, and our Welsh Britans named this also Pengwerne, that is, The high plot planted with Alders, and a Palace so named continued heere a long time. But whence it is that it is called now in the British tongue Tmwithig, and by the Normans Shropesbery, Sloppesbery, and Salop, and in the Latin tongue Salopia, I am altogether ignorant, unless it should bee the ancient name Scobbes-beng diversely distorted and dis-jointed. Yet some skilfull in the British tongue, thinke verily it is called Tmwithig, as one would say, Placencia or Plaisance, of a British word Mewitban, and that their Poets the Bards so named it, because of all others, it best pleased the Princes of Wales in times past. It is seated upon an Hill of a reddish earth, and Severn, having two very faire Bridges upon it, gathering himselfe in manner round in forme of a circle, to compasseth it, that were it not for a small banke of firme land, it might goe for an Island. And thence it is that Leland the Antiquarian Poet wrote thus:

*Edita Penguerni laud ſaſſigia ſplendent,
Urbs ſua lunato veluti mediannis in orbe,
Colle iunct modico, duplici quaque ponte ſuperbit,
Accipiens patriâ ſibi linguâ nomen ab alniis.*

The buildings high of Shrewsbury doe shine both farre and nere,
A Towne within a River ſet, an Island as it were,
Mounted upon a prety hill, and Bridges hath it twaine,
The name it tooke of Alder trees in British tongue they ſayne.

Neither is it strengthened onely by nature, but fortified also by art: for Roger of Montgomery, unto whom by the Conquerors gift it was allotted, pulling downe 50. houses or thereabout, built a strong stately Castle on the North side upon a rising rocke, and Robert his son when hee revolted from King Henry the First, walled it about, on that side where it was not sensed with the River, which notwithstanding never, that I know of, suffered assault or hostility but once in the Barons Warre against King John. At the first entring of the Normans it was a City well inhabited and of good trade. For, as we read in Domesday booke, in King Edward the Confessors time it paid Gilt according to an hundred Hides: In the Conquerours time, it paid yearly seven pounds and sixteene shillings de Gable: They were reckoned to bee two hundred and fifty two Citizens: whereof twelve were bound to watch about the Kings of England when they lay at this City, and as many to accompany them when they went forth on hunting. Which I would verily thinke to have beene ordained, because not many yeeres before Edrice Streona Duke of the Mercians, a man notoriously disteined with wickedness, lay in wait heere for Prince Aſhelm, and slew him as he rode on hunting. At which time (as that Booke sheweth) the custome was in this City, That a woman taking, howsoever it were, a husband, if she were a widow, gave unto the King twenty shillings; if a maid, tenne, in what manner soever she tooke a man. But to returne unto our matter, the said Earle Roger not onely fortified it, but also adorned it with other buildings both publique and private, yea and founded a very goodly Abbey to the honour of Saint Peter and Saint Paul, unto which he granted many Possessions, and therewith, Saint Gregorius Church, And namely in that tenour, (I exemplifie the words out of the private History of the said Abbey) That when the Chanons who held Prebends therein should any of them die, the said Prebends should come unto the Demaine and Possession of the Monkes. Whereupon arose no small controversie: For, the sonnes of the said Chanons sued the Monkes at Law, that they might succeed in their fathers Prebends. For, at that time, the Chanons and Priests in England were married, and it grew to be a custome, that Ecclesiasticall livings should descend by inheritance to the next of the blood. But this controversie was decided under King Henry the First, and concluded

D d d 2

Prebends passing hereditarily.

concluded it was, that the heire should not succeed in Ecclesiasticall Livings; yea and about that time lawes were enacted touching the single life of Priests. Some after in proceſſe of time, other Churches alſo were heere erected. For, to ſay nothing of the houſes or Frieries of Dominicans, Franciscans, and Auguſtine Friars, which the Charletons, Jemvils, and Staffords founded, there were two Collegiat Churches erected, Saint Chadds with a Deane and ten Prebendaries, and Saint Maries with a Deane likewiſe and nine Prebendaries. And even at this day, a faire and goodly City it is, well frequented and traded, full of good merchandiſe, and by reaſon of the Citizens painfull diligence, with cloth making and traffique with Welſhmen, rich and wealthy. For, hither, almoſt all the commodities of Wales, doe conflow as it were to a common Mart of both Nations. Whereupon it is inhabited both with Welſh and Engliſh ſpeaking both languages: who among other things deſerve ſpeciall commendation for this, in that they have ſet up a Schoole for the training up of children, wherein were more Schollers in number, when I firſt ſaw it, than in any one Schoole throughout all England againe: unto which Thomas Aſton the firſt head Schoolmaſter a right good man procured by his meanes a very honeſt Salarie and Stipend for the Teachers. It ſhall not now I hope bee impertinent to note, that when diſſerve of the Nobility conſpired againſt King Henry the Fourth with a purpoſe to advance Edmund Mortimer Earle of March to the Crowne, as the undoubted full and right heire, whoſe father King Richard the Second had alſo declared heire apparent: and Sir Henry Percy called Hotſpurre then addreſſed himſelfe to give the aſſault to Shrewsbury: upon a ſuddaine all their deſignes were daſhed, as it were, from above. For the King with ſpeedy marches was upon his backe before hee imagined. To whom yet the young Hotſpurre with courageous reſolution gave battle, and after a long and doubtfull fight, wherein the Scotiſhmen, which followed him, ſhewed much manly valour, (when the Earle of Worceſter his Uncle, and the Earle of Dunbar were taken) hee deſpairing of Victory ran undaunted upon his owne death amidſt the thickeſt of his enemies. Of this battle the place is called Battle-field. Where the King after Victory erected a Chappell and one or two Priests, to pray for their ſoules, who were there ſlaine. As for the poſition of this Shrewsbury, it is from the Iſlands Azores twenty Degrees, and ſeven and thirty minutes diſtant in Longitude, and from the Aequinoctiall Line two and fifty Degrees and three and fifty minutes in Latitude.

From out of this city I wot not whether it may be thought worth my labour, or pertinent to my purpoſe to relate ſo much) brake forth the laſt time, namely in the yeere of our Salvation 1551. that diſmall diſeaſe, The Engliſh Sweat, which preſently diſperſed over the whole Realme, made great mortality of people eſpecially thoſe of middle age: for, as many as were taken ſuddenly with this Sweat, within one foure and twenty houres either dyed or recovered. But a preſent remedy was found, namely that ſuch as in the day time fell into it, ſhould preſently in their clothes as they were gone to bed, if by night and in bed, ſhould there reſt, lye ſtill and not ſtirre from thence for foure and twenty houres: provided alwayes, that they ſhould not ſleepe the while but by all meanes bee kept waking. Whereof this diſeaſe firſt aroſe, the learned of Phyſicians know not for certaine. Some ſtrangers aſcribe it to the ground in England, ſtanding ſo much upon plaſtre (and yet it is but in few places of that nature.) In certaine moſt Conſtitutions of weather (ſay they) it happeneth that vapours ariſe out of that kinde of Soile, which although they bee moſt ſubtile, yet they are corrupt, which cauſe likewiſe a ſubtile contagion, and the ſame is proportionate either unto the ſpirits or to the thinn froth that floateth upon the bloud. But whatſoever the cauſe is, no doubt there is an Analogie betwene it and the ſubtile parts of bloud: by reaſon whereof within one day the Patient either mends or ends. As for the cauſe let others ſearch: for mine owne part, I have obſerved that this malady hath runne through England thrice in the age aforegoing; and yet I doubt not, but long before alſo, it did the like (although it were not recorded in writing:) firſt, in the yeere of our Lord 1485. in which King Henry the Seventh began his Raigne, a little after a great

*
Bataille of Shrewsbury.
1463.

Battlefield.

The Britiſh
ſweat, or ſweating ſickeſſe.

Hieronymus Fracaſtorius.

A conjunction of the ſuperior Planets in Scorpio. A ſecond time yet more mildly, although the plague accompanied it, in the thirtie three yeere after, anno 1518. upon a great oppoſition of the ſame Planets in Scorpio and Taurus, at which time it plagued the Netherlands and high Almaine alſo. Laſt of all, three and thirtie yeeres after that, in that yeere 1551. when another conjunction of thoſe Planets in Scorpio tooke their effects. But perhaps I have inſiſted too long herein; for, theſe may ſeeme vaine toies to ſuch as attribute nothing at all to celeſtiall influence, and learned experience.

Neere unto this Citie, Severne fetcheth many a compaſſe, turning and winding in and out, but ſpecially at Roffall, where hee maketh ſuch a curving reach that hee commeth well neere round and meeteth with himſelfe. Heere about is that moſt ancient kinde of boat in very great uſe which in the old time they called in Latine Rates commonly, to wit, Flotes, certaine peeces of timber joyned together with rough planks and rafters running overthwart, which ſerve to convey burdens downe the River with the ſtream: the uſe and name whereof our countymen have brought from Rhene in Germanie, and tearme them as the Germans doe Flotes. By the River ſide, ſtand Shrawerden, a Caſtle ſometime of the Earles of Arundell, but afterwards, belonging to Sir Thomas Bromley, late Lord Chancellor of England; Knocking Caſtle, built by the Lords Le Strange, from whom it deſcended hereditarily unto the Stanleys Earles of Darbie; and neere unto it Neſſe, over which there mounteth up a right a craggie cliffe, with a cave much talked of: which together with Cheswarden, King Henry the Second gave unto John Le Strange; from whom by divers branches are ſprung the moſt Honorable families of the Stranges de Knocking, Avindalegh, Elleſmere, Blackmere, Lutheham and Hunſtanſton in Norſolke. Now from thoſe of Knocking, when as the laſt died without any iſſue male, the inheritance deſcended by Joan a ſole daughter, and the wife of George Stanley, unto the houſe of Darby. Farther from the River, even upon the Weſt frontier of the ſhire, lieth Oſweſtre, or Oſwaldſtre, in Britiſh Croix Oſwalds, a little Towne enclosed with a ditch and a wall, fortified alſo with a pretie Caſtle: and in it there is great trafficke, eſpecially of Welſh Cottons of a ſlight and thin webbe, which you may call in Latine Levidenſis, whereof there is bought and ſold heere every weeke great ſtore. It hath the name of Oſwald King of the Northumbers (whereas before time it was called Maſerfeld) whom Penda the Pagan Prince of the Mercians both ſlew heere in a bloody battle, and after he had ſlaine him, with monſtrous cruelty tare in peeces. Whence a Chriſtian Poet of good antiquity verified thus of him.

*Cujus & abſciſſum caput, abſciſſoque lacertos,
Et tribus affixos palis pendere cruentus
Penda jubet: per quod reliquis exempla relinquat
Terroris manifeſta ſui, regemque beatum
Eſſe probet miſerum: ſed cauſam fallit utramque.
Ullor enim fratris minime timet Oſwius illum;
Imò timere facit: nec Rex miſer, imò beatus Eſt, qui ſonte boni fruſtur ſemel & ſine fine.*

Whoſe head and limbs diſmembred thus, that bloody Penda takes,
And cauſeth to be hanged up, faſt fixed on three ſtokes:
His meaning was hereby to ſtrike a terror to the reſt,
And make him ſeeme a wretched wight, who was a King much bleſt.
But this his purpoſe fail's in both. Oſwy, his brother deare,
In his revenge was not afraid, but rather makes him feare:
Nor miſerable is this Prince, but happy we may ſay,
Who now enjoy's the ſpring of good, and ſhall enioy for aye.

This Towne ſeemeth to have had the firſt originall from devotion and religion:
D d d 3 for,

Flotes.

Shrawerden.
Knocking.

Neſſe.

Barons Le
Strange.

20. Ed. 4.

Oſweſtre.

Welſh Cottons.

642.

Oſwald ſlaine.

See in North-hamberland.Eclipses in Aries.

Whittington.

The life of Fulke, written in French.Barons Fitz-warin.Latimer what it signifieth.White-Church.
Album Monasterium.

for, the Christians of that age, counted it a most holy place; and Bede hath recorded that here where Oswald was slain, strange miracles have been wrought. But Malin brother of Mereduc (as Caradoc of Lancarvan writeth) built it, and the Norman Fitz-Allans, who were Lords afterwards thereof, and Earles of Arundell, walled it about. The Eclipses of the sunne in Aries have been most dangerous unto it: for, in the yeeres of our Lord 1542. and 1567. when the Eclipses of the sunne in Aries wrought their effects, it suffered very grievous losse by fire. And namely after this last Eclipse, the fire spread it selfe so far, that there were burnt within the Towne and suburbs about two hundred houses. A little beneath this Northwestward there is an hill entrenched round about with a threefold ditch (they call it Hen-Dinas, that is, The old palace) The neighbour dwellers say confidently, it hath been a Citie: but other there be that thinke it was the Camp of Penda, or Oswald. Scarce three miles from hence standeth Whittington, a Castle not long agoe of the Fitz-Guarins, who deduced their pedigree from Sir Guarin de Metz, a Lorraine: but he tooke to wife the daughter and heire of William Peverell, who is reported to have built Whittington, and begat Fulke the Father of that most renowned Sir Fulke Fitz-Warin, of whose dolefull deedes and variable adventures in the warres our Ancestours spake great wonders, and Poems were composed. In the reigne of Henry the Third, I finde that hunc was granted unto Foulk Fitz-Warin to strengthen the Castle of Whittington, in compens manner, as appeareth out of the Close rolles in the fifth of King Henry the Third. The dignity of these Barons Fitz-Warins, had an end in an heire Female, and in the age aforegoing passed by Hansford unto the Bourchiers now Earles of Bath. Beneath this Whittington, one Wrenoc sonne of Mewric held lands, who for his service ought to be Latimer, that is, Truchman or Interpreter, betwene the English and the Welshmen. This note I out of an old Inquisition, that men may understand what the said name Latimer importeth: which no man almost knew heretofore, and yet it hath been a surname very currant and rife in this kingdome. At the North-west border of this shire, there offer themselves to be scene, first Shenton the seat of the respective familie of the Needhams, Blackmere an ancient Manour of the Lords Le Strange, and then Whitchurch, or Album Monasterium, where I saw some Monuments of the Talbots, but principally of that renowned English Achilles Sir John Talbot the first Earle of Shrewsbury out of this house: whose Epitaph, that the reader may see the forme of the Incriptions, according to that age, I will here put downe, although it is little befeeming so worthy and heroicall a Knight.

ORATE PRO ANIMA PRÆNOBILIS DOMINI, DOMINI JOANNIS TALBOTT QVONDAM COMITIS SALOPIÆ, DOMINI TALBOTT, DOMINI FURNIVALL, DOMINI VERDON, DOMINI STRANGE DE BLACK-MERE, ET MARESCALLI FRANCIE, QUI OBIIT IN BELLO APUD BURDEWVS. VII. IULII, M. CCCC. LIII.

That is:

Pray for the Soule of the right Noble Lord, Sir John Talbot, sometimes Earle of Shrewsbury, Lord Talbot, Lord Furnivall, Lord Verdon, Lord Strange de Black-Mere, and Marescall of France: Who died in the battaile at Burdews. VII. IULII, M. CCCC. LIII.

Unto this Familie of the Talbots there accrued by marriage-right the inheritance of the Barons Le Strange of Blackmere, who were furnamed Le Strange commonly, and Extranei in Latine records, for that they were strangers brought hether by King Hen-ric the Second, and in short time their house was far propagated. These of Blackmere were much enriched by an heire of W. de Albo-monasterio, or this Whit-Churh, and also by one of the heires of John Lord Giffard of Brimsfield, of ancient Nobility in Glocester-shire, by the onely daughter of Walter Lord Clifford.

More Westward lieth Ellesmer a little territorie, but rich and fruitfull, which, as the Chronologie of Chester testifieth, King John gave with the Castle, to Llewellyn Prince of North-Wales in marriage, with Joane his base daughter. Afterwards in the time of King Henry the Third it came to the Familie of the Stranges. But now it hath his Baron Sir Thomas Egerton, a man whom for his singular wisdom and sincere equity Queene Elizabeth chose to be Lord Keeper of the great Seale, and King James making him Lord Chancellour advanced to the highest Honour of the long roabe, and withall adorned with the Honorable title of Baron of Ellesmer.

Now let us briefly adde somewhat of the Earles of Shrewsbury: Roger de Belesme, otherwise, Montgomery, was created the first Earle of Shrewsbury by King William the Conquerour, unto whom he allotted also the greatest part of this Shire. After him succeeded first, his eldest sonne Hugh, slain in Wales without issue. Then Robert another of his sonnes, a man outrageously cruell toward his owne sonnes and hostages, whose eyes with his owne hands he plucked out and gelded. But afterwards being convict of high Treason, he was kept in perpetuall prison by King Henry the first, and so suffered condigne punishment for his notorious wickednesse. Then was his Earldome made over unto Queene Adeliza for her dowry. Many ages after, King Henry the Sixth in the 20. yeere of his reigne, promoted to this honour John Lord Talbot, whom both Nature bred, and his disposition inured unto warlike prowesse. And in the 24. yeere of his reigne he bestowed moreover upon the same John, whom in the Parent he calleth Earle of Shrewsbury, and of Welsford, the title of Earle of Waterford, the Barony of Dongarvan, and the Seneschalshie or Stewardship of Ireland. But when he was slain at Castillon upon Dordon neere Burdeaux together with his younger sonne Sir John Talbot Vicount L'isle, after he had foure and twenty yeeres together marched with victorious armes over a great part of France; his sonne John by the daughter and one of the heires of Sir Thomas Nevill Lord Furnivall, succeeded: who siding with the house of Lancaster was slain fighting valorously in the forefront of the battaile of Northampton. From him by a daughter of the Earle of Ormond came John the third Earle of Shrewsbury, and Sir Gilbert Talbot Captaine of Callis, from whom the Talbots of Grafton descended. This third John had by his wife Katherine daughter to H. Duke of Buckingham, George the fourth Earle, who served King Henry the Seventh valiantly and constantly at the battaile of Stoke. And he by Anne his wife, daughter of William Lord Hastings, had Francis the fifth Earle who begat of Mary daughter to Thomas Lord Dacre of Gillesland George the sixth Earle, aman of approved fidelity in weighty affaires of State, whose sonne Gilbert by his wife Gertrud daughter to Thomas Earle of Rutland, the seventh Earle maintaineth at this day his place left unto him by his ancestours, with right great honour and commendation for his vertues.

Ellesmer;
1205.Baron of Ellesmer.Earles of Shrewsbury.H. Huntingdon in his booke of the miseries of life.

See in Ireland.

In this region there are Parishes much about 170.

CHES.

CHESHIRE.

THE fifth and last of those Countries, which in old time the CORNAVII held, is the County of CHESTER; in the Saxons Tongue Ceoru-ryce, commonly CHESHIRE, and The County Palatine of Chester, (for that the Earles thereof had Royalties and princely Priviledges belonging to them; and all the Inhabitants owed Allegiance and fealty to them, as they did to the King.) As for this tearme Palatine, that I may rehearse againe, that which I have said before of this name, was in times past common to all those, who bare any Office in the Kings Court or Palace: and in that age Comes Palatinus, was a Title of Dignity conferred upon him who before was Palatinus, with authority to heare and determine Causes in his owne Territory: and as well his Nobles, whom they called Barons, as his Vassals were bound to repaire to the Palace of the said Count, both to give him adviſe and also to give their attendance, and furnish his Court with their presence.

County Palatine.

Petr. Pithemus in the description of Campaine.

This Country (as William of Malmesbury saith) Is scarce of Corne, but especially of Wheat, yet plentifull in Cattails and fish. Howbeit Ranulph the Monke of Chester, affirmeth the contrary: Whasoeuer Malmesbury dreamd (saith hee) upon the relation of others, it aboundeth with all kinde of victuals, plenteous in Corne, flesh, fish, and salmons especially, of the very best: it maintaineth trade with many commodities, and maketh good returns. For why, in the Confines thereof it hath salt pits, mines, and metals. And this moreover will I adde: the grasse and fodder there, is of that goodnesse and vertue, that cheefes bee made heere in great number of a most pleasing and delicate taste, such as all England againe affordeth not the like; no, though the best dayriwomen otherwise and skilfullest in cheefe making be had from hence. And whiles I am writing this, I cannot chuse but mervaille by the way at that which Strabo writeth, That in his time some Britans could not skill of making Cheefe: and that Plinie afterwards wondered: That barbarous Nations, who lived of milke, either knew not or despised, for so many ages, the commodity of Cheefe, who otherwise had the seas of crudding into a pleasant tartnesse, and so fat butyr. Whereby it may be gathered, that the devise of making Cheefe came into Britaine from the Romans. But howsoever this Region in fertility of soile commeth behinde many Countries in England, yet hath it alwaies bred and reared more Gentry than the rest: For, you have not in all England againe any one Province beside, that in old time either brought more valorous Gentlemen into the field, or had more Families in it of Knights degree. On the Southside it is hemmed in with Shropp shire, on the Eastside with Stafford shire and Darby shire, on the North

Joh. Tillius.

The most commendable Cheefes.

with Lancashire, and on the West, with Denbigh and Flint-shires: Toward the North-West it runneth farre into the sea with a long cantele* or Promontory, which being enclosed within two Creekes receiveth the Ocean on both sides entering into the land: into which two Creekes also all the Rivers of this Shire doe discharge themselves. Into that Creeke which is more Westerne passeth the River Dee that divideth the country from Denbigh-shire: into that on the Eastside, both Weaver, which runneth through the mids of the Shire, and Mersy also, that parteth it from Lancashire, issue themselves. Neither see I any better way of describing this County, than if I follow the very tracts of these Rivers. For, all the places of greatest note, are situate by the sides of them. But before I enter into any particular description, I will first propose out of Lucian the Monke, thus much in commendation of Cheshire: for he is a rare Author and lived a little after the Conquest. If any man be desirous (saith hee) either fully, or as neere as may bee, to treat of the Inhabitants, according to the disposition of their manners, in respect of others that live in sundry places of the Realme. They are found to be partly different from the rest of English, partly better, and partly equall unto them.

* Witrall.

Lucian the Monke, of the praise of Cheshire.

But

But they seeme especially (the best point to be considered in general trial of manners) in feasting freindly, at meat cheerefull, in giving entertainment liberall, soone angry, but not much, and as soone pacified, lavish in words, impatient of servitude, mercifull to the afflicted, compassionate toward the poore, kinde to their kinsred, spare of their labour, void of dissimulation and doublenesse of heart, nothing greedy in eating, farre from dangerous practices, yet by a certaine licentious liberty, bold in borrowing many times other mens goods. They abound in Woods and pastures, they are rich in flesh and Cattail, confining on one side upon the Welsh Britans, and by a long intercourse and transfusion of their manners, in the most part like unto them. This also is to be considered, in what sort the Countrey of Chester enclosed upon one side with the limite of the Wood Lime, by a certaine distinct privilege from all other Englishmen is free, and by the Indulgences of Kings and Excellencies of Earles hath bene wont in Assemblies of the people to attend upon the Earles sword rather than the Kings Crowne: and within their precinct to heare, and determine the greatest matters with more liberty. Chester it selfe is a place of recett for the Irish, a neighbour to the Welsh, and plentifully served with Corne by the English: Finely seated, with Gates anciently built, approved in hard and dangerous difficulties. In regard of the River and prospect of the eye together, worthy according to the name to be called a City: garded with watch of holy and religious men, and, through the mercy of our Saviour, alwaies fenced and fortified with the mercifull assistance of the Almighty.

The River * Dee, called in Latin Deva, in British Dyffyr-dwy, that is, the water of Dwy, breeding very great plenty of Salmon, ariseth out of two fountaines in Wales; and thereof men thinke it tooke the name: for Dwy in their tongue significth Two. Yet others, observing also the signification of the word, interpret it Black-water, others againe, Gods water, or Divine water. But although Aufonius noteth that a Spring hallowed to the Gods was named Divovna in the ancient Gaules tongue (which was all one with the British) and in old time all Rivers were reputed, Dei nomine, that is, Descending from Heaven, yea and our Britans yeilded divine honour unto Rivers, as Gildas writeth, yet I see not why they should attribute Divinity to this River Dwy above all others. The Theffalians, as we reade, gave to the River Panens divine honour, for the pleasantnesse thereof; the Scythians to Danubius for the largenesse; the Germans to Rhene because it was counted a judge in the question of true and unfilded wedlocke: But wherefore they should impose a divine name upon this River I see no reason. I said before, unlesse peradventure, because now and then it changed the Chanell, and thereby forshewed a sure token of Victory to the Inhabitants upon it, when they were in hostility one with another, according as it inclined more to this side or to that, after it had left the Chanell: for, thus hath Giraldus Cambrensis recorded, who in some sort beleeveth it: Or else, because they observed that contrary to the wonted manner of other Rivers, upon the fall of much raine it arose but little, and sooden as the South winde beatech long upon it, it swelleth and extraordinarily overfloweth the grounds adjoining. Peradventure also the Christian Britans thought the water of this River to be holy: For, it is written, that when they stood ready to joyne battaile with the English Saxons and had kissed the earth, they dranke also very devoutly of this River, in memoriall of Christs most sacred and pretious blood. But, Dee which seemeth to rush rather than to run out of Wales, no sooner is entered into Cheshire but he passeth more mildly with a slower streame by BONIUM, in some written copies of Antonine, BONIUM, a City that had been of great name in that age, and afterward a famous Monastery. Of the Chore or quire whereof, it was called by the Britans Bon-chor and Bancher, of the ancient English Bancopna-byrige, and Bancher, and among many good and godly men, it fostered and brought up (as some write) that most wicked Arch-heretick Pelagius, who injuriously derogating from the grace of God, troubled a long time the West Church with his pestiferous Doctrine. Prosser Aquitanus in this Verse of his, termeth him the British Adder, or Land-snake.

Pelissiro vomuit coluber serpens Britannus.

A British Snake, with venomous tongue,
Hath vomited his poison strong.

Neither

Neither have I made mention of him for any other reason, but because it is behoveable to each one to know vices and venims. In this Monastery, as saith Bede, There was such a number of Monkes that being divided into seven portions, which had every of them a severall head and Ruler over them, yet every one of these had no fewer than three hundred men who were wont to live all of their handy labour. Of whom Edilfred King of the Nordan-humbers slew 12. hundred, because they had implored in their prayers Christs assistance for the Christian Britans against the English-Saxons, then infidels. The profession of this Monasticall life (that I may digresse a little) began, when Pagan Tyrans enraged against Christians pursued them with bloody persecutions. For then good devout men, that they might serve God in more safety and security, withdrew themselves into the vast Wilderneses of Egypt, and not (as the Painims are wont with open mouth to give it out) for to enwrap themselves willingly in more miseries because they would not be in misery.

Where they scattered themselves among Mountaines and Deserts, living in caves and little cells heere and there in holy meditations. At first solitary and alone, whereupon in Greeke they were called Monachi, that is, Monkes: but after they thought it better (as the sociable nature of mankind required) to meete together at certaine times to serve God, and at length they beganne to cohabite and live together for mutuall comfort, rather than like wilde beasts to walke up and downe in the Deserts. Their profession was to pray, and by the labour of their owne hands, to get living for themselves, and maintenance for the poore, and withall they vowed poverty, obedience and chastity. Athanasius first brought this kinde of Monkes consisting of Laymen into the West Church. Whereunto after, that Saint Austen in Africke, Saint Martin in France, and Congell in Britaine and Ireland had adjoynd the function of Regular Clergy: It is incredible, how farre and wide they spred, how many and how great Canobies were built for them, so called of their communion of life; as also Monasteries, for that they kept still a certaine shew of solitary living: and in those daies none were more sacred and holy than they, and accordingly they were reputed; considering how by their praiers to God, by their example, Doctrine, labour, and industry, they did exceeding much good not onely to themselves, but also to all mankind. But as the world grew worse and worse, so those their holy manners, as one said, rebus cessere secundis, that is, Gave backward in time of prosperity. Now let mee returne unto my matter, craving your pardon for this short digression.

After these dayes, this Monastery fell utterly to ruine; for, in the time of William of Malmesbury who lived presently after the Normans comming in, There remained here, as hee saith, so many tokens of Antiquity, so many walles of Churches halfe downe, so many windings and turnings of Gates, such heapes of rubbish and rammell, as hardly a man should have found assember. But now is left to be seene scarcely the face and outward shew of a dead City or Monastery, and the names only remaine of two Gates Port Hogham and Port Cleis, which stand a mile asunder, betweene which are found very old peeces of the Romans money. But, that I may tell you of one thing, this BONIUM or Bancher is not reckoned within this County but in Flinthshire a peece whereof severed (as it were) from the rest lyeth heere betweene Cheshire and Sherbro-shire. Dee, where he entrench first into this shire seeth above him not farre from his banke, Malpas, upon an high hill: which had in it a Castle; and for the bad, narrow, and combrous way was termed in Latin Malaplatea, that is, distress, and thence also tooke this later name Malpas from the Normans, whereas in times past the Englishmen, almost in the very same sense, called it Depenhach. The Barony hereof Hugh Earle of Cheshire gave to Robert Fitz-Hugh: In the Raigne of Henry the Second, William Patricke the sonne of William Patricke held the same: of whose line Robert Patricke standing outlawed, lost it. After some few yeeres David of Malpas by a Writ of Recognisance, gat the one halfe of that Towne which was Gilbert Clerkes: But a great part of this Barony went afterwards hereditarily to those Suttons that are Barons of Dudley: and a part also thereof came to Urian Samner. And from Philip a younger sonne of David of Malpas, is descended that worshipfull family of the Egertons, who Monkery.

Rutilius
Claudius

That Bancher of which Saint Bernard (speaketh in the life of Malachie was in Ireland,

Bonism or Bancher is of Flintshire.

Out of the Roll of Domelday of Chel-thure, Barons of Mal-pas.
Per breve re-cognisancie.

Deva.
* The River
Dee.

Divovna.

Bonium.

Bancher.

who tooke this name from the place of their habitation: like as from other places, diverse Gentlemen of this Race received their surnames Coigrave, Overton, Cadogan, and Golborn. As touching the name of this place, give mee leave before I depart hence, in this serious worke, to inferre a pretty jest out of Giraldus Cambrensis. It happened, saith hee, in our daies, that a certaine Jew travelling towards Shrewsbury, with the Archdeacon of this place, whose surname was Peché, that is, Sinne, and a Deane named Devill; when he heard by chance the Archdeacon telling, That his Archdeaconry began at a place called Il-street, and reached as farre as to Mal-pas toward Chester: Hee considering and understanding withall as well the Archdeacons surname as the Deanes, came out with this pleasant and merry conceits, Would it not bee a wonder (quoth hee) and my fortune very good, if ever I get safe againe out of this country, where Sinne is the Archdeacon, and the Devill the Deane; where the entry into the Archdeaconry is Il-street, and the going forth of it, Mal-pas.

Itinerar. lib. 2.
cap. 13.

Shoclach.

Grosvenour.

Deunana.
Deva.

Chester.

From hence Dee runneth downe amaine by Shoclach, where sometime was a Castle, by Aldford, belonging in times past to the Arderns; by Poulesford, where in the Reigne of Henry the Third, Sir Raulph of Ormesby had his Castle, and by Eaton the seat of the famous Family of Grosvenour, that is, The great Hunter, whose posterity now corruptly goe under the name of Gravenor.

Somewhat higher, upon the same River neere unto Dee-mouth, which Ptolomee calleth SETEIA for Deia, standeth the noble City which the said Ptolomee named DEUNANA, Antonine the Emperour DEVA, of the River, the Britons Caer-Legion, Caer-Leon Vaur, Caer-Leon ar Duffr Dwy, and by way of excellency Caer, like as our Ancestours, the English Saxons Legea-cer-cep, of the Legions Camp, and wee more short, West-Chester, of the West situation, and simply Chester, according to the Verse.

Cestria de castris nomen quasi Castris sumptis.
Chester of Castris tooke the name,
As if that Castris were the same.

For these British names, without all doubt were derived from the Twentieth Legion named VICTRIX: This Legion in the yeere that Galba the Emperour was the second time Confull, together with Titus Vinius, was transported over into Britain which being out of awe and therefore dreaded of the Lieutenants, as well those which had beene Consuls as Pretours, had Julius Agricola appointed Lieutenant over it by Vespasian the Emperour; was at length placed and seated in this City which I suppose was not built many yeeres before, and set as one would say at the back of the ORDOVICES, to restrain them: although there are some, who avouch it to be of greater antiquity, as they say than the Moone: as founded forsooth by Leon Vaur the Giant, I know not how many hundred yeeres before. But the very name it selfe might give the checke unto these triviall Antiquaries, and withhold them from so grosse an error. For, they cannot deny, but that Leon Vaur in British signifieth A great Legion. Now, whether it stands more with reason and equity, that a City should take name of a Great Legion, than of Leon a Giant, let the learned judge; knowing, that in the part of Spaine called Tarracensis, there is a Realme now called Legio of the seventh Legion Germanica, considering also, that the twentieth Legion, which they reamed Britannica, Valens VICTRIX, and some falsely Valeria VICTRIX, abode in this City, as Ptolomee, Antonine, and the ancient Coine of Septimius Geta doe prove by which, it appeareth for certaine, that this City also was a Colony. For, in the verse or back-side thereof standeth this Inscription COL. DIUANA LEG. XX. VICTRIX. But to testifie the Romanes magnificence, there are remaining in this day very few tokens, beside pavements of foure square checker worke: howbeit in the former ages it presented many: which, Ranulph a Monke of this City will tell you out of his Polychronicon in these his owne words. There be waies beunder the ground vaulted marvelously with stone worke, chambers having arched roofes

Chester, a Colony of the Romans.

head, huge stones engraven with the names of ancient men: heere also are sometimes digged up peeces of money coined by Julius Caesar and other famous persons, and stamped with their inscriptions. Likewise Roger of Chester in his Policraticon, When I behold (saith he) the ground worke of buildings in the streets laid with monstrous big stones, it seemeth that it hath beene founded by the painfull labour of Romans or Giants, rather than by the sweat of Britons. This City built in forme of a quadrant, foure square, is enclosed with a wall that taketh up more than two miles in compasse, and hath eleven parishes. But that of S. Johns without the Northgate was the fairest, being a stately and solemne building, as appeareth by the remaines, wherein were anciently Prebendaries, and, as some write, the Bishops See. Neere unto the River standeth the Castle upon a rocky hill, built by the Earles:

where the Courts Palatine, and the Assises, as they call them, are kept twice a yeere. The houses are very faire built and along the chiefe streets are galleries or walking places, they call them Rowes having shops on both sides, through which a man may walke dry from one end unto the other. But it hath not continued evermore in one tenor of prosperity. First it was rased by Egfrid King of Northumberland, then by the Danes, yet reedified againe by Edelsed Lady of the Mercians: and soone after it saw King Eadgar in magnificent maner triumphing over the British Princes. For, sitting himselfe in a Barge at the fore-decke, Kennadie King of the Scots, Malcolme King of Cumberland, Alacon King of Mann and of the Islands, with all the Princes of Wales brought to doe homage, and like watermen working at the Oar, rowed him along the River Dee, in a triumphant shew, to his great glory and joy of the beholders.

The Rowes;

Marianus
Scorus.

About the
yeere.
960.

Certaine yeeres after, and namely about the yeere of our Redemption 1094, when as in a devout and religious emulation, as one saith, Princes strove avie, That Cathedrall Churches and Ministers should be erected in a more decent and seemely forme, and when as Christendome renosed as it were her selfe, and casting away her old habiliments, did put on every where the bright and whiterobe of Churches; Hugh the first of the Norman bloud, that was Earle of Chester, repaired the Church which Earle Leofrick had formerly founded in honour of the Virgin Saint Werburga, and by the advice of Anselm, whom he had procured to come out of Normandy granted the same unto Monkes. And now, it is notorious for the Tombe of Henry the Fourth, Emperour of Almaine, who as they say gave over his Empire and lived heere an Eremit life; and for the Bishops See, therein established. Which See immediately after the Normans Conquest, Peter Bishop of Lichfield, translated from Lichfield thither; but when it was brought to Coventry, and from thence into the ancient seat againe, West-Chester lay a long time bereft of this Episcopall Dignity, untill in our fathers dayes King Henry the Eighth, having thrust out the Monkes, ordeined Prebendaries, and restored a Bishop againe, under whom for his Diocesse he appointed this County, Lancashire, Richmond, &c. and appointed the same to be within the Province of the Archbishop of York. But returne wee now to matters of greater antiquity. When as now the said Cathedrall Church was built, the Earles that were of the Normans line, fortified the City both with Walles and Castle. For as the Bishop held of the King that which belongeth to his Bishopricke (these are the words of Domesday booke made by King William the Conquerour) so the Earles with their men held of the King wholly, all thereto, of the City. It paid Geld or Tribute for fifty hides: and foure hundred and thirty and one houses were thus Geldable: and seven Mint-masters. When the King himselfe in person came thither every Carrucate yielded unto him two hundred Hestars, and one tun full of Ale, and one Rulca of butyr. And in the same place, for the reedification of the City wall and the bridge, the Provost gave warning by an edict, that out of every hide in the County one man should come: and looke whose man came not, his Lord or Master was fined in forty shillings to the King and the Earle. If I should particulare the scufflings and skirmishes heereabout betwene the Welsh and the English in the beginning of the Normans time, their inrodes and outrodes, the often scarfires of the Suburbs of Hanbrid beyond the Bridge, whereupon the Welshmen call it Treboeth, that is, The burnes towne, as also the Wall made there of Welshmens skuls that went a great length, I should seeme to forget my selfe and thrust my stile into the Historians Harvest.

Churches repaired.
Rodolphus Glaber.

Ecc

But

But ever since the said time, hath Chester notably flourished, and King Henry the Seventh made it a County by it selfe incorporate. Neither wanteth any thing there that may be required in a most flourishing City, but that the Ocean being offended and angry (as it were) at certaine Mills in the very chanell of the River Dee, hath by little withdrawne himselfe back, and affoordeth not unto the City the commodity of an Haven, as heretofore. The Longitude of this place is twenty Degrees and three and twenty Scruples: the Latitude three and fifty Degrees and eleven Scruples. If you desire to know more touching this City, have here these reports out of Lucian that Monke above said, who lived almost five hundred yeeres agoe. First, it is to bee considered, that Chester is built as a City, the site whereof inviteth and allureth the eye, which being situate in the West parts of Britaine, was in time past a place of receipt to the Legions comming a farre off to repose themselves, and served sufficiently to keepe the Keies, as I may say, of Ireland, for the Romans, to preserve the limits of their Empire. For, being opposite to the North-East part of Ireland, it openeth way for passage of ships and Mariners with spread saile passing not often but continually to and fro, as also for the commodities of sundry sorts of Merchandise. And whiles it casteth eye forward into the East, it looketh toward not onely the See of Rome and the Empire thereof, but the whole world also: so that it standeth forth as a keening place to the view of eyes: that there may bee knowne valiant exploits, and the long traine and consequences of things; as also whatsoever throughout the world hath beene done by all persons, in all places, and as all times: and what ever hath beene ill done may also bee avoided and taken heed of. Which City having foure Gates from the foure cardinall Windes on the East side, hath a prospect toward India, on the West toward Ireland, North-Eastward the greater Norway, and Southward that streight and narrow Angle, which drive severity, by reason of civil and home-discords, hath left unto the Britains. Which long since by their bitter variance have caused the name of Britaine to bee changed into the name of England. Over and beside, Chester hath by Gods gift a River to enrich and adorne it, the same faire and fishfull, hard by the City Wall: and on the South side a roade and harbour for ships comming from Gascoine, Spaine, and Germany, which with the helpe and direction of Christ, by the labour and wisdom of Merchants, repaire and refresh the heart of the City with many good things: that wee being comforted every way by our Gods Grace, may also drinke Wine often, more frankly and plentifully: because those Countreies enjoy the fruits of the Vineyards abundantly. Moreover the open Sea ceaseth not to visite it every day with a Tide, which according as the broad shelves and barres of sands are opened or hidden by Tides and Ebbes incessantly, is wont more or lesse, either to send or exchange some thing or other, and by his reciprocal Flow and returnes, either to bring in or to carry out somewhat.

From the City, North-Westward, there shooteth out a languet of land, or Promontory of the maine land into the Sea, enclosed on the one side with Dunham, on the other side with the River Mersey: wee call it Wirall: the Welch Britains, for that it is an Angle, tearme it Kilgury. In old time it was all forest and not inhabited, as the Dwellers report, but King Edward the Third disforested it: Yet now, beset it is with Townes on every side: howbeit more beholding to the Sea than to the Soile: for, the land beareth small plenty of Corne, the water yeeldeth great store of fish. At the entry into it on the South side standeth Shotwich Castle of the Kings, upon the salt water: Upon the North standeth Hooten, a Manour, which in King Richard the Second his time, came to the Stanleys, who fetch their Pedegree from Alane Silvestre upon whom Ranulph the first of that name, Earle of Chester, conferred the Bailly-wick of the Forest of Wirall, by delivering unto him an horne. Close unto this is Poole, from whence the Lords of the place that have a long time flourished, tooke their name: and hard by it Stanlaw, as the Monkes of that place interpret it, A Story hill: where John Lacy Connestable of Chester founded a little Monastery, which afterward by reason of inundations was transferr'd to Whaley in Lancashire.

In the utmost brinke of this Promontory, lieth a small, hungry, barren, and sandy

Isle, called Il-bre, which had sometime a little Cell of Monkes in it. More within the Country and Eastward from Wirall, you meet with a famous Forest, named the Forest of Delamere, the Foresters whereof by hereditary succession, are the Dawns of Ukinton, descended of a worshipfull stocke, from Ranulph de Kingleigh, unto whom Ranulph the first, Earle of Chester gave that Forestership, to bee held by right of inheritance. In this Forest Adelsled, the famous Mercian Lady, built a little City called Eader-bunz, that is, by interpretation, Happy Towne, which now having quite lost it selfe hath likewise lost that name, and is but an heape of rubbish and rammell, which they call, The Chamber in the Forest. And about a mile or two from hence, are to be seene the ruines of Finborow, another Towne built by the same Lady Adelsled.

Through the upper part of this Forest the River Wever runneth, which ariseth out of a Poole in the South side of the Shire at Ridly, the dwelling house of the worshipfull Family of the Egertons: who flowered out of the Barons of Malpas, as I have said. Neere hereunto is Bunbury contractly so called for Boniface Bury, for Saint Boniface was the Patron Saint there, where the Egertons built a College for Priests. Over against which is Beeiton which gave surname to an ancient family, and where upon a steep rising hill, Beeiton Castle towereth aloft with a turretted wall of a great circuit. This Castle the last Ranulph Earle of Chester built, whereof Leland our Countryman being rapt both with a Poeticall and Propheicall fury, writeth thus.

*Affrio rediens victor Ranulphus ab orbe,
Hoc posuit Castrum terrorem gentibus olim
Vicinis, patriaeque sua memorabile vallum.
Nunc licet indignas pariat frusta ruinas,
Tempus erit quando rursus caput exeret altum,
Vatibus antiquis si fas mihi credere vati.*

When Ranulph from Affyria return'd with victory;
As well the neighbour Nations to curbe and terrifie,
As for to fence his owne Country, this famous Fort he rais'd, Whilom a stately thing, but now the pride thereof is raz'd.
And yet though at this present time, it be in meane estate
With crackes and breaches much defac'd, and foully ruinate;
The day will come when it againe the head aloft shall heave,
If ancient Prophets I my selfe a Prophet, may beleave.

But to returne to the River, Wever first holdeth his course Southward, not farre from Woodhay, where dwelt a long time that family of the Wilburhams knights in great reputation; also by Bulkeley and Cholmondeley which imparted their names to worshipfull houses of knights degree; not farre off on the one hand from Baddeley the habitation in times past of the ancient Family de Praerij: of the other, from Cumbermer, in which William Malbedeng founded a little religious house. Where this River commeth to the South limit of this Shire, it passeth through low places, wherein, as also elsewhere, the people finde oftentimes and get out of the ground, trees that have been buried, as it is thought, there, ever since Noahs flood. But afterwards, watering fruitfull fields, he taketh to him out of the East a riveret by which standeth Wilburbury, so called of Wibba, King of the Mercians. Hard to it lie, Hasberton, the seat in old time of the Orbeis, then of the Corbets, but now of the Smithes; Dodinton, the possession of the Delvestes; Hasberton, of the Griphins; Shavinton of the Wodenoths (who by that name may seeme to have descended from the English Saxons) beside the places of other famous Families wherewith this County every where aboundeth. From thence runneth Wever downe by Nantwich, not farre from Middlewich, and so to Northwich. These are very famous Salt-wiches, five or sixe miles distant asunder, where brine or salt water is drawne out of Pittes, which they

Eee 2

powre

powre not upon wood while it burneth; as the ancient Gauls and Germans were wont to doe, but boyle over the Fire, to make Salt thereof. Neither doubt I, that these were knowne unto the Romanes, and that from hence was usually paid the Custom for salt called Salarium. For, there went a notable high way from Middlewich to Northwich, raised with gravell to such an height, that a man may easily acknowledge that it was a worke of the Romanes, seeing that all this Country over, gravell is so scarce: and from thence at this day it is carried to private mens uses.

Matthew Paris writeth, that King Henry the Third stopped up these Salt-pits, when in hostile manner he wasted this Shire: because the Welshmen, so tumultuous in those dayes, should not have any victuals or provision from thence. But when the faire beames of peace beganne once to shine out, they were opened againe. Nantwich, which the River Wever first visiteth, is reputed the greatest and fairest built Towne of all this Shire after Chester, the Britans call it Hellabwa, that is, The white Wich, or Salt pitte, because the whitest salt is there boiled: and such as writ in Latine named it Vicus Malbannus, haply of one William named Malbeng and Malbanc, unto whom, at the Normans Conquest of England, it was allotted. It hath one onely Salt pitte, they call it the Brine pitte, about some foure-teenne foote from the River, out of which they convey salt water by troughes of wood into houses adjoyning, wherein there stand little barrels pitched fast in the ground, which they fill with that water, and at the ringing of a bell, they beginne to make fire under the leades; whereof they have fixe in every house, and therein seeth the said water: then certaine women, they call them Walleres, with little wooden rakes fetch up the salt from the bothom, and put it in baskets, they call them Salt barrowes, out of which the liquor runneth, and the pure salt remaineth. The Church (and but one they have) is passing faire, and belonged, as I have heard, unto the Abbey of Cumbermer: from hence, Wever holding on his course crooked enough, is augmented with a brooke coming out of the East, which runneth downe from Crew, a place inhabited in old time by a notable family of that name. And farther yet from the West side of the River, Calveley sheweth it selfe, which gave both habitation and name to the worthy Family of the Calveleys, out of which in the Raigne of Richard the Second, Sir Hugh Calveley Knight, was for his Chivalry in France so renowned, that there occurred no hardy exploit but his prowesse would goe through it. From thence Wever hieth apace by Mainsbush, the house of the Mainsbushs, and by Vale Royall, an Abbey founded by King Edward the First in a most pleasant valley, where now dwelleth the ancient Familie of the Holcrofts, unto Northwich, in British called Hellabwa, that is, The blacke salt pitte: where also very neere the brinke of the river Dan, there is a most plentifull and deepe Brine-pit, with staires made about it, by which they that draw water out of it in leather buckets, ascend halfe naked into the troughes, and powre it thereinto, by which it is carried into the wich houses, about which there stand on every side many stakes and piles of wood. Heere Wever receiveth into his Chanell the River Dan, whose trade and streame I will now follow.

This Dan or more truly Daven, flowing out of those hilles which on the East side sever Staffordshire from Cheshire, runneth along to CONDOTE a townie mentioned by Antonine the Emperour, now called corruptly Congleton, the middle whereof the little brooke Howty, on the East side Daningschew, and Northward Dan it selfe, watereth. And albeit this Towne for the greatnesse and frequency thereof, hath deserved to have a Major and six Aldermen, yet hath it but a Chappell and no more: and the same made of timber, unlesse it bee the quire and a little Towre-steeple, which acknowledged Astbury about two miles off, her mother-Church: which verily is a very faire Church, the West Porch whereof is equall in height to the very Church as high as it is, and hath a spire steeple adjoyning thereto. In the Church-yard lie two portraictures of Knights upon Sepulchres, in whose Shields are two barres. But for that they be without their colours, hardly can any man say, whether of the Breretons, Manwarings, Manwarings or Venables, which are the most noble Families in those parts, and indeed such Barres doe they beare in their Coates of Armes, but in divers colours.

Then commeth Daven to Davenport, commonly Dampert, which hath adopted into her owne name a notable family: and Holmeschappell, a Towne well knowne to waiting men: where within the remembrance of our Grandfathers, 1. Needham built a Bridge: Neere unto which, at Rudbeath there was sometime a place of refuge and Sanctuary as well for the Inhabitants of this Shire as strangers, who had trespassed against the lawes that there they might abide in security for a yeere and a day. I then mineth it under Kinderton the old seat of the ancient race of the Venables, who ever since the first coming in of the Normans have been of name and reputation here, and commonly are called Barons of Kinderton. Beneath this, Southward, the little river Croco runneth also into Dan, which flowing out of the Poole called Bagmere passeth by Brereton: which, as it hath given name to the worshipfull, ancient and numerous family of the Breretons knights; so Sir William Brereton knight, hath of late added very much credit and honour to the place, by a magnificent and sumptuous house that hee hath there built. A wonder it is that I shall tell you, and yet no other than I have heard verified upon the credit of many credible persons, and commonly believed: That before any heire of this house of the Breretons dyeth, there bee scene in a Poole adjoyning, bodies of trees swimming for certaine daies together. Like unto that which Leonardus Varius reporteth from the testimony of Cardinal Granwell, namely, that neere unto the Abbey of Saint Maurice in Burgundy, there is a fish-pond, in which are fishes put according to the number of the Monkes of that place: And if any one of them happen to bee sicke, there is a fish scene also to float, and swimme above the water halfe dead: and if the Monke shall dye, the said fish a few daies before dieth.

As touching these matters, if they bee true, I wote not what to say: for, I am no Wisard to interpret such strange wonders: But these and such like things are done either by the holy tutelary Angels of men, or else by the devils who by Gods permission mightily shew their power in this inferior world. For, both the sorts of them being intelligent natures, upon a deliberate purpose and to some certaine end, and not for nought, worke strange things. The Angels seeke after and aime at the safety and health of man-kinde: the devils contrariwise plot to mischief, vex, or else to delude them. But all this may seeme impertinent to our purpose.

Crooke the Riveret aforesaid, being past Brereton, within a while after visiteth Middlewich, neere unto his confluence with Dan, where there bee two Welles of salt water parted one from the other by a small Brooke; Sheasbes they call them: the one stands not open, but at certaine set times, because folke willingly steale the Water thereof, as beeing of greater vertue and efficacy. From hence runneth Dan to Boistoke, in times past Boestoc, the ancient seat of the Familie of the Boistokes Knights, which by the marriage with Anne onely Daughter of Raulph, sonne and heire to Sir Adam Boistoke knight, passed together with a very great live-lode unto Sir John Savage. Out of this ancient house of the Boistokes, as out of a stocke, sprung a goodly number of the same name, in Cheshire, Shropshire, Barkshire and elsewhere.

When as Dan now, beneath Northwich that I spake of, hath united his streame with Wever, then Wever runneth forthright, and taketh in from the East, Pever, that floweth hard by Pever and giveth it the name: where, that ancient notable Familie of Meinilwarin, commonly Manwaring is seated; out of which Raulph married the daughter of Hugh Kevelioc Earle of Chester, as appeareth by an old Charter in the custody of Ranulph the heire now of the same house.

From thence speedeth Wever by Winington which gave both habitation and name to the renowned familie of the Winingtons; and not farre from Merbury, which being so called of a Mere under it, conferred likewise the name upon that respective ancient Familie of the Merburies. Hence the River holdeth on his course neere unto Dutton, the Inheritance of that great and worthy Familie of Duttons, who derive

Chronicle of Waller.
Towcher.

Rock-Savage.

Maclesfield.

Thelwall.

Runkhorne.
Elsted or Ethel-
sted.

derive their descent from one Hudard, allied to the Earles of Chester: and who by an old order and custome have great authority over all the pipers, fiddlers, and minstrels of this Province, ever since that one of the Duttons a young Gentleman full of spirit and active withall, having hastily gathered a tumultuary power of those kinde of people, valiantly delivered Ranulph the last Earle of Chester from danger, when hee was beset with Welsh enemies. Neither must I passe over in silence Neiber Whitley in this tract, out of which came the Tuschetts or Towchetts, who are now Barons Audley. By this time Wever aforesaid flowing betweene Prodesham a Castle of ancient note and Clifton, now Rock-Savage, an house of the Savages new built, who here by marriage attained to rich and faire revenewes; entrench at length into Mossey mouth. And this is so called of the River Mersey, which running as a bounder betwene Cheshire and Lancashire, is there at length discharged into the Sea, after it hath among other small townes of meaner note watered Stockport, which had sometime a Baron, of the Earles of Chester, and Warburgton so named of S. Werburgh, the habitation of a family thereof surnamed, but branched from the Duttons: Herby it entertaineth the River Bollin out of that spacious Forest of Maclesfield. Upon this Bollin standeth Maclesfield one of the fairest Townes of this County, which gave name unto that Forest: where T. Savage, first Bishop of London, and afterwards Arch. bishop of Torke, built a College, wherein some of that Race of the Savages lye entombed: also Dunham, which from Sir Hamon of Mossey, by the Fittones and Venables descended hereditarily unto the Family of Booth. From thence Mersey cometh to Thelwall before it bee farre past Knotsford, that is, Cannatus his Ford; which is divided into the upper and the nether: also to Lee; from whence there is a Family bearing the same surname, that is not onely of gentle blood and of especial note, but also farre and fairely propagated into a number of branches. As for Thelwall, now it is an obscure Village, but in times past a large Towne, built by King Edward the elder, and so called, as Florilegus witnesseth, of bodies of trees the boughes being cut off, firmly fastened in the ground wherewith hee walled it round. For the Saxons in their tongue called the Trunkes and bodies of Trees, Del, and a Wall, as we doe now.

At the very mouth of the River standeth Runkborne, founded in the same age by D Lady Edelfleda commonly called Elsted, and brought now by the mutability of time to a few cottages. This Lady Edelfleda (to tell you at once, of whom I have oft made mention) sister to K. Edward the elder, and wife to Ethelred a pery King of the Mercians, after her husbands death, governed the Mercians in most dangerous and troublesome times, for eight yeeres, with high commendation: touching whom these laudatory Verses in praise of her, wee reade in the History of Henry of Huntingdon.

*O Elsteda potens, ô terror virgo virorum, Vixitrix nature, nomine digna viri.
Te, quo splendidior fieres, natura puellam;
Te probitas fecit nomen habere viri.
Te mutare decet, sed solam, nomina sexus,
Tu regina potens, Rexque trophaea parans,
Jam nec Casarei tantum meruere triumphi, Casare splendidior virgo virago, vale.*

O mighty Elsted, virgin pure, that men do't terrifie,
And nature passe, right worthy thou, in name a man to be.
To grace thee more, dame Nature once thee shap'd a maiden brave,
But vertue thee hath caused now the name of man to have.
It thee becomes, but thee alone, the name of Sex to change:
Of great Queenes and triumphant Kings thou standest in the range.
From Casars triumphes for desert thou bear't away the bell,
No Cesar ever was thy match: Thus, Manly-maide, fare well.

Beneath

A Beneath Runkborne, somewhat within the Country, Haulton, the Towne and Castle both shew themselves, which Hugh Lupus Earle of Chester gave unto Niel a Norman, to be by tenure and service Constable of Chester: by whose posterity, through the variable change of times, it is come unto the House of Lancaster. Neither would this be overpassed in silence, that William the said Nieles sonne, founded the Abbay adjoining, at Norton, which now appertaineth to the Broks of ancient descent. Whether I should place in this Shire, or elsewhere the CANGI, an ancient Nation of Britans, that have beene so much and so long fought for, I have as long and as much doubted: For continuance of time hath now so obscured them, that hitherto by no footings they could be traced and found out. And albeit Justus Lipsius that Flower of exquisite learning taketh mee for a Judge heerein, I frankly confesse, I know not what judgement to give, and rather would I commend this office of judging to any other man, than assume it to my selfe. Yet nevertheless, if CEANGI and CANGI were the same, as why not? it may bee probable enough, that they were seated in this tract. For, whiles I perused these my labours, I understood by some of good credit, that there were heere upon the very shore gotten out of the ground twenty fowes of lead long in forme, but foure square: On the upper part whereof in an hollow surface is to be read this inscription.

IMP. DOMIT. AUG. GER. DE CEANG.

But on the other.

IMP. VESP. VII. T. IMP. V.
COSS.

In the yeere of Christ 78.

Which Monument seemeth to have beene erected for a Victory over the Cangi. Heere to maketh also the very site upon the Irish sea: For, thus writeth Tacitus in the 12. booke of his Annales. Whiles Nero was Emperour, There was an Army led by Ostorius against the Cangi: the fields were wasted, booties raised every where, for that the enemies durst not come into the field: but if they attempted closely and by stealth to cut off the Army as it marched, they paid for their deceitfull cunning. Now were they no sooner come neere unto the Sea-Coast toward Ireland, but certaine tumults and insurrections among the Brigantes, brought the Generall backe. But by the inscription aforesaid, it should seeme that they were not subdued before Domitians time: and then by computation of the times, when as that most warlike Julius Agricola was Propretour in Britaine. Proton likewise placed the Promontory KATTANON, that is, of the Cangi on this shore. Neither dare I seeke elsewhere than in this tract that Station CONGANII, where, in the declining estate of the Roman Empire, a Company or Band called Vigiles, that is, Watchmen, with their Capitaine under the Dux Britannia, kept watch and ward. Notwithstanding I leave to every man for mee his owne judgement heerein, as in all things else of this nature.

F Touching the Earles, that I may passe over the English Saxons, Earles only by office and not by inheritance: king William the first created Hugh surnamed Lupus, son to the Vicount of Avanches in Normandy the first hereditary Earle of Chester and Count Palatine, and gave unto him and his heires all this County to be holden as freely by his sword, as the King himselfe held England by his Crowne (For these are the words of the Donation:)

Earles of Chester.

Anno 51.

Barons to the Earl of Chester.

nation) who forthwith appointed under him these Barons, viz. Niele Baron of Baulton, whose posterity afterwards tooke the name of Lacies, for that the Lacies inheritance had fallen unto them, and were Earles of Lincolne: Robert Baron of Mont-haut, Seneschall of the County of Chester, the last of whose line, having no issue, ordained by his last Will Isabel Queene of England, and John of Elsham Earle of Cornwall, his heires: William Malbedem Baron of Malbanc, whose nephewes daughters, by marriage brought the inheritance to the Vernons and Bassets: Richard Vernon Baron of Shipbroke, whose inheritance for default of heires males in the end came by the sisters unto the Wilburhams, Staffords, and Littleburies: Robert Fitz-Hugh Baron of Atulpa, who, as it seemeth, dyed, as I said before, without issue: Hamon de Mafcy, whose possessions descended to the Fittons of Bollin: Gilbert Venables Baron of Kinderton, whose posterity in the right line have continued and flourished unto these our dayes: A Baron of Stokeports, to whom at length the Warrens of Peinton, budded out of the honorable family of the Earles of Warren and Surry, in right of marriage succeeded. And these were all the Barons of the Earles of Chester that ever I could hitherto finde: Who, as it is written in an old Booke, Had their free Courts of all Pleees and Suits or Complaints, except those Pleees which belong unto the Earles sword. And their Office was, To assist the Earle in Councell, to yeeld him dutifull attendance, and oftentimes to repaire unto his Court for to doe him honor, and, as we finde in old parchment Records, *Bound they were in time of warre in Wales, to finde for every Knights fee, one horse with caparison and furniture, or else two without, within the Divisions of Ches-shire: Also, that their Knights and Freeholders should have Corfless and *Haubergeons, and defend their Foes by their owne bodies.

* Haubergella.
* Lands and possessions.

After Hugh the first Earle before said, succeeded Richard his sonne, who in his tenth yeeres perished by shipwracke, together with William the onely sonne of King Henry the First, and other Noblemen betwene Normandy and England in the yeere 1120. After Richard, succeeded Ranulph de Mesghines, the third Earle, sonne to the sister of Earle Hugh: and left behinde him his sonne Ranulph, named de Gerninjs, the fourth Earle of Chester, a Warlike man, and who at the Siege of Lincolne tooke King Stephen Prisoner. Hugh surnamed Kevelioc, his sonne was the fifth Earle, who died in the yeere 1181. and left his sonne Ranulph named de Blundevill the sixth Earle, who after he had built the Castles of Chariley and Beefton, and the Abbay also de la Cresse, died without children, and left foure sisters to be his heires, Maude the wife of David Earle of Huntingdon, Mabile espoused to William D' Albeney Earle of Arundell, Agnes married to William Ferrars Earle of Darby, and Avia wedded to Robert de Quincy. After Ranulph the sixth Earle, there succeeded in the Earledome John surnamed the Scot, the sonne of Earle David by the said Maude the eldest daughter. Who being deceased likewise without any issue, King Henry the Third casting his eye upon so faire and large an inheritance, laid it unto the Domaine of the Crowne, and assigned other revenewes elsewhere to the heires: not willing, as the King himselfe was wont to say, that so great an estate should bee divided among distaves. And the Kings themselves, in person, after that this Earledome came unto their hands, for to maintain the honor of the *Palatine*ship, continued here the ancient rights and Palatine priviledges, and Courts, like as the Kings of France did in the County of Champan. Afterward, this honour of Chester was deferred upon the Kings eldest sonnes, and first unto Edward, King Henry the Third his sonne, who being taken prisoner by the Barons and kept in ward delivered it up for his ranfome unto Simon Montford Earle of Leicester: But when Simon was soone after slaine, it returned quickly againe unto the blood Royall, and King Edward the Second summoned his eldest sonne, being but a child, unto the Parliament by the Titles of Earle of Chester and Flint. Afterwards, King Richard the Second by authority of the Parliament, made it of an Earldome a Principality, and to the same Principality annexed the Castle of Leon with the territories of Bromfield and Tale, Chircke Castle with Chircke land, Oswalds-street Castle, the whole hundred and eleven townes belonging to that Castle, with the Castles of Isabell and Delaley, and other goodly lands, which, by reason that Richard Earle of Arundell had then then proscrip and outlawed, had beene confiscate to the Kings Exchequer: and King Richard himselfe was stiled Prince of Chester: but within few yeeres after, that Title vanished away, after that King Henry the Fourth had once repealed the Lawes of the said Parliament, and it became againe a County or Earledome Palatine: and at this day retaineth the jurisdiction Palatine: and for the administration thereof, it hath a Chamberlaine who hath all jurisdiction of a Chancellour within the said County Palatine, a Justice for matters in Common Pleees, and Pleees of the Crowne, to bee heard and determined in the said County, two Barons of the Exchequer, Sergeants at Law, a Sheriffe, an Attourney, an Eschetour, &c. And the Inhabitants of the said County for the enjoying of their liberties were to pay at the change of every Owner of the said Earledome a summe of money (about 3000. markes) by the name of a Mise, as the County of Flint being a parcell thereof about 2000. markes, if I have not bin mis-informed.

This County containeth about 68. Parishes.

Now

The Kingdome of the Mercians.

NOW have I superficially surveyed the Regions of the CORNAVII, which together with the CORITANI, DOBUNI, and CATVELLANI, made that Kingdome in the Saxons Heptarchie, which they called Wype-napic, and Wearp-lond, the Latine Writers Mercia of Wearp, an old English word, that signified a Limite; for, all the other Kingdomes bordered and confined upon it. This was the largest Kingdome by farre of all the rest, begunne by Crida the Saxon, about the yeere of our Lord 586. augmented by Penda, who extended the Marches thereof every way, and within a while after instructed in Christian Religion. But having come to the full period, within the revolution of 250. yeeres, fell at last, into the Dominion of the West-Saxons, after that the Danes had spoiled, weakned, and wasted it many yeeres in all manner of barbarous hostility.

SILURES.

SILURES.

IThinke it now my best way, before I treat of the other parts of England, to digresse a while and turne a little aside toward Wales, called in Latin Cambria, or Wallia, where the ancient Britans have yet their seat and abode: neither shall I in so doing, as I thinke, digresse, but directly follow the order of nature. For, it lieth adjacent to the CORNAVII, and seemeth, as it were, of right and equity to demand, that it may be spoken of in due course and place: especially seeing the Britans or Welsh, the inhabitants thereof, enjoy the same lawes and rights that we doe, and have long since beene engrafted and incorporate with us into our Common-wealth.

WALES therefore, which name comprised in times past before the Conquest, the whole Countrey beyond Severn, but afterward reached not so farre, was when the Romanes ruled in Britaine, inhabited by three sorts of people, the SILURES, DIMETAE, and ORDOVICES. For, these held not onely the twelve Shires, as they call them, of Wales, but those two also beyond Severn, Hereford-shire, and Monmouth-shire, which have beene now long reckoned among the Counties of England. And to beginne first with those that we first come unto and which lye next unto us: the SILURES, according to Ptolomees description, inhabited those Regions which in Welsh are called by one name Deheubarth, that is, the Southpart, and at this day by new names, Hereford-shire, Radnor-shire, Brecknock-shire, Monmouth-shire, and Glamorgan-shire, wherein are as yet some remaines also of the name SILURES. As for the derivation of that name, I have nothing that sorteth with the nature of the Nation. But touching the originall of the people, Tacitus ghesseeth by their coloured faces, their countenances, their curled haire, and their situation over against Spaine, that they had their originall from the Spaniards: But Florianus del campo a Spaniard flatly affirmeth it, who troubleth and toileth himselfe exceedingly to finde the Silures in Spaine, and thrusts upon us, I know not what, of Soloria and Siloria in Biscaie. But to speake of the nature of these Silures: they were a Nation very great (for as wee may gather out of Plinie and Tacitus, they seeme to have possessed all South-Wales) fierce, valiant, given to warre, impatient of servitude, forward to adventure with a resolution (the Romanes call it Pervicacia) and who would not be brought in either with faire meanes or foule; in all and every of which qualities their their Posterity have in no point as yet degenerated from their Ancestors. When the Romanes upon an ambitious desire of rule did set upon them, they trusting to the strength and prowesse of King Caratacus, provoked also and exasperated with a word that Claudius the Emperour let fall, who had said, These were so to bee destroyed, and their name to bee extinguished as the Sugambri had beene rooted out aforetime, annoied the Romanes with so dangerous a Warre, by intercepting their Bands of auxiliary forces, by putting to flight that Legion over which Marius Valens was Captaine, and by wasting the lands of their Associates; that P. Ostorius Proprætor of Britaine being tired with travaile and with the sense of these griefes and troubles gave up his ghost. Veranius also Governour under Nero, assailed them in vaine: For, whereas we reade in Tacitus; illum modicis excursibus sylvas populatum esse, that is, That he made spoile and forraied the woods with small outrodes; reade in lieu of Sylvas, that is, woods, Siluras, that is, The Silures, as our friend that most learned Liptius doth, and you shall reade aright. Yet was not this Warre husht and finished before the time of Nerva. For then, Iulius Frontinus subdued them by force, and kept them under with Bands of Legionary Souldiers. But whereas a Countreman of ours hath wrested this Verse of Iuvenal against Crispine, to these SILURES.

magnâ qui voce solebat

Vendere municipes, fratrâ de merce Siluros.

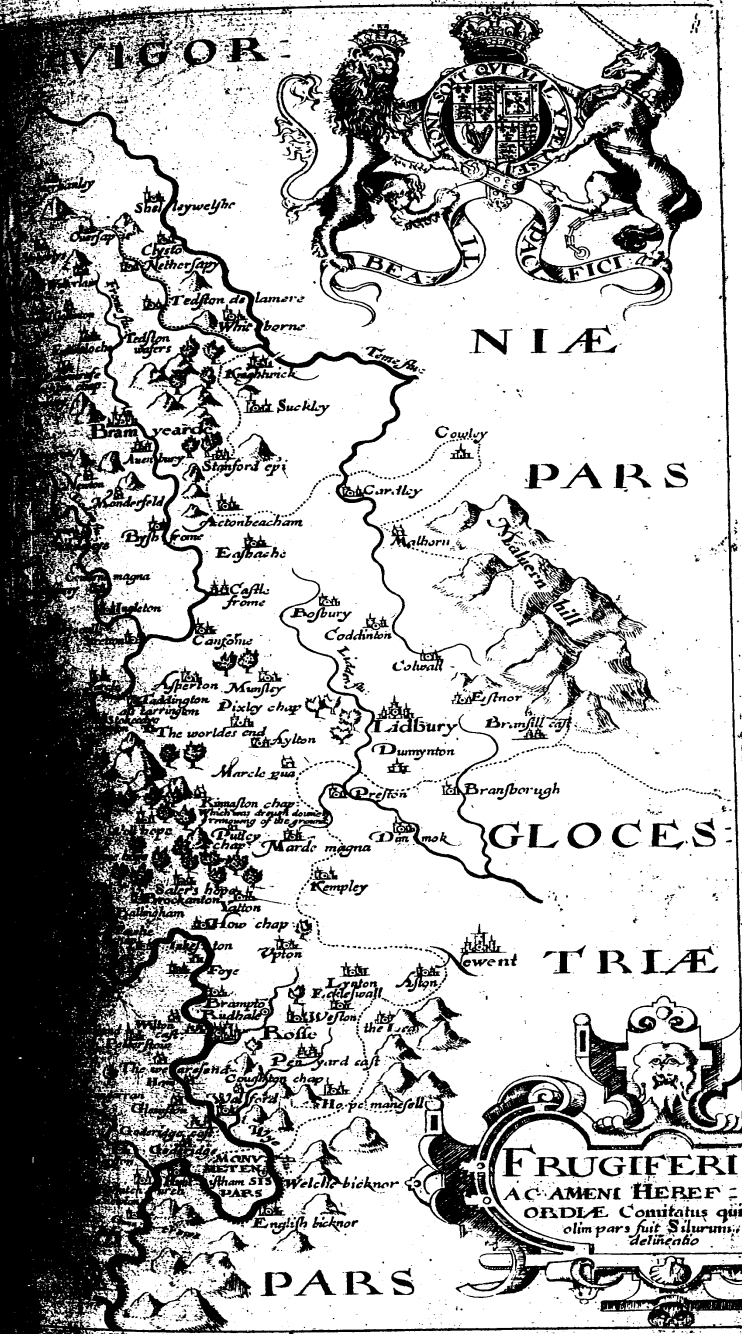

Who with lowd voice, was wont, and knew full well,
Of broken ware, his country fish, the Sturgions for to sell.

As though our Silures being taken prisoners were set to sale at Rome: upon my credite he hath not attained to the right and proper sense of the Poet: For by that word Siluros he that will reade the place and weigh it well, shall easily perceiue he spake of fishes, and not of men.

Silures mistaken for Siluros.

HEREFORD.

419. b. 2

HEREFORD-SHIRE.

THE County which we call HEREFORD-SHIRE, and the Britans name Ereimuc, lying in compasse round, as it were a Circle, is bounded on the East side with Worcester, and Gloucester-shires, on the South with Monmouth-shire, on the West side with Radnor and Brecknor-shires, and on the North with Shropshire. This County besides that it is right pleasant, is for yeelding of Corne, and feeding of Cattaille, in all places most fruitfull, and therewith passing well furnished with all things necessary for mans life: In so much, as it would seeme to come behinde any one Country throughout all England for fertility of Soile, and therefore say that for three W.W.W. wheat, wooll, and water it yeeldeth to no Shire of England. And verily, it hath also diverse notable rivers, namely Wye, Lug and Munow, which after they have watered the most flowing meddowes and fruitfull corne fields, at length meet together and in one chanell passe on to the Severn sea.

Munow springing out of Hatterell hilles, which resembling a chaire doe rise aloft, and fense this shire on the South-West, as it descendeth downe, first strugleth to passe through by the foote of the said hilles to Blestium, a towne which Antonine the Emperour so placeth that for situation and distance it can bee no other than that, which standing by the side of this River is in British called Castle Huan, that is, The Old Castle, and in English, The Old Towne: A poore small Village now, but this new name is a good prooffe for the antiquity thereof: for, in both tongues it soundeth as much as an Old Castle or towne. Next unto this Old Towne, Altarynnis lieth in manner of a River-Island, insulared within waters: the seat in old time of that ancient family of the Sissils or Cecils, knights, whence my right honourable Patron, accomplished with all the ornaments of vertue, wisdom, and Nobility, Sir William Cecil, Baron of Burghley, and Lord high Treasurer of England derived his descent.

From hence, Munow turning Eastward, for a good space separateth this Country from Monmouth-shire and at Castle Map-harald, or Harold Ewias, is encreased with the River Dor. This Ewias Castle (that I may speake out of K. William the first his Booke) was repaired by Alured of Marleberg. Afterwards it pertained to one Harold a Gentleman, who in a Shield argent bare a Fesse Geules betweene three Estoiles Sable for his Armes: of whom it beganne to bee called Harold Ewias: but Sihyll his niece in the second degree and one of the heires, by her marriage transferred it to the Lords of Tregoz, frō whom it came at length to the Lords of Grandison descended out of Burgundie. But of them elsewhere. Now the said Dor, which running downe frō the North by Snod-hill, a Castle, and the Barony sometime of Robert Chandos (where is a quarry of excellent marble) cutteth through the midst of the Vale, which of the River the Britans call Diffin Dore: but the Englishmen that they might seeme to expresse the force of that word termed it the Gilden Vale, which name it may by good right and justly have, for the golden, wealthy and pleasant fertility thereof. For, the hills that compasse it in, on both sides are clad with woods, under the woods lie corne fields on either hand, and under those fields most gay and gallant meddowes: then runneth in the midst between them a most cleere and crystall River, on which Robert Lord of Ewias placed a faire Monastery, wherein most of the Nobility and Gentry of these parts were intēred.

Part of this shire, which from this Vale declineth and bendeth Eastward, is now called Irchenfeld, in Domesday Booke Archensfeld, which, as our Historians write, was layd waste with fire and sword by the Danes in the yeere 715, at what time Canalac also a Britan Bishop was carried away prisoner. In this part stood Kilpeck a Castle of great name, and the seat it was of the noble Family of the Kilpecks, who were as some say the Champions to the Kings of England in the first age of the Normans: And I my selfe also will easily assent unto them. In the Raigne of Edward the First, there dwelt

The River
Munow.Blestium.

Old towne.

Altarynnis.The seat of the Cecils.Harold Ewias.
The Family of Ewias.
Their coat of Armes.Tregoz and Grandison.
Pag. 286.
Snod hill.Marble.Gilden Vale.Irchenfeld.Kilpeck.

dwelt here Sir Robert Wallerond, whose nephew Alane Plugenet lived in the honorable state of a Baron. In this Archenfeld likewise, as wee read in Domesday booke, certaine revenewes by an old custome were assigned to one or two Priests, on this condition that they should goe in Embassages for the Kings of England into Wales, and to use the words out of the same booke, The men of Archenfeld, whensoever the Army marcheth forward against the enemy by a custome make the Avantgard, and in the returne homeward, the Rereward.

The river Wy.
Clifford
Castle.

The Clifford.
Inquisit. E. 1.

The Profound Dochour.

Hereford.

Kenchester.

As Munow runneth along the lower part of this shire, so Wy with a bending course cutteth over the middest; upon which River in the very West limit Clifford Castle standeth; which, William Fitz Osborn Earle of Hereford built upon his own Wast (as it is in King William the Conquerours booke) but Raulph de Tudeney held it. Afterward it seemeth to have come unto Walter the sonne of Richard Fitz Punt a Norman; for he was surnamed De Clifford, and from him the right honorable family of the Earles of Cumberland doe truly deduce their descent. But in the daies of King Edward the First, John Giffard who married the heire of Walter L. Clifford had it in his hands. Then Wy with a crooked and winding streame rolleth downe by Whitney, which hath given name to a worshipfull Family, and by Bradwardin Castle, which gave both original and name to that famous Thomas Bradwardin Archbishop of Canterbury, who for his variety of knowledge, and profound learning, was in that age teamed The Profound Doctour: and so at length cometh to Hereford the head City of this Countrey.

How farre that little Region Archenfeld reached I know not, but the affinity betweene these names, Ercinuc, Archenfeld, the towne ARICONIUM, of which Antonine in the description of this Tract maketh mention, and Hereford or Hareford, which now is the chiefe City of the Shire, have by little and little induced mee to this opinion, that I thinke every one of these was derived from ARICONIUM. Yet doe I not thinke that Ariconium and Hereford were both one and the same: but like as Basil in Germany chalenged unto it the name of Augusta Rauracorum, and Baldach in Assyria the name of Babylon, for that as the one had original from the ruines of Babylon, so the other from the ruines of Augusta: even so this Hariford of ours (for so the common people call it) derived both name and beginning, in mine opinion, from his neighbour old ARICONIUM, which hath at this day no shape or shew at all of a Towne: as having bene by report, shaken to peeces with an earthquake. Onely it retaineth still a shadow of the name, being called Kenchester, and sheweth to the beholders some ruines of walles, which they tearme Kenchester walles; about which are often digged up foure square paving stones of Checker worke, Brittain bricke, peeces of Romane money and other such like remaines of Antiquity. But Hereford, her daughter, which more exprefly resembleth the name thereof, standeth Eastward scarce three Italian miles from it, seated among most pleasant meadows and as plentifull corne fields, compassed almost round about with Rivers, on the North side and on the West with one that hath no name, on the South side with Wy, that hath hastneth hither out of Wales. It is thought to have shewed her head first what time as the Saxons Hepharchie was in the flower and prime, built as some write by King Edward the Elder: neither is there, as farre as I have read, any memory thereof more ancient. For the Britans, before the name of Hereford was knowne, called the place Trefawith, of Beech trees: and Hereford of an Old way; and the Saxons themselves Fepn-leg of ferns. The greatest increase, if I be not deceived, that it had, came by Religion and by the Martyrdome of Ethelbert King of the East England. Who when he wooed himselfe the daughter of Offa K. of the Mercians, was villanously laid and murdered by the procurement of Quendred, Offa's wife, respecting more the countries of the East England, than the honest and honorable match of her daughter: which Ethelbert being registred in the Catalogue of Martyrs, had a Church here built and dedicated unto him by Milfrid a pety K. of the country, wherein when a Bishop's See was established, it grew to great wealth, first, through the devout liberality of the Mercians, and then of the West Saxons kings: for they at length were possessed of this City, as may be gathered out of William of Malmesbury, where he writeth, That Asbelitan the West Saxon brought the Lords of Wales in this City to so hard passage, that by way of Tribute they were to pay every yeere (besides Hounds and Hanks) twenty pounds of gold, and three hundred pound of silver by weights. This Citie as farre as I can read, had never any misfortune, unlesse it were in the yeere of our Lord 1055. wherein Gruffith Prince of South Wales, and Algar an English man, rebelling against King Edward the Confessor, after they had put to flight Earle Ralph, sacked the Citie, destroyed the Cathedrall Church, and led away captive Leofgar the Bishop. But Harold straightwaies after that hee had daunted their audacious courage, fenced it, as Floriacensis saith, with a broad and high Rampier. Hence it is, that Malmesbury writeth thus in his treatise of Bishops, Hereford is no great Citie, and yet by the beight of those steepe and upright bankes cast up, it sheweth that it hath bene some great thing: and, as wee read in the Domesday booke of King William the Conquerour: there were in all but an hundred and three men within the Walles and without.

793.
S. Ethelbert
Martyr.

The Normans afterwards neere the East end of the Church along the side of Wy, built a mighty great and strong Castle: the worke as some report, of Earle Niles, which now yeeldeth to Time, and runneth to ruine. After this, they walled the Citie about. Bishop Reinelm, in the reigne of Henry the First founded that beautifull Cathedrall Church, which now we see there, whose successours enlarged it by adjoyning thereto a proper Colledge for Priests, and faire houses for the Prebendaries. For, besides the Bishop who hath 302. Churches in his Diocese, there are in this Church, a Deane, two Archdeacons, a Chaunter, a Chauncellour, a Treasurer and eight and twenty Prebendaries. In the Church, I saw in manner no Monuments, but the Bishops Tombes. And I have heard that Thomas Cantlow the Bishop, a man of Noble birth, had here a very stately and sumptuous Sepulcher, who for his holinesse being canonized a Saint, went within a little of surmounting that princely Martyr King Ethelbert, such was the opinion of singular pietie and devotion. Geographers measure the position or site of this Citie by the Longitude of twenty degrees and foure and twenty scruples: and by the Latitude of two and fifty degrees and sixe scruples.

Wy is not gone full three miles from hence, but he intercepteth by the way the river Lug, who running downe a maine out of Radnor hills, with a still course passeth through the mids of this country, from the North-west to the South-east. At the first entrance, it seeth a farre off, Brampton Brian Castle, which, a famous family named hereof de Brampton, wherein the forname was usually Brian, held by continuall succession unto the time of King Edward the First: but now, by the female heires it is come to R. Harleie: neere at hand it beholdeth Wigmore, in the English Saxons tongue Wynzinga-mene, repaired in elder times by King Edward the elder, afterward, fortified by William Earle of Hereford with a Castle, in the wast of a ground (for so reade we in Domesday booke) which was called Mareitum, in the tenure of Radulph de Marimer, from whom those Marimers that were afterwards Earles of March lineally descended, of whom, you may reade more in Radnor shire. Three miles off, there is another neighbour Castle, called Richards Castle, the possession first of the Sages, then of the Marimers, and afterwards of the Talbots by hereditarie succession. At length by the heires of Sir John Talbot, the inheritance was divided betweene Sir Gharin Archdeacon and Sir Matthew Gurnay. Beneath this Castle, Nature, who no where disporteth her selfe more in shewing wonders, then in waters, hath brought forth a pretty well, which is alwaies full of little fish bones, or as some thinke, of small frog-bones, although they be from time to time drawne quite out of it; whence it is commonly called Bone well. And not farre off, is placed Croft Castle, the possession of that very ancient family of the Croft Knights, who have there now a long time flourished in great and good esteeme.

Thence passeth Wy to Lemster, which also was called Leon Minster, and Lions Monastery, of a Lyon that appeared to a religious man in a vision (as some have dreamed.)

Fff 2

But

Brampton
Brian.

Wigmore;

Barons More
timor.

Richards
Castle.
Lords of Ri chards Castle.

Bone well.

Lemster.

But whereas the Britans call it Lban Lieni: which signifieth a Church of Nunnes, and that it is certainly knowne, that Merewale a King of the Mercians, built here a Church for Nunnes (that afterwards became a Cell belonging to the Monastery of Reading) to seeke any other originall of the name, than from those Nunnes: what were it else but to hunt after the windes? Yet there want not some, who derive it from Line, whereof the best kinde groweth here. The greatest name and fame that it hath at this day is of the wooll in the territories round about it, (Lemster Ore they call it) which setting aside that of Apulia and Tarentum all Europe counteth to be the very best. So renowned also it is for Wheat, and bread of the finest flour, that Lemster bread and Webley Ale (a towne belonging to the noble Familie D'Eareux) are growne unto a common proverbe. By reason of these commodities the mercates at Lemster were so frequented, that they of Hereford and Worcester complaining that the confluence of people thither impaired their mercates, procured that by Royall authoritie the mercat day was changed. Now have I nothing more concerning Lemster, but that William Breos Lord of Brecknock, when hee revolted from King John, did set it on fire and defaced it. As for that Webley aforesaid, it is situate more within the Country, and was the Baronie of the Perdons: the first of which house named Bertram de Verdon came into England with the Normans, whose posteritie by marriage with an inheretrix of Laccies of Trim in Ireland, were for a good while hereditary Constables of Ireland: and at last the possessions were by the daughters devolved to the Furnivalls, Burghersh, Ferrars of Grobby, Crop-hulls, and from the Crop-hulls by the Ferrars of Charly, unto D'Encreux Earles of Essex. Neere neighbours unto Webley, more Westward are these places, Huntingdon Castle, the possession in times past of the Bobuns Earles of Hereford and of Essex (Kimmerly), belonging to the ancient Familie De la-bere, and Erdley: where the ancient Familie of the Baskervills, have long inhabited, which bred in old time so many worthy Knights, who deduce their pedigree from a Neice of Dame Gunora that most famous Lady in Normandy, and long agoe flourished in this County and Shropshire adjoining, and held, (that I may note so much by the way) the Hamlet of Lanton in chiefe, as of the Honour of Montgomery, by the service of giving to the King a barbed Arrow, whensoever he cometh into those parts to hunt in Cornedon Chase.

Lugg hasteneth now to Wy, first by Hampton, where that worthy Knight Sir Anland Lemhal, who (being Maister of the Wardrobe unto King Henry the Fourth, had married one of the heires of Thomas Earle of Arundell) built a passing faire house, which the Coningsberes (men of good worship and great name in this tract) have now a good long time inhabited: then, by Marden and Somerton, or Sutton: of which twaine, Sutton sheweth some small remaines of King Offas Palace, so infamous for the murdering of Ethelbert: and Marden is counted famous for the Tombe of the said Ethelbert, who had lien heere a long time without any glorious memoriall, before that he was translated to Hereford.

Neere unto the place where Lugg and Wy meete together, Eastward, a hill which they call Marcley hill, in the yeere of our redemption, 1571. (as though it had weakened upon the suddaine out of a deepe sleepe) roused it selfe up, and for the space of three daies together mooving and shewing it selfe (as mighty and huge an heape as it was) with roring noise in a fearefull sort, and overturning all things that stood in the way, advanced it selfe forward to the wonderous astonishment of the beholders: by that kinde of Earthquake which as I deeme, naturall Philosophers call Brismathus. And not farre from this hill, toward the East also, under Malvern hills (which in this place bound the East part of this shire) standeth Ledbury upon the River Laden, a Towne well knowne, which Edwin the Saxon, a man of great power, gave unto the Church of Hereford, being assuredly perswaded that by Saint Ethelberts intercession he was delivered from the Palfey. Touching the Military fort on the near hill, need not to speake, seeing that in this tract which was in the Marches, and the ordinary fighting ground place, first betweene the Romanes and Britans, afterwards betweene the Britans and the English, such holds and entrenchments are to be seene

Lemster Ore
the best wooll, Lemster bread and Webley Ale.

Webley: Barons Ver-dons,

Baskerville.
See Gemition,
lib. ult.

Fin. Hilarii 20.
Ed.3.

Marden, Sutton.

Marcley hill.

A Mountaine
mooving.

A in many places. But Wy now carrying a full streame, after it hath entertained Lugg runneth downe with more bendings and bowings, first by Holm Lacy, the seate of the ancient and noble Familie of Scudamore unto which accrewed much more worship by marriage with an heire out of the race of Emias in this shire, and Huntercombe, &c. else where. From hence passeth Wy downe betweene Rosse, made a free Burrough by King Henry the Third, now well knowne by reason of Iron Smiths and Wilton over against it, a most ancient Castle of the Grews, whence so many worthy Barons of that name have drawne their originall. This was built as men say by Hugh de Long-champ, but upon publique and certaine credit of Records it appeareth, that King John gave Wilton with the Castle to H. de Longchamp; and that by marriage it fell to William Fitz-Hugh, and likewise not long after to Reinold Grey in the daies of King Edward the first. Now, when Wy hath a little beneath saluted Goderich Castle, which King John gave unto William Earle Mareschall, and was afterward for a time the principall seate of the Talbots, hee speedeth himselfe to Monmouth-shire, and bids Hereford-shire farewell.

When the state of the English-Saxons was now more than declining to the downe-fall, Ralph sonne to Walter Medantinus by Goda King Edward the Confessor's sister, governed this Countie, as an Official Earle: but he infamous for base cowardise, was by William the Conquerour remooved, and William Fitz-Osbern of Crepin a martiall Norman who had subdued the Isle of Wight, and was neere allied to the Dukes of Normandy, was substituted in his place: When he was slaine in assistance of the Earle of Flanders, his sonne Roger surnamed De Breteville succeeded, and soone after for conspiracie against the Conquerour was condemned to perpetuall prison, and therein died leaving no lawfull issue. Then King Stephen granted to Robert Le Bosse Earle of Leicester who had married Emme or Itta (as some call her) heire of Breteville (to use the words of the Graunt) the Burrough of Hereford, with the Castle, and the whole County of Hereford, but all in vaine. For Maude the Emperesse who contended with King Stephen for the Crowne, advanced Miles the sonne of Walter Constable of Glocester unto this Honour, and also granted to him Constabulariam Curie sue, i. The Constablership of her Court, whereupon his posteritie were Constables of England, as the Marhallship was granted at the first, by the name of Magistratus Marescallia Curie nostre. Howbeit, Stephen afterwards stript him out of these Honours which he had received from her.

This Miles had five sonnes, Roger, Walter, Henry, William, and Mahel, men of especiall note, who were cut off every one issuelesse by untimely death, after they had all but William, succeeded one another in their Fathers inheritance. Unto Roger King Henry the Second among other things gave, The Mote of Hereford with the whole Castle, and the third peny issuing out of the revenewes of Places of the whole County of Hereford, whereof he made him Earle. But after Roger was deceased, the same King, if wee may believe Robert Abbot De Monte, kept the Earledome of Hereford to himselfe.

The eldest sister of these named Margaret, was married to Humfrey Bohun the third of that name, and his heires were high Constables of England, namely, Humfrey Bohun the Fourth; Henry his sonne, unto whom King John granted twenty pounds yearly to be received out of the third penny of the County of Hereford, whereof he made him Earle. This Henry married the sister and heire of William Mandevill Earle of Essex, and died in the fourth yeere of Henry the Third his reigne: Humfrey the Fifth his sonne, who was also Earle of Essex: whose sonne Humfrey the Sixth of that forename died before his Father, having first begotten Humfrey the Seventh by a daughter and one of the heires of William Breos Lord of Brecknock: His sonne Humfrey the Eighth was slaine at Burtonbrigg, leaving by Elizabeth his wife, daughter unto King Edward the First and the Earle of *Holland*s widow, among other children, namely, Iohn Bohun, Humfrey the Ninth, both Earles of Hereford and Essex, and dying without issue: and William Earle of Northampton, unto whom Elizabeth a daughter

Scudamore or Elscudamor.

Wiltoni Barons Grey de Wilton,

Goderich
Castle.

*
Earles of Hereford.

Constables of England.

1156.

a. Par. Chart.
an. 1. Reg.
Joan.
Matth. Paris
Joan.
The booke of Walden.
The booke of Lanthyony Monastery.

Henry the Fourth King
of England.

daughter and one of the heires of Giles Lord Badlesmer, bare Humfrey Bobus the Tenth and last of the Bobus who was Earle of Hereford, Essex, and Northampton, Constable besides of England: who left two Daughters, Æleanor the Wife of Thomas of Woodstock Duke of Gloucester, and Mary, wedded to Henry of Lancaster Earle of Darby, who was created Duke of Hereford, and afterwards Crowned King of England. But after this, Edward Stafford last Duke of Buckingham was filied Earle of Hereford, for that hee descended from Thomas of Woodstock his Daughter, who was after remarried to Sir William Burchier called Earle of Eu. And in our memorie, King Edward the Sixth Honoured Walter D'Enreux, the Lord Ferrars of Charley descended by the Bourghiers from the Bobus, with the title of Vicount Hereford, whole Grand-sonne Walter Vicount Hereford, Queene Elizabeth created afterwards Earle of Essex.

There are contained in this County Parishes 176.

RADNOR;

RADNOR

Comitatus quem SILVRES
olim Incoluerunt

RADNORSHIRE.

Pon Hereford-shire, on the North-West, joyneth Radnor-shire, in the British tongue, Sire Maisveith; in forme three square, and the farther West it goeth, the narrower still it groweth. On the South-side, the River Wy separateth it from Brecknock-shire, and on the North part, lieth Montgomery-shire. The East and South parts thereof bee more fruitfull than the rest, which lying uneven and rough with Mountaines, is hardly bettered by painfull Husbandry: yet it is stored well enough with Woods, watered with running Rivers, and in some places with standing Meres. The East-side hath to beautifie it, besides other Castles of the Lords Marchers, now all buried well neere, in their owne ruines, Castle Paine; built and so named of Paine a Norman; and Castle Colwen, which, if I be not deceived, was sometime called the Castle of Maud in Colewent. For a very famous Castle that was, and Robert de Todeney a great Noble man, in the reigne of Edward the Second was Lord of it. It is verily thought, that it belonged aforetime to the Brecons, Lords of Brecknock, and to have taken the name from Mande of Saint Valerie, a very shrewd, stout, and malapert stomackfull woman, wife to William Breos, who discovered a rebellious minde against King John. Which Castle being cast downe by the Welsh, King Henry the Third, in the yeere 1231. reedified strongly with stone, and called it in despite of Lhewellin Prince of Wales Maugre Lhewellin. But of especiall name is Radnor the principall Towne of the whole Shire, in British Maisveith, faire built, as the maner of that Country is, with thatched houses. In times past it was firmly fenced with a Wall and Castle; but after that Owen Glendower dwy that notable Rebell had burnt it, it began by little and little to decrease, and grow to decay, tasting of the same fortune that the mother thereof did before, I meane Old Radnor, called in British Maisveith hean, and for the high situation Pencraig; which in the reigne of King John, Rhese Ap Gruffin had set on fire. If I should say, that this Maisveith or Radnor was that ancient Citie MAGI, which Antonine the Emperour seemeth to call MAGNOS, where, as we finde in the booke of Notices, the Commander of the Pacensian Regiment lay in garkison, under the Lieutenant, or Lord Generall of Britaine, in the reigne of Theodosius the younger; in mine owne opinion surely, and perhaps in other mens conceit also, I should not vary from the truth. For we read in Writers of the middle age, of inhabitants of this coast called MAGESETÆ; also of Earles Masegetenses and Magefetesenses: and the distance, if it be counted both from Gobannium or Abergevenny, and also from Branganium or Worcester, differeth scarce an haire bredth from Antonines computation. Scarce three miles Eastward from hence, you see Prestaine, in British Lhan Andre, that is, Saint Andrews Church; which of a very little village within the memorie of our Grandfathers, is by the meanes of Richard Martin Bishop of Saint David, growne now to be so great a mercate Towne and faire withall, that at this day it dammereth and dimmeth the light in some sort of Radnor. From whence also scarce foure miles off, stands Knighton, a Towne able to match with Prestaine, called in British, as I have heard say Trebachlo, in steed of Trefsclandh, of a famous dorch lying under it, which Offa King of the Mercians with admirable worke and labour, caused to be cast from Dee-Mouth unto Wy-Mouth, by this Towne, for the space of fourescore and ten miles, to separate the Britans from his Englishmen: whereupon, in British it is called Claudh Offa, that is, Offas ditch. Concerning which, John of Salisbury in his Policraticon writeth thus. Harald ordained a law, that what Welshmen forever should be found with a weapon, on this side the limit which he had set them, that is to say, Offas Dike, he should have his right hand cut off by the Kings Officers.

When yee are past this place, all the ground that lieth toward the West and South

Castle Colwen, or Mauds Castle
in Colwent,

Math. Paris,
Radnor,

Owen Glendower,

Magesetæ,

Prestaine,

Knighton,

Offa Dike,

South limits, being for the most part barren, leane, and hungry, is of the inhabitants called Melienish, for that the Mountaines be of a yellowish colour. Yet remaine there many footings as it were of Castles to be seene heere and there, but especially Kevenles and Timbed which standing upon a sharpe poynted hill, Llewellyn Prince of Wales overthrew in the yeere 1260.

This Melienish reacheth as farre as to the River Wy, which cutteth overthwart the West corner of this shire, and being hindered in his streame with stones lying in his way, upon a suddaine for want of ground to glide on, hath a mighty and violent downefall: whereupon the place is tearmed, Raibader Gowy, that is, The fall or Fludgates of Wy: And I cannot tell, whether thereupon that British word Raibader, the English men forged this name first for the whole shire, and afterwards for the chiefe Towne. By this Fludgate or fall of the water there was a Castle which Rhefe Prince of Southmales (as we reade) repaired under King Richard the First. Hard by, there is in some sort a vast and wide wilderness, hideous after a sort to behold, by reason of the turning and crooked by-waies and craggie Mountaines, into which as the safest place of refuge, Vortigern that pestilent wretch and bane of his native Country, odious both to God and man, and (whose memory the Britains may with damned) withdrew himselfe, when after he had called the Saxons into this Iland, and in horrible incest married his owne daughter. And heere he fell at length too too late into serious consideration of the greatnesse of his vile and wicked acts. But by revenging fire from Heaven, the flying dart of God above, he was burnt with his Citie Caer Guartigern, which he had heere built for his refuge. And not farre from hence, as if the place had beene fatall, not onely this Vortigern the last Monarch of British blood, but also Llewellyn the last Prince of Wales of the British race being forelaid, was slaine by Adam Franchion in the yeere of our Redemption 1282. Of the said Vortigern, Ninnius nameth a little Country heere Guortiger-maur; neither is that name as yet altogether lost: but of the Citie, there remaineth no memory at all, but out of writers. Some are of opinion, that Guthremion Castle arose out of the ruins and rubbish thereof, which in the yeere 1201. the Welsh for malice they bare to Roger Lord Mortimer and in spite of him laid even with the ground. Moreover, this part of the Country was in old time called Guarthemion, as Ninnius testifieth, who wrote, that the said wicked Vortigern, when he was plainly and sharply reprooved by that godly Saint German, did not onely not turne from his lewd and licentious life to the worship and service of God, but also let flie slanderous speeches against that most holy man: Wherefore, Vortimer the sonne of Vortigern, as Ninnius saith, for the slander which his Father had raised of Saint German, decreed, that he should have the land as his owne for ever, wherein he had suffered so reprochfull an abuse: whereupon, and to the end that Saint German might be had in memory, it was called Guarthemion, which signifieth in English, A slander justly retorted.

The Mortimers, descended from the Niece of Genora Wife of Richard the First, Duke of Normandie, were the first Normans that having discomfited the English Saxon Edricke Sylvaicus, that is, The wild, wonne a great part of this little Country to themselves: And after they had a long time beene eminent above all others in these parts, at length King Edward the Third, about the yeere of Salvation 1328. Created Roger Mortimer Lord of Wigmore, Earle of this Welsh limit, or, according to the common speech, Earle of March, who soone after was sentenced to death, because he had insulted upon the Common-wealth, favoured the Scots to the prejudice of England, conversed over familiarly with the Kings mother, and contrived the destruction and death of King Edward the Second, the Kings Father. He by his Wife Joan Jenevell, (who brought him rich revenewes, as well in Ireland as in England) had Edmund his Sonne, who felt the smart of his Fathers wickednesse, and lost both patrimonie and title of Earle. Howbeit, his Sonne Roger was fully restored, recovered the title of Earle of March and was chosen a fellow of the order of the Garter, at the first institution thereof. This Roger begat of Philip Montacute, Edmund Earle of March: and he tooke to Wife Philip the only daughter of Leonell Duke of Clarence the third sonne of King Edward the Third, whereby came unto him the Earldome of Ulster in Ireland and the Lordship of Clare. After he had ended his life in Ireland where he governed with great commendation, his sonne Roger succeeded, being both Earle of March and Ulster, whom King Richard the Second declared heire apparent, and his successor to the Crowne, as being in right of his Mother the next and undoubted heire. But he dying before king Richard, left issue, Edmund and Anne. Edmund, in regard of his Royall blood and right to the Crowne stood greatly suspected to Henrie the Fourth, who had usurped the kingdome; and by him was first exposed unto dangers, in so much as he was taken by Owen Glendour a Rebelle, and afterward whereas the Percies purposed to advance his right, he was conveyed into Ireland, kept almost twenty yeeres prisoner in the Castle of Trim suffering all miseries incident to Prisoners of the blood while they lie open to every suspicion; and there through extreame griefe ended his daies, leaving his sister Anne his heire.

She was married to Richard Earle of Cambridge, in whose right, his heires and posterity were Earles of March, and made claime to the kingdome, which in the end also they obtained, as wee will shew in another place. In which respect King Edward the Fourth created his eldest Sonne being Prince of Wales, Duke of Cornwall, &c. Earle of March also, for a further augmentation of his Honour. As for the title of Rad-nor, no man ever bare it to my knowledge.

See in Yorkshire, toward the end.

In this are Parishes 52.

BRECKNOCK;

BRECHNOCK-SHIRE.

Beneath Radnor-shire Southward lyeth BRECHNOCK-SHIRE, in the British Brechineau so named, as the Welshmen relate, of a Prince named Brechanius, whom they report to have had a great, and an holy Offspring, to wit, twenty foure Daughters all Saints. Farre greater this is than Radnor-shire, but thicker set with high Hilles; yet are the valleys fruitfull every where. On the East side it is bounded with Hereford-shire. On the South with Monmouth, and Glamorgan-shires: and on the West with Caermarden-shire. But seeing there is nothing memorable or materiall to the description of this small Province, which is not set downe by the curious diligence of Giraldus Cambrensis who was an Arch-deacon heereof above foure hundred yeres since. I thinke I may doe well for my selfe to hold my peace a while, and to admit him with his stile into the fellowship of this labour.

Brecknocke, saith hee, in his Booke called Itinerarium Cambria, is a Country having sufficient store of Corne; and if there bee any defect thereof, it is plentifully supplied out of the fruitfulness of England bordering so neere upon it; a Country likewise well stored with pastures and Woods, with wilde Deere and herds of Cattle, having abundance beside of fresh water fish, wherewith Piske on the one side and Wy on the other serveth it: For, both these Rivers are full of Salmones and Trouts, but Wy of the twaine is the better, affording the best kinde of them which they call Vmbras. Enclosed it is on every side with high hilles, unlesse it be on the North part. In the West it hath the mountaines of Camerbochan: On the South side likewise the Southern mountaines, the chiefe wherof is called Cadier Arthur, that is, Arthurs chaire, of the two toppes of the same (for it is soe, that is, shaped with two capes) resembling the forme of a Chaire. And for that the Chaire standeth very high and upon a steepe downefall, by a common tearme it was assigned to Arthur, the greatest and mightiest King of the Britans. In the very pitch and top of this hill, there walmeth forth a spring of water: And this fontaine in manner of a Well is deepe, but foure square, having no brooke or Riveres issuing from it, yet are there Trouts found therein. And therefore having these barres on the South side, the aire is the colder, defendeth the Country from the excessive heat of the Sunne, and by a certaine naturall wholsomnesse of the aire, maketh it most temperate. But on the East side the mountaines of Talgar and Ewias doe as it were fence it.

On the North side, as he said, it is more open and plaine, namely where the River Wy severeth it from Radnor-shire, by which stand two Townes well knowne for their antiquity, Buelth and Hay. Buelth is pleasantly situate with Woods about it, fortified also with a Castle, but of a later building, by the Breose and Morimers, when as Rhese ap Gruffin had rased the ancient Castle. Now, the Mercate much resorted unto maketh it more famous thereabout, but in times past it seemeth to have bene for the owne worth of great name, because Ptolomee observed the position thereof according to the Longitude and Latitude: who called it BULEUM SILURUM. Of this towne the country lying round about it, being rough and full of hills, is named Buelth: wherein, when as the Saxons were now spoiling and harrying the whole Island, and Fortigern had withdrawne himselfe into these parts, Pascentius his sonne ruled all as Lord, by the permission of Aurelius Ambrose, as Ninnius writeth, who in his Chapter of Mervails, reporteth I wot not what wondrous thing heere, of a heape of stones, wherein, forsooth, was plainly to be seene the footing of King Arthurs hound. And as for Hay, which in British is called Trekethle, that is, The Towne in a grove of Hay. Haskell trees, in the very utmost skirt of this Shire next unto Hereford-shire, it standeth hard by the river Wye: well knowne, as it seemeth to the Romans, whose coines is often digged up there, and it sheweth also by the ruines, that in old time it was walled. But being being now as it were decayed it complaineth of that most lewde Rebell Owen Glendower for his furious outrages, who in wasting and spoiling all those Countries, most villanously did depopulate it and set it on fire.

As this River Wy washeth the Northside of this Shire, so doth Uske a notable River likewise runne through the midst thereof, which Uske springing out of the Blacke-Mountaine, passeth along with a shallow streame, beside Brecknock the Shire Towne, standing in the very heart in manner of the Country, which the Britans call Aber-Hodney, because the two Rivers Hodney and Uske doe meet in that place. That this Towne was inhabited in the Romans time, appeareth by the Coines of Roman Emperours now and then digged up heere. Bernard Newmarch, who conquered this little Shire, built heere a goodly great Castle, which the Breuses and Bobuns repaired: and in our fathers remembrance King Henry the Eighth in the Friery of the Dominicans appointed a Collegiat Church of foureteene Prebendaries, which hee translated hither from Aberguilly in Caer-Marden-shire.

Two miles hence Eastward, there spreads it selfe abroad a large Poole, which the Britans call Linsavethan and Linsavathen, that is, A Lake of standing water, Giraldus termeth it Clamosum, that is, Clamorous, or Crying loud, because it maketh a strange noise like thunder, as often as the Yce thereon doth thaw. In English we name it Brecknock-Meere. Two miles it is in length and as much in bredth: breeding in times past many Otters, now full of Peaches, Tenches, and Eeles, which the Fishers rowing in small pliant botes doe take.

Leveney a little River, after it is runne into this Poole keepeth his owne hew and color still by himselfe, as disdaining to be mingled therewith, (which the very color sheweth) is thought to carry out his owne water entertained a while there by the way, and no more than hee brought in with him. It hath bene a currant speech of long continuance among the neighbours thereabout, that where now the Marston there was in times past a City, which being swallowed up in an earthquake, resigned up the place unto the waters. And beside other reasons, they allege this for one, that all the high waies of this Shire come directly hither on every side. Which if it be true, what other City should a man thinke stood by the River Leveney, than Loventium, which Ptolomee placeth in this tract: and in no place hitherto could I finde it (albeit I searched diligently for it) either by the name, or situation, or ruines remaining. Marianus Scotus (which I had almost forgotten) seemeth to call this Lake Bricenau Meere, who recordeth that Edelfled the Mercian Lady, in the yeece 913, entred into the lahd of the Britans to win by assault a Castle at Bricenau Meere; and that she tooke there the King of the Britans wife prisoner. Whether this Castle were Brecknock it selfe or Castle Dinas, which standeth over it upon a rocky hill, and which the higher it riseth the slenderer and smaller it becometh, it is not certainly knowne. But that Blean Lavency Castle hard by, was the chiefe place of the Barony, that Petre Fitz Herbert the sonne of Herbert Lord of Dean-forest by Lacy the daughter of Miles Earle of Hereford held, appeareth evidently upon Record.

In the Raigne of King William Rufus, Bernard Newmarch the Norman, a man both hardy and politique withall, having levied a great Army of Englishmen and Normans together, was the first that entred into this territory by force and armes, won it and wrested it out of the Welshmens hands by bloudy encounters, raised fortresses heere for his fellow souldiers (among which the chiefe were the Aubreys, Gantors, Haverds, Waldbroffes and Prichards) allotted lands and lordships, and that hee might set sure footing, and establish his seat among the Welsh, who repined maliciously at him, he tooke to wife Nessa the daughter of Gruffin: who being a woman of a shamelesse and revengefull spirit, both bereft her selfe of her owne good name, and also defeated her sonne of his inheritance. For, when Mabel the said Bernards onely sonne, did shake up in som hard and sharpe termes a young Gentleman, with whom she used more familiarly than was befitting: shee, as the Poet saith, iram atque amoris crimine sumens, growing angry and stomachfull upon this impuration, tooke her corporall oath before King Henry the Second, and protested that her sonne Mabel was begotten in adultery, and not by Bernard her Husband: whereupon Mabel being disinherited, Sibyl his sister entred upon that faire Inheritance, and with the same enriched her Husband Miles, Earle of Hereford. But after that five sonnes of Miles died without issue, this Brecknock-shire in the partition of the inheritance fell to Bertha his daughter: who by Philip de Breos had a sonne William de Breos Lord of Brecknock, upon whom the seditious spirit and shrewd tongue of his wife drew a world of calamities. For when shee had with her intemperate and unbridled language contumeliously abused King John, the King thereupon (because her Husband William was very deeply indebted unto him) fell to bee quicke and rigorous in demanding the debt: But he, not able to make payment, after he had shifted it off many times, and by breaking day, still made default, in the end mortgaged unto the King three of his Castles; namely Hay, Brecknock and Radnor, and put them into his hands. But soone after, levying certaine forces, such as he could muster up in haste, upon a sudden, surprised them, slew the Garison Souldiers and wrested the said peeces perforce from them, burnt the Towne of Lemster, and thus killing, slaying and driving away booties, he made foule worke and havock every way, with all such outrages as Rebels doe commonly commit. But when the King pursued him, hee conveyed himselfe and all that he had into Ireland, plotted and combined with the Kings enemies there: yet under a colour, as if hee would make submission, hee came unto the King upon protection and assurance given of safety when he was upon his returne into Ireland. And notwithstanding many goodly promises of the contrary, he raised new stirres and troubles eftsoones in Wales: But forced in the end to leave his native Country, he died a banished man in France. As for his wife being taken prisoner, and furnished in prison (the extremest misery that can befall unto man or woman) she paid most dearly for her wicked and malapert tongue. His sonne Giles, Bishop of Hereford, by the favour and consent of King John, having recovered his fathers inheritance neglecting his nephew the right heire, left it unto his brother Reginald, whose sonne William, Lhelin Prince of Wales having taken him in bed with his wife, hanged. But by the daughters of that William, the Mortimers, Cantelows, and Bobuns Earles of Hereford entred upon a great and goodly inheritance. And this Brecknock fell in partition unto the Bobuns, and in the end by them unto the Staffords: and when Edward Stafford Duke of Buckingham was attainted, many very goodly rewenes fell unto the King in this Shire, and elsewhere.

begotten

Called also Braus and Breus.

Red Booke in the Exchequer.

It reckoneth Parishes 61.

Ggg

MONMOUTH

MONMOUTH-SHIRE.

Beneath Brechnock and Hereford-shire Southward, lyeth the County of Monmouth, commonly called in English MONMOUTH-SHIRE, in times past Went-set and Wentis-land, in British Gwent, of an ancient City so called. It is inclosed on the North side with the River Munow that separateth it from Hereford-shire: on the East side with Wye running betweene it and Glocester-shire: on the West with the River Remney, which severeth it from Glamorgan-shire, and on the South with the Severn sea, whereinto the said Rivers together with Uske, that cutteth through the middest of the Country, are discharged. As for commodities necessary to mans life, it hath not onely sufficient for it selfe, but also affoordeth them in plentifull manner to the neighbours adjoyning. The East part is full of grasse and woods: the West is somewhat hilly and stony, yet not unthankfull to the Husbandman. The people, as saith Giraldus writing of his owne age, most inured to martiall conflicts, is in feates of strength and valour right commendable, and for skill of archery and shooting farre surpassing any Country in Wales.

In the utmost angle called Ewias toward the North-West, not farre from the River Munow, among Hatterell hills which because they rise up in heighth like a chaire, they call Munith Cader, there stood Lanthony a little ancient Abbay, which Walter Lacy founded, unto whom William Earle of Hereford gave faire lands heere, and from whom are descended those renowned Lacies, worthily reputed among the most noble Conquerours of Ireland. The situation of which Abbay Giraldus Cambrensis, who knew it better than I, shall pensile it out unto you for mee. In the most deepe Valley of Ewias, saith hee, which is about an arrow-shoote over, standeth a Church of Saint Iohn Baptist, enclosed on every side in a round compasse, with hilles mounting up into the aire, covered with lead, and built sightly, as the nature of the place would permit, with an arched rooffe of stone, in a place where had stood aforetime a poore Chappell of Saint David the Archbishop, adorned onely with wilde mosse, and wreathes of claspine ivie. A fit place for true Religion, and of all the Monasteries in the Island of Britaine most convenient for Canonick Discipline, being founded first by two Eremites in the honour of an Eremite, farre removed from all stirres and noise of people, in a certaine desert and solitary nouke, seated upon the River Hodney running along the botome of the Vale, whereof and of Hodney together, it is called Lanhodeny: For, Lhan signifieth, a Church or Ecclesiasticall place. But if we will speake more exquisitely, it may be said, that the proper name of that place is in Welsh Nanthodeny: For even to this day, they that dwell thereabout call it Lhan Devi Nanthodeny. That is, Dauids Church upon the River Hodney. Now, the raine, which mountaines breed, falleth heere very often, the windes blow strong, and all Winter time almost it is continually cloudy and misty weather. And yet notwithstanding (such is the healthfull temperature of the aire, which the grosser it is, the gentler and milder it is) very seldome there are any diseases heere. The Cloisterers sitting heere in their Cloistures, when to refresh and breathe themselves they chance to looke up, they see on every side of them, over the high roofes and ridges of their houses, the tops of the hills touching as it were the skie, and the very wilde Deere for the most part, whereof there is heere great store, feeding aloft (as one would say) in the farthest Horizon or kenning of their sight. And it is betweene one and three of the clocke, or thereabouts in a faire cleere day, ere they can see heere the body of the Sonne, so much adoe he hath to get above the hill tops by that time. And a little after. The same that went of this place drew Roger Bishop of Salisbury hither, being then the chiefe Governour of the Realme under the King, who when hee had a good while considered with admiration, the nature of the place, the desert solitarinesse, the Eremeticall state and condition of the religious men there serving God without complaining, together with their conversation in every respect without murmuring and grudging, returned home to the King, and making re-

Ewias Lacy.

Lanthony.
Barons Lacy.

Saint Iohn Baptist.

Hodney

port unto him of such things there as were worth relation, when he had spent the most part of the day in commendation of the foresaid place; at length knit up all the praises thereof in this one word: What should I say more, quoth hee, All the treasure both of King and Kingdom, will not suffice to build this Cloisture: when as therefore he had held a good while as well the King as the whole Court in suspense, wondering as they did at this speech, as length hee answered the dark riddle of his words, by meaning the Cloistures of those hills, wherewith it is enclosed on every side. But heereof enough, if not too much.

Grossmont.
Skinfrith.

Historia Minor
Marth, Paris.

Monmouth.

By the River Munow are to be scene Grossmont and Skinfrith Castles belonging in times past by the grant of King John to the Breoses, afterwards to Hubers de Burgh, Earle of Kent, who, that he might calme the Court-tempests of displeasure and for the renewing of peace and recovering former favour, resigned both these and with all Blanc castle and Hanfield into the hands of King Henry the Third.

In the other corner North-Eastward, Munow and Wye at their confluence doe compasse almost round about the chiefe Towne of the Shire, and give it the name. For in the British tongue it is called Mongwy, and in ours Monmouth. On the North-side, where it is not defended with the Rivers, it was fortified with a wall and ditch. In the midst of the Towne hard by the Mercate place standeth a Castle, which, as it is thought, John Baron of Monmouth built, from whom it came to the house of Lancaster, after that King Henry the Third had taken from him all his inheritance, for that he had sided with the Barons and stood rebelliously against him, or rather, as wee read in the Kings Prerogative, because his heires had given their faith and allegiance to the Earle of Britaine in France. And ever since that time, the Towne hath flourished and bene of name in regard of their priviledges and immunities granted unto them by the Family of Lancaster. But for no one thing it is so much renowned, as for this, that it was the birth place of King Henry the Fifth that Triumpher over France, and the second ornament of English Nation. That Henry I say, who by force of armes and military prowesse maugre the French, conquered France and brought Charles the Sixth King of France to that extremity, that after a fort hee surrendered up his Crowne unto him. In regard of whose successe and fortunate exploits in Warre, John Seward a Poet in those dayes not of the lowest ranke, in a joily lofty verse thus speaketh to the English:

*Ite per extremum Tanais, pigrisque Triones,
Ite per arenam Lybiam, superate calores
Solis, & arcuos Nilii deprendite fontes, Herculeum finem, Bacchi transcurrite metas;
Angli juris eris quicquid completitur orbis.
Anglia rubra dabunt pretiosas aquora conchas,
Indus ebur, ramos Panchaia, veller a Seres:
Dum viget Henricus, dum noster vivit Achilles,
Est etenim laudes longe transgressus avitas.*

Passé on to Tanais farre remote, to frozen Northren Coast:
Through Libye dry, beyond the line where Sunnes hear parcheth most.
On forth and finde where all the springs of Nilus hidden lie,
Those pillars fixt by Hercules, and bounds that mount on hie
Surpasse; the Limit-markes also which father Bacchus pight;
For why? what all the earth contains is under Englands right.
To English shall the Red Sea yeeld the pretious pearely wilke,
Indy yvory, sweet-frank-incense Panchaa, Seres silke, Whiles Henry lives, that Champion Achilles-like of ours,
For he the praises farre surmounts of his Progenitours.

Geffrey Ap Arthur, or of Monmouth.

Monmouth glorieth also that Geffrey Ap Arthur or Arthurius Bishop of Asaph the compiler of the British History was borne and bred there: a man to say truth well skilled in

A in antiquities, but, as it seemeth, not of antique credite, so many toies and tales hee every where enterlaced out of his owne braine as he was charged while hee lived, in so much as now hee is ranged among those Writers, whom the Roman Church hath censured to be forbidden.

From hence Wye with many windings and turnings runneth downe Southward, yeelding very great plenty of delicate Salmones from September to April. And is at this day the bound betweene Gloster-shire and Monmouth-shire, in times past betweene the Welsh and Englishmen, according to this Verse of Merchins making.

Inde vagos vaga Cambrenses, hinc respicit Anglos.

By Wales on this side runneth Wye.

And of the other England he doth eye.

B Who when he is come almost unto his mouth, runneth by Chepstow, that is, if one interpret it after the Saxons tongue, a Mercat: The Britans call it Castle-went. A famous Towne this is and of good resort, situate upon the side of an Hill, rising from the very River, fortified round about with a Wall of a large circuit, which includes within it both fields and orchards. It hath a very spacious Castle situate over the River: and just against it stood a Priory: the better part whereof being pulled downe, the rest is converted into a Parish Church. As for the Bridge that standeth over Wye, it is of timber and very high built, because the River at every tide riseth to a great heighth.

Chepstow.

C The Lords hereof were the Earles of Pembroke out of the Family of Clare, who of Strighull Castle their seat a little way off were commonly called Earles of Strighull and of Pembroke. The last of whom named Richard, a man of an invincible courage, and having wonderfull strong armes and long wichall, surnamed Strong-lion, because hee shot in a bow of exceeding great bent, and did nothing but with strong arme, was the first that by his valour made way for the English into Ireland. By a daughter of his it came to the Bigars, &c. but now it belongeth to the Earles of Worcester. This Towne is not very ancient to speake of. For, many there be that constantly affirme, and not without good reason, that not many ages agoe it had his beginning from VENTA a very ancient City, that in the daies of Antonine the Emperor flourished about foure miles hence Westward and was named VENTA SILURUM, (as one would say) the principall City of the Silures. Which name neither hostile fury nor length of time hath as yet discontinued: for it is called even at this day Caer went, that is, The City Went. But, as for the City it selfe, either time or

Earles of Strighull or Pembroke.

D hostility hath so carried it away, that now were it not onely for the ruinate wallles, the checker worke, pavements and peeces of Roman money, it would not appeare there was such a City. It tooke up in compasse above a mile: on the South side a great part of the Wall standeth, and there remaine little better than the rubbish of three Bulwarks. And yet of how great account it was in ancient times, wee may gather, if it were but by this, that before the name of Monmouth once heard of, all this whole Country was of it, called Gwent, Went-set and Wents-land. Moreover, as wee read in the life of Tathaius a British Saint; it was an Academy, that is to say, a place dedicated to the study of good letters, which the said Tathaius whom King Caradock the sonne of Imirius procured to come thither out of the desert wilderness, governed with great commendation, and there founded a Church.

Caer-went.

Five miles from hence Westward, is seated Strighull Castle, at the foote of the mountaines, we call it at this day Strigle, the Normans named it Estrighill: which as wee read in King William the First his Domesday booke, William Fitz Osborn Earle of Hereford built: and afterwards it became the seat of the Earles of Pembroke out of the house of Clare. Whereupon they were usually called Earles of Strighull, as I even now intimated.

The Booke of Landaffe
Church.

F Beneath these places upon the Severn sea, nere unto Wy-moath, standeth Portskeweth, which Marianus nameth Poteskith, who hath recorded, that Harald in the yeere 1065. erected a Fort there against the Welshmen, which they straightwaies under the conduct of Caradock, overthrew. And adjoining to it is Sudbrok, the Church whereof called Portskeweth.

*
Sudbrok.

Trinity Chappell standeth so neere the sea, that the vicinity of so tyrannous a neighbour, hath spoiled it of halfe the Church-yard, as it hath done also of an old Fortification, lying thereby, which was compassed with a triple Ditch and three Rampiers as high as an ordinary house, cast in forme of a bowe, the string whereof is the sea-cliffe. That this was a Romane worke the Britaine bricke, and Romane coines there found, are most certaine arguments, among which, the Reverend Farther in God Francis Bishop of Landaffe (by whose information I write this) imparted unto me of his kinnesse one of the greatest peeces that ever I saw coined of Corinthian copper by the City of Elais in the lesser Asia to the honour of the Emperour Severus with this Greeke Inscription, ΑΤΤ. ΚΑΛΑ. ΚΕΝΤΙ. ΚΕΡΗΦΟ. C. ΝΕΡ. ΤΑΤΙΣ, ΤΗ ΕΜΠΕΡΟΥΡ. C. ΑΣΑΡ. ΛΥΚΙΟΥΣ ΣΕΠΤΙΜΙΟΥΣ ΣΕΒΕΡΟΥΣ ΠΕΡΤΙΝΑΧ. And in the Reverse, an Horseman with a Trophæe erected before him, but the letters not legible, save under him ΑΑΤΙΟΝ, that is, Of the Elaians, which kinde of great peeces the Italians call Medagliam, and were extraordinary coines, not for common use, but coined by the Emperours either to bee distributed by the way of Largesse in triumphes, or to bee sent for tokens to men well deserving, or else by free Cities to the glory and memory of good Princes. What name this place anciently had, is hard to be found, but it seemeth to have bene the Port and landing place for Venta Silurum, when as it is but two miles from it.

Then Throgoy, a little River neere unto Caldecot entereth into the Severn Sea, where we saw the wall of a Castle that belonged to the High Constables of England: and was holden by the service of Constableship of England. Hard by, are seene Wendy and Penhow, the seates in times past of the noble Family of Saint Maur, now corruptly named Seimor. For, G. Marefball Earle of Pembrock about the yeere of our Lord 1240. was bound for the winning of Wendy out of the Welsh mens hands, to aide William Seimor. From him descended Roger de Saint Maur Knight, who married one of the heires of L. Beauchamp of Hach, a very noble Baron, who derived his Pedegree from Sibyl Heire, unto William Marefball, that most puissant Earle of Pembrock, from William Ferrars Earle of Darby, from Hugh de Vivon, and William Maller, men in times past most highly renowned.

The Nobility of all these and of others besides, as may be evidently shewed, hath met together in that right honourable personage Edward Saint Maur or Seimor, now Earle of Hartford, a singular favourer of vertue and good learning, worthy in that behalfe to be honoured and commended to posterity.

Beneath this, lyeth spred for many miles together a Merf, they call it the Moore, which, when I lately revised this worke, suffered a lamentable losse: For when the Severn Sea at a spring Tide in the change of the Moone what being driven backe for three dayes together with a South-West Winde, and what with a very strong pirry from the sea troubling it, swelled and raged so high, that with furling billowes it came rolling and in-rushing amaine upon this Tract lying so low, as also upon the like flats in Somerset-shire over against it, that it overflowed all, subverted houses and drowned a number of beasts, and some people withall. Where this Merf Coast bearing out by little and little runneth forth into the sea, in the very point thereof standeth Goldchiffe aloft, that is, as Giraldus saith, A Golden Chiffe, so called, because the stones there, of a golden colour, by reverberation of the Sunne shining full upon them, glitter with a wonderfull brightness: neither can I bee easily persuaded (saith hee) that Nature hath given this brightness in vaine unto the stones, and that there should bee a flower beere without fruite, were there any man that would search into the Veines there, and using the direction of Art enter in the inmost and secretest bowels of the Earth.

Neere to this place there remaine the Reliques of a Priory, that acknowledge those of Chandos for their founders and Patron. Passing thence by the Merf Country, we came to the mouth of the River Isca, which the Britans name Usk and Wijk, and some Writers terme it Osea. This River as it runneth through the middest, as I said before, of this Countrey, floweth hard by three Townes of especiall antiquity.

The

The first, in the limire of the Shire North-West, Antonine the Emperour calleth Gobanium, at the very meeting of Uske and Geveny, whereof it had the name: And even at this day, keeping the ancient name, as it were, safe and sound is rearmed Aber-Gevenny, and short Aber-geenny, which signifieth the confluents of Gevenny or Gobanny. Fortified it is with Wals and a Castle, which as saith Giraldus of all the Castles in Wales hath bene most defamed and stained with the foule note of treason. First, by William, Earle Miles his sonne, afterwards by William Breos: for both of them after they had trained thither, under a pretense of friendship, certain of the Nobles and chiefe Gentlemen of Wales, with promise of safe conduct, villanously slew them. But they escaped not the just judgement and vengeance of God. For, William Breos, after he had bene stripped of all his goods, and lost his wife and some of his children, who were famished to death, died in banishment: the other William, being brained with a stone, whiles Breulais Castle was on fire, suffered in the end due punishment for his wicked deserts. The first Lord to my knowledge of Aber Gevenny was one Sir Hameline Balun who made Brien of Wallingford or Brient de L'isle called also the Fitz-Count his heire. He having built heere a Lazarhouse for his two sonnes that were Lepres, ordained Walter the sonne of Miles Earle of Hereford, heire of the greatest part of his inheritance. After him succeeded his brother Henry, slaine by the Welshmen, who seized upon his lands, which the Kings Lieutenants and Captaines could not defend without great perill and danger. By a filter of this Henry it descended to the Breoses, and from them in right of marriage, by the Cantelanes to the Hastings, which Hastings being Earles of Pembrock enjoyed it for divers descents, John Hastings having then no childe borne devised both it, and the Earledome of Pembrock as much as in him lay to his cosin Sir William Beauchamp, conditionally that he should beare his Armes. And when the last Hastings ended his life issuelesse, Reginald Lord Grey of Ruthin being found his Heire, passed over the Barony of Aber-gevenny to the said William Beauchamp who was summoned afterward to Parliament by the name of W. Beauchamp de Abergevenny. Hee entailed the said Barony, reserving an estate to himselfe and his wife, and to the lawfull issue male of their bodies; and for default of such issue, to his brother Thomas Beauchamp Earle of Warwick and his heires males. This William Beauchamp Lord of Abergevenny, had a sonne named Richard, who for his martiall valour was created Earle of Worcester, and slaine in the French warres, leaving one onely daughter, whom Sir Edward Nevill, tooke to wife. Since which time the Nevills have enjoyed the honorable title of the Barons of Abergevenny (howbeit the Castle was by vertue of the entaile aforesaid detained from them a long time.) The fourth Baron of this house dying in our remembrance, left one onely daughter Mary, married to Sir Thomas Fane Knight, betwixt whom being the heire generall, and Edward Nevill the next heire male (unto whom by a will and the same ratified by authority of the Parliament, the Castle of Abergevenny and the greatest part of the lands was fallen) there was great competition, for the title of Abergevenny argued in the High Court of Parliament in the second yeere of King James, and their severall claimes debated seven severall daies by the learned Counsell of both parts, before the Lords of the Parliament. Yet when as the question of precise right in law was not sufficiently cleered, but both of them in regard of the nobility and honor of their family were thought of every one right worthy of honorable title; and whereas it appeared evidently by most certaine proofes, that the title as well of the Barony of Abergevenny, as of Le Despenser appertained hereditarily to this Family. The Lords humbly and earnestly besought the King, that both parties might be ennobled by way of restitution, who graciously assented thereunto. Hence upon the Lord Chancellour proposed unto the Lords, first whether the heire male should have the title of Abergevenny or the heire female: and the most voices carried it, that the title of the Barony of Abergevenny should bee restored unto the heire male. And when he propounded secondly, whether the title of the Barony Le Despenser should bee restored unto the female, they all with one accord gave their full consent. Which being declared unto the King, he confirmed their determination with Abergevenny.

Lords of Aber-gevenny.

Clause 49.
Edw. 3.

with his gracious approbation and royall assent. Then was Edward Nevill by the Kings Writ called unto the Parliament by the name of Baron Abergavenny, and in his Parliament Robes betwene two Barons, as the manner is, brought into the house, and placed in his seat above the Baron Audley. And at the very same time, were the letters Patents read, whereby the King restored, created, preferred, &c. Mary Fane, to the state, degree, title, style, name, honour, and dignity of Baroness Le-Despenser. To have and to hold the foresaid state and unto the above named Mary and her heires, and her heires, successively should be Barons Le-Despenser, &c. And upon a new question mooved, unto whether the Barony of Abergavenny, or the Barony Le-Despenser, the priority of place was due. The Lords referred this point to the Commissioners for the Office of the Earle Mareschall of England, who after mature deliberation and weighing of the matter, gave definitive sentence for the Barony Le-Despenser, set downe under their hands and signed with their scales, which was read before the Lords of the Parliament, and by order from them entered into the Journall Booke, out of which I have summarily thus much exemplified: John Hastings (for I have no reason to passe it over in silence) held this Castle by homage, Wardship, and marriage when it hapned (as wee read in the Inquisition) and if there should chance any warre betwene the King of England and the Prince of Wales, hee was to keepe the Country of Overwent at his owne charges in the best manner he can, for his owne commodity, the Kings behoofe, and the Realme of Englands defence.

The second little City which Antonine named BURRIUM, and setteth downe twelve miles from Gobannium, standeth where the River Birkin and Uske meete in one streame. The Britans at this day, by transposing of the letters, call it Brumby for Burenbegy, and Caer Uske: Giraldus termeth it Castrum Osce, that is, The Castle of Uske, and we Englishmen, Uske. At this day it can shew nothing but the ruines of a large and strong Castle, situate most pleasantly betwene the River Uske, and Oily, a Riveret, which beneath it runneth from the East by Ragland, a faire house of the Earle of Worcesters, built Castle-like.

The third City which Antonine nameth ISCA, and LEGIO SECUNDA, is on the other side of Uske twelve Italian miles just distant from BURRIUM, as hee hath put it downe. The Britans call it Caer Leon, and Caer LEON at Uske, that is, The City of the Legion upon Uske, of the second Legion Augusta, which also is called Britannica Secunda. This Legion being ordained by the Emperour Augustus, and translated by Claudius out of Germany into Britaine, under the conduct of Vespasian, being ready at his command, when he aspired to be Emperour, and which procured the Legions in Britaine to take his part, was heere at last placed in Garrison by Julius Frontinus (as it seemeth) against the Silures. How great this ISCA was in those dayes listen unto our Girald out of his Booke called Itinerarium Cambriae, who thus describeth it out of the ruines. It was an ancient and Authentick City excellently well built in old time by the Romanes with bricke Walles. Heere may a man see many foundations of the antique nobility and dignity it had, mighty and huge Palaces with golden pinnacles in times past, resembling the proud statelynesse of the Romanes, for that it had beene found first by Romane Princes, and beautified with goodly buildings. There may you behold a giant-like Towre, notable and brave baines, the remaines of Temples, and Theatres, all compassed in with faire walles, which are partly yet standing. There may one finde in every place, as well within the circuit of the Wall, as without, houses under ground, water pipes and Vaults within the earth, and (that which you will count among all the rest worth observation) you may see every where hote houses made wondrous artificially, breathing forth heate very closely as certaine narrow Tunnels in the sides. Heere he entered two noble Protomartyrs of greater Britaine, and next after Alban and Amphibalus the very principall here crowned with Martyrdom, namely Julius and Aaron: and both of them had in this City a goodly Church dedicated unto them. For, in ancient times there had beene three passing faire Churches in this City: One of Julius the Martyr, beautified with a chaire of Nannes devoted to the service of God: A second founded in the name of blessed Aaron his companion, and ennobled with an excellent Order of Chanoines. Amphibalus also, the Teacher of

Baroness
Le-Despenser.

6.Ed.2.

Burrium.

Uske.

Isca Legionis.
Caer Leon
at Uske.

Saint Alban and a faithfull informer of him unto faith was borne heere. The site of the City is excellent, upon the River Oske, able to beare a pretty Vessell as an high water from the sea, and the City is fairly furnished with woods and meadows: heere it was that the Romane Embassadors repaired unto the famous Court of that great King Arthur. Where Dabry also resigned the Archiepiscopall honour unto David of Menevia, when the Metropolitane See was translated from hence to Menevia.

Thus much out of Giraldus. But for the avouching and confirming of the Antiquity of this place, I thinke it not impertinent to adjoyne heere those antique Inscriptions lately digged forth of the ground, which the right reverend Father in God Francis Gwyn Bishop of Llandaffe, a passing great lover of venerable Antiquity and of all good Literature, hath of his courtesie imparted unto me. In the yeere 1602. in a meadow adjoyning, there was found by ditchers a certaine image of a personage short and stout trussed bearing a quiver (but head, hands and feet were broken off) upon a pavement of square tile in checker worke: also a fragment of an Altar with this Inscription engraven in great capitall letters three inches long, erected by Haterianus the Lieutenant Generall of Augustus and Propretour of the Province Cilicia.

The next yeere following, hard by, was this Table also gotten out of the ground, which prooveth that the foresaid Image was the personage of Diana: and that her Temple was repaired by Titus Flavius Postumius Varus, an oldouldier haply of a Band of the second Legion.

These Inscriptions are to be seen at Mabers in the Bishop of Llandaffe house.

Peteranus Coburn.

Also,

Also, a votive Altar, out of which GETA the name of Caesar may seemethen to have beene rased, what time as he was made away by his brother Antonine Bassianus, and proclaimed an Enemy, yet so, as by the tra& of the letters it is in some fort apparent.

In printed Copies, Claudius Pompeianus and Collianus Avitus Coss. Anno Christi 210.

This most beautifull Altar also though maimed and dismembred, was there found, which I thinke is thus to be made up.

Also these fragments.

* Centurio

VIII.
7. VALER.
MAXSIMI.

Moreover a little before the comming in of the English Saxons, there was a Schoole here of 200. Philosophers, who being skilfull in Astronomy and all other Arts, diligently observed the course and motion of the Starres, as wrote Alexander Elfebienfis, a rare Author and hard to be found, out of whom Thomas James of Oxford (a learned man and a true lover of Bookes, who wholly addicted to learning, and now laboriously searching the Libraries of England, to the publique good purposeth that (God blesse his labour, which will be to the great benefit of all Students) hath copied out very many notes for me. In the Raigne of Henry the Second (what time Giraldus wrote) seemeth that this City was of good strength. For Trithem of Caer Leon a courageous and hardy Britan, defended it a great while against the English, untill he was vanquished by the King, and so disseized of the possession thereof. But now, that it may serve for an ensample, that as well Cities have fatall periods of their flourishing state, as men of their lives; it is decayed, and become a very small Towne, which in times past was of that greatnesse and reaching out so farre in length on both sides of the River, that Saint Julians, an house of the late Sir William Herbert Knight, was, by report, sometime within the very City, where Saint Julius the Martyrs Church stood, which now is much about a mile out of the Towne. Also, out of the ruines thereof a little beneath, at the mouth of Uske, grew up Newport, which Giraldus nameth in Latine Novus Burgus, a Towne of later time built, and not unknowne, by reason of the Castle and commodiousnesse of the Harbour: in which place there was in times past some one of these Roman High wayes or Streets, whereof Necham hath made mention in these Verses,

Thomas James,

Newport.

Intrat, & auget aquas Sabrini fluminis Osca, Præcepit, testis erit Julia Strata mihi.

Uske into Severn headlong runnes and makes his streame to swell, Witnesse with me is Julia Streets, that knoweth it full well.

This Julia Strata, was no doubt some Port-high way, and (if we may be allowed to make a conjecture) what great absurdity were it to say, that it was cast up and made by Julius Frontinus the vanquisher of the Silures? There creepeth, saith Giraldus, in the bounds of this New-burgh or Newport a little River named Nant Pencarn, which cannot bee waded and passed over but at certaine Foulds, not so much for any depth that the water is of, as for the hollownesse of the Chanell, and the easie mudde in the bottome: and it had of old a Fould named Rydpencarn, that is, The Fould under the top of a Rocke. Which when Henry the Second King of England chanced at a venture to passe over, even then then when it was almost growne out of remembrance, the Welshmen, who were over credulous in beleeving of Prophecies, as if now all had bene sure on the Kings side, and themselves hopelesse of all helpe, were quite out of heart and hope of good successe, because Merlin Silvester, the British Apollo, had prophesied, that then the Welshmens power should bee brought under, when a stout Prince with a freckled face (and such a one was King Henry the Second) should passe over that Foord.

Dun-feruan.

Under the Saxons Heptarchy, this Region was subject to the mountaine Welshmen whom the English called Dun-feruan who notwithstanding, as the ancient lawes doe shew, were under the command of the West Saxons. But at the first comming in of the Normans, the Lords Merchers most grievously plagued and annoyed them, but especially Hamelin Balun, of whom I spake, Hugh Lacy, Water and Gilbert, both surnamed of the house of Clare, Miles of Gloucester, Robert Chando, Pain Fitz-John, Richard Fitz Pons, and Brian of Wallingford: unto whom after that the Kings had once given whatsoever they could get and hold in this tract by subduing the Welsh, some of these before named by little and little reduced under their subjection the upper part of this Shire which they called Over-went: others the lower part which they termed Neisr-went.

And this Shire is not accounted among the Shires of Wales.

This Shire containeth Parish Churches 127.

GLAMORGAN.

CARMA
DE

GLAMORGAN
Comitatus, qui olim pars
Silurum

Clanclythe

LEUCARD

Superior

of the City of New York

Mumbai

Backenston

.....

100

Phon

100-443887-100

1	2	3
---	---	---

9 - 6 u.

BLACK NOSE DARS

MON

METHEN

S I S

PARS

This is a detailed historical map of the Brecon and Gwent area. The map shows the River Sever flowing from the north and the River Gwent flowing from the south. Numerous towns and villages are labeled, including Brecon, Gwent, and various smaller settlements. The map is oriented with North at the top. The map is labeled with numerous place names in English and Welsh, including Brecon, Gwent, and various smaller settlements. It also shows the River Sever and the River Gwent. The map is oriented with North at the top.

GLAMORGAN-SHIRE.

THE last Country of the Silures was that, I thinke, which wee at this day call GLAMORGAN-SHIRE, the Britans Morganuc, Glaib-Morgan, and Glad Vorganuc, that is, The Region of Morganuc: so named, as most suppose, of one Morgan a Prince, as others thinke of Morgan an Abbey. But if I derived it from Mor, which in the British tongue signifieth The Sea; I know not verily whether I should dally with the truth or no? Howbeit, I have observed that a Towne in little Britaine standing upon the Sea-coast, now called Morlais, was of Ptolomee and the ancient Gaules tearmed Vorganium or Morganium (for M. and V. consonant are often changed one for another in this tongue) and whence I pray you but from the sea? And this our Morganuc also lieth upon the sea: for, stretching out directly more in length, than it spreadeth in breadth, on the South side it is accoasted with the Severn sea. But where it looketh toward the Land, it hath on the East side Monmouth-shire, on the North Brechnock-shire, and on the West Caermarden-shire bordering upon it.

Whence came the name of Glamorgan.

The North part by reason of the Mountaines is rough and unpleasant, which as they bend downe Southward by little and little become more milde and of better soile; and at the foote of them there stretcheth forth a Plaine open to the South-Sunne, in that position of situation which Cato judged to bee the best, and for the which, Plinie so highly commendeth Italie. For, this part of the Country is most pleasant and fruitfull, beautified also on every side with a number of Townes.

Jestine a great Lord in the Raigne of William Rufus, after he had rebelled against Rhese his Prince, and not able to make his part good with him, very rashly, and inconsiderately (which hee afterward repented too late) sent Enion a Nobleman to whom he had affianced his daughter; to procure Robert Fitz Haimon sonne to Haimon Dentatus Lord of Corboil in Normandy, to come out of England and aide him against Rhese: who forthwith having mustered certaine forces, and taking for to associate him in his journey twelve Knights, first gave Rhese Battaile and slew him, and afterwards being allured with the fertility of the Country, whereof before hand he made full account to be Lord, turning his power upon Jestine himselfe, because hee had not kept touch with Enion nor performed his promise, easily thrust him out of his ancient Inheritance, and shared the Country among his Companions. The hard and barraine hill Country he granted to the said Enion, the more fertile parts he divided betweene him and those twelve Knights whom he tearmed Peres, on this condition, that they should hold them in Fee, and vassallage of him as their chiefe Lord, to maintaine one another in common with their aides and auxiliary forces; to defend every one his owne Ward in his Castle of Caerdiffe, and to bee present and assist him in his Courts in the administration of Justice. It shall not be amisse to put downe their names out of a little Pamphlet, which Sir Edward Stradling or Sir Edward Mounsel both Knights men of ancient descent and most skilfull in Antiquity, I wot not whether (for it goeth abroad under both their names) wrote concerning this matter. And these be their names.

The subduing of Glamorgan-shire. Robert Fitz-Haimon.

12. Knights.

Caerdiffe.

William of London, or de Londres.

Richard Granvill.

Pain Turbervill.

Oliver Saint John.

Robert de Saint Quintin.

Roger Bekereol.

William Easterling, for that he was borne in Germanie, whose heires are now called Stradlings.

Gilbert Humfravill.

Hhh

Richard

Richard Sward.
John Fleming.
Peter Soore.
Reinald Sully.

The River Remmie falling from the Mountaines, is the limite on the East side, whereby this Country is divided from Monmouth-shire; and Remmie in the British tongue signifieth to Divide.

Caer Philli.

Not farre from it where the River holdeth on his course through places hardly passable, among the hilles, in a Marish ground are to bee seene the tottering walles of Caer-philli Castle, which hath bene of so huge a bignesse, and such a wonderfull peece of worke beside, that all men well nere say, it was a garison fort of the Romans. Neither will I deny it, although I cannot as yet perceive by what name they called it: and yet it may seeme to have bene re-edified anew, considering it hath a Chappell built after the Christians manner (as I was enformed by John Sanford a man singular well learned, and of exact judgement) who diligently tooke view of it. In later ages it was the possession of the Clares Earles of Glocester descended from Fitz-Haimon afore said; neither doe any of our Chronicles make mention thereof before king Edward the Seconds time. For then, after that the Spencers by underhand practises had set the King, Queene, and Barons at debate, the Barons besieged a long time Hugh Spenser the younger whom they called Hugolin herein, and could not prevaile. By this river also (but the place is not certainly knowne) Fanilius a very good sonne, as Ninnius writeth, of Vortigern so bad a father, built a great Place, where, with other holy men hee prayed daily unto God, that himselfe, whom his father, committing most abominable incest had begotten of his owne daughter might not be punished grievously for his fathers faults, also that his father might at length repent heartily, and his native Country be eased from the bloody warres of the Saxons. A little beneath, hath Ptolomee placed the mouth of RATOSTABIVS or RATOSTABIVS, using a maimed word in stead of Traith Taff, that is, The sandy Trieth of the River Taff. For, there the said River Taff, sliding downe from the Hilles, runneth toward the Sea, by Landaff, that is, The Church by Taff, a small City and of small reputation, situate somewhat low, yet a Bishops See, having within the Diocesse 154. Parishes, and adorned with a Cathedrall Church consecrated to Saint Telcan Bishop of the fame: which Church German and Lupus, French Bishops, then erected, when as they had suppressed the Heresie of Pelagius that was dangerously spread all Britaine over, and preferred Dubricius a most holy man to bee the first Bishop there, unto whom Meuricke a British Lord freely gave all the land that lyeth betwene the Rivers Taff and Elei. From hence goeth Taff, to Caer diff, called of the Britans Caer did a proper fine Towne (as Townes goe in this Country) and a very commodious Haven: which the foresaid, Fitz Haimon, fortified with a Wall and Castle, that it might bee both a seat for warre and a Court of Justice: wherein, beside a Band of choise soldiers those twelve Knights were bound to keepe Castle-guard. Howbeit a few yeeres after, Tuor Bach a British Mountainer, a little man of person but of great and resolute courage, marching with a Band of men by night, without any time suddenly surpris'd, tooke Prisoner William Earle of Glocester, Fitz Haimon daughters sonne, together with his wife and young sonne, and detained them in hold with him, untill he had made him full satisfaction for all wrongs and losses. But how, Robert Curthose, William the Conquerours eldest sonne, a man over venturous and foole hardy in warlike exploits, quite put by his hope of the Crowne of England by his younger brethren and bereft of both his eyes, lived untill he was an old man in this Castle, you may see if you please in our Historians, and understand withall, that royall Parentage is never assured either of ends, or safe security.

Scarce three miles from the mouth of Taff, in the very bending in of the shore, there lye as close as it were two small, but pleasant Islands, separated one from another and from the maine Land with narrow in-lets of the Sea. The hithermore is called Sully, of the Towne right over against it, which tooke the name, as it is thought,

The mouth of Ratostabius Traith Taff,

Landaff.

History of Landaff.

Caerdiff.

Robert Curthose Duke of Normandy.

Sully, haply so called of the Silures.

of Robert Sully (for it fell to his part in the division) if you would not rather have him to take his name of it. The farther more is named Barry, of Barnab an holy man buried there, who as he gave name to the place, so the place gave the surname afterwards to the Lords thereof. For that noble Family of Vicounts Barries in Ireland had their original from hence. In a Rocke, or cliffe beereof by the sea side, saith Giraldus, there appeareth a very little chincke into which if you lay your ear you shall heare a noise as it were of Smithes at worke, one while the blowing of bellows, another while the striking of sledge and hammer, sometime the sound of the Grindstone and iron tooles rubbing against it, the hissing sparkes also of Beele-gads within boles, as they are beaten, yea and the passing noise of fire burning in the furnace. Now, I should easily bee perswaded that such a sound may come of the sea water closely getting into the Rocke, were it not the same continued as well when the sea ebbs as a low water when the shore is bare, as it doth as an high water when it is full sea. Not unlike to this was the place which Clemens Alexandrinus maketh mention of in the seventh Booke of his Stromata in these words. They that have written Histories doe say, that in the Isle of Britaine, there is a certaine hole or Cave under the bottom of an hill, and on the toppe thereof a gaping chaune or chinck: And when sever the winde is gathered into that hole, and tossed to and fro in the wombe or concavity thereof, there is heard above a sound of Cymbals. For, the winde driven backe gives the stronger sound.

A wonderfull
Cave or hole.

Beyond these Islands, the Shire runneth directly Westward, and giveth entrance and passage to one River, upon which more within the Land, standeth Cowbridge (the Britans, of the Stone-bridge call it Pont-van) a Mercate Towne, and the second of those three which Fitz Haimon the Conquerour kept for himselfe. Now, whereas Antonine the Emperour in this very Coast, at the same distance from Isca, placed BOVIUM, which also is corruptly read BOMIUM, my conjecture liketh me so well, that I have bene of opinion, this Towne was the said BOVIUM: but seeing that three miles from hence there standeth Boverton, which fitly accordeth in sound with Bovium, to love mee trueth, I dare not seeke for BOVIUM elsewhere. And that it is no strange and new thing that places should bee fitted with names from Kine and Oxen, I report me to Bosphorus in Thracia, Bovina in Sannium, and Bauli in Italie, as it were, Boalia, if we may beleewe Symmachus. But let this one argument serve for all: fiftene miles from BOVIUM, hath Antonia placed, even with a Latine name the Towne NIDUM, which although our Antiquaries have bene this great while a hunting after in vaine: yet, at the very same distance there sheweth it selfe Neath, a Towne very well knowne, retaining still the old name, in manner whole and sound: and heere at Lamwih, that is, The Church of Illus, that joyneth close thereto, are seene the foundations of many houses, for it had divers Streets in old time. A little from hence in the very bout well nere of the shore standeth Saint Donats Castle, a faire Habitation of the ancient and notable Family of the Stradlings: nere unto which, were very lately digged up, antique peeces of Romane money, but those especially of the thirty Tyants, yea and some of Emilianus and Marius, which are seldome found. The River Ogmore somewhat higher, maketh himselfe way into the Sea, falling downe from the mountaines by Coite, which belonged sometimes to the Turbevills, afterwards to the Gamages, and now to Sir Robert Sidney Vicount Lisle, in right of his wife: also by Ogmore Castle, which came from the Family of London to the Dutchy of Lancaster. Some few miles from hence there is a Well at Newton (as Sir John Stradling a very learned Knight hath signified unto me) a little Towne, on the banks of the River Ogmore Westward, an hundred paces well nere from Severn side, in a sandy plaines. The water thereof is none of the cleereit, yet pure enough and good for use: It never springeth and walmeth up to the brinke, but by certaine staires folke goe downe into the Well. At any flowing of the Sea (in Summer time) you shall hardly get up a dish full of water: Whereas if you come anon when it ebbs, you may well lade up water with a good bigge bucket or pail. The like instability remaineth also in Winter time, saving that it is nothing so evident, by Cowbridge.

Bovium.

Neath.

Saint Donats
Stradling.

Antique peeces of coine.

Ogmore river.

A fontaine ebbing and flowing.

Sandfords well.

Hhh 2

reason

reason of the Veines of water comming in from above by showres, and otherwise. At any of the Inhabitants thereabout men of good credite constantly avouched thus much unto me. But I, distrustful Fame, that oftentimes doth but prate, went my selfe of late once or twice to the said Well. For even then had I great desire to write thus much unto you. When I was first come unto the place, and had stayed the third part of an houre viewing and considering every thing (while Severn surged and rose high, and no body came thither to draw) the water was fallen about three inches. I goe my waies. And not long after when I was returned againe, I finde it to be risen a foote higher. The compasse of this Well beneath within the walles is almost five foote. Concerning which my Muse also endizeth this Distich.

*Te Nova-Villa fremens, odio murmure Nympha Inclamat Sabrina: Soloque inimica propinquo, Evomit infestas ructu violenter arenas.
Damna pari sentis vicina sorte: sed illa
Fenticulum causata tamen. Quem virgo, legendo Littus, ad amplexus vocitat: laet ille vocatus
Antro, & lactatur contra. Namque altius utriusque est Continuo motu refluxu, tamen ordine dispar.
Nympha fluit propius: Fons defluit. Illa recedit.
Ite redit. Sic livor incit & pugna perennia.*

With troublous noise and roaring loud, the Severn Nymph doth cry,
New-towne, on thee; and bearing spite unto the ground thereby,
Casts up and sends with violence maine drifts of hurtfull sand:
The neighbour parts feele equall losse, by this her heaveie hand:
But on thy little Well she laies the weight, which she would woo
And faine embrace, as Virgin she along the shore doth goe.
Call'd though he be, he lurkes in den, and striveth hard againe;
For, ebbe and flow continually by tides they keepe, both twaine
Yet diversly: for as the Nymph doth rise, the Spring doth fall, Goe she backe, he comes on, in spite and fight continuall.

A fountaine at Calcs or Cadiz.

The like Fountaine Polybius reporteth to bee at Cadiz, and this reason hee giveth thereof, namely that the winde or aire, when it is deprived of his wonted issues, reneweth within forth, and so by shutting and stopping up the passages and veins of the Spring, keepeth in the waters, and contrariwise when the surface thereof is voided and empty of water the veins of the source or Spring are unstopped and set free, and so the water then boileth up in great abundance. From hence coasting along the shore, you come within the sight of Kinefeage, the Castle in old time of Fitz-Haimon himselfe; also of Margan, hard by the sea side, sometime an Abbay founded by William Earle of Gloucester, but now the Habitation of the worshipfull Family of the Maunsells, Knights. Neere unto this Margan, in the very toppe of an Hill called Mynydd Margan, there is erected of exceeding hard grit, a Monument or grave-stone, foure foote long, and one foote broad with an Incription, which whosoever shall happen to reade, the ignorant common people dwelling thereabout, give it out upon a credulous error, that hee shall bee sure to dye within a little while after. Let the Reader therefore looke to himselfe, if any dare reade it; for, let him assure himselfe that hee shall for certaine dye after it.

Those

Those latter words I reade thus Eternali in domo, that is, In an eternall house: For Sepulchres in that age, were rearm'd ETERNALES DOMUS, that is, Eternall habitations. Moreover, betwene Margan and Kingseage by the high way side, there lyeth a stone foure foote long with this Incription.

Which the Welsh Britans by adding and changing letters, thus reade and make this interpretation, as the right reverend Bishop of Landaff did write to mee, who gave order that the draught of this Incription should be taken likewise for my sake. PIM BIS AN CAR ANTOPIUS; that is, The five fingers of friends or neighbours killed us. It is verily thought to bee the Sepulchre of Prince Margan, from whom the Country tooke name, who was slaine, as they would have it, eight hundred yeeres before Christs Nativity. But Antiquaries know full well, that these Characters and formes of letters be of a farre later date.

After you are past Margan, the shore shooteth forth into the North-East, by Aber-avon, a small Mercate Towne upon the River Avons mouth (whereof it tooke the name) to the River Nid or Neash infamous for a quick-sand, upon which stands an ancient Towne of the same name, which Antonine the Emperour in his Itinerary called NIDUM. Which, when Fitz-Haimon made himselfe Lord of this Country, fell in the partition to Richard Granvill share, who having founded an Abbay under the very Townes side, and consecrated his owne portion to God and to the Monkes,

H h h 3

returned

Nidus flu. i. the river Neash.

Nidum the towne Neash.

Loghor:
Gower.

Th. Walsingham.

Booke of North Monastery.
Joh. R. 5.

Swineley.

Leucarum
Loghor.

Lords of Glamorgan-shire.

returned againe to his owne ancient and faire inheritance, which he had in England. Beyond this River Neath, whatsoever lieth betwene it and the River Loghor, which boundeth this shire in the West, wee call Gower: the Britans and Ninnius, Gabin: wherein, as he saith, the sonnes of Keian the Scot planted themselves, and tooke up a large roome, untill that by Cunedda a British Lord they were driven out. In the Reigne of Henry the First, Henry Earle of Warwicke wonne it from the Welsh, but by a conveyance and composition, passed betwene William Earle of Warwicke and King Henry the Second, it came to the Crowne. Afterward King John gave it unto William Breos who had taken Arthur Earle of Britaine prisoner, to bee held by service of one Knight for all service: and his heires successively held it not without troubles unto King Edward the Second's daies: for then, William Breos, when he had alienated and sold this inheritance to many, and in the end by mocking and disappointing all others, set Hugh Spenser in possession thereof, to curry favour with the King. And this was one cause, among other things, that the Nobles hated the Spensers so deadly, and rashly shooke off their Allegiance to the King. Howbeit this Gower came to the Mowbraies by an heire of Breos. This is now divided into the East part and the West. In the East part Swineley, is of great account, a Towne so called by the Englishmen, of Sea-Swine, but the Britans Aber-Taw of the River Taw running by it; which, the foresaid Henry, Earle of Warwicke fortified. But there is a Towne farre more ancient than this by the River Loghor, which Antonine the Emperour called LEUCARUM, and wee, by the whole name, Loghor. Where, a little after the death of King Henry the First, Howel Ap Merediz invading the Englishmen on a sudden, with a power of the mountaineers slew divers men of quality and good account. Beneath this, lyeth West-Gower, and by reason of two armes of the Sea winding in, on either side one, it becommeth a Biland, more memorable for the fruitfulness, than the Townes in it, and in times past of great name, in regard of Kined canonized a Saint, who lived heere a solitary life: of whom if you desire to know more, reade our Countryman Capgrave, who hath set out his miracle with great commendation.

Since this Country was first conquered by the English. The Lords thereof were those that lineally descended from Fitz-Hamon, as Earle of Glocester, Clares, Spensers, Beauchamps; and one or two Nevils: and by a daughter of Nevill, who came likewise of the Spensers blood, Richard the Third King of England: But when he was slaine, King Henry the Seventh entred upon the inheritance of this Country, and gave it to his unkle Jasper Duke of Bedford: and when hee dyed without issue, the king resumed it unto his owne hands, and left it to his sonne King Henry the Eighth: whose sonne King Edward the Sixth sold the greatest part thereof to Sir William Herbert, whom hee had created Earle of Pembroke and Baron of Cardiff. But of the race of those twelve knights there remaine onely in this shire the Stradlings, a notable house and of long continuance, the Turbervills, and some of the Flemings: the greatest man of which house dwelleth at Flemingston, now corruptly called Flemston, as one would say, Flemingstone which tooke the name of them. And in England, there are remaining yet the Lord Sains John of Blesse, the Granvills in Devonshire, and the Stwards, as I am enformed, in Somersetshire. The issue male of all the rest is long since extinct and worne out, and their lands by daughters passed over to divers houses with sundry alterations.

DIMETAE.

PLinie was of opinion that the SILURES inhabited also the other part beside of this Country, which bearing out farther Westward, is called in English by some, West-Wales, and containeth Caermarden-shire, Pembroke-shire, and Cardigan-shire: But Ptolomee, who knew Britaine farre better, placed heere another people, whom he called DIMETAE, and DEMETAE. Gildas likewise and Ninnius both, have used the name of DEMETIA for this Tract. Whereupon, the Britans that inhabite it, changing M. into F. according to the propriety of their tongue commonly call it at this day Difed.

If it would not be thought strained curiosity, I would derive this denomination of the Demetæ, from Deheu Meath, that is, A plaine champion toward the South: like as the Britans themselves have named all this South-Wales, Deheubarth, that is, The South part: yea and those verily who inhabited another champion Country in Britaine were called in old time, Meatæ. Neither, I assure you, is the site of this Region disagreeing from this signification: For, when you are come hither once, by reason that the high hills gently settle downward, and grow still lower and lower, it spreadeth by little and little into a plaine and even champion Country.

CAERMARDI
Comitatus in quo
DIMETÆ
olim habitarunt

CAERMARDEN-SHIRE.

CAERMARDEN-SHIRE, is plenteous enough in Corne, stored abundantly with Cattail and in some places yeeldeth pit cole for fewell. On the East side it is limited with Glamorgan, and Brechnock-shires, on the West with Pembrock-shire, on the North with Cardigan-shire severed from it by the River Tŷwie running betweene, and on the South with the Ocean, which with so great a Bay or Creeke getteth within the Land, that this Countrey seemeth as it were for very feare to have shrunk backe, and withdrawne it selfe more inwardly.

Upon this Bay, Kidwelly first offereth it selfe to our sight, the Territory whereof, Kidwelly the Scot his sonnes held for a time, untill they were driven out by Cunedda the Britan. But now it is counted part of the inheritance of the Dutchy of Lancaster by the heires of Maurice of London or De Londres: who making an outroad hither out of Glamorgan-shire, after a dangerous war made him selfe Lord heereof, and fortified old Kidwelly with a wall and Castle to it, which now for very age is growne to decay and standeth, as it were, forlet and forlorne. For, the Inhabitants having passed over the little River Vendraeth Veban, built a new Kidwelly, entised thither by the commodity of the haven, which notwithstanding at this day being choked with shelves and barres, is at this present of no great use. Whiles Maurice of London invaded these parts, Guenliana the wife of Prince Gruffin, a stout and resolute woman in the highest degree, to recover the losses and declining state of her husband, came with displayed banner into the field and fiercely assailed him, but the successe not answerable to her courage, shee with her sonne Morgan, and other men of especiall note (as Giraldus recordeth) was slaine in battaile. By Hawis or Avis the daughter and heire of Sir Thomas of London: this passing faire and large patrimony, together with the Title of Lord of Ogmore and Kidwelly came unto Patrick Chaworth, and by his sonne Patrick daughter, unto Henry Earle of Lancaster. Now the heires of the said Maurice of London (as we learne out of an old Inquisition) for this inheritance, were bound to this service: that if their Sovereigne Lord the King, or his chiefe Justice came into the parts about Kidwelly with an Army, they should conduct the foresaid Army with their banners and their people through the middest of Nethland as farre as to Loghar. A few miles beneath Kidwelly, the River Tovie, which Ptolomee calleth Tobius falleth into the Sea, after he hath passed through this Region from North-East to South, first by Lanandiffry, so called, as men thinke, of Rivers meeting together: which Hael the sonne of Rhesi overthrew for malice that hee bare unto the English: then by Dinevor, a princely Castle, standing aloft upon the top of an hill, and belonging unto the Princes of South Wales whiles they flourished: and last of all, by Caer Marden, which the Britans themselves call Caer-Firabbin, Ptolomee, MARIDUNUM, Antonine, MURIDUNUM, who endeth his Journeies there, and through negligence of the transcribers is in this place not well used. For they have confounded the Journeies from Galena to Isca, and from Maridunum to Viriconium. This is the chiefe City of the country, for meadows and woods pleasant, and in regard of antiquity to be respected; Compassest about very properly, as Giraldus saith, with bricke walles, which are partly yet standing upon the famous river Tovie, able to beare small ships, although there be now a barre of sand cast up against the very mouth thereof. In this City was borne the * Tages of the Britans, I meane Merlin: For like as Tages being the sonne of an evill Angell taught his Countymen the Tuscans the art of Sooth saying, so this Merlin the sonne of an Incubus Spirit, devised for our Britans prophesies, nay rather meere phantasticall dreames. Whereby, in this Island he hath been accounted among the credulous and unskillfull people a most renowned Prophet. Straight after the Normans entring into Caer Marden-shire.

Kidwelly.

Guenliana, a woman of manly courage.

Lords of Ogmore and Kidwelly.

River Tovie.

Dinevor.

Maridunum, Caer marden.

Merlin, * Divinour or Prophet.

into Wales, this City was reduced (but I wot not by whose conduct) under their subjection, and for a long time sore afflicted with many calamities and distresses, being oftentimes assaulted, once or twice set on fire, first by Gruffin ap Rife, then by his the said Gruffin's brother: at which time, Henry Turbervill an Englishman succoured the Castle, and hewed downe the Bridge. But afterwards by the means of Gilbert de Clare, who fortified both the walles thereof, and the Castles adjoining, it was freed from these miseries: and being once eased of all grievances, and in security, endured afterwards more easily from time to time the tempests of warre and all faults: And the Princes of Wales of the English blood, I meane the first begotten sonnes of the Kings of England, ordained heere their Chancery and Exchequer, for all South Wales.

Neere unto this City on the East side lyeth Cantred-Bichan, that is, The little Hundred (for the Britans terme a portion of land that containeth 100. Villages a Centred) in which, beside the ruines of Careg Castle situate upon a Rocke, rising on every side steepe and upright, there are many under-mines or caves of very great wideness within the ground, now covered all over with green-ford and turfe, wherein it is thought the multitude unable to beare armes hid themselves, during the heat of warre: there is also heere a Fountaine, that as Giraldus writeth, Twice in fure and twenty houres ebbing and twice flowing resembleth the unstable motions of the maine Sea.

But on the North-East side, there stretcheth it selfe a great way out, Cantredmaur, that is, The great hundred, a most safe refuge for the Britans in times past, as being thicke set with woods, comberfome to travaile in, by reason the waies are intricate by the windings in and out of the hills, Southward stand Talcharn and Lhan-Stephen Castles upon rockes of the Sea, which are most notable witnesse of martiall valour and prowesse as well in the English as in the Welsh. Beneath Talcharn, Taff sheddeth it selfe into the Sea, by the side whereof was in times past that famous Troy Towne of Taff, that is, The white house upon the River Taff, because it was built of white flint for a summer house: where, in the yeere of our Redemption 914. * Hael, surnamed Dbu, that is, Good, Prince of Wales, in a frequent Assembly of his States (for there met there beside others, of the Clergie one hundred and forty) abrogated the ancient ordinances, and established new lawes for his Subjects, as the Proceeto the very lawes themselves doe witnesse: In which place afterward, a little Abbay named White Land, was built. Not farre from whence is Kilmayn Lboyd; where, of late daies certaine country people hapned upon an earthen Vessell, in which was bound a mighty deale of Romane Coine, of embased silver: from the time of Constantine the third, which fell just with the yeere of Christ 243. Among these, were certaine peeces of Helvius Pertinax, of Marcus Opellius, of Antoninus Diadumenianus, of Julius Verus Maximus the sonne of Maximinus, of Calius Balbinus, of Clodius Pupianus, of Aquila Severa the wife of Elagabalus and of Sall. Barbia Orbianna, which among Antiquaries are of greatest price and estimation, as being most rare of all others. Now it remaineth that I should relate, how upon the river Tivy, that separateth this County from Cardigan-shire, there standeth New-Castle (for so they call it at this day) which Sir Rhise ap Thomas that warlike Knight who assisted Henry the Seventh when he gat the Crowne, and was by him right worthily admitted unto the Society of the Knights of the Garter, renewed: whereas before time it was named Elm-lin. Which name, if the Englishmen gave unto it of Elme-trees, their conjecture is not to bee rejected, who will have it to bee that LOVENTIUM of the Druidae, whereof Ptolomee maketh mention: For, the Britans call Elmes Lhoiffan. But seeing I can finde by no record in Histories, which if the Normans first wreched this County out of the hands of the Princes of Wales, I am to proceed now orderly to the description of Pembroch-shire.

PENBROK

Comitatus olim
Pars
DEMETARVM

H I B E R
N I C V M

S I V E

V E R G I V I V M

M A R E S A B R A

M A R

C A R D I G A N P A R S

C A R M A R

T H E N

P A R S

Georgius Owen D. Remeis
descripsit
Wilhelmus Kip sculpit

PENBROKE-SHIRE.

THE Sea now retyring Southward, and with a mighty compasse and sundry Bayes incurving the shores, presseth on every side upon the County of PENBROKE, commonly called PENBROKES-HIRE, which in the old Bookes is named * The lawfull Countie of Pembroke, and of some, West-Wales; unlesse it be in the East side, where Caermarden-shire, and on the North, where a part of Cardigan-shire boundeth upon it. A Country plentifull in Corne, stored with Cat-

* Legalis Comitatus.

taile, and full of marle, and such kinde of fatty earth to make the ground fertile, and not destitute of pit cole. This Land, as saith Giraldus, is apt to beare Wheat, plentifully stored with sea-fish and saleable wine, and (that which is farre above the rest, by reason that the land confineth so nere upon it) of a very temperate and wholesome aire.

First and formost upon the shore descending Southward, Tenby a proper fine Towne well governed by a Major, and strongly walled toward the Land, looketh downe into the sea from a dry cliffe, very famous because it is a commodious road for ships, and for abundance also of fish there taken; whereupon in the British tongue it is called Tenby-y-Pisoid, and hath for Magistrates a Major and a Bailiffe. From thence the shore giving backe Westward, sheweth the Reliques of Manober Castle, which Giraldus calleth, The Mansion of Pyrrhus, in whose time as himselfe writeth, It was notably fortified with Towres and Bulwarkes, having on the West side a large Haven, and on the North-West and North under the very walles, an excellent fish-pool, goodly to behold, as well for the beauty thereof, as the depth of the water.

Tenby.

Manober Castle.

From hence runneth the shore along not many miles continuat, but at length the land shrinketh backe on both sides giving place unto the sea, which encroching upon it a great way, maketh the Haven which the Englishmen call Milford Haven; than which there is not another in all Europe more noble or safer, such variety it hath of nouked Bayes, and so many coves and creekes, for harbour of ships, where with the bankes are on every side indented, and that I may use the Poets words:

Milford Haven.

*Hic exarmatum terris cingentibus aquor,
Clauditur, & placidam discit servare quietem.*

The Sea disarmed heere of windes, within high banke and hill;
Enclosed is, and learns thereby to be both calme and still.

For to make use of the Mariners words and their distinct termes, there are reckoned within it 16. Creekes, 5. Baies, and 13. Rodes; knowne every one by their severall names. Neither is this Haven famous for the secure safeness thereof more, than for the arrivall therein of King Henry the Seuenth a Prince of most happy memory, who from hence gave forth unto England then hopelesse the first signall to hope well, and raise it selfe up, when as now it had long languished in civill miseries and domesticall calamities within it selfe. Upon the innermore and East Creeke of this Haven, in the most pleasant Country of all Wales, standeth Penbroke the Shire-towne, one direct street upon a long narrow point all rocke, and a forked arme of Milford Haven ebbing and flowing close to the Towne walles on both sides. It hath a Castle bur now ruinate, and two Parish Churches within the wals, and is incorporate of a Major, Bailiffes and Burgessees. But heare Giraldus who thus describeth it, A tongue of the sea shooting forth of Milford Haven, in the forked end, encloseth the principall town of the whole Country and chiefe place of Dimetia seated upon the ridge of a certayne craggy and long shaped Rocke: And therefore, the Britains called it Penbro, which signifies as much as a head of the Sea, and wee in our tongue Penbroke. Arnulph of Montgomery wiber to Robert Earle of Shrewsbury, first in the time of King Henry the First fortified this this place with a Castle, a very weake and slender thing, God wote, of stakes and turfs, which afterwards he returning into England delivered unto Girald of Windsor, his Constable and Capitaine, to be kept with a Garrison of few Souldiers: and immediately, the Welshmen of all South Wales laid siege unto the said Castle. But such resistance made Girald and his company, more upon a resolute courage than with any forcible strength, that they missed of their purpose and dislodged. Afterwards, the said Girald fortified both Towne and Castle; from whence hee invaded the Country, round about it, here and nere: and at length, that as well his owne estate, as theirs that were his followers and dependants, might the better grow to greatnesse in these parts he took to wife Nesta sister to Gruffin the Prince, of whom he begat a goodly faire Progeny, by the which (as saith that Giraldus who descended from him) The Englishmen have kept still the Sea Coasts of South Wales, and wonne also the walles of Ireland. For, all those noble families of Giralds or Giraldines in Ireland, whom they call Fitz Girald, fetch their descent from the said Girald. In regard of the tenure of this Castle and Towne, of the Castle and Towne likewise of Trimigh, of the Grange of Kingswood, of the Commot of Croystarath, and of the Manors of Castle Martin and Tregrove, Remold Grey at the Coronation of King Henry the Fourth made suite to carry the sword: but in vaine: For, answer was made, that those Castles and Possessions were in the Kings hands, as Pembroke Towne still is.

Penbroke.

Upon another Creeke also of this haven, Carew Castle sheweth it selfe, which gave both name and originall to the notable Family de Carew, who avouch themselves to have beene called aforetime, de Montgomery; and have beene perswaded, that they are descended from that Arnulph de Montgomery, of whom I spake erewhile.

Into this Haven there discharge themselves with their out-lets joyned almost in one, two rivers, which the Britans tearme Gledawb, that is, if you interpret it, Swords: whereupon themselves use to tearme it Aber du gledawb, that is, The out-let of two swords. Hard by the more Easterly of them standeth Slebach, a Commandery in times past of Saint Johns Knights of Jerusalem, which with other lands, Wize and Walter his sonne, gave in old time unto that holy Order of Knighthood, that they might serve as Gods Knights to recover the Holy Land. That part of this Country which lyeth beyond the Haven, and hath onely these two Rivers to water it, the Britans doe call Ros, making the name answerable to the thing, for that it lyeth for the most part all low on a flat, and greene plaine.

This Tract was inhabited by Flemings out of the Low Countries, who by the permission of King Henry the First were planted heere, when the Ocean by making breaches in the bankes had overwhelmed a great part of the said Low Countries. These are distinctly knowne still from the Welsh, both by their speech and manners, and so nere joyned they are in society of the same language with Englishmen, who comenigheft of any Nation to the low Dutch Tongue, that this their little Country is tearmed by the Britans Little England beyond Wales. A Nation, as saith Giraldus, strong and stout, and continually enured in warres with the Welsh: a Nation most accustomed to seek gaine by cloathing; by traffique also and merchandise by sea and land, undertaking any paines and perills whatsoever. A Nation of very great power, and in time and place requirith, ready by turnes to take plough in hand and till the ground, and also to goe into the field and fight it out: And that I may adde thus much moreover: A Nation most loyally devoted to the Kings of England, and as faithfull to Englishmen: and which in the time of Giraldus, was wonderfull skilfull in Sooth-saying by the Inspection of Beasts inwards: whose worke also is heere scene (as they are a people passing industrious) namely, The Flemish High way reaching out a great length. The Welshmen have many a time banded all their Forces in one, and to recover this country belonging sometimes unto their ancestors, have violently set upon these Flemings and overrunne their lands, spoiling and wasting where ever they went: yet they most courageously have alwayes from time to time defended their estates, their name, and life. Whereupon concerning them, and King William Rufus, the Historian Malmsbury writeth thus. Many a time and often King William Rufus had but small successe against the Welsh men: which any man may well merwaile at, considering that should otherwise, he spread most fortunately in all adventures of Warre. But I take it, that as the mercenness of the ground, and sharpnesse of the ayre maintained their Rebellion, so the same impeached his valour: But King Henry who now Reigneth, a man of an excellent wit, found meanes to frustrate all their devices, by placing Flemings in their Country, who might be alwayes ready to repress and keepe them in. And in the fifth booke, King Henry with many a warlike expedition went about to force the Welsh men, who ever and anon rose up in Rebellion, for to yeeld and submit themselves: and resting in the end upon this good and holisome policy, for to take downe and abate their swelling pride, he brought over thither all the Flemings that dwelt in England. For a number of them who in those daies in regard of his Mothers kinred by her Fathers side flocked thither, were closely shrowded in England, in so much as they for their multitude seemed burdensome unto the Realme. Wherefore, he sent them altogether with their substance, goods, Wives, and Children unto Ros a Country in Wales, as it were in a common avoidance, thereby both to purge and cleanse his owne Kingdome, and also to quail and repress the rash boldnesse of his enemies there. By the more westward of these two Rivers, is Harford West, called by the English men in times past Haverford, and by the Britans Hulpford, a faire Towne and of great resort, situate upon an hill side, having scarce one even streete, but is steepe one way or other, which being a Countrey by it selfe, hath for Magistrates, a Major, a Sheriffe, and two Bailiffs. The report goeth, that the Earles of Clare fortified it with Rampier and Wall on the North side, and we read that Richard Earle of Clare made R. Fitz-Tancred, Castellan of this Castle.

Beyond Ros, there shooteth out with a mighty front farre into the West Ocean, a great Promontory, which Ptolomee called OCTOPITARUM, the Britans Pebidiauc, and Centred Dewi; we Saint Davids land. A stony, barren, and unfruitfull ground, as Giraldus saith, Neither clad with Woods, nor garwished heere and there with Rivers, nor adorned with Meadows, lying alwayes open to windes onely and stormes. Yet a retyring place for most holy men, and a nurserie of them. For, Calphurnius a Britaine Priest, as some (I know not how truly) have written, heere in the vale of Ros begat of his Wife Concha Sister to Saint Martin of Tours, Patricke the Apostle of Ireland and Dewi a most religious Bishop translated the Archiepiscopall See from Iſca Legionum into the most remote and farthest angle heereof, even to Menew, or Menevia: which afterwards the Britans, of his name called Twy Dewi, that is, Dewi his house, the Saxons Dewi-byr-wep, the English men at this day Saint Davids; and was for a long time an Archiepiscopall See. But by occasion of a pestilence that contagiously raged in this Country, whereby the Pall was translated into little Britaine in France, to Dole, this Archiepiscopall dignity had an end. Yet in the foregoing ages the Welsh men commensed an action heere about against the Archbishop of Canterbury, Metropolitan of England and Wales, but they were cast in the Law. What this Saint Dewi was, and what maner of thing in times past, a man can hardly tell, considering it hath bene so often by Pirates rased: but now it is a very small and poore Cite, and hath nothing at all to make shew of but a faire Church dedicated to Saint Andrew, and David: which, having been many times overthrowne, Petre the Bishop, in the reign of King John, and his successors, erected in that forme which now it sheweth, in the vale (as they tearme it of Ros) under the Towne: and hard by it standeth the Bishops Pallace, and faire houses of the Chaunter (who is next unto the Bishop, for there is no Deane heere) of the Chauncellor, Treasurer, and foure Archdeacons who be of the number of the XXII. Canons, all enclosed round within a strong and seemely wall, whereupon they call it the Close.

This Promontorie thrusteth it selfe so farre Westward, that in a cleere Sunshine they may see from thence see Ireland, and from hence is the shortest cut to Ireland: and by Plinies measure, which he tooke false, was from the Silures (for, he thought that the Silures reached thus farre) thirty miles. But that this land ran out farther, and that the forme of the Promontory hath been changed, it may be gathered out of these words of Giraldus. What time (saith he) as King Henry the Second made his abode

Harford west;

Filius Tancredi.

Ostropitarum;

Saint Davids Land.

Saint Patrick;

Saint Davids;

Bodies of trees
in the Sea.

in Ireland, by reason of an extraordinary violence of stormes, the sandy shores of this coast were laide bare as farre as to the very hard ground, and the face of the earth which had been covered many ages before was discovered. Also the trunks of trees standing in the very Sea, that had aforesime been lopped on every side, yea and the strokes of axes, as if they had been graven yesterday were seene apparantly. Yea and the earth shewed most blacke, and the wood without of the said trunks like in all the points to Hebeny: so as it seemed now no shore but a lopped grove: as well empaired through the wonderfull changes of things; either haply from the time of Noahs flood, or long after, but, doubtlesse, long agoe, as worne by little and little, and so swallowed up with the rage of the Sea getting alwaies more ground and washing the earth away. Neither were these two lands severed here with any great Sea betweene, as may appeare by a word that King William Rufus cast out: who when he kenned Ireland from the rocks and cliffs of this Promontory, said (as we read in Giraldus) that he could easily make a bridge with English Sips; on which he might passe over the Sea on foote into Ireland.

Falcons.

A noble kinde of Falcons have their Airies here and breed in the Rocks, which King Henry the Second, as the same Giraldus writeth, was wont to preferre before all others. For, of that kinde are those, if the inhabitants thereby doe not deceive me, which the skilfull Faulconers call Peregrines: for, they have (that I may use no other words than the verses of Augustus Tivannus Esmerius that most excellent Poet of our age in that golden booke entituled HIERACOSOPHI OY.

*Depressus capitis vertex, oblongaque toto
Corpore pennarum series, pallentia crura,
Et graciles digiti ac sparsi, nareque rotunda.*

Head flat and low, the plume in rewes along
The body laid: legges pale and wan are found.
With slender claws and talons there among
And those wide spread: the bill is hooked round.

Keimes Barony, Fishgard.

New-port.

Saint Dogmael
the Welsh call him Saint Tegwel.
Lords of Keimes, Martins.

Kilgarrahan.

But from this Promontory, as the land draweth backward, the Sea with great violence and assault of waters inrusheth upon a little Region called Keimes, which is reputed a Barony. In it standeth, First, Fishgard, so called in English of the taking of fish, in British Abergwain, that is, the mouth of the River Gwain, situate upon a steepe Cliffe, where there is a very commodious harbour and roade for Ships: then Newport at the foote of an high Mountaine by the River Neuvers side, in British Tref-drach, i. the Towne upon the sands, and in Latine Records, Nervus Burgus; which Martin of Tours built, his posterity made an incorporation, adorned with privileges, and set over it for government a Portgreve and Bailive: created also for themselves a Castle over the Towne, which was their principall feate. Who founded likewise Saint Dogmaels Abbey according to the order of Tours, by the River Tivy low in a vale environed with hills, unto which the Borough adjoining (as many other Townes unto Monasteries) is beholden for the original thereof. This Barony, Martin of Tours first wrested out of the Welsh mens hands by force and armes, from whose heires successively called Martins, it came by marriage to the Barons of Andley, who held it a long time, untill that in the reigne of Henry the eighth, William Owen that derived his pedigree from a daughter of Sir Nicholas Martin Knight, after long suit in law for his right, in the end obtained it, and left it to his sonne George: who being a singular lover of venerable antiquity hath informed me, that in this Barony were and above three Borroughs, Newport, Fishgard, and Saint Dogmaels, there are twenty Knights fees, and twenty fixe Parishes.

More inward, upon the River Tivy aforesaid is Kilgarrahan, which sheweth reliques of a Castle built by Girald: but being at this day reduced unto one onely street, it is famous; for nothing else but the most plentiful fishing of Salmon. For there, have you that notable Salmon Leap, where the River from on high falleth down right, and the Salmons from out of the Ocean coveting to come up further into the River, when they meete with this obstacle in the way, bend backe their taile to the mouth, other whiles also to make a greater leap up, hold fast their taile in the mouth, and as they unloose themselves from such a circle, they give a jerk, as if a twig bended into a reede were suddenly let goe, and so with the admiration of the beholders mount and whip themselves aloft from beneath, as Anfonius hath most elegantly written.

when

Salmons leap.

*Nec te paniceo rutilantem viscere Salma, Transferim, late cuius vaga verbera cauda
Gurgite de medio summas referuntur in undas.*

Nor can I thee let passe, all red within,
(Salmon) that art, whose jerkes and friskes full oft,
From mids of streame and chanell deepe therein
With broad taile flirt, to floating waves aloft.

There have beene divers Earles of Pembroke out of sundry houses. As for Arthur of Montgomery, who first wonne it, and was afterwards outlawed, and his Castell Girald, whom King Henry the First made afterward President over the whole Country, I dare scarcely affirme that they were Earles. The first that was titled Earle of Pembroke was Gilbert, surnamed Strongbow sonne of Gislebert de Clare, in the time of King Stephen. And hee left it unto his sonne Richard Strongbow, the renowned Conquerour of Ireland, who as Giraldus saith, was descended ex clara Clarentium familia, that is, out of the noble Family of Clare or Clarence. His onely daughter Isabell brought the same honour to her Husband William named Mareschall (for that his Ancestours had beene by inheritance Mareschalls of the Kings Palace) a man, most glorious both in warre and peace, and Protector of the Kingdome in the minority of King Henry the Third. Concerning whom this pithie Epitaph is count in Rodburns Annales.

Earles of Pen-broke.

Sum quem Saturnum sibi sensit Hibernia, Solem Anglia, Mercurium Normannia, Gallia Martem.

Whom Ireland once a Saturne found, England, a Sonne to be;
Whom Normandy a Mercurie, and France Mars, I am he.

After him his five sonnes were successively one after another Earles of Pembroke, viz. William called The younger; Richard, who after hee had rebelled against King Henry the Third went into Ireland, where hee was slaine in battaile; Gilbert, who in a Tournament at Ware was unhorsed and so killed; Walter, and Anselme, who enjoyed the honour but a few dayes, who every one dying in a short space without issue, King Henry the Third invested in the honour of this Earledome, William de Valence, of the house of Lusignan in Poitou his brother by the mother side, who had to wife Joan the daughter of Gwarin de Mont-chensy: by the daughter of the foresaid William Mareschall. After William of Valence, succeeded his sonne Aimar, who under King Edward the First was Regent of Scotland: whose eldest sister Elizabeth, and one of his heires wedded unto John Lord Hastings, brought this Dignity unto a new Family: For, Laurence Hastings his grandsonne, Lord of Welshford and Moyvenmy was made Earle of Pembroke by vertue of King Edward the Third his briefe. The Copie whereof I thinke good to set downe heere, that wee may see what was the right by heires generall in these honorary Titles. Rex omnibus ad quos, &c. salutem. The King, to all unto whom, &c. Greeting. Know ye, that the good usage of circumspection and vertue, which wee have conceived by the towards youth and happy beginnings of our most welbeloved cozin Laurence Hastings, induce us worshipfully to maintenance him, with our especiall grace and favour, in those things which concerne the due reservation and maintenance of his honour. Whereas therefore, the inheritance of Aimar of

See Pag. 407.

Valence sometime Earle of Penbroke (as hee was stiled) deceased long since without heire begotten of his body, hath bene devolved unto his sisters, proportionably to be divided among them and their heires: because we know for certaine, that the foresaid Laurence who succeeded the said Aimar in part of the inheritance, is descended from the elder sister of Aimar aforesaid, and so by the avouching of the learned with whom wee consulted about this matter, the prerogative both of name and honour is due unto him. We deeme it just and due, that the same Laurence claiming his Title from the elder sister, assume and have the name of Earle of Penbroke, which the said Aimar had while he lived. Which verily we, as much as he is in us, confirme, raise, and also approve unto him: willing and granting, that the said Laurence, have and hold the prerogative and honour of Earle Palatine in those lands which he holdeth of the said Aimars inheritance, so fully and after the same manner, as the same Aimar had and held them, at the time of his death. In witnesse the King, at Mont-Martin, the thirteenth day of October, and in the thirteenth of our Reigne.

After Laurence succeeded his sonne John, who being taken prisoner by the Spaniards in a battaile at sea, and in the end ransomed, died in France in the yeere 1375. After him followed his sonne John, who in a running at Tilt at Woodstocke was slaine by Sir John Saint John casually in the yeere 1391. And it was observed that for five generations together in this Family (I know not by what destiny) the father never saw his sonne. Now, for default of his issue, there fell very many possessions and faire revenewes into the Kings hands, as our Lawyers use to speake: and the Castle of Penbroke was granted unto Francis Al-Court, a Courtier in especiall great favour, who thereupon was commonly called Lord of Penbroke. Not long after, Humphrey sonne to King Henry the Fourth before he was Duke of Gloucester, received this title of his brother King Henry the Fifth, and before his death King Henry the Sixth granted the same in reversion (a thing not before heard of) to William de la Pole Earle of Suffolke, after whose downefall, the said King, when hee had enabled Edmund of Hadham, and Jasper of Hatfield, the sonnes of Queene Katharine his mother to be his lawfull halfe brethren; created Jasper, Earle of Penbroke, and Edmund, Earle of Richmond with preheminence to take place above all Earles. For Kings have absolute authority in dispensing honours. But King Edward the Fourth depriving Jasper of all his honours by attaindour and forfeiture, gave the Title of Penbroke to Sir William Herbert for his good service against Jasper in Wales, but hee shortly after lost his life at the battaile of Banbury. Then succeeded his sonne, bearing the same name, whom King Edward the Fourth when hee had recovered the Kingdome, invested in the Earldome of Huntingdon, and bestowed the Title of Penbroke, being surrendered, upon his eldest sonne and heire Edward Prince of Wales.

A long time after King Henry the Eighth invested Anne Bollen (to whom he was affianced) Marchionesse of Penbroke with a mantle and Coronet in regard both of her Nobility, and also her vertues (for so runne the words of the Patent). At length king Edward the Sixth adorned Sir William Herbert Lord of Caerdiff with the Title of Earle of Penbroke: after whom succeeded his sonne Henry who was Lord President of Wales under Queene Elizabeth. And now his sonne William richly accomplished with all laudable endowments of body and minde enjoyeth the same Title. This Family of the Herberts in these parts of Wales is honourable, and of great antiquity. As lineally propagated from Henry Fitz Herbert Chamberlaine to King Henry the First, who married the said kings Paramor, the mother of Reginald Earle of Cornwall, as I was first enformed by Robert Glover a man passing skilfull in the study of Genealogies, by whose untimely death that knowledge hath sustained a great losse.

Some write that John Duke of Bedford was first for a short time Earle of Penbroke.

*

There are in this Shire Parishes 145.

CARDIGAN.

CARDIGAN
comitatus pars olim
DIMETARVM

ETH

Machenlle th

MONTGO:
PARS

Plinillimon hill

Sabrina flu:

Combeysioyth

RADNOR
PARS

BRECKNOC
PARS

CARMAR

DEN
PARS

scala

Christophorus
Saxton Descripsit
Wilhelmus luy Sculpfit

CARDIGAN-SHIRE.

From Saint Davids Promontory the shore being driven backe a slope Eastward, letteth in the Sea within a vast and crooked Bay, upon which lyeth the third Region of the Dimeta, in English called CARDIGAN-SHIRE, in British Sire Aber-Tivi, by old Latine Writers Ceretica (if any man thinke) of King Caratacus, this may seeme a conjecture proceeding out of his owne braine, and not grounded upon any certaine authority; and yet wee reade that the worthy Caratacus, so worthily renowned, was the Sovereigne Ruler in these parts. A plaine and champion Country it is Westward, where it lyeth to the Sea, as also on the South side, where the River Tivie separateth it from Caermarden-shire: But in the East and North sides, which bound upon Brechnock and Montgomery-shires: there is a continued range, or ridge of hils that shooe along, yeelding goodly pasture ground, under which there bespread sundry large Pooles. That in ancient times this Shire, as the rest also of Wales, was not planted and garnished with Cities but with little cottages, it may bee gathered by that speech of their Prince Caratacus, who being taken Prisoner, when he had throughly viewed the glorious magnificence of Rome, What meane you (saith he) when ye have these and such like stately buildings of your owne, to covet our small cottages? Howbeit the places heere of most Antiquity let us breifly view over.

Cardigan-shire

King Caratacus

Zonaras

The River Tivie, which Ptolomee calleth Tuerobius, but corruptly, in stead of Dwr-Tivius, that is, The River Tivie, issueth out of the Poole Llin-Tivy, beneath the hils: whereof I spake before: first cumbred, as it were, with stones in the way, and rambling with a great noise without any channell, and so passeth through a very stony tract (neere unto which at Rosse, the Mountainers keepe the greatest Faire for cattails in all those parts) untill it come to Strat-flour, a Monastery long since of the Cluniack Monkes, compassed about with hilles. From thence, being received within a channell, it runneth downe by Tregaron, and Llan-Dewi-brevi, built and so named in memorie all of David Bishop of Menevia, where he in a frequent Synode refuted the Pelagian Heresie springing up againe in Britaine, both by the holy Scriptures and also by a miracle, while the earth whereon he stood as he preached, arose up under his feete, by report, to an hillocke. Thus farre and somewhat farther also Tivie holdeth on his course Southward to Llan-Beder a little Mercate Towne. From hence Tivie turning his streame Westward carryeth a broader channell, and neere unto Kilgarran fallerth downe right headlong (as it were) from aloft, and maketh that Salmons Leape, whereof I spake ere while. For, exceeding great store of Salmons it yeeldeth, and was in times past the onely British River, as Giraldus Cambrensis was of opinion, that had Bevers in it. This Beaver is a creature living both on land and water, footed before like a Dog and behinde like a Goose, with an ash-coloured skin somewhat blackish, having a long taile, broad and gristly, which in his floring he useth in lieu of a sterne. Concerning the subtile wiliness of which creatures, the said Giraldus hath observed many things, but at this day none of them are heere to be seene.

Tuerobius the river

Rosse: Strat-flour

Kilgarran: The Salmons leape

Castores: Bevers

Cardigan

Fitz-Stephens

Scarce two miles from hence standeth upon a steepe banke Cardigan, which the Britans name Aber-Tivy, that is, Tivy-mouth, the Shire-towne, strongly fortified by Gilbert the sonne of Richard De Clare, which afterwards being by treason yeelded up, Rhys Ap Gruffin raised; when hee had taken prisoner Robert Fitz-Stephen, whom some call Stephanides: who (after hee had stood a long time at the devotion of the Welshmen, his heavie friends for his life, being at length delivered on this condition, that hee should resigne up into their hands all his possessions in Wales) was the first of the Norman race that with a small power of men, fortunately set foote in Ireland, and by his valour made way for the English to follow, and second him for subduing Ireland under the Crowne of England.

The River
Stuccia.
Y-flwith.

From Tiwie mouth, the shore gently giveth backe, and openeth for it selfe the passage of many Riverets; among which in the upper part of the Shire, STUCCIA, whereof Ptolomee maketh mention, is most memorab, when as the name of it continueth after a sort, whole at this day, being called in common speech, Tiwie: at the head whereof are veines of Lead, and at the mouth the Towne Aber-y-flwith, the most populous and plenteous place of the whole Shire, which that noble Gilbert de Clare also fenced with walles, and Walter Bec an Englishman defended a great while against the Welsh right manfully. Hard hereunto lyeth Lhan Badern vaur, that is, The Church of Patern the great, who being borne in little Britaine, as wee reade in his life, both governed the Church by feeding, and fed it by governing. Unto whose memory the posterity consecrated heere as well a Church, as also an Episcopall See. But the Bishopricke, as Roger Hoveden writeth, quite decayed many yecres since when the people had wickedly flaine their Pastour.

The river
Ridol.

At the same mouth also the River Ridol dischargeth it selfe into the Irish Sea. This River, descending out of Plinlimon, an exceeding steepe and high hill, that encloseth the North part of the Shire, and powreth out of his lap those most noble Rivers Severn and Wy, whereof I have already often spoken. And not much above T-flwith mouth, the River Devi that serveth in stead of a limite betweene this and Merioneth-shire, is lodged also within the Sea.

Lords of Cardigan-shire.

Scarce had the Normans setled their Kingdome in Britaine, when they assailed this Coast with a Fleet by Sea, and that verily with good successe. For, by little, and little, in the Raigne of King William Rufus, they wrested the maritime Coasts out of the Welshmens hands: but the greatest part thereof they granted unto Cadogan Ap Blethin, a right wife and prudent Britain: who was highly esteemed, and of great power throughout all Wales, and evermore shewed much favour and friendship to the English. But when his sonne Oën, a furious and heady young man, who could at no hand away with peace, infested the Englishmen and Flemings newly come thither with continuall invasions, the unhappy father was fined with the losse of his lands, and punished for the offenses of his sonne, who was himselfe also constrained to relinquish his native Country and to flie into Ireland. Then this Cardigan-shire was given by King Henry the First unto Gilbert de Clare, who placed Garions and fortified Castles there. But Cadogan with his sonne Oën, received into favour againe by the English, recovered also his owne lands and inheritance. But Oën returning to his old bias and rebelling afresh, was slaine by Girald the Castellan of Pembroke, whose wife Nessa he had carryed away and ravished. And his father being had away into England, long expected for a change of better fortune, and at length in his old age being restored to his owne home and friends, was upon the sodaine by Madoc his Nephew stabbed through the body. After this, Roger de Clare through the liberality of King Henry the Second had Cardigan-shire bestowed upon him: but when Richard of Clare, his Nephew, if I be not deceived, whiles he came hither by land was slaine by the Welsh, Rhys Prince of South-Wales, having made a great massacre of English and driven them out, at length with his victorious Army became Lord thereof: neverthelesse it fell againe by little and little into the hands of the English without any bloudshed.

There are in this Shire Parishes 64.

ORDEVICES.

ORDEVICES.

These Countries of the Silures and Dimetæ, which wee have hitherto travailed over, the Posterity, when Wales was subject to three Princes, called in their tongue Deheu-barth, that is, The part lying on the right hand: and Englishmen, South-Wales, as hath beene said before. The other two Principalities, which they tearme

Guineth and Powis, wee North-Wales and Powisland, were inhabited in ancient times by the ORDOVICES, who also bee named ORDEVICES, ORDOVICAE, and in some places although most corruptly, Ordolucæ. A puissant and courageous Nation, by reason they keepe wholly in a mountainous Country, and take heart even of the Soule; and which continued the longest free from the yoke both of Romanes and also of English domination: neither was it subdued by the Romanes, before the daies of the Emperour Domitian: (For, then Iulius Agricola conquered almost the whole Nation) nor brought under the English before the dayes of King Edward the First. For a long time they lived in a lawlesse kinde of liberty, as bearing themselves bold both upon their owne valour, and the strength of the Country, hard to be wonne: and which may seeme after a sort naturally accommodated for ambushments, and to prolong warres.

To lay out and limite the bounds of the ORDEVICES in a generality, is not so hard a matter; but to set downe the true etymologie and reason of their name, I thinke it very difficult. Yet have I conceived this coniecture, that seeing they were seated over the two Rivers Devi, that arising from two springs neere together, take their course divers waies; and considering that Oar-Devi in their British tongue signifieth Vpon, or, above Devi, they were thence named Ordevices: like as the Aruerni had that name, because they dwelt upon the river Garunana, the Armorici their name, for that they inhabited upon the Sea-side, and the Horesci theirs, because their inhabitation was upon the river Eske: Neither is the very name of Ordevices quite vanished without any remaine thereof, in this Tract: For, a great part of it which lyeth to the Sea-side, is yet by the inhabitants usually called Ardudwy, whereof it may seeme the Romanes have made these tearmes Ordovic and Ordevices carrying a softer and gentler sound. But, the whole Countrey (excepting Veneti.

Guineth.
* Vannus.

Genounia.

(excepting one small Shire) is called of the Latine Writers by one name of a later stamp, Guinethia, and Venedotia, and of the Britans Guineth, and the same, from the * Veneti of Armorica as some thinke, who, as Caesar writeth, Were wont very oft to saile unto Britaine. But if I might be allowed to change one onely letter, I would suppose, that this name was knowne to the Greekes, and to Pausanias, who in his Arcadica recordeth, that Antoninus Pius the Emperour grievously punished the Brigantes, for that they had made inrodes into GENOUNIA a Province of the Romans in Britaine. Certes, if it might be lawfull to reade Genouthia, for Genounia, so neere in sound cometh that word to Guinethia, and this Guinethia bordereth so neer to the Brigantes, that unlesse Pausanias ment this region, let Sibylla her selfe declare where it was, and what it should be. But these Countries belonged to the old ORDOVICES which are now called in English by new names, Montgomery-shire, Merioneth-shire, Caernarvon-shire, Denbigh-shire, and Flint-shire.

MONTGOMERY.

MONTGOMERY-SHIRE.

MONTGOMERY-SHIRE, in British Sire Tre-Faldwin, so called of the principall Towne therein, bounded on the South-side with Cardigan and Radnor-shires, on the East with Shropp-shire, on the North with Denbigh-shire, and on the West with Merioneth: although it hath many an high Hill in it, yet by reason of plentifull Valleies, it is a good Country as well for Corne as Pasture: and in old time a fruitefull breeder of the best kinde of Horses, which, as Giraldus saith, by nature's workmanship portraying, as it were, in a picture their noble shapes, were very commendable as well for the * Majesty of their making and bigge limmes, as for their incomparable swiftnesse. In the utmost corner of this Shire Westward, where it endeth pointwise in manner of a Cone or Pine apple, standeth Macbleneth, haply that which the Romanes called MAGLONA: where under the Generall of Britaine in the time of the Emperour Theodosius the younger lay in Garison the Captaine of the Regiment of the Solenfes, for to repress and keepe under the Mountainers: and two miles from hence neere unto Penall, there is a place to bee seene, named Keven-Cae, that is, The backe or ridge of a Citie, where peeces of Romane Coine are other whiles digged up, and a circular forme of Walles of no small circuit, are apparently seene by the remaines.

* Membræ sua majestate

Five miles hence, the Hill Plinlimon whereof I spake, raifeth it selfe up to a wonderfull height, and on that part where it boundeth one side of this shire, it powreth forth SABRINA, the greatest River in Britaine next to Thamis, which the Britains tearme Haffren, and Englishmen Severn. Whence the name was derived I could never reade. For, that seemeth to smell of a fable, which Geffrey hath devised of the Virgin Sabrina therein drowned, and which a late Poet following his steps hath delivered thus in Verse.

The head of Severn.
Severn

— *In flumen præcipitatur Abren,
Nomen Abren fluvio de virgine, nomen eidem Nemine corrupto, dein de Sabrina datur.*

Into the streame was Abren headlong cast;
The River then taking that Virgins name;
Hight Abren, and thereof Sabrin at last,
Which tearme in speech corrupt implies the same.

This River immediately from his spring head maketh such a number of windings in and out in his course, that a man would thinke many times hee returnes againe to his fountaine: yet for all that hee runneth forward, or rather slowly wandereth through this shire, Shropp-shire, Worcester-shire, and last of all Gloucester-shire, infusing a certaine vitall moisture into the soile every where as he passeth, untill at length hee mildly dischargeth himselfe into the Severn Sea. But in this shire it being overshadowed with Woods, after much strugling hee getteth out Northward by Lanidlos, Trenwith, or Newtowne, and Caer-fuse, which, as they say, is both ancient, and enjoyeth also ancient priviledges; and not farre from his East banke, leaveth behinde him the Castle, and Towne of Montgomery upon the rising of a Rocke, having a pleasant Plaine under it. The Englishmen named the Castle Montgomery, and the Latines Mons Gomericus, of Roger de Montgomery Earle of Shrewesbury, who winning much land heereabout from the Welch, built it, as wee finde in Domesday booke. But when his sonne Robert was attainted for Rebellion, King Henry the First gave this Castle, and the honour of Montgomery to Baldwin Bollaers in marriage with Newtowne.

with Sybill of Falais his Niece. According to whose name the Welshmen call the Towne standing a little from the Castle, Tre-Faldwin, that is, Baldwins Towne. From this Baldwin descended Vital Engain who claimed this Honour as right Heire in the time of king Henry the Third. About which time, the said king Henry the Third raised it up againe out of the very ashes: For, the Welsh had slain the Garison Souldiers and overthrowne it; and so it lay desolate for many yeeres, and Florilegus fableth, That bee, of the situation of the place then first named is Montgomery. Certaine it is, that the said king then granted by his Patent, That the Burrough of Montgomery should be a free Burrough, with other Liberties. Now the Herberts are here seated, branched out from a brother of Sir William Herbert the first Earle of Pembroke of that name.

Anno xj.

Corndon hill.

Welch Poole.

Red Castle.

Hard by this, Corndon Hill mounteth up to a very great height, in the top whereof are placed certaine stones in a round circle like a Coronet, whence it taketh that name, in memoriall as it should seeme of some victory. A little higher, Severn glideth downe by Trellin, that is, The Towne by a Poole, whereupon it is called Welsh Poole in English. It hath a Castle joyning unto it on the South side, called Castle Coch of a kinde of reddish stone wherewith it is built, which within the compass of one wall, containeth two Castles: the one belonged to the Lord of Powis, the other to the Baron Dudley, Cadagane the sonne of Blethin, that renowned Britan, of whom I spake, while he was busie about the building of this Castle, was, as we finde in the Epitome of Lancarbanensis, slaine by his nephew Maddock. Right over against this Castle on the other side of the River, standeth Buttington, well knowne by reason of the Danes wintering there; out of which, Adbered Earle of the Mercians expelled them in the yeere of Christ 894. as Marianus writeth. Severn being past these places, turneth by little and little Eastward, that he may the sooner entertaine the small River Tanet, which being once received into his society, hee goeth on forward to Shropp-shire.

That MEDIOLANUM a Towne of the Ordovices, which both Antonine the Emperour, and Ptolomee speake of, stood in this Shire, I am in a manner perswaded, upon probability. The footings whereof, I have sought after with all diligence, but little or nothing have I found of it; For time consumeth the very carcasses even of Cities. Yet if we may ground any conjecture upon the situation, seeing the Townes which Antonine placeth on either side, be so well knowne, to wit, BONIUM, now Bangor by Dee on the one side, and RUTUNIUM, now Rownton Castle on the other side (for he setteth it twelve Italian miles distant from this, and from the other twenty) The lines of Position, if I may so rearme them, or of the distance rather, doe cut one another crosse betwene Matrafall and Lan-vechlin, which are scarce three miles asunder, and shew as it were demonstratively the site of our Mediolanum. For, this cannot chuse but bee an infallible way to finde out the situation of a third place, by two others that are knowne, when as there are neither hills interposed, nor any troublous turnings of the wayes. As for this Matrafall, which standeth five miles Westward from Severn, although it bee now but a bare name, was sometime the regall seat of the Princes of Powis (which may bee an argument of the antiquity thereof) and the same much spoken of by Writers, who record, that after the Princes had once forsaken it, *Robert * Vipont* an Englishman built a Castle. But Lan-vechlin, that is, Veiblin Church, being a little Mercate Towne, although it be somewhat farther off from the crosse-meeting of the said lines, yet commeth it farre neerer in resemblance of name to Mediolanum. For, of Meiblin, by the propriety of the British tongue, is made Veiblin, like as of Caer-Merden, is come Caer Verden, and of Ar-man, Arvon. Neither doth Meiblin, more jarre and disagree in sound from Mediolanum, than either Millano in Italie, Le Millian in Xantaigne, or Meiblen in the Lowcountries, which Cities no man doubteth were all in times past knowne by the name of Mediolanum. Which of these conjectures commeth neerer to the truth, judge you: for me it is enough to give my guesse. If I should say, that either Duke Medus, or Prince Olanus built this Mediolanum of ours, and those Cities of the same name in Gaulle, or that whiles they were were a building Sus mediatim Lanata, that is, That a Sow halfe fleeced with wooll, was digged up, might I not be thought (thinke you) to catch at Clouds, and fish for Nittes? Yet notwithstanding the Italians write as much of their Mediolanum. But seeing that most true it is, that these Cities were built by nations of the same language (and that the Gaulles and Britans spake all one language I have prooved already) it is probable enough, that for one, and the same cause they had also one and the same denomination. Howbeit, this our Mediolanum, in nothing so farre as I know, agreeth with that of Italie, unlesse it be, that both of them are seated upon a plaine betwene two riverets: and a learned Italian derived the name of their Mediolanum hence, because it is a Citie standing in the midst betwene Lanas, that is, little rivers, according to his owne interpretation. But this may seeme overmuch of MEDIOLANUM, which I have sought heere, and about Alcester not farre off.

* De veteri
Ponic.
Lan-vechlin.

This Countie hath adorned no Earle with the name, title, and Honour thereof untill of late, our Sovereigne King James created Philip Herbert, second Sonne of Henry Earle of Penbrooke by Mary Sidney, for the singular love and affectionate favour toward him, and for the great hope that he conceived of his vertues, both Baron Herbert of Shurland, and also Earle of Montgomery, upon one and the same day at Greenwich, in the yeere 1605. But, the Princes of Powis, descended from the third Sonne of Rotherike the great, held this shire with others in a perpetuall line of succession (although Roger and Hugh of Montgomery, had encroched upon some part thereof) untill the daies of King Edward the Second. For then Oen ap Gruffin, ap Gwynnwyn, the last Lord of Powis of the British bloud (for the name of Prince had long before been worne out of use) left one onely daughter named Hawise, whom Sir John Charlton an English man, the Kings * Valet married, and in right of his wife, was by King Edward the Second made Lord of Powis; who (as I have seene in very many places) gave for his Armes, a Lion Geules Rampant, in a shield, Or, which he received from his wifes Progenitours. Of his posterity there were foure males that bare this Honorable title, untill that in Edward, the succession of males had an end: for he, the said Edward, begat of Eleanor the daughter and one of the heires of Thomas Holland Earle of Kent, lane, Wife to Sir John Grey Knight, and Joice married unto John Lord Tipst, from whom the Barons of Dudley and others derive their descent. The said Sir John Grey, for his martiall prowesse, and by the bountifull fauour of King Henry the Fifth, received the Earledome of Tanquerwill in Normandie, so have unto him and his heires males, by delivering one Bassinet at the Castle of Reas every yeere on Saint Georges day. This John had a sonne named Henrie, Lord of Powis, in whose race the title of Powis with the Honour thereof continued untill Edward Grey died well neere in our time, leaving no issue lawfully begotten.

Earle of Mont gomery,Princes of Powis,

Lords of Po:
wile.
* Servitor or Gentleman of the Privy Chamber,

Dupli. Norm.
& Henr. 5.Earle of Tan:
querwill,

This Shire hath Parishes 47.

MERIONETH:

MERIONETH-SHIRE.

From the backside of Montgomery-shire, MERIONETH-SHIRE, in British Sir-Vetioneth, in Latine Merwinia, and as Giraldus calleth it, Terra filiorum Canani, that is, Canan's Land, reacheth to that crooked Bay, I spake of, and to the maine Sea, which on the West side beatech so fore upon it, that it is verily thought to have carryed away by violence some part thereof. Southward, for certaine miles together it is severed from Cardigan-shire by the river Dorv;

to the North it boundeth upon Caer-marvon, and Dentigh-shires. As for the in-land part, it is so rifeth with mountaines standing one by another in plumps, that as Giraldus saith, it is the roughest and most unpleasant Country to see to, in all Wales. For, it hath in it mountaines of a wonderfull height, yet narrow and passing sharpe at the top in manner of a needle, and those verily not scattering, here and there one, but standing very thicke together, and so even in height that Shepheards talking together, or rattling one at another on the tops of them if haply they appoint the field to encounter and meet together, they can hardly see it from morning till night. But let the Reader heerein relie upon Giraldus credit. Great flocks of Sheepe graze all over these mountaines, neither are they in danger of Wolves, who were thought then to have bene ridde quite out of all England and Wales, when King Eadgar imposed upon Ludwall Prince of these Countries to present three hundred Wolves yeerely unto him by way of Tribute. For, when, as William of Malmesbury writeth, he had for three yeeres performed this, at the fourth yeere, he gave over, upon his protestation, that hee could finde no more. Yet long time after this, there remained some still, as appeareth for certaine, by irreprovable testimonies of Record.

The inhabitants, who for the most part wholly betake themselves to breeding and feeding of cattail, and live upon white meates, as butter, cheese, &c. (how ever Strabo mocked our Britans in times past, as unskillfull in making of cheese) are for stature, cleere complexion, goodly feature, and lineaments of body, inferiour to no Nation in Britain: but they have an ill name among their neighbours, for being too forward in the wanton love of women, and that proceeding from their idleness. They have but few townes: Eastward where Dorv runneth, standeth Mouthwy a Commot very well knowne, which fell for a childes part of inheritance to William, alias, Wilcock of Mouthwy, a younger sonne of Gruffith Ap Gwynnwyn Lord of Powis: and by his sons daughter it came unto Sir Hugh Burgh, and by his sonnes daughters likewise unto the Families of Newport, Leighton, Lingein, and Milton, of especiall respect in these parts. Where the River Avon runneth downe more Westward, there is Dolegeth a little mercat towne, so called of the Vale wherein it is built. Hard by the sea in the little territory named Arduwy, the Castle Arlech, in times past, named Caer Colan standeth advanced upon a very steepe rocke, and looketh downe into the sea from aloft, which being built, as the Inhabitants report, by King Edward the First, tooke name of the situation. For, Arlech in the British tongue signifieth as much, as upon a Stony rock. Whiles England was disjointed, and lay torne with civill broiles, David Ap Ien a noble Gentleman of Wales, who tooke part with the house of Lancaster, defended it stoutly against King Edward the Fourth: untill that Sir William Herbert Earle of Pembroke making his way with much adoe through the midst of these mountaines of Wales, no lesse passable than the Alpes, assaulted this Castle in such furious thundering manner, that it was yeelded up into his hands. Incredible it is almost what a cumberfome journey hee had of it, and with what difficulty, hee gat through, whiles he was constrained in some places to climbe up the hills creeping; in others, to come downe tumbling, both he and his company together. Whereupon, the dwellers thereabout call that way at this day Le Herbert.

Mountaines exceeding high.

Wolves in England destroyed.

See Derby-shire and Yorke shire;

Mouthwy;

Dolegeth;

Herberts waye

K k k

A little

A little higher, in the very confines of the Shires, two notable armes of the Sea enbosome themselves within the Land, Traith Maur, and Traith Bachan, that is, The greater Wash, and the lesse.

Faithneog.

And not farre from hence, neere unto a little Village called Faithneog, there is a street or Port-way paved with stone, that passeth through these cumbersome and in manner, unpassable Mountaines. Which considering that the Britans name it Sarn Helen, that is, Helens Street, it is not to be thought, but that Helena mother to Constantine the Great, who did many such like famous workes throughout the Romane Empire, laied the same with stone. Neither standeth farre from it Caer-Gai, that is, The Castle of Caius, built by one Caius a Roman, touching whom the common people dwelling thereby report great wonders.

The Sources of Dee.

In the East side of the Shire, the River Dee springeth out of two Fountains, whence some thinke it tooke the name, for, they call it Dwy, which word imported also among them the number of two (although others would needs have it foreshadowed of some Divinity, other of the blacke colour) and forthwith passeth entire and whole through Llhwnglad, in English Pimble Meare, and Penllin Meare; a Lake spreading farre in length and breadth: and so runneth out of it with as great a streame as it entered in. For, neither shall a man see in Dee the fishes called Gaintad, which are peculiar to the Meare, nor yet Salmons in the Meare, which nevertheless are commonly taken in the River. But see if you please the description of this Lake or Meare, in verse by the Antiquarian Poet.

Pimblemeare.

Gaintad fishes.

*Hispida quæ tellus ætervinda respicit Eurum,
Est locus antiquo Penllinum nomine dictus,
Hic lacus istius in valle Tegetus alta
Lætè expandit aquas, et vastum conficit orbem,
Excipiens gremio latices, qui fonte perenni
Vicinis recidunt de montibus, atque sonoris
Illecebris captas demulcens suaviter aures:
Illud habet ceris lacus admirabile dictu,
Quantumvis magna pluvia non æstuat: atqui
Ære turbato, si ventus murmura tollat,
Excrefcit subito rapidis violentior undis,
Et tumida superat contemptus flumine ripas.*

On th' East side of Merioneth, a Country rough that is,
A place there lies by ancient name cleped Penllin, ywis,
Whereas, within a Valley deepe, there spreadeth farre a Lake
With waters cleere without all mud, which compasse huge doth take.
Receiving fundry pirls to it and many a running rill,
That spring and fall continually from every neighbour hill.
And with shrill noise and pleasant sounds allured eares doe fill.
And verily a wonder 'tis, of this Lake strange to tell,
Although the raine powre downe amaine, the waters never swell.
But if the aire much troubled be, and windes aloft doe blow,
It swelles at once, no streame so much, and bankes doth overflow.

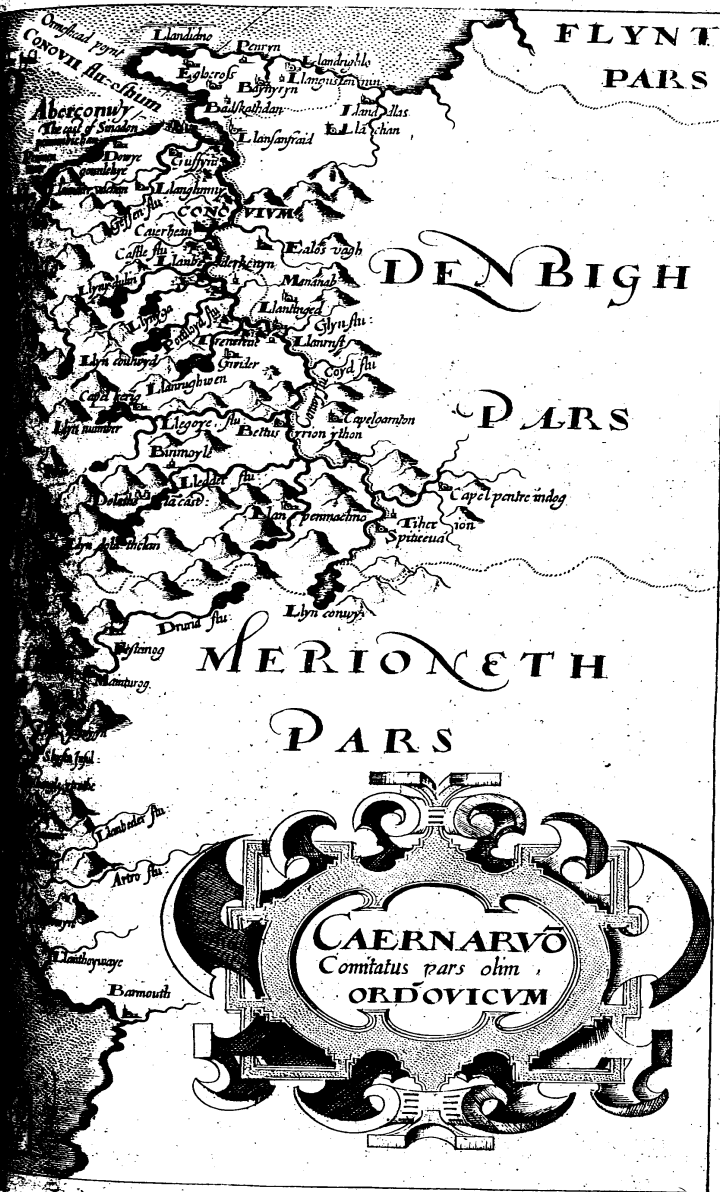

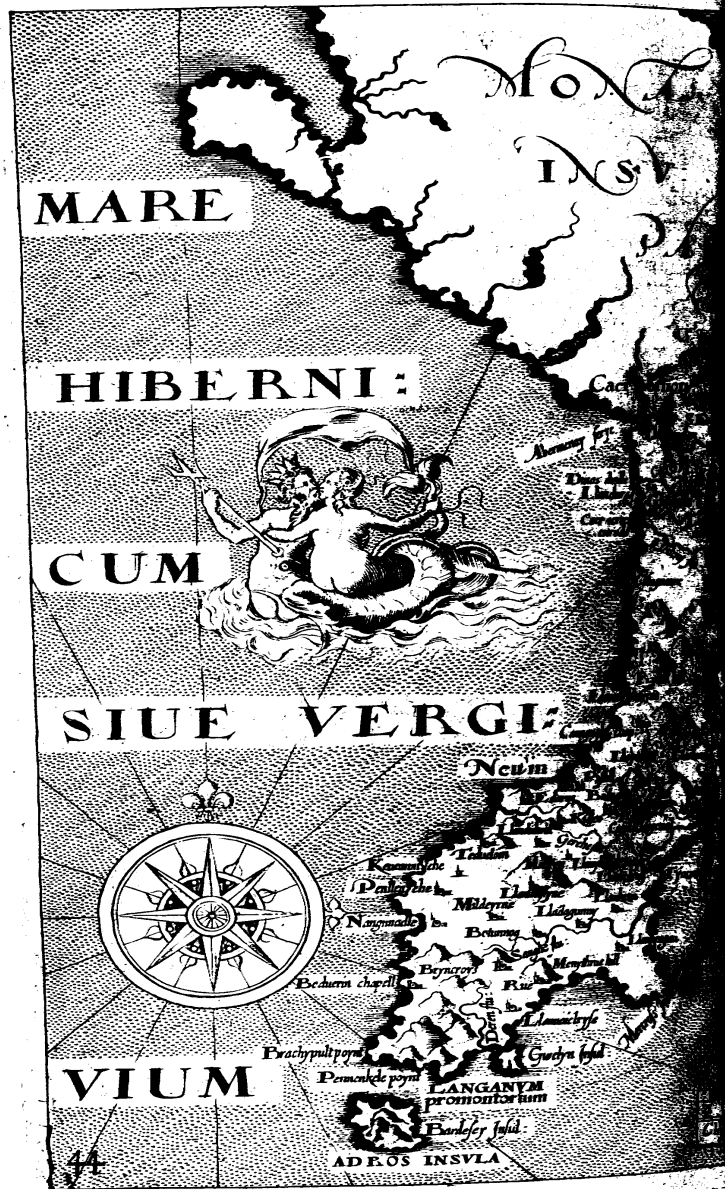

Bala.

On the browe, or edge beereof standeth Bala a little Towne, endowed with many immunities, but peopled with few inhabitants, and as rudely and unhandsome-ly built, nevertheless it is the chiefe Mercate Towne for these Mountainers.

Hugh Earle of Chester was the first of the Normans that tooke this Country, and held it with planting Garisons, what time as he kept Gruffin Ap Coman, that is, the sonne of Coman prisoner: But Gruffin afterwards recovered it with the rest of his Principality, and left it unto his heires, untill it came unto the small Periode, and so ended in Llewellyn.

It reckoneth Churches 37.

CAERNARVON:

CAERNARVON-SHIRE.

Above Merioneth-shire, lieth that Country which the Britans call Sire Caer-ar-von, and English-men CAERNARVON-SHIRE, of the principall Towne therein; and before that Wales was laied out into Shires, they teamed it, by the name of Snowden-Forest, and the Latine Historians Snaudonia, of that Forest, and Ar-vonia, out of the British name because it hath Mona, that is, Anglesey just over against it. The North side and the West butteth upon the Irish Sea: the South-side is enclosed with Merioneth-shire, and the East with Denbigh-shire, from which it is severed by the River Conwy. On that part which looketh toward the Sea, especially where it shooteth forth a great way South-west with a Promontorie and stretcheth out the shores with crooked turning full against OCTOPITARUM, or Saint David's Land, it is of a very fruitfull soile and garnished all a long with prety Townes.

Conwy River,

As for the more in-land part of the Shire, Nature hath loftily areared it up farre and neere with Mountaines standing thicke one by another, as if she would here have compacted the joynts of this Island within the bowels of the earth: and made this part thereof a most sure place of refuge for the Britans in time of adversitie. For there are so many roughes and Rocks, so many vales full of Woods, with Pooles heere and there crossing over them, lying in the way betweene, that no Armie, may not so much as thole that are lightly appoynted, can finde passage. A man may truly, if he please, terme these Mountaines, the British Alpes: for besides that they are the greatest of the whole Island, they are no lesse steepe also with cragged and rent Rockes on every side than the Alpes of Italie, yea and all of them compass one Mountaine round about, which over-topping the rest so towreth up with his head aloft in the aire, as he may seeme not to threaten the Skie, but to thrust his head up into Heaven. And yet harbour they the Snow, for, all the yeere long, they be hory with Snow, or rather with an hardened crust of many Snowes felct together.

The Alpes of Britany.

Whence it is, that all these hilles are in British by one name termed Craig Eriry, in English Snow-don, which in both languages, sound as much as Snowie Mountaines: like as Niphates in Armenia, and Imaus in Scythia, tooke their names, as Plinie witnesseth of Snow. Nevertheless, so ranke are they with grasse, that it is a very common speech among the Welsh, That the Mountaines Eriry will yeeld sufficient pasture for all the Cattails in Wales, if they were put upon them together. Concerning the two Meares on the toppes of these, in the one of which floteth a wandring Island, and in the other is found great store of Fishes, but having all of them but one eye a peece, I will say nothing lest I might seeme to foster fables: although some confident upon the authoritie of Giraldus, have beleevved it for a veritie. Yet certaine it is, that there be in the very toppes of these Mountaines Pooles in deed and standing Waters: whereupon Gervase of Tilbury in his Booke entituled Otia Imperialia, writeth thus.

Snow-don hilles.

In the Land of Wales within the bounds of great Britain, there be high Hilles that have laied their foundations upon most hard Rockes, and in the toppes thereof the earth is cruisted over with such a coate of waterish moisture, that wheresoever a man doe but lightly set his foot, he shall perceive the ground to stirre the length of a stones cast from him: whereupon when the enemies came, the Welsh with their agility and nimblenesse lightly leaping over the boggy ground, either avoide the enemies assaults, or to their losse resolutely expect their forces. These Mountainers John Salisbury in his Polyraticon, by a new forged Latine name termed Nivicolinus, that is, Snow-down inhabitants, of whom in King Henry the Second his daies he wrote thus.

Nivicolini.

The Snow-downe Britains make inrodes, and being now come out of their Caves and lurking holes of the Woods, enlarge their borders, possesse the plaines of the Noble men: and whilst themselves looke on, they assault, they winne, and overthrow them, or else keepe the same to their owne behoofe; because our youth, which is so daintily brought up, and loves to be house-bred and to live lazily, in the shade, being borne only to devoure the fruits of the earth and to fill the belly, sleepes untill it be broad day light, &c.

But come wee downe now from the Mountaines into the Champion Plaines, which because we finde no where else but by the Sea side, it may suffice to coast only along the shore. The Promontory which I said before shooteth out toward the South-west, is in Ptolomee called according to the diversitie of copies, CANGANUM, JANGANUM, and LANGANUM. Which is the truest name I know not, but LANGANUM it may seeme, considering that the inhabitants name it at this day Lbein, which runneth forth with a narrow and even by-land, having larger and more open fields than the rest of the Country, and the same yeelding Barley most plenteously. Two little Townes it sheweth and no more, that are memorable. Farther within upon the Creeke, is Pulhely, that is, that Salt Meare or Poole: more outward, by the Irish Sea (that beateth upon the other side of the Bi-land) is Nevin, a Village having a Market kept in it: wherein the Nobility of England, in the yeere of our Lord 1284. in a Triumph over the Welsh did celebrate the memory of Arthur the great, as Florilegus writeth, with lusties, Tournaments and festivall pompe. If any other Townes flourished here, then were they destroyed, when Hugh Earle of Chester, Robert of Rudland, and Guarin of Salop, entering into this Country first of all the Normans, so wasted this Promontory, that for the space of seven whole yeeres, it lay dispeopled and desolate.

From Nevin, the shore pointed and ended with one or two elbowes lying out into the sea tendeth Northward, and then turning afront North-east, by a narrow sea or Frith (they call it Menai) it serveth the Isle Anglesey from the firme land. Upon this straight or narrow sea stood SEGONTIUM, a City which Antonine the Emperour maketh mention of: some reliques of the walles I saw neere unto a little Church built in honour of Saint Pulblitius. It took the name of a River running by the side of it, which yet at this day is called Seions, and issueth out of the Poole Lin-Peru. In which, there is a kinde of fish peculiar to that water, and seeme no where else, called by the dwellers there Tor-coch; of the belly that is somewhat red. Now, seeing that in an ancient copie of Ptolomee, SETANTIUM PORTUS is here placed, which according to other copies is set farther off, if I should reade in stead of it, SEGONTIUM PORTUS, that is, the Haven of the Segontians, and say it stood upon the mouth of this River, I should perhaps aime at the truth: if not, yet should I obaine pardon for my conjecture of a courteous Reader.

This Citie Nennius called Caer Custenith; and hee that wrote the life of Griffin the Sonne of Conan, recordeth, that Hugh Earle of Chester built a Castle in Hean Caer Custenith, that is, as the Latine Interpreter translateth it, in the ancient Citie of Constantine the Emperour. And Matthew of Westminster writeth (but let him make it good if he can) that the bodie of Constantinus, Father to Constantine the Great was here found in the yeere of our Lord 1283. and honourably bestowed in the Church of the new Citie by the commandement of King Edward the First. Who out of the ruines of this Towne, at the same time raised the Citie Caer-narvon somewhat higher, upon the Rivers mouth, so, as that on the West and North-sides it is watered therewith. Which, as it was called Caer-narvon because it standeth right over against the Island Mona (for so much doth the word import) so, it hath communicated that name unto the whole Country; for, heereupon the English men call it Caer-narvon-shire. This is encompassed with a very small circuit of walles about it and in manner round, but the same exceeding strong, and to set it the better out, sheweth a passing faire Castle which taketh up the whole West side of it. The private buildings (for the manner of that Countrey) are slightly enough, and the inhabitants for their courtesie much commended, who thinke it a point of their glorie, that King Edward the First, founded their Citie; that his Sonne King Edward the Second was heere borne and surnamed of Caer-narvon, who also was of the English line the first Prince of Wales; and also the Princes of Wales had heere their Chancery, their Exchequer, and their Justice for North-Wales. About seven miles hence by the same narrow Sea standeth Bangor or Bancher low seated, enclosed on the South side with a Mountaine of great heighth, on the North with a little hill: so called A choro pabro, that is, of a faire quire, or as some would have it, quasi Locus Chori, that is, as if it were the place of a quire. Which being a Bishops See, hath within the Diocese thereof 96. Parishes. The Church, was consecrated unto Daniel sometime Bishop thereof: but that which now standeth is of no especiall faire building: for, Owen Glendowry that most notorious Rebell, who had purposed utterly to destroy all the Cities of Wales, set it on fire, for that they stood for the King of England, and defaced the ancient Church, which albeit Henry Deney Bishop of the same repaired about the time of King Henry the Seventh, yet it scarcely recovered the former dignity. Now the Towne is small, but in times past so large, that for the greatnesse thereof it was called Bancher Vaur, that is, Great Bancher, and Hugh Earle of Chester fortified it with a Castle, whereof I could finde no footings at all, though I sought them with all diligent inquiry: But that Castle was situate upon the very entry of the said narrow Sea. Over the Menay, or streight hereby, King Edward the First, that he might transport his Army into Mona, or Anglesey (whereof I must treat anon in due order) went about with great labour to make a bridge, but all in vaine. Albeit Suetonius Paulinus conveyed over his Romane Souldiers long before into Mona, his Horsemen at a Ford, and the Footemen in little flat botomed boates, as we reade in Tacitus. From hence the shore raising it selfe with a bending ascent, runneth on by Pennan-maur, that is, The great stony head, a very exceeding high and steepe Rocke, which hanging over the Sea when it is flood, affourdeth a very narrow path way for passengers, having on the one side huge stones over their heads, as if they were ready to fall upon them, on the other side the raging Ocean lying of a wonderfull steepe depth under it. But after a man hath passed over this, together with Pen-maen bychan, that is, the lesser stony head, he shall come to an open broad plain, that reacheth as farre as to the River Conwey, which limiteth this Shire on the East side. This River in Ptolomee after a corrupt manner of writing Greeke, is called T O I S O V I U S, for C O N O V I U S. It issueth out of a Poole of the same name in the South border of the Shire, and being pent in, and, as it were, strangled runneth apace within a very narrow channell, as farre almost as to the mouth thereof, breeding certaine Shell-fishes, which being conceived of an Heavenly dew, bring forth Pearles; and there, giveth he name unto the Towne C O N O V I U M which Antonine mentioneth. And although it now lie all along, and that name there be utterly extinct, yet by a new name it doth covertly implice the antiquity. For a very small and poore village standing among the rubbish thereof is called Caer bean, that is, the ancient City. Out of the spoile and ruines whereof, King Edward the First built a new Towne at the very mouth of the River, which thereupon they call Aber-Conwey, that is, the mouth of Conwey; which place Hugh of Chester had before-time fortified. But this New Conovium, or Aber-Conwey, being strongly situated and fenced both with walls, and also with a very proper Castle by the Rivers side, deserveth the name rather of a prety Citie than of a Towne, but that it is not replenished with Inhabitants.

King

Opposite unto this Towne, and yet on this side of the River which is passed by ferry, and not by bridge, reacheth out a huge Promontory with a bending elbow: as if nature purposed to make there a road and harbour for Ships, which is also counted part of this Shire, and is named Gogarth: wherein stood Diganwy, an ancient City just over the River Conwey, where it issueth into the Sea: which was burnt many yeeres agoe with lightning. And I am of opinion, that it was the City D I C T U M, where, under the later Emperours the Captaine over the band of the Nervians Disfenfes kept their guard. And for that, afterwards it was called Diganwy, who seeth not that the said Conwey came of Conwey, and from thence the English name Ganoc?

Kkk 3

For,

Bancher as one would say Penchor, that is, a principal Quire as others think.

The life of Griffin.

Pen-maen-maur.

Conwey River.

Pearles: Conwey Towne.

Gogarth;

Dictum;

Diganwy: Ganoc.

Canganum.

Lbein.

Pulhely.
Nevin.

The life of Griffin.

Menai.

Segontium.

Lhan Beblin.

Tor-coch fishes.

Caer-narvon.

For, so was that Castle called, which afterwards King Henry the Third built in that place to bridle the Welsh.

Straight after the Normans comming into this Island, Gruffin ap Conan, governed this Country, who being not able to repress the English troupes who swarmed into Wales, yeelded otherwhiles unto the tempest: and at length when with his integrity and uprightnesse he had regained the favour of King Henry the First, hee sily also recovered his owne lands of the English, and left them to his heires successively, untill the time of Llewelyn ap Gruffin, who when he had provoked his owne Brethren with wrongs, and the English men with inrodes, was brought to this passe, that hee held this hilly Country together with the Ile Anglesey of King Edward the First as Tenant in Fee, and paid for it yeerely a thousand Markes. Which conditions afterward when hee would not stand unto, and following rather his owne and his Brothers stubborne wilfulnesse, than any good hope to prevaile, would needes put all once againe to the hazard of warre, he was slaine, and so both ended his owne life and withall the British government in Wales.

Is bath in its Parish Churches 68.

THE

THE ISLE MONA, or of ANGLESEY.

This is that most notable Isle MONA, the ancient seat of the Druides, attempted first by Paulinus Suetonius, and brought under the Romane Empire by Iulius Agricola. This Suetonius Paulinus under the reign of Nero, as Tacitus writeth, made all preparation to invade the Isle Mona inhabited by a strong and stout Tasian, and then the republic of Fugitives. He built Flat-bottom vessels, because the Sea is shallow, the landing-place uncertaine. Thus their footmen passed over, and after them the Horsemen following by the shallow sword, or swimming where the waters were deepe with their Horses. Against them stood the Enemies armies on the shore thicke set in aray, well appoynted with Men and weapons, and Women also running in, to and fro among them, like furies of Hell, in mourning attire, their heare about their eares, and with firebrands in their hands. Round about them also were the Druida, who lifting up their hands to Heaven, and pouring out deadly curses, with the malignesse of the sights, so daunted the Souldiers, as they stood stock-still, and not able to stirre their joynts presented their bodies unto wounds. At length, what with the exhortation of the Captain, and what with encouraging and animating one another not to feare a flocke of Wanlike Women, and fanaticall persons, they displaid and advanced forward their Engines: Downe they got with all in their way, and thrust them within their owne fires. Which done, Garisons were placed in their Townes, and the Groves consecrated to their cruel Superstitious downe: For they accounted it lawfull to Sacrifice with the blood of Captives, and by section of Mens fibres and bowels to know the will of their gods. But as Paulinus was busied in these exploits, newes came unto him of a sudden revolt through the whole Province, which stayed his enterprise. Afterwards, as the same Tacitus writeth, Iulius Agricola, pursued with himselfe to subdue the Island Mona, from the possession wherof, as I said before Paulinus was revoked by a generall rebellion of all Britaine: But (as in a purpose not prepared before) vessels being wanting, the policie and resolutenesse of the Capitaine devised a passage over, causing the most choise of the Auxiliaries, to whom all the shallowes were knowne, and who after the use of their Country were able in Swimming to governe themselves with their Armour and Horses, laying aside their carriage, to put over at once and suddenly to invade them. Which thing so amazed the Enemies who supposed they would passe over by Shipping and therefore attended for a Fleet, and the tide, that they beleevved verily nothing could be hard or invincible to men that came so resolute to Warre. Whereupon they humbly intreated for Peace and yielded the Island. Thus by this service Agricola became famous indeed, and of great reputation.

Many ages after, it was Conquered by the English men, and tooke their name, as being called in old time in the Saxons language Engler-æa, now commonly Anglesey, as one would say, The Englishmens Island. But seeing that Humfrey Leland in a very learned Epistle to that learned Ortelius, hath restored this Island to the due name and dignitie, there is no reason that any man heere should require my diligence. Yet thus much will I adde unto the rest. When the Empire of the Romanes in Britaine now was in declining and going downward, some out of Ireland, entred in by stealth into this Isle also and nestled there. For, besides certaine Mounts of earth entrenched about, which they call The Irish mens cotages, there is a place also, named Ta Heriky Gwidil of the Irish men, who as we finde it recorded in the booke of Triades, under the leading of Sirigus, put the Britans to flight in that place.

Neither was it grievously infested onely by the English men, but also by the Norwegians. Likewise in the yeere of our redemption 1000. King Aethelred fleeing having skoured the Seas round about the said Isle, wasted it in all hostile manner. After this, the two Norman Hughes, the one Earle of Chester, and the other Earle of Shrewsburie greatly afflicted it, and built Castle Aber-Llienioc for to restraine and keepe under the Inhabitants. But Magnus the Norwegian arriving heere at the very same time, shot the said Hugh Earle of Shrewsbury through with an Arrow, and after he had ransacked the Island, departed. The English men moreover afterward from time to time invaded it, untill that King Edward the First brought it wholly under his subjection. There were in ancient time reckoned in it 363. Villages, and even at this day it is well peopled. The principall Towne therein at this time is Beau-marish, which King Edward the First built in the East-side of the Isle upon a marish ground, and for the situation thereof gave it this goodly faire name, whereas before time it was called Bonover, who also fortified it with a Castle, which notwithstanding may seeme never to have been finished: the Governour wherof is the right Worshipfull Sir Richard Bulkley Knight, whose courtesie toward me when I came to visite these places, I cannot chuse but evermore acknowledge with most hearty thankfulness.

Hard unto Beau-Marish, lieth Lhan-vays, a famous religious house in times past of the Friers Minors, unto whom the Kings of England shewed themselves very bountifull Patrons; as well in regard of the Friers holinesse, who there converted, as also because there (that I may speake out of the publike records of the Kingdome) were buried a daughter of King Iohn, a sonne of the King of the Danes, the bodies also of the Lord Clifford, and of other Lords, Knights, and Squires, who in the time of the noble and renowned Kings of England, were slaine in the Warres against the Welsh.

The next Towne in name to Beau-Marish, is Newburg called in British Ressar standing ten miles off Westward, which having been a long time greatly annoyed with heaps of sand driven in by the Sea, complaineth that it hath lost much of the former state that it had. Aber-fran is not farre from hence, which is now but an obscure and mean Towne, yet in times past it excelled all the rest farre in worth and dignity, as having been been the Royall seat of the Kings of Guinesh, or North-Wales. And in the utmost Promontorie Westward, which wee call Holy-head, there standeth a little poore Towne, in British Caer-Guby so named of Kibie a right holy man, and a disciple of Saint Hilarie of Poitiers, who therein devoted himselfe to the service of God, and from whence there is an usuall passage over into Ireland. All the rest of this Island is well bespiced with Villages, which because they have in them nothing materially memorable, I will crosse over into the Continent, and view Denbigh-shire.

Holy head.
Saint Kibie.
As touching the Islands ad-joyning to Anglesey. See among the British Isles.

In this County there are reckoned Parishes 74.

DENBIGH.

Lhan-vays.

2. Pars Pat. anno 2. H. 5.

Newburg.

Aber-fran.

DENBIGH-SHIRE.

IN this side of the River Conwy, DENBIGH-SHIRE, in Welsh Sire Denbigh, retyeth more within the Country from the Sea, and shooteth Eastward in one place as farre as to the River Dee. On the North North-West, first the Sea for a small space, and then Flint-shire, on the West Merioneth and Montgomery-shires, on the East Cheshire, and Shropps-shire encompassse it. The West part is barraine, the middle where it lyeth flat in a Valley, most fruitfull. The East side when it is once past the Valley, hath not Nature so favourable unto it, but next unto Dee, it sheweth her farre more kinde.

The West part, but that it is somewhat more plentifull and pleasant toward the sea side, is but heere and there inhabited, and mounteth up more with bare and hungry hills: but yet the painfull diligence and witty industry of the husbandmen hath begonne a good while since to overcome this leanness of the soile, where the hills be any thing flattish, as in other parts of Wales likewise. For, after they have with a broad kinde of spade pared away the upper coat, as it were, or sord of the earth, into certaine turfs, they pile them up artificially on heapes, put fire to them and burne them to ashes, which being throwne upon the ground so pared, and stayed, causeth the hungry barrennesse thereof so to fructifie, that the fields bring forth a kinde of Rhie or Amel corne in such abundance as it is incredible. Neither is this a new devise thus to burne the ground, but very ancient, as we may see in Virgil and Horace. Among these Hills there is a place commonly called Cerigy Drudion, that is, The stones of the Druides, and certaine little columnes or pillars are scene at Tonellau, with inscriptions in them of strange Characters, which some imagine to have beene erected by the Druides: and not farre from Cloainog, this inscription is read in a stone.

AMILLIN
TOVISATOC.

By the Vale side where these mountaines beginne now to wax thinner, upon the hanging of a rocke standeth Denbigh, called of our Britans by a more ancient name, Clad Frynyn Ross, that is, A rough hill in Ross, for so they call that part of the Shire: which King Edward the First gave with other faire lands and possessions to David the brother of Llewellyn. But when he soone after being found guilty of hightreason was beheaded, Henry Lacy Earle of Lincolne obtained it by the grant of the said King Edward: and he fortified it with a wall about, not large in circuit, but strong, and on the South side with a proper Castle, strengthened with high Towres. In the well whereof, after that his onely sonne fortun'd to be drowned, the most sorrowfull father conceived such griefe, that he gave over the worke and left it unfinished. And after his death, the Towne with the rest of the possessions descended unto the house of Lancaster by his daughter Alice, who survived: From whom notwithstanding it came first through the liberality of King Edward the Second (when the said house was dejected) unto Hugh Spenser Earle of Winchester; then, to Roger Mortimer by covenant and composition with King Edward the Third: and the said Mortimer's Armes are to be scene upon the chiefe gate. But after that he was executed, it with the Cantreds of Ross, and Riewinoc, &c. were granted to William Montague after Earle of Salisbury, for suppressing of Mortimer, and shortly after it was restored unto the Mortimers, and by them at length descended to the Family of York. At which time, they of the House of Lancaster for the malice they bare unto Edward the Fourth, who was of the family of York, did much hurt unto it. And then, either because because the inhabitants like not the steepe situation thereof (for the carriage up and downe was very incommodious) or by reason that it wanted water, they removed downe from thence by little and little, so as that this ancient Towne hath now few or none dwelling in it: But a new one farre bigger than it sprung up at the very foote of the hill: which is so well peopled and inhabited, that by reason, that the Church is not able to receive the multitude, they beganne to build a new one in the place where the old Towne stood, partly at the charges of their Lord Robert Earle of Leicester, and partly with the money which they have gathered of many well disposed throughout England: For, the said Robert, in the yeere 1564. was created by Queene Elizabeth Baron of Denbigh, to him and the heires of his body lawfully begotten. Neither is there any one Barony in all England that hath more Gentlemen holding thereof in fee, and by service.

Diffryn Cluid.

Now are we come into the very heart of the shire, where Nature having removed the hills out of the way on both sides, to shew what she could doe in a rough country, hath spread beneath them a most beautifull pleasant vale reaching 17. miles in length from South to North, and five miles or thereabout in breadth, which lyeth open only toward the sea and the cleering North winde: otherwise environed it is on every side with high hilles, and those from the East side, as it were embatted. For such is the wonderfull workmanship of nature, that the tops of these mountaines resemble in fashion the battlement of walles. Among which the highest is Moitlenly, on the top whereof I saw a warlike fence with trench and rampire; also a little fountaine of cleere water. This vale for wholsomenesse, fruitfulnessse and pleasantnesse excelleth. The colour and complexion of the Inhabitants is healthy, their heads are found and of a firme constitution, their eye-sight continuing, and never dimmed, and their age long lasting and very cheerefull. The Vale it selfe, with his greene meadowes, yellow Corne-fields, Villages, and faire houses standing thicke, and many beautifull Churches, giveth wonderfull great contentment to such as behold it from above. The river Cluid, encreased with beekes and brookes resorting unto it from the hills on each side, doth from the very spring-head part it in twaine running through the middle of it, whence in ancient time it was named Strat Cluid; For Marianus maketh mention of a King of the Strat-Clud of the Welsh; and at this day it is commonly called Diffryn Cluid, that is, The Vale of Cluid: wherein, as some have recorded, certaine Britans which came out of Scotland, after they had driven forth the English, erected a petty Kingdome. On the East banke of Cluid, in the South part of the vale, standeth Ruthin, in Latin writers Ruthunia, in British Ruthun, the greatest mercat town in all the Vale, full of Inhabitants, and well replenished with buildings; famous also not long since by reason of a large and very faire Castle able to receive and entertaine a great household. Which with the Towne, Reginald Grey to whom King Edward the First granted it, and Roger Grey built, having obtained licence of the King, the Bishop of Saint Asaph, and the Parson of the Church of Llan Rhith, in whose Parish the place is sited. Unto him in recompense for his part of the good service performed against the Welsh, King Edward the First had given in manner the whole Vale: and it was the seat of his heires, men of great honour; and at length stiled with the Title of Earle of Kent, untill that Richard Grey Earle of Kent and Lord of Ruthin having no issue nor care of his brother Henry, passed away for a summe of money this his ancient inheritance unto King Henry the Seventh: But of late daies the bounteous magnificence of Queene Elizabeth bestowed it upon Ambrose Dudley Earle of Warwicke, together with rich revenewes in the Vale.

When you ascend out of the vale Eastward, you come to Tale, a little hilly country, and in comparison of the Regions beneath and round about it passing high, so that no river from elsewhere commeth into it, and it sendeth forth some from it. By reason of this high situation it is bleake, as exposed to the windes on all sides. Whether it took that name of the river Alen, which rising first in it, undermineth the ground and once or twice hideth himselfe, I know not. The Mountaines are full of Neat, sheepe, and Goats; the vallies in some places plenteous enough of Corne, especially Eastward

East, on this side of Alen. But the more Westerly part is not so fruitfull, and in some places is a very heath, and altogether barraine. Neither hath it any thing memorable, save onely a little Abbay, now wholly decayed, but standing most richly and pleasantly in a Vale, which among the woody hilles cutteth it selfe overthwart in manner of a crosse, whereupon it was called in Latine Vallis Crucis, that is, The Vale of the Crosse, and in British Lbane-Gwest.

Vallis Crucis.
Vale of the Crosse.

From hence more Eastward, the Territory called in Welsh Mallor Gymraig, that is, Welsh Mallor, in English Bromfield, reacheth as farre as to the river Dee. A small Territory, but very rich and pleasant, plentifull withall of Lead, especially neere unto Moinglath, a little Towne which tooke the name of Mines. Heere is Wrexham to be seene, in the Saxons tongue Writocler-ham, much spoken of for a passing faire towre Seeeple that the Church hath, and the muscicall Organs that bee therein. And neere unto it is Leonis Castrum, happily so called of the twenty Legion denominated Vidrix, which a little higher on the other banke of Dee lay garrisoned: now it goeth commonly under the name of Holt: and is thought to have beene re-edified of late by Sir William Stanley, and long since by John Earle of Warren, who being a Guardian of trust unto Madock a Welsh Lord, conveyed falsly from his Ward, this Lordship together with Tale unto himselfe. But from the Earles of Warren, it came unto the Fix-Alans Earles of Arundell, and from them to Sir William Beauchamp Baron of Abergvenney, and afterward to Sir William Stanley Chamberlaine to King Henry the Seventh, who contesting with his Sovereigne about his good services (when hee was honourably recompensed) lost his head, forgetting that Sovereignes must not bee beholding to Subjects, howsoever Subjects fancy their owne good services.

Lead.
Wrexham.

Holt.

Beneath Bromfield, Southward lyeth Chirke, in Welsh Gwain, being also very hilly, but well knowne in elder ages for two Castles, Chirke which gave it the name, built by Roger Mortimer, and Castle Dinas Bran, situate in the hanging of a mighty high hill pointed in the top: where of more there remaineth nothing but the very ruines. The common sort affirme, that Brennius the Generall of the Galles both built and so named it: others interpret the name to this sense, The Castle of the Kings Palace. For, Bren in British signifieth a King: whence perhaps that most puissant King of Gaulles and Britans both, was by way of excellency called Brennus. But others againe draw this name from the high situation upon an hill, which the Britans tearme Bren, and in mine opinion this their conjecture carryeth with it more probability. In the time of King Henry the Third, it was the mansion place of Gruffith Ap Madoc, who when he tooke part with the English against the Welsh, was wont heere to make his abode: but after his death, Roger Mortimer who had the charge and tuition of his sonne Llewellyn, like as John Earle of Warren, of whom I spake seized Bromfield, so hee seized also this Chirke, into his possession.

Chirke:
Castle Dinas
Bran.Bren.
Brennus.

When the State of the Welsh by reason of their owne civill dissensions, and the invasions of English, now ready to ruine, could not well subsist, the Earles of Cheshire and of Warren, the Mortimers, Lacy, and the Greies, that I spake of, first of all the Normans brought this little Country of Denbigh by little and little into their owne hands and left possession thereof to their heires. Neither was it made a Shire before King Henry the Eighth his daies: at which time Radnor, Breconack, and Montgomery, by authority of the Parliament were ordained to be Shires.

In this Shire there be Parishes 57.

FLINTSHIRE.

RIGHT over against Denbigh-shire North-East-ward lyeth FLINTSHIRE, a small Territory, more in length than in breadth: hemmed in on the North side with the Irish Sea, or rather with an Arme of the same: on the East with Che-shire, on other parts with Denbigh-shire. It is no mountaine Country to speake of, yet rising somewhat with the bearing up of Hilles, and gently falleth and sloopeth it selfe downe with fruitfull fields, which towards Dee an Arme of the Sea, especially every first Yeere that they bee new broken uppe and sowne, beare in some places Barley, in others Wheat, but generally throughout Rye with twenty fold encrease and better, and afterwards foure or five Crops together of Ores.

In the Confines of this Shire and Denbigh-shire where the hilles grow more flat and plaine with a softer fall, and an easier descent downe into the Vale, in the very gullet and entry thereof, the Romanes placed a little City named VARIS, which Antonine the Emperour placeth nineteene miles from CONOVIVM. This without any maine of the name is called at this day Bod-Vari, that is, Mansion Vari, and the next little hill hard by which the inhabitants thereabout commonly call Moyly Gae, that is, The Mountaine of the City, sheweth the footings of a City indeed, that hath beene destroyed. But what the name should signifie it appeareth not. I for my part have beene of opinion elsewhere, that Varia in the old British language signified a Passage, and accordingly have interpreted these words Durnovaria and Isannovaria, The passage of a water, and the passage of Isanna. And for this opinion of mine maketh well the situation of VARIS in that place where onely there lyeth open an easie passage betwixt the hilles. And not three miles from hence standeth Cae-wisk, the name whereof although it maketh some shew of Antiquity, yet found I nothing ancient there, nor worth the observation.

Beneath this VARIS, or Bodvari, in the vale glideth Cluid, and streightwayes Elwy a little Riveret conjoyneth it selfe with it, where there is a Bishops See. This place the Britans call, according to the River Llan-Elwy, the Englishmen of Asaph the Patron thereof Saint Asaph. And the Historiographers, Asaphensis. Neither is the Towne for any beauty it hath, nor the Church for building or bravery memorable: yet something would be said of it, in regard of Antiquity.

For, about the yeere of our Redemption 560. Kentigern Bishop of Glasco, being fled hither out of Scotland placed heere a Bishops See, and erected a Monastery, having gathered together sixe hundred threescore and three in a religious brotherhood. Whereof three hundred being unlearned did give themselves to husbandry, and as many moe to worke and labour within the Monastery, the rest to Divine Service. Whom hee divided so by Covents, that some of them should continually give attendance in the Church to the service of God. But when he returned into Scotland, he ordain'd Asaph a most godly and upright man Governor over this Monastery, of whom it tooke the name which now it hath. The Bishop of this See hath under his Jurisdiction about 128. Parishes, the Ecclesiasticall Benefices whereof, were wont to bee bestowed, when the See was voided by the Archbishop of Canterbury, without interruption untill the time of King Henry the Eighth, and that by his Archiepiscopall right, which now is counted a Regality. For so wereade in the History of Canterbury.

Above this, Rustlan, taking the name of the ruddy and red banke of Cluid, on which it stands, maketh a good shew with a Castle, but now almost consumed by very age. Llewellyn Ap Sifil Prince of Wales, first built it; and Robert surnamed de Ruibland, Nephew of Hugh Earle of Chester, was the first that by force wonne it from the Welsh, as being Captaine Lieutenant to the said Hugh, who fortified it with new workes, and bulwarkes: Afterward (as Rob. Abbas de Monte hant witten) King Henry the Second, when hee had repaired this Castle gave it unto Hugh Beauchamp.

Beneath this, Cluid streightwayes emptieth it selfe into the Sea; And albeit the Valley at the very mouth seemeth to carry a lower leuell and to lye under the Sea, yet the water never overfloweth into the Vale; but as it were, by a naturall obstacle, staith within the very brinckes of the shore, not without the exceeding great admiration of Gods Providence. From hence the shore tending by little and little Eastward, shooteth forward first by Disari Castle, so called because it was situate on the rising of a cliffe, or as some would have it, as it were Desert: then by Basing worke, which also King Henry the Second granted unto Hugh Beauchamp.

Beneath this wee saw the little Towne Haly-well, as one would say, holy well, where there is that fountaine frequented by Pilgrimes for the memoriall of the Christian Virgin Winefride, ravished there perforce and beheaded by a Tyranne, as also for the mosse there growing of a most sweet and pleasant smell. Out of which Well there gusheth forth a Brooke among stones, which represent bloody spottes upon them; and it carryeth so violent a streame that presently it is able to drive a mill. Over the very Well there standeth a Chappell built of stone right curiously wrought, whereunto adjoyneth a little Church, in a window whereof is portrayed and set out the History of the said Winefride, how her head was cut off, and set on againe by Saint Benno. Neere unto this place in the time of Giraldus, who yet knew not this Well, There was, as him selfe writeth, a rich Veine and gainefull Mine of silver, where men in seeking after silver pierced and prised into the very bowels of the Earth.

This part of the Country, because it smileth so pleasantly upon the beholders with a beautifull shew, and was long since subje& unto Englishmen, the Welsh named Teg-Engle, that is, Faire England. But whereas one hath teamed it Tegonia, and thought that the Igeni there planted themselves, take heede I advise you, that you be not overhasty to beleieve him. Certes, the name of the Igeni wrong put downe here deceived the good man. Then upon the shore, you may see Flint Castle, which King Henry the Second beganne, and King Edward the First finished: and it gave the name unto this Shire: where King Richard the Second circumvented by them who should have bene most trusty, was cunningly induced to renounce the Crowne as unable for certaine defects to rule; and was delivered into the hands of Henry of Lancaster Duke of Hereford, who soone after claimed the Kingdome and Crowne being then voide by his cession, as his inheritance descended from King Henry the Third, and to this his devised claime the Parliament assented, and hee was established in the Kingdome. After Flint by the East border of the Shire, neere to Cheshire, standeth Hawarden commonly called Harden-Castle, not farre from the shore: out of which when David Llewellyn brother had led away prisoner Roger Clifford, Justice of Wales, hee raised thereby a most bloody Warre against himselfe and his people, wherein the Princedome of the Welsh Nation was utterly overthrowne. But this Castle anciently holden by the Seneschallship of the Earles of Chester, was the seat of the Barons of Mount-hault, who grew up to a most honourable family, and gave for their Armes in A Shield Azure a Lion rampant Argent: and bequeered their dignity and estate by marriage with Cecily one of the coheires of Hugh D'Arundell Earle of Arundell. But in the end, for default of male issue Robert the last Baron of this race, made it over as I have said already, to Isabell Queene of England wife to King Edward the Second. Howbeit the possession of the Castle was transferred afterward to the Stanleys, now Earles of Darby.

Through the South part of this Shire lying beneath these places above named, wandereth Alen a little River: neere unto which in an hill hard by Kilken, a small village, Basing worke.

Haly-well.

Saint Winefrid.

Flint.

Harden.

Barons of Mount-hault
Or de monte
Alto.

village, there is a Well. The water whereof at certaine set times riseth and falleth, after the manner of the Sea-tides. Upon this Alen, standeth Hopt Castle, in Welsh Cae-Garle, in which King Edward the First retired himselfe when the Welshmen had upon the sudden set upon his souldiers being out of array: and where good milstones are wrought out of the rocke: also, Mold, in Welsh Gaid Cruc a Castle, belonging in ancient time to the Barons of Mont-hault: both which places shew many tokens of Antiquity.

Neere unto Hope, a certaine Gardiner, when I was first writing this worke, digging somewhat deepe into the ground, happened upon a very ancient peece of worke, concerning which there grew many divers opinions of sundry men: But hee that will with any diligence reade M. Vitruvius Pollio, shall very well perceive, it was nothing else but a Stoupe or hote house begunne by the Romanes, who as their riotous excesse grew together with their wealth, used Bathes exceeding much. In length it was five elns, in breadth foure, and about halfe an eln deepe, enclosed with Walles of hard stone, the paving layed with bricke pargetted with lime mortar: the arched roofoe over it supported with small pillars made of bricke, which roofoe was of tiles pargetted over likewise very smoothe, having holes heere and there through it, wherein were placed certaine earthen pipes of Potters worke, by which the heate was conveyed, and so as hee saith, Voluebant hypocausta vaporem, that is, the Staples did send away a wauming base vapour. And who would not thinke this was one of these kindes of worke which Giraldus wondered at especially in Iscia? writing thus as he did of the Romanes workes. That (saith hee) which a man would judge among other things notable, there may you see on every side Stomphs made with marvellous great skill, breasting out heate closely as certaine holes in the sides, and narrow tunnels. Whose worke this was the tiles there did declare being imprinted with these words LEGIO XX. that is, The twentieth Legion, which, as I have shewed already before, abode at Chester scarce fixe miles a fide from hence.

Neere unto this River Alen, in a certaine streight set about with woods standeth Coles-hill, Giraldus tearmeth it Carbonarium collem, that is, Coles Hill, where when King Henry the Second had made preparation with as great care as ever any did, to give Battaille unto the Welsh, the English by reason of their disordered multitude drawing out their Battalions in their ranks, and not ranged close in good array, lost the Field and were defeated: yea and the very Kings standerd was forsaken by Henry of Essex, who in right of inheritance was Standerd-bearer to the Kings of England. For which cause he being afterwards charged with treason, and by his challenger overcome in combat, had his goods confiscate and seized into the Kings hands, and he displeased with himselfe for his cowardise, put on a coule, and became a Monke.

Another little parcell there is of this Shire on this side the River Dee, dismembered as it were from this, which the English call English Mairor. Of this I treated in the County of Chester, whiles I spake of Bangor: and there is no reason to iterate the same heere which hath bene already spoken of before. Neither doth it afford any thing in it worth the reporting, unlesse it be Han-mere, by ae Meres side, whereof a right ancient and worshipfull Family there dwelling, tooke their surname.

The Earles of Chester as they skirmished by occasions, and advantage of opportunity with the Welsh, were the first Normans that brought this Country under their subjection, whereupon wee reade in ancient Records. The County of Flint appertained to the Dignity of the sword of Chester: and the eldest sonnes of the K.K. of England were in old time stiled by the Title of Earles of Chester and of Flint. But notwithstanding King Edward the First, supposing it would bee very commodious both for the maintenance of his owne power and also to keepe under the Welsh, held in his owne hands both this and all the sea Coast of Wales. As for the Hope Castle.

Millstones:
Mold.Bathes or hote water.

Coles.hul.

English Mairor.

Han-mere.

Earles of Chester.

The prudent politic of Edward the First.

in-land Countries, he gave them to his Nobles as he thought good: following herein the policie of the Emperour Augustus, who undertooke himselfe to governe the Provinces that were strongest and lay outmost, but permitted Proconsuls by lot to rule the rest. Which he did in shew to defend the Empire, but in very deed to have all the armes and martiall men under his owne command.

In this Countie of Flint there be Parishes in all. 28.

PRINCES

PRINCES OF WALES.

S concerning the Princes of Wales of British blood in ancient times, you may reade in the Historie of Wales published in print: For my part I thinke it requisite and pertinent to my intended purpose to set downe summarily those of latter daies, descended from the Roiall line of England.

King Edward the First, unto whom his Father King Henry the Third had graunted the Principalitie of Wales, when hee had obtained the Crowne, and Llewellyn Ap. Gryffith the last Prince of the British race was slaine, and thereby the sinewes as it were of the Principalitie were cut: in the twelfth yeere of his Reigne, united the same unto the Kingdome of England: And the whole Province sware fealty and allegiance unto Edward of Caernarvon his Sonne whom he made Prince of Wales. But

See page 114.

King Edward the Second conferred not upon his Sonne Edward, the title of Prince of Wales, but onely the name of Earle of Chester and of Flint, so farre as I ever could learne out of the Records, and by that title summoned him to Parliament being then nine yeeres old. King Edward the Third first Created his eldest Sonne Edward surnamed the Blacke Prince the Mirour of Chivalry (being then Duke of Cornwall and Earle of Chester) Prince of Wales by solemne investure, with a cap of estate, and Coronet set on his head, a gold ring put upon his finger, and a silver vierge delivered into his hand, with the assent of the Parliament: who in the very floure of his martiall glory was taken away by untimely death too too soone, to the universall grieffe of all England. Afterwards King Edward the Third invested with the said honour Richard of Burdeux the said Princes Sonne, as heire apparent to the Crowne, who was deposed from his Kingdome by King Henry the Fourth, and having no issue was cruelly dispatched by violent death. The said King Henry the Fourth at the formall request of the Lords and Commons bestowed this Principalitie with the title of Chester and Flint, with solemne investure, and a kisse in full Parliament upon his eldest Sonne, who gloriously bare the name of King Henry the Fifth. His Sonne King Henry the Sixth who at his Fathers death was an Infant in the cradle, conferred likewise this honour which he never had himselfe, upon his young Sonne Edward, whose unhappie fortune it was to have his braines dashed out cruelly by the faction of Yorke, being taken prisoner at Tewkesbury field. Not long after King Edward the Fourth having obtained the Crowne created Edward his young Sonne Prince of Wales, who was afterwards in the lineall succession of Kings, Edward the Fifth of that name. And within a while after his Unkle King Richard the Third

See page 164.

Afterward a golden vierge was used.

who

who made him away, ordained in his roome, Edward his owne Sonne, whom King Edward the Fourth had before made Earle of Salisbure, but he died quickly after. Then King Henrie the Seventh created his eldest sonne Arthur, Prince of Wales, and when he was dead, his other Sonne well knowne in the world by the name of King Henrie the Eighth. Every one of these had the Principality of Wales given to them by the foresaid solemne investure, and delivery of a Patent, bold to themselves and their Heires, Kings of England. For Kings would not bereave themselves of so excellent an occasion to doe well by the best Sonnes, but thought it very good policie by so great a benefit to oblige them when they pleased. Queene Mary, Queene Elizabeth, and King Edward, the Children of King Henrie the Eighth, although they never had investure, nor Patent, yet were commonly named in their order Princes of Wales. For, at that time, Wales was by authority of Parliament so annexed and united to the Kingdome of England, that both of them were governed vnder the same Law: or, that you may reade it abridged out of the Act of Parliament. The Kings Countrey or dominion of Wales shall stand and continue for ever incorporated, united, and annexed, to and with the Realme of England and all and singular person and persons borne and to be borne in the said Principality, Country, or Dominion of Wales, shall have, enioy, and inherit all and singular freedoms, liberties, rights, priviledges, and Lawes, within this Realme, and other the Kings Dominions, as other the Kings Subjects naturally borne within the same, have, enioy, and inherit: and the Lawes, Ordinances, and Statutes of the Realme of England for ever, and none other shall he had, used, practised, and executed in the said Country, or Dominion of Wales, and every part thereof, in like manner, forme, and order, as they be and shall be in this Realme, and in such like manner and forme, as hereafter shall be further established and ordained. This Act, and the calme command of King Henrie the Seventh preparing way for it, effected that in a short time, which the violent power of other Kings armes, and especially of Henrie the Fourth with extreame rigour also of Lawes, could not draw on in many yeeres. For ever sithence the British Nation hath continued as faithfully and dutifully in their Loyall Allegiance to the Crowne of England, as any other part of the Realme whatsoever. Now am I to returne out of Wales into England, and must goe unto the Brigantes.

BRIGANTES.

BRIGANTES.

BRITAINE, which hitherto hath, as it were, launched out with huge Promontories, looking on the one side toward Germanie, on the other side toward Ireland, now as if it were afraid of the Sea violently intruding upon it withdraweth it selfe farther in, and by making larger separations of lands retireth backe, gathered into a farre narrower breadth: For, it is not past one hundred miles broad from coast to coast, which on both sides passe on in a maner with straight and direct shores Northward, as farre as to Scotland. All this part well neere of the Island, while the Romane Empire stood upright and flourished in Britaine, was inhabited by the BRIGANTES. For, Plinie writeth, that they dwelt from the East Sea to the West. A nation this was right valiant, populous withall, and of especiall note among ancient Authors, who all doe name them, BRIGANTES, unlesse it be Stephanus onely, in his booke Of Cities; who called them BRIGAE: in which place, that which he wrote of them is defective at this day in the bookes, by reason that the sentence is imperfect. If I should thinke that these were called Brigantes, of Briga, which in the ancient Spanish tongue signified A Citie, I should not satisfie my selfe; seeing it appeareth for certaine out of Strabo, that it is a meere Spanish word. If I were of opinion with Goropius that out of the Low Dutch tongue, they were termed Brigantes, as one would say Freehands, should I not obtrude upon you his dreames for daunties? Howsoever the case standeth, our Britanes, or Welsh-men, if they see any of a bad disposition, and audaciously playing lawlesse and lewde parts, use to say of them by way of a common merry quippe, Wharret Brigans, that is, They play the Brigants. And the French-men at this day, alluding as it seemeth to the ancient language of the Gaules, usually terme such lewde fellows Brigans like as Pirats Ships, Brigantins. But whether the force of the word was such in old time in the Gaules or Britanes language, or whether our Brigantes were such like men, I dare not determine. Yet, if my memory faile me not, Strabo calleth the Brigantes (a people about Alpes) Grassatores, that is, Robbers, and Julius a Belgian a young man of desperate boldnesse, who counted power, authority, honestie, and vertue to be nothing but naked names, is in Tacitus surnamed Briganticus. With which kinde of vice, our old Brigantes may seeme to have been tainted, when they so robbed and spoiled the neighbour inhabitants, that the Emperour Antoninus Pius for this cause tooke away a great part of their Country from them,

Brigantes
whereof they tooke name.

See Pasquier in Les Recherches
de France, lib. 6.
cap. 40.

Neither afterward in the time of Antoninus Pius, was their courage, as it may seeme, very much abated, when he tooke away part of their territories from them, because they had made rodes, as I have said before, into Genunia, or Guinethia, a Province confederate with the Romanes.

If I durst by our Critickes good leave (who in these daies presuming so much of their great wits are supercritical) me thinks, I could heere cleare Tacitus of a fault or two, which sitteth close to him, as concerning the Brigantes. The one is in the twelfth Booke of his Annales, where I would reade, (for Vennutius out of the State of the Iugantes) out of the State of the Brigantes: which Tacitus himselfe seemeth to insinuate in the third Booke of his Histories. The other, in the life of Agricola. The Brigantes, saith he, under the leading of a Woman, burnt the Colonie, &c. Where truth would have you reade, The Trinobantes. For he speaketh of Queene Boadicia, who had nothing to doe with the Brigantes. But the Trinobantes, she stirred inderstate rebellion, and burnt the Colonie* Camalodunum.

But, this Country of theirs so exceeding large, which the further it goeth the narrower it waxeth, riseth on high in the mids with continued ridges and edges of hills, (as Italie is raised up with Apenninus) which make a partition betweene those Countiees into which it is now divided. For, beneath those hills toward the East and the German Sea, lieth Torke-shire, and the Bishopricke of Duresme; and on the West side, Lancashire, Westmorland, and Cumberland, all which Countiees in the first infancy of the English-Saxons Empire, were contained within the Kingdome of the Deiri. For, they call these Countiees, the Kingdome of the Nordanhumbers, and divided them in two parts; Deira, called in that age Deipland, which is neerer unto us and on this side Tine; and Bernicia, which lying beyond Tine, reached as farre as Edenborough Frith in Scotland: which parts although they had their severall Kings for a long time, yet at length grew all to bee one Kingdome. And, that I may note this one thing by the way, whereas in the life of Charles the Great it is read thus, Eardulph King of the Nordanhumbers, that is, De-Ireland, being driven out of his Country unto Charles the Great, &c. Wee must reade ioynty, Dierland, and understand the place of this Country, and not of Ireland, as some have misconceived.

A place in Tacitus corrected.

* Malden.

TORKE.

YORKESHIRE.

THE County of YORKE, in the Saxon Tongue Euerpior
reýne, Epproc-reýne, and Ebopa-reýne, commonly YORKE-SHIRE, the greatest Shire by farre, of all England, is thought to bee in a temperate measure fruitfull. If in one place there bee stony and sandy barraine ground, in another place there are for it Corne-fields as rich and fruitfull: if it bee voide and destitute of Woods heere, you shall finde it shadowed there with most thicke Forests: so provi-dently useth Nature such a temperature, that the whole Countrey may seeme by reason also of that variety more gracefull and delectable. Where it bendeth Westward, it is bounded with the Hilles, I spake of, from Lancashire and Westmoreland.

On the North side it hath the Bishopricke of Durham, which the River Tees with a continued course separateth from it. On the East side the Germaine Sea lieth fore upon it: and the South side is enclosed first with Cheshire and Darby-shire, then with Nottingham-shire, and after, with Lincoln-shire, where that famous arme of the Sea Humber floweth betweene, into which all the Rivers well neere that water this shire empty themselves, as it were, into their common receptacle.

This whole Shire is divided into three parts: which according to three Quarters of the world are called The West-Riding, The East-Riding, and The North-Riding.
West-Riding, for a good while is compassed in with the River * Ouse, with the bound of Lancashire, and with the South limits of the shire, and beareth toward the West and South. East-Riding, looketh to the Sunne-rising and the Ocean, which together with the River Derwent encloseth it. North-Riding reacheth Northward, hemmed in, as it were, with the River Tees with Derwent and a long race of the River Ouse. In that West part, out of the Westerne Mountaines or Hilles in the Confines, issue many Rivers which Ouse alone entertaineth every one, and carryeth them all with him unto Humber. Neither can I see any fitter way to describe this part, than to follow the streames of Done, Calder, Aire, Wharfe, Nidd and Ouse, which springing out of these Hilles, are the Rivers of most account, and runne by places likewise of greatest importance.

The River Dannus, commonly called Don, and Dune, so termed, as it should seeme for that it is carried in a chanell somewhat flat, shallow and low by the ground (for so much signifieth Dan in the British language) after it hath saluted Wortley, which gave surname to a worshipfull Family, as also Wentworth hard by, whence beside other Gentlemen as well in this Country, as elsewhere, the Barons of Wentworth have derived both their originall and name; runneth first by Sheafeld a Towne of great name (like as other small Townes adjoyning) for the Smithes therein (considering there bee many iron Mines thereabout) fortified also with a strong and ancient Castle, which in right line descended from the Lovetofts, the Lords Furnivall, and Thomas Lord Nevill of Furnivall, unto the Talbots, Earles of Shrewsbury. From thence Don clad with alders, and other trees goeth to Rotheram, which glorieth in Thomas Rotheram sometime Archbishop of Yorke, a wise man, bearing the name of the Towne, being borne therein, and a singular benefactor thereunto, who founded and endowed there a College with three Schooles in it to teach children writ-ting, Grammar, and Musicke, which the greedy iniquity of these our times hath already swallowed.

Then looketh it up to Connisbrough or Conines-borough an ancient Castle, in the British tongue Caer Conan, seated upon a Rocke, into which, what time as Aurelius Ambrosius had so discomfited and scattered the English Saxons at Maisbelly, that they

Humber

* First called Ure and Your.
West Riding.

The river Don.

Wortley.
Wentworth;

Sheafeld;

Furnivall.

Rotheram;

Connis-borrow.
Florilegus.

487.

M m m

they tooke them to their heeles, and fled every man the next way hee could finde, Hengeſt their Captaine retired himſelfe for ſafety and few daies after brought his men forth to battaile before the Captaine againſt the Britans that purſued him, where hee fought a bloody field to him and his: For, a great number of men were there cut in peeces: and the Britans having intercepted him, chopt off his head, if we may beleieve the Britiſh Hiſtory rather than the Engliſh-Saxon Chronicles, which report that he being outworne with travell and labour, died in peace. But this Cotby-borough in latter ages was the poſſeſſion of the Earles of Warren. Afterwards, hee runneth under Sprotburg the ancient ſeat of that ancient family of the Fitz-Williams Knights, who are moſt honourably allied and of kin to the nobleſt houſes of England, and from whom deſcended Sir William Fitz-Williams Earle of Southeampton, in our fathers remembrance, and Sir William Fitz-Williams late Lord Deputy of Ireland. But in proceſſe of time this is fallen to the Copleys, like as Elmeſly with other poſſeſſions of theirs in this Tract, are come by right of inheritance to the Sovills.

From hence Done running with a divided ſtreame hard to an old towne, giveth it his owne name, which we at this day call Dan-caſtre, the Scots Don-Caſtle, the Saxons Dona-caſtrep, Ninins, Caer Daun, but Antonine the Emperour DANUM, like as the booke of Notices: which hath recorded that the Captaine of the Criſpinian Horſemen, lay there in Garifon under the Generall of Britaine. This about the yeere of our Lord 759. was ſo burnt with fire from heaven, and lay ſo buried under the owne ruines, that it could ſcarce breath againe. A large plot it ſheweth yet, where a Citadell ſtood, which men thinke was then conſumed with fire: in which place I ſaw the Church of S. Georges, a faire Church, and the onely Church they have in the Towne.

Beneath this Towne Southward ſcarce five miles off is Tickhill, which I am not willing to omit, an old towne, fenced with as old a Caſtle, large enough, but having onely a ſingle Wall about it, and with an high Mount whereon ſtandeth a round Keepe. It carryed in old time ſuch a Dignity with it, that the Manours and Lords belonging thereto were called The Honour of Tickhill. In the Raigne of Henry the Firſt Roger Buſſy held the poſſeſſion thereof: Afterwards the Earles of Ewe in Normandy were long ſince Lords of it by the gift of King Stephen. Then King Richard the Firſt gave it unto John his brother. In the Barons Warre Robert de Pypm deſcended it for himſelfe, which that hee ſhould deliver unto the Earle of Ewe, King Henry the Third put into his hands, the Caſtle of Carleol, and the County. But when the King of France would not reſtore unto the Engliſh againe their poſſeſſions in France, the King of England retained it unto himſelfe, when as John Earle of Ewe in the right of Alice his great Grandmother claimed of King Edward the Firſt reſtitution thereof. At length Richard the Second King of England liberally gaveth unto John of Gaunt Duke of Lancaſter.

But now by this time Done that often riſeth heere and overfloweth the fields, gathering his divided waters into one ſtreame againe, when he hath for a while runne in one Chanell through Haſfeld Chace (where there is great game and hunting of red Deere) being divided eſt-ſoone, ſpeedeth himſelfe on the one hand to Idel a River in Nottinghamſhire, on the other to Aire, that hee and they together may fall into Humber. In which very place there are environed with theſe rivers Dicbe-march and Marſhland, little Merſh Countries or River-Iſlands rather, taking up in circuit much about fifteene miles, moſt plentifull of greene graſſe, paſſing good for feeding of Cattail, and on every ſide garniſhed, as it were, with pretty Townes. Yet ſome of the Inhabitants are of opinion, that the land there, is hollow and hanging, yea and that; as the waters riſe, the ſame alſo is heaved up: a thing that Pomponius Mela hath written concerning Antrum an Iſle in France.

But among thoſe Beakes and Brookes that convey their ſtreames hither, I muſt not overpaſſe Went, which floweth out of a ſtanding Poole neere unto Noſthill, where ſometime ſtood an Abbey conſecrated to Oſwald, both a King and a Saint, which a Confeſſour to King Henry the Firſt reedified. But ſince the diſſolution it hath

The Family of Fitz-Williams.

Dan-caſtre.

Tickhill.

Plac. ann. 3.
Joan. Reg. Pl.
81. 4. Et 3.

Marſhland.

Noſthill.
Saint Oſwald.

A hath beene the dwelling houſe of the Gargraves, Knights of eſpeciall good reſpect. Caldre ſpringing in the very Confines of Lancaſhire, runneth along certaine Townes of no account; among which, at Gretland in the top of an Hill (whereunto there is no aſcent but of one ſide) was digged up this Votive Altar, erected, as it ſhould ſeeme, to the tutelard God of the whole State of the Brigantes: which Altar was to bee ſeene at Bradley, in the houſe of the right worſhipfull Sir John Savill Knight, Baron of the Exchequer, but now among Sir Robert Cottons Antiquities.

The River
Caldre.

On the other ſide.

Anno Chriſti
209.

That is, To the God of the whole Communnalty and ſtate of the Brigantes, and to the ſacred Maieſty of the Auguſti, Titus Aurelius Aurelianus hath dedicated for himſelfe and his. (The letters that bee laſt of all paſſe my ſkill altogether) When Antonine the third time, and Geta were Conſuls.

Now whether that Dui, be God, whom the Britans now call Dim, or a peculiar locall God, or Genius of the Brigantes, I leave for to be diſcuſſed by them, that are better learned. Like as the ſoules are divided and diſtributed among them that are borne (ſaith Symmachus) even ſo are Fatall Genij, among Nations. And the divine minde alotteth ſundry keepers and Guardians to particular Countries. For, thus they were in old time perſwaded in their Divinity, and thus they beleaved. And, to ſay nothing of forraine Nations, whoſe Hiſtory is very full of ſuch peculiar and locall Gods; the Britans had in that part which now is called Essex, Andates: in Cumberland, Bel-lo-tu-cadruſ: in Northumberland, Viterinus, and Mogontus, as ſhall appeare more evidently out of thoſe Inſcriptions, which I will ſet downe in due place. Servius Honoratus likewiſe hath well and truly obſerved, that theſe Locall or Topick Gods doe never paſſe unto other Countries. But to returne unto the River Caldre: which when by the comming in of other waters hee is growne bigge and carryeth a fuller ſtreame, hath a faire Bridge over it at Eland: neere unto which, at Grimſcarre, were brickeſ found with this Inſcription.

DVI.
The Geniſ of Places.

Lib. Ep. 40.

For, the Romanes flouriſhing in military prowefſe, in great wiſedome and pollicie exerciſed both their Legions and Cohorts in time of peace, to withſtand Idleneſſe, by caſting of ditches, making of High-waies, baking of brickeſ, building of Bridges, &c.

Vopuſcius Probus.

Caldre afterward among the very Hilles leaveth on the left hand Halifax a moſt famous Towne, lying from Weſt to Eaſt upon the ſteepe deſcent of an Hill. And not many ages ſince, tooke it this name; whereas before time it was called Horion, as ſome of the Inhabitants doe report, who tell this pretty ſtory alſo, touching the alteration of the name.

Halifax.
Some would have it to be called afore-time, the Chappell in the Grove.

A certaine Clerke, as they call him, was farre in love with a maiden who when M m m 2 he

hee might not have his purpose of her, for all the faire meanes and enticements hee could use, his love being turned unto rage (vilanous Wretch that hee was) cut off the Maides head; which being hung afterwards upon an Eugh tree, the common people counted as an hallowed Relique, untill it was rotten, yea and they came devoutly to visit it, and every one gathered and carried away with him a branch or sprig of the said tree. But after the tree was bare and nothing left but the very stocke (such was the credulity of that time) it maintained the opinion of reverence and Religion still. For, the people were perswaded, that the little veines that are stretched out and spread betwene the barke and body of the Eugh tree in manner of haire or fine threads, were the very haire indeede of the Virgins head. Hereupon they that dwelt thereabout repaired on Pilgrimage hither, and such resort there was unto it, that Horton being but a little Village before, grew up to a great Towne, and was called by a new name Halig-Fax, or Hali-fax, that is, Holy haire. For, the Englishmen dwelling beyond Trent, called the haire of the head Fax. Whence also there is a Family in this Country, of Gentlemen, named Faire-fax, of the faire bush of their haire. They therefore, which by resemblance of the name gather this to bee Ptolomees Olicana, bee farre deceived. Now this place is become famous as well among the multitude by reason of a Law there, whereby they behead straightwaies whosoever are taken stealing: as also amongst the learned: for they report that Joannes de Sacro Bosco the Author of the Sphere, was here borne: yet more famous it is, for the greatnesse of the Parish, which reckoneth in it eleven Chappels, whereof two, be Parish-Chappels, and to the number of twelve thousand people therein. So that the Inhabitants are wont to give out, that this Parish of theirs maintaineth more men and women, than other living creatures of what kinde soever. Whereas you shall see elsewhere in England, in the most fruitfull and fertile places, many thousands of Sheepe, and very few men, as if folke had given place to flocks of Sheepe, and herds of Neat, or else were devoured of them. Moreover, the industry of the Inhabitants heere is admirable, who in a barren Soile, wherein there is no commodious, nay scarce any dwelling and living at all, have so come up and flourished by Clothing (a trade which they tooke to not above threecore and tenne yeeres agoe at the farthest) that they greatly enrich their owne estates, and winne the praise from all their neighbours: yea, and have proved the saying to be true, That barrenne places give a good edge to industrie: and that hence it is, that Norinberg in Germanie, Venice and Genna in Italie, and Limoges in France, situate all in barrenne places are become right flourishing Cities. Sixe miles from hence and not farre from the right side of the River Calder, neere unto Almond-bury a little Towne, standing upon an high and steepe Hill which hath no easie passage on even ground unto it but of one side, are seene the manifest tokens of a Rampire, some ruines of walles and of a Castle, which was guarded about with a triple strength of Forts and Bulwarkes. Some will have this also to have beene OLICANA: But the trueth saith otherwise, and namely that it is CAMBODUNUM, which Ptolomee calleth amisse CAMULODUNUM, and Beda by a word divided CAMPO-DUNUM.

This is proved by the distance thereof, on the one side from MANCUNUM, on the other from CALCARIA, according to which Antonine placeth it. Moreover, it seemeth to have flourished in very great honour, when the English Saxons first beganne to rule. For, the Kings Towne it was, and had in it a Cathedral Church built by Paulinus the Apostle of these parts, and the same dedicated to Saint Alban: whence in stead of Alban-bury, it is now called Almon-bury. But when Ceadwall the Britan and Penda the Mercian made sharpe warre upon Edwin the Prince of these Countries, it was set on fire by the enemy, as Beda writeth, which the very adust and burnt colour as yet remaining upon the stones doth testifie. Yet afterwards there was a Castle built in the same place, which King Stephen, as I have read, confirmed unto Henry Lacy.

Hard

Fax, what it is.

Halifax law.

Almond-bury.

Cambodunum.

A Hard unto it lyeth Whitley, the habitation of an ancient and notable Family of Whitley. Beaumont, which notwithstanding is different from that House of the Barons and Vicounts Beaumont, yet it was of great name in this Tract before their coming into England.

Calder now leaving these places behinde him, and having passed by Kirkley an house in times past of religious Nunnes; and the Tombe of Robin Hood that right good and honest Robber (in which regard he is so much spoken of) goeth to Dewsbury good and honest Robber (in which regard he is so much spoken of) goeth to Dewsbury borough seated under an high Hill. Whether it had the name of DVI that tutelar God of the place, of whom I wrote a little before, I am not able to say: Surely the name is not unlike, for it soundeth as much as Duis Burgh, and flourished at the very first infancy, as it were, of the Church springing up amongst the Englishmen in this Province: for, I have heard, that there stood a Crosse heere with this Inscription.

that is;

And that this Paulinus was the first Archbishop of Yorke, about the yeere of our Redemption 626, all Chronicles doe accord. From hence Calder running by Thornhill (which from Knights of that surname is descended to the Savills) passeth hard by Wakefield a Towne famous for clothing, for greatnesse, for faire building, a well frequented Mercate, and a Bridge: upon which King Edward the Fourth erected a beautifull Chappell, in memoriall of those that lost their lives there in battaile. The Possession sometime this was of the Earles of Warren and of Surry, as also Sandall Castle adjoyning, which John Earle of Warren (who was alwaies fleshly lustfull) built, when he had used the wife of Thomas Earle of Lancaster more familiarly than honesty would require, to the end he might deteine and keepe her in it securely, from her Husband. By this Townes side, when the civill warre was hote heere, in England and setled in the very bowels thereof, Richard Duke of Yorke, father to King Edward the Fourth (who chose rather to hazard his fortune: than to stay the good time thereof) was slaine in the field by those that tooke part with the House of Lancaster. The Tract lying heere round about for a great way together, is called The Seignory or Lordship of Wakefield, and hath alwaies for the Seneschall or Steward one of the better sort of Gentlemen dwelling thereby. Which Office the Savills have oftentimes borne, who are heere a very great and numerous Family, and at this day Sir John Savill Knight beareth it, who hath a very sightly faire house not farre off at Howley, which maketh a goodly shew. Calder is gone scarce five miles farther, when he betaketh both his water and his name also to the River Aire. Where, at their very meeting together standeth betwene them Medley, in times past Mede-ley, so called for the situation, as it were, in the midst betwene two Rivers. The seat it was in the age aforegoing, of Sir Robert Waterton Master of the Horse to King Henry the Fourth, but now of Sir John Savill a right worshipfull Knight, and a most worthy Baron of the Kings Exchequer, whom I acknowledge full gladly in his

M m m 3

his

Wakefield.

1460.

The Savills, Howley.

Medley.

The River Are. his love and courtesie to have favoured me, and out of his learning to have furthered this worke. This river Are springing out of the bothom of the hill Penmigen, which among the Westerne hills mounteth aloft above the rest, doth forthwith so sport himselfe with winding in and out, as doubtfull whether hee should returne backe to his spring-head, or runne on still to the sea, that my selfe in going directly forward on my way was faine to passe over it seven times in an houres riding. It is so calme, and milde, and carryeth so gentle and slow a streame, that it seemeth not to runne at all but to stand still, whence I suppose it tooke the name. For, as I have said before, Ara in the British tongue betokeneth Milde, Still, and Slow, whereupon that slow River in France Araris hath his name. The Country lying about the head of this River, is called in our tongue Craven, perchance of the British word Crage, that is, a Stone. For, the whole Tract there, is rough all over and unpleasant to see to, with craggy stones, hanging rocks, and rugged waies: in the middelt whereof, as it were in a lurking hole, not farre from Are, standeth Skipton: and lyeth hidden and enclosed among steepe Hilles, in like manner as Latium in Italie, which Varro supposeth to have bene so called, because it lyeth close under Apennine and the Alpes. The Towne (for the manner of their building among these Hilles) is faire enough, and hath a very proper and a strong Castle, which Robert de Rumeley built, by whose posterity it came by inheritance to the Earles of Armarle. And when their inheritance for default of heires fell by escheat into the Kings hands, Robert de Clifford, whose heires are now Earles of Cumberland, by way of exchange obtained of King Edward the Second both this Castle, and also faire lands round about it every way, delivering into the Kings hands in lieu of the same, the possessions that he had in the Marches of Wales.

When Are is once past Craven, hee spreadeth broader and passeth by more pleasant fields lying on each side of it, and Kigbeley among them, which gave name to the worshipfull Family of Kigbeley, so surnamed thereof. Of which Family, Henry Kigbeley obtained of king Edward the First for this Manour of his the liberty of a Mercate and Faire, and free warren. So that no man might enter into those Landis to hunt and chase in them, or to take any thing thus pertained to the Warren, without the licence and good will of Henry himselfe and his Successours. Which was counted in that age for a speciall favour, and I note it once for all, that we may see, what Free Warren was. But the male issue of this Family in the right line ended in Henry Kigbeley of Insip. Howbeit, the daughters and heires were wedded to William Cavendish, now Baron Cavendish of Hardwick, and to Thomas Worsley of Booths. From hence Are passeth beside Kirkstall, an Abbey in times past of no small reckoning, founded by Henry Lacy, in the yecere 1147. and at length visiteth Leedes, in the Saxon tongue Layoe, which became a house of the Kings, when CAMBODUNUM was by the enemy burnt to the ground: now a rich Towne by reason of clothing, where Osway king of Northumberland put to flight Penda the Mercian: And, as Bede saith, this was to the great profit of both Nations: for he both delivered his owne people from the hostile spoiling of the Mercians, and also converted the Mercians themselves to the grace of Christian Faith. The very place wherein they joyned battaile, the writers call Winwidfield, which name I suppose was given it of the Victory: like as a place in Westphalia, where Quintillus Varus with his legions was slaine, is in the Dutch tongue called Winfield, that is, the field of victory, as that most learned man and my very good friend Abraham Ortelius hath observed. The little Region or Territory about it, was in times past by an old name called Elmet: which Eadwin king of Northumberland, the sonne of Ella, after hee had expelled Cereticus a British king, conquered in the yecere of Christ 620. Herein is digged limestone every where, which is burnt at Brumerton, and Knottingley, and at certaine set times, as it were, at Faires, a mighty quantitie thereof is conveyed to Wakefield, Sandall, and Stambridge: and so is sold unto this Westerne Country which is hilly and somewhat cold, for to manure and enrich their Corne fields. But let us leave these things to Husbandmen: as for my selfe I profess my ignorance therein, and will goe forward as I beganne.

At

At length Are entertaineth Calder aforesaid with his water as his Guest, where neere unto the meeting of both Rivers, standeth Castleford a little Village, Marianus nameth it Casterford: who reporteth, that the Citizens of Torke slew many of king Eibelfred's Army there, whom in their pursuite they set upon and charged heere and there at advantages; what time as hee invaded and overranne this Country for breaking the allegiance they had sworn unto him. But in Antonine, this place is called by a more ancient name LEGEOLIUM and LAGETIUM: Wherein beside expresse and notable tokens of Antiquity, a mighty number of Roman peeces of money (the common people there tearme them, Sarasins head) were found at Beasfield (a place so called now of Beanes) hard by the Church: The distance also from DAN and YORKE, betweene which he placed it, doth most cleerely confirm as much: to say nothing of the situation thereof hard by the Romanes High Street, and last of all for that Roger Hoveden in plaine tearmes calleth it A City.

From hence Are being now bigger, after it hath received Calder unto it, leaveth on the left hand Brotherton a little Towne; in which Queene Margaret, turning thither out of the way as the road on hunting, was delivered of childe, and brought forth unto her Husband king Edward the First, Thomas de Brotherton, so named of the place, who was afterward Earle of Norfolke, and Marehall of England. And not farre beneath, Are after it hath received into it Dan, looseth himselfe in Onfe. On the right hand, where a yellower kinde of marke is found, which being cast and spred upon the fields maketh them beare Corne for many yeeres together, he passeth by Pontfract, commonly called Pontefract, situate not farre from the river banke, which Towne gat life, as it were, by the death of old Legeolium. In the Saxons time it was called Kirkby, but the Normans of a broken Bridge named it in French Pontfract. Upon this occasion, it is commonly thought, that the wooden Bridge over Are hard by, was broken, when a mighty multitude of people accompanied William Archbishop of Torke (King Stephens sisters sonne) newly returned from Rome. Whereby a great number fell into the River, and yet by reason that the Archbishop shed many a teare at this accident, and called upon God for helpe: there was not one of them that perished. Seated it is in a very pleasant place, that bringeth forth Liquirice and skirworts in great plenty, adorned also with faire buildings, and hath to shew a stately Castle as a man shall see, situate upon a rocke no lesse goodly to the eye, than safe for the defence, well fortified with ditches and bulwarkes. Hildebert Lacy a Norman, unto whom king William the First, after that Alricke the Saxon was thrust out, had given this Towne with the land about it, first built this Castle. But Henry Lacy his nephew, came into the field at the battaile of Trenchbrey (I speake out of the Pleas) against King Henry the First: wherefore hee was dispossessed of the Barony of Pontfract, and the King gave the Honour to Wido de Lavall, who held it untill King Stephens dayes: at which time, the said Henry made an entry into the Barony, and by mediation of the King compounded with Wido, for an hundred and fifty pounds. This Henry had a sonne named Robert; who having no issue, left Albreda Lizours his sister by the mothers side, and not by the father, to bee his heire, because hee had none other so neere in blood unto him: whereby shee, after Roberts death, kept both inheritances in her hand, namely of her brother Lacies, and her father Lizours. And these be the very words of the booke of the Monastery of Stanlow. This Albreda, was married to Richard Fitz Eustach, Constable of Chester, whose Heires assumed unto them the name of Lacies, and flourished under the title of Earles of Lincolne. By a daughter of the last of these Lacies, this goodly inheritance by a deede of conveyance was devolved in the end to the Earles of Lancaster, who enlarged the Castle very much, and Queene Elizabeth likewise bestowed great cost in repairing it, and beganne to build a faire Chappell. This place hath bene infamous for the murder and bloudshed of Princes: For, Thomas Earle of Lancaster, the first of Lancastrian House that in right of his wife possessed it, stained and embrewed the same with his owne blood. For, King Edward the Second to free himselfe from rebellion and contempt shewed upon him a good example of wholsome severity, and beheaded him heere. Whom notwithstanding Castleford.

Legeolium;

T. de Castile; ford.

Saint William of Yorke.

Lacy the Norman.

Placit. i. H. 3.

The booke of Stanlow Monastery.

See Earles of Lincolne.

Thomas Earle of Lancaster.

standing the common people enrolled in the Beadroll of Saints. Heere also was that Richard the Second King of England; whom King Henry the Fourth deposed from his Kingdome with hunger, cold, and strange kindes of torments, most wickedly made away. And heere King Richard the Third caused Antonie Earle Rivers, King Edward the Fifth his Uncle by the mothers side, and Sir Richard Grey knight, halfe brother to the same King by the mothers side, both innocent persons, to loose their heads. For the Usurper feared, least those courageous and resolute men would stop his passage, aspiring as he did by wicked meanes to the Crowne; As for the Abbay, which the Lacies heere founded for religious persons, and the Hospitall which Sir Robert Knolles erected for poore people, I let passe wittingly, seeing there is scarce any rubbish now remaining of those good workes.

From LEGOLIUM or Castelford abovesaid, leaving behinde us Shirburne, a little Towne but well inhabited, which tooke name of the cleere bourne or River, and which King Asbelstane graunted unto the Archbishops of Torke, by the high ridge or Port way raised up of a great heighth, we came to Aberford, a little Village situate upon the said way, famous onely for making of pinnes, which by womens judgement are especially commended as the best. Under this the little River Coc (in booke, named Cokarus) runneth, and in the descent downe thereunto, the foundations of an old Castle, which they call Castle Cary, are to be seene. Scarce two miles from hence, at the spring head of Coc, standeth Barwic in Elmet, the royall house or seat, by report, in times past of the kings of Northumberland, which was environed about with walles, as the very ruines and ruble thereof seeme to testifie. On the other side is placed Hesselwood the principall seat of that worthy and right ancient family of the Yarvours, who by their Office (for the kings Yarvours in times past they were) tooke to them this name: and in the latter daies of King Edward the First Sir William Yarus was called among other Barons of the Realme unto the high Court of Parliament, as appeareth in the very Writs, as they call them, of Summons. Under this place lieth that most famous delfe or quarry of stone, called Peters post, for that with the stones hewed out of it, by the liberall grant of the Yarvours, that stately and sumptuous Church of Sant Peters at Torke was reedified.

From Aberford the said River Coc speedeth immediately to the River Wharf, as it were, sad, sorrowfull, and with heave cheere, in detestation of all civill warres, since time that he ranne all died with English blood. For, upon his banke nere unto Tonion a little country Village, was (as I may truly say) that our English Pharsalia. In no place ever saw our England such puissant forces, so much Gentry and Nobility together: an hundred thousand fighting men, and no fewer, of the one side and the other: Never were there leaders and Captaines on both parts more fierce, hardy, and resolute, never more cheerefull and forward to fight; who upon Palme Sunday, in the yeere 1461. in battaile array with banner displayed, entred the field and encountered. And when they had continued a doubtfull and variable fight a great part of the day, at length the Lancastrians not able to abide any longer the violence of their enemies (the chiefe cause of whose overthrow was the disordered unwealdiness of their owne Army) turned backe and fled amaine: And those that tooke part with Torke, being eager upon execution, followed them in chase so hotely, that they had the killing of a number of Noblemen and Gentlemen, and thirty thousand Englishmen were that day left dead in the field. But I leave this to the Historians. Somewhat lower, nere unto Shirburne, at Huddleston a little Village, is a famous stone quarry, out of which the stones when they are newly hewen be very soft, but after they bee seasoned with winde and weather, they become of themselves exceeding solid and hard. But (to returne) Coc making no long course sheaderth himselfe into Wharf.

This Wharf or Wharf, in the English Saxons language Guerp, commeth downe out of Craven, and for a great while runneth in a parallell distance even with Are. If a man should thinke the name to bee wrested from the word Guer, which in British signifieth Swift and violent, verily, the nature of that River concurrerth with his opinion;

Aberford.

Cary Castle.

Barwic in Elmet.

Hesselwood. Yarus or Yarus.

Peters-post.

The battaile at Tonion.

A quarry of stone.

The River Wharf.

nion; For, he runneth with a swift and speedy streame, making a great noise as hee goeth, as if he were froward, stubborne and angry, and is made more fell and teasty with a number of stones lying in his chanell, which he rolleth and tumblerth before him in such sort that it is a wonder to see the manner of it, but especially when hee swellth high in Winter. And verily it is a troublesome River and dangerous even in Summer time also, which I my selfe had experience of, not without some perill of mine owne, when I first travailed over this Country. For, it hath such slippery stones in it, that an horse can have no sure footing on them, or else the violence of the water carryeth them away from under his feete. In all his long course which from the spring head unto Osse is almost fifty miles, he passeth onely by little Townes of no especiall account: running downe by Kilnesley Cragge, the highest and steepest rocke that ever I saw in a midland Country by Burnsall, where Sir William Craven Knight and Alderman of London there borne, is now building of a Stone bridge: who also hard by, of a pious minde and beneficiall to his Country hath of late founded a Grammar Schoole, also by Barden-Towre, a little turret belonging to the Earle of Cumberland, where there is round about good store of game and hunting of fat Deere: by Bolton, where sometime stood a little Abbay: by Bethmesley, the seat of the notable Family of Claphams, out of which came John Clapham a worthy Warriour, in the civill broiles betweene Lancaster and Torke. From thence cometh he to Ilkeley, which considering the site in respect of Torke out of Ptolomee, and the affinity of the name together, I would judge to be OLICANA. Surely that is an old Towne (beside the Columbes engraven with Roman worke lying in the Churchyard and elsewhere) and was in Severus time reedified by the meanes of Virius Lupus, Lieutenant Generall and Proprætor then of Britaine, this inscription lately digged up hard by the Church doth plainly shew.

That the second Cohort of the Lingones abode heere, an Altar beareth witnesse, which I saw there, upholding now the staires of an house, and having this Inscription set upon it by the Captaine of the second Cohort of the Lingones, to VERBEIA, haply the Nymph or Goddesse of Wharf, the River running thereby, which River they called VERBEIA as I suppose, out of so neere affinity of the names.

* Of him Ulpian maketh mention lib. 2. de Pulcris & pupillis sub jurisdictione.

* Legato, Praetore.

For,

Epist. 41.

For, Rivers, as Gildas writeth, in that age, had by the blinde and ignorant people of A Britaine, divine honours heaped upon them. And Seneca sheweth, that in times past, Altars were erected unto them: We worship, saith he, The heads of great Rivers, and the sudden breaking forth of an huge River out of an hidden and secret place hath Altars consecrated unto it. Again, All waters, as Servius Honoratus saith, had their severall Nymphs, to take the rule and protection of them. Moreover in a Wall of the Church is fastened this broken and unperfected Inscription.

RUM CAES.
AUG.
ANTONINI
ET VERI
JOVI DILECTI
CAECILIUS
PRAEF. COH.

But in the very Church it selfe, whiles I sought diligently for monuments of Roman Antiquity, I found nothing but the Image in stone all armed, of Sir Adam Middleton: who seemeth to have flourished under King Edward the First, and whose posterity remaineth yet in the Country heereby, at Stubbam.

More beneath standeth Osley a Towne of the Archbishops of Torke: but it hath nothing memorable, unlesse it bee one high and hard craggy cliffe, called Chevin under which it is situate. For, the ridge of an hill, the Britans terme Chevin: whence I may conjecture that that continued ridge of mountaines in France, where in old time they spake the same language that Britans did, was called Gevenna and Gebenna. After this, Wherf runneth hard by, with his bankes on both sides reared up, and consisting of that Limestone which maketh grounds fat and fertile: where I saw Harewood Castle of good strength, which by the alteration of times, hath often changed his Lords.

Long since it belonged to the Curcies, but by Alice an inheritrice it came to Warin Fitz-Gerold, who had taken her to wife; whose daughter Margerie and one of his heires, being endowed with a very great estate of living, was first married unto Baldwin de Riparius*, the Earles sonne of Devon-shire, who dyed before his father: afterwards to Folque de Brent, by the beneficiall favour of King John, for his approved service in pilling, polling, and spoiling most cruelly. But when at length Isabelle de Riparius* Countesse of Devon-shire departed this life without issue: This Castle fell unto Robert de L'isle the sonne of Warin, as unto her cozin in blood and one of her heires: in the end by those of Aldbrough, it descended to the Riubers, as I am informed by Francis Thinn, who very diligently and judiciously hath a long time hunted after Pedigree antiquities. Neither is Gawthorpe adjoyning hereby to be concealed in silence, when as the ancient Family of Gascoignes descended out of Gas-

Ctley.

Chevin.
Chevin, what it significh.

Gevenna.

Harewood.

Placit. r.
Joan. Rot. 10.
in D. Monstr.
le Droit. 35.
E. 1.
* Rivers or Rediers.

A coigne in France as it seemeth, hath made it famous both with their vertue and Antiquity.

From hence runneth Wherf hard by Wetherby, a Mercate Towne of good note, which hath no antiquity at all to shew, but a place only, beneath it (they call it usually now, Saint Helens Fould) where the high Roman street crossed over the river. From thence he passeth downe by Tadcaster, a very little towne, yet I cannot but thinke as well by the distance from other places, as by the nature of the soile, and by the name, that it was CALCARIA. For, it is about nine Italian miles from Torke, according as Antonine hath set CALCARIA. Also the limestone which is the very soader and binder of all morter, and hardly elsewhere in this tract to be found, heere is digged up in great plenty and vented as farre as to Torke and the whole Country bordering round about, for use in building. Considering then that the said Lime, was by the Britans and Saxons in old time, and is by the Northren Englishmen called after the Roman name Calc (For, that imperious City Rome, imposed not their yoke onely, but their language also upon the subdued Nations) seeing also that in the Code of Theodosius, those bee termed Calcarientes who are the burners of limestone: it may not seeme absurd, if the Erymology of the name be fetched from Calc, that is, Chalke or Lime: even as Chalcus, of brasse, that is, brasse, Ammon of Ammon, that is, Sand, Pseleon, of Elmes, and Calcaria a City of Cliveland, haply of Calc, that is, Lime, tooke their names: especially seeing that Bede calleth it also Calca-cister. Where he reporteth, that Heina the first woman in this Country that put on the Vaile and religious habite of a Nunne, retired her selfe apart to this City, and therein made her abode. Moreover, an Hill neere to the Towne is called Kelc-bar, in which there lieth couched somewhat of the ancient name. Neither are there other arguments wanting, to prove the antiquity thereof: For, to say nothing how it is situate upon a port high way, there be peeces of the Roman Emperours money oftentimes digged up, and the tokens of the Trenches and Bankes that compassed it about, the plot also where an old Castle stood, yet remaining, out of the reliques whereof, not many yeeres agoe was a Bridge built, which when Wherf is once passed under, he becometh more still, and so gently intermingleth his water with Ouse. And verily a thing it is in my judgement to be wondered at, That Wherf being encreased with so many waters, in Summer time runneth so shallow under this Bridge, that one coming hither about Midsummer, when he saw it, pretily and merrily versified thus;

Nid Tadcaster habet Musis, vel carmine dignum, Præter magnificè structum sine flumine pontem.

Nought hath Tadcaster worth my Muse, and that my verse deserv's, Unlesse a faire Bridge stately built, the which no river serv's,

Lindarium
T. E. det.

But had he come in Winter time, he should have seene the Bridge (so great as it was) scarce able to receive so much water. But naturall Philosophers know full well, that both Vvelles and rivers according to the seasons, and the heat or cold, without or within do decrease or encrease accordingly. Whereupon in his returne he finding here dirt for dust, and full currant water under the Bridge, recanted with these verses.

*Quæ Tadcaster erat sine flumine, pulvere plena;
Nunc habet immensum fluvium, et pro pulvere latum.*

Somewhat higher Nid a muddy river runneth downe, well beset with woods on either side, out of the bottome of Craven hils, first by Niderdale, a vale unto which it giveth name: and from thence carrieth his streame by Ripley a Mercate Towne, where the Inglebeys a Family of great antiquity, flourished in good reputation. Afterwards, with his deepe chanell hee feneth Gnaresburg commonly called Knarsborough Castle, situate upon a most ragged and rough Rocke, whence also it hath the name: which, Serle de Burgh, Unkle by the fathers side to Enstace Vescy built, as the tradition

The river Nid.

Ripley.

Knarsborough
Castle.

Dropping well;
A Well turning wood into stone.

tradition holdeth: Afterward it became the seate of the Esotiviles, and now is counted part of the lands, belonging to the Dutchy of Launcester. Under it there is a well, in which the waters spring not up out of the veins of the earth, but distill and trickle downe dropping from the rockes hanging over it, whence they call it Dropping well: into which what wood soever is put, will in short space be covered over with a stony barke and turne into stone, as it hath bene often observed. In the Territory thereby Liquirice groweth in great abundance, and a yellower and softer kinde of marles there found, passing good to make the ground fertile. The Keeper or chiefe Ranger of the Forest adjoyning, was in times past one Gamell: whose posterity, of their habitation at Screven assumed the name of Screven: and from them descended the Slingsbey, who received this Forestership of king Edward the First, and to this day live here in great and good regard. Ned having passed by these places not farre from Allerton, the seat of a very ancient and famous family of the Malliveries, who in old Deeds and Records are called Mali Leporarij, goeth on a little way, and then meeting Onse, augmenteth the streame of Onse by his confluence.

As for Ure, he also springing out of these Westerne hilles, but on the other side of the Country, in North-Riding, when by this name he hath watered the North part of the Shire, a little before he commeth to Rippon, serveth for the limite dividing the North and West Ridings one from another. This Rippon, in the Saxon tongue Hyppun, being placed betwene Ure and Skell a rill, is beholdden to religious Houses for all the dignity it had, and especially so a Monastery built in the primitive Church of the English-Saxons by Wilfride Archbishop of Torke, and that with such arched and embowed Vaults, with such floorings and stories of stone worke, with such turnings and windings in and out of Galleries (so saith William of Malmesbury) that it was wonderful. Which, the Danes afterward, being so violent and outrageous that they spared neither God nor man, raced, together with the Towne. Yet flourished it againe, repaired by means of Odo Archbishop of Canterbury: who being a very great master of ceremoniall mysteries, translated from hence to Canterbury the Reliques of Wilfride. But since the Normans arrivall, it prospered most, when the Castles as one faith, of Monkes beganne to bee built in greater number: For then both the Towne grew famous partly under the chiefe Magistrate, whom they call by an old Saxon word, Wakeman as one would say, Waschman, and partly by their industry in clothing which at this day is much diminished: and the Monastery likewise under the tuition and protection of the Archbishops of Torke beganne marvellously to flourish. Besides, a very faire Church was there also built, at the charitable charges of the Noblemen and Gentry dwelling thereabout, and of their owne Treasurer: which with three high Spire-steeple doth welcome those that come to the towne, and did as it were emulate in workmanship, the wealthy Abbay of Fountaines, built within the sight of it by Thurstin Archbishop of Torke. On the one side of this Church wee saw a little College of singing men, which Henry Bath Archbishop of Torke erected: on the other side a very great mount of earth called Hilston, cast up, as they report, by the Danes. Within the Church, Saint Wilfrides Needle, was in our Grandfathers remembrance, very famous: A narrow hole this was, in the Crowdes or close vaulted roome under the ground, whereby womens honesty was tried: For, such as were chaste did easily passe through, but as many as had plaid false, were miraculously, I know not how, held fast and could not creepe through. The Abbay Fountaines aforesaid, most pleasantly seated in a right plentifull Country, and having Lead mines neere it, had the originall from twelve precise Monkes of Torke, who fervently, zealous, to serve God in a more strict kinde of life, forsooke their cloisters and addicted themselves to the ordinances of Saint Bernard. For whom, after they had reaped many Harvests of troubles, Thurstin Archbishop of Torke built this Abbay, which was acknowledged an immediate daughter of Clarevalle, and in a few yeeres became a mother to many others, as Kirkstall, Salley, Meaux, &c. I have made more willingly mention of these, because Saint Bernard in his Epistles so highly approved their life, and discipline.

Not

Wakeman.

Saint Wilfrides Needle.

Not farre beneath, there standeth by Ure a little Towne called Burrow bridge, of the bridge that is made over the River: which now is built very high and faire of stone worke, but in King Edward the Second his time, it seemeth to have bene of wood. For, wee reade, that when the Nobles of England disquieted the King and troubled the State, Humfrey Bohun Earle of Hereford in his going over it, was at a chinke thereof thrust through the body about his groine, by a souldier lying close under the Bridge. Neere unto this Bridge Westward, we saw in three divers little fields, foure huge stones, of Pyramidall forme, but very rudely wrought, set as it were in a streight and direct line. The two Pyramids in the midst whereof the one was lately pulled downe by some that hoped, though in vaine, to finde treasure, did almost touch one another: the uttermore stand not farre off, yet almost in equall distance from these on both sides. Of these I have nothing else to say, but that I am of opinion with some, that they were Monuments of victory erected by the Romans, hard by the High Street that went this way. For I willingly overpasse the fables of the common people, who call them the Devils Bolts which they shot at ancient Cities and therewith overthrew them. Yet will not I passe over this, that very many and those learned men thinke they are not made of naturall stone indeed, but compounded of pure sand, lime, vitriol (whereof also they say there be certaine small graines within) and some unctuous matter. Of such a kinde there were in Rome cisternes, so firmly compact of very strong lime and sand, as Plinie writeth, that they seemed to be naturall stones.

Pyramides.

Devils bolts.

A little Eastward from this Bridge, IS-URIUM BRIGANTUM an ancient City, so called of the River Ure running by it, flourished in ancient times, but was rased to the very ground many ages past. Nevertheless the Village risen up neere the place, giveth testimony of the Antiquity thereof, for it is called Ealdburgh and Aldborow. But, in that very plot of ground where the said City stood, are now arable grounds and pastures, so that scarce any footing thereof doth appeare. Surely, the very credite of Writers should have had much adoe to make us believe, that this had bene IS-URIUM, but that UR is the Rivers name, the Romane Coinc daily digged up, and the distance according to Antonines account betwixt this and York, warranted it. For, by that Ure (which the Saxons afterward named Onse because it hath entertained Ousburne a little River) is gone sixteene Italian miles from hence, bee runneth through the City EBORACUM or EBURACUM, which Prologue in the second booke of his Great Construction calleth BRIGANTUM (if the said booke bee not corrupted) because it was the chiefe City of the Brigantes. Antonine calleth it Caer Eborac, the Britans Caer Eborac, the Saxons Guon-pic and Eopon-pic, and we at this day, Torke.

Is-Urium.

Aldborow.
i. Old Borow.

Eboracum; York.

The British History reporteth, that it tooke name of King Eborac the Founder: yet give mee leave to deeme conjecturally, without the prejudice to others that the name EBURACUM is derived from nothing else but from the River Ure, so that it soundeth as much as by Ure, or along the side of Ure: for, even so the EBUROVICES in France, were seated by the River Eure, neere unto Eureux in Normandy: Semblably the EBURONES in the Netherlands, neere unto the river Oure in the Diocese of Louvain: and EBLANA in Ireland standeth hard by the river Liffey. This is the second City of England, the fairest in all this Country, and a singular safeguard and ornament both, to all the North parts. A pleasant place, large, and stately, well fortified, beautifully adorned as well with private as pulque buildings, rich, populous, and to the greater dignity thereto it hath an Archiepiscopall See. Ure, which now is called Onse, flowing with a gentle streame from the North part Southward cutteth it as I said in twaine, and divideth it, as it were, into two Cities, which are conjoynd with a stone Bridge, having the mightiest Arch one of them, that ever I saw.

The West part, nothing so populous, is compassed in with a very faire Wall and the River together, foure squarewise, and giveth entrance to those that come thither at one onely Gate, named Mikel Barre, as one would say, The great Gate. From which which a long street and a broad, reacheth to the very Bridge, and the same street beset with proper houses having gardens and orchards planted on the backside on either hand, and behinde them fields even hard to the Walles, for exercise and sports. In the South angle whereof which they and the River make between them, I saw a Mount, raised, as it seemeth, for some Castle to be built upon it, called The old Bole, which, William Melton Archbishop, as wee read in the Archbishops lives, strongly enclosed, first, with thicke planks, eighteen foote long; afterward with stone wall: yet there is nothing of all that, now to be seene.

N n n

The East side wherein the houses stand very thicke and the streetes be narrower, in forme resembleth as it were a lencill, and is fortified also with very strong walles and on the South-East, defended with the deepe channell of Fosse a muddy River, which entering into the heart of the City by a blinde way, hath a Bridge over it, with houses standing upon it so close ranged one by another, that any man would judge it, to be not a Bridge, but a continued streete; and so a little lower runneth into Onse: where at their confluence, and meeting together, right over against the Mount that I spake of, King William the Conquerour in a very convenient place raised a most strong Castle to awe the Citizens. Upon which time hath now a great while without impeachment wrought his will; ever since the Englishmen fell to neglect strong Holds, as receptacles for those whose hearts would not serve to fight in open field.

On this side also toward the North-East, standeth the Cathedral Church dedicated to Saint Peter, an excellent faire Fabrique and a stately; neere unto which, without the Walles of the City, but yet enclosed within walles and by the River, flourished a renowned Abbay called Saint Maries, which Alan the Third Earle of Little Britaine in Armoric and of Richmund, built and endowed with rich livings: but now it is converted into the Princes house, and is commonly called The Manour.

Whence I should fetch the originall of Yorke but from the Romanes I cannot tell, seeing the Britans before the Romanes comming had no other Townes, than woods fenced with trenches and rampire, as Cæsar and Strabo unreprouvable Authors doe testifie. To say nothing therefore of King Ebrank, whom some men both serious and credulous, as it should seeme, have imagined out of the name of Eboracum (for so is Yorke in Latine termed) to have beene the Founder thereof: most certaine it is, that the Sixth Legion Victrix, which Hadrian there Emperour brought out of Germany over into Britaine was placed heere in Garison. And that it was a Colony of the Romanes, it appeareth both by the authority of Ptolomee, and Antonine, and also by an ancient Inscription, which I saw in a certaine Aldermans house there in these words.

M. VEREC. DIOGENES IIII VIR
COL. EBOR. IDEMQ. MORT CIVES
BITURIX. HÆC SIBI VIVUS FECIT.

As also by a peece of money coined by the Emperour Severus, in the reverse whereof we read.

COL. EBORACUM. LEG. VI. VICTRIX.

But

But how it is, that Victor in his History of the Cæsars, hath called Torke *Municipi-*um or free towne of Britaine, being, as it was a Colony, I require farther time to deliberate thereupon, unless it were, that the inhabitants of Torke, like as sometime the Præcites did choose rather from a Colony to be brought unto the state of a free-Borough. For, Colonies having, as Agellius writeth, lawes, customes and rights at the will of the people of Rome and not at their owne pleasure, seemed more obnoxious, and their condition not so free: whereas free Cities, such as in Latin are named Municipia, used rights, Lawes and orders of their owne, and the Citizens or Burgeses thereof were partakers with the people of Rome in their honourable Offices only, and bound of necessity to nothing else. No meruaile therefore, if Colonies were changed into Free Burroughs. But to what end stand I upon this point? This difference of the name is not in the story of the Emperours so exactly observed, but that one and the selfe same place is called both a Colony, and a Municipium, or Free City. Howbeit out of that peece of money I dare not constantly affirme, that Severus first conducted and planted this Colony, seeing that Ptolomee and Antonine himselfe writeth it was the seat of the sixth Legion in the Antonines time. But we read that Severus had his Palace in this City, and heere at the houre of death gave up his last breath with these words: I entered upon a state every where troublesome, and I leave it payable even to the Britans. His body was carried forth here to the funeral fire by the soldiers, after the military fashion, and committed to the flames, honoured with jousts and Turnements of his souldiers and his owne sonnes, in a place beneath this City Westward neere to Ackham, where it is to be seene a great Mount of earth raised up, which as Ranph Niger hath recorded, was in his time, of Severus, called Sivern. His ashes being bestowed in a little golden pot, or vessell of the Porphyrite stone, were carried to Rome, and shined there in the Monument of the Antonines. At which time there was in this City the Temple of Goddess Bellona. For, Spartianus speaking of Severus and this very City, saith thus, When Severus returned and came into the City, purposing to offer sacrifice, he was led first of all to the Temple of Bellona, by the order of a mystical Augur or Soothsaying Priest. At which time the Tribunal or Justice Hall of this City was in this respect most happy, because therein sat to minister justice that Oracle of the law, Æmilius Paulus Papinianus, as Forcatus witnesseth. And from this place it was, for certaine, that Severus and Antoninus Emperours being consulted in a case or question of Right, gave forth their Imperiall constitution Dei Vindicatione. An hundred yeeres or thereabout after the death of Severus, Fl. Valerius Constantinus surnamed Chlorus, an Emperour surpassing in all vertue and Christian piety, who came hether When the Gods, as the Panegyrist saith, called him to the inmost entry and doore of the earth, ended his life also in this City and was deified, as we may see by ancient Coines. And albeit Florilegus recorderh, that his Tombe was found in Wales, as I have said; yet men of credite have enformed me, that in our fathers remembrance, when Abbaies were suppressed and pulled downe, in a certaine Vault or crowdes or a little Chappell under the ground wherein Constantinus was supposed to have beene buried, there was found a Lampe burning: for, Lacinus writeth, that in ancient time they preserved light in Sepulchres, by resolving gold artificially into a liquid and fatty substance, which should continue burning a long time and for many ages together.

This Emperour begat of his former wife Helena CONSTANTINE THE GREAT, THE DELIVERER OF ROME CITY, as ancient inscriptions give testimony, THE FOUNDER OF PEACE, AND THE REPAIRER OF THE COMMON WEALTH: Who was present in Torke at his fathers last gaspe, and forthwith proclaimed Emperour, The souldiers, as the Panegyricall Oratour saith, regarding rather the good of the State, than private affections, cast the purple robe upon him, whiles hee wept and put spurs to his horse, to avoid the importunity of the Army attempting and requiring so instantly to make him Emperour: But the happinesse of the State overcame his modestie. Whence it is that the Author of the Panegyricall oration crieth out in these words, O fortunate Britaine and now blessed above all lands, which first sawest Constantine Emperour.

Nnn 2

Hence

That Victor whom Andrew Scotforth of late.

Severus

The Temple of Bellona.

L.I.C.
Constantine

Constantine
the Great.

Vincensii Speculum Bistori-
ale.

Scotland in times past, subject to the Archbishop of Yorke.

See in Scotland.
A Library.
Elycus Alewinus or Albinus flourished anno. 730.

Hence it may be gathered, in what, and how great estimation Yorke was in those daies, seeing the Romane Emperours Court was there held. For, our owne Country Writers record, that this City was by Constantinus adorned and graced with an Episcopall See: But yet, that Taurinus the Martyr Bishop of Eureux sat heere and governed, I will not say as others doe. For, Vincensius out of whom they sucked this error, would by his owne words convince me of untruth. But when the Romane were departed and had left Britaine for a prey to barbarous Nations, this City fore afflicted with many calamities, suffered her part also of miseries, and was little or nothing better about the end of the Scottish or Saxons Warres, than a poore small shadow of a great name. For, when Paulinus preached Christian Religion to the English Saxons in this Country, it lay so desolate, that there remained not so much as a Chappell in it, for King Edwin to be baptized in. Who in the yeere after Christs Birth 627. built a little Oratory of wood: and when as afterward he went in hand with building a greater Church of stone, scarce had he laid the foundation thereof, when he was prevented by death and left it to be finished by his Successour Oswald. Ever since that time, the Ecclesiasticall Dignity in this Church encreased, and by a Pall sent unto it from Honorius the Pope, became a Metropolitan City; which beside twelve Bishopricks in England, exercised the power of a Primate over all the Bishopps of Scotland. But many yeeres since, Scotland withdrew it selfe from this her Metropolitan: and the Metropolitan City it selfe hath so devoured other Bishopricks adjoining, being but little to say truth and of small account, that it hath now but foure within the owne Diocese, namely, the Bishopricks of Durham, of Chesster, of Carlisle, and of Man, or Soderensis in the Isle of Man. And the Archbishop Egbert, who flourished about the yeere of our Salvation 740. erected at Yorke, A most famous Library, the Cabinet as I may so terme it (these be the words of William of Malmesbury) and Closet of all liberall Arts. Touching which Library, Alwin of Yorke Schoolemaster to Charles the Great, first Founder of the University of Paris, and the onely Honour of this City, in an Epistle to the said Charles wrote thus. Give mee the bookes of deeper and more exquisite scholasticall learning, such as I had in mine owne Country by the good and most devout industry of the Archbishop Egbert. And if it please your wisdom, I will send backe some of your owne servants, who may exemplifie out of them all those things that be necessary, and bring the flowers of Britaine into France, that there may not be a Garden of learning enclosed onely within Yorke walls, but that streames of Paradise may be also at Townes.

Then also it was that Princes bestowed many and great livings and lands upon the Church of Yorke, especially Ulphus the sonne of Toral (I note so much out of an old booke, that there may plainly appeare a custome of our ancestour in endowing Churches with livings). This Ulphus aforesaid ruled in the West part of Deira, and by reason of the debate that was like to arise betwene his sonnes the elder and the younger, about their Lordships and Signories after his death, forthwith hee made them all alike. For, without delay hee went to Yorke, tooke the borne with him out of which hee was wont to drinke, filled it with wine, and before the Altar of God and blessed Saint Peter Prince of the Apostles, kneeling upon his knees hee dranke, and thereby enfeoffed them in all his lands and revenues. Which borne was there kept as a monument (as I have heard) untill our fathers daies.

I might seeme to speake in derogation of the Clergy, if I should report what secret heart-burnings, or rather open enmities flashed out betwene the Archbishops of Yorke and of Canterbury upon worldly ambition; whiles with great wast of their wealth, but more losse of their credite and reputation, they bickered most eagerly about the Primacy. For, the Church of Yorke, as he writeth, (inferiour though it were unto that of Canterbury in riches) yet being equall in dignity, albeit of later time founded: and advanced on high with the same power that Canterbury hath, confirmed also with the like authority of Apostolicall Priviledges, took it ill to be subject unto that of Canterbury by vertue of a Decree of Alexander of Rome, who ordained, That the Church of Yorke ought to be subject unto Canterbury, and in all things to obey the constitutions of the Arch-

Archbishop thereof, as Primate of all Britaine, in such matters as appertaine to Christian Religion. Concerning the Archbishops of Yorke, it is no part verily of my purpose to write any thing heere, although there bee very many of them who deserve for their vertue and piety to be renowned. Let it suffice to note in a word, that from Paulinus the first Archbishop, consecrated in the yeere of our Redemption 625. there have sitten in that See threecore and five Archbishops, unto the yeere 1606. in which D. Tobie Matthew a most reverend Prelate, for the ornaments of vertue and piety, for learned eloquence, and continuall exercise of teaching, was translated hither from the Bishopricke of Durham.

The sixty sixth Archbishop.

This City for a time flourished very notably under the English Saxons dominion, untill the Danes like a mighty storme thundring from out of the North-East, defaced it againe with merveilous great ruines, and by killing and slaying disteined it with blood, which, that Alcuine aforesaid in his Epistle to Egelred King of Northumberland may seeme to have prefiged before. What signifieth (saith he) that raining of blood which in Lent we saw at Yorke the head City of the whole Kingdome, in Saint Peters Church, to fall downe violently in threatening wise from the top of the roose, in the North part of the house, and that in a faire day. May it not bee thought, that blood is coming upon the Land from the North parts? Verily soone after it was embred with blood, and did pine away with most miserable calamities, when the Danes spoiled, wasted, and murdered all where ever they came. And verily in the yeere 867. the walls were so battered and shaken by reason of continuall Warres, that Osbriht and Ella Kings of Northumberland, whiles they pursued the Danes easily brake into the City: who being both of them slaine in a most bloody battaile in the very middest of the City, left the victory unto the Danes. Whereupon Williams of Malmesbury writeth in this manner, Yorke, alwaies exposed first to the rage of the Northern Nations, sustained the barbarous assaults of the Danes, and groaned being pittieously shaken with manifold ruines. But as the very same Authour witnesseth, King Atelstone wonne it perforce out of the Danes hands, and overthrew the Castle quite, which they had heere fortified. Neither for all this, was it altogether free from warres in the times next ensuing whiles that age ranne fatall for the destruction of Cities.

But the Normans as they ended these miseries, so they made almost a final hand of Yorke also. For, when the sonnes of Sveno the Dane had landed in these parts with a Danish Fleet of 240. Saile, the Normans lying in Garison, who kept two Forts within the City, fearing least the houses in the Suburbs might stand the enemy in stead to fill up the Ditches withall, set them on fire: but by reason the wind rose highly, the fire was so carried and spread throughout that City, that now it was set a burning, when the Danes breaking in upon them made pittifull slaughter in every place, having put the Normans to the sword, and keeping alive William Mallet and Gilbert Gant two principall persons, that they might be rithed with the souldiers. For, every tenth man of the Normans they chose out by lot, to be executed. Whereupon King William the Conquerour was so incensed with desire of revenge, that he shewed his cruelty upon the Citizens by putting them all to death, as if they had taken part with the Danes: and upon the City it selfe by setting it on fire afresh; and as William of Malmesbury saith, Hee so depopulated and defaced the Villages adjoining, and the fennes of that fertile Region were so cut by the spoiles there committed and batties raised, and the ground for the space of threescore miles lay so untilled, that if a stranger had then seen the Cities that in times were of high account, the Townes which with their lofty toppes threatned the skie, and the fields that were rich in pastures, hee could not but sigh and lament, yea and if an ancient inhabitant had beheld the same, hee could not have knownne them. How great Yorke had beene aforesaid time, Domesday booke shall tell you in these words. In King Edward the Confessours time, there were in Yorke City sixe Divisions or Shires, besides that of the Archbishops. One was laid waste, for the Castles or Forts. In the five Divisions were 1428. dwelling Mansions to give entertainment: And, in the Archbishops shire or Division 200. dwelling Mansions likewise. After these woeful overthrowes our countryman Necham thus verified of it.

Alfred of Beverley, in the Library of the Lord Burghley
Treasurer of England.

Decimation, i.
Execution of every tenth man.

*Vixit quam felix Eboracensis condidit urbem,
Petro se debet pontificalis apex.
Civibus hac toties viduata, novisque repleta,
Diruta prospexit mania sepe sua.
Quid manus hostilis queat, est experta frequenter,
Sed quid? nunc pacis otia longa fervent.*

The City that Great Ebrank built, I come now for to view, Whereof the See pontificall, is to Saint Peter due.
This, many times laid, desolate, and peopled new hath beene,
Her wals cast downe and ruinate full often hath it seene.
What mischief hostile hands could worke, nor once nor twice it found,
What then? since now, long time of peace, doth keepe it safe and found.

For, in his time, when after these troublesome stormes a most pleasant calme of peace presently ensued, it rose of it selfe againe and flourishd afresh, although the Scots and Rebels both, did oftentimes make full account to destroy it. But under the Raigne of King Stephen, it caught exceeding great harme by casualty of fire, wherein were consumed the Cathedrall Church, the Abbay of Saint Mary and other religious houses: yea and that noble and most furnished Library (as it is thought) which Aluin hath recorded to have been founded by Archbishop Egledred his Preceptour. As for the Abbay of Saint Mary it quickly recovered the former dignity by new buildings: but the Cathedrall Church lay longer ere it held up head againe, and not before King Edward the First his time: For then, John Roman Treasurer of the Church laid the foundation of a new worke, which his sonne John William Melton, and John T. Boreby, all of them Archbishops, brought by little and little to that perfection and beauty which now it sheweth, yet not without the helping hand of the Nobility and Gentry thereabout, especially of the Percies and the Vavasours, which the armes of their houses standing in the very Church, and their images at the West gate of the Church doe shew, Percies pourtraied with a peece of timber, and Vavasours with a stone in their hands, for that the one supplied the stone, the other the timber for this new building. This Church as he reporteth who wrote the life of Aeneas Sylvius, who was Pope Pius the second, and that upon the Popes owne relation, For workmanship and greatnesse, is memorable over all the world, and the Chappell most lightsome, the glasse-windows whereof are fast bound betwene pillars that bee most slender in the mids. This Chappell is that most dainty and beautifull Chapter-houle, in which this verse stands painted in golden letters.

Ut Rosa flos florum, sic est Domus ista Domorum.
The floure of floures, a Rose men call:
So is this house of houses all.

About the same time also, the Citizens fensed the City round about with new walles and many towres and bulwarkes set orderly in divers places, yea and ordained very good and holisome lawes for the government thereof. King Richard the Second granted it to bee a County incorporate by it selfe, and King Richard the Third beganne to repaire the Castle. And that nothing might be wanting, King Henry the Eighth within the memory of our fathers, appointed heere a Councell not unlike to the Parliaments in France, for to decide and determine the causes and controversies of these North parts according to equity and conscience, which consisteth of a Lord President, certaine Counsellors at the Princes pleasure, a Secretary and under Officers. As touching the Longitude of Yorke our Mathematicians have described it to be two and twenty Degrees and twenty five Scruples: the Latitude 54. degrees and 10. scruples. Hitherto have we treated of the West part of this shire and of Yorke City, which is reckoned neither in the one part, nor the other, but enjoyeth

Commentar.
of Pope Pius.
Lib. prim.

The Councell established in the North.

A enjoyeth peculiar liberties, and hath jurisdiction over the Territory adjoining on the West side. Which they call the Liberty of Ansty, others the Ancient of the Antiquity, but other have derived it very probably from the Dutch word Anstossen, which betokeneth limits. And now for a conclusion have heere what Master John Jonston of Aberden hath but a while since written in verse, of Yorke.

*Præsidet extremis Arctoa finibus ora Urbs vetus, in veteri facta subinde nova.
Romanis Aquilis quondam Ducibusque superba.
Quam post barbarica diripuerunt manus.
Pictus atrox, Scotus, Danus, Normannus, & Anglus Fulmina in hanc Martis detonuere sui.
Post diras rerum clades, totque aspera fata,
Blandius aspirans aura serena subit.
LONDINUM caput est, & regni urbs prima Britannii: EBORACUM à primâ jure secunda venit.*

In parts remote of Northren tract, there stands as soveraine,
A City old, but yet of old effloones made new againe.
Whilom of Romane Legions and Captaines proud it was:
But since by forces barbarous sacked and spoil'd, alas!
The Picts so fierce, the Scots and Danes, Normans and Englishmen, Gainst it their bolts of dreadfull war have thundred now and then.
Yet after sundry bitter blasts, and many a cursed clap,
A milder gale of peacefull daies, hath brought it better hap.
Of British Kingdome LONDON is chiefe seat and principall;
And unto it there goes by right Yorke City next of all.

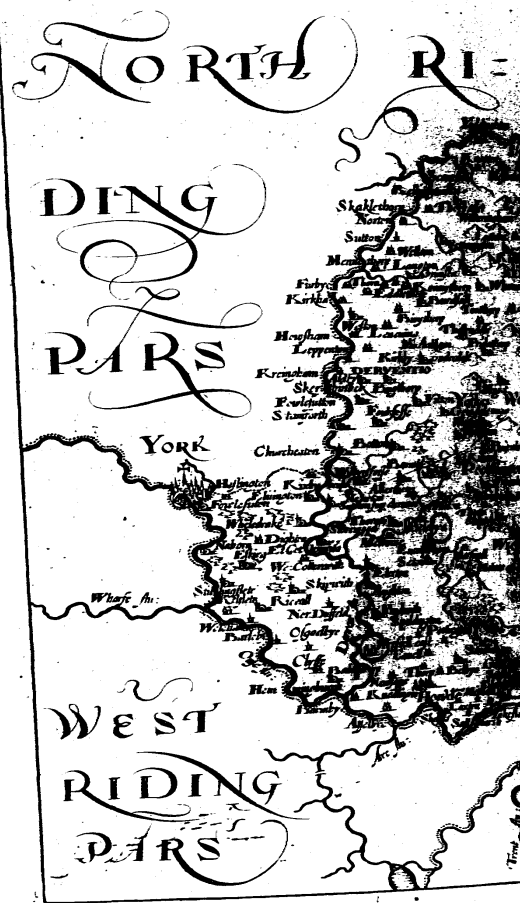

Onse now leaving Yorke, being otherwhiles disquieted and troubled with that whirling encounter of contrary waters, and forceable eddies which some call Higra, runneth downe through Bishops Thorpe, called Saint Andrewes Thorpe, before that Water Grey Archbishop of Yorke purchased it with ready money, and to prevent the Kings Officers who are wont rigorously to seize upon Bishops Temporalties when the See is vacant, gave it to the Deane and Chapter of Yorke, with this condition, that they should alwayes yeeld it to his Successours. Of whom, Richard Le Screpe Archbishop of Yorke, a man of a fiery spirit, and ready to entertaine rebellion, was condemned in this very place, of high Treason by King Henry the Fourth, against whom he had raised an insurrection. Afterward Cawood a Castle of the Archbishops standeth upon the same River, which King Asbelstan, as I have read, gave unto the Church: Just against which on the other side of the River lyeth Ricall, where Harald Haardread arrived with a great Fleet of Danes. Then Onse passeth hard by Selby a little Towne, well peopled and of good resort; where King Henry the First was borne, and where his father King William the First built a faire Abbay in memory of Saint German, who happily confuted that venomous Pelagian Heresie, which oftentimes (as the Serpent Hydra) grew to an head againe in Britaine. The Abbats of this Church, as also of Saint Maries in Yorke, were the onely Abbats in the North parts that had place in the Parliament house. And so Onse at length speedeth away to Humber, leaving first Escricke a feat of the Lascelles sometimes to be remembered for that King James advanced Sir Thomas Knivet the owner thereof Lord Knivet to the honour of Baron Knivet of Escricke, in the yeere 1607. And afterward passing by Drax, a little Village famous long since for a Monastery founded there by Sir William Paimell, and whereas William of Newburgh writeth, Philip of Tollevilla had a Castle most strongly fensed, with Rivers, Woods, and Marshes about it, which he, confident upon the courage of his followers, and his provision of victuals and armour, defended against King Stephen; untill it was wonne by assault.

Bishops
Thorpe.

Cawood.

L. Knivet.

EAST

EAST-RIDING.

EAST-RIDING the second part of this Region, wherein Pro- lomee placed the PARISI, lyeth Eastward from Yorke. On the North side and the West, it is bounded with the River
* Darwent, that runneth downe with a winding course: on the South with the Salt water of Humber, and on the East with the German Ocean. Upon the Sea side and along Dar- went the Soile is meetly good and fertile: But in the mids
it is nothing else but an heape of Hilles rising up on high, which they call Torkes wold. Darwent springing not farre from the shore, first taketh his way Westward: then, hee windeth into the South by Aiton and Malton, whereof, because they belong to the North part of the Shire, I will speake in due place. No sooner is hee entred into this Quarter, but downe hee runneth not farre from the ruines of the old Castle Montferrant. The Lords whereof were in times past the Fossards, men of noble parentage and wealthy withall: But when William Fossard Ward to the King, being committed unto William le Grosse Earle of Aumarle as to his Guardian, and now come to his yeeres, abused his sifter, the Earle in wreck-full displeasure for this fact of his, laid this Castle even with the ground, and forced the young Gentleman to forsake his Country. Howbeit, after the Earles death, he recovered his inheritance againe, and left one onely daughter behinde him: who being marryed unto R. de Torneham, bare a daughter marryed to *Peter de * Mauley*: * de Maloist whose heires and successours being bettered in their estate by this inheritance of the Fossards, became great and honourable Barons. Not farre from hence is situate upon the River side, Kirkham, as one would say of Church-place: For, a Priory of Cianons was there founded by Walter Espec a man of high place and calling, by whose daughter a great estate accrewed to the family of the Lord Roffes. Then, but somewhat lower, Darwent had a City of his owne name, which Antonine the Em-perour calleth DERVENTIO, and placeth it seven miles from YORKE. The booke of Notices maketh mention of a Captaine over the Company Derventienfis under the Generall of Britaine, that resided in it; and in the Saxons Empire it seemeth to have beene that Towne, where the King used to lye, which Bede saith, was situate nere unto the River Dorovensio. In which, as hee also writeth, Eumer, that murderous Villaine thrust at Edwin King of Noribumberland with a sword and had runne him through, but that one of his men stepped betweene, and saved the Kings life with the losse of his owne. Yet could I never have said precisely which was the very place, had not that most judicious Robert Marshall given me a light thereof. For, he gave me to understand, that just at the very same distance from Yorke which I spake of, there stands hard upon the River Darwent, a little Towne named Auldby, that is, if you interpret the Saxon word, The old Habitation: where, are extant yet in sight some tokens of Antiquity, and upon a very high Hill neere unto the River, the rubbish of an ancient Fortification, so that it cannot chuse, but to have beene the said City Derventio. From hence glideth the River hard under Stanford-Bridge, which also of the battaile there fought is called Battlebridge. For, at that Bridge, Battlebridge Harald King of England, after a great execution done upon the Danes slew in a pight field Harald Hardread King of Norway, who with a Fleet of 200. saile grievously annoyed the Isle of Britaine, and was now landed at Richall, spoiling and wasting all in his way. The King of England who having the honour of the field, found among the spoiles such a masse of Gold, as that twelve lusty young men, had much adoe to carry it on their backs, as Adam Bremensis recordeth. This field was foughten scarce nine dayes before the arrivall of William Conquerour, what time the dissolute and roiorous life of the Englishmen, seemed to forerell their

East-riding.

Montferrant Historie of Meaux.

* de Maloist.

their imminent overthrow and destruction. But of this I have spoken before.

Derwent, which when it is encreased with raine, and as it were provoked to anger doth oftentimes contemne his bankes and surround the medowes lying about it, passing from hence by Wreslil a proper and a strong Castle, which Sir Thomas Percy Earle of Worcester built, runneth amaine under Babthorpe, which yeeldeth both name and habitation to a worshipfull Family of Knights degree: and so at length dischargeth himselfe into Ouse. Out of this stocke it was (for let us not thinke much to tell of those who performed faithfull service to their Prince and Country) that both father and sonne fighting together under the banner of King Henry the Sixth lost their lives in the Battaille of Saint Albans, and were there buried together with this Epitaph:

*Cum patre Radulpho Babthorpe jacet ecce Radulphus Filius, hoc duro marmore pressus humo, Henrici Sexti dapifer, pater Armiger ejus,
Mors satis id docuit, fidus uterque fuit. &c.*

Behold where two Raulph Babthorps, both the sonne and father lye,
Under a stone of marble hard, interr'd in this mould dry:
To Henry the Sixth the father Squire, the Sonne he Sewer was,
Both true to Prince, and for his sake they both their life did passe.

Howden.

And now Ouse by this time carrying a fuller streame, runneth neere Banks a Mercate Towne, famous not so much for any beauty in it, or great resort thereto, as because it hath given name to a little Territory adjoining, called of it Howdenshire, and had therein not long since a pretty Collegiat Church of five Prebendaries: unto which joyneth the Bishops house of Durham who have great lands thereabout. One of which, namely Walter Skirlaw, who flourished about the yeere of our Lord 1390. as we reade in the booke of Durham, built a very great and large steeple to this Church, that if there happened by chance any inundation, it might serve the inhabitants for a place of refuge to save themselves in. And not farre from hence stands Metham, which gave both surname and habitation also to the ancient house of the Methams.

Metham.

Abus.
Humbert.

Now the River Ouse being very broad, swift and roving besides, our powreth his streame into the Frith or salt water Abus: For so calleth Ptolomee that arme of the Sea, which the English Saxons and we tearme Humber, whereof also the Country beyond it, by a generall name was called Northumberland. Both these names may seeme to have beene drawne with some little change, from the British word Aber, which among them signifieth the mouth of a River: and I would thinke it was imposed upon this River by way of excellency: because Ure or Ouse having entertained and lodged many Rivers, carryeth them all with him along into this, yea and other Rivers of right great name are emptied into it. And verily it is one of the broadest armes of the sea and best stored with fish in all Britaine. It riseth high as the Ocean, at every tide floweth, and when the same ebbeth and returneth backe, it carryeth his owne streame and the currant of the Sea together most forcibly and with a mighty noise, not without great danger of such as saile therein, whence Necham writeth thus of it.

*Fluctibus aequoreis nautis suspectior Humber,
Dedignans Urbes visere vana colit.*

More fear'd of shipmen Humber streame, than waves of sea so deepe;
Disdaining cities great to see, neere country townes doth keepe.

And following the British History, as if it had beene so called of a King of the Hunnes, he addeth this morcover.

Hunnorum

Hunnorum princeps ostendens terga Locrino Submersus, nomen consulit Humbris aqua.

A Prince of Hunnes, whiles that he shew'd his backe to Locrine brave,
Was drowned heere, and so the name, to Humber water gave.

Touching whom, another Poet also:

*Dum fugis, obstat ei flumen, submergitur illic;
Deque suo tribuit nomine nomen aqua.*

Whiles he turn'd backe, and tooke his flight, the River stopt the same,
There drown'd was he, and then of him the water tooke the name.

Neither were there indeed any Cities seene to stand by this Arme of the Sea in Yghams daies: but before and after, there flourished one or two Cities in these places. Under the Roman Empire, not farre from the banke, by Foulnesse a River of small account, where Wigbion a little Towne of Husbandry well inhabited is now seene, stood, as we may well thinke, in old time DELGOVITIA: and that I may not take hold of the distance from DERVENTIO for a proofe, both the resemblance, and the signification also of the name, doe concurre. For, Delgo in the British tongue signifieth The Statues or Images of the Heathen Gods, and in a small Village adjoining to this little Towne, there was a Temple of Idols even in the Saxons time, of exceeding great name, and request: which, of those Heathen gods was then termed Godmundingham and now is called in the same sense * Gadmanham. Neither doubt I, but that even when the Britans flourished, it was some famous Oracle much frequented when superstition spread, and swaying among all Nations had wholly possessed the weake mindes of ignorant people. But which Paulinus preached Christ, unto Northumberland men, Eoy-fi, who had beene a Pontife or Bishop of the heathen rites and ceremonies, after he had once embraced Christian Religion, first of all profaned this Temple the very habitation of impiety, by launching a speare against it, yea he destroyed it, and as Bede writeth, Sti it on fire, with all the enclosures and belonging unto it. From hence, something more Eastward, the River Hull beareth his course to Humber, which River hath his spring head neere unto Driffield, a Village well knowne, by reason of the Tombe of Alfred that most learned King of Northumberland; and the mounts that be raised heere and there about it. The said River hasteneth thitherward, not farre from Lickenfield, an house of the Percies Earles of Northumberland: neere unto which, standeth the dwelling place of a very famous and ancient Progeny of the Hosiams at Schorburg, together with the rubbish of an old Castle of Peter Mauley at Garthum. And now approacheth the River Hull neerer unto Beverley, in the English Saxon tongue called Beuere-lega, which seemeth to name, the Monastery in Deirwand, that is, In the word of the Deir, a great Towne, very populous and full of trade. A man would guesse it by the name and situation to be PETUARIA PARISIORUM, although it affordeth nothing of greater antiquity, than that John surnamed de Beverley, Archbishop of Yorke, a man as Bede witnesseth, both godly and learned, after he had given over his Bishopricke, as weary of this world, came hither, and ended his life in contemplation, about the yeere of our Redemption 721. The Kings held the memoriall of this John so sacred and reverend, especially King Athelstan who honoured him as his tutelur Saint, after he had put the Danes to flight, that they endowed this place with many and those very great privileges, and Athelstane granted them liberties in these generall words, All's free make I thee, as heart may thinke, or eye may see. Yea and there was granted unto it the privileges of a Sanctuary, so that bankrupts and men suspected of any capitall crime worthy of death, might bee free and safe there from danger of the Law. In which there was erected a Chaire of stone with this Inscription.

Bede:
* Gods Church or habitation.

Driffield.

Beverley.

Bemasia.

The life of John of Beverley.

Pars. H. 4.

HÆC

HÆC SEDES LAPIDEA Freedstoll
 DICITUR. I. PACIS CATHEDRA, AD
 QUAM REUS FUGIENDO PERVE-NIENS OMNIMODAM HABET SECURITATEM.

That is,

This feat of Stone is called Freedstoll, that is, The chairs of Peace, unto which what Offender soever flieth and commeth, hath all manner of security.

Heereby, the Towne grew great, and daily there flocked thither a number to dwell as inmates; and the Townsmen for conveyance of commodities by sea made a chan-nell for a water course out of the River Hull sufficient to carry boats and barges for the chiefe Magistracy there, it had twelve Wardens; afterwards Governours and Wardens. And now, by the gracious grant of Queene Elizabeth, a Major and Governours. More Eastward, there flourished Meaux Abbey, so called of one Samuel borne at Meaux in France, who obtained it at William the Conquerours hands for a place to dwell in: and heere was founded an Abbey for the Monkes of the Cla- unke order by William Le Grosse Earle of Aulbarne, to bee released of his vow that hee had made to visite Jerusalem. A little lower runneth out in a great length Cot- tingham, a country Towne of husbandry, where by licence granted from King John, Robert Estotevill the Lord thereof built a Castle now utterly fallen to ruine. Which Robert, was descended from Robert Grandbesse, or Grandebeese a Baron of Norman- dy, and a man of great name and reputation: whose inheritance fell by marriage to the Lord de Wake, and by a daughter of John de Wake it came to Edmund Earle of Kent, who had a daughter named Joane wife unto that most warlike Knight Ed- ward Prince of Wales, who so often victoriously vanquished the French in divers places. The River Hull aforesaid, after it hath passed fixe miles from hence sheddeth himselfe into Humber, and neere unto his mouth hath a Towne of his owne name called Kingston upon Hull, but commonly Hull. This Towne fetcheth beginning from no great antiquity: For, King Edward the First, who in regard of his Princely vertues deserveth to bee ranged among the principall and best Kings that ever were, having well viewed and considered the opportunity of the place which before time was called Wike, had it by right of exchange from the Abbot of Meaux, and in lieu of the * Beasts stals and sheepe pastures, as I conceive it, which there he found, built a Towne that he named Kingston, as one would say The Kings Towne, and there, as wee read in the Records of the Kingdome, hee made an haven and free
Burgh, the Inhabitants thereof also, free Burgeses, and he granted divers liberties unto them.
 And by little and little it rose to that dignity, that for stately and sumptuous buildings, for strong block-houses, for well furnished ships, for store of Merchants and abundance of all things it is become now the most famous towne of merchandize in these parts. All which the inhabitants ascribe partly to Michael de la Pole, who obtained their priviledges for them, after that King Richard the Second had promised him to the honour of Earle of Suffolke, and partly their gainfull trade by Island fish dried and hardened which they terme Stockfish: whereby they gathered a maine masse of riches. Hence it came to passe, that within a little while, they fenced their City with a bricke wall, strengthened it with many Towers and Bulwarks, where it is not defended with the river: and brought such a deale of cobblestones for ballis to their ships, that therewith they have paved all the quarters and streets of the towne most

Hull river.

The Register of Meaux
 Abbey.

Cottingham.
 Estotevill.

Wake.

Kingston upon Hull.

Placit. Anno.
 44. Edw. 3.
 Ebor. 24.
 * Pro Vacariu & Berariu.

A most beautifully. For the chiefe Magistrate it had (as I have beene enformed) first a Warden or Custos: then Bailives, afterward a Major and Bailives: and in the end they obtained of K. Henry the Sixth that they might have a Major and a Sheriffe, and that the very towne should be a County, as our lawyers use to say incorporata by itselfe. Neither will I thinke it much to note, although in Barbarous termes, out of the booke of Meaux Abbey, as touching the Major of this City. William De la Pole knight, was sometime a merchant at Ravens-red, skilfull in merchandise and inferior to no English merchant whatsoever. He making his abode afterwards at Kingston upon Hull, was the first Major that ever the said towne had: he began also and founded the monastery of Saint Mi- chel hard by the said Kingston, which now is an house of the Carthusian or Charter-house monkes. And he had for his eldest sonne Sir Michael De la Pole Earle of Suffolke, who caused the said Monastery to bee inhabited by Carthusian Monkes. And verily William De la Pole aforesaid, lent many thousand pounds of gold unto King Edward, whiles hee made his abode at Antwerp in Brabant, wherefore the King in recompence of the said gold, made him Lord chiefe Baron of his Exchequer, conferred upon him the whole Seignorie or Lordship of Heldernes, together with other lands belonging unto the Crown, and that by the King, Char- ter, it was ordained that he should be reputed a Baronet. Yet if any man make doubt hereof, the Records I hope may satisfie him fully, in which William De la Pole is in plaine termes called Dilectus Valerius, or Mercator noster, that is, Our wellbeloved Valerius and our Merchant: now, Valerius to tell you once for all, was in those daies an honorable title as well in France as in England: but afterward applied unto servants and gromes:
 whereupon when the Gentry rejected it, by changing the name they began to bee called Gentlemen of the Bedchamber.

De la Pole.

Cl. s. E. R. 3.
 M. 28.
 Valerius or Valerius,
 L. Titius.

Ocellum.
 Holdernesse.

Headon.

From Hull, a Promontorie runneth on forward and shooteth out a farre into the sea, which Protonoe calleth OCELLUM, wee Holdernesse, and a certaine monke, Canon Deirum, as it were, the hollow Country of the Deltrians, in the same significationist Celogyria is so termed, as one would say Hollow Syria. In this Promontory, the first towne wee meet with in the winding shore is Headon, in times past (if wee thinke beleeve fame that useth to amplify the truth, and which for my part I will not discredit) risen to exceeding great account by the industry of merchants and sailing men: from which (so uncertaine is the condition as well of places as of people) it is so much fallen by the vicinity of Hull, and the choking up of the haven which hath impoverished it, that it can shew scarce any whit of the ancient state it had. Although King Town granted unto Baldwin Earle of Aulbarne and of Hol- derness, and to his wife Flavis, free Burghage here, so that the Burgers might hold in full burgage, with these customes that Torke and Nichol, that is, Lincolne. Yet now it is almost by little and little to revive againe, in hope to recover the former glory.

Here standeth hard by the Promontorie, an ancient town, which Antonine the Emperour called PRAETORIUM, but we in our age Parrington: like as the Italians have changed the name of a town sometime called Pratorium, into Petrovina.
 The I doe not mistake herein, both the distance from DELGOVITIA, and the very name yet remaining doth prove: which also in some sort implieth, that this is the straitme that in *Protonoe*s copies is written PETVARIA corruptly for Pratorium.
 In whether this name were given it, either from Pratorium, that is the hall of Justice, as from some large and stately house such as the Romans termed Pratoria, it doth not appeare for certaine. The inhabitants glorie much yet as touching their Antiquity and the commodiousnesse of the haven in ancient times: and they may small glorie for the pleasantnesse thereof. For, it hath a most delectable prospect: on the one side lieth the maine sea brimming upon it, on the other Humber famous arme of the sea; and over against it the fresh and greene skirres of Lin- colne. The high way of the Romans from the Picts wall which Antonine the Emperour followed, here endeth. For, Ulpian hath written, that such high waies commonly end at the sea, at rivers, or at Cities.

Pratorium, Parrington.

Some what lower standeth Wimbor, the habitation of the Billicards knights of ancient

Winsted, Barons de Rosse.

Ravenstun and Ravenburg.
Kelsy.

Sisters Kirkes.
Constable.

Sinus salutaris.
Sueby.

Gabrantovici.

Flamborough-head.

Flamborough.

Constable de Flamborough.

cient descent: and higher into the Country, Rosse: from whence the honorable family of the Barons Rosse tooke their name, like as they were seated there in times past: and hard by the sea-side, Grimstons-garth: where the Grimstons for a long time have lived in good reputation: and a little from hence standeth Rife, the mansion house in old time of certaine noble men bearing the name of Falconberg. And then, in the very necke of the promontorie, where it draweth in most narrow into a sharpe point, and is called Spurn-head, is KELNSEY a little village: which plainly sheweth that this is the very OCELLVM mentioned by Ptolomee: for, as from OCELLVM Kelnsy is derived: so Ocellum doubtlesse, was made of T-kil, which as I have said before signifieth in the British tongue a Promontory or narrow necke of land.

From Spurn-head, the shore withdraweth it selfe backe by little and little, and gently bending inward shooteth Northward by Overborne and Withensy two little Churches, called of the sisters that built them Sisters kirks: and not farre from Constable-Burton, so called of the Lords thereof, who being by marriages linked to right honorable houses, flourish at this day in great worship: and out of which familie Robert (as wee read in the booke of the Abbey of Meaux: was one of the Earle of Aulbemarls knights, who being aged and full of daies took upon him the Crosse and went with King Richard in his voiage toward the holy land. Then, by Stuffy, which Dru the first Lord of Holderness fortified with a Castle. When the shore beginneth to spread againe and beare out into the sea, it maketh roome for a bay or creeke, that Ptolomee calleth EYAIMENON GABRANTOVICORUM, which the Latin Interpreters have translated, some PORTUOSVM SINVM, that is, the harbours Creeke: others, SALVTAREM, that is, the safe Creeke. But neither of them both better expresseth the nature of the Greeke word, than the very name of a little village in the nouke thereof, which wee call Sueby. For, that which is safe and sure from danger, the Britans and French men both, terme Scur, as wee Englishmen (sure) who peradventure did borrow this word from the Britans. There is no cause therefore, why we should doubt, but that this creeke was that very EYAIMENON of the GABRANTOVICI, who dwelt thereabouts. Hard by, standeth Bridlington a towne very well knowne by reason of Iohn of Bridlington a poetically monkish prophet whose ridiculous prophesies in Rhime I have read albeit they were not worth the reading. And not farre from hence, for a great length toward Driffeld, was there a ditch cast up and brought on by the Earles of Holderness, to confine and bound their lands, which they called Earles Dyke. But whence this little nation here inhabiting were named GABRANTOVICI, I dare not search, unless happily it were of goates which the Britans tearme Gassian, and whereof there is not greater store in al Britain than hereabouts. Neither ought this derivation of the name to seeme absurd, seeing that Aegira in Achaia borroweth the name of goates, Nebrodes in Sicily of fallow Deere, and Bacotia in Greece, of Kine and Oxen. That little Promontory which with his bent made this creeke, is commonly called Flamborough head, and in the Saxon tongue Fleam-burg by Authors, who write that Ida the Saxon, who first subdued these Countries, arrived here. Some think it took the name from a watchtowre which did by night put forth a flame or burning light: for so direct failers into the haven. For, the Britans retain yet out of the provincially language this word, Flam: and Mariners paint this creeke in their sea-cards with a blazing flame on the head. Yet others are of opinion, that this name arrived in this Island with the English out of Anglen in Denmarke, the ancient seat of the English nation: for, there is a towne called Flemsburg, and that the Englishmen from hence called it so: like as the Gaules, as Livie witnesseth, tearmed Mediolanum, that is, Milan, in Italie, after the name of Mediolanum in Gaule, which they had left behinde them. For, there is a little village in this Promontory named Flamborough, where an other notable house of the Constables had anciently their seat, which some doe derive from the Lacies Constables of Chester. Being in these parts I could learne nothing for all the enquire that I made, as touching the bournes commonly called

Vippe

Vippeys waters.

Vippeys, which (as Walter of Heminburgh hath recorded) flow every other yeere out of blinde springs and runne with a forcible and violent streame toward the sea nere unto this Promontory. Yet take here with you, that which William Newbrigenis who was borne nere that place writeth of them. Those famous waters which commonly are called Vippeys, rise out of the earth from many sources not continually, but every second yeere, and being growne unto a great bourn runne downe by the lower grounds into the sea. Which when they are dry, it is a good signe: for, their breaking out and flowing is said to bee an infallible token portending some dearth to ensue.

From thence the shore is drawne in, whereby there runneth forth into the sea a certaine shelve or flang, like unto an out-thrust tongue, such as Englishmen in old time termed a File, whereupon the little village there Filey tooke name: and more within the land you see Flixton, where, in King *Athelstan*s time was built an Hospital, for the defence (thus word for word it is recorded) of way-faring people passing that way from Wolves, least they should be devoured. Whereby it appeareth for certaine, that in those daies Wolves made foule worke in this Tract, which now are no where to be seene in England, no not in the very marches toward Scotland; and yet within Scotland there be numbers of them in most places.

This little territory or Seigniori of Holderness, King William the First gave to Drugh Buerer a Fleming, upon whom also he had bestowed his Niece in marriage; whom when hee had made away by poison and thereupon fled to save himselfe, hee had to succeed him Stephen the sonne of Odo, Lord of Aulbemarle in Normandy who was descended from the Earles of Champagne: whom King William the First because hee was his Nephew by the halfe sister of the mothers side, as they write, made Earle of Aulbemarle: whose posterity in England retained the Title, although Aulbemarle be a place in Normandy. His successeur was William surnamed Le Grosse: whose onely daughter Avia was married to three husbands one after another, namely to William Magnavill Earle of Essex, to Baldwine De Beson, and William Fortis, or de Fortibus, by this last husband onely shee had issue William, who also had a sonne named William. His onely daughter Avellin, being the wedded wife of Edmund Crouchbacke, Earle of Lancaster, dyed without children. And so, as wee read in the booke of Meaux Abbey, for default of heires, the Earldome of Aulbemarle and honour of Holderness, were seized into the Kings hands. Howbeit in the ages ensuing King Richard the Second created Thomas of Woodstocke his Unkle, and afterwards Edward Plantagenet Earle of Rutland, the Duke of Torkes sonne, Duke of Aulbemarle, in his fathers life time: likewise King Henry the Fourth made his owne sonne Thomas, Duke of Clarence and Earle of Aulbemarle: which Title King Henry the Sixth afterward added unto the stile of Richard Beauchamp Earle of Warwicke, for the greater augmentation of his honour.

Earles of Aulmarle and Holderness.

Fitz. Odo. An ancient Genealogy or pedigree.

Craffus.

Gibbosus.

0002

NORTH-

NORTH-RIDING.

Scarce two miles above Flamborough-head, beginneth the NORTH-RIDING or the North part of this Country, which affronting the other parts, and beginning at the Sea, is stretched out Westward, and carrieth a very long Tract with it (though not so broad) for threescore miles together, even as farre as to Westmorland: limited on the one side with Derwent, and for a while with the River Ure, on the other side with Tees running all along it, which on the North Coast separateth it from the Bishopricke of Durham. And very fitly may this part bee divided into, Blackamore, Cliveland, Northallerton-shire, and Richmond-shire.

That which lyeth East, and benderth toward the Sea is called Blackamore, that is, The blacke moorish land: For it is mountainous and craggy. The Sea coast thereof, hath Scarborough Castle, for the greatest ornament a very goodly and famous thing, in old time called Sceap-burgh, that is, A Burgh upon the Scar, or Steepe Rocks. The description whereof have heere out of William of Newburgh his History. A Rocke of a wonderfull height and bignes, which by reason of steepe craggess and cliffes, almost every side is inaccessible, beareth into the Sea; wherewith it is all compassed about, save onely a certaine streight in manner of a gullet, which yeeldeth accessse, and openeth into the West: having in the toppe a very faire, Greene, and large Plaine containing about threescore acres of ground or rather more; a little Well also of fresh water springing out of a stony Rocke. In the foresaid gullet or passage, which a man shall have much ado to ascend up unto, standeth a stately and Princelike Towre: and beneath the said passage beginneth the City or Towre, spreading two sides South and North, but having the fore part Westward: and verily it is fenced afront with a wall of the owne: but on the East fortified with the rocke of the Castle: and both the sides thereof are watered with the Sea. This place William le Grosse, Earle of Aulbemarle and Holdernesse viewing well, and seeing it to bee a convenient plot for to build a Castle upon, helping Nature forward with a very costly worke closed the whole plaine of the Rocke with a Wall, and built a Towre in the very streight of the passage: which being in processe of time fallen downe, King Henry the Second caused to bee built in the same place a great and goodly Castle; after hee had now brought under the Nobles of England, who during the loose government of King Stephen had consumed the lands of the Crowne: but especially amongst others, that William abovesaid of Aulbemarle, who had in this Tract ruled and reigned like a King, and possessed himselfe of this place as his owne.

Touching the most project boldnesse of Thomas Stafford, who to the end hee might overthrow himselfe with great attempts, with a few Frenchmen surpris'd this Castle of a sudden in Queene Maries Raigne and held it for two daies together, I neede not to speake: ne yet of Sherleis, a Gentleman of France, who having accompanied him, was judicially endited and convict of high treason, albeit he was a forainer, because hee had done against the duty of his Allegaunce, the peace then betwene the Kingdome of England and of France being in force. These are matters better knowne than that the World can take notice of them by any writings of mine. Yet may this seeme a thing worth my labour and expedient, to note, how the Hollanders and Zelanders use to take marvellous plenty of herrings (call them in Latin Halteres, Leucomenides, or Chalcides, which of them you please) upon this coast, and make a very gainfull trade thereof, having anciently first obtained licence by an ancient custome, out of this Castle. For the Englishmen granted licence to fish, referring the honour to themselves, but resigning for lazinesse, as it were, the profit unto strangers. For, it is almost incredible, what infinite summes of money the Hollanders raise unto themselves by this their fishing in our shore.

The gainfull fishing for Herrings.

See Diet 144.

These Herrings (pardon me I pray you if briefly by way of digression I doe make mention of Gods goodnesse towards us) which in our great grandfathers dayes kept as it were their station onely about Norway: now in our time not without the divine Providence, swimme yeerely round about this Isle of Britaine by skulles in wonderfull great numbers. About Midsummer they shoole out of the deepe and vast Northren-sea to the coasts of Scotland, at which time because they are then at the farrest, they bee streightwaies sold: Thence come they to the English East coast, and from the middest of August unto November, is the best and most plentiful taking of them betweene Scarborough, and Tamis mouth.

Afterwards by force of some great storme, they are carried into the British sea, and there untill Christmas offer themselves to the fishers nettes; from hence dividing themselves and swimming along both sides of Ireland, after they have coasted round about Britaine, they take their course into the Northren Ocean, as their home, and there settle themselves as it were and rest untill June: where after they have cast their spawn and brought forth a yong fry, they returne againe in mighty great skulles and so march about these Isles. Whiles I am writing hereof, that comes into my minde which sometimes I read in Saint Ambrose. Fishes (saith hee) by infinite numbers, meeting, as one would say, by common consent out of many places from sundry creekes of the Sea, with a joint flote, as it were, make toward the blaises of the Northwinde, and by a certaine direction and instinct of Nature haile into that Sea of the Northren parts. A man that saw the manner of them would say a certaine tide were comming downe from the current, they rush so forward and cut the waves, as they passe, with a violent power, through Propontis into Pontus Euxinus. But to my matter againe.

From thence, the shore indented and interlaced with rockes, bendeth in, as farre as to the River Teise, and by a compasse that the said shore fetcheth, there is made a Bay about a mile broad, which of that Outlaw Robert Hood, so much talked of, wee call Robin Hoods Bay. For hee (as John Major the Scottishman writeth) flourished in the Raigne of Richard the First; and the said Authour setteth him out with this commendation, that Hee was indeed an Arch-Robber but the gentlest of these that ever was. Then DUNUS SINUS, a creeke mentioned by Ptoleme streightwaies by giving backe of the shore on both sides sheweth it selfe; neere unto which standeth Dunlesley a little village, and hard by it, Whitby, in the English Saxon tongue Stapeaner-heale; which Beda expoundeth to bee, The Bay of a Watch-Tower. Neither will I call that interpretation into question, although in our language it doth resemble Sinum Salutis, that is, The Bay of health; so, that I would say this very same was Salutaris Sinus, that is, The Bay of safety, but that the situation in the Geographer did perswade me otherwise. Heere are found certaine stones fashioned like Serpents folded and wrapped round as in a wreath even the very pastimes of Nature disporting her selfe: who, as one saith, when shee is wearied as it were with serious workes, forgeth and shapeth some things by way of game and recreation. A man would thinke verily they had bene sometime Serpents, which, a coat or crust of stone had now covered all over. But people too credulous ascribe this to the Praiers of Saint Hilda, as if shee had thus transformed and changed them: who in our Primitive Church withstood to her power the shoring and shaving of Priests, and the celebration of Easter according to the order of Rome, when a Synode was held touching these matters in the yeere of our Lord 664. in the Abbey which shee had built in this place, and whereof herselfe was first Governesse. Unto whose holinesse also they ascribe, that those wilde Geese, which in Winter time flye by flockes unto Pooles and Rivers that are not frozen over, in the South parts; whiles they flye over certaine fields heere adjoyning, suddenly fall downe to the ground, to the exceeding great admiration of all men: a thing that I would not have related, had I not heard it from very many persons of right good credit. But such as are not given to superstitious credulity, attribute this unto a secret propriety of this ground, and to an hidden dissent between this soile and those geese, such

Hexameron.
lib. 5. cap. 10.

The River
Teise.

Robbin Hoods Bay.

Dunum.

Dunlesley.
Whitby.

Stony Serpents of Hildas.

Geese falling
downe.

such as is betweene wolves and Squilla rootes. For provident Nature hath infused such like secret mutuall combinations, and contrarieties, which the learned tearme Sympathies and Antipathies, as all men acknowledge, for their preservation. Afterwards Edelfleda King Oswins daughter enriched this Abbay with most large revenues, where also shee solemnized her fathers funerall obsequies. But at length the Danes robbing and spoiling where ever they came, utterly overthrew it: and although Serie Percie reedified it, being immediately upon the comming in of the Normans head-ruler of the same, yet now it scarce affordeth any footing at all of the ancient dignity. Hard by, upon a steepe hill, howbeit betweene two others higher than it, toward the Sea, stood by report, the Castle of Wada a Saxon Duke, who in that confused Anarchy of the Northumbers, and massacre of Princes and Nobles, having combined with those that murdered King Eisbered, gave battaile unto King Ardulph at Whalley in Lancashire: but with so disastrous successe, that after his owne power was discomfited and put to flight, himselfe was faine to flie: and afterwards by a languishing sicknesse ended his life; and heere within the hill betweene two entire and solid stones about seven foote high lieth entombed: which stones because they stand eleven foote asunder, the people doubt not to affirme, that hee was a mighty Giant. Neere unto this place, long time after, Peter de Maloulay built a Castle, which being full as it were of grace and beauty he named in French Mouli-Grace, as wee read in the History of Mauley, but because it became a most grievous yoke unto the neighbour Inhabitants, the people masters alwaies of our usuall speech, by change of one letter termed it Mouli-grave, by which name although the reason thereof be not so well knowne, the world takes knowledge of it. This Peter de Mololacu, commonly called Mauley (that I may in this point satisfie the curious) borne in Poitou in France, married the onely daughter of Robert de Turnham, in the Raigne of King Richard the First: in whose right he entred upon a very great inheritance heere: after whom succeeded in order seven Peters called Lords Mauley: who give for their Armes A Bend Sables in an Eschocheon Or. But when the seventh dyed issuelesse, this the Manours of Dancaster, Bainton, Bridefalle, &c. were parted by the sisters, betweene the families of the Salvains and Bigots. Neere unto this place, as elsewhere in this shore, is found blacke Amber or Geate: Some take it to be Gagates, which in old time they held to be one of the rare gems and precious stones. It groweth among the cliffes and rockes, where they chinke and gape asunder. Before it be polished, it is of a reddish and rusty colour: but after it be once polished, it becommeth, as saith Solinus, as a Gemme of a bright radiant blacke colour. Touching which, Rhemnius Palamon out of Dionysius after thus verifieth:

*Præfulget nigro splendore Gagates.
Hic lapis ardescens austro perfusus aquarum,
At oleo perdens flammam, mirabile visu
Astritus rapit hic teneras seu succina frondes.*

The Geat is blacke and shineth passing bright,
Which Stone in water dipt and drencht, takes fire and burneth light:
In oile, a wonder for to see, the flame is quickly done,
And like to Amber rub it hard, small stickes it catcheth soone.

And Marbodanus in his little booke of precious stones,

*Nascitur in Lycia lapis, & prope gemma Gagates, Sed genus extremum sacunda Britannia mittit,
Lucidus & niger est, levius & levisimus idem:
Vicina paleas irabit astritus calefactus,
Ardes aqua lotus, restinguitur unctus oliva.*

Duke Wade from whom the families of the Wades derive,

* Mauley;

Mouli grave
Castle.

Barons of Mauley.

Geat Gagates;

* Others are of opinion that our pit cole or stone cole was the old Gaga-tes.

Geat

Geat is a Stone, and Gemme well nere, that men in Lycia finde,
But fruitfull Britan yeelds the best simply of all that kinde.
Of colour blacke, yet bright it is, most smoothe and light withall;
Well rubbed and enchauf'd thereby, thin strawes and sescues small
That are neere hand it drawes thereto: it burnes in water drenchr, Annoint the same with fatty oile, the flame streighwaies is quenchr.

Heare also what Solinus saich; In Britaine there is great store of Gagates, or Geat, and an excellent stone it is: If you demand the colour, it is a bright radiant blacke: if the quality, it is in manner nothing weighty: If the nature, it burneth in water, and is quenched with oile: if the vertue, being made hote with rubbing, it holdeth such things as are applied thereto. From Whitby the shore gives backe Westward: by which lyeth Cleveland, taking that name as it seemeth of steepe bankes, which in our language wee call Cliffes; for, there runne all along the side thereof cliffie hilles; at the foote of which, the country spreadeth into a Plaine full of fertile fields.

Upon the shore, Sken grave a little Village is much benefited by taking great store of fish: where also, by report, was caught a Sea-man about 70. yeeres since, that for certaine daies together fed of raw fishes: but espying his opportunity escaped away unto his proper element againe. Whensoever the windes are laied, and that upon still weather the sea is most calme, and the water lieth as one would say leuell and plaine without any noise: there is heard heere many times on a sudden a great way off, as it were, an horrible and a fearefull groning: at which time the fishermen dare not launch out farre into the deepe, as beleeving according to their shallow reach, that the Ocean is a fell and cruell beast, and being then very hungry desireth greedily in that sort to devour mens bodies. Beneath Sken-grave, is situate Kilton Castle within a Parke, which belonged sometime to the habitation of the Thwengs, whose patrimony descended to the Barons of Lumley, Hilton, and Daubeneie: And there joyneith almost close unto it Skelson Castle, appertaining to the ancient family of the Barons Brus, who derive their descent from Robert Brus the Norman. The said Robert had two sonnes, Adam Lord of Skelson, and Robert of Anan-dale in Scotland: from whom is descended the royall stem of Scotland. But Peter Brus the fifth Lord of Skelson died without issue, and left his sisters to inherite: namely Agnes, wife to Walter Falconberg: Lucie, wedded to Marmaduke Thweng, of whom is come the Baron Lumley: Margaret, married to Robert Ros; and Laderina to John Belle-eau, men in that age of honourable reputation. The heires successively of Walter Falconberg flourished a long time; but in the end by a female, the possessions came to Sir William Nevill, who was a redoubted Knight for martiall prowesse, and by King Edward the Fourth advanced to the title of Earle of Kent. And his daughters were bestowed in marriage upon Sir John Cogniers, N. Bedbowing, and R. Strangwaies.

Neere unto Hunt-cliffe, and not farre from the shore there appeare aloft at a vale water certaine Rockes, about which the fishes that wee call Seales, short (as some thinke) for Sea-veales, meete together in droves to sleepe and sunne themselves: and upon that rocke which is next unto the shore, there lieth one, as it were to keepe the Centinell: and as any man approacheth neere, he either by throwing downe a big stone, or by tumbling himselfe into the water with a great noise, giveth a signall to the rest to looke unto themselves and get into the water. Most afraid they bee of men: against whom when they chafe them, they being destitute of water sling backward with their hinder feete a cloud, as it were, of sand and gravell stones, yea and often times drive them away: For women they care not so much: and therefore whosoever would take them, use to bee clad in womens apparell. In the same coast are found stones, some of yellowish, others of a reddish colour, and some againe with a rough cast crust over them of a certaine salt matter, which by their smell and taste make shew of Coperose, Nitre, and Brimstone: and also great store of Marquesites in colour resembling brasle.

Hard by, at Huntly Nabb, the shore that lay for a great way in length open, riseth

now

Cleveland.

Brius of Skel-ton.

Barons Falcon-berg.

now up with craggy rockes, at the rootes wherof there lie scattering here and there stones of divers bignesse, so artificially by nature shaped round in maner of a Globe, that one would take them to be big bullets made by the turners hand for shot to bee discharged out of great ordinance. In which, if you breake them, are found stony serpents enwrapped round like a wreath, but most of them are headles. Then see you from thence Wilton Castle, sometime the Bulmers: and above it at Dobham the river Tees voideth into the Sea after it hath lodged sundry rivers, and at the last one that is namelesse, beside Tare a mercate towne well knowne, which river watereth Stokesley, a little mercate towne, likewise that hath a long time appertained to the Noble family of Enre. Beneath which places, Wharston Castle belonging in times past to the Barons Menill, and Harlsby to the family of Hosham and afterward to Stragwaies, now wrestle with old age, and hardly hold up their heads.

The mouth of Tees aforesaid, suspected in times past of sailers, is now found to be a sure road and harbour: and to give direction for safe access and entrance unto it, there are erected on both sides thereof within our remembrance high turrets with light. Foure miles from this Tees mouth, standeth Gisburgh on high; now a small towne, but whiles it stood in flourishing estate, it was right glorious for a very fine and rich Abbay, built by Robert de Brus, Lord of the place, about the yeere of our Salvation 1119, and for the common buriall place of all the gentry and nobility in this tract; which also brought forth Walter de Heminsford no unlearned Historiographer. This verily is a passing good place, and may well for pleasantnesse, delightome variety, and rare gifts of Nature, contend with Puteoli in Italy, which in regard of healthy situation it also farre excelleth. The aire is mollified and made more mild by the mountaines seated betweene it, and what way the sea yeeldeth a cold and wintry disposition: the soile fruitfull and plenteous in grasse affordeth delectable flowers a great part of the yeere, and richly aboundeth with vaines of metall and Alum-earth of sundry colours, but especially of ocher and murray, likewise of iron, out of which they have now begonne to try very good Alum, and Coperose. Which with learned skill and cunning not many yeeres since, Sir Thomas Chaloner Knight (a learned searcher into natures workes, and unto whose charge, our most high and mightie King hath committed his son Prince Henry, the lovely joy and delight of Britaine) first discovered, by observing, that the leaves of trees were of a more weak greene colour here than in other places, that the oakes had their rootes spreading broad but very ebb within the ground, the which had much strength but small store of sappe, that the earth standing upon clay, and being of divers colours, whitish, yellowish, and blew, was never frozen, and in a cleere night, glittered in the pathes like unto glasse. Not farre off, Onusbery or Rosebery Topping mounteth up a mighty beight, and maketh a goodly shew a farre off, serving unto sailers for a marke of direction, and to the neighbour inhabitants for a prognostication: For, so often as the head thereof hath his cloudy cap on, lightly there followeth rain: whereupon they have a Proverbiall Rhime, when Rosebery Topping weares a cap: Let Cleveland them be woe a clap. Neere unto the top of it, out of an huge rocke there floweth a spring of water medicinable for diseased eyes: and from hence there is a most goodly and pleasant prospect downe into the vallies below lying a great way about, to the hills full of grasse, greene meddowes, delightfull pastures, fruitfull corne fields, riverets stored with fish, the river Tees mouth full of rodes and harbours, the ground plaine and open without danger of inundation, and into the sea with ships therein under saile. Beneath it, standeth Kildale, a Castle of the Fercies Earles of Northumberland: and more Eastward Danby, which from Brus also by the Thwengs came unto the Baron Lamier, from whose heire descended the Willoughbbies, Barons of Brooke. But this Danby with other possessions was sold to the Nevills, of which family Sir George Nevill was by King Henry the sixth called among the Barons to the Parliaments, under the name of Lord Lamier, in whose progenie and posterity this dignity hath continued unto our daies. There remaineth nothing else heere for me to note, but that the Barons Menill held certaine lands in this shire of the Archbishops of Canterbury,

Yare, Stokesley.

Gisburgh;

Onusbery hill or Rosebery Topping.

The History of Canterbury.

Prærogative
Reg. 17. Ed. 1.

terbury, and for the same, the Coigniers, Strangwaies and Darcies, descended from them, are bound to performe certaine service to the said Archbishops. And whereas the King of England by his Prærogative shall have the Wardship (these bee the very words of the Prærogative) of all their lands who hold of him in chiefe by Knights service, of which themselves as tenants shall be seized in their Demesne as of Fee, the day wherein they die, of whomsoever they held by the like service, so that themselves notwithstanding hold of the King any tenement of the ancient demesne of the Crowne, unto the full and lawful age of the heire: Yet are excepted these Fees and others of the Archbishop of Canterbury and the Bishop of Durrham, betwene Tine and Tees, &c. so that they may have the Wardship of such lands, although elsewhere they held of the King.

Farther within the country among the mountaines of Blaca amore, there offereth it selfe (besides wandering beakes and violent swift brookes, which challenge the vallies every where, as their owne to passe through) no memorable thing, unless it be Pickering; a good bigge towne belonging to the Dutchy of Lancaster, situate upon an hill and fortified with an old Castle, unto which a number of small villages lying there round about doe appertaine: whereupon the country adjoining is commonly called Pickering Lib, The Liberte of Pickering, and Forest of Pickering, the which King Henry the Third gave unto his younger sonne Edmund, Earle of Lancaster. Wherein, neere unto the river Derwent standeth Atton, that gavenam unto the right noble family of the Attons Knights, descended from the Lords Vesey: the inheritance of which family, was by the daughters parted betwene Edward Saint John, the Evers, and the Coigniers. Now from Edward Saint John a great portion thereof came by a daughter to Henrie Bromflet. Which Henrie verily was summoned to the High court of Parliament by these expresse termes, elsewhere not to be found in Summons. Our Will is, that both yee and your heires males, of your body lawfully issuing, be Barons of Vesey. Afterwards, that title passed away by a daughter to the Cliffords. On the other side, foure miles from Pickering, neere unto Daw, a swift running river, lieth Kirkby-Marside hard unto the hilles, whereof it had that name, a Market towne not of the meanest reckoning, and the possession sometime of the Esstowilles.

Behind these, Westward, Rhidal lieth low, a goodly, pleasant and plentiful vale adorned with three and twenty Parish-churches, through the mids whereof runneth the river Rhie: A place (as saith William of Newbarrough) wast, desolate, and full of horrou, before that Walter Espec had granted it to the Monkes of the Cluniac order, and founded there an Abbey. In this vale is Elmesly seated, which, if I deceive not my selfe, Bede called Vimetum; where, that Robert called de Rosse, surnamed Farsan built a Castle; nere unto which the river Recall hideth it selfe under the ground. More beneath, hard by the river side standeth Riton, an ancient possession of the ancient familie of the Percibaires, commonly named Percies. From thence Rhie carrieth with him the streames of many a brooke into Derwent, which watereth in this vale Malton a Market towne well knowne and frequented, for corne, horses, fish, and implements of husbandry: where are to be seene the foundations of an old Castle, belonging, as I have heard say, in old time to the Vesies, Barons in these parts of great estate and honor. Their pedigree as appeareth evidently by the Kings records, is derived from William Tyson, who being Lord of Malton and of Alnewicke in Northumberland, was slain in the bataille at Hastings against the Normans. Whole onely daughter was given in marriage to Ivo de Vesey a Norman, and hee left behind him his onely daughter likewise named Beatrice, with who Eustach the son of Fitz John * with one eie contracted marriage, who in the raigne of Stephen founded the religious houses at Malton, and Watton. For, his second wife daughter to William, Countable of Chester, was Ladie of Watton. William the sonne of Eustach by Beatrice, being ripped out of his mothers wombe, assumed unto him the name of Vesey, and the Armes, a Cross floury Argent, in a Shield Gules. This William begat of Beatrice daughter to Robert Esstowill of Knaresburg, two sonnes, Eustach de Vesey, who tooke to wife Margaret daughter to William King of the Scots, and Sir Warin de Vesey Lord

27. Hen. 6.
Bromflet
Lord Vesey.

Ætæria 8.
Edw. 2. n. 63.
Barons Vesey

* Monowill.

Lord of Knapton. As for Eustach, father hee was of William, who begat John, that died without issue, and William, so renowned for his exploits in Ireland; and these changed the Armes of their house, into a shield Or with a crosse Sables. But William, after that his legitimate sonne John, died in the warre of Wales, granted unto King Edward certaine lands in Ireland, that his illegitimate sonne William surnamed of Kildare, might inherit his fathers estate. And hee ordained Anthony Bee Bishop of Durrham his feoffee in trust to the use of his sonne: but he was scarce trusty as touching Alnewick, Eltham in Kent, and other lands; which he is reported to have conveyed indirectly to his owne use. This illegitimate sonne young Vesey was slain in the Bataille of Sterling in Scotland. And at length the title fell backe unto the line of the Attons, considering that Margaret the only daughter of Sir Gwarin Vesey was wedded unto Gilbert de Atton. But, heereof enough if not too much, and of it I have spoken before. Neere unto this vale there flourished two famous Abbacies, Newbarrough (unto which we are indebted for William of Newbarrough, a learned and diligent writer of the English Historie) now, the habitation of the worshipfull family of Bellasisse, descended out of the Bishopricke of Durrham: and Bellisland commonly Biland, both founded and endowed by Robert Monbray. This family at the Monbraies was for power, nobility, and wealth comparable to any other, and possessed very faire lands with the Castles of Slingsby, Threske, and others in this tract. The originall of this race if you desire to understand, I will compendiously let it downe. When Roger de Monbray Earle of Northumberland, and R. * de Grundeberse for their disloialtie were diseized of all their possessions, King Henry the First bestowed a great part thereof upon Nigell, or Nicle de Albenie of the same family that the Albenies Earles of Arundell were descended; a man of very high birth in Normandie, who had bin Bowbearer to King William Rufus: and so enriched him thereby, that he held in England 140. Knights fees, and in Normandie 120. He commanded also that Roger his sonne should assume the name of Monbray: from whom flowed out the Monbraies Earles of Nottingham, and Dukes of Norfolk. To these Monbraies also belonged in times past Gilling Castle standing hard by: but now unto that ancient and worshipfull family, which of their faire bush of haire got their name Fairfax. For Fax in the old English tongue signifieth haire, or the haire of the head: whereupon our progenitours called a Comet or blasing starre, A Faxed Harre, like as a place, whereof I have spoken before, Haly-fax, of holy haire.

Then beneath these, Southward, lieth Calaterrum Nemus, commonly called, The Empt of Galtrés, shaded in some places with trees; in other some a wet flat, full of moist and moorish quavemires: very notorious in these daies by reason of a solemne horse running, wherein the horse that outrunneth the rest hath for his prize a little golden bell. It is almost incredible what a multitude of people conflow hither from all parts to these games, and what great wagers are laid on the horses heads for their swift running. In this Forest standeth Creac, which Egfrid King of Northumberland in the year 684. gave with three miles round about unto Saint Cuthbert: by whom it came to the Church of Durrham. Scarce foure miles hence is situate most pleasantly among little woods and groves Sherry-Hatton, a very proper Castle built by Sir Bertrand Bulmer, and reedified by Raulph Nevil, the first Earle of Westmorland. Neere unto which standeth Hinderskell a little Castle, built by the Barons of Greyflocke, which others call Hunderd-skell, of a number of fountaines that spring up and rise there.

Behind the hilles Westward, where the country spreadeth it selfe out againe into a more fresh and plaine champion, lieth Aborton-shire, commonly called Northalston-shire, a little cuntry watered with the river Wike, and taking the name of Northalston a towne, sometime called Calpeproun, which is nothing else but a long broad street; howbeit, having in it on S. Bartholomewes day the greatest Faire of Kine and Oxen, and of most resort, that ever I saw in all my life. King William Rufus gave this with the territory adjoining unto the Church of Durrham, to the Bishops of which See it is very much beholden. For, William Comin who by force held the

The Vesties
coate of Armes,
March, Paris,
M. S.

Monbraie.

In other places
he is named De Fronte-bovis.

The Register of Fountaines
Abbey.

Fair-fax.
Fax.

A solemne
Horse-running.

North-Alston shire.

Bishopricke

Cap. 126.

Bataile of Standard.

Bishopricke of Durrham, built the Castle there, and granted it unto his nephew, which now is in manner quite decayed and gone. The Bishops likewise his successors granted unto it certain liberties and immunities. For, in the Booke of Durrham we read that Hugh Pudsey Bishop of Durrham fortified the towne, having obtained licence of the King, that among those unlawfull castles, which by Commandement were then destroyed in many places of England, this onely should have the privilege to stand still: which notwithstanding, the King commanded afterward to be layd even with the ground. Hard by this, was that field foughten, which they commonly call the Bataile of the Standard: in which, David King of Scots, who with his unexampled cruelty had made this country almost a wilderness, was after so great a slaughter of his people put to flight; that then and never before our countrymen thought they were fully revenged. For, that indeed came to passe in this battaile, which Raulfe the Bishop said, when before the battaile in an oration he encouraged the English to fight: A confused multitude restrained, is an impediment to its selfe, in prosperous successe to hurt others; and in adverse fortune, so escape is selfe. This was called The battaile of the Standard, because the English keeping themselves close together about the standard received the first onset and shock of the Scottish, endured it, and at length put them to flight. And this Standard as I have seene it pictured in ancient bookes, was a mighty huge chariot supported with wheeles, wherein was set a pole of a great height in manner of a mast, and upon the very top thereof stood a crosse to bee seene, and under the crosse hung a banner. This when it was advanced was a token, that every one should prepare himselfe to fight, and it was reputed as an holy and sacred altar that each man was to defend with all power possible, resembling the same for all the world that Carrociom of the Italians, which might never be brought abroad but in the greatest extremities and danger of the whole state.

Within this little shire also, Threske, commonly called Thruke is worth to be mentioned: which had sometime a most strong Castle out of which Roger Mowbray displayed his banner of rebellion, and called in the king of Scots to the overthrow of his owne native Country: what time as King Henry the Second had rashly and inconsiderately digged, as it were, his owne grave, by investing his sonne King, in equall authority with himselfe. But this rebellion was in the end quenched with blood, and this Castle quite dismantled: so that beside a ditch and rampire, I could see nothing there of a Castle. Another firebrand also of rebellion flamed out here in the Raigne of Henry the Seventh. For when the unruly Commons tooke it most grievously that a light subside granted by the States of the Kingdome in Parliament, was exacted of them, and had driven away the Collectors thereof, forthwith (as it is commonly seene that Rashnesse speeding once well can never keepe a meane nor make an end) they violently set upon Henry Percie, Earle of Northumberland, who was Lieutenant of these parts, and slew him in this place: and having John Egremont to be their leader, tooke armes against their Country and their Prince: but a few daies after they felt the smart of their lawlesse insolency grievously and justly as they had deserved. Heere hard by are Sourby and Brakenbake, belonging to a very ancient and right worshipfull family of the Lafelles: also more Southward Stray, sometime of the Darvells (from whence a great family branched) and afterwards the Darvies who for a long time flourished heere maintaining the degree and dignity of Knights right worthily.

The first and onely Earle of Yorke (after William Mallet, and one or two Ethenevils of the Norman blood, who they say were Sheriffes by inheritance) was Otho son to Henry Leo Duke of Bevar and Saxony, by Maud the daughter of Henry the Second, King of England, who was afterwards proclaimed Emperour and stiled by the name of Otho the fourth. From whose brother William, another sonne of Maud, are descended the Dukes of Brunswicke and Luneburgh in Germanie, who for a token of this their kinned with the Kings of England give the same Armes that the first Kings of England of Norman blood bare, to wit two Leopards or Lions Or, in a shield Gules. Long after, King Richard the Second created Edmund of Langley, fifth sonne

Earle of Northumberland slaine by Rebells.Earles and Dukes of Yorke.

sonne of King Edward the Third, Duke of Yorke: who by a second daughter of Peter King of Castile and of Leon had two sonnes. Edward the eldest, in his fathers life time, was first Earle of Cambridge, afterwards Duke of Aumarle, and in the end Duke of Yorke; who manfully fighting in the battaile at Agincourt in France lost his life, leaving no children: and Richard his second sonne Earle of Cambridge, who having married Anne sister of Edmund Mortimer, whose grandmother likewise was the onely daughter of Leonell Duke of Clarence, and practising to advance Edmund his wives brother to the royall dignity, was streightwaies intercepted and beheaded, as if hee had bene corrupted by the French to destroy King Henry the Fifth.

Earle of March.

Sixteene yeeres after, his sonne Richard, was restored in blood through the exceeding, but unadvised favour of King Henry the Sixth: as being sonne to Richard Earle of Cambridge brother to Edward Duke of Yorke, and cozin also to Edmund Earle of March. And now being Duke of Yorke, Earle of March and of Ulster, Lord of Wigmor, Clare, Trim, and Conaght, hee bare himselfe so lofty, that shortly hee made claime openly in Parliament, against King Henry the Sixth, as in his owne right, for the Crowne: which he had closely affected by indirect courses before in making complaints of the misgovernment of the State, spreading seditious rumours, scattering Libels abroad, plotting secret Conspiracies, and stirring up tumults, yea and open Warres: laying downe his Title thus, as being the sonne of Anne Mortimer, who came of Philip the daughter and sole heire of Leonel Duke of Clarence, third sonne of King Edward the Third, and therefore to be preferred by very good right, in succession of the Kingdome, before the children of John of Gaunt the fourth sonne of the said Edward the Third. And when answere was made unto him, that the Nobles of the Realme and the Duke himselfe had sworne Allegiance unto the King, that the Kingdome by authority of Parliament had bene conferred and entailed upon Henry the Fourth and his heires; that the Duke claiming his Title, from the Duke of Clarence never tooke upon him the Armes of the Duke of Clarence, that Henry the Fourth held the Crowne in right from King Henry the Third; hee easily avoyded all these allegations: namely, that the said oath unto the King taken by mans law was in no wise to bee performed, when as it tended to the suppression of the truth and right, which stand by the Law of God: That, there was no need of Parliamentary authority to entaile the Crowne and Kingdome unto the Lancastrians, neither would they themselves seeke for it so, if they had stood upon any right thereunto. As for the Armes of the Duke of Clarence which were his by right hee forbore of purpose to give them untill then, like as hee did, to claime his right to the Imperiall Crowne: And as for the right or Title derived from King Henry the Third, it was a meere ridiculous devise and manifest untruth to cloake the violent usurpation of Henry the Fourth, and therefore condemned of all men. Albeit these plects in the behalfe of the Duke of Yorke stood directly with law: yet, for remedy of imminent dangers the matter was ordered thus by the wisdom of the Parliament: That Henry the Sixth should enjoy the right of the Kingdome for terme of life onely and that Richard Duke of Yorke should be proclaimed heire apparent of the Kingdome, he and his heires to succeed after him: provided alwaies, that neither of them should plot or practise ought to the destruction of the other. Howbeit the Duke immediately was transported so headlong with ambition, that hee went about to preoccupate and forestall his owne hopes, and so hee raised that deadly Warre betweene the Houses of Yorke and Lancaster, distinguished by the white and red Rose, wherein himselfe soone after lost his life at Wakefield, King Henry the Sixth was four times taken Prisoner, and in the end deposed both of his Kingdome and life. Edward Earle of March sonne to the said Richard, obtained the Crowne, and being deposed from the same, recovered it againe (thus inconstant fortune disposed herselfe, lifting up and throwing downe Princes at her pleasure) many Princes of the royall blood, and a number of the Nobility lost their lives: those Parliament. 10.

Hen. 6.Out of the Rols of the Parliament. 39.
of Hen. the 6.Warre between the House of Lancaster and Yorke, or the red Rose and the white.

See pag. 570.

1604.

hereditary and rich Provinces in France belonging to the Kings of England were lost, the wealth of the Realme wholly wasted, and the poore people thereof overwhelmed with all manner of misery. Edward now being established in his royall Throne, and in the ranke of Kings carrying the name of Edward the Fourth, gave unto Richard his second sonne the Title of Duke of Yorke, who together with king Edward the Fifth his brother was by their Unkle Richard the Third murdered. Then king Henry the Seventh granted the same Title unto his younger sonne, who afterwards was crowned king of England by the name of Henry the Eighth. And even now of late King James invested Charles his second sonne (whom before, hee had created in Scotland Duke of Albany, Marquesse of Ormond, Earle of Ross and Baron of Ardmarch) a childe not full foure yeeres of age, Duke of Yorke, by clinture of a sword, imposition of a Cap and Coronet of gold upon his head, and by delivering unto him a verge of gold: after he had according to the order with due complements made the day before, both him and eleven more of Noble Parentage, Knights of the Bath.

Reckoned there are in this County Parishes 459. under which be very many Chappels, for number of Inhabitants equall unto great Parishes.

RICH.

RICHMOND-SHIRE.

HE rest of this Country which lyeth toward the North-West and carryeth a great compasse, is called Richmond-shire, or Richmount-shire, taking the name from a Castle, which Alan Earle of little Britaine had built: unto whom William the Conquerour gave this Shire (which before time belonged to Eadwin an Englishman) by these short letters Patents as it is set downe in the booke of Richmond Fees. I William firmameil Bastard, King of England, doe give and grant unto thee my Nephew Alane Earle of Britaine, and to thine heires for ever, all and every the Manour houses and lands which late belonged to Earle Eadwin in Yorke-shire, with the Knights fees and other liberties and customes, as freely and in as honourable wise, as the said Eadwin held the same: Given at our Leaguer before the City of Yorke.

He was his sonne in law.

This Shire most of it lieth very high, with ragged rockes and swelling mountaines, whose sloping sides in some places beare good grasse, the bottomes and valleys are not altogether unfruitfull. The hilles themselves within, are stored with lead, pit-coale, and Coper. For, in a Charter of king Edward the Fourth, there is mention made of a Mine or Delfe of Copper, neere unto the very towne of Richmond. But covetousnesse, which driveth men even as farre as to hell hath not yer pierced into these hilles, affrighted perchance with the difficulty of carriage: whereas there have bene found in the tops of these mountaines, as also in other places stones like unto sea winkles or cockles and other sea fish, if they be not the wonders of nature, I will with Orosius a Christian Historiographer deeme them to be undoubted tokens of the generall deluge that surrounded the face of the whole earth in Noahs time. When the Sea (saith he) in Noahs daies overflowed all the earth, and brought a generall flood, so that the whole Globe thereof, being therewith surrounded and covered, there was one face, as of the Firmament, so also of the Sea. The soundest Writers most evidently teach, That all mankind perished, a few persons excepted, who by vertue of their faith were reserved alive for offspring and propagation. Howbeit even they also have witnessed that some there had bene, who although they were ignorant of the times past, and knew not the Author himselfe of times, yet gathered conjecturally as much by giving a guesse by those rough stones, which we are wont to finde on hilles remote from the Sea, resembling Cockles and Oysters, yea and sometimes eaten in hollow, with the waters.

Copper, lead, and stone-cole, or pit-cole.

Some cockles and winkles.

Where this Country bordereth upon Lancashire, amongst the mountaines it is in most places so waste, solitary, unpleasant, and unsightly, so mute and still also, that the borderers dwelling thereby have called certaine Riverets creeping this way, Hell-beckes. But especially that, about the head of the River Ure, which having a Bridge over it of one entire stone fallen downe such a depth, that it striketh in a certaine horror to as many as looke downe. And in this Tract there be safe harbors for Goates and Deere, as well red as fallow, which for their huge bignesse with their ragged and branching hornes are most sightly.

Hell-beckes.

The River Ure, which wee have often spoken of before, hath his fall heere out of the Westernne Mountaines, and first of all cutting through the middelt of the Vale called Wensedale, whiles it is yet but small as being neere unto his Spring-head, where great flockes of Sheepe doe pasture, and which in some places beareth Lead stones plentifully, is encreased by a little River comming out of the South called Baint, which with a great noise streameth out of the Poole Semer. At the very place where these Rivers meete, and where there stand a few small Cottages which of the first Bridge made over Ure, they call Bainbrig, there lay in old time a Garison of the Romanes: whereof the very Reliques are at this day remaining. For, on the toppe of an hill, which of a Fort, or Burge they now call Burge, appeare the groundworkes of an ancient Hold, containing about five acres of ground in compasse; and beneath it Eastward, many tokens of some old habitation and dwelling places. Where, amongst many other signes of Roman Antiquity, I have seene of late this fragment of an antique Inscription in a very faire letter, with Winged Victory supporting the same.

Wensedale.

IMP CAES. L. SEPTIMIO
PIO PERTINACI AUGU.
IMP CAESARI. M. AURELIO
APIO FELICI AUGUSTO.

The name of Geta raised out.

BRACCHIO CAEMEN-TICIUM VINERVIO-
RUM SUBCURALA SE-NECINON AMPLISSI-
MIO PERIL. VISPIUS
---PR AELEGIO.---

Bracchium.

By this we may guesse, that the said hold at Burgh, was in times past named BRACCHUM, which before time had been made of turf, but now built with stone and the same layed with good mortar. Also, that the sixth Cohort of the Nervians lay there in Garrison who may seeme to have had also their place of Summertime in that high hill hard by, fenced with a banke and trench about it, which now they tearme Esbelbury. And not long since, there was digged up the Statue of Aurelius Commodus the Emperour: who, as Lampridius writeth, was firnamed by his flaring clawbackes, BRITANNICUS, even when the Britans would have elected an Emperour against him. And then it may seeme, was this Statue of his set up, when he prizing himselfe more than a man, proceeded to that folly, that he gave commandment he should be called, The Romane Hercules, Jupiters sonne. For, hee was portrayed in the habite of Hercules, and his right hand armed with a club: under which there lay, as I have heard, such a mangled Inscription as this, broken here and there with void places betweene: the draught whereof was badly taken out, and before I came hither was utterly spoiled.

The statue of Emperour Commodus.

---CAESARI. AUGUSTO
MARCI AURELII FILIO
SEN. IONIS AMPLISSIMI VENTS PIUS.

The

This was to be seene in Nappa, an house built with turrets, and the chiefe seat of the Medcalfs, thought to be at this day the greatest family for multitude of the same name, in all England: for, I have heard that Sir Christopher Medcalf knight, and the top of this kindred being of late high-Sheriffe of the shire, accompanied with three hundred men of the same house all on horsback and in a livery, met and received the Justices of Assizes, and so brought them to Yorke. From hence runneth Ure downe a maine, full of Cressfishes, ever since Sir Christopher Medcalf in our remembrance brought that kinde of fish hither out of the South part of England: and betwene two rockes, whereof the place is named Att-scarr, it runneth head long downe, not far from Bolton, a stately Castle, the ancient seat of the Barons Scropes, and which Richard Lord le Scrope, and Chancellour of England under king Richard the Second built with exceeding great coste: and now bending his course Eastward, cometh to Middleham, the honour, whereof (as wee reade in the Genealogie or Pedegree of the Nevils) Alan Earle of Richmond bestowed upon his younger brother Rinebald, with all the lands, which before their coming belonged to Gilpatrick the Dane. His nephew by his sonne Raulph, named Robert Fitz-Raulph, had all Wensdale also by gift of Conan Earle of Britaine and of Richmond: and at Middleham raised a most strong Castle. His sonne Rannlph erected a little Abbey for Chanons at Coverham (called now short, Corham) in Coverdale: whose sonne Raulph had a daughter named Mary, who being wedded to Robert Lord Nevill with this marriage, translated this very faire and large inheritance as her portion into the family of Nevils. Which Robert Nevill having had many children by his wife, was taken in adultery unknowne; and by the husband of the adulteresse: being for revenge bereft of his genitours, shortly after dyed with extremity of paine.

Then Ure after it hath passed a few miles forward watereth Iorval or Iorvalle Abbey of Cisterians founded first at Fors, and after translated hither by Stephen Earle of Britaine and Richmond, but now wholly ruined; and after that, Masham, which was the possession of the Scropes of Masham; who as they sprung from the stocke of the Scropes of Bolton, so they were by marriages ingrafted againe into the same. On the other side of this River but more inward standeth Snath, the principall house of the Barons Latimer, who derived their noble descent from George Nevill, younger sonne of Raulph Nevill the first Earle of Westmorland, and he received this Title of honour from king Henry the Sixth, when as the ancient house of the Latimers expired in a female, and so by a continued succession they have flourished unto these our daies: when for default of male issue of the last Baron Latimer, that goodly and rich inheritance was divided among his daughters, married into the families of the Perches, Cecils, D'auvers and Cornwallis. Neither are there any other places in this part of the shire worth the naming that Ure runneth by, unlesse it bee Tanfeld, the habitation in times past of the Gernegans knights: from whom it descended to the Marmions: the last of whom left for his heire Amice second wife to John Lord Grey of Rotherfeld: by whom he had two sonnes; John that assumed the surname of Marmion and died issuelesse: and Robert who left behinde him one onely daughter and sole heire Elizabeth, wife to Sir Henry Fitz-Hugh, a noble Baron.

After this, Ure entertaineth the River Swale, so called (as Th. Spot writeth) of his swiftnesse, unlading it selfe, into it with a maine and violent streame: which Swale runneth downe Eastward out of the West Mountaines also, scarce five miles above the head of Ure: a River reputed very sacred amongst the ancient English, for that in it, when the English Saxons first embraced Christianity, there were in one day baptized with festivall joy by Paulinus the Archbishop of Yorke, above tenne thousand men, besides women and little children. This Swale passeth downe along an open Vale of good largeness, which of it is called Swal-dale, having good plenty of grasse, but as great want of wood: first, by Marrick, where there stood an Abbey, built by the Askes men in old time of great name: also by Mash, a place full of lead ore.

Then runneth it through Richmond, the chiefe towne of the Country, having but a small

The great family of the Medcalfs.

Cressfishes.

Bolton Castle.
Barons le Scrope.

Middleham.

Lords of Middleham.

Genealogia
antiqua.
Coverham.

Masham.

Snath.
Barons Latimer.

Tanfeld.

Marmions;
Inq. 6. H. 6.

Swale a sacred River.

See pag. 136.

Marrick.

Richmond.

Gilling.

Ravenstith.
Barons Fitz-Hugh.Catarractionium.
Catarrick;Catarrick bridge.

a small circuit of walles, but yet by reason of the Suburbs lying out in length at three Gates well peopled and frequented. Which, Alan the first Earle thereof built, reposing small trust in Gilling (a place or Manour house of his hard by) to withstand the violence of the Danes and English, whom the Normans had despoiled of their inheritance, and hee adorned it with this name, as one would say, The rich Mount: he fenced it with a wall and a most strong Castle, which being set upon a rocke, from an high looketh downe to Swale, that with a mighty rumbling noise rusheth rather than runneth among the stones. For, the said house or Manour place of Gilling was more holy in regard of devout religion, than sure and strong for any fortification it had, ever since that therein (Beda calleth it Geibling) Oswy King of Northumberland being entertained guest-wife, was by his hoste forelaid and murdered: for the expiation whereof, the said Monastery was built, highly accounted of among our ancessours. More Northward, Ravenstith Castle sheweth it selfe compassed with a good large wall, but now fallen, which was the seat of the Barons named Fitz-Hugh, extracted from the ancient line of the English Nation: who were Lords of the place before the Normans Conquest, and lived in great name unto King Henry the Seventh his daies, enriched with faire possessions by marriage with the heires of the noble houses of Furneaux, and Marmion: which came at last by the females unto the Flemes Lords Dacres in the South, and to the Parrs. Three miles beneath Richmond, Swale runneth by that ancient City which Ptolomee and Antonine call CATARRACTONIUM and CATARRACTON, but Bede Catarractan, and in another place, the Village neere unto Catarracta: whereupon I suppose it had the name of Catarracta, that is, a Flood-fall, or water-fall, considering hard by there is such a fall, but neerer unto Richmond, where, Swale rusheth rather than runneth as I have said with foaming waters, meeting heere and there with rockes, whereby his streame is interrupted and broken. And wherefore should he call it the Towne neere unto Catarracta, if there were not there a water-fall? That it was in those daies a most famous City may be gathered out of Ptolomee: because he tooke there an observation of the heavens position: for, in the second booke and 6. chapter of his Great Cosmographie, he describeth and setteth downe the 24. Parallele, through Catarractonium in Britaine, and maketh it to be distant from the Aequator 57. degrees: yet in his Geographicall Tables he defineth the longest day to be 18. Aequinoctiall houres: so that by his owne calculation and account, it is distant from the Aequator 58. degrees. But at this day, as said that Poet.

Magnum nil nisi Nomen habet.

Nothing hath the fame
But onely a great name.

For it is but a small Village, called Catarrick and Catarrick-bridge; howbeit well knowne both by the situation thereof neere unto the High street way which the Romans made, that here passeth over the river, and also by the heapes of rubbish here and there dispersed, which carry some shew of Antiquity, especially about Ketterickswart and Burghale, somewhat farther off from the Bridge, and more Eastward hard by the river, where we beheld a mighty Mount and foure Bulwarkes raised as it were with exceeding great labour up to a great height. What sorrow it sustained in times past at the Picts and Saxons hands, when with fire and sword they made foule havocke of all the Cities in Britaine, I cannot certainly tell: but it seemeth to have flourished after the Saxon Empire was established: (Although Bede in every place calleth it Vicum, that is, a Village) untill that in the yeere 769. it was set on fire and burnt by Eanred or Beawred the Tyrant, who pitifully mangled the Kingdome of Northumberland. But both he freight after miserably perished by fire; and Catarractonium also beganne to revive againe out of the very ashes: For, in the 77. yeere after King Etheldred solemnized heere his marriage with the daughter of Offa King of the Mercians. Notwithstanding, it continued not long in good and flourishing estate: for, in that confusion immediately ensuing of the Danes who laied all waste, it was quite destroyed.

Swale

Swale driveth on with a long course, not without some lets heere and there in his streame, not farre from Hornby Castle, belonging to the Family of Saint Quintin, which afterwards came to the Cogniers: and seeth nothing besides fresh pastures, country houses, and Villages, unlesse it be Bedal, standing by another River running into him: which Bedal glorieth much of a Baron it had named Sir Brian Fitz-Alan, who flourished in the daies of King Edward the First, in regard of his worth, and his ancient Nobility, as descended from the Earles of Britaine, and Richmond: But for default of heires males the inheritance came by the daughters, to Stapletons, and the Gries of Rotherfeld. By this time Swale having left Richmond-shire behinde, cometh neerer unto Ure or Ouse, where hee visiteth Topcliffe the chiefe seat of the Percies; Mariamus calleth it Taben-clipe; who writeth, that in the yeere of our Redemption 949. the States of Northumberland bound themselves there by an oath of Allegiance unto King Eldred the West-Saxon. And at the very confluence of these Rivers standeth Mitton, a small Village, but remarkable by no small slaughter. For, the Scottish in the yeere 1319. when the pestilence had consumed in manner all the manhood of England, having made an intode thus farre robbing and ransacking all where they came, loone discomfited and put to flight no small power of Priests and country people, which the Archbishop of Yorke had led forth, with banner displayed into the field. But to returne backe againe to our matter. From CATARRACTONIUM, the high street or Port way divided it selfe in twaine: where it taketh Northward, it leadeth by Caldwell and Aldburgh, which betokeneth An old Burrough. By what name it was knowne in ancient times I cannot easily guesse. By the great ruines it should seeme to have beene some notable place: and neere at hand there is seene a ditch by Stannig a little Village, that runneth eight miles in length betweene the River Tees and Swale. Where the said High way goeth Northwestward about twelve miles off you meet with Bowes, which also is written Bowgh; now, a little Village: where in the ages aforegoing the Earles of Richmond had a prety Castelet, a certaine custome called Thorough-toll, and there Fursas, i. power to hang. But that in old time it was called in Antoninus Itinerary, LAVATRÆ and LEVATRÆ, both the account of distance, and the site thereof by the High street, which heere is evidently apparent by the ridge thereof, doe easily prove. But, that which maketh much to confirme the antiquity of it, is an ancient large Stone in the Church, somerimes used by them for an altar stone, with this inscription upon it, to the honour of Hadrian the Emperour.

IMP. CÆSARI DIVI TRAIANI PARTHICI. Max. filio
DIVI NERVÆ NEPOTI TRAIANO. Hadria
NO AUG. PONT. MAXIM.
COŞ. I. — P. P. COH. IIII. F. —
IO. SEV.

This fragment also was there digged up.

NOL. CÆ.
FRONTINUS.
COH. I. THRAC.

Whiles

Whiles under Severus the Emperour, Virius Lupus ruled as Lieutenant General and Proprator of Britaine, the first Cohort of the Thracians lay heere in Garlson: for whose sake, he reedified the Bath or hote house: as appeareth by this inscription, which from hence hath beene translated to Cunnington, unto the house of that right worshipfull and learned Sir Robert Cotton, Knight.

Fortè D^{ne} Fortuna.

DAE. I. FORTUNÆ
VIRIUS LUPUS
LEG. AUG. PR. PR.
BALINEUM VI
IGNIS EXUST-
UM. COH. I. THR-ACUM REST-ITUIT. CURANTE
VAL. FRON-TONE PRÆ-EQ. ALAE VETTO.

Bathes.

BALINEUM OR BATHUM.

Seneca,

Heere must I cause them to forgoe their errour, who by this Inscription falsely copied forth, whiles they read untruly BALINGIUM, for BALINEUM, are of opinion, that the name of the place was BALINGIUM. But if a man looke neerer to the words, hee shall finde it most evidently engraven in the stone BALINEUM: which word they used in old time, as the learned know, for BALNEUM, that is, A BATH, or Hote-house: who also are not ignorant that souldiers, as well as others, used ordinarily to bathe, both for health, and cleanliness: as who every day, before they did eate, in that age were wont to bathe: as also, that such like bathing houses both publique and private were made every where with so great cost and superfluous excesse. That he thought himselfe poore and a very begger, who had not the walls of his bathing house resplendent with great and costly embossed Glasses. In which Bathes men and women both, washed one with another: albeit this had oftentimes beene prohibited as well by the Imperiall lawes, as the Synodall decrees.

In the declining estate of the Roman Empire the Company or Band of the Exploratores, with their Captaine kept their station heere, under the dispose of the General of Britaine: as appeareth for certaine out of the NOTICE of Provinces, where it is named LAVATRES. But whereas such Bathes as these, were called also in Latine Lavacra, some Criticke, no doubt, will pronounce, that this place was named LAVATRÆ in stead of LAVACRA: yet would I rather have it take the name of a little river running neere by, which, as I heare say, is called Laver. As for the later name Bowes, considering the old Towne was heere burnt downe to the ground (as the inhabitants with one voice doe report) I would thinke, it grew upon that occasion. For, that which is burnt with fire the Britans still at this day, doe terme Bæth; and by the same word, the Suburbs of Chester beyond the River Dee, which the Englishmen call Hanbridge, the Britans or Welshmen name Treboeth, that is, The burnt Towne, because in a tumult of the Welshmen it was consumed with fire.

Heere beginneth to rise that high hilly and solitary Country exposed to winde and raine, which because it is stony, is called in our native language Stane more. All heere round about is nothing but a wilde Desert, unless it be a homely Hostelry, or Inne, in the very midst thereof, called The Spittle on Stane more, for to entertaine waifaring persons, and neere to it is a fragment of a Crosse, which wee call Rerecrosse, the Scots Reircrosse, as one would say, The Kings Crosse. Which Crosse, Helior Boetius the Scottish Writer recordeth to have beene erected as a meere stone confining England and Scotland; what time as King William the Conquerour granted

Stane More.

Spittle on Stane More.
Rerecrosse.

granted Cumberland unto the Scots on this condition, that they should hold it of him as his Tenants, and not attempt any thing prejudiciall or hurtfull to the Crowne of England. And a little lower, upon the Romanes high street, there stood a little Fort of the Romans built foure square, which at this day they call Maiden Castle. From whence, as the borderers reported, the said High way went with many windings in and out, as farre as to Caer Vorrán in Northumberland.

There have beene divers Earles of Richmond according as the Princes favour inclined, and those out of divers families: whom I will notwithstanding set downe as exactly and truly as I can, in their right order. The first Earle was out of the house of little Britaine in France, whose descent is confusedly intricate amongst their owne Writers, for that there were two principall Earles at once, one of Hault Britaine, and another of Basse Britaine for many yeeres, and every one of their children had their part in Gavell kinde, and were stiled Earles of Britaine without distinction. But of these the first Earle of Richmond, according to our Writers and Records, was Alane surnamed Feregaunt, that is, The Red, sonne of Heel Earle of Britaine, descended from Hawise great Aunt to William Conquerour, who gave this Country unto him by name of the lands of Earle Badwin in Yorke-shire, and withall bestowed his daughter upon him by whom he had no issue. He built Richmond Castle, as is before specified, to defend himselfe from disinherited and outlawed Englishmen in those parts: and dying left Britaine to his sonne Conan Le Groffe by a second wife. But Alane the Blacke sonne of Endo sonne of Geffrey Earle of Britaine and Hawise aforesaid, succeeded in Richmond, and he having no childe, left it to Stephen his brother. This Stephen begat Alan surnamed Le Savage his sonne and successeur, who assisted king Stephen against Maude the Empreffe in the battaile at Lincolne, and married Bertha one of the heires of Conan Le Groffe Earle of Hault Britaine by whom hee had Conan Le Petit Earle of both Britaines by hereditary right, as well as of Richmond. Hee by the assistance of King Henrie the Second of England disposed Endo Vicount of Perth his Father in Lawe who usurped the Title of Britaine in right of the said Bertha his Wife: and ended his life leaving onely one daughter Constance by Margaret sifter to Malcolme king of the Scots. Geffrey third Sonne to King Henry the Second of England was advanced by his Father to the marriage of the said Constance, whereby hee was Earle of Britaine and Richmond, and begat of her Arthur who succeeded him, and as the French wriote was made away by King Iohn his Uncle. True it is indeede, that for this cause, the French called King Iohn into question, as Duke of Normandy: And notwithstanding he was absent, and not heard once to plead, neither confessing ought, nor convicted, yet by a definitive sentence they condemned him, and awarded from him, Normandy and his hereditary possessions in France: Albeit himselfe had promised, under safe conduct to appeare in personall at Paris; there, to make answer as touching the death of Arthur: who as a Liege subject had bound himselfe by oath to be true and loyall unto him, and yet started backe from his allegiance, raised a rebellion, and was taken prisoner in battaile. At which time this question was debated, whether the Peeres of France might give judgement of a King annoited, and therefore superior: considering that a greater dignity drowne the lesser; and now one and the same person was both King of England and Duke of Normandy. But whither doe I digresse? After Arthur, these succeeded orderly in the Earldome of Richmond. Guy Vicount of Thouers, unto whom the foresaid Constance was secondly married. Ranulph the third, Earle of Chester, the third husband of the said Constance. Peter of Drenx, descended from the bloud royall of France, who wedded Alice the onely daughter of Constance by her husband abovenamed Guy. Then upon dislike of the house of Britaine, Peter of Savoy, Uncle by the mothers side unto Eleonor the wife of king Henry the Third, was made Earle of Richmond, who for feare of the Nobles and Commonis of England that murmured against strangers preferred to honours in England, voluntarily surrendered up this Honour which was restored to Iohn Earle of Britaine, sonne to Peter of Drenx. After whom succeeded Iohn his sonne, the first Duke of Britaine, who

Earles of Richmond.

Gull. Gemis. L. 7
c. 34.

Booke of Richmond Fees.
Register of Swaley.

Overus de S.
Marino is about this time named Earle of Richmond.

Normandy awarded away from the K. K.
of England.

Robert de Arthur was not Earle of Richmond as Prefard writeth, but of Beaumont. The booke of Temares or Fees of Richmond.

who wedded Beatrice daughter to Henry the Third King of England. Whose sonne Arthur was Duke of Britaine, and as some write, Earle of Richmond. Certes, John of Britaine his younger brother, immediately after the fathers death, bare this honourable Title. And he added unto the ancient Armes of Dreux with the Canton of Britaine, the Lions of England in Bordeur. Hee was Guardian of Scotland under King Edward the Second, and there taken and detained prisoner for three yeeres space, and dyed at length without issue, in the Raigne of Edward the Third. And John Duke of Britaine, his nephew, the sonne of Arthur succeeded in this Earldome. After his decease without children, when there was hote contention about the Dutchy of Britaine, betweene John Earle of Montfort of the halfe bloud, and Joane his brothers daughter and heire of the whole bloud marryed to Charles of Blois: King Edward the Third affecting the said John Earle of Montfort, and to strengthen his owne party in France, favoured the Title of the said John Earle of Montfort for that he was a man and neerer in degree, and therefore seemed to have better right and to bee preferred before his Niece (to whom the Parliament of France had adjudged it) and which is more for that he sware fealty to him as King of France, for the Dutchy of Britaine. In these respects he granted the Earldome of Richmond unto the said John untill he might recover his owne possessions in France, which being soone after recovered by aide of the English, the said King bestowed it upon John of Gaunt his sonne. And he afterward surrendred it againe into the King his fathers hands for other possessions. Who forthwith created John Earle of Montfort Duke of Britaine surnamed The valiant Earle of Richmond unto whom hee had given his daughter to wife, that thereby hee might more surely oblige unto him a warlike person, and then ill affected to the French. But in the fourth yeere of Richard the Second he by authority of the Parliament forfeited his Earldome because he adhered unto the French King against England: howbeit hee kept still the bare Title, and left it unto his posterity: But the possession was granted to Dame Isabel of Britaine his sister, and the widdow of Ralph Lord Basset of Draiton. After her decease first Ralph Nevill Earle of Westmorland, had the Castle and Earldome of Richmond for the tearme of his owne life, by the gift of King Henry the Fourth. And after him John Duke of Bedford. Then king Henry the Sixth conferred the Title of Earle of Richmond upon Edmund of Hudham his halfe brother by the mothers side, with this speciall and peculiar prerogative, To take his place in Parliament next unto Dukes. After him succeeded Henry his sonne who was King of England by the name of Henry the Seventh. But during his exile George Duke of Clarence, and Richard Duke of Gloucester received the Signiory of Richmond, but not the Title from their brother king Edward the Fourth. Last of all Henry the base sonne of king Henry the Eighth was by his father invested Duke of Richmond, who departed this life without issue 1535. As for Sir Thomas Grey who was made Baron of Richmond by king Henry the Sixth, was not Lord of this Richmond, but of a place in Bedfordshire called Rugemond, and Richmonds Greis.

Duke of Richmond.

There are contained in this Shire Parishes 104. beside Chappels.

BISHOP PRICKE

DVNELMENSIS

Episcopatus qui comitatus est Palatinus clim pars
BRIGANTVM

Christophorus Saxton descripsit
Wilhelmus Kij. sculpit

BISHOPRICK OF DURHAM.

Durham or Duresme, bordering on the North side upon Yorke-shire is shaped in fashion of a triangle, the utmost angle whereof is made up, toward the West, where the Northren limit and the Spring-head of Tees doe meete. One of the sides which lieth Southward is bounded in with the continued course of the river Tees running downe along by it: the other that looketh Northward, is limited first, with a short line, from the utmost point to the river Derwent, then, with Derwent it selfe, untill it hath taken unto it Chopwell a little river, and afterward with the river Tine. The Sea coast fashioneth out the Base of the Triangle which lieth Eastward, and the German Ocean with a mighty roaring, and forcible violence beatech thereupon.

On that part where it gathereth narrow to the Westerne angle, the fields are naked and barren, the woods very thin, the hills bare without grasse, but not without mynes of iron. As for the Vallies, they are reasonably grassie, and that high hill which I termed the Apennine of England, cutteth in twain this angle. But on the East part or Base of the Triangle, as also on both sides, the ground being well manured, is very fruitful, and the increase yeeldeth good recompence for the husbandmans toile: it is also well garnished with meddowes, pastures, and corn-fields, beset everywhere with townes and yeelding plenty of Sea coale, which in many places we use for fewell. Some will have this coale to be an earthy black Bitumen, others, to be Gagates, and some againe the Lapis Thracius, all which, that great Philosopher in Minerals, George Agricola, hath proved to be one and the same thing. Surely this of ours, is nothing else but Bitumen, or a clammy kind of cley hardned with heat under the earth, and so thoroughly concocted: For, it yeeldeth the smell of Bitumen, and if water bee sprinkled upon it, it burneth more vehemently and the clearer: but, whether it may bee quenched with oile, I have not yet tried. And if the Stone called Obsidianus be in our country, I would take that to bee it, which is found in other places of England, and commonly called Canole cole: For it is hard, bright, light, and somewhat easie to be cloven piece meale into flakes, and being once kindled it burneth very quickly. But let us leave these matters to those that search more deeply into Natures closets.

Obsidianus lapis Canole cole.

All this country with other territories also thereto adjoining the Monasticall writers rearme the Land, or Patrimoine of Saint Cuthbert. For, so they called whatsoever belonged to the Church of Durham, whereof S. Cuthbert was the Patron: who in the primitive state of the English Church, being Bishop of Lindefarn, led all his life in such holinesse and so sincerely, that he was enrolled among the English Saints. Our kings also, and Peeres of the Realme, because they verily perswaded themselves that he was their Tutelar Saint and Protector against the Scots, went not onely in Pilgrimage with devotion to visite his body (which, they beleevved to have continued still found and uncorrupt) but also gave very large possessions to this Church, and endowed the same with many immunities. King Edgfride bestowed upon Cuthbert himselfe whiles he lived, great revenues in the very City of Yorke, and Craike also whereof I spake, and the City Luguballia, as wee reade in the History of Durham. King Aelfred and Guthrum the Dane, whom hee made Lieutenant of Northumberland, gave afterwards all the Lands betwene the Rivers Were and Tine, unto Cuthbert, and to those who ministered in his Church, to have and to hold for ever, as their rightfull Possession. (These bee the very words in effect of an ancient Booke) whence they might have sufficient maintenance to live upon, and not be pinched with poverty: over and besides, they ordeined his Church to bee a safe Sanctuary for all fugitives: that whosoever for any cause fled unto his Corps, should have peaceable being for 37. daies, and the same liberty never for any occasion to bee infringed or denied. Edward and Athelstan, kings;

Saint Cuthberts Patrimony.

Kings; Knute also or CANUTE the Dane, who came on his bare feet to Cuthbert's Tombe, not onely confirmed but enlarged also these liberties. In like manner King William the Conquerour, since whose time it hath alwayes bene deemed a County Palatine: yea and some of the Bishops, as Counts Palatine have engraven in their scales a Knight or man at armes in compleat harnesse sitting upon an horse all trapped, with one hand brandishing a sword, and in the other holding out the Armes of the Bishopricke.

The Bishops also have had their royalties and princely rights, so that the goods of outlawed and attainted persons out of the Kings protection, fell into their hands and not into the Kings: yea and the Commons of that Province standing upon their privileges have refused to serve in warre under the King in Scotland. For, they pleaded (the Story of Duresme shall speake for mee) That they were Halimurke folkes, and held their lands to defend the Corps of Saint Cuthbert; neither ought they to goe out of the precincts of the Bishopricke, namely beyond Tine and Teese, for King or Bishop. But King Edward the First, was the first that abridged them of these liberties. For, when as he interposed himselfe as Arbitratour betweene the Bishop Antony Be, and the Priour who contended most egerly about certaine lands, and they would not stand to his award, Hee seised, as saith mine Authour, the liberty of the Bishopricke into his owne hand, and there were many corners searched, many flaws found, and the Liberty in many points much impaired. Howbeit, the Church afterward recovered her rights, and held them inviolate unto the daies of King Edward the Sixth, unto whom, upon the dissolution of the Bishopricke, the States in Parliament granted all the revenues and liberties thereof. But forthwith Queene Mary by the same authority repealed this Act, and restored all things safe and found unto the Church againe, which it enjoyeth at this day. For, the Bishop, James Pilkinton of late time entred his action against Queene Elizabeth, about the possessions and goods of Charles Nevill Earle of Westmorland and of others that stood attainted for treason in this precinct, because they had most wickedly levied warre against their native Country: and he the said Bishop had followed the suit to a triall, if the authority of Parliament had not interposed and adjudged the same for that time, unto the Queene, because to her exceeding great charges she had delivered both Bishop and Bishopricke from the outrage of the Rebels. But leaving these matters, let us proceed forward to the description of places.

The tiuer that boundeth the South part of this country, is called by Latin writers Teis, and Teesa, commonly Tees: by Polydore Virgill the Italian (whose minde ranne of Atheis in his owne country Italy) without any reason, Atheis. In Prolume is lecmeth to be called, TOTAZIX and TUESIS: and yet I thinke that in him it is removed out of his proper place through the negligence of transcribers. For, considering that he hath placed TUESIS and TINA in the more remote part of Britaine, where the Scots now inhabite; and seeing that this Region is enclosed within Tees and Tine; If I durst, as a Criticke, correct that ancient Geographer, I would recall them home againe hither into their owne places, though they have been long displaced, and that with the Scots good leave I hope, who have no Rivers upon which they can truly father these names. TEES springeth out of that stony country called Stainmore, and carrying with him away in his chanell along, many brookes and becks on each side, and running through rocks (out of which at Egleston, where there is a marble Quarry, and where Conan Earle of Britaine, and Richmond founded a small Abbey) first beatech upon Bernard Castle, built and so named by Bernard Balliol the great grandfathers father of John Balliol King of the Scots. But this John Balliol, whom King Edward the First had declared King of Scotland, lost the same with other his possessions, because he had broken his alleageance which he swore unto Edward. At which time the King being highly displeased with Antony Bishop of Durham, tooke this Castle (as witnesseth the booke of Duresme) with the apperinenes thereto from him, and conferred the same upon the Earle of Warwicke: as Herkes also and Hermes, which hee gave unto Robert Clifford: Kewerston also, which hee bestowed upon Geffrey of Herpole, which

The River
Teise, or Teis.

the Bishop had by the forfeiture of John Balliol, Robert Bruce, and Christopher Seton. But a few yeeres after, Lewis Beaumont the Bishop, a man royally descended, but altogether unlettered, brought his action for this Castle and the rest of those possessions, and obtained his suite, by verue of judgement given in this tenour, The Bishop of Durham ought to have the forfeiture of Warres within the Liberties of his Bishopricke, as the King hath it without. Hard by it is Strettham scene, where dwelt for a long time the worshipfull family of the Bowes, Knights: who from time to time in the greatest troubles have performed passing good service to Prince and Country: and derive their pedigree from W. de Bowes, unto whom, as I have read, Alanus Niger Earle of Britaine and Richmond granted, *that hee might give for his Armes, The * Scutcheon of * Britaine with three bent Bowes therein.*

Sir: rtham;
Bowes.

Not full five miles from hence, standeth somewhat farther from Tees banke Staindrop, which also is called Stainthorpe, that is, Stony Village, a little Mercate Towne, where there was a Collegiat Church, founded by the Nevills, and was their Buriall-place. Neere unto it is Raby, which Cnut or Canute the Danish King gave freely unto the Church of Durham together with the land lying round about it, and Stainthorpe, to be held for ever. Since which time, as mine Authour informeth mee, The Family of the Nevills, or De nova villa, held Raby of the Church, paying yearly for it foure pounds and a Stagge. These Nevills deduce their Descent from Walsbeuf Earle of Northumberland, out of whose posterity, when Robert the sonne of Mal-bred, Lord of Raby had married the daughter of Geffrey Nevill the Norman (whose Grandfire Gilbert Nevill is reported to have bene Admittall to King William the Conquerour) their succeeding Progeny tooke unto them the name of Nevilles, and grew up into a most numerous honourable, and mighty house: who erected heere a great and spacious Castle, which was the first and principall seate. These two places Stainthorpe and Raby are severed one from another onely by a little rill which after some few miles runneth into Tees, neere unto Selaby, where now is the habitation of the Brakenburies, a Family of right good note both in regard of their owne Antiquity, as also for their marriages contracted with the heires of Demton and of Wickliff.

Raby Castle;

The family of the Nevils.
See in West
morland.

Selaby;

Tees passing on from thence by Sockburne, the dwelling house of the ancient and noble Family of the Coigniers, out of which were the Barons Coigniers of Hornby (whose inheritance much bettered by marching in marriage with the heires of the Lord Darcy of Metnill, and of William Nevill Earle of Kent, and Lord of Fauconberg is descended from them in the memory of our fathers, to the Atherstons and the Darcies) holdeth his course neere unto Derlington, a Mercate Towne of good resort, which Seir, an English Saxon the sonne of Ulf, having obtained leave of King Ethelred gave unto the Church of Durham: and Hugh Pudsey adorned it with a faire Church and other edifices.

Barons Coig-
niers.

Derlington;

In this Towne field are three pittes of a wonderfull depth, the common people tearmethem Hell-Kettles, because the water in them by the Antiperistasis or reverboration of the cold aire striking thereupon, waxeth hote. The wiser sort and men of better judgement doe thinke, they came by the sinking downe of the ground swallowed up in some earth-quake, and that by a good probable reason. For, thus wereade in the Chronicles of Tinmouth. In the yeere of our Lord 1179. on Christmas day, at Oxenhall in the Territory of Derlington, within the Bishopricke of Durham, the ground heaved it selfe up aloft like unto an high Towre, and so continued all that day as it were unmoveable, untill the evening: and then, fell with so horrible a noise, that it made all the neighbour dwellers afraide: and the earth swallowed it up and made in the same place a deepe pit, which is there to bee scene for a testimony, unto this day. That these Pittes have passages under the ground Bishop Cuthbert Townsall first observed, by finding that Goole in the River Tees, which he for the better triall and experience of these Pitts, had marked and let downe into them.

Hell Kettles;
Deepe pits.

Earth-quake.

Beyond Derlington, Tees hath no Townes of any great account standing upon it,

Certaine Gentlemen called Sur,

Teis, upon Teis, sometime flourished here.

but gliding along the skirtes of greene fields, and by country Villages, winding in and out as he passeth, at length dischargeth himselfe at a large mouth into the Ocean, whence the bafe or bothom of the Triangle aforesaid towards the Sea beginneth.

Gretham.

From hence the shore coasteth Northward, holding on entire still, save that it is interrupted with one or two little Brookes and no more, neere unto Gretham, where Robert Bishop of Durham having the Manour given freely unto him by Sir Peter de Montfort, founded a goodly Hospitall. Next unto it is Claxton, which gave name unto a Family of good and ancient note, in this Tract: whereof, I have bene the more willing to make mention, because of the same house was T. Claxton, an affectionate lover of venerable Antiquity. From thence, the shore shooteth forth into the Sea with one onely Promontory scarce seven miles above Tees mouth, on which standeth very commodiously Hartlepoole, a good Towne of trade, and a safe harbour for shipping. Bede seemeth to call it Heorou, which Henry of Huntingdon, interpreteth The Haris or Stagges Island, where hee writeth, that Hein a religious woman founded a Monastery in times past. If Heorten bee not rather the name of that little Territory, which the Booke of Duresme seemeth to imple and in another place calleth Heortnesse, because it lyeth out somewhat farre into the Sea. From this for fiftene miles together the shore being in no place broken off, but heere and there embrodered as it were and garnished with Townes, smileth pleasantly upon those that saile that way, untill it openeth it selfe to make roome for the River Vesdra; for, so Ptolomee calleth that, which Bede nameth Wirus, the Saxons peop; and we Were. This river first groweth into one out of three riverets Burden-bop, Wel-bop, and Kel-bop, in the utmost part of this Country Westward: which when they are joynd in one chanell is called by one name Were, and speedeth into the East, by vast moores and heathes, by great Parkes of the Bishops, and by Witton a little Castle or pile belonging to the Lords Evers, who are Noblemen in this Country of great antiquity, as descended from the Lords of Clavering and Warkworth, as also from the Vesfyes and the Attons, by Daughters: renowned for their martiall prowesse, which Scotland may well witnesse. For, King Edward the First, gave unto them for their valiant service Kestnes a little Towne in Scotland, and King Henry the Eighth within our fathers remembrance honoured them in that respect with the Title of Barons.

A Promontory
in our language is called Nefle.

The river Ves-dra, or Were.

Witton.
Barons Evers, or D'Eure.

Then Were after a few miles taketh into him from the South Gaunlesse a Riveret, where, at the very meeting of them both together, there standeth upon an high hill Ankland so called of Okes (like as Saron in Greece) which sheweth an house of the Bishops stately built with Turrets by Antony Bec, and withall a beautifull Bridge, made by Walter Skirlaw a Bishop of Durham about the yeere 1400. who also enlarged this house and built the Bridge over Tees at Tare. From hence Wartuneth his course Northward, that he might water this shire the longer, and then forthwith looketh up to the remaines of an ancient City not now a dying, but dead many yeeres agoe, standing on the brow of an hill: which Antonine the Emperour called VINOVIUM, Ptolomee, BINOVIUM, in whom it is so thrust out of his owne place, and set as it were in another Climate, that it would for ever have lien hid, had not Antonine pointed at it with his finger. Wee call it at this day Bincheffer, and it bath in it a very few houses: yet it is very well knowne to them that dwell thereabout, both by reason of the heapes of rubbish, and the reliques of walles yet to be seene, as also for peeces of Romane Coine often digged up there, which they call Bincheffer Penies, yea and for the Inscriptions of the Romanes, amongst which I happened of late when I was there upon an Altar with this Inscription.

Auk-land.

Vinovium.

Bincheffer.

DE

As concerning the Mother Goddesses.
See in Lancashire.

Anna Christi.
236.
Votum solvit, li-
ben. merita i.
Paid his vow willingly and duly.

Another stone also was heere lately gotten out of the ground, but defaced with voide places, where the letters were worne out: which notwithstanding, if one beheld it wishly, seemeth to shew this Inscription.

Neither have I read any thing else of it, but that an old booke maketh mention, how the Earles of Northumberland, long since plucked away this with other Villages from the Church, what time as that accursed and unsatiable hunger after Gold swallowed up also the sacred patrimony of the Church.

On the other banke of Were, among the mounting Hilles appeareth Bransfeib Castle, which the Bulmers built, and the daughter of Sir Bertram Bulmer coupled in marriage unto Geffrey Nevill, adjoynd with other great Possessions unto the Family of the Nevills. Within a while after Were runneth downe much troubled and hindered in his Course with many great Stones apparent above the water, which unlesse the River doe rise and swell with great store of raine, are never over covered: and upon which (a thing that happeneth not elsewhere) if yee powre water, and temper it a little with them, it sucketh in a saltish quality. Nay, that which more is, at Butterby a little Village, when the River in Summer time is very ebbe and shallow, there issueth out of those stones a certaine salt reddish water, which by the heat of the Sunne waxeth so white, and withall groweth to a thicke substance, that the people dwelling thereby gather from hence salt sufficient, ly for their use.

Bransfeib
Castle.

Salt stones.

And now the River, as though it purposed to make an Island, compasseth almost onevery side the chiefe City of this Province standing on an hill, whence the Saxons gave it the name Dunholm. For, as you may gather out of Bede, they called an hill Dun, and a river Island Holme. Heereof, the Latine Writers have made DUNELMUM, the Normans Duresme, but the common people most corruptly name it Durham. It is seated on high, and passing strongly withall, yet taketh it up no great circuit of ground: shaped in forme, as one would say, of an egge, environed on every side save on the North with the River, and fortified with a wall. Toward the South side almost, whereas the River fetcheth it selfe about, standeth the Cathedral Church aloft, making a solemne and a sightly shew with an high Towre in the midst and two Spires at the West end.

Dunelmus.
Durham, or Duresme.

In the midst there is a Castle placed, as it were betweene two stone bridges over the river, the one Eastward, the other Westward. From the Castle Northward is seene a spacious Mercate-place and Saint Nicholas Church: from whence there runneth

runneth out a great length North-East a Suburbe compassed on two sides the River: like as others on both sides beyond the River, which leade unto the Bridges, and euery of them have their severall Churches. The originall of this City is of no great Antiquity. For, when the distressed Monkes of Lindisfarn driven hither, and thither by the Danes Warres, wandered up and downe without any certaine place of abode with the corps of Saint Cuthbert, at length heere they settled themselves by divine direction, about the yeere of our Salvation 995. But heere the whole matter out of mine Authour of Durham. All the people accompanying the corps of that most holy Father Cuthbert came into Dunholme, a place verily strong of it selfe by nature, but not easily to bee inhabited, as being wholly beset on every side with a most thicke Wood: onely in the midst was a little Plaine, which was wont to bee tilled and sowed with Corne: where Bishop Aldwin built afterwards a faire Church of stone. The foresaid Prelate therefore, through the helpe of all the people and the assistance of Uthred Earle of Northumberland, stocked up all the Wood and in short time made the whole place habitable. To conclude, the people generally from the River Coqued as farre as to Tees, came right willingly, as well to this worke, as after that to build a Church: and untill it was finished ceased not to follow that businesse devoutly. Wherefore after the Wood was quite grubd up, and every one had their mansion places assigned out by lot, The said Bishop in a fervent love to Christ and Saint Cuthbert, upon an honest and godly intent beganne (no small peece of worke) to build a Church, and endeavoured by all meanes to finish the same. Thus saie mine Authour.

Not many yeeres after, those Englishmen who could not endure the insolent command of the Normans, presuming upon the naturall strength of the place, chose it for their chiefe Hold and feat of resistance, yea and from thence troubled the Conquerour not a little. For, William Gemeticensis writeth thus. They went into a part of the Country which for waters and woods was inaccessible, raising a Castle with a most strong trench and rampier, which they called Dunholme: out of which making many roads sundry waies, for a certaine space they kept themselves close there, waiting for the coming of Swene King of the Danes. But when that fell not out according to their expectation, they provided for themselves by flight: and King William comming to Durham, granted many priviledges for establishing the liberty of the Church, and built the Castle whereof I spake, on the highest part of the hill, which afterwards became the Bishops house: and the keyes thereof when the Bishopricke was voide, were wont by an ancient custome to be hanged upon Saint Cuthberts shrine.

When this Castle was once built, William of Malmesbury who lived about that time, describeth this City in these words. Durham is a pretty hill rising by little and little from one plaine of the Valley with a gentle ascent, untill it come to bee a mount: and although by reason of the rough and steepe situation of the Rockes, there is no way for the enemy to enter it; yet they of these daies have erected a Castle upon the hill. At the very foot and bottom of the Castle, runneth a River, wherein is great store of fish, but of Salmon especially. At the same time well neere (as that ancient Booke reporteth) William de Careleph the Bishop, who gathered againe the disperfed Monkes hither (for, the Danes in every place had overthrowne their Cloistures) pulled downe that Church which Aldwin had formerly built, and beganne the foundation of another of a fairer worke, which his successour Ralph finished. And after that, Nicholas Ferubam Bishop, and Thomas Mescomb Prior, adjoyned a new Fabrique or frame unto it, in the yeere of Christ 1242. And a good while after, W. Skirlaw the Bishop, built at the West end of the Church a faire peece of worke which they call Gallilee, whereinto hee translated the marble Tombe of Venerable Bede. In which place Hugh Pudsey, beganne in times past an house, wherein (I use the words of an ancient Booke) women might lawfully enter, that whereas they had not corporall acceffe unto the more secret holy places, yet they might have some comfort by the beholding of the holy mysteries.

But, that Ralph the Bishop aforesaid, as our Historian writeth, reduced the place betwene the Church and the Castle, which had beene taken up with many dwelling houses, Gallilee.

For no woman might enter in to Durham Church.

into a plaine and open ground; for feare least either any annoyance by filth, or dangers by fire, might come neere unto the Church. And all be it the City was strong enough by the naturall site, yet hee made it more strong, and stately with a Wall, reaching in length from the Chancell of the Church, unto the Keepe and Towre of the Castle: Which wall now by little and little giveth place unto time, and never that I could heare, suffered any assault of enemy.

For, when David Brus, King of Scots, had forraied the Country with fire and sword, as farre as to Beasparke or Beereparke, which is a Parke neere unto the City, whiles King Edward the Third besieged Calais, Henry Percy and William Zouch Archbishop of Yorke, with their Companies of men mustered up in haste, encountered the Scots, and so courageously charged them, that having taken the King prisoner they slew the most of the first and second battaile, and put the third to a fearefull flight: neither staid they at most steepe and cumberfome places, untill they recovered their owne Holds. This is that famous Battaille, which our people call The Battaille at Nevils Crosse. For, the chieftest of the Scottish Nobility being slaine, and the King taken prisoner at this field, they were enforced to yeeld much ground within their Confinnes, yea and to render many Castles. But this may suffice as touching Durham: which I will take my leave of, if you thinke good, with a Discription of Neebam, and an Hexastichen of John Jonston.

Beere-parke.
1346.

Battaille of Nevils Crosse.

*Arte, siquæ loci munita Dunelmia salve,
Qua flores sancta religionis apex.*

*VEDRA ruens rapidis modo cursibus, agmine leni, Séquæ minor celebres suspicit urbe viros,
Quos dedit ipsa olim, quorum & tegit ossa sepulta;
Magnus ubi sacro marmore BEDA cubat.
Se jactant alia vel religione, vel armis;
Hæc armis cluit, hæc religione potens.*

Durham by art and site of place well fenced now farewell,
Where for devout Religion the Mitre doth excell.

The River Were that ranne most swift ere while, with streame now sofe
And chanell lesse, to famous men in towne lookes up aloft;
Whom once it bred: and of whose bones in grave it is posselt:
Where under sacred marble stone, Great Bede now doth rest.
Of Armes or of Religion, may other boast, I grant:
For Armes and for Religion both, this City makes her vaunt.

Concerning the Monkes that were cast out at the suppression of the Abbaies, the twelve Prebendaries and two Arch-Deacons placed in this Church, and the Priours name changed into the Dignity of a Deane, I neede not to say any thing: for, they are yet in fresh memory. And unwilling I am to remember how this Bishopricke was dissolved by a private Statute, and all the possessions thereof given to Edward the Sixth, when private greedinesse edged by Church-men did grinde the Church, and withdrew much from God, wherewith Christian Piety had formerly honoured God. But Queene Mary repealed that Statute and restored the said Bishopricke with all the Possessions, and Franchises thereof, that God might enjoy his owne. The Longitude of this City is 22. Degrees. The Latitude 54. Degrees and 57. minutes.

Beneath Durham, that I may not overpasse it, standeth Eastward a very faire Hospitall, which Hugh Pudsey that most wealthy Bishop, and Earle of Northumberland, so long as it was, Being very indulgently compassionate to Lepres (as Neubrigenensis writeth) built with coffe (I must needs say profuse enough) but in some sort not so beneit: as who layed no small deall of other mens right (so great was his power) upon this devotion, whiles hee thought much to disburse sufficient of his owne. Howbeit hee assigned unto it revenewes to maintaine threecore and five Lepres, besides Masse Priests.

Shirburne Hospital.

Finchdale.

From Durham Were carrieth his streame Northward with a more direct course, by Finchdale, where, in the Reigne of King Henry the Second Goodrick a man of the ancient Christian simplicity, and austerity wholly devoted to the service of God, led a solitary life and ended his daies: being buried in the same place, wherein, as that William of Newbarrow saith, hee was wont either to lye prostrate whiles he prayed, or to lay him downe when he was sicke. Who with this his devout simplicity, drew men into so great an admiration of him, that R. brother unto that rich Bishop Hugh Pudsey built a Chappell in memoriall of him.

Lumley.
Barons Lum-
ley.

From thence Were passeth by Lumley Castle standing within a Parke, the ancient seat of the Lumleys, who descended from Liulph, a man in this tract of right great Nobility in the time of King Edward the Confessour, who married Aldgitha the daughter of Aldred Earle of Northumberland. Of these Lumleys, Marmaduke assumed unto him his mothers Coate of Armes (in whose right hee was seized of a goodly inheritance of the Thwengs) namely, Argent of Fesse Gules betweene three Poppinjaes Vert, whereas the Lumleys before time had borne for their Armes, Six Poppinjaes Argent, in Gules. For she was the eldest daughter of Sir Marmaduke Thweng Lord of Kilton, and one of the heires of Thomas Thweng her brother. But Ralph sonne to the said Marmaduke was the first Baron Lumley, created by King Richard the Second: which honour John the ninth from him enjoyed in our daies a man most honourable for all the ornaments of true Nobility.

Chester upon the street
Condercum.

Just over against this place, not farre from the other banke of the River standeth Chester upon the Street, as one would say, the Castle or little City by the Port way side: the Saxons called it Conceyter: whereupon, I would deeme it to be CONDERCUM, in which as the booke of Notices recordeth, the first wing of the Assares, in the Romanes time kept station and lay in Garison, within the Line or precinct (as that booke saith) of the WALL. For it is but a few miles distant from that famous WALL, whereof I am to speake heereafter. The Bishops of Lindisfarne lived obscurely heere with the corps of Saint Cuthbert, whiles the raging stormes of the Danes were up, for the space of an hundred and thirteene yeeres. In memory whereof, when Egelricke Bishop of Durham layed the foundation of a new Church in that place, he found such a mighty masse of money buried within the ground, as is thought by the Romans, that wallowing now in wealth, he gave over his Bishopricke: and being returned to Peterborough whereof hee had bene Abbot before, made causes through the Fennes and raised other Workes, not without exceeding great charges.

And a long time after Anthony Bec, Bishop of Durham and Patriarch of Jerusalem erected heere a Collegiat Church, a Deane, and seven Prebends. In which Church, the Lord Lumley above said placed and ranged in goodly order the Monuments of his Ancestours in a continued line of succession even from Liulph unto these our daies; which he had either gotten together out of Monasteries that were subverted, or caused to bee made a new. And further within, almost in the midst of the Triangle, there is another little Village also knowne of late by reason of the College of a Deane and Prebendaries founded by that Antony Bec at Lanchester, which I once thought to have bene LONGOVICUM a station of the Romanes.

Hilton Castle.

But let us returne unto Were, which now at length turneth his course Eastward, and running beside Hilton a Castle of the Hiltons, a Family of ancient Gentry; venterh his waters with a vast mouth into the sea at Wiran-muth, as Bede termeth it, now named Monkes Were-mouth, because it belonged to the Monkes. Touching which mouth or out-let, thus writeth William of Malmesbury. This Were where hee entereth into the Sea, entertaineth Shippes brought in with a faire Gale of Wind, within the gentle and quiet bosome of his Out-let. Both the Bankes whereof, Benedict

A Bishop beautified with Churches and built Abbaies there, one in the name of Saint Peter and the other of Saint Paul. The painfull industry of this man hee will wonder at, who shall reade his life; for that hee brought hither great store of bookes, and was the first man that ever procured Masons and Glasiers for windowes to come into England.

Glasiers first in England.

Five miles higher, the River Tine doth also unlade it selfe, which together with Derwent for a good way lineth out (as it were) the North side of this Country. Upon Derwent which hath his spring head neere unto the top of the Triangle, there standeth nothing of note, unlesse it bee a little Village which now they call Ebbe-ster, of Ebba a virgin of the bloud royall of the Northumbers, of whom there went so great a name and opinion for her sanctimony and devotion about the yeere 630. that being canonized among the Saints, she hath many Churches in this Island dedicated unto her, which the common sort usually call Saint Tabbs for Saint Ebbes.

Ebchester.
Saint Ebba.

Saint Tabbs.

But by Tine there is situate a memorable Towne called Gateshead in the English Saxon tongue Gaetphepes, and by Latin Historians, Capra Caput, which is the same, as one would say, Goates head: and is as it were the Suburbs of Newcastle, standing on the hether side of Tine, whereunto also it was annexed by King Edward the Sixth, when the Bishopricke was dissolved. But Queene Mary soone after restored it againe unto the Church. The common people thinke it is farre more ancient than Newcastle it selfe. And if I also should say, that this and Newcastle together (for one Towne it may seeme in old time to have bene, divided onely by the River) was that Frontier Station, which under the later Emperours they called GABRO-SENTUM, and was kept by the second Band of the Thracians, and that it retained still the ancient name in sense and signification, whereas, Newcastle hath gotten once or twice a new name, I hope my opinion would be nothing dissonant from the truth: For, Gaffr in the British tongue signifieth a Goat, and Han in ordinary speech is used for Pen, which betokeneth an Head: and in the very same signification our old Historiographers tearme it in Latine Capra Caput, like as Brandisium, in the Massians Language tooke that name, from a Stagges head. I would thinke that this name was given unto this place, by occasion of some Inne that had a Goats head for the signe: even as Gallus Gallinaceus, that is, The Honscocke, Tres Sorores, that is, Three sisters, and Pirum, that is, The Pearre, Places, Africke, Spaine, and Italie, whereof Antonine maketh mention: which, of such signes (as some learned men suppose) tooke their names. And our Historians all with one accord, name this Towne Capra Caput; when they record, that Walcher Bishop of Durham, whom King William the First had made Governour over Northumberland with the authority of an Earle, was slaine in this place by the furious multitude, for misgoverning the Country.

Beneath this Towne, almost at the very mouth of Tine, is to be seene Girwy, now Tarrow, the native soile of venerable Bede, where also in ancient times flourished a little Monastery: The Founder whereof and the time of the foundation, this inscription sheweth, which is yet extant in the Church wall.

Girwy.
Tarrow.
Bede.

These greater Churches when the Saving light of Christ shone upon the world (let it not seeme impertinent to note so much by occasion of the word Basilica) were termed BASILICAE, for that the Basilica of the Gentiles which were large and spacious Halls, wherein Magistrates sat in judgement and ministred Justice, were converted into Christian Churches. Whence Ausonius wrote thus, Basilica olim negotijs is plena, &c. The Basilica [or Hall of Justice] in times past full of businesse, is now ^A full of Prayers and vows: or else because they were built in forme somewhat long, in manner of those Basilicae.

Saint Bede.

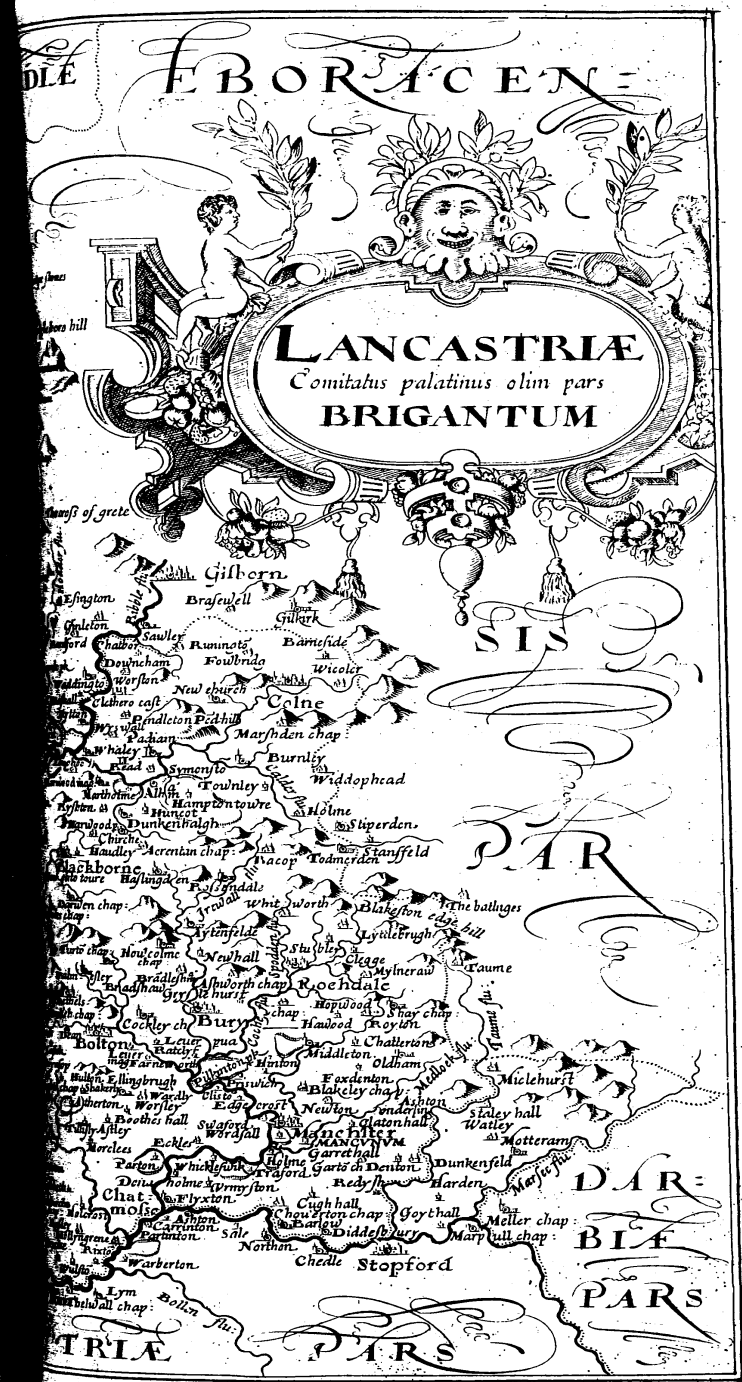

Heere our Bede, the singular glory and ornament of England, who for his Piety and learning got the surname of VENERABILIS, bestowed all diligence, as himselfe saith, in meditation of the Scriptures, and amid the most boisterous billows and surging waves of Barbarisme wrote many most learned Volumes. When hee was once dead, there was buried with him, as William of Malmesbury saith, all the knowledge, well neere of Arts and Monuments, untill our time. For, when there succeeded ever one more lazie than another, the heat of good studies was abated, and cooled through the whole Land. And the Danes for their part, plagued this holy place in such wise, that shortly after the Conquest, when some in these Countries went in hand to reestablish the Monkes againe, and Walcher the Bishop assigned this place for them; Onely walles, as saith mine Authour, were standing without any roose, and it scarcely retained any signe of the ancient dignity: howbeit for all that, they framing a roose over head of rough beech wood such as they could get, and thatching it with straw, beganne to celebrate Divine Service therein.

Bishops of Durham.

I neede not to make a Catalogue of the Bishops of Durham who are reputed Count-Palatines. Let it suffice to intimate thus much, that since the first time, a See was heere erected, in the yere of our Redemption 995. there have sitten in it 35. Bishops unto our daies. Of which these were most eminent: Hugh Pudsey nobly descended, and allyed to King Stephen: who for a thousand and thirteene pounds presently disbursed, purchased of King Richard the First, the Countrey of Northumberland for his life; and Sashbrege, to his successours for ever, and built that goodly Hospitall whereof I spake: betweene whom and the Archbishop there arose a most bitter controversie, Whiles (as he writeth of them) hic praeesse, ille non subesse, & neuter prodesse contenderet, that is, One would bee superiour, the other would not bee inferiour, and neither of them would doe any good. Antony Bec, Patriarch of Jerusalem, who spent infinite summes of money, upon vast buildings, and glorious furniture. Thomas Wolsey Cardinall, who in his high prosperity wanted nothing but moderation (but his History is sufficiently knowne.) And Cuthbert Tunstall, who dyed in our time, for singular knowledge in the best Sciences, sincere holinesse of life, and great wisdom approved in domesticall, and forraigne employments, was (without offence bee it spoken) equivalent to them all, and a singular Ornament to his native Countrie. ^D

See the Earles of Northumberland.

In this Province and in Northumberland beside very many Chappels, are counted Parish Churches 118.

LANCASHIRE.

Must now turne the course of my journey another way, unto the rest of the BRIGANTES, who were planted on the farther side of the Hilles toward the Irish Sea: and first unto LANCA-SHIRE, which I goe unto (God speede mee well) after a sort somewhat against my will: For I feare me that I shall not satisfie my selfe, and much lesse the Reader. For very few things fell out to my desire, when I trauailed over the greatest part thereof, the old names in every place have beene so worne out by the continuall assault of Time. But least I might bee thought to neglect the hearty good Lanca-shire men, I will proceed, in hope that Gods assistance, which hitherto hath beene favourable unto me, will not now faile me.

Under those mounraines, which (as I have often said heeretofore) shoote along through the middle of England, and interpose themselves as umpires and Bounders betweene diuers shires, Lanca-shire lyeth toward the West, in the English Saxon tongue Loncar-cep-pepe, commonly termed Lonka-shire, Lanca-shire, and The County Palatine of Lancaster, because it is notably knowne by the title of a County Palatine. It is so enclosed betweene Torke-shire on the East side, and the Irish sea on the West, that on the South side where it boundeth upon Cheshire it is broader, and by little and little the more Northward it goeth, where it confineth upon Westmberland, the narrower it groweth. And there, by an Arme of the sea insinuating it selfe, is interrupted, and hath a good part of it which butteth upon Cumberland, beyond the said Arme.

Where the ground is plaine and champion, it yeeldeth good store of Barly and Wheat: that which lieth at the botom of the hilles, is better for Otes: The soile e-very where is meetely good and tolerable, unlesse it be in certaine moist places and unwholsome called Mosses, which notwithstanding make amends for these their discommodities, with more plentifull commodities. For, if their upper coate be pared away, they yeeld certaine unctuous or fattish * Turffes for fewell, and some times under-ground trees, or which have lien a long time buried there. Underneath also in diuers places they affoord abundance of marle, which seruerh in stead of mucke to enrich their grounds. Whereby, the soile that in mans opinion was held most unapt to beare Corne, beginneth now to be so kinde and arable, that it may be justly thought, mens idlencesse in times past was greater, than any naturall barrainesse of the soile. But a man may judge of the goodnesse of the soile, partly by the constitution and complexion of the Inhabitants, who are to see to, passing faire and beautiful, and in part, if you please, by the Cattalle. For, in their Kine and Oxen which have goodly heads and faire spread hornes, and are in body well proportionate with all, you shall finde in manner no one point wanting, that Mago the Carthaginian doth require, as Calamella specifeth out of him.

On the South part, it is separated from Cheshire with the River Mersey which springing forth of the midland hilles, having passed a little from his head, becometh a bound to distinguish the Shires, and with a slow current runneth Westward, calling as it were, other rivers (to use the words of the Poet) into his skie coloured and scarre lappe, and forthwith gladly biddeth welcome unto Irwel from the North, which river bringeth along with him all the rivers of this Easterne part. Among these, Roch is of greatest name, which hath standing upon it in the Vale, Rochdale a Mercate Towne well frequented, like as Irwel it selfe hath situate upon it Bury a Mercate Towne nothing inferiour to the other: and hard by, whiles I carefully sought for C O C K L E Y, mentioned by Antonine the Emperour, I saw Cockley, a Chapell built of timber, beset round about with trees: Also Turton Chapell among very steepe downfalls, and overgrowne unpleasant places: Turton Towre, and Emweissell a proper

Mosses,

* cessiter,

Lanca-shire beuses,

Roch-dale,

Cockley,

per faire house : which had in times past Gentlemen of that name, as Turtus is the seate at this day of the right ancient family of Orell. But, where Irke and Irwell meet together, on the left hand banke raised of a reddish kinde of stone, scarce three miles from Mersey, flourished that Towne of right great antiquity which we now call Manchester, and Antonine the Emperour called MANCUNIVM, and MANUCIVM, according to the variety of the Copies. This retaining the first part of his ancient name, farre excelleth the Townes lying round about it, for the beautifull shew it carrieth, for resort unto it, and for clothing : in regard also of the Mercate-place, the faire Church, and College, founded by Thomas Lord De-la-ware, a Priest (the last heire male of his Family) and summoned to the Parliament among the Lords Temporall by the name of Magister Thomas de-la-ware. For he descended from the Greccies, who were the ancient Lords of this Towne, and by Isidore filter of the said Sir Thomas, it came to Wells now Lords De-la-ware. But, in the foregoing age, this Towne was of farre greater account, both for certaine wollen clothes there wrought and in great request commonly called Manchester Cottons, and also for the liberty of a Sanctuary, which under King Henry the Eighth, was by Parliamentary authority, translated to Chester. In a Parke of the Earle of Derbies neere adjoining, called Alparke, where the Brooke Medlocke entrench into Irwell, I saw the plot and ground-work of an ancient Fortresse built foure square, commonly called Mancastle : which I will not in any wise say, was that ancient MANCUNIVM, it is contained in so narrow a peece of ground, but rather the Fort of MANCUNIVM, and station of the Romanes where they kept watch and ward : at which I saw this ancient Inscription in a long stone to the memory of Candidus a Centurion.

As for this other, John Dee that most famous Mathematician, and Warden of Manchester College, who had a fight of the same heere, copied it out for me.

Both which may seeme erected in honour of those Centurions, for their loyalty and honesty so many yeeres approved.

In the yeere of our Salvation 920. King Edward the Elder, as Marianus writeth, sent an Army of Mercians into Northumberland, To reedifie the City of Manchester, and to place a Garison there (for it belonged formerly unto the Kings of Northumberland) and seemeth to have bene quite destroyed in the Danish warre : against whom, because the inhabitants had borne themselves as valiant men, they will have their towne to be called Manchester, that is, as they expound it, The City of Men, and in this conceit which implieth their owne commendation, they wonderfully please and and flatter themselves. But full little know the good honest men, that MANCUNIVM was the name of it in the Britans time, so that the Etymologie thereof, out of our English tongue, can by no meanes seeme probable. I for my part therefore would derive it rather from Main a British word which signifieth a Stone : For, upon a stony hill it is seated, and beneath the very Towne, at Colyhurst, there are very good and famous quarries of stone.

But, to returne againe. Mersey now by this time carrying a fuller streame by reason of Irwell consociating with him, holdeth on in his journey toward the Ocean, by Trafford, from whence the Traffords a Family of great good note tooke their name as they had their habitation : also by Chatmoss, a low mossie ground, lying a great way in length and bredth : a good part whereof, the Brookes swelling high within our fathers remembrance carried quite away with them not without much danger : Whereby, the Rivers were corrupted, and a number of fresh fish perished. In which place now lyeth a Vale somewhat low, watered with a little Brooke, and trees have bene discovered lying along. So that it may be thought, when the ground lay neglected, and the chanel were not skoured in those open and flat Vallies for riverets and Brookes to passe away, but the water-lades stopped up either through negligence, or depopulation : that then all the grounds that lay lower than others, became such boggy plots, as we call Mosses, or else standing Meeres. Which if it bee true, wee neede not mervaille that so many trees in the like places every where throughout England (but in this shire especially) lie overwhelmed, and as it were, buried. For, when their rootes were loosened through over much moisture, the trees could not chuse but fall, and in such soft ground sinke and bee quite swallowed up. They that dwell thereabouts, assay and try with poles and spits, where they lie hidden, and when they light upon them marke the place, digge them out, and use them for fire wood : For they burne cleere and give light, as well as torch wood, which haply is by reason of a bituminous and clammy fat earth wherein they lye : whence the common sort take them for Firres : which notwithstanding Cesar denieth to have growne in Britaine. I know it is an opinion currant with the most, that these trees overturned with the force of waters, have lien ever since Noahs Flood, when the World was drowned, and so much the rather, because they are elsewhere digged out of very high places : and yet they deny not, but those high grounds are very marish and waterish.

Such mighty trees also are found oftentimes in Holland, a Country of Germany : which the learned men there, suppose were either undermined by waves working into the shore, or by windes driven forward and brought unto those lower and moist places, where they seeled and sunke downe. But let the curious company of Philosophers search into these matters to whom I commend them, and to their further inquirie, whether there are not Subterranean trees growing under earth, as well as plants and other Creatures. After Chatmoss, Holcroft sheweth it selfe, which, as it afforded the seat, so it gave the name also, to that right ancient family of the Holcrofts : whose estate in old time was much amended by marriage with one of the heires of Culchith a place seated hard by, which Gilbert de Culchith held, Of the Fee of Almaricke Butler, as hee himselfe did of the Earle of Ferrars, in King Henry the Third his time. Whose eldest daughter and heire, when Richard Fitz-Hugh of Hindley had married, he assumed to himselfe the name of Culchith : like as his brother Thomas, who wedded the second daughter, was of the possession, called Holcroft : another also by the same reason was named de Peasfalong, and a fourth de Rifeley. Which I note, that the Reader may understand, how our Ancestours, as they were in other things constant and grave, so in leaving and taking up names out of their possessions, they were as vaine and variable as might bee. But even in other parts of England also, this was in old time a thing in usuall practise.

Heere lie there round about every way little Townes, which (as throughout this whole County, and Cheshire, and other Northren parts) as they imparted their names to worshipfull houses, so they to have their Lords even unto these daies, men of Trafford.

Mosses whence they come.

Fire trees in Cæsars time grew not in Britaine.

Holcroft.

of the very same name with them. As for example, Aston of Aston: Atherton of Atherton, Tillesley of Tillesley, Standish of Standish, Bold of Bold, Hesket of Hesket, Worthington of Worthington, Torbec of Torbec, &c. And an endless pece of worke it were to name them one by one, neither is it any part of my purpose to reckon up all families of name and worship, but to take a view and survey of the more ancient places. And as vertue and wealth laied the foundations of these and such like Families in these North Countries, and elsewhere (that I may speake it once for all) and provident moderation with simplicity standing contented with their owne estate, both preserved and encreased them: So, in the South part of England, riotous expence and superfluity, usurious contracts, voluptuous and vicious life, together with indirec^t courtes and crafty dealings, have in short space utterly overthrowne most flourishing houses, in so much as men complaining, that the offspring of the ancient Gentry hath now a long time faded. But Families as plants have their times of encreasing and decreasing, I and overpassing this, will follow on with the course of Mersey, which now by this time runneth downe by Warrington, a Towne knowne by reason of the Lords thereof surnamed * Builers, who obtained of King Edward the First the liberty of a Mercate for it: From which, Northward, Winwick is not farre distant: a place among other fat Benefices of England of greatest name: in the upmost part of the Church whereof, are read these rude Verses engraven in an old Character, concerning King Oswald.

*Hic locus Oswalde quondam placuit tibi valde.
Northanbrorum fuerat Rex, nuncq; Polorum Regna tenes, loco passus Marcelde vocato.*

This place sometime thee pleased well, Oswald,
King thou hadst bene once of Northumberland,
Thou sufferedst in a place Marcelde call'd,
Thy Kingdome now is heaven, that aye doth stand.

From Warrington, the River Mersey spreading abroad, and straightwaies drawing in himselfe againe, with a wide and open outlet, very commodious for merchandise entrench into the Irish Sea, where Litherpool, called in the elder ages Lipopol, commonly Lirpool is seated, so named, as it is thought, of the water spreading it selfe in manner of a Poole: whence there is a convenient passage over into Ireland and much frequented, and in that respect more notorious, than for any Antiquity. For, there is no mention extant thereof any where in ancient Writers, but that Roger of Poitiers, who was Lord, as they spake in those dayes, of the Honour of Lancaster, built a Castle heere. Whereof the worthy family of the Molineux Knights have had the custody now a long time, whose chiefe seat is hard by at Seslon, which, the said Roger of Poitiers gave unto Vivian de Molineux, shortly after the first entry of the Normans. For, all that Territory betweene the two Rivers Ribell and Mersey, the same Roger held: as appeareth evidently by the authentical Record of Domesday booke. Neere unto Seslon, Als a little River seeketh a way into the Sea, and when hee hath found it, giveth name to a small Village Attmouth standing by, and hath Ferneby neere unto it: wherein the moist and mossie soile turffes are digged up, which serve the inhabitants for fwell and candle light. Under the said turres, there is a certaine dead and blackish water, upon which there swimmeth, I wot not what unctuous matter, and in it swimme little fishes that are caught by the diggers of turfe: So that wee may say, there bee fishes digged heere out of the earth, no lesse than about Heraclea, and Tios in Pontus. And no mervaille, seeing that in such watery places fishes otherwhiles seeking for moisture get under the ground, and men goe a fishing with spades. But, that in Paphlagonia many and those good fishes are gotten by digging in places nothing watery, there is some secreet and peculiar reason thereof in Nature: and pleasantly wrote Seneca, Why should not fishes enter and passe into the land, if we passe over the Sea?

Fishes digged out of the ground.

From

From hence the open shore shooteth out with a great bent; and more within land from the sea standeth Ormeskirke a mercate towne, well knowne by reason of the sepulture there of the Stanleys, Earles of Derby, whose chiefe feat Laibam is hard by: a stately house, which they have enlarged continually, ever since King Henry the Fourth his dayes, what time Sir John Stanley knight, father to John Lord deputy of Ireland, descended of the same stemme whence the Barons de Audley, married the daughter and heire of Sir Thomas Laibam, a right noble knight, who brought him for her dowrie this faire inheritance, with many other possessions. And from that time have the Stanleys planted their seat heere: of whom Thomas, the sonne of Thomas Lord Stanley, was by King Henry the seventh created Earle of Derby; and had issue by Eleonor Nevill daughter to the Earle of Salisbury, George Lord Strange, for he had wedded Joan the onely daughter and heire of John Baron Le Strange of Knockin, who dying in his fathers life time, begat a sonne named Thomas, the second Earle of Derby; unto whom Anne, the daughter of Edward Lord Hastings, bare Edward the third Earle of Derby, who begat of Dorothea, daughter of Thomas Howard Duke of Norfolk, Henry the fourth Earle: who married Margaret, daughter of Henry Clifford Earle of Cumberland, mother unto Ferdinand the fifth Earle lately deceased, and to William now the sixth Earle, who succeeded his brother: but I forget my selfe now, when as I have formerly remembred as much.

Duglesse a riveret, creepeth and stealeth along quietly by this place; neere unto which our noble Arthur, as Ninnius writeth, put the Saxons to flight in a memorable battaile. At the head hereof standeth the towne Wiggin, called in ancient times Wibiggin: of which name I have nothing else to say, but that in Lancashire they call buildings and houses Biggins: neither of the towne, but that it is faire, and a Corporation also with a Maior and Burgeffes: and the parson of the Church, as I have learned, is Lord of the towne. Hard by it Holland sheweth it selfe, out of a younger brother, whereof that most noble and renowned race of the Hollands Earles of Kent, and Dukes also of Surry and Excester, fetched both their originall and their surname. But the daughter and heire of the eldest brother, who flourished here in knights degree, being in the end married into the house of the Lovels, brought unto them an addition of possessions, with her Armes, viz. in a shield Azure * flores Argent a Lion rampant guardant Arg. Neere unto the mouth of Duglesse is Merton, a very great & large poole, which empieth it selfe into this, river, and then freight waies meeteth with the river Ribell, neare his outlet; for this is the next river after Mersey that runneth into the sea, and hath not yet lost quite his former ancient name; for Ptolomee calleth the salt water or arms of the sea here, BELLISAMAY, and we Ribell, perhaps by addition of the Saxon word Rhe unto it, that signifieth a River. This river comming with a quicke and hasty streame out of the hills in Yorke-shire, taketh his course first Southward, by three exceeding high mountaines, Ingleborow hill at the spring head, which I wondered at to see how it ascendeth as it were by degrees with a huge and mighty ridge Westward, and at the farthest end mounteth up into the aire, as if another hill were set upon the head of it: Penigint, haply so called of his whitish & snowy top, for so Penguin signifieth in the british tongue: and he riseth aloft with an huge bulke, howbeit not altogether so high as the other. But when Ribell commeth into Lancashire (for those two stand in Yorke-shire) Pendle-hill advanceth it selfe up to the skie with a lofty head, and in the very top thereof bringeth forth a peculiar plant, which, as though it came out of the cloudes, they tearme Clowdes-berry. But this mountaine is most notorious for the harme that it did not long since to the country lying beneath it by reason of a mighty deale of water gushing out of it: as also for an infallible prognostication of raine, so often as the top thereof is covered with a mist. Of these hills I have made mention the more willingly, both because they are the highest in our Apennines: whence cometh this vulgar Rhime:

Ingleborow, Pendle and Penigint,

Are the highest hills betweene Scotland and Trent.

R R

Ormeskirke.

Stanleys Earles of Derby.

Duglesse a riveret.

Wiggin.

Biggin, what it is.

The family of the Hollands.

The Hollands
coat of Armes.
* With flowres
de Lыз.

Bellifama.

Penigint.

Pendle hill.

Clowdesberry.

Pennine
Alpes.
Pen in British
what it is.
Clithero.
Whaley.

As also that the reader may understand, as I said before, why the highest Alpes A were called of the old Gaules Pennine, and why the very top of the hills, named Penninum, and Apennini, were of them so tearmed. For Pen in the British tongue signifieth the tops of hills. By an out corner or parcel of Pendle hill, standeth Clithero castle, built by the Lacies neere unto Ribell, and a neighbour unto it Whaley, in the Saxon tongue Walaleg, famous for the monastery that the said Lacies founded, which was translated from Stanlaw in Cheshire hither, in the yeere 1296. where in the yeere 798. duke Wade unfortunately gave battaile to Arduolph King of Northumberland, at Billangho, which is more short called Langho. This Ribell no sooner turneth into the West, but imparteth his name to a small towne, which in our age is called Riblechester B: where are digged up from time to time so many monuments of Roman antiquity, statues, peeces of coyn, Pillars, Piedestals & Chapters of pillars, heathen altars, Marble-stones and inscriptions, that the inhabitants may seeme not without cause to have this hobling rhyme so rife in their mouthes.

It is written upon a wall in Rome,

Ribchester was as rich as any towne in Christendome.

And the port high wayes came directly hither, raised up with eminent causeis: one from Yorke, another out of the North, through Bowland-Forrest, a spacious peece of ground, which as yet is most evidently to be seene for many miles together. But the country folke have so disfigured the inscriptions, that although I did see many, yet C could I scarce read one or two of them. At Salisbury hall, an house of that ancient family of the Talbots, standing neere by, I saw the base or foot of a pillar with this inscription.

In a wall neere unto it, there is another great stone infixed, shewing in the fore-part Cupid and another little image; out of the backe-side or reverse whereof this was exemplified for me: but the inscription carrieth no sense with it, which because it troubled me a long time, I will set down here underneath, to see what the opinion of other men is of it.

For mine owne part, I can make nothing else thereof, but that most of these words were the British names of places adjoining. In the yeere 1603. when I went a second time to see this place, I hapned upon the greatest and fairest Altar that ever I saw, dedicated to the Mother Goddesses by a Captain of the Asturians, with this inscription.

DE-

DEIS MATRIBVS
M.INGENVI-
VS ASIATICVS
*DECALAST.
SS. LL. M.

In the house of Thomas
Rhodes.

* Haply, Decurio dux Asturum, succentum solvit (s-votum) libens, lubens, merito.

Concerning these DEABUS, or DEIS MATRIBUS, that is, Mothers Goddesses, what they were I cannot finde out with all my searching: for in the volumes of Inscriptions gathered through the world, save in another Altar besides found among us, they are not mentioned, as farre as I remember. Onely I read that Enguim, a little towne in Sicily, was ennobled for the pretence of the MOTHER GODDESSES, wherein were shewed certaine speares and brazen helmets, which Metio and Ulysses consecrated to those Goddesses.

Dee Matres.
Mother Goddesses.
See in the Bishopricke of Durham.
Plutarch in M. Marcellus.

Another little Altar I saw there, cast out among rubbish stone, with this inscription:

So small a one this was, that it may seeme to have beene some poore mans little altar to carry with him to and fro, serving only to burne and offer incense or salt, and meale upon it: whereas that other was farre bigger, and made for to sacrifice and offer greater beasts upon it. In these altars the posterity no doubt imitated Noah, even after they had fallen away and revolted from the true worship of God. Neither erected they altars to their Gods onely, but also unto their Emperours by way of servile flattery, with this impious title, NUMINI MAIESTATIQUE EORUM, that is, unto their GOD-HEAD and Majesty. Unto these they kneeled in humble maner; these they clasped about and embraced as they prayed, before these they tooke their oaths: and in one word, in these and in their sacrifices consisted the maine substance of all their religion, so farre forth, that whosoever had no altar of their owne, they were thought verily to have no religion, nor to acknowledge any God at all.

Altars of the Gentiles.
Genes. 8.

Moreover, very lately, and but the other day, a stone was digged up here, wherein was engraven the naked portraict or image of a man on horse-backe, without saddle, without bridle, with both hands seeming to launce his speare, and ready to ride over a naked man lying downe along at his foot, who holdeth before I wot not what foure square peece. Betweene the horse and him that

Rrr 2

lieth

Haply C. Al.
for Centurio Alz Sarmata-
rum.

lieth along are these letters D.M. and under him so lying, are read these words C.A.L. A SARMATA. All the letters beside, which were many, are so worn out and gone, that they could not be read, neither list I to guess any farther what they were. That ALA SARMATARUM, that is, a wing of Sarmatian horsemen abode in this place, it may seeme, as well by that former inscription, as by this, that many yeeres before was found hard by.

Out of William Lambards
notes.

HIS. TERRIS. TEGITUR.
AEL. MATRONA QU----- VIX. AN. XXVIII. M. II. D. VIII.
ET. M. JULIUS MAXIMUS. FIL.
VIX. AN. VI. M. III. D. XX. ET CAM
PANIA. DUBBA. MATER
VIX. AN. L. JULIUS. MAXIMUS
-----ALÆ. SAR. CONJUX
CONJUGI. INCOMPARABILI
ET. FILIO. PATRI. PIENTIS
SIMO. ET SOCERÆ. TENA
CISSIMÆ MEMORIÆ. P.

Ribodunum.
Coccium.

But hence have wee no light at all toward the finding out of the ancient name of this place which now is in question, unlesse it hath now and then changed the name, which otherwhiles usually happeneth. For in this place Ptolomy hath set RIBODUNUM: if for RIBODUNUM, the name is not altogether unlike to Ribbechefer: and just at this distance from Mancunium, that is, Manchester, that is to say 18. miles off, doth Antonine place COCCIM, which also in some copies we read GOCIMUM.

But when the flourishing fortune of this City, having runne the full and fatall period, was faded, either by warre, or earthquake, as the common sort doe think, somewhat lower where Ribell suffereth the violence of the flowing tides of the Sea, and is called of the Geographer BELLISAMA ÆSTUARIUM, that is, the salt-water BELLISAMA, neare unto Penworth, where in the Conquerors reigne there was a little castle (as appeareth by the Records of the said King) out of the fall of Ribbechefer arose in stead of it her daughter Preston, a great, and (for these Countries) a faire town, & well inhabited, so called of religious men; for in our speech the name foundeth as much as Priests towne. Beneath this Ribell, Derwen a rill commeth in with his water: and the first mercate towne that hee watereth is Blacke-borne, so called of the Blacke-water, which towne belonging in times past to the Lacies, gave name unto Blackburne-shire, a little territory adjoining; from thence it runneth by Houghton-towre, which communicated the name unto a notable family that long time dwelt in it: and by Walton, which William, Lord of Lancaster, King Stephens sonne, gave unto Walter de Walton: and afterward it was the possession of the ancient race of the Langtons, who descended from the said Waltons. But now let us returne.

Penworth, otherwise called Penverdant.
Preston.

Houghton.

Walton.

Ander-nesse.

The said Preston whereof I spake, is by the common people called Preston in Ander-nesse, for Acmunder-nesse, for so the English Saxons termed this part of the shire, which lying between the two rivers, Ribel and Cocar, stretcheth out with a promontory in manner of a nose, which afterwards they also called Acmunder-nesse. Wherein were no more but 16. villages inhabited in King William the Conquerors time; the rest lay wast, as we read in Doomes-day booke, and Roger of Poisiers held the same.

But afterwards it belonged to Theobald Walter: from whom the Boitellers of Ireland derive their beginning: for thus wee read in a Charter of K. Richard the first, Know yee, that wee have given, and by this present Charter confirmed unto Theobald Walter,

A. Walter, for his homage and service, Agmunder-nesse full and whole, with all the appertenements, &c. This part yeeldeth plenty of oates, but not so apt to beare barley: Howbeit it is full of fresh pastures, especially to the sea side, where it is partly Champion ground, and thereupon it seemeth that a good part of it is called The File, for the Field (and yet in the Kings Rolls it goeth under the Latine name L I M A, that is, a File, namely, that Smithes tooke or instrument wherewith Iron, or any other thing is smoothed.) But because elsewhere it is marsh ground, they hold it not very wholsome. Wie, a little river speedily cutting over this part, commeth rolling downe out of Wierdale, a very solitary place, and runneth by Grenbaugh Castle, which Thomas Stanley, the first Earle of Derby out of this family, built: what time as hee stood in feare of certaine out-lawed Gentlemen of this shire, whose possessions King Henry the seventh had freely given unto him. For many an assault they gave him, and other whiles in hostile manner made inrodes into his lands, untill the moderate carriage of the good and worthy man, and proceffe of time pacified these quarrels.

The file.

Grenhaugh castle.

A new manner of making salt.

Quick-sands.

The river Lune or Lone.
Salmons.

Over-burrow.

Bremetonacum.

Kernellare
what it is.
Hornby castle,
Barons Monte-
Eagle.

Here along the sea shore, you may see in many places heaps of sand, whereupon they powre water, untill it gather a saltish humour, which afterwards with turfes they boile untill it be white salt. There be also here uncertaine sands not to be trusted, but ready to catch and swallow (they call them Quick-sands) so dangerous for travellers, whiles at a low water, when tide is past, they seeke to goe the nearest way, that they had need to take very good heed lest in going a foot (I use Sidonius his words) they suffer not shipwracke, and be cast away on the land. But especially about the mouth of Cocar, where, as it were, in a field of Syrts or Quick-sands, Cokar sand Abbey, an Abbey not long since of the Cluniack Monkes, built by Ranulph de Melchines, but open to the violence of windes, stood betweene the mouths of Cocar and Lune or Lone, and hath a bleake prospect into the wide Irish sea. This river Lune, commonly called Lune, springing out of the mountaines of Westmorland, running Southward in a channell now broad, now narrow; with many a reach in and out hindring his streame, enricheth the dwellers thereby in Summer time with great store of Salmons: which because they delight in cleere water, and especially in shallow places that are sandy, come up thicke together into this, and other rivers of this coast. As soone as Lune is entred into Lancashire, Lace, a little brooke from out of the East joyneth his streame with it. In which place now standeth Over-Burrow, a very small village of husbandmen; which, as the inhabitants informed mee, had bene sometimes a great City, and took up all those large fields betweene Lace and Lone, and after it had suffered all miseries that follow famine, was driven to composition through extremity. This tradition they received from their ancestors, delivered as it were from hand to hand unto them. And in very truth by divers and sundry monuments exceeding ancient, by engraven stones, pavements of square checker worke, peeces of Romane coine, and by this new name Burrow, which with us signifieth a Burgh; that place should seeme to be of great antiquity. But if it recover the ancient name, it may thanke other and not mee, although I have sought as narrowly, and diligently for it, as for Antes pathes: neither is any man to thinke, that the severall names of every towne in Britaine are precisely noted and set downe in Ptolomee, Antonine, The Notice of Provinces, and other approved and principall Authours. But if a man may goe by ghesse, I would willingly thinke that it was BREMETONACUM (which Jerome Surina, a Spaniard, in his notes upon Antonine, deemeth truly to be a different place from BREMETURACUM) and that by the distance from COCCIM, or Ribbechefer.

From this Burrow the river Lune runneth beside Thurthland, Funfall, a fortress built by Sir Thomas Tansfall in the time of King Henry the fourth, when the King had given him Licence to fortifie and kernell his mansion house; that is, to embattle it: also by Hornby a faire castle, which glorifieth much of the first founder, M. de Mont-Begon, and of the Lords thereof, The Harringtons and Stanleys, Barons Stables of Mont-Eagle, descended from Thomas Stanley, the first Earle of Derby of this house.

and advanced to that title by King Henry the eighth, of whom the third and the last A named William, left behind him his onely daughter and heire, Elizabeth, wife to Edward Parker Baron Morley, mother to Sir William Parker, whom in that regard King James commanded to be summoned to Parliament by the title of Lord Morley, and whom wee and all our posterity may acknowledge to have bene borne for the good of all Britain. For, by a short letter, obscurely penned, and secretly sent unto him, and by him dutifully discovered, in a happy houre was detected, at the very last houre, in a manner, when the whole State was at the point to perish by the most horrible and detestable treason, that ever any barbarous impiety could contrive: what time certaine godlesse and irreligious monsters of men, masking under the mantle of religion, having bestowed a great quantity of gun-powder under the Parliament house, stood ready with match in hand to give fire thereto, for to blow up both Prince and Countrey with one blast in a moment.

The Gunpowder treason.

Lancaster.

Lone having passed on some few miles from hence, commeth within the sight of Lancaster, standing on his South banke, the chiefe towne of this region: which the inhabitants more truly call Lancaster, as the Scots also, who name it Lancastell, of the River Lone. Both the name still remaining, and the river running under it, doe argue in some sort that it is Longovicium, where, under the Lieutnant Generall of Britaine, as wee finde in the Notice of Provinces, a company of the Longovicarii, who of the place borrowed that name, kept their station. Although the towne C at this day is not very well peopled, nor much frequented, and all the inhabitants thereof are given to husbandry (for the territory all round about is well manured, lying open, fresh and faire, and not void of woods:) yet for proove of Roman antiquity, they finde otherwhiles peeces of the Emperours coine, especially where the Friery stood: for there, they say, was the plot upon which the ancient City was planted, which the Scots, after they had with a sudden out-road wasted all in their way, in the yeere of our Redemption 1322. set on fire and burnt. Since which time they have begunne to build nearer unto a greene hill by the river side, on which standeth the castle, great I cannot say, nor of any antiquity, but faire and strong. And hard by it standeth upon the height of the hill, the onely Church they have, where the Monkes aliens had in times past, a cell founded by Roger of Poitiers. A little beneath which, by a faire bridge over Lone, in the descent and side of the hill where it is steepest, hangeth a peece of a most ancient wall of Roman work, seeming ready to reele; Wery wall they call it, after a later British name, as it should seeme, of this towne. For they called it Caer Werid, as one would say, The Greene City, happely of that fresh greene hill. But I leave this to others. John Lord of Moriton and of Lancaster, afterwards King of England, confirmed by Charter to his Burgeses of Lancaster, all the liberties which he had granted unto the Burgeses of Bristol. And King Edward the third in the fixe and thirtieth yeere of his reign granted unto the Mayor and Bailives, and Commonalty of the towne of Lancaster, that Placit and Sessions should not elsewhere bee holden. This towne seeth the Pole Arcticke E (that I may note so much) elevated foure and fifty degrees and five minutes, and standeth removed from the utmost line of the West, twenty degrees and forty eight minutes in Longitude.

Fornesse.

Whiles I looked round about from the top of the said castle hill, to see the mouth of Lone, that issueth it selfe into the sea a little lower, Fornesse the other part of this shire appeared in sight, which the sea hath after a sort violently rent apart from the rest. For when as the shore did from hence shoote out a maine way into the West, the Ocean, as it were much displeased and angry herat, obstinately ceased not to slash and mangle it, nay, which is more, hath with his fell flowing at boisterous tides devoured the shore: and thereby maketh three wide creeks or bays; namely, Kent-sand, at which the river Ken powreth it selfe forth; Leven-sand; and Dudden-sand: betwene which (two) the land beareth out so much, that thereupon it took the name. For with us in our language, For-nesse & Foreland is all one with the Latine Promontorium anterium (that is, a Fore-promontory.) All this part, unlesse it be

A be hard by the sea side, mounteth up aloft with high topped hills; and huge fels standing thicke together (which they tearme Forness-fells). Among which the Britans lived safe a great while, trusting upon these strong naturall fences: although the victorious English Saxons made way through all in the end. For in the yeere 228. after there comming in, I gather that the Britans had their abode here; because Egfride King of Northumberland, gave unto Holy Saint Cuthbert, the land called Carthmell, and all the Britans in it (thus wee finde written in his life) and it is very well knowne that Carthmell is a part of this shire by Kent-sand, and a little towne in it retaineth yet the same name: Wherein William Mareschall the elder, Earle of Pembroke built a Priory, and endowed it with living. If you read in Ptolomee SETANTIUM μυρ, that is, The Setantians Mere, as some Copies have; and not Setantiorum μυρ, that is, The Setantians Haven, I durst boldly avouch that these Britans here were called SETANTII. For among these mountaines the greatest standing water in all England, now called Winander-mere; in the English Saxon Winadpe-mers (haply of his winding and turning in and out) lieth stretched out for the space of ten miles or thereabout with crooked bankes, and is all paved (as it were) with stone in the bottom: in some places of wonderfull depth, and breeding a peculiar kinde of fish found no where else, which the inhabitants there by call A Chare. And a little village standing hard by carrieth the name thereof: In which Eathred King of Northumberland, in the yeer of Christ 792. when he had by force fetched King Elfwolds somes out of Yorke, slue them, that by his owne wickednesse, and their blood, hee might secure the Kingdome to himselfe and his.

Carthmell.

Winander-mere.

The fish Chare.

Betwixt this Mere and the river Dudden, the promontory runneth out, which wee commonly call Fornesse, and hath the Iland Walney, as a fore-fence or countermure lying along by it, with a small arme of the sea betwene: The gullet or entry into which is defended with a fort, called the Pile of Fouldrey, standing in the midst of the waves upon a rocke, erected there by the Abbot of Fornesse, in the first yeere of King Edward the third.

As for the Promontory it selfe, there is nothing worth the sight in it, unlesse it be D the ruines of a monastery of Cistercian Monkes, called Fornesse Abbey, which Stephen Earle of Bullen, afterwards King of England, in the yeere of our redemption 1137. built in a place called sometimes Bekensgill, or translated rather from Tulket in Alder nesse. Out of the Monkes whereof, and from no place else (as they themselves have reported) the Bishops of the Isle of Man (that lieth just over against) were by an ancient custome wont to bee elected: as having bene the mother (as it were) of many Monasteries in the said Man, and in Ireland. More Eastward standeth Alding-bam, an ancient hereditament belonging to the family of the Haveringtons, or Harringtons, unto whom it came from the Flemmings, by the Cancefelds; and whose inheritance descended by a daughter unto William Bonvill of Somersetshire, and at last E by him unto the Greies, Marqueses of Dorset. And somewhat higher is Ulverston, in this regard not to bee passed over in silence, for that King Edward the third gave a moiety thereof unto Sir John Coupland, a most brave warriour: whom also he advanced to the dignity of a Banaret, because in the battaile at Durham, he took David the second King of the Scots prisoner. But after his decease, the same King granted it with other faire lands in this tract, and the title also of Earle of Bedford, unto Ingelram Lord Coucy of France, as who had married his daughter Isabel, and whose ancestors in right of Christiana Lindsey, had great renewes in England.

The booke of Fournesse.

Aldingham. Harringtons.

Touching the noble men which have borne the title of Lancaster, there were in the first infancy of the Norman Empire three stiled Lords of the Honour of Lancaster: namely, Roger of  Poitou*, the sonne of Roger Mont-gomery, who was surnamed Pitavenfis, as William of Malmesbury writeth, because hee had married a wife from out of Poitou in France. But when he had by his perfidious disloyalty lost this honour, Lords of Lancaster.  Pitavenfis*, or of Poitiers.

Walter Hemmingford.
Ro. Hoveden
pag. 373. b.

Earle of Lancaster, King of Sicily.

* De Cadurcis.

Dukes of Lancaster.

honour, William the sonne of King Stephen, and Earle of Moriton and Warren, had A the same given unto him by his Father. After whose death King Richard the first bestowed it upon his brother John, who was afterward King of England. For thus we read in an old History: King Richard declared his singular love to his brother John. For beside Ireland, and the Earledome of Moriton in Normandy, he beaped upon him so many dignities in England, that he was in maner a Tetrarch there: Finally, he conferred upon him Cornwall, Lancaster, Nottingham, Derby, with the country adjoining, and many more beside. A good while after King Henry the third, the sonne of John, first advanced Edmund his second sonne, called by some Crouch-backe, to the title of Earle of Lancaster, unto whom hee conveyed and made over the inheritances and B honours of Simon Montfort Earle of Leicester, Robert Ferrars Earle of Derby, and John of Monmouth, because they had risen, and rebelliously borne armes against him: and he gave this Honor of Lancaster unto him in these words, The Honour, County, Castle and Town of Lancaster, with the Cow-pastures, & Forrests of Wiresdale, & Lownsdale, New-castle under Lime, the manour, Forrest, and Castle of Pickering, the manor of Scaleby, the towne of Gomicester, and the rems of the towne of Huntingdon, &c. After hee the said Edmund had missed the kingdome of Sicily, in which the Pope had invested him in vaine by a ring, and not without ridiculous disgrace to the English nation, caused in honour of him certaine peeces of gold to bee stamped, with this title, AIMUNDUS REX SICILIAE, having first cunningly sucked a great masse of money C from the credulous King in this regard. This Edmund (when his first wife Avelina, daughter and heire to William de Forsibus Earle of Albemarle, was dead issuelesse, who neverthelesse in her Will had made him her heire) married Blanch of Artois, of the roiall family of France, to his second wife, and by her had Thomas, Henry, and John, that died an infant. Thomas was the second Earle of Lancaster, who took to wife Alice, the onely daughter and heire of Henry Lacy Earle of Lincolne: who by her deed passed over unto the house of Lancaster her owne inheritance, and her mothers, that which belonged to the family of Long Espee, who were Earles of Salisbury, like as her father the said Henry Lacy had made the like conviance before of his owne lands, in case Alice should dye without issue, as it afterward happened. But this Thomas, for behaving himselfe insolently toward his soveraigne Edward the second, and still supplying fewell to civill warres, being taken prisoner in the field, lost his head, leaving no issue. Howbeit, when this sentence of death pronounced against him, was afterwards by authority of Parliament reversed, because hee had not his tryall by his Peeres, according to the Law, and great Charter, his brother Henry succeeded after him in all his possessions and honours. Hee also was advanced inestate by his wife Maude, daughter and sole heire of Sir Patrick * Chaworth, who brought unto him not onely her owne patrimony, but also great inheritances in Wales, of Mauric of London, and of Simard, from whom she descended. This Henry left behind him Henry his onely sonne, whom King Edward the third from an Earle raised unto the honour of a Duke: and he was second man of all our Nobility E which received the name of Duke. But hee, having no issue male, departed this life, leaving behind him two daughters, Maude and Blanch, betweene whom the inheritance was divided. Maude was married to William of Bavaria, who was Earle of Holland, Zeland, Frisland, Henault, and in his wives right, of Leicester. And when as she deceased without children, John of Gaunt, so called because hee was borne at Gaunt in Flanders, fourth sonne of King Edward the third, who had married Blanch, the other daughter of Henry aforesaid, entered upon the whole inheritance: and now being for wealth equivalent to many Kings, and created withal by his father Duke of Lancaster, he obtained also at his hands great royalties; for hee, having related what noble service he had performed to his country, at home and abroad in the warres, preferred the County of Lancaster to the dignity of a County F Palatine

A Palatine, by his letters Patent, the tenour whereof runneth in this wise. Wee have granted for us and our heires, unto our foresaid sonne, that he may have for tearme of his life, his Chancery within the County of Lancaster, and his writs to be sealed under his own seale to be appointed for the office of the Chancellour: also Justices of his owne, as well to hold Plees of the Crowne, as also oiber plees whatsoever touching common Law: also the bearing and deciding of the same, yea and the making of all executions whatsoever, by vertue of their owne writs and officers there.

Moreover, all oiber liberties and Royalities whatsoever to a County Palatine belonging, as freely and in as ample maner, as the Earle of Chester within the same County of Chester is known to have &c. Neither was he Duke of Lancaster onely, but also by his marriage with Constance the daughter of Peter King of Leon and Castile, hee for a time was stiled by the name of King of Leon and of Castile. But by a composition he gave this over; and in the thirteenth yeere of King Richard the Second, by consent of Parliament was created Duke of Aquitaine, to have and hold the same for tearme of life of the King of England, as King of France: but to the universall dislike of Aquitaine, repining, and affirming that their Seigniory was inseparably annexed to the Crowne of England. At which time his stile ranne thus, John, sonne to the King of England, Duke of Aquitaine and of Lancaster, Earle of Derby, Lincolne, and Leicester, and high Steward of England.

C After him, Henry of Bollembroke his sonne succeeded in the Dukedome of Lancaster, who when hee had dispossessed Richard the second, and obtained the Kingdom of England; he considering that being now King he could not beare the title of Duke of Lancaster, and unwilling that the said title should be discontinued, ordained by assent of Parliament, that Henry his eldest sonne should enjoy the same, and be stiled, Prince of Wales, Duke of Aquitaine, Lancaster, and Cornwall, and Earle of Chester: and also that the liberties and franchises of the Duchy of Lancaster, should remaine to his said sonne severed from the Crowne of England: and to make better assurance to himselfe, his heires and successours in these inheritances, by authority of Parliament he ordained in these words. *We, not willing that our said inheritance, or the liberties of the same, by occasion of this present assumption upon us of our regall state & dignity, should be in any thing changed, transferred, diminished, or impaired, will that the same our inheritance, with the foresaid rights and liberties thereof, be kept, continued, and held fully and wholly, to us & our said heires in the said Charters specified, in the same maner and forme, condition and state, as they descended and came unto us: and also with all and every such liberties and franchises, and oiber priviledges, commodities, and profits whatsoever, in which our Lord and father whiles he lived had and held it for terme of his own life, by the grant of Richard late King. And by the tenour of these presents, of our own certayne knowledge, with the consent of this our present Parliament, we grant, declare, decree, and ordaine for us and our heires, that as well our Duchy of Lancaster, as all oiber things and every one, Counties, Honours, Castles, Manours, Fees, or Inheritances, Advocations, Possessions, Annuities, and Seignories whatsoever, descended unto us before the obtaining of our Regall dignity, howsoever & wheresoever, by right of inheritance in service, or in reversion, or any way whatsoever, remaine for ever to us and our said heires, specified in the Charters above said, in forme aforesaid.*

After this, K. Henry the fifth by authority of Parliament dis severed from the crown and annexed unto this Duchy a very great and large inheritance, which had descended unto him in right of his mother Dame Mary, who was daughter and one of the heires of Humfrey Bohun Earle of Hereford. In this forme and estate it remained under Henry the fifth, and Henry the sixth: but King Edward the fourth in the first yeere of his reigne, when hee had in Parliament attained and forfeited Henry the sixth, appropriated it, as they use to speake, unto the Crowne, that is to say, unto himselfe, and his heires Kings of England: From which King Henry the seventh notwithstanding

John of Gaunt
King of Car-tile.

King Henry
the fourth.

Parliament
Roll 1. H. 4.

notwithstanding forthwith separated. And so it continueth, having severall officers, A namely, A Chancellor, an Attourney, a Receiver, a Clerke of the Court, sixe Assistanis, a Messenger, two Auditors, 23. Receivers, and three Supervisors, &c.

B

There are counted in this shire, beside very many Chappels, Parishes 36. and no more:
 but those wonderfull populous, and which for multitude of inhabnans, farre exceed the greatest parishes elsewhere.

C

WEST-

D

E

F

WEST-MORLAND.

BEYOND the furthest part of Lancashire more Northward, lieth another lesser countrey of the Brigantes, called by late Latine writers Westmaria, and Westmorlandia, in our tongue West-more-land, and of some later Latine writers Westmor: bounded on the West and North side with Cumberland, on the East with Yorke-shire, and the Bishopricke of Durham. Which because it lyeth all of it among moores and high hilles reaching one to another (for our Apennine waxeth here broader and broader still as it runneth) and was for the most part un-manured, came by this name in our language. For such barren places, which cannot easily by the painfull labour of the husbandman bee brought to fruitfulness, the Northren Englishmen call Moors: and West-more-land is nothing else with us, but A westerne moorish country. Let that dreame therefore as touching King Marius, bee excluded out of the schoole of reverend antiquity, who forsooth, as our Chroniclers have dreamed, subdued the Picts, and called this countrey after his owne name.

The more Southerly part of this shire, contained in a narrow roome betweene the river Lone and Winander mere, is reputed fruitfull enough in the vallics, although it can shew many felles, with rough and stony rockes, lying ever bare without grasse: and is all tearmed by one name, The Barony of Kendale and Candale, that is, The Dale by Can: for it took name of the river Can, which running rough upon stones, cutteth through it. On the west banke whereof standeth Kandale or Kendale, called also Kake by Kandale, a towne of very great trade and resort, with two broad and long streets crossing the one over the other; and a place for excellent clothing, and for industry so surpassing, that in regard thereof it carrieth a great name: For the inhabitants have great trafficke and vent of their woollen clothes throughout all parts of England. They count it also much for their credit, that it hath dignified Barons and Earles with the title thereof. As for their Barons, they were the offspring of Two Tuleboys: of whose race, William, by consent of King Henry the second, called himselfe William of Lancaster, whose Niece and heire was wedded unto Gilbert, the sonne of Roger Fuz-Reinfrid, by whose daughters (after her sonne William was dead) the inheritance went to Peter Bru, Lord of Skelion, the second of that forename, and unto William Lindesay; from whom by the mothers side, as we learne out of the Liege book of Furnesse Abbey, Ingelram Lord of Coucy in France, fetched his descent. By which Peter Bru his daughter, the sister and heire of Peter Bru the third, came this Barony to the Rosses of Werke, and from them by right of inheritance this possession was devolved upon the Parres, of whom Sir William Par was made Lord Par by King Henry the eighth. As for the Castle, the ancient seat of these Lords, standing over against the towne, it runneth to decay through age and neglect. As for Earles of Kendale, there have beene three in number: John Duke of Bedford, advanced to that honour by his brother King Henry the fifth: John Duke of Somerset: and John de Foix, of that most noble and honorable family of the Foix in France, whom King Henry the sixth, for his faithfull service in the French warres, had preferred to that dignity. Whence perhaps it is, that some of this house of Foix in France, retain the name still of Candale. As for any glory else of antiquity, Kendall to my knowledge challengeth none. And yet I was once of opinion, that it was CON-CA NG I, a station place sometimes of the Romanes; but time hath now instructed me better. Somewhat beneath, in the river Can, are two Catadups, or water falls, where the waters have a downefall with a mighty noise: the one is by Levens, a little village; the other more Southward, neere to Betham; which to the neighbour inhabitants are as good as true prognostications: for when that which standeth North from them foundeth more cleere and aloud in their cares, they looke certainly for faire

The Barony of Kendale.

Lords of Kendale. History of Furnesse. The family of Lancaster.

L. Par of Kendale.

Earles of Kendale.

Catadups of Forfes.

faire weather: when that on the South side doth the same, they expect no other A than showers of raine, and foggy mists. Thus much for the South and narrower part of this region, which Westward is bounded with the river Winster, and the spacious Lake Winander-mere, whereof Hspake crewhile, and Eastward with the river Lone or Lune.

At the upper corner of Winander-mere lieth the dead carcasfe, as one would say, of an ancient City, with great ruines of walls, and many heapes of rubbish one from another, remaining of buildings without the walls yet to bee seene. The fortresse thereof was somewhat long, fenced with a ditch and rampire; for it tooke up in length 132. Ells, and in bredth 80. That it had beene the Romans worke is evident, B by the British bricke, by the mortar tempered with little peeces of bricke among, by small earthen pots or pitchers, by small cruets or vials of glasse, by peeces of Roman money oftentimes there found, and by round stones as much as millstones or quernstones, of which layed and couched together they framed in old time their columns, and by the paved high waies leading unto it. Now the ancient name thereof is gone, unlesse a man would ghesse at it, and thinke it were that AMBOSGLANA, whereof the booke of Notices maketh mention, seeing at this day it is called Ambleside.

On the East side the river Lone serveth for a limit, and after his name the tract lying about it is called Lonsdale: the principall towne whereof is Kirkby Lonsdale, C whither all the people round about repaire to Church and mercate. Above the Spring-head of Lone, the countrey spreadeth broader, and the hills shoot out with many turnings, betwene which there lye some vallies marvellous steepe and deepe withall, with many hollow places in manner of caves. Among these hills that notable river Eden, which Ptolomee calleth TRUNA, shewing his head first in Yorkshire, carrying a small and faint streame in the beginning, but afterwards growing by little and little bigger, with sundry becks still augmenting it, seeketh a way North-west, by Pendragon Castle, which hath nothing left unto it unconsumed by time, besides the bare name, and an heape of stones: From thence hee passeth by Wharion Hall, the seat of the Barons Wharion; of whom the first was Sir Thomas Wharion, advanced to that dignity by King Henry the Eighth, whom succeeded his sonne of the same name; and after him Philip that now liveth, the third Baron, a right honourable person. Afterwards it runneth downe by Kirkby Stephen, a mercate towne well knowne, and both the Musgraves, two little villages, which gave name unto that martiall and warlike family of the Musgraves: out of which in the reigne of King Edward the third, Thomas Musgrave flourished, and was by solemne writ of summons called to the Parliament in the ranke of Barons: and these Musgraves had their principall habitation in Hearthly castle adjoining.

Heere Eden doth, as it were, make stay with his streame, to give meeting unto other petty rivers: upon one of which, scarce two miles off from Eden it selfe, stood VERTERÆ, a towne of ancient memory, mentioned by Antonine the Emperour, E and the booke of Notices: wherein it is notified, that in the declining age of the Romane Empire, a Romane Captaine made his abode there, with a band of the Direflorres. But now the towne is decayed, and become a small poore village fenced with a little Fortresse, and the name turned into Burgh, for it is commonly named  Burgh under Stanmore*. For in the time of the later Emperours (and willing I am to note so much once for all) little castles, meet for warre occasions, and furnished with store of corne, began to bee rearm'd Burgi, that is, Burghs, by a new name which after that the Empire was translated into the East, the Germans and others may seeme to have borrowed of the Greek word burgos. Hence also came the name of Burgundians, because they inhabited Burghs; for so in that age they used to call those dwelling places which were planted heere and there, along limits and marches. Neither have I read any thing else of that Burgh, but that in the beginning of the Norman government, the Northren English conspired heere against William the Conquerour. That this Burgh was VERTERÆ, I dare be bold to affirme, because Ambleside.

Amboglana.

Baron Wharion.

Hearthly castle.

* Burgus sub-fixeto.
Burgh under Stanmore.
Burgus.
Vegetius lib. 4.
cap. 10.

A cause the distance thereof from Leuatra of the one side, and from Brovonacum on the other, being reduced into Italian miles, doth exactly agree with Antonines numbers: and for that the high street of the Romans, as yet evidently apparent by the ridges thereof, leadeth this way to Brovonacum by ABALLABA, whereof mention is made in the booke of Notices, which hath hitherto kept the ancient name so well, that it doth most evidently descrie and shew it selfe, yea in some fort remove all doubt. For we call it short in freed of ABALLABA Apelby. Memorable is it, for the antiquity and situation only. In the Romans time, no doubt, the Aurelian Maurus kept a station there. It standeth also in a pleasant site, encompassed for the most part with the river Eden: but so slenderly inhabited, and the building so simple, that were it not that by reason of the antiquity it had deserved to be counted the chiefe towne of the shire, and to have Sessions and Affises kept in the castle, which is the comongale for malefactors, it would be little better than a village. For all the beaurie of it is in one broad street, which from North to South riseth with an easie ascent of the hill: in the upper part whereof standeth the castle aloft, environed wholly almost with the river. In the nether end of it is the Church, and thereby a school, which Robert Langton and Miles Spenser, Doctors of the law founded; the Master whereof is Reginald Bainbrige, a right learned man, who governeth the same with great commendation; and who of his courtesie hath exemplified for mee many ancient inscriptions, and brought some hither into his garden. Neither verily was it for nought, that William of Newborough calleth this towne and Burgh Princely holds, where he writeth that William King of Scots, surprised them on the suddain, a little before himselfe was taken prisoner at Alnewick. Which King John afterwards having recovered, gave liberally unto Robert Vipont, in consideration of his singular good service to him and the state. From hence the river with his full course passeth directly North-west by Buley, a castle of the Bishops of Carlile; and by Kirby Thore, under which are seene great ruines of an old towne, and pieces of Roman coin otherwise digged up; and not long since this inscription.

Aballaba; Apelby.

But tract of time hath quite out-worne the old name, and it is called at this day Whelap Castle. If I might without prejudice to the Judges of antiquitie, I would say it were GALLAGUM mentioned by Ptolomee, which Antonine nameth GALLATUM; E the distance of journeyes accord so well, and the name doth not altogether gainsay. For what words the Britans began with GALL, the English turned into wall. Thus they called GALENA Wallingford, and Gall Sever wall of Sever, Gall-dour wall-broke, &c. Doubtlesse it was a place in old time of better note, seeing that from hence there leadeth a paved street (Maiden way they call it) to Caer Porran neare the Picts wall, 20. miles or thereabouts in length, by fells, wastes, and moores. Along which street I would willingly think, were placed those Stations and Mansions mentioned by Antonine in the ninth journey of Britain; although no man is able precisely to say in what places they stood: and no marvaile, considering that time, which devoureth and consumeth all things, hath continually fed upon their carcases so many ages together. Not far from Whelap, hard by Crawdendale, there are evident remaines of ditches, trenches, and mounts cast up: and among them this Roman inscription (the draught whereof Reginald Bainbrige before named, head schoolemaster of Appleby, took out for me) was ingraven in a craggie rocke, the forepart of which was quite eaten out with continuance of time, or thrust out by the root of a tree there growing.

Whelap castle.
Gallatun.

Maiden way.

Sff

VAR-

That is to say, by my reading --- Varronium Praefectum legionis vicesima valens B viatrix --- Elim Lucanus Praefectum legionis secunda Augusta, castrametati sum --- Varronium capitaine of the xx. legion valens viatrix --- Elim Lucanus Capitaine of the second legion Augusta, encamped, or did some such thing. For the twentieth legion called Valens viatrix, which kept residence at DEVA, that is, Westchester;
and the second legion named Augusta, that abode at ISCA, that is, Caer-Lenn in Wales, may seeme to have bene employed against the enemies in these parts, and here to have staid and kept their standing campe for a time, and that their Captains or Collonells in memoriall hereof engraven this upon the cragge. The just time I may not easily set downe. Yet to the pointing out of the verie time, there re-maine to be seen in a rocke there by, these great capitall letters engraven, CN.OCT. C COT.COSS. But in the Consular Rolles among all the Paires of Consuls, I can meet with no such names. Yet have I observed thus much, that from the time of Se- verus unto Gordian and afterwards, the letter A. in all the inscriptions of that age, everie where in this Iland, wanteth the overthwart little line or stroke, and is made thus, A.

A. for A.

Northren men
call that a whin, which the Southern men a burr.
Brovoniacum,
Brougham.

Eden holdeth on his course from hence, not farre from Howgill castle, belonging to the family of the Sandfords: but the Romane high-way goeth straight into the West by Whinfield, a large Parke shaded with trees, hard by BROVONIACUM, standing twentie Italian miles, or severene English miles from VERTERE, as An- tonine hath set it, who also hath called it Brovocum, like as the book of Notices, Bro- coniacum; which specifieth, that a companie or band of Defensors had here their abode. The beautie and buildings of this towne although time hath consumed, yet the name remaineth almost untouched, for we call it Brougham. Here the river Eimot, flowing out of a great lake, & for a good space dividing this shire from Cumberland, receiveth the river Loder into it: neere unto the spring head whereof, hard by Shape, in times past Hepe, a little monasterie built by Thomas the sonne of Gospatrick, some of Orms, there is a Well or Fountaine, which after the manner of Euripus ebbereth and floweth many times in a day: also there be huge stones in forme of Pyramides, some
9. foot high, and fourteene foot thick, ranged directly as it were in a row, for a mile in length, with equall distance almost betweene: which may seeme to have bene pitched and erected for to continue the memoriall of some act there atchieved; but what the same was, by the injurie of time it is quite forgotten. Hard by Loder, there is a place bearing the same name, which, like as Stricland neere unto it, hath imparted their names to families of ancient gentrie and worship. Somewhat above, where Lo- der and Eimot meet in one chanell, in the yeere of our Lord 1602. there was a stone gotten out of the ground, erected in the honour of Constantine the Great, with these words.

IMP.

F

* Pientissimo Augusto.

When Eimot hath served a good while for a limit betweene this shire and Cumberland, neere unto Isan-parles, a rocke full well knowne unto the neighbour inhabitants, whereunto nature hath left difficult passage, and there framed sundry caves, and those full of winding cranks, a place of safe refuge in time of danger: hee lodgeth himselfe after some few miles, both with his owne streame, and with the waters of other rivers also, in Eden, so soone as he hath entertained Blencarne, a brook that boundeth this county on Cumberland side: Neere unto which I have heard there be the strange ruines of an old Castle, the people call them the hanging walls of Mar- camonib, that is, of Marke Antony, as they would have it.

Isan-parles.

Hanging wals of Marke Antony.
Fines Term.
Mich.R.6.
H.8.
Vipounts
Armes.
Earles of West-
morland.

As for such as have borne the title of Westmorland, the first Lord, to my knowledge, was Robert de Vipont, who bare Gules, six Annulets Or in his coat armour.
For King John gave unto him the ballwicke and revenues of Westmorland, by the service of foure Knights: whereupon the Cliffords his successors, untill our daies held the office of the Sherifdome of Westmorland. For Robert de Vipont, the last of that name, left behind him only two daughters, Isabel wife to Roger Lord Clifford, and I-donea married unto Sir Roger Leybourne. Long time after, K. Richard the second D created Ralph Nevill of Raby the first Earle of Westmorland, a man of the greatest and most ancient birth of English nobility, as descended from Uctred Earle of Northumberland: whose heires successively by his former wife Margaret, daughter to the Earle of Stafford, flourished in that honour, untill that Charles by his wilfull stomack, and wicked conspiracy, casting off his allegiance to Q. Elizabeth, and covering treason under the mantle of religion, most shamefully dishonoured that most noble house, and foully steined his owne reputation by actuall rebellion, in the yeere 1599.
Whereupon hee fled into the Low countries, led a miserable life, and died as miserably. The said first Earle, to note so much incidently, by his second wife Catharine, daughter to John of Gaunt Duke of Lancaster, had so faire issue, and the name of Nevill thereby so greatly multiplied, that almost at one and the same time there flourished out, beside the Earle of Westmorland, an Earle of Salisbury, an Earle of Warwicke, an Earle of Kent, Marquesse Montacute, a Duke of Bedford, Lord Lasimer, and Lord Abergevenny, all Nevils.

In this shire are contained Parishes 26.

Sff 2

CUM.

CVMBRIA
Sive CVMBERLANDIA
Qua olim pars
Brigantium

Christophorus Saxton Descripsit
Wilhelmus filius Sculpsit

CUMBERLAND.

Westward, Northward from Westmorland lieth CUMBERLAND, the utmost region this way of the realme of England, as that which on the North side boundeth upon Scotland: on the South side and the West the Irish sea beateh upon it: and Eastward above Westmorland it butteth upon Northumberland. It tooke the name of the inhabitants, who were the true and naturall Britans, and called themselves in their owne language Kumbri, and Kambri. For the Histories testifie, that the Britans remained here a long time, maugre the English Saxons, howsoever they stormed thereat: yea and Marianus himselfe recordeth as much, who tearmed this countrey Cumbrorum terram, that is, The land of the Cumbri, or Britans: to say nothing of the places, that everie where here beare British names, as Caer-Luel, Caer-dronoc, Pen-rith, Pen-rodor, &c. which most evidently declare the same, and as cleerly prove mine assertion.

C The country, although it be somewhat with the coldest, as lying farre North, and seemeth as rough by reason of hills, yet for the varietie thereof it smilith upon the beholders, and giveth contentment to as many as travaile it. For after the rockes bunching out, the mountaines standing thicke together rich of metall mines, and betwene them great meeres stored with all kindes of wilde foule, you come to prettie hills good for pastorage, and well replenished with flockes of sheepe; beneath which againe you meet with goodly plaines spreading out a great way, yeelding corne sufficiently. Besides all this, the Ocean driving and dashing upon the shore, affordeth plentie of excellent good fish, and upbraiderh, as it were, the inhabitants thereabouts with their negligence, for that they practise fishing no more than they

p doc. The South part of this shire is called Copeland, and Coupland, for that it beareth up the head aloft with sharpe edged and pointed hills, which the Britans tearme Copa: or, as others would have it, named Copeland, as one would say Coperland, of rich mines of copper therein.

In this part, at the very mouth of the river Duden, whereby it is severed apart from Lancashire, standeth Millum Castle, belonging to the ancient house of the Hoddestones; from whence as the shore fetcheth about with a bent Northward, two rivers very commodiously enclose within them Ravenglas, a station or roade for ships, where also, as I have learned, were to be seene Roman inscriptions: some will have it called in old time Aven-glasse, as one would say, the blew river, and they talke much of King Eueling, that here had his Court and royall palace. One of these rivers named Eske springeth up at the foot of Hard-knot, an high steepe mountaine; in the top whereof were discovered of late huge stones and foundations of a castle, not without great wonder; considering it is so steep and uptight, that one can hardly ascend up to it.

Somewhat higher, Irr a little river maketh way toward the sea, wherein the muscles and cochles, after they have with a kinde of yawning or gaping sucked in dew, which they lust after to conceive by, bring forth pearles; or, to speake as the Poet doth, Shell-berries; which the inhabitants there by search after at a low water, and our Lapidaries and Jewellers buy of the poore needie people for a little, but sell again at a high rate: of these and such like Marbodus seemeth to speake in this verse, Gignit & insignes antiqua Britannia baccas.

And Britanie of ancient fame

Breeds and brings forth pearles of great name.

S f f 3

Copeland.

Millum castle.

Raven-glas.

Hard-knot near Wrinfote.

Irr a riveret.

See Plinie.
Pearles.

Now

Saint Bees.

Egremont castle.
Lords of Copeland.
Liber Inq.The sea side
fenced.

Moresby.

Deo Sylvano
Cohors secunda
Lingonum, cui
praest G. Pompeius M. Saturninus.

DEO SILVAN. --
COH. II. LING
CVI. PRÆS. --
G. POMPEIVS M. -- SATVRNIN. --

As also this fragment, which I. Fletcher Lord of the place transcribed out for me, and sent unto mee.

OB PROSPE.
RITATEM
CVLMINIS
INSTITVTI.

Morbium.

Hay castle.

But no stone hitherto hath beene found, that assureth us that it was MORBIUM, where the Cataphractarii horsemen, or men at armes served, notwithstanding the name in some sort implieth as much. Neither is Hay-castle which I saw hard by, to be passed over with silence, a place verily to be regarded for antiquity sake, which by report of the inhabitants belonged successively in elder time to Gentlemen surnamed Moresby and Distinton.

After this, the river Derwent hideth himselfe in the Ocean, which having his first beginning in Borradale, a valley hemmed in with crooked hills; creepeth betwene the mountains called Derwent Fels; wherein at Newlands & elsewhere, copper mines were discovered by Thomas Shurland, and Daniel Hochstatter; a German of Aufpurg, in our daies; and yet the same were knowne before, as appeareth by cloffe rowles of King Henrie the third n. 18. Upon the discoverie of these mines, there was a memorable case in law between the late QUEEN ELIZABETH of sacred memorie, and Thomas Percie Earl of Northumberland, in whose Lordship they were found: but in regard of the Queenes royall prerogative, and for that there were in them veins of gold and silver, they were adjudged to the Queen. But hereby it is well scene how untrue it was, that Cicero wrote in his Epistles unto Atticus: This is for certaine knowne, saith he, that there is not in the Island Britaine so much as one scruple of silver. Neither would Cesar, if he had known of these mines, have written, That the Britians had use of copper brought in to them from other parts beyond sea, seeing that the mines not onely serve all England over, but also afford great plentie beside, that is carried yearly forth of the realme.

Here also is commonly found that minerall kind of earth, or hardned glittering stone (we call it Black-lead) with which Painters use to draw their lines, and make pictures of one colour in their first draughts: which whether it bee Paigiris or Me-laneria, spoken of by Dioscorides, or Ochre, a kind of earth so burnt with heat, that it becometh blacke, or whether it were unknowne unto the old writers, I cannot certainly averre, and let others for me search it out. Derwent, after it hath passed through these hills, spreadeth abroad into a large lake, Bede termeth it pragrande stagnum, that is, a very great poole, wherein are three Ilands eminent above the water: The one hath an house in it of the Ratcliffes, a family of Knights degree: the second is inhabited by the Dutch Minerall men: the third is thought to be that, wherein, as Bede writeth, Saint Herbert lived an Heremetical life. On the very skirt of this bottom, in a pleasant soile compassed about with deawie hills; and fenced on the North side with that high mountaine Skiddaw, lieth Keswike, a little towne which King Edward the first made a mercate, by the procurement of S. Thomas of Derwent: Water Lord of the place, from whom it lineally descended to the family of the Ratcliffes: It was well knowne many yeeres agoe by reason of the mines of copper; as we may see in a certaine Charter of King Edward the fourth, and is at this day much inhabited by Minerall men, who have here their smelting house by Derwent side, which with his forcible streame, and their ingenuous inventions, serveth them in notable speed for easie bellows workes, hammer workes, forge workes, and sawing of boards, not without admiration of such as behold it. As for that mountaine Skiddaw aforesaid, it riseth up to such an height with two heads like unto Parnassus, and with a kind of emulation beholdeth Scruffell hill before it in Anandale within Scotland, that from these two mountaines, according as the mistie clouds arise or fall, the people there by dwelling, make their prognostication of the change of weather, and commonly sing this note.

If Skiddaw hath a cap,
Scruffell wots full well of that.

Like as there goes also this usuall by-word concerning the heighth as well of this hill, as of other twaine in this tract.

Skiddaw, Lanquellin, and Casticand,
Are the highest hills in all England.

From hence Derwent sometimes within a narrow channell; other whiles with a broader streame, speedeth him very fast Northward, to entertaine Cockar. Which when they meete, doe encompass almost round about Cockar a mercate towne

Copper or brasse mines.Veines of gold gold and silver.See Ploiden Reports.

Keswike.

Skiddaw hill.

towne of good wealth, and a castle of the Earles of Northumberland. The town is built faire enough, but standeth somewhat with the lowest betwene two hills: upon the one of which the Church is seated, and upon the other right over against it, a very strong castle, the gate whereof carrieth in the front the Armes of the Moltons, Humfravills, Lucies, & Percies. Opposite unto this, beyond the river two miles off, lieth the carcase of an ancient castle, called Papcastle, which by a number of monuments layeth claime to bee a Romane antiquitie: whether this were Guasimoric, which, as Ninnius writeth, King Vortigern built neere unto Luguballia, and the Englishmen of old time called Palme-castle, I cannot so easily affirme. Where among many monuments of antiquitie, was found a broad vessell of a greenish stone, artificially engraven with little images: which whether it had bin a Laver to wash in, or a font, or as one calleth it, Sacrum Regenerationis, for which purpose it serveth now at Brid-kirke, that is, at S. Brigids Church hard by, I dare not say. But I have read that Fonts were adorned with the pictures of holy men, to the end that such as were baptized might afterward have before their eyes, whose deeds they were to imitate, as saith Pontius Paulinus. For in the first plantation of Christianitie among the Gentiles, such onely as were of full age, after they were instructed in the Principles of Christian Religion, were admitted to Baptisme; and that but twice in the yeere, at Easter and Whitsonide, except upon urgent necessitie. At which times, they which were to be baptized were attired in white garments exorcised, and exorcised, with sundrie ceremonies, which I leave to the learned in Christian antiquities: but this Font we speake of was thus inscribed.

Guasimoric.

Epist. ad Sever.

Catechumeni, or hearers.

But what they signifie, or what nations characters they should be, I know not, let the learned determine thereof. The first and eighth differ not much from that which in the time of the Emperour Constantine the great, Christians used for the name of Christ: the rest in forme, though not in sound, come very neere unto those which are seene in the tombe of Gormon, a King of the Danes, at Telling in Denmark, the which Peter of Lindeberge did put forth, in the yeere 1591.

These places which erewhile I have named, together with a fourth part of the Baronie of Egremont, Wigton, Lonswater, Asparic, Udal, &c. a right faire and goodly inheritance, Maud Lucie (who was the heire of Anthony Molton or de Lucie her brother) gave unto her husband Henry Percie Earle of Northumberland; and albeit she had no issue by him, yet made she the family of the Percies her heires, upon this condition, That they should beare quarterly the Lucies Armes, &c. three * Luces Argent in a shield, Gules, with their owne Armes: or that I may use the words of the original, On condition, to give their own Armes Gules with three * Luces Argent, together with the

Armes of the Lucies and Percies.
* Pikes.
* Lucies.

the Armes of Percy, Or, a Lion Azure quarterly; and the same condition by a finelevied.

Afterwards Derwent having gathered his waters into one streame, entrencheth into the Ocean at Wirkinton, a place famous for taking of Salmons, and now the seat of the ancient family of the Curwens Knights, who fetch their descent from Gospatrie Earle of Northumberland, and their surname they tooke by covenant and composition from Culwen a family in Galloway, the heire whereof they had married; and here have they a stately house built Castle-like, and from whom (without offence or vanity be it spoken) my selfe am descended by the mothers side.

Culwen, commonly Culwen.

From hence some thinke there was a wall made to defend the shore in convenient places, for foure miles, or thereabout, by Stilico the potent Commander in the Roman state, what time as the Scots annoyed these coasts out of Ireland. For thus speaketh Britaine of her selfe, in Claudian.

Under Honorius and Arcadius.

*Me quoque vicinis pereuntem gentibus, inquit,
Munivit Stilico, totam cum Scotis Hibernem
Movit, & infesto spumavit remige Thetis.*

And me likewise at hands (quoth she) to perish, through despight Of neighbour Nations, Stilico fenced against their might, What time the Scots all Ireland mov'd offensive armes to take, &c.

There are also as yet, such continued ruines and broken walls to bee seene as farre as to Eln Mouth, which river holding no long course, hath at his spring head Jerby, a good big mercate town standing upon it. I judge it to have bene that ARBELLA, where the Baccarii Tigrienses kept their standing guard: and at his mouth Elenborough, that is, the Burgh upon Elen, where the first band of the Dolmanians together with their Captaine in old time made their abode. The neere resemblance of the name Elenborough with OLENACUM, where the First Herculean Wing lay in Garrison in the time of Theodosius the younger, is some motive to thinke that this was y^e OL^e NACUM, but yet I dare not affirme it. Seated it was upon the height of a hill, and hath a goodly prospect farre into the Irish sea: but now Corne growes where the town stood; nevertheless many expresse footings thereof are evidently to be seene: The ancient vaults stand open, and many altars, stones with inscriptions, and Statues are here gotten out of the ground. Which I. Sinbow, a very honest man, in whose grounds they are digged up, keepeth charily, and hath placed orderly about his house. In the mids of his yard there standeth erected a most beautiful four square Altar of a reddish stone, right artificially in antique worke engraven, five foot or thereabouts high, with an inscription therein of an excellent good letter: but loe the thing it selfe all whole, and every side thereof, as the draught was most lively taken out by the hand of Sir Robert Cotton of Connington Knight, a singular lover of antiquity, what time as hee and I together, of an affectionate love to illustrate our native countrey, made a survey of these coasts, in the yeere of our redemption 1599. not without the sweet food and contentment of our minde. And I cannot chuse but with thankfull heart remember that very good and worthy Gentleman, not only in this regard that most kindly he gave us right courteous and friendly entertainment, but also for that being himselfe well learned, he is a lover of ancient literature, and most diligently preserveth these inscriptions, which by others that are unskilfull and unlettered be straight waies defaced, broken, and converted to other uses, to exceeding great prejudice and detriment of antiquity.

Olenacum.

VOLANTII

A In the inscription all is as plaine as may bee; onely in the last line save one (Et and EDDS) are read by implication of the letters: the last part being maimed, may haply be amended in this wise, DECURIONUM ORDINEM RESTITUIT, &c. These Decurions were in free townes (called Municipia) the same that Senators were in Rome and Colonies, so called, because they executed the office of Curie, whereupon they were named also Curiales, who had the ordering and managing of civill offices.

Decuriones.
Isidor. l. 9. c. 4.

On the back-side of this Altar in the upper edge & border thereof, are read, as you see, these two words, VOLANTII VIVAS; which doe perplexe me, neither can I expound them, unlesse the Decurions, Gentlemen, and Commons (for of these three states consisted a Municipium, or free Corporation) added this as a well-wishing, and votive inscription unto G. Cornelius Peregrinus (who restored houses, habitations and Decurions) that so bounteous and beneficiall a man VOLANTII VIVET, that is, might live at Volantium. Hence I suppose, if conjecture may carrie it, that VOLANTIUM in times past was the name of the place. Underneath are engraven instruments belonging to sacrifice, an Axe or Cleaver, and a chopping Knife. On the left side, a Mallet and a great Basen: in that on the right side, a platter, a dish, and a peare, if my sight serve mee well; or as others would have it, a drinking cup or jugge; for these were vessels pertaining to sacrifice: and others beside, as a Cruet, an incense pan or Censer, a footlesse pot, the Priests miter, &c. which I have scene expressly portraied upon the sides of other altars in this tract. The second Altar, which I have here adjoined, was digged up at Old Carlisle, and is now to be scene in the Barbours house at Ilkirk: an inscription it had with that intricate connexion of letters one in another, as the Grayer hath here very lively portraied, and thus it seemeth they are to be read.

Volantium

Jovi Optimo Maximo. Ala Augusta ob virtutem appellata, cui praest Publius Elius, Publi filius Sergia Magni de Mursa ex Pannonia inferiore Praefectus. Apronianus (& fortasse) Bradua Consulibus.

Under Commodus Anno Christi 193.

Unto most gracious and mightie Jupiter. The Wing named for their vertue Augusta, the Captaine whereof is Publius Elius, sonne of Publius Magnus of Mursa, from out of the lower Pannonia, Praefect. When Apronianus, and (haply) Bradua were Consuls.

The third Altar, with an inscription to Belatucadrius the tutelur God of the place, is in this wise to be read.

Belatucadro Julium Civilis Optio, id est, Excubiis Praefectus, votum solvit, libens, merito.
Unto Belatucadrius, Julius Civilis Optio, that is, Praefect over the watch and ward, hath performed his vow willingly and duly.

In the fourth Altar, which is of all the rest the fairest, there is no difficultie at all, and this is the tenour of it.

Dis Deabusq; Publii Posthumii Acilianus Praefectus Cohortis prima Dalmatarum.
To the Gods and Goddeses, Publius Posthumus Acilianus, Praefect or Captaine of the first Cohort of the Dalmatians.

Such Altars as these (neither neede we think much to observe those ancient rites, which now long since the most sacred Christian religion hath chased away, and banished quite) they were wont to crowne with greene branches, like as they did the beasts for sacrifice, and themselves: and then they used with frankincense and wine to make supplication, to kill, and offer their sacrifices: yea, and their manner was to smale or anoint their very altars all over. Concerning the demolishing and overthrow

Gentiles or Heathen altars.
See in Launce
shire,

throw of which, as Christian religion came in place and began to prevail, Prudentius the Christian Poet wrote thus.

*Exercere manum non pœnitet, & lapis illic
Sisteit antiquum, quem cingere suaverat error
Fascioli, aut gallina pulmone rigare, Frangitur.*

Men thought not much their hands thus to employ,
And if in place some antique stone there stood,
Which folke were wont in error, with much joy
To garnish round with ribbands, and with blood
Of Hens to imbrue, they brake it in that mood.
These inscriptions likewise hereunder I saw there.

PROSA ----- ANTONINI AVPII F.
P. AVLVS P. F. PALATINA
POSTHVMIVS ACILIANVS PRÆF. COH. I. DELMATAR.

Publii filius.

* D M INGENVI. AN. X.
IVL. SIMPLEX PATER
* F. C.

* Dile Manibus

* Faciendum
curevit.

D M.
MORI REGIS
FILII HEREDES
EIVS SVBSTITVE
RVNT VIX. A. LXX.

HI EX SEGRE FATA
ENVS SQ. GERMA
S REG VIX. AN.
S VIX AN.
IX.

D M LVCA VIX
ANN.
IS XX.

D M IVLIA MARTIN
A VIX AN.
XII III D. XL.

There is a stone also here scene, workmanly cut, and erected for some victorie of the Emperours; in which two winged Genii hold up betweene them a guirland, as here is represented.

That

That is, for the victorie of the Augusti (or Emperours) our Lords.

When the shore hath passed on right forward a little way from hence, it bendeth so backe againe with an arme of the sea retiring inward, that it may seeme to bee that MORICAMBE which Ptolamæe setteth here, the nature of the place and the name doe so just agree. For a crooked creeke it is of salt water, and Moricambe in the British tongue signifieth a crooked sea. Hard by this, David the first King of Scots built the Abbeie de Ulmo, commonly called Holme Culrain; and the Abbots thereof erected Ulsey a fortress neere unto it, for a treasure and place of suretie to lay up their books, charters, and evidences, against the sodain invasions of the Scottish: wherein the secrets workes, they say, of Michael the Scot, lie in conflict with mothes; which Michael professing here a religious life, was so wholly possessed with the studie of the Mathematicks and other abstruse arts, about the yeere of our Lord 1290. that being taken of the common people for a Necromancer, there went a name of him (such was their credulitie) that hee wrought divers wonders and miracles. Beneath this Abbey, the brooke called Waver runneth into the said arme of the sea; which brook taketh into it the riveret Wiza, at the head whereof lye the very bones and pitifull reliques of an ancient Citie: which sheweth unto us, that there is nothing upon earth, but the same is subject to mortalitie. The neighbours call it this day Old Carlisle. What name it had in old time I know not, unless it were Moricambe.

Holme Culrain.

Michael Scottus.

CASTRA EXPLORATORUM, that is, The Espials or Discoverers Castle. The distance put downe by Antonine (who doth not so much seeke after the shortest waies, as reckon up the places of greater note and name) as well from Bulgium as Lugdunum suiteth thereto verie aptly, the situation also to discover and descry afar off is passing fit and commodious: for seated it is upon the top of a good high hill, from whence a man may easily take a full view of all the country round about. Howbeit, most certaine it is that the wing of Horse-men, which for their valour was named AUGUSTA, and AUGUSTA GORDIANA, kept reliance here in Gordian the Emperours time, as appeareth evidently by these inscriptions, which I saw hard by.

Castra Exploratorum.
See as touching the Arcans after ward in the Picts Wall.

Ala Augusta Gordiana at Il-Kirk.

* I O M.
ALA AUG. OB
--- RTUT. APPEL. CUI
PRÆST TIB. CL. TIB. F. P
IN- G- N JUSTINUS
PRÆF. * FUSCIANO
II SILANO II COS.

D M MABLI
NIVS SEC
VNDVS
*EQUIS ALE AUG
STE STIP

* Jovi optimo
maximo.

This votive altar also of a rude stone was erected for the happie health of the Emperour Gordian the third, and his wife Furia Sabina Tranquilla, and their whole family by the troupe of horsemen surnamed Augusta Gordiana, when Emilius Chrispinus a native of Africa governed the same under Nönnius Philippus Lievtenant generall of Britaine in the yeere of Christ 243. as appeareth by the Consuls therein specified.

T t t

* I O M

* I O M
 PRO SALUTE IMPERATORIS
 M. ANTONI GORDIANI P. F.
 INVICTI AUGET SABINIAE TUR IAE TRANQUILE CONJUGI EJUS TO TAQUE DOMU DIVIN. EORUM A LA AUG. GORDIA. OB VIRUTEM
 APPELLATA POSUIT: CUI PRÆEST AEMILIUS CRISPINUS PRÆF.
 EQQ. NATUS IN PRO AFRICA DE
 TUIDRO SUB CUR. NONNII PH
 LIPPI LEG- AUG. PROPRETO-----
 A T T I C O E T P R E T E X T A T O
 COSS.

An. Christ. 243

Wigron.

From hence also were altars brought, which are erected in the high way by Wigron, in the sides whereof are to be seen a drinking cup or mazar, a footstool, a mallet, a boll &c. all vessels appertaining to sacrifice. But time hath so worn out the letters, that nothing can be read. And not farre from hence just by the high street way there was digged up a long rude stone in manner of a columne which we saw at Thoresby, with this inscription, to the honour of Philip the Emperour and his sonne, who flourished about the yeere of our Lord 248.

Thoresby.

IMP CAES.
 M. JUL
 PHILIPPO
 PIO FELI
 CI
 AUG ET M. JUL. PHI LIPPO NOBILIS
 SIMO CAES
 TR. P. COS---

This also with others Ofwald Dikes a learned minister of Gods word copied out for me, and now is to be seene in the house of T. Dikes Gentleman at wardale.

DEO
 SANCTO BELA
 TUCADRO
 AURELIUS
 DIATOVA *ARAE
 X VOTO POSUIT
 LL. MM.

* For Aram in note.

Like;

A Likewise another such like altar to a private tutelar God of the place, was there found, with this unperfet inscription.

DEO
 CEATIO AUR
 M RTI. ET MS
 ERURACIO PRO
 SE ET SUI. V. S.
 LL. M.

Besides an infinite number of pety images, statues of horsemen, Eagles, Lions, Ganimedes, and many other monuments of antiquity, which are daily discovered. C Something higher a little promontory shooteth out, and a great frith or arme of the Sea lieth under it, being now the common limit confining England and Scotland, serving in times past to make a separation betweene the Romane Province, and the Picts. Upon this standeth that ancient town, BLATUM-BULGIUM (happily of Butch a Britaine word, that signifieth a separation) from which, as from the most remote place, and the limit of the Roman province, Antonine the Emperour beginneth his journeyes through Britaine. The inhabitants at this day call it Bulnesse: and as small a village as it is, yet hath it a pile; and in token of the antiquity thereof, besides the tracts of streets, ruinous walls, and an haven now stopped up with mud; there led a paved high-way from hence along the sea-shore, as farre as to Elen Bor-drugh, if we may relie upon the report of the by-dwellers.

Which the Scots call Sol-way Frith.Blatum-Bulgi-um.

Bulnesse.

The beginning of the Picts
Wall.

Solway Frith.

Trees within the ground.

Beyond this a mile (as is to be seene by the foundations at a nepe tide) beganne that WALL, the most renowned worke of the Romanes, which was the bound in times past of the Romane province; raised of purpose to seclude and keepe out the barbarous nations, that in this tract, were evermore barking and baying (as an ancient writer saith) about the Roman Empire. I marvelled at first, why they built here so great fortifications, considering that for eight miles, or thereabout, there lieth opposite a very great frith and arme of the sea: but now I understand, that at every ebbe the water is so low, that the borderers, and beast-stealers may easily wade over. That the form of these shores hath bin changed, it doth evidently appeare by the tree roots E covered over with sand a good way off from the shore, which oftentimes at a low ebbe are discovered with the windes. I know not whether I may relate here, which the inhabitants reported concerning trees without boughes under the ground, oftentimes found out here in the mosses, by the direction of dew in summer: for they have observed that the dew never standeth on that ground under which they lye.

By the same Frith, more within the land standeth Drumbough Castle, belonging of later time to the Lords of Dacre, a station in times past of the Romans. Some will have it to have beene EXPLORATORUM CASTRA, notwithstanding the distance utterly controulet it. There was also another station of the Romans beside it, which now being changed into a new name is called Burgh upon Sands: whence the territory adjoyning is named the Barony of Burgh, the which R. Mesbines, Lord of Cumberland, gave unto Robert de Trivers: but from him it came to the Morvils: the last of which house, named Hugh; left behind him a daughter, who by her second husband, Thomas de Molton had issue Thomas Molon, Lord of this place; whose sonne Thomas; by marriage with the heire of Hubert de Paulx adjoynded Gillef-land to his possessions: which in the end were sands.1307.

Burgh upon
Called Morvils de Burgh upon Sands.

Liber-Ing.

T t t 2

Edward the first.

Solway Frith.

The river Iru-
na, or Eden.
History of Malrosse.Dacre's
Barons Dacre.

Perith.

Called in old time Hæde Plompton.

were devolved all unto Ranulph Dacre, who married M. the heire of Monlon. A But for no one thing was this little Burgh upon Sands more famous, than that King Edward the first, that triumphphant Conquerour of his enemies, was here taken out of this world by untimely death. A right noble and worthy Prince, to whom God proportioned most princely presence and personage, as a right worthy feat to entertaine so heroically a minde. For hee not onely in regard of fortitude and wisedome, but also for a beautifull and a personall presence was in all points answerable to the height of royall majesty: whom fortune also in the very prime and flowre of his age inured to many a warre, and exercised in most dangerous troubles of the State, whiles she framed and fitted him for the Empire of Britain: which he, being once crowned King, managed and governed in such wise, that having subdued the Welsh, and vanquished the Scots, hee may most justly bee counted the second ornament of Great Britaine. Under this Burgh, within the very Frith wherethe salt water ebbeth and floweth, the Englishmen and Scottish, by report of the inhabitants, fought with their fleets at full Sea, and also with their horsemen and footmen at the ebbe. A thing which may seeme no lesse marvellous than that which Plinie hath reported, not without wonder, of the like place in Caramania. This arme of the sea both nations call Solway Frith, of Solway a towne in Scotland standing upon it. But Ptolomee more truly tearmeth it ITUNA: For Eden, that notable river, which wandreth through Westmorland, and the inner parts of this shire, powreth forth into it a mighty masse of water, having not yet forgotten what adoe it had to passe away struggling and wrestling as it did, among the carcasses of free-butters, lying dead in it on heapes, in the yeere of salvation 1216. when it swallowed them up laden with booties out of England, and so buried that rabble of robbers under his waves.

This river Eden when it is entred into this shire, receiveth from the West the river Eimor, flowing out of Ulse, a great lake heretofore mentioned: neer unto the bank whereof, hard by the riveret Dacor, standeth Dacre Castle, of signall note, for that it hath given surname to the honourable family of the Barons Dacre; and mentioned anciently by Bede, for that it had a monastery in those dayes; as also by William of Malmesbury, in regard that Constantine King of Scots, and Eugenius or Ewain King of Cumberland, yielded themselves there, together with their kingdoms, unto Athelstane King of England, upon condition to be protected by him.

Not much higher, and not farre from the confluence of Eimor and Loder, where is scene that round trench of earth, which the country people tearme Ariburs Table, stands Penrith, which is, if you interpret it out of the British language, The Red head or hill (for the soile, and the stones there are of a reddish colour:) but commonly called Perith: a little towne, and of indifferent trade, fortified on the West side with a castle of the Kings, which in the reigne of King Henry the sixth was repaired out of the ruines of a Romane fort thereby called Maburg, adorned with a proper Church: and the mercate place is large, with an edifice of timber therein, for the use of those that resort thither to mercate, garnished with Beares at a ragged staffe, which was the devise of the Earles of Warwicke. It belonged in times past unto the Bishops of Durham: but when Antony Bec the Bishop, overweening himselfe with over much wealth, waxed proud and insolent, King Edward the first (as wee finde in Durham book) took from him werk in Trivdale, Perith, and the Church of Simondburne. But for the commodious use of this Towne, William Strickland, Bishop of Carlisle, defended from a worshipfull Family in this tract, at his owne charges caused a channell for a water-courte to be made out of Petter-rill, that is, the little Petter, which neer unto the bank had Plumpton park, a very large plot of ground which the Kings of England allotted in old time for wild beasts, but King Henry the eighth disparted it, and wisely appointed it for habitation of men, as being in the very merches well neere, where the Realmes of England and Scotland confine one upon the other. Just by this place I saw many remaines of a decayed towne, which they there for the vicinity thereof, doe now call Old Perith.

I for

A If for my part would deeme it to be PETRIANÆ For the fragment of an antique inscription erected by ULPIUS TRAIANUS, EMERITUS an old discharged pensionary souldier of the Petrian wing, doth convince and prove that the wing Petrian made abode here. But behold both it and others which wee copied out here.

Petriana.

GADUNO
ULP TRAI
EM. AL. PET
MARTIUS.
* F. P. C.

D M.
AICETU OS MATER
VIXIT * A XXXXV
ET LATTIO FIL. VIX
A XII. LIMISIUS
CONJU. ET FILIÆ
PIENTISSIMIS POSUIT.

* Annos.

* Haply, Faci-endum procuravit.

D M
FL. MARITO SEN
IN * C. CARVETIOR
QUESTORIO
VIXIT AN XXXXV
MARTIOLA FILIA ET HERES PONEN
* ----- CURAVIT.

* Peradventure
in Cohorte.

* Dum.

D M. CROTILO GERMANUS VIX ANIS XXVI. GRECA VIX ANIS IIII.
VINDICIANUS * FRA. ET FIL. TIT. PO.

* Fratri & filie Titulum
posuit.

After that Eden hath now given Eimor entertainment, hee turneth his course Northward, by both the Salkelds, watering as hee goes obscure small villages, and fortresses. Amongst which at the lesse Salkeld, there bee erected in manner of a circle seventy seven stones, every one ten foot high, and a speciall one by it selfe before them, at the very entrance riseth fiftene foot in height. This stone the common people thereby dwelling, name Long Megge, like as the rest, her daughters. And within that ring or circle, are heapes of stones, under which, they say, ly covered the bodies of men slaine. And verily there is reason to thinke that this was a monument of some victory there atchieved, for no man would deeme that they were erected in vaine.

From thence passeth Eden by Kirk-Oswald, consecrated to Saint Oswald, the possession in old time of that Sir Hugh Morvill, who with his associates slew Thomas Archbishop of Canterbury: and in memoriall of this fact, the sword which hee then used, was kept here a long time: and so goeth on by Armanthwaye, a Castle of the Skeltons, by Corby Castle; belonging to the worthy and ancient family

Kirk Oswald.

Armanthwaye:
Corby castle.

Wetherall. family of the Salkelds, well advanced by marriage with the heire of Roskill; by Wetherall, sometime a little Abbey or Cell, which acknowledged the Abbey of Saint Mary in Yorke for her mother; where within a rocke are to be seen certain little habitations or cabbins hewed hollow for a place of sure refuge in this dangerous country. Thence by Warwic (VIROSIDUM, as I supposed) where the sixt Cohort of the Nervians in old time held their station within the limit of that wall against the Picts and Scots: and there in the latter age was built a very strong bridge of stone, at the charges of the Salkelds and Richmonds: by Linstock castle also belonging to the Bishop of Carlile in the Barony of Crosby, which Waldef, the sonne of Earle Gospatrick, Lord of Allerdale granted unto the church of Carlile. And now by this time Eden being ready to lodge himselfe in his owne arme of the sea, taketh in two rivers at once, namely, Peterill & Caud, which keeping an equall distance asunder march along from the South, and hold as it were a parallel pace just together. By Peterill, beside PETRIANÆ, which I spake of, standeth Greifstock, a castle belonging not long since to an honorable house, which derived their first descent from one Ranulph Fitz-Walter: of which line William, called de Greifstock, wedded Mary a daughter and one of the coheires of Sir Roger Merley, Lord of Morpath: and hee had a sonne named John, who being childlesse, by licence of King Edward the first, conveyed his inheritance to Ralph Granthorpe, the sonne of William, and his Aunts sonne by the fathers side: whose male progeny flourished a long time in honor with the title of Lord Greifstock, but about King Henry the seventh his dayes expired and came to an end, and so the inheritance came by marriage unto the Barons of Dacre: and the female heires generall of the last Baron Dacre, were married unto Philip Earle of Arundell, and Lord William Howard, sonnes of Thomas Howard, late Duke of Norfolke.

Upon Caud, beside the copper mines neere unto Caudbeck, standeth Highgate, a castle of the Richmonds, of ancient descent, and a proper fine castle of the Bishops of Carlile, called the Rose castle: it seemeth also that CONGAVATA was hereabout, in which the second band of the Lergi served in garison: for CONGAVATA in the British tongue signifieth, The valley by Gavata, which now is called Short Caud. But the very place where this towne stood I cannot precisely point out. Betwixt the meeting of these rivers, the ancient City Carlile is passing commodiously and pleasantly seated, garded on the North side with the chancell of Eden, on the East with Peterill, on the West with Caud: and beside these naturall fences it is fortified with strong walls of stone, with a castle and a citadell, as they tearme it. In fashion it lyeth somewhat long, running out from West to East: on the West side is the Castle of a good large compasse, which King Richard the third, as appeareth by his Armes, repaired. In the midst almost of the City, riseth on high the Cathedrall Church, the upper part whereof being the newer, is very artificially and curiously wrought: yet the lower part is much more ancient. But on the East side it is defended with the Citadell, that K. Henry the eighth built strongly with sundry bulwarks. The Romans and Britans called this city LUGU-VALLUM, and LUGU-BALLIUM, or LUGU-BALIA: the English Saxons, Luell, as Bede witnesseth: Ptolomee, as some think, LEUCOPITIA. Nennius, Caer Lualid: the ridiculous prophecies of the Britans, tearmed it The City of Du-ball, we, Carlile, and Latine writers by a newer name, Carleolum. For our Historiographers accord with common consent, that Luguballia and Carleolum were the same. But in searching out the Etymology thereof, good God, how hath Leland bestirred him, being in the end driven to this point, that he thought verily Eden was called Lugus, and Ballum came from Vallis, that is, a vale, so that Lugu-ballum foundeth as much as the Vale by Lugus. But I, if so be I may also hatch a conjecture, would rather suppose, but without prejudice, that the said termination Vallum and Vallis, are derived from that most famous military Vallum or Trench, that standeth apparent a little from the City. For that Picts Wall, which was afterwards set upon the Trench, or rampire of Severn, appeareth somewhat beyond the River Eden, which now hath a wooden bridge over it, neere unto a little village

A village called Stanwicke, and went over the very river just against the Castle: where within the chancell of the river, mighty stones, the remains thereof, are yet extant. Also Lugus or Lucus amongst the ancient Celts, or Gauls, who spake the same language that once the Britans did, signifieth a Tower, as we may learn by Pomponius Mela. For that which in Antonine is named LUGO-AUGUSTI, hee calleth TURRIM AUGUSTI, that is, The Tower of Augustus: so that Lugu-Vallum is as much to say, as the Tower or Fort by the wall. From this originall if the Frenchmen had derived Lugudunum, as it were, The tower on an hill; and Lucotecia, (for so in old time they called that city which we doe Lutetia) that is Paris, as it were, The faire Tower, (for so those words signifie in the British tongue) peradventure they had aimed nearer unto the marke, than in fetching the one from Lutum, that is, Dirt, and the other from Lugdun an imagined King. That this Carlile flourished in the time of the Romans, divers tokens of antiquity now and then digged up there, and the famous mention of it in those dayes, doe sufficiently prove. After the furious outrages also of the Picts and Scots were allayed, it retained some part still of the ancient dignity, and was counted a City. For in the yeere of Christ 619: Egfrid King of Northumberland passed a gift unto that holy Saint Cuthbert, in this forme, I have given unto him also the City called Lugballia, and 15. miles round about it: at which time also it was walled strong. The Graecians, saith Bede, brought Cuthbert to see the Walls of their City, and a fountain or well in it, built in times past according to the wonderful workmanship of the Romanes: who at the very sametime, as saith the book of Durham, ordained there a Covent of Nuns, with an Abbess and Schooles. Afterwards being defaced and brought to exceeding ruin by the Danes, it lay about 200. yeeres buried under his owne ashes: untill it began againe to flourish under the government and favour of King William Rufus, who repaired it with new edifices, built the Castle, and placed a Colony there first of Flemmings (whom streightwaies upon better advice he removed into Wales) but afterwards of Southerne Englishmen. Then was there seen, as William of Malmesbury writeth, A dining chamber after the Roman fashion, built of stone, & arched with vaults, so that no spitefull force of tempests, nor furious flame of fire could ever shake or hurt it: in the forefront whereof was this Inscription, MARI VICTORIAE, that is, To the victory of Marius. This Marius some will needs have to be Arviragus the Britan: others, that Marius, who being proclaimed Emperour against Gallienus, was named to be of wonderfull strength, that as writers report of him, He had in his fingers no veins, but all sinewes. Yet have I learned, that another, making mention of this stone, saith it was not inscribed MARI VICTORIAE, but MARTI VICTORI, that is, To victorious Mars, which perhaps may better content some, and seeme to come nearer unto the truth. * Carlile being now better peopled, and of greater resort, had, as they write, for Earle, or more truly for Lord thereof, Ralph Meschines: from whom came the Earles of Chester: and at the same time, being raised by King Henry the first to an Episcopall dignity, had Arnulph for the first Bishop: Which the Monks of Durham have written was prejudicial to their Church, when Ranulph (say they) Bishop of Durham was banished, and the Church had none to defend her, certain Bishops laid Carlile and Frisdale to their Dioceses. But how the Scottish under the reign of Stephen won this City, and King Henry the second recovered it: how also King Henry the third committed the castle of Carlile and the County to Robert Vipont: how likewise in the yeere 1292. it was burnt, together with the Cathedrall Church and the Suburbs: and how Robert Brus King of Scots, in the yeere 1315. laid siege unto it in vaine, you may finde in the common Chronicles. And yet it seemes it would quit my paines to adjoyne here two inscriptions that I saw here, the one in Thomas Aglionby his house, neere unto the Citadell, but made in the worse age.

Lucus and Lugus what they signifie among the Britans and old Gauls.

Lugdunum, Lucotecia or Lutetia in France. The old Itinerary lately imprinted, sheweth that Lugdunum implieth, a Desirable hill.

* Or de Micennin.

* Tumulum.

* Carissima.

DIIS MANIBU
SMARCI TROJANI
AUGUSTINANI * TUM. FA
CIENDUM CURAVIT
AFEL. AMMILLUSIMA
CONJUX * KARISS.

Whereunto is adjoined the image of a man of Armes on horsebacke, armed at all peeces, with a lance in his hand. As for the other, it standeth in the garden of Thomas Middleton, in a very large and faire letter, thus.

LEG. VI
VIC. P. F.
G. P. R. F.

Which is, as I ghesse, Legio Sexta, Vixrix, Pia, Felix: the rest let some other decipher.

Andrew Harcla Earle of Carlisle.

The onely Earle that Carlisle had, was Sir Andrew de Harcla, whom King Edward the second created Earle (that I may speake out of the very originall instrument of his Creation) for his laudable & good service performed against Thomas Earle of Lancaster, and other his abettors, in vanquishing the Kings enemies and disloyall subjects, & in delivering them up into the Kings hands when they were vanquished, given with a sword, and created Earle under the honour and name of the Earle of Carlisle: Who notwithstanding proved a wretched Traitor himselfe, unthankfull and disloyally false both to his Prince and country: and being afterwards apprehended, was with shame and reproach paid duly for the desert of his perfidious ingratitude, degraded in this manner: first by cutting off his spurres with an hatchet, afterwards disgorged of his military * Belt: then dispoiled of his shooes and gantlets: last of all, and was drawne hanged, beheaded, and quartered.

* Or girdle.

As for the position of Carlisle, the Meridian is distant from the utmost line of the West 21. degrees and 31. minutes; and elevation of the North pole 54. degrees and 55. minutes: and so with these encomiasticall verses of M. I. Jonston, Ibid Carlisle adue.

CARLEOLUM.

Romanis quondam statio turissima signis,
Ultimaq; Ausonidum mea, labosq; Ducum
E specula late vicinos prospicit agros,
Hic ciet & pugnas, arcet & inde metus.
Gens acris ingenio, studiis asperrima belli,
Doctaque bellaci figere tela manu.

Scotorum

Scotorum Reges quondam tenuere beati,
Nunc iterum prisca additur imperiis.
Quid? Romane putas extrema hic lumina mundi?
Mundum retrò alium surgere nonne vides?
Sic vidisse satis; docuit nam Scotica virtus
Immensis animis hic posuisse modum.

CARLILE.

Unto the Romane legions sometimes the surest Station,
The farthest bound and Captaines toile of that victorious nation.
From prospect high, farre all abroad it lookes to neighbour fields:
Hence fight and skirmish it maintaines, and thence all danger shields.
People quicke witted, fierce in field, in martiall feats well seene, Expert likewise right skilfully to fight with weapons keene.
Whilom the Kings of Scots it held, whiles their state stood upright,
And once againe to ancient crowne it now reverts by right.
What? Romane Cesar thinkest thou the world hath here an end?
And seest thou not another world behind doth yet extend?
Well maist thou see this and no more: for Scottish valour taught
Such haughty mindes to gage themselves, and here to make default.

If you now crosse over the river Eden, you may see hard by the banke Rowcliffe, a little castle erected not long since by the Lords de Dacres for the defence of their Tenants. And above it the two rivers, Eske and Leven, running jointly together enter at one out-gate into the Solway Frith. As for Eske, he rumbleth down out of Scotland, and for certaine miles together confesteth himselfe to bee within the English dominion, and entertaineth the river Kirke, where the English and Scottish parted asunder of late, not by waters, but by mutuall feare one of another, having made passing good prooffe on both sides of their great valour and prowesse. Neere this river Kirke, where is now seene by Nether-By a little village with a few cottages in it, where are such strange and great ruines of an ancient City, and the name of Eske running before it doth sound so neare, that wee may imagine Æsica stood there: wherein the Tribune of the first band of the Astures kept watch and ward in old time against the Northren enemies. But now dwelleth here the chiefe of the Grayhams family, very famous among the Borderers for their martiall disposition: and in a wall of his house this Romane inscription is set up, in memoriall of Hadrian the Emperour, by the Legion surnamed Augusta Secunda.

Grayhams.

IMP. CÆS. TRA.
HADRIANO
AUG.
LEG. II. AUG. F.

But where the River Lidd and Eske conjoine their streames, there was sometimes, as I have heard, Liddel castle, and the Barony of the Estotevills, who held lands in Cornage; which Earle Ranulph, as I read in an old Inquisition, gave unto Turgill Brun- das: But from Estotevill it came hereditarily unto the Wakes, and by them unto the Earles of Kent of the blood roiall: And John Earle of Kent granted it unto King Edward the third, and King Richard the second, unto John of Gaunt Duke of Lancaster.

Barony of Liddel.
Liddesdale.

Batable or So-lon moult.
1542.

Batable
ground.

Leven.

fter. Beyond this river Eske, the land for certaine miles together is accounted English ground: wherein Solom Masse became very famous, by reason especially of so many of the Scottish Nobility taken there prisoners in the yere 1543. What time as the Scottish resolute to set upon Sir Thomas Wharton, Lord warden of the English marches: so soone as they understood that their King had committed the command of the army to Oliver Sincler (whom they disdained) they conceived such indignation thereat, that with their owne shame and losse, breaking their ar-raies in tumultuous manner, they made a generall confusion of all: which the English beholding from the higher ground, forthwith charged violently upon them, and put them to flight: many they took prisoners, who flinging away their weapons, yielded themselves, after some few souldiers on both sides slaine, into the hands of the English, and of the borderers. Presently whereupon James the fifth, King of Scots was so disiect, that weary of his life he died for very sorrow. The land thereabout is called Batable ground, as one would say, Luigiu, because the English and the Scottish have litigiously contended about it. For the inhabitants on both sides, as borderers in all other parts, are a military kind of men, nimble, wily, alwaies in readines for any service, yea and by reasor of often skirmishes, passing well experienced. Leven, the other river whereof I spake, springing in the limir just of both kingdomes, runneth by no memorable place, unlesse it be Beucafle (as they commonly call it) a Castle of the Kings, which standing in a wild and solitary country, hath bene defended onely by a ward of souldiers. But this in publicke records is written Bueib-castle, so that the name may seeme to have come from that Bueib, who about King Henry the first his dayes, after a fort ruled all in this tract. Certaine it is that in the reigne of Edward the third it was the patrimony of Sir John of Strivelin a Baron, who married the daughter and one of the heires of Adam of Swinborne. In the Church, now much decaied, there is layed for a grave-stone this old inscription, translated thither from some other place.

In the Church-yard there is erected a Crosse about 20. foot high, all of one entire foure square stone, very artificially cut and engraven, but the letters are so worn and gone, that they cannot be read. But whereas the Crosse is chequy, in that manner as the shield of Armes belonging to the family of Faulx, sometime Lords in this tract, we may well thinke that it was erected by them.

More into the South, and farther within the countrie lyeth the Barony of Gilles-land; a little region so encombred, by reason of sudden rising brookes, which they call Gilles, that I would have deemed it tooke the name of them, had I not read in a booke, belonging to the Abbey of Lanercost, that one Gill Fitz-Bueib, who is called also Gilbert in a Charter of King Henry the second, held it as Lord in old time, of whom it is probable this name was rather given to it. Through this Gillesland, the wall of Severus, that most famous monument of all Britaine, runneth streight, as it were by a line, from Carlisle Eastward, by Stannicks, a little village, by Scalby castle, belonging in times past to the Tilliols (sometimes a name in this tract of good worship and reputation) from whom it came to the Pickerings; then Cambec, a small brooke runneth under the wall: Neere unto which the Barons of Dacre built Asker-ton castle, a little pile, where the Governour of Gillesland, whom they call Land-Sergeant, had a ward. Beneath the wall it conjoyneth it selfe with the river Irthing, where standeth Iribington a chiefe Manour, as they tearme it, of this Barony of Gil-lesland.

Scalby Castle.

Asker-ton.

Isleland: And great mins are here to be seen at Castle-peed. Neere unto it, is Brampton a little mercate towne, which we suppose to bee BREMPTURACUM, at the very line and range of the wall, for it is scarce a mile from the said wall: where in times past, lay the first Band of the Tungri out of Germanis in the declining state of the Romane Empire, and a company of Armatures, under the generall of Britaine. These were horsemen armed at all peeces. But whether these Armatures were Duplar or Simplar, it is doubtfull. Duplar or Duple Armatura they were called in those daies, who had double allowances of corne: Simplar, that had but single. Neither verily must I overpasse in silence, that hard by Brampton, there mounteth up an high hill, fortified in the verie top with a trench; they call it the Mote: from which there is a faire prospect every way into the country. Beneath this, and by Castle-peeds, like as at Trederman joining unto it, were found these inscriptions, exemplified for me by the hand of the right honourable Lord William Howard of Naworth, third sonne unto Thomas late Duke of Norfolke, a singular lover of venerable antiquitie, and learned withall, who in these parts in right of his wife, a sister and one of the heires of the last Lord Dacre, enioieth faire possessions.

Brampton.
Brempturacum.

Armatura Ve-
get. 2. 6. 7.

This stone also was found there in an old Hot-house: wherein by ill fortune the name of the Emperours Lievtenant, and Propretour of Britaine is worne out.

Neere

Neere to Brampton, Gels a riveret runneth downe; by the banke whereof in a crag called Helbecke, are read these antiquities (wherein the words hang not well together) erected, as it seemeth, by a Lieutenent of the second Legion Augusta, under Agricola the Proprætor: and others beside, which the injurie of time hath envied us:

* Perhaps Proprætor.

In the same rocke these words also are read, written in a more moderne and newer letter.

This Gels emptieth himselfe into the river Iribing, which with a swift and angry streame holdeth his course by Naworth Castle, belonging unto the Lord William Howard aforesaid, who now repaireth it: but lately to the Barons of Dacre, of whom when the last died in his tender yeeres, Leonard Dacre his Uncle, who chose rather to try the title of inheritance with his Prince by force of armes, than with his Nicces by wager of law, seized into his hands this Castle, and levied a band of rebels against his Prince: whom the Lord of Hunsdon, with the garrison souldiers of Berwick soon

A foone discomfited and put to flight: in which conflict many were slaine, but more ranne away, amongst whom Leonard himselfe escaped. But of him more in my Annales. Neerer unto the wall beyond the river Iribing, was lately found this faire votive altar, erected to the Goddess Nymphæ of the Brigantes, for the health of the Emperesse Plautilla, wife to M. Aurelius Antoninus Severus, and the whole Imperiall family, by M. Cocceius Nigrinus a Treasurer to the Emperour, when Læmus was second time Confull, with intricate connexion of letters, which I read thus.

In the yeere of Christ 216.

Here by was the Priory of Lanercost, founded by R. de Vaulx, Lord of Gillesland: and hard by the wall Burd Oswald. Beneath which, where that Picts wall passed over the river Iribing by an arched bridge, was the station of the first band Ælia Dacica, or of the Dacians (the place is now named Willoford) which the booke of Notice of Provinces, and many altars bearing inscriptions to Jupiter Optimus Maximus, reared by that Cohort here, doe plentifully prove: Of which I thought good to adde these unto the rest, although time hath almost worne them out.

Jovi optimo Maximo.

* Fortissimo Cæsari.

VVV

LEG.

LEG. VI
VIC. P. F.
F.

I. O. M.
COHIAEL. DAC
TETRICIANORO
---C. P. LUTIC
---V S. DESIG
NATUS
TRIB.

I. O. M.
COH. I. AEL.
DAC. GORD.
ANA. C. P. ---EST

I. O. M.
---HIAEL. DAC.
---C. PRAE SI.
---FLIUS FA
---S TRIB.
---PETUO.
---COS.

Lords of Gillelland.
Out of an old Mistal.
Also R. Cook
Clarencieux callect him
Ranulph. i.
Raulph. So doth Manuscript bookes of Fountaines
and Holme.

Maiden way.

The first Lord of Gillelland, that hitherto I have read of, was William Meschines, the brother of Ralph Lord of Cumberland (I meane not that William brother to Ranulph Earle of Chester, from whom came Ranulph de Ruelent, but the brother of Ralph) yet could hee never wrest it wholly out of the Scots hands: for Gill, the sonne of Bueib held the greatest part of it by force and armes. After his death, King Henry the second gave it to Hubert de Vaulx, or de Vallibus, whose shield of Armes was Chequy Or & Gules. His sonne Robert founded and endowed the Priory of Lamercest. But the inheritance after a few yeeres was by marriage translated to the Moltens, and from them by a daughter to Ranulph Lord Dacre, whose line hath flourished unto our daies in very great honour. Having now in some sort surveied the maritime coasts, and more inward parts of Cumberland, the side that lieth more Easterly, being leane, hungry, and a wast, remaineth to be viewed: and yet it sheweth nothing but the spring-head of South-Tine in a moorish place, and an ancient Romane high-way eight ells broad, paved with great stone (commonly called Mayden Way) which leadeth out of Westmorland; and where the riveret Alon, and the aforesaid South Tine meet together in one channell, by the side of an hill

A hill of gentle descent, there remaine yet the footings of a very great and ancient towne: which was toward the North enclosed within a fourefold rampier, and Westward, with one and an halfe: the name of the place is now Whueley Castle: and for to testifie the antiquity thereof, there remaineth this imperfect inscription, with letters inserted one in another, after a short and compendious manner of writing, whereby wee learne that the third Cohort of the Nervians erected there a Temple unto the Emperour Antonine, sonne of Severus.

IMP. CAES. Lucii Septimi Severi Arabici, ADIABENICI, PARTHICI, MAX. FIL. DIVI ANTONINI Pii Germanici SARMA. NEP. DIVI ANTONINI Pii PRON. DIVI HADRIANI ABN. DIVI TRAIANI PARTH. ET DIVI NERVÆ ADNEPOTI. M. AURELIO ANTONINO PIO FEL. AUG. GERMANICO PONT. MAX. TR. POT. -X- IMP. --- COS. IIII. P. p. --- PRO PIETATE AEDE --- VOTO --- COMMUNI CURANTE --- LEGATO AUG. PR --- COH. III. NERVIO --- RVM --- G. R. POS.

Whereas therefore the third Cohort of the Nervii served in this place, which Cohort the booke of Notices in a latter time placeth at ALONE, or as Antonine nameth it ALONE, and the little river running underneath is named Ale: if I should thinke this were ALONE, it might seeme rather probable than true, considering the injury of devouring time, and the fury of enemies have long agoe outworne these matters out of all remembrance.

Albeit when the State of the Romane Empire decayed most in Britain, this country had been most grievously harried and spoiled by the Scots and Picts, yet it preserved and kept long the ancient and naturall inhabitants the Britans, and late it was ere it became subject to the English Saxons. But when againe the English Saxons state, fore shaken by Danish warres, ran to ruine, it had peculiar Governors, called Kings of Cumberland, unto the yeere of our Lord 946. at what time, as the * Floure-gatherer of Westminster saith, King Edmund, by the helpe of Leoline Prince of South-wales, was sed and spoiled all Cumberland, and having put out the eyes of both the sonnes of Dunmail King of the same Province, hee granted that kingdome unto Malcolme King of Scots, to be holden of him, that he might defend the North parts of England by land and sea from the invasions and invasions of the common enemies. Whereupon the eldest sons of the Kings of Scotland were for a while under the English Saxons, and Danes both, called the Prefects, or Deputy Rulers of Cumberland. But when England had yeelded it selfe into the hands of the Normans, this part also became subject unto them; and fell unto the lot of Ralph de Meschines, whose eldest sonne Ranulph was Lord of Cumberland, and partly in his mothers right, and partly by his Princes favour together, Earle also of Chester. But King Stephen, to purchase favour with the Scots, restored it unto them againe, that they should hold it of him and the Kings of England. Howbeit K. Henry the second, who succeeded after him, perceiving that this over great liberality of Stephen was prejudiciall both to himself and his realme, demanded againe of the Scot Northumberland, Cumberland, and Westmorland: And the K. of Scots (as Newbrigenis writeth) wisely considering that the King

Kings of Cumberland.
* Florilegus.

Captaines or Rulers of Cumberland.

of England had in those parts both the better right and also greater power, although he might have pretended the oath, which he was said to have made unto his grandfather David, what time hee was knighted by him: yet restored he the foresaid marches, according to his demand, fully and wholly, and received of him againe the Earledome of Huntingdon, which by ancient right appertained to him.

Earles of Cumberland.

As for Earles of Cumberland, there were none before the time of King Henry the eighth, who created Henry Lord Clifford (who derived his pedigree from the Lords Vipont) the first Earle of Cumberland: who of Margaret, the daughter of Henry Percy Earle of Northumberland, begat Henry the second Earle: hee by his first wife, daughter to Charles Brandon Duke of Suffolk, had issue Margaret Countesse of Derby; and by a second wife, the daughter of Lord Dacre of Gilleland, two sonnes, George and Francis: George the third Earle, renowned for sea-service, armed with an able body to endure travaile, and a valorous minde to undertake dangers, died in the yeere 1605. leaving one onely daughter, the Lady Anne, now Countesse of Dorset. But his brother, Sir Francis Clifford, succeeded in the Earledome; a man whose ardent and honorable affection to vertue, is answerable in all points to his honourable parentage.

As for the Wardens of the West-marches against Scotland in this County, which were Noblemen of especiall trust, I need to say nothing, when as by the union of both kingdomes under one head, that office is now determin'd.

This shire reckoneth beside chappels, 58. Parish Churches.

VALLUM.

SIVE

MURUS PICTICUS:

That is,

THE PICTS VVALL.

Through the high part of Cumberland shooteth that most famous Wall (in no case to be passed over in silence) the limit of the Roman Province, the Barbarian Rampier, the Forefence and Enclosure, for so the ancient writers termed it, being called in Dionysius Periegetes; that is, a crosse Wall; in Herodian, Zeua, that is, a Trench or Fosse cast up; by Antonine, Cassiodore, and others, VALLUM, that is, the Rampier; by Bede, MURUS, that is, the Wall; by the Britans, Gual-Sever, Gal-Sever, Bal-Val, and Mur-Sever; by the Scottish, Scottishwaith; by the English, and those that dwell thereabout, the Picts Wall, or the Pebius Wall, the Keepe Wall, and simply by way of excellencie, The wall.

When the ambitious and valiant Romans, finding by the guidance of God and assistance of vertue, their successe in all their affaires above their wishes, had enlarged their Empire every way, so as that the very unwealdinesse thereof began now to be of it selfe fearefully suspected; their Emperours thought it their best and safest policie to limit and containe the same within certaine bounds: for in wisdome they saw, That in all greatnesse there ought to be a meane, like as the heaven it selfe reacheth not beyond the limited compasse, and the seas are tossed to and fro within their owne precincts. Now those limits or bounds, according to the natures of the places, were either naturall, as the sea, greater rivers, mountaines, waits and desert grounds; or artificiall, as frontier-fences, namely trenches or dikes, castles, keeps or fortresses, wards, mounds, and baricadoes by trees cut downe and plashed, bankes, rampiers and walls: along which were planted garrisons of souldiers against the barbarous nations confining. Whence it is that we read thus in the Novella of Theodosius the Emperour, whatsoever lieth included within the power and regiment of the Romans, is by the appointment and dispose of our Ancestors defended from the incursions of Barbarians with the rampier of a Limit. Along these limits or borders souldiers lay garrisoned in time of peace within frontier-castles and cities: but when there was any feare of waste and spoile from bordering nations, some of them had their field-stations within the Barbarian ground, for defence of the lands: others made out-rides into the enemies marches, to discover how the enemies stirred; yea, and if good occasion were offered, to encounter with them before they came to the Limits.

In this Iland the Romans, when they perceived that the farther parts of Britaine lying North were cold, and a rough barren soile, and inhabited by the Caledonian Britans and barbarous nations; in subduing whereof they were sure to take much paines, and reape very small profit, built at sundry times divers fore-fences, as well to bound, as to defend the Province. The first of these seemeth to have bene made by Julius Agricola, when he fortified with holds and garrisons that narrow space of ground that lieth betweene Edenborough Friih and Dunbretten Friih, which afterwards was eftsoones strengthened.

When TERMINUS the god of bounds, who would not give place to Jupiter himselfe, was so enforced to yeeld to Hadrian the Emperour, that he withdrew the Limit of the Roman Empire in the East to the river Euphrates, whether for envie to Trajans glory,

Frontier fences or Forts, writers termed Clusura, because they excluded the enemies; and Præ-tentura, because they were set against or affront the enemies. See P. Pithæus in adversariis lib. 1. cap. 14.

The Limits or Bounds of the Empire.

Tit. 43.

Vallo Limitis.

Hence come Stationes Agartæ in Vegetius.

The first fore-fence.

Bodotria and Glota.

S. Austin de Civ. Dei. l. 4. c. 19. The second fore-fence.

glorie, under whom the Empire extended furthest, or for feare; he likewise withdrew A the limits fourescore miles, or thereabout, within this Island, to the river Tine, and there made the second fore-fence. He, saith Spartianus, brought a wall on for fourescore miles in length (which should divide the Barbarians and the Romans asunder) raised with great stakes or piles pitched deep in the ground, and fastned together in manner of a mural or military mound for defence, as may be gathered out of that which followeth in Spartianus. And this is that fore-fence wherewith we are now in hand: for it goeth out in length Lxxx. Italian miles. About which were PONS ÆLIUS, CLASSIS ÆLIA, COHOR ÆLIA, ALA SABINIANA, which tooke their names from Ælius Hadrianus and Sabina his wife. And that Scottish Historiographer who wrote The B wheele of Times, writeth thus, Hadrian was the first of all that made a rampier or wall of a huge and wonderfull bignesse, like unto a mountaine, all of turfs digged out of the ground, with a ditch lying to it afront from the mouth of Tine unto the river Eske, that is, from the German Sea unto the Irish Ocean; which He Æor Boetius accordingly witnesseth in the same words.

Rota tempo-
rum.

The third
Fence.

Lollius Urbicus, Lievtenant of Britain under the Emperour Antoninus Pius, by his fortunate fights did enlarge the bounds againe as farre as to that first frontier fence that was made by Julius Agricola, and even there raised up a third fence with a wall. He, saith Capitolinus, vanquished the Britains, and having driven out the Barbarians, made another wall of turfs beyond that of Hadrianus. The honour of which war happily dispatched and finished in Britain, Fronto, as the Panegyricall Orator saith, ascribed unto Antonine the Emperour, and hath testified that he, although sitting still at home in the very Palace of Rome, had given charge and commission to another General for the war, yet like unto the Pilot of a Galley sitting at the sterne, and guiding the helme, deserved the glorie of the whole voiage and expedition. But that this Wall of Antoninus Pius, and of his Lievtenant Lollius Urbicus, was in Scotland, shalbe proved hereafter.

The fourth
Fence.

When the Caledonian Britons, whiles Commodus was Emperour, had broken through this wall, Severus, neglecting that farre and huge big Countrey, made a fortification C crosse over the land from Solway Frith to Tinnmouth, in that very place (if I have any judgement) where Hadrian made his wall of stakes and piles: and of mine opinion is He Æor Boetius: Severus, saith he, commanded Hadrian's wall to be repaired with Bul- D marks of stone and Turrets, placed in such convenient distance, as shalbe the sound of a trumpet, though against the wind, might be heard from the one unto the other. And in another place, Our Chronicles report, that the wall begun by Hadrian was finished by Severus. Also Hierom Surita, a most learned Spaniard, who writeth, That the Fence of Hadrian was extended farther by Sept. Severus with great fortifications, by the name of Vallum. Semblably, Guidus Pancirolus, who affirmeth, that Severus did but re-edifie and repaire the wall of Hadrian being falne downe. He, saith Spartianus, fenced Britain (which is one of the chiefe acts recorded in his time) by erecting up a wall overthwart the land, E to the bound of the Ocean on both sides the Ile: whereupon he got the title of BRITANNICUS. After he had driven out the enemies, as saith Aurelius Victor, he fenced Britaine so far forth as it was commodious unto him, &c. As also Spartianus: Againe Eutropius, To the end that he might fortifie with all safety and security the Provinces which he had recovered, he made a wall for 35. or rather more truly, 80. miles in length, even from sea to sea: That part of the land which he had recovered, as Orosius writeth, he thought good to sever from other untamed Nations by a rampier or wall: and therefore he cast a great ditch, and raised a most strong wall, fortified with many turrets for the space of an hundred and twenty two miles, from sea to sea: with whom Bede agreeth, who will not willingly heare that Severus made a wall; for that he labourerth to prove that a wall is made of stone, and a rampier, named Vallum, of stakes or piles that be called Falli, F and of turfs (whereas in very truth Vallum and Murus, that is, a wall, be indifferently used on for another.) And yet Spartianus called it Murus, that is, a wall, and should seeme to shew that he made both a wall and a trench, by these words, Post murum et pud vallum in Britannia missum &c.

Murus.
Vallum.

Howbeit, we gather out of Bede, that the said Vallum or Rampier was do-thing

A thing else but a wall of turfs: and no man can truly say that the wall of Severus was built of stone. But have here the very words of Bede himselfe: Severus having given the victorie in civill wars at home, which had fallen out to be very dangerous, was drawne into Britain upon generall revolt almost of all the allies there. Where, after great and sore battells many times fought, when he had regain'd part of the land, he thought good to have the same divided from other wild and untamed nations, not with a wall, as some thinke, but with a rampier: for a wall is made of stones, but a rampier whereby B Camps are fortified to repell the force of enemies, is made of turfs cut out of the earth round about, but raised high in manner of a wall above ground; so that there be a ditch or trench afront it, whereout the turfs were gotten, upon which are pitched piles of very strong timber. And so Severus cast a great ditch, and raised a most strong rampier, strengthened with many turrets thereupon, from sea to sea. Neither is it knowne by any other name in Antonine, or the Notice of Provinces, than by Vallum, that is, a Rampier, and is in the British tongue termed Gual-Sever. Hereto we may annexe the authoritie also of Ethelward our ancientest writer next unto Bede, who, as touching Severus, hath these words, He did cast a ditch or trench crosse over the land, from sea to sea; within it also he built a wall with turrets and bulmarkes. Which afterwards he calleth Fossam Severiam, that is, Sever's fosse or ditch: like as we read in the most ancient Annales of the English-Saxons, Sevepus Bpȳtenlāns mið ðic forȳrn þam sæ op sæ, that is, Severus foregirded and fenced Britain with a ditch from sea to sea. And other later writers in this wise, Sevepus æpȳht peal of tūpȳm þam sæ to sæ, that is, Severus in Britain made and finished a wall of turfs, or a rampier from sea to sea. William of Malmesburie likewise nameth it a famous and most notorious trench. In which very place, two hundred yeeres after, or much thereabout, a wall of stone was set up, whereof I am to speake anon.

Whereas Eutropius hath set downe the length of it to be 35. miles, Victor 32. and other Authors 32. I suppose some faults have crept into the numbers. For the land is not so broad in that place, although a man should take the measure of the wall as it stood winding in and out, rising also and falling here and there. Nay, if one should reduce it into Italian miles, he should find little above fourescore, as Spartianus hath truly reckoned them. Some few yeeres after, this Munition, as it seemes, was forler. Howbeit, when Alexander Severus the Emperour, as we read in Empridius, had once given unto the Capitaines and souldiers of the marches, those grounds and lands which were won from the enemies, so that they should be their proprietie, if their heires served as souldiers, and that they should never returne to any private men, supposing they would goe to the wars more willingly, and take the better care, if they should defend their owne peculiar possessions. Note these words well I pray you: for hence may be deduced either a kind of Fendum, or the beginning of Feuds. After this the Romans marching beyond the wall, and building themselves stations within the out-land and barbarian E soile, fortifying also and furnishing them accordingly, enlarged the limits of the Roman Empire againe as farre as to Edenborough Frith. Nevertheless, the savage and barbarous people, never ceasing to affaile them upon advantages, drave them backe now and then as farre as to Severus Trench.

Dioclesian the Emperour had a provident eye to these limits, under whom when as the whole command in Britaine was committed unto Carausius, for that he was reputed the fitter man to warre against these warlike nations, he did set up againe the fore-fence betwene Dunbritton Frith and Edenborough Frith, as I will shew in place convenient. The first that ever had blame for neglecting these limits was Constantine the Great: for thus writeth Zosimus, whereas the Roman Empire by the providence of Dioclesian was in the utmost marches thereof every where surely fenced with Townes, Castles, and Burghs, and all their military companies made their abode in them, it was impossible for the barbarous nations to passe in, but they were somerewithall at every turne by forces there set to repell them backe. Constantine abolishing this munition of Garrisons, placed the greater part of the souldiers, whom hee had removed from out of the marches, in townes that had no need of Garrisons and defence. So hee left

Why lands were given to the Capitaines of the Marches.

left the marches open to the invades of barbarous nations, without garrisons, and pestered A the Cities that were at peace and quiet with a sort of souldiers, whereby most of them are now already become desolate, and the souldiers themselves, addicted to Theatricall sports and pleasures, grew by his meanes deboshed. To conclude, and simply to speake in one word, he it was that gave the first cause and beginning that the state of the Empire runneth to wrecke and ruine.

Marcellinus
lib. 38.
About the
yeere 367.

* Magister Of-
ficiorum.

The wall betweene Eden-borrow Frith and Dunbritton Frith.

About the yeere of Christ
420.

Alciatus calleth it the Bri-vity of Theodosius.

The Countrey that lay betwene these enclosures or fore-fences, Theodosius father unto Theodosius the Emperour recovered: he re-edified and repaired the Cities, strengthened the garrison castles and the limits with such watch, and ward, and forti- cations, yea and when he had recovered the Province, restored it to the ancient e- state, in such wise, as that it had a lawfull Governour by it selfe, and was afterward in honour of Valentinian the Emperour called VALENTIA. Theodosius also his sonne, having now by his own vertue attained unto the Imperiall Majestie, had a provident care of these limits, and gave commandement that the * Master of the Offices should yeere by yeere give advice and advertisement unto the Emperour how all things went with the souldiers, and in what fort the charge of castles, holds, and fore-fences was performed. But when the Roman Empire began once to decay apparently, and the Picts, together with the Scots, breaking through the wall of Turfes by Edenborrow- frith, cruelly waisted and over-ranne these parts, the Roman legion sent to aid the Bri- tans under the leading of Gallio of Ravenna, after they had driven away and quite removed the Barbarians, being now called backe againe for the defence of France, exhorted the Britans (these be the very words of Gildas and Bede) to make a wall over- thwart the Iland between the two seas, which might serve for a defence to keep off the ene- mies, and so returned home with great triumph. But the Ilanders fall to building of a wall as they were willed, not so much with stone as with turfes, considering they had no work- man to bring up so great a piece of work, and so they did set up one good for nothing which, as Gildas saith, being made by the rude and unskilfull common multitude, without any one to give direction, nor so much of stone as of turfe, served them in no stead. As touching the place where this wall was made, Bede proceedeth to write in this manner: They rais- ed it betwene the two friths or armes of the sea, for the space of many miles, that where the sense of water failed, there by the help of a rampier they might defend the borders D from the invasion of enemies. And such a fore-fence, reaching a great length, secured Assyria from the invades of forraigne nations, as Ammianus Marcellinus writeth. And the Sres at this day, as we read in Orosius, fortifie their vales and plaine champion with walls, that they might thereby shelter and defend themselves from the violent incursions of the Scythians. Of which worke there made (saith Bede) that is to say, a most broad and high rampier, a man may see the expresse and certaine remains to this day: which beginneith almost two miles from a Monastery called Abercurving, Eastward, at a place named in the Picts language Penvalhel, in the English tongue Penvalhel, and reaching Westward, endeith neere the Citty Alclud. But the former enemies no longer per- ceived that the Roman souldiers were returned, but presently sailing thither by water, E brake through the bounds into the marches, kill and slay all before them, and whatever stood in their way, they went downe with it under foot, they ever-trample it, as if it had bin standing corne ready for harvest. Whereupon Embassadors were dispatched againe to Rome, making piteous moan, and with teares craving aide, that their miserable countrey might not utterly be destroyed, nor the name of a Roman Province, which had so long time flourished among them, waxe contemptible, being now overwhelmed with the outrage of strange nations. Hereupon a Legion was sent over, which being arrived unlodged for a winter, made great slaughter of the enemies: as for the rest that were able to slip away and escape, they drave beyond the seas, who before time made it a practice every F yeere, while no souldiers made head against them, to passe over the said seas, and raise booties. Now by this time the Romans were retired backe unto the Wall or Ram- pier of Severus, and Perlineam Valli (as the booke of Notices termeth it, which was written toward the later end of Theodosius the younger his reigne) that is on both sides as well within as without the wall, they kept a standing watch and ward in

A in their severall Stations appointed, namely five wings of Horsemen with their Cap- taines, 15. Cohorts of footmen with their Colonels, one band, and likewise one Squadron; which I have mentioned and will againe in due place. Astouching the time immediately ensuing, Bede goeth forward to relate in these words. Then the Ro- mans denounced unto the Britans, that they could endure no longer to be out-toyled and wearied with such painfull voinges and expeditions for defence of them, advising them to take weapon in hand themselves, and endeavour to fight with the enemy, who could not by any meanes be stronger than themselves, unlesse they would give way to idlenesse, and become feeble therewith: Moreover, the Romans, because they thought this also might serve their allies in some stead, whom they were forced to leave, placed a wall of strong stone from sea to sea, directly betwene the Cities, which had bene built there for feare of the enemies (where Severus also in times past had made a rampire.) Here will I also put downe the words of Gildas, from whom Bede borrowed all this. The Romans di- rectly levell a wall after their usuall manner of building, not like unto the other, at the com- mon and private charges, adjoining unto them the poore & miserable naturall home born inhabitants, from sea to sea betwixt the cities, which chanced to have bene placed there for feare of the enemies. And now heare what Bede saith againe: Which wall, that hath bene hitherto famous and conspicuow, they with publicke and private cost, having with them the Britans helping hand also, built eight foot broad and twelve foot high, in a di- rect line from East forward to West, as is evident even at this day to the beholders. Out of which words of Bede you may see that a great learned man, whiles he thinketh to hit the bird in the eye, hath missed the marke, straining and striving mightily to prove against Boetius and other Scottish writers, that Severus his wall of turfe was in Scotland. Doth not Bede write in plaine tearmes, after hee had spoken of the Earth-wall at Abercurving in Scotland, that a wall was reared of strong stone where Severus had made his of turfe? and where I pray is that wall of stone but in this place, betwene Tine-mouth and Solwey frith? where was then that wall of Seve- rus? As for the wall, there are yet such expresse tokens of it in this place, that you may tracke it as it were all the way it went: and in the * Wafts, as they tearme them, I may selfe have beheld with my owne eyes on either side, huge peeces thereof stan- ding for a great way together, only wanting their battlements.

Verily I have seene the tract of it over the high pitches and steepe descents of hills, wonderfully rising and falling: and where the fields lye more plaine and open, a broad and deepe ditch without, just before it, which now in many places is ground- ed up: and within a banke or military high-way, but in most places interrupted. It had many towres or fortresses, about a mile distant from another, which they call Castle-steeds; and more within little fenced townes, rearmed in these dayes Chesters, E the plots or ground workes whereof are to be seene in some places foure square: al- so towres standing betwene these, wherein souldiers being placed might discover the enemies, and be ready to set upon them: wherein also the Areani might have their Stations, whom the foresaid Theodosius, after they were convicted of falshood, displaced and removed from their Stations. These Areani (as Marcellinus saith) were a kinde of men ordained in old time, whose office it was to runne a great way too and fro from place to place, to intimate or give intelligence unto our Leaders what stirre and noise there was abroad among the neighbour nations. So that the first founders of this wall may seeme to have bene directed by his counsell, who wrote unto Theodosius and his sonnes as touching military affaires in this manner. Among the commodities of F State and weale publicke, right behevfull is the care concerning the limits, which in all places doe guard and enclose the sides of the Empire: The defence whereof may be best assured by certain castles built neare together, so that they be erected with a steady wall & strong towres a mile asunder one from another, which munitions verily the Land-lords ought to arreare without the publicke charge, by a distribution of that care among them- selves, for to keep watch and ward in them and in the field forefences, that the peace and quiet of the Provinces being guarded round about therewith, as with a girdle of defence, may rest safe and secure from hurt and harme.

Souldiers placed in garisons,
and along the Wall.

* In Wallis.
The Wafts.

Areani, certain discoverers,
lib. 28.

The

The dwellers hereabout talke much of a brasen trunke (whereof they found peeces now and then) that set and fitted in the wall artificially, ranne betweene every Fortrefse and Towre, so as that if any one in what towre soever, conveyed the watchword into it, the sound would have beene carried straightwaies without any stay to the next, then to the third, and so to them all one after another, and all to signify at what place the assault of the enemy was feared. The like miraculous device of the Towres in Bizantium, Xiphiline relateth out of Dion in the life of Severus. But since the wall now lies along, and no pipe remaineth there, many tenants hold farms and lands of our Kings here round about in Cornage, as our Lawyers speake: that is, that they should give knowledge unto their neighbours of the enemies approaching, by winding of an horne: which some thinke, had the first originall from an ancient custome of the Romans: who also were bound to goe by the Kings precept in the army and service for Scotland (these be the words of the Record) as they marched forth in the Vanward, as they returned home in the Rereward.

But that I may follow the tract of this wall more directly in particular, it beginneth at the Irish sea, hard by BLATUM BULGIUM or Bulnesse, and goeth on along the side of Solway frith, and so by Burgh upon Sands unto LUGU-VALLUM of Carlisle, where it passeth over Eden. From thence it runneth forth, and hath the river Irthing beneath it, crossing over Camberke, a little brooke running crooked with many turnings in and out, where are great tokens to be seene of a fortification. After this having cut over the rivers Irthing and Polarosse, it entred into Northumberland, and among the mountaines hudled together, goeth along by the side of the river which they call South-Tine without any interruption (save only that it is divided by North-Tine, where in ancient time there was a bridge over it) as farre as to the German Ocean: as I will shew in due place when I am come once into Northumberland.

Yet this admirable worke could not avert and keepe out the tempestuous stormes of forraigne enemies: But when the Romane armies were retired out of Britaine, the Picts and Scots assaulting the wall upon the sudden with their engines and hooked weapons, plucked and puld downe the garrison souldiers, brake through the fence, and overranne Britaine far and neere, being then disarmed and shaken with civill broiles, and most miserably afflicted with extreme famine. But the most wofull and lamentable misery of these heavey times, Gildas a Britan, who lived not long after, penileth our lively in these words. As the Romans were returning homeward, there appear striving who could come first out of their Caroches, in which they had passed over the vale * Sittica, like unto dusky swarmes of wormes, comming forth of their little caves, with most narrow holes at noone day in summer, and when the heat of the sunne is at the highest, a rabble of Scots and Picts, in manners partly different, but in one and the same greedy designe of bloodshed: And having knowledge once that our friends and associates were retired home, and had denied ever to returne again, they with greater confidence and boldnesse than before time attempt to possesse themselves of all the North side, and the utmost part of the land from out of the Inlanders hands, as far as to the very wall. Against these invasions there stands placed on high in a Keepe, a lasie crew, unable to fight, unskilful (God he knows) for service, trembling and quaking at the heart, which night and day saie still as benumbed, and stirred not abroad. Mean while the hooked engines of their naked and barehanked enemies cease not, wherewith the most miserable inhabitants were plucked downe from the walls, and dashed against the hard ground. This good yet did such an untimely death unto those that thus lost their lives, that by so quicke a dispatch and end, they were freed from the view of most piteous paines and imminent afflictions of their breibren and children. What should I say more? when they had left the Cities and high wall, they were againe driven to flye and hide themselves; and being thus dispersed, in more desperate case they were than they had been before. The enemies likewise presse still sorer upon them, and semblably hasten bloody carnage and slaughters one in the necke of another. And even as lambs are torn in pieces by butchers, so are these lamentable inhabitants by the enemies; inso much as their abode and continuance together might be well compared to wild beasts. For both they preyed one upon another, and by robbing also forbore not the Cornage.

The high-land Scots at this day call their little barges Caroches. * The Paris edition hath Scytica Vallum, and meaneth haply the Scottish sea.

A the short pittance of food that the poorer sort of the inhabitants had for their owne small sustentation: & also these outward calamities were encreased with domesticall commotions, so that by reason of so great robbing, pilling, and spoiling, the whole countrey wanted the stay of all kind of food, save onely that which they got by hunting, to comfort their poor pinning bodies.

But this is worth the observation, that as by the wisdom of the Romans this wall was so built, that it had two very great rivers neere to it on the inner side (as it were) for another defence, namely, Tine and Irthing, that are divided one from the other with a very narrow parcell of ground: So on the other side the barbarous people were so cunning, that in the same place especially they made their first entrance betwixt these rivers, where they might have free passage farther into the heart of the Province, without hinderance of any river: according as we will shew by and by in Northumberland. The fabulous tales of the common people concerning this wall, I doe wittingly and willingly overpasse. Yet this one thing, which I was enforced of by men of good credit, I will not conceale from the Reader. There continueth a settled persuasion among a great part of the people thereabout, and the same received by tradition, That the Roman souldiers of the marches did plant here every where in old time for their use certaine medicinable hearbs, for to cure wounds: whence it is that some Emperick practitioners of Chirurgery in Scotland, flock hither every yeere in the beginning of summer, to gather such Simples and wound-herbes; the vertue whereof they highly commend as found by long experience, and to be of singular efficacy.

The policy and wisdom of the Romans in fering of this wall.

Plants medicinalable and wholfome.

OTTADINI

OTTADINI.

After the Brigantes, Ptolomee placeth those who (according to the divers readings in Copies) are called OTTALINI, OTTADENI, and OTTADINI: In stead of all which names, I would, if I durst presume so far, with a very easie alteration substitute OTTADINI, that it might signifie, On the farther side of, or above the river Tine. And so verily would the name of the Inhabitants bee consonant with the position and site of the countrey. For these are planted beyond Tine. And the Welsh-Britans at this day call a country in Wales beyond the river Conwey, Uch Conwey: beyond the hills, Uchmynith: beyond the wood, Uch-Coed: beyond the river Gwyrrway, Uch-Gwyrrway. Neither can it be, I assure you, altogether absurd, if after the same manner they tearmed this country beyond Tine, Uch Tin: whence the Romans may seeme to have framed this name OTTADINI, by a word somewhat disjointed, but more smooth and pleasanter to the eare. And whereas Xiphilius reporteth out of Dio, that all the Britans that dwelt neere unto the wall, which we spake of even now, were called Μαράται, or ΜΑΕΑΤΑΕ, good reason it is that we should thinke these our Ottadini dwelling by the said wall, were among those Μαράται, who in that memorable revolt and rebellion of the Britans, called in the Caledonians to assist them, and take armes with them. At which time Severus the Emperour commanded his souldiers peremptorily to kill all the Britans, using these verses of Homer.

Μὴ τις ὑπερφυεῖν αἰ πὺν ὄλεθρον
Χαίρας ἢ ἡμετέρας, μὴδ' ὅν τινα γαστέρι μήτηρ
Κέρον ὄντα φέροι, μὴδ' ὅς φύροι αἰπὺν ὄλεθρον.

Let none scape cruell death,
Nor dint of sword: no nor the child unborne
In mothers womb that lies: his death is sworne.

But the tempestuous storme of this rebellion was calmed by the death of Severus, who in his very preparation for warre died at Yorke.

Long

Long after, this Countrey seemeth to have beene a part of VALENTIA. For Theodosius called it in honour of Valentinian the Emperour, after he had subdued the barbarous people, and recovered this tract or Province, which before had beene lost.

But these ancient names were quite worne out of use in the English Saxon war, and all the Countreies lying North on the other side of the Arme of the sea called Humber, began by a Saxon name to bee called Noppa-humbra-pic, that is, The Kingdome of Northumberland: which name notwithstanding being now cleane gone in the rest of the Shires, remaineth still, as it were, surviving in Northumberland onely. Which when that state or kingdome stood, was knowne to bee a part of the Kingdome of Bernicia, which had peculiar petty Kings, and reached from the River TEES to Edenborough Frith.

XXX

NORTH.

NORTH-HUMBER-LAND.

North-umber-land, which the English Saxons called Nopp-an-hum-bep-lond, lieth after a sort enclosed in fashion of a Triangle, but not with equall sides. The South side is shut in with Derwent running into Tine, and with Tine it selfe, where it butteth upon the Bishoprick of Durham. The East side the German sea lieth and beateth upon it. But the West side, which reacheth out from South-west to North-east, is first parted from Cumber-land, afterward with Cheviot and hills linked one to another, and lastly with the river Twede it affronteth Scotland, and so was the limit of both kingdomes: over which were set in this countie two Governours, the one called L. Warden of the middle Marches, the other of the East marches. The ground it selfe for the most part rough, and hard to be manured, seemeth to have hardened the inhabitants, whom the Scots their neighbours also made more fierce and hardie, while sometimes they keep them exercised in warres, and other whiles in time of peace intermingle their manners among them, so that by these meanes they are a most warlike nation, and excellent good light-horsemen. And whereas they addicted themselves as it were wholly to Mars and Armes, there is not a man amongst them of the better sort, that hath not his little tower or pile: and so it was divided into a number of Baronies, the Lords whereof in times past, before King Edward the first his dayes, went commonly under the name Barons, although some of them were of no great living. But a wife and politicke device this was of our Ancestours, to cherish and maintaine martiall prowesse among them in the marches of the kingdome, if it were nothing else but with an honourable bare title. Howbeit this title came to nothing among them, what time as under King Edward the first, those onely began to enjoy the name and honour of Barons, whom the Kings summoned unto the high Court of Parliament by speciall summons. Toward the sea and Tine, by diligence and good husbandrie it becommeth very fruitful; but elsewhere it is more barraine, rough, and as it were unmanurable: And in many places those stones Liibanhraces, which we call Sea-coales, are digged up in great plentie, to the great gaine of the inhabitants, and commoditie of others.

The hithermore part bending toward the South-west, and called Hexam-shire, acknowledged a long time the Archbishop of Yorke for the Lord thereof, and challenged unto it selfe, by what right I know not, the priviledge of a Countie Palatine. But after it became of late annexed unto the crowne land, upon an exchange made with Robert the Archbishop, by authority of Parliament it was laied unto the countie of Northumberland, that it should be subject to the same jurisdiction, and in all causes have recourse unto the high Sheriffe thereof.

South Tine (a river so called, if wee may beleeve our Britans, for that by reason of his narrow bankes hee is straight pent in, for so signifieth Tin, as they say, in the British tongue) having his spring head in Cumberland, neere unto Alfen-more, where there was an ancient copper mine, holding on his course by Lambley, sometime a Nunerie built by the Lucies, and now with floods for the most part undermined and fallen downe: also by Feiherston-Haugh, the seat of the ancient and well descended family of Fetherston, when hee is come as farre as Bellister Castle, turning Eastward, runneth directly forward with the W A L L, which is in no place three miles distant from it toward the North.

For the wall having left Cumberland behind it, and crossed over the Irthing, passed likewise with an arch over the swift river yet Potroffe, where I saw within the wall high mounts of earth cast up, as it were to over look and discover the country. Neer this standeth Tbird-wale Castle, which is not great, but strongly built, yet it gave both Wardens of the Marches.

Rank-riders.

Very many Baronies in Northumberland.

Sea-coales.

Hexam-shire.

The river South-Tine.

habitation and surname to the ancient and noble family, which was first called Wade: where the Picts and Scottish made their passage into the Province, between Irling and Tine (and that verily upon good forecast) in that place where they had free entrance by reason of no river in their way, into the inmore parts of England. But you shall better understand this, and the name of the place, out of John Fordon the Scottish Historian, whose words it will not be amisse, as I thinke, to set downe here, because the booke is not everie where to be had. The Scots (saith hee) when by conquest they had gotten the possession of those countries, which are on this side the wall, toward Scotland, began to inhabite them, and having of a suddaine raised a sort of the Country people, with their mattocks, pickaxes, rakes, three tined forkes and spades, made B wide gappes, and a number of holes in it, by which breaches they might passe in & out readily at their pleasure. Of those holes therefore this mound of the wall afterward took the name Thirlwall, which it hath at this day in this place: for in the English tongue that very place is called Thirlwall, which is as much as a wall pierced through. Then saw we Blenkensop, which gave name unto a generous family, as also their habitation in a right pleasant country Southward; which was part of the Baronie of Sir Nicholas of Bolteby, a Baron of renoune in the time of King Edward the first.

When you are past Thirlwall, the said wall openeth it selfe unto the raging river Tippall, where in the descent of an hill, a little within the wall, is to be seene the ground worke of a Castle of the Romans, in forme foure square, everie side whereof taketh an hundred and fortie paces. The verie foundations likewise of houses, and trackes of streets still appeare most evidently to the beholders. The Ranke-riders, or saking men of the borders doe report, that a great port-way, paved with flint and bigge stone, led from hence through wastes unto Maiden castle in Stanmore. Certes, it passed directly to Kirkby Thor, whereof I spake. A poore old woman that dwelt in a little poore cottage hard by, shewed unto us an ancient little altar-stone, in testimonie of some vow, with this inscription unto VITIRINEUS, a tutel God, as it seemed, of the place.

DEO
VITI
RINE---
---LIMEO
ROV
* P. L. M.

Peisit libens
merito.

This place is now named Caer Vorrán; what it was in old time it passeth my wit to find out, seeing that amongst all the stations mentioned along the range of the wall, there is not one commeth neere to it in name; neither have wee any light out of inscriptions to lead us thereunto. What ever it was, sure the wall thereby was both strongest and highest by farre: for scarce a furlong or two from hence, upon a good high hill, there remaineth as yet some of it to be seene fifteen foot high, and nine foot thicke, built on both sides with foure square ashler stone, although Bede reporteth it was not above twelve foot in heighth.

From hence the wall goeth forward more aslope by Iuerton, Forsten, and Chester in the wall, neere to Buse-Gap, a place infamous for theiving and robbing: where stood some Castles, Chesters they call them, as I have heard (but I could not with safetie take the full survey of it, for the ranke-robbers thereabout.) As for Chester, the

At the neighbours told us that it was a very great building, so that we may well think it to have been that second station of the Dalmarians, which is called in the old booke of Notice, MAGNA, where this inscription was found upon an ancient altar.

PRO SALUTE
DESIDIENIÆ
---LIANI PRÆ
ET SUA. S.
POSUIT VOT
---AO SOLVIT LIBE
NS. TUSCO ET BAS
SO COSS.

Anno Christi.
259.

This broken and imperfect altar likewise brought from thence, wee read at Melbrig, where now women beat their buckes on it.

DEAE SURI
Æ SUB CALP
URNIO AG----
ICOLA. LEG. AUG
PR. PR. A. LICINIUS
---LEMENS PRAEF
---III. A. IOR----

These two inscriptions are yet to be seene in Sir Robert Cottons house at Connington.

Which if I were able to read, thus would I willingly read it, and the draught of the letters maketh well for it. Dea Suria, sub Calphurnio Agricola Legato Augusti, Propatore Licinius Clemens Praefectus; that is, unto the goddess Suria, under Calphurnius Agricola Lieutenant of Augustus, and Propatore, Licinius Clemens the Capitaine. This Calphurnius Agricola was sent by Antoninus Philosophus against the Britans, what time as there was likely to be warre in Britain, about the yeere of Christ 170. At which time some Cohort under his command erected this Altar unto THE GODDESSE SURIA, whom with a turreted crown on her head, and a Tabber in her hand, was set in a coach drawn with Lions, as Lucian sheweth at large in his Narration of the goddess Suria. Which goddess also Nero, albeit he contemned all religion, especially worshipped for a time; and soone after so aviled and despised, that he defiled her with his urine.

The goddesse Suria.

Capitolinus.
Some will have her to be Juno,
others Venus.

Suetonius in Nero. cap. 56.

From hence wee saw Willymotes-wicke, the seat of a respected family of the Ridleyes; and hard by it the river Alon, running with a surging streame and rise of waters into Tine, namely, when both the Alons are met together in one channell. By the Easterne of the two Alons, there is to be seene a towne, now called Old-towne, but what the old name was, will not easily be found. Now to the wall againe. The next station upon the wall beyond Buse-gap, is called Seaven-shale: the name whereof, if any man would thinke with mee to come from the wing Saviniana or Sabiniana, might the more confidently say that it was that HUNNUM where the Notice of Provinces reporteth the wing Sabiniana kept watch and ward.

Alon River.

Seaven-shale.

X x x 3

Then,

Gallana.

North-Tine.

Tin-dale.

True plane.

Rheadfdale.

Lawes.

Then beyond Carraw and Walton, stands Walwick, which some conjecturally would have to be GALLANA in Antonine: in all which places there be evident remains of old fortifications.

Here there runneth through the wall North Tine, which being now come downe amaine out of the mountaines in the marches of England and Scotland, first as hee passeth Eastward, watereth Tindale, a place taking the name of him, and in the end receiving into his bosome the river Rhead, which springing out of Readsqire, a steep mountaine, where oftentimes was the True place, that is, a place of parley and conference for the East marches (for the LL. Wardens of the East marches to both Kingdomes were wont here to decide matters and controversies betweene the borderers) giveth his owne name to a dale, too too voide of inhabitants by reason of depredations.

Both these dales breed notable light horse-men: and both of them have their hills hard by, so boggy and standing with water in the top, that no horsemen are able to ride through them: whereupon (and that is wonderfull) there be many very great heapes of stone, called Lawes, which the neighbour inhabitants be verily persuaded were in old time cast up and layd together, in remembrance of some there slaine. In both of them also there be many ruinous remains of old Castles. In Tindale are Whichester, Delaley, Tarset, sometimes belonging to the Comins. In Rheadfdale are Rochester, Green-chester, Rutchester, and some others, whose ancient names are abolished and lost by the injury of long time. But seeing that at Rochester which standeth neerer into the head of Rhead, in the brow of a rocky high mountaine, that overlooketh the countrey underneath a great way (whence it seemeth to have taken this new name) there hath beene found an antique altar among the rubbish of an old castle, with this inscription,

D. R. S.

* DVPL.N.EXPLOR.
BREMEN. ARAM.
INSITVERVNT
N EIVS C CAEP
CHARITINO TRIB
V S L M.

* i. Duplaret
Numeri exploratorum
Bremeni Aram
insituerunt
Numini ejus
Capione Charitino
Tribuno
votum solvere runt libenter meritis.

A May wee not hence ghesse that BREMENIUM, for which there hath beene made so long and great search, was here, whereof Ptolomee hath made mention in this very site and position of the countrey, and from which Antonine the Emperour beginneth the first journey of Britaine, as from the utmost limit of the Romane Province in Britaine at that time? And the limits or bounds of a Dominion were seas, great rivers, Mountaines, Desert lands, and unpassable, such as be in this tract. Trenches also with their rampires, walls, mounds of trees cut downe or plashed, and Castles especially built in places more suspected and dangerous than others: to all which there are to bee seene remains here every where about. Certes, when the Barbarous nations, after they had broken through the wall of Antoninus Pius in Scotland, harried all over the countrey, and laid all wast before them, and the wall of Hadrian lay neglected unto the time of Severus, wee may well thinke that even here was set downe the limit of the Romane Empire: and that from hence the old Itinerary which goes about under the name of Antoninus began thus, A limite, that is, From the Bound. As for that which is set to it, id est, A wallo, that is, From the wall or rampier, may seeme a glosse put downe by the transcribers, considering that BREMENIUM is foureteene miles Northward distant from the said wall: unlesse it may seeme to have beene one of those out Field-stations, which, as I said even now, were placed within the Barbarians ground, beyond the Wall.

C Scarce five miles from old BREMENIUM Southward, standeth Otterburne, where there was a field most valiantly fought betweene the Scottish and English; in which the victory waved alternatively too and fro three or foure times, and fell in the end to the Scottish. For Sir Henry Percy, for his overforward spirit and youthfull heat by-named Hot-Spurre, who had the leading of the English, lost 15. hundred of his men in fight, and was himselfe led away prisoner: William Douglas also the leader of the Scots, with most of his company was slaine, so that the martiall valour of both nations was never more illustrious.

There is also another towne beneath of ancient memory, which Rhead watereth, or rather hath now well neare washed away: they call it at this day Risingham, which is in the ancient English and German language, The Giants Habitation, as Risingberg in Germany, the Giants Hill. Many shewes are there, and those right evident of antiquity. The inhabitants report that God Magon defended and made good this place a great while against a certaine Soldan, that is, an Heathenish Prince. Neither is this altogether a vaine tale. For that such a God was here honoured and worshipped, is plainly proved by these two altar stones lately drawne out of the river there, with these Inscriptions.

* DEO
MOGONTI CAD.
ET. N. D. N. AUG.
M. G. SECUNDINUS
B. F. COS. HABITA
NCI PRIMAS TA--- PRO SE ET SUI POSUIT

DEO
MOGONTI CAD.
INVENTUS DO
V. S.

* Deo Mogonti
Cadenerum
& numini Domini nostri
Augusti M. G.
Secundinus Beneficiarius
Confulis, Habitanci
Primas tam pro se & suis posuit.

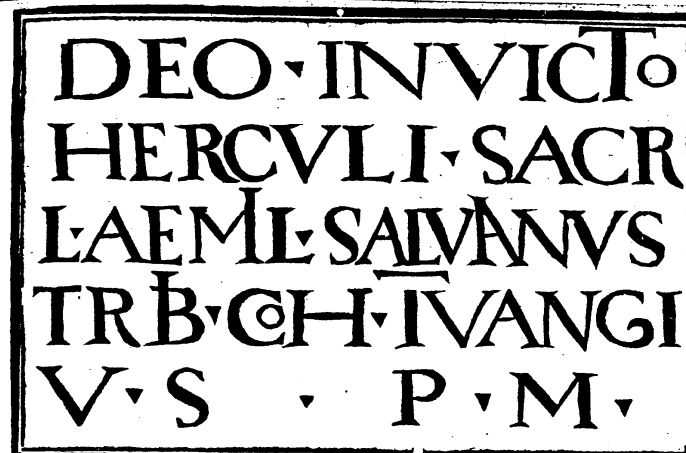

F Out of the former of these, wee may in some sort gather that the name of the place was HABITANCUM: and that he who erected it was Beneficiarius to a Conful, and Primate beside of the place. For certaine it is out of Codex Theodosii, that the chiefe Magistrates of Cities, Townes, and Castles, were called Primates. Now whether this God were the tutelar and appropriate Genius of the Gadeni, whom Ptolomee placed as next neighbours to the Ottadini, I cannot averre, let others sift and search it out. Moreover, these inscriptions also were here found: for which Primas.

* Either promoted to that place by him, or by a dispensation exempt from soldiers services.

with others, we are to thanke the right worshipfull Sir Robert Cotton of Connington A Knight, who very lately both saw them, copied them out, and most kindly imparted them to this worke.

Deo F

Cohors prima Vangionum.

Vetustate con-labsum.

And that which farre surmountethall the rest for curious workmanship, a long table in this forme artificially engraven, set up by the fourth Cohort of the Gauls-Horimen, and dedicated to the sacred Majestie of the Emperours.

But

But now leaving these particularities, Rhead a little lower carrieth both his owne A streame, and also other swelling brookes, that hee receiveth unto him by the way into Tine, and so farre reacheth Rhedesdale. Which as we find in a book of the Kings Exchequer, the umfran Vills held of ancient seofament by regall power and service, that they should keep the vale from thieves and robbers.

Testa Nevilli.

* In Vastis.
Nomades.Sheales and Shealings.
Clipches.Cilurnum.
Scilcester.
Hoveden.St. Oswald.
Cedwell, or
Caswall.Bede l. 2. c. 2.
About the
yeere 634.
Christian religion first began in Northumberland.Heafenfeld,
now Haledon.

Here every way round about, in the * Wasts as they tearme them, as also in Gil- lesland, you may see as it were the ancient Nomades, a martiall kinde of men, who from the moneth of Aprill unto August, lye out scattering and summering (as they tearme it) with their cattell, in little cottages here and there, which they call Sheales and Shealings. Then North-Tine aforesaid passing downe by Clipches, a towne belonging sometime to the umfranvills, afterward to the *Heron*s, and not farre from Swinborne a little Castle or Pile, which gave name unto a worthy family, and was in old time parcell of the Baronie of the Hairuns, now commonly called Heron, a warlike generation, now a seat of the Woderingtons; and so commeth to the Wall, running under it beneath Collersford, where a bridge of arches was made over, and where now are seen the ruins of a large castle. Which if it were not CILURNUM, wherein the second wing of the Astures lay in garrison, it was hard by at Scilcester in the wall: where, after that Sigga a noble man had treacherously murdered Ethwald King of North-Humberland, there was a Church built by the faithfull Christians, in honour of Saint Cuthbert and King Oswald; whose name so obscured the light of the other, that the old name being quite gone, it is now called Saint Oswald. This O- wald King of Northumberland, being at the point to give battaile unto Cedwall the Britan (for so Bede calleth him, whom the Britans themselves named Caswallon)
King, as it seemeth, of Cumberland, erected a Crosse, and humbly upon his knees prayed unto Christ, that he would vouchsafe his heavenly aide unto his devoted servants: and presently with a loud voice cried unto the army in this wise: Let us all kneele downe, and beseech the Almighty, living, and true God, of his mercie to defend us from our proud and cruell enemy. No signe (saith Bede) doe we finde of Christian faith, no Church, no altar throughout the whole nation to have bin erected, before that this new leader & conductor of an armie, directed thereto by faithfull devotion, did set up this sign of the holy Crosse, when he was to fight against a most savage & bloodie enemy. For when Oswald perceived in this battell the present assistance of Christ, which he had so earnestly implored, straightwaies he became a professed Christian, and sent for Aidan the Scot, to catechise and instruct his people in the Christian religion. The very place of victorie was called heafenfiels, that is, Heaven-field; which at this day in the same sense, as some will have it, is named Haledon. Concerning which have here these verses, such as they be, out of the life of the said Oswald.

Tunc primum scivit causam cur nomen haberet
Heafenfeld, hoc est, celestis campus, & illi
Nomen ab antiquo dedit appellatio gentis
Præteritæ, tanquam belli præsaga futuri.
Nominis & causam mox assignavit ibidem
Calvis expugnans celestis turba scelestam.
Neve senectutis ignavia possit honorem
Tam celebris delere loci, tantique triumpho,
Ecclesiæ fratres Hangustaldensis adesse
Devoii, Christumque solent celebrare quotannis.
Quoque loci persistat bonos in honore beati
Oswaldi Regis, ibi construxere capellam.

Then wist he first, and not before, why this place tooke the name
Of Heafenfield, that is, the field of Heaven; for the same
By those that liv'd in alder time unto it given had beene,
As if by skill divine they had this future warre fore-seene.
And even the reason of this name he there straightwaies expressed,

For

For that from heaven an heavenly troupe, a wicked crew suppressed,
Now that in time through negligence the same might normilcary
Both of the place so memorable, and this so noble victory,
The Monkes of Hangustald-Church in great devoutnesse here,
Are wont to be, and Christ to praise duely from yeere to yeere.
And that the honour of this place might still remaine entire,
In honour of Saint Oswald King, they built a Chappell there.

And another in praise of him wrote in that unlearned age, not unlearnedly, thus.

Quis fuit Alcides? quis Caesar Julius? aut quis
Magnus Alexander? Alcides se superasse Ferunt. Alexander mundum, sed Julius hostem:
Se simul Oswaldum, & mundum vicit, & hostem.

What was to Oswald Hercules? what Julius Caesar? what Great Alexander? Hercules is named much for that Himselfe he won: Xander the world: Julius made foes to flye, Oswald at once conquer'd himselfe, the world, and enemy.

Beneath Saint *Oswald*s both Tines meet in one, after that South-Tine (which keepeth just pace in parallel, as it were, with the wall, about two miles from it) hath passed by Langley Castle, where sometimes, under King John, Sir Adam de Tindale had his Barony, which afterwards came to Sir Nicolas Bolteby; and of late belonged to the Percies: and at Aidon runneth under the woodden weake bridge, and shaking through the violence of the streame Tine, by this time being now broader and broader, continueth his course in one channell apace toward the Ocean, by Hexham, which Bede calleth Hangustald, but the old English-Saxon hexcolderham. That this was named in the Romans time AXELDUNUM (where the first Cohort of the Spaniards had their station) both the name implieth, & the high situation upon an hill answerable to the name, when as the ancient Britans called an hill Dunum. But as touching this, heare what Richard Prior of this place saith, who flourished 500.
yeeres agoe. Not farre from the river Tine Southward there standeth a towne, now in these dayes verily but of meane bignesse, and slenderly inhabited, but in times past, as the remaines of antiquity do beare witnesse, very large and stately. This place, of the little river Hextold running downe by it, and swelling otherwhiles like unto a flood, with a swift streame, is named Hextoldesham: which town Etheldreda the wife of King Egfrid gave unto Saint Wilfrid in the yeere 675. that hee should exalt it with an Episcopall See; who built there a Church, that for the artificiall frame and passing beauty went beyond all the Minsters in England. Take with you also that which William of Malmesbury wrote:
This was Crown-land, when Wilfrid the Bishop exchanged with Queen Etheldreda other lands. It was wonderfull to see what buildings were erected there with mighty high walls, and how they were set out & contrived with divers turnings in & out by winding staires, all polished and garnished by the curious workmanship of Masons and Pargeters, whom the hope of his liberality had allured from Rome; so that these buildings carried a shew of the Romanes stately magnificence, and stood very long struggling with time. The fore-said King Egfrid placed an Episcopall See in this little City. But that dignity, after the eighth Bishop, vanished cleane away, whilst the Danish warres were at the hor-rest. And so ever since it was counted onely a manour or Township belonging to the Archbishops of Yorke, before the exchange made with King Henry the eighth; wherby they resigned up their right. This place was also renowned by reason of that bloody battaile wherein John Nevill, Marquess Montacute, encountered the leaders of the Lancastrian Faction with much courage, and with greater successe put them to flight: and therefore was created Earle of Northumberland by King Edward the fourth. But now all the glory that it hath is in that ancient Abbey, a part whereof

is

is converted into a faire dwelling-house, belonging to Sir John Foster Knight. As A for the Church, it standeth whole and sound, save that the West end of the roof is pulled downe: and I assure you a right stately and sumptuous building it is, with in the quire whereof is to be seene an ancient tombe of a noble man, of that warlike family of the Umfravills, as appeareth by his Escutcheon of Armes, lying with his legges acrosse. After which fashion in those dayes were they, onely entred (that I may note so much by the way) who tooke upon them the crosse, and were marked with the badge of the crosse for sacred warfare, to recover the Holy land from the Mahometans and Turkes. Hard by the East end also of this Church, upon the brow of an hill, are erected two most strong bulwarks of free stone, which belong, as I have B heard, unto the Archbishop of Yorke.

From hence we went Eastward, and came to Dilston, a mansion house of the Ra- cliffes: In old evidence it is found, written Dywellstone, of a little river running into Tine, which Bede called Dyvelsburn, where, as he writeth, Oswald having the faith of Christ for his armour and defence, in a set battaile slew Cedwalla the Britan, that wicked and horrible Tyrant, who had already slaine two Kings of Northumber-land, and depopulated the country all over. On the other banke of Tine lieth CURIA O T T A D I N U M, whereof Protonotarius maketh mention; it may seeme by the distance thereof to be CORSTOPTUM in Antonine, called at this day of the bridge, Corbridge; in Hovedons Annals, Corbridge; and in Henry of Huntingdon, Cure. C It can shew nothing now but a Church, and a little tower hard by, which the Vicars of the Church build, and wherein they dwell. Howbeit, there remaine still sundry reliques of antique worke: among which King John searched for ancient treasure, supposed to have bene buried there: But he was overtaken in his owne vanity, and deceived of his great expectation, no lesse than Nero, when hee searched for the hidden wealth of Dido at Carthage. For nothing found, hee but stones signed with brasse, iron, and lead. But who so shall see the heap of rubbish that lieth there- by, and is called Colecester, will soon say it was some hold of a Romane garison. For- ward still upon the same banke, wee saw Bewell a proper faire castle, which in the reigne of King John was the Barony of Sir Hugh Balliol, for which he did owe to the Ward of Newcastle upon Tine, thirty Knights [service.] D

Beneath this Castle there is a very goodly Weare for the catching of Salmons: and two solid piles of most firme stone, which in times past supported the bridge, stand up in the midst of the river. From hence Tine running underneath, looketh up to Prudbow Castle, in ancient bookes written Prodbow, situate very pleasantly upon the ridge of an hill. This may I ghesse to have bene PROCOLITIA, which also is called PROCOLITIA, the station of the first band of the Barabans, till time tell me more, and instruct mee better. But it is famous in this regard, that in King Henry the second his dayes it valiantly gave the check unto William King of Scots laying siege unto it; when, as William of Newborrough writeth, hee had taken great paines to no purpose, to his losse and hurt. Afterwards it belonged to the Umfravills, men of great estimation, among whom Sir Gilbert Umfravill flourishing in the profession of armes, in right of his wife attained the title of Earle of Angus in Scotland, in the reign of K. Edward the first, and left that honour to his posterity. But Eleanor, daughter to the sister, and heire of the last Earle, was married at length into the family of Talebois: and afterward this castle by the Princes bountifull gift came to the Duke of Bedford.

But to retire to the wall. Beyond Saint Oswalds there are seene in the wall the foundations of two forts, which they call Castle-Steeds: then a place named Portgate, where there stood a gate in the wall, as may appeare by the word, that in both lan- guages importeth as much. Beneath this, more within the country, is Halton-Hall; where flourisheth the family of the Carnabies, in great name for their antiquity and military prowess: neere unto which is seated Aidon castle, sometimes part of the Barony of that Hugh Balliol before named. But for as much as many places about

Men buried
with their legs
a crosse.

Bede lib. 3. cap.
1.

Treasure in vaine.
Hoveden.
Tactius.

Colecester.

A about the wall carry this name Aidon, and the very same signifieth a Military Wing, or a troupe of horsemen, in the British tongue; of which fort there were many wings placed along the Wall (as plainly appeareth by the booke of Notices) in their sta- tions; I would have the reader thoroughly to consider, whether this name was not thereupon imposed upon these places, like as Leon, upon those towries where the Legions had their standing campe: Well, hard by there was digged up the fragment of an antique stone, wherein is the expresse portraiture or image of a man lying in bed, leaning upon his left hand, and with the right touching his right knee, with these in- scriptions.

NORICI. AN. XXX.
- ESSOURIS MAGNUS
FRATER EJUS
DUPL. ALÆ SABINIANÆ.

M. MARI
USVELLI
A LONG
US. A QUI S HANC POSUIT
V. S. L. M.

Then the river Pont, having his spring head more outwardly, and running downe neere to Fenwick-Hall, the dwelling house of the worthy and martiall family of the Fenwicks, for certaine miles together gardeth the wall, and upon his banke had for a defence in garison the first Cohort of the Cornavii, at a place called PONS Æ- LIU, built as it seemeth by Ælius Hadrianus the Emperor, now called Pont-eland: at which King Henry the third, in the yere 1244. concluded a peace; and neere unto this the first Cohort of the Tungri had their abode at Bornick, which in the Notice of Provincies is called BORCOVICUS. From Port-gate the wall runneth along to E Waltonne, which, seeing the signification accordeth so well with the name, and that it standeth twelve miles from the East sea, I beleeve verily it is the same royall town which Bede called ADMURUM, wherein Seibert King of the East Saxons was by the hands of Finan baptized and received into the Church of Christ. Neere unto this was a fortification, called Old Winchester (I would gladly take it to be that VINDOLANA) which that Booke of Notice so often cited, recordeth to have bene the Frontier-station in times past of the fourth Cohort of the Gaules. And then have yee Rouchester, where we beheld very plainly the expresse footings, in form four square, of a garison Castle, that joined hard to the wall. Neere unto it Headon sheweth it selfe, which was part of the Barony of Sir Hugh de Bolebec, who fetched his descent by his mother from the noble Barons of Mont-Eicher; and had issue none but daughters, matched in wedlock with Ralph Lord Greistock, J. Lovel, Huntercomb, and Corbet. Now where the wall and Tine almost meet together, New-castle sheweth it selfe gloriously, the very eye of all the townes in these parts; ennobled by a notable haven, which Tine maketh, being of that depth, that it beareth very tall ships, and so defendeth them, that they can neither easily bee tossed with tempests, nor

Y y

Fenwick.

Pons Ælii.
Pont-Eland.

Borovicus.
Borwic.

Walton.
Ad-Murum.

Vindolana.
Old Winchester.

Barony de Bolebec.

New-castle upon Tine.

nor driven upon shallows and shelves. It is situate on the rising of an hill, very uneven, upon the North-banke of the river (which hath a passing faire bridge over it.) On the left hand whereof standeth the Castle: after that, a steepe and upright pitch of an hill riseth: on the right hand you have the Mercat place, and the better part of the City in regard of faire buildings.

Gabrosentum.

From whence the ascent is not easie to the upper part, which is larger by farre. It is adorned with foure Churches, and fortified with most strong walls that have eight gates in them, with many towres, what it was in old time it is not knowne. I would soone deeme it to have bene GABROSENTUM, considering that Gateshead the suburbe, as it were, thereof, doth in the owne proper signification expresse that British name Gabrosentum derived from Goates, as hath been said before. The Noice also of Provinces placeth Gabrosentum and the second Cohort of the Thracians in it, within the range of the wall. And most certaine it is that both the Rampier and the Wall went through this City, and at Pandon gate there remaineth, as it is thought, one of the turrets of that wall. Surely for workmanship and fashion it is different from the other.

Moreover, whereas it was named before the Conquest Monk-chester, because it was as it seemeth in the possession of Monkes; this addition Chester, which signifieth a place fortified, implyeth that it was anciently a place of strength. But after the Conquest of the New castle, which Robert the sonne of William the Conqueror built out of the ground, it got this new name New-castle, and by little and little encreased marvellously in wealth, partly by entercourse of trafficke with the Germans, and partly by carrying out sea-coales, wherewith this country aboundeth, both into foraine Countries, and also into other parts of England. In the reigne of Edward the first a rich man chanced to bee haled way prisoner by the Scottish, out of the middle of the towne: who after hee had ransomed himselfe with a great summe of money, began with all speed to fortifie the same: and the rest of the inhabitants moved by his example finished the worke, and compassed it with faire strong walls. Since which time it hath with security avoided the force and threats of the enemies and robbers, which swarmed all over the country, and withall fell to trading & merchandise so freely, that for quick commerce & wealth it became in very flourishing estate; in which regard King Richard the second granted that a sword should be carried before the Maior, and King Henry the sixth made it a County, incorporate by it selfe. It is distant from the first Meridian or West line 21. degrees and 30. minutes, and from the Equinoctiall line toward the North pole 34. degrees and 57. minutes. As touching the suburbs of Gateshead, which is conjoynted to New-castle with a faire bridge over the river, and appertaineth to the Bishops of Durham, I have already written. Now in regard of the site of New-castle, and the abundance of sea-cole vented thence, unto which a great part of England and the Low Countries of Germanie are beholden for their good fires, read these verses of Master John Jonston, out of his Poem of the Cities of Britaine.

NOVUM CASTRUM.

*Rupe sedens celsa, rerum aut miracula spectas
Natura, aut solers distrahis illa alio.
Sedibus aetheris quid frustra queritis ignem?
Hunc alit, hunc terra suscitât ista sinu.
Non illum torvo terras qui turbine terret;
Sed qui animam terris, datque animos animis.
Eliquis hic ferrum, as, hic aurum dubile fundit,
Quos non auri illex conciet umbra animos?
Quin (aurum) auro permutat bruta metalla.
Alchimia hunc igitur predicat esse deum.
Si deus est, ceu tu dicis divine Magister,
Hæc quot alit? quot alit Scotia nostra deos?*

N. V.

NEVV-CASTLE.

Seated upon high rocke shee sees dame Natures wonders strange,
Or else to others wittily doth vent them for exchange.
In vaine why seeke yee fire to fetch from heaven to serve your turne,
The ground here either keeps it close, or quickly makes it burne.
Not that which folke with stony flash or whirlewind grim affrights,
But giveth life to earthly things, and mindes to living wights.
This melteth iron, brasse and gold so pliable and soft:
What mindes th' allective shade of gold stirres not, nor sets aloft?
Nay more than so, men say it doth dull metals change to gold,
To say therefore he is a God our Alchymists are bold.
If God he be, as thou giv'st out (Great Master) of thy word,
How many Gods then doth this place, and our Scotland afford?

Scarce three miles hence (for I over passe Gosford, which was the Barony in old time of Richard Sur-Tew, who came up under King Henry the first, and lived in great honour) standeth a village named wall-end. The very signification of the name sheweth, that this was a station of the second Cohort of Thracians, which in the booke of Notices is called VINDOBALA, in Antonine VINDOMORA: for it may seeme that in the provincially language of the Britans, as the latter of them betokened The wall-end, so the former the Rampiers-end, considering that long since they termed a Wall Mur, and a Rampire Bal, Val, and Gual.

Neither is it credible that the Rampire or Wall reached any farther, seeing that beyond this place there are no tokens thereof: and Time being now very neere unto the Ocean, with his exceeding deepe channell serveth in stead of a most strong fence. Yet some there be who thinke, that the rampire, and not the wall, went as farre as to the very mouth of Time, which is called Tinnmouth; and stily affirm that it was termed Pen-bal-crag, that is, the head of the rampire in the rocke, whom I will not contradict. But I durst almost avouch, that this was in the Romanes time TUNNOCELLUM, seeing that Tunnocellum soundeth as much as the Promontory of Tunn or Time, where the first Cohort Elia Classica, enrolled (as it is probable by the very name) by Elia Hadrianus the Emperour, was in pay for sea service. For the Romans had certaine light Foists or Pinnaces, termed Lusoria, upon the rivers in the marches: as well to repress the outrodes of them that dwelt there by, as to quit them with like inrodes, as we may see in the books of Theodosius his Code, under the title, de Lusoria Danu- E hii, that is, touching The pinnaces of the river Danow. Under the Saxons Heptarchy it was called Tunnace-vep, not of Tunna the Abbot, as Bede writeth, but doubtlesse of the river; and a little Monastery it had, which was oftentimes rifled by the Danes: But now it is called Tinnmouth Castle, and takes great glory in a stately and strong castle, which, as an ancient writer saith, as the East and North side is impossible to be entered, by reason of a mighty high rocke over the sea, and in other places such is the bight of it, that it needs but small defence: Whereupon Robert Mowbray, Earle of Northumberland, made choice of it for his strongest hold, when hee rebelled against King William Rufus. But, as commonly it falleth out with rebels, he had but ill successe: who being forthwith very streightly besieged, withdrew himselfe into a Monastery hard by, which was counted a Sanctuary, and therefore not to be forced and broken; neverthelesse he was drawne out thence, and kept a long time close prisoner in misery; a just reward for his so perfidious treachery.

Now must I coast along the shore. On the back side of the Promontory, on which Tinnmouth is situate, next unto Seton, which under King Henry the third was part of the Barony Dela-wall; Seghill sheweth it selfe called in old time SEGEDUNUM, a station of the third Cohort of the Lergi, by the wall or Rampire: and verily SEGEDUNUM in British, is all one with Seghill in English.

Yyy 2

Some

Barons Seton.
Teis.Vindobala.
Vindomora.
Wall-end.

Tinnmouth.

Tunnocellum.

Naves Lusoria.
viz.

Code.

Seton.
Segedunum.
Seghill.

Barons Ogle.

Some few miles from hence, the shore maketh roome for the river Blith to fall into the sea: which river watering Belsay, belonging in times past to the Midletons, and Ogle, a Castle of the Barons Ogle, is here, together with the river Pont, discharged into the sea.

These Ogles, from the very beginning of Edward the fourth his reigne, flourished in the dignity of Barons, enriched by marrying the heires of Sir Bertram Boihall of Alan Heson, and of Alexander Kirkby. The issue male of these Barons went out lately, and expired in Cuthbert, the seventh Baron of that house: who begat two daughters, Joan married to Edward Talbot, a younger sonne of George Earle of Shrewsbury; and Katharine wife to Sir Charles Cavendish Knight.

Wentf-beck.
Barony of Mitford.

A little higher the river Wentf-beck is swallowed up of the Ocean; it runneth beside Mitford, which King John and his Ruys set on fire, when in most grievous manner they over-ranne these Countries. That age called forraigne and willing souldiers, Ruys, whom Falques de Brent, and Walter Buc brought out of the Low-Countries, and from other parts, to aide King John. Brent a wilde madbraine, was at length banished out of the Realme: But Buc a more staid man, after hee had done the King stout service, had given unto him by the King possessions in Yorkshire and Northamptonshire: and his race flourished there, untill that John Buc was attainted under King Henry the seventh: whose great grand-son is Sir George Buc knight, a man well learned, of great reading, and Master of the Kings Revels; who (for I take pleasure to professe by whom I have profited) hath observed many things in history, and gently imparted the same to me. This was sometimes the Barony of William Berthram, whose issue male soone had an end in Roger his grand-sonne; and his three daughters inheritrices were bestowed in marriage upon Sir Norman Darcy, T. Penbury, and William of Elmeley.

Morpeth.

From thence Wentf-beck passeth through Morpeth, a famous little towne. For on the North banke of the river is the towne situate, and on the South banke standeth the Church, and the Castle by it, upon a shady hill beset with trees; which, together with the town, came from Sir Roger Merley, whose Barony it was, unto the Lords of Greistock, and so from them to the Barons Dacre of Gillesland. Nothing I have of any antiquity to say of this towne, but that in the yeere of Christ 1215, it was set on fire by the inhabitants themselves in spitefull malice to King John. From hence the river Wentf-beck passeth by Borhall Castle, and the Barony sometimes of Richard Berthram, from whose posterity it was devolved unto the Barons of Ogle: Upon the bank whereof, I have thought this great while (whether truly, or upon a bare supposal I know not) that in old time GLANOVENTA stood, which was fortified by the Romans with a garrison of the first Cohort of the Morini, for defence of the marches. Which the very situation doth as it were perswade; and the rivers name, together with the signification of the same, induceth me to thinke. For it is seated within the raunge of the rampire or wall, even where the booke of Notices placeth it: the rivers name is Wentf-beck, and GLANOVENTA in the British tongue signifieth the shore or bank of Venia. Whence also Glanon, a city in France upon the sea-shore, whereof Pomponius Mela hath made mention, may seeme to have drawn that appellation.

Wishrington.

Not farre hence, to let passe little piles and towres of lesse account, is to be seene neere unto the shore Wishrington or Woderington, in the English Saxon tongue of old time called Wispington; an ancient Castle, which gave the name unto the Wishringtons, Gentlemen of good birth, and Knights, whose valour in the warre hath bene from time to time remarkable. Then the river Coquet falleth into the sea, which springing among the rough and stony mountaines of Cheviot, not farre from his head, hath Bilsedun upon it; and whence sprang the ancient family of the Selbies: and somewhat lower Southward, Harbottle, in the English Saxons tongue Heppowcle, that is, The station of the Army, whence the family of the Harbottles descended, that in the ages foregoing flourished.

Halifston.

A Castle it had in times past, but in the yeere of our salvation 1314, the Scots razed it. Close unto this standeth Halyston, as one would say Holy stone, where where the report goeth, that Paulinus in the primitive Church of the English nation baptized many thousands. And at the verie mouth of Coquet, Warkworth a proper faire Castle of the Percies standeth and defendeth the shore, where there is a chappell wonderfully built out of a rocke hewen hollow, and wrought without beames, rafters, or anie peeces of timber. This Castle King Edward the third gave unto Henric Percie, together with the Mannour of Rochburie. Afore time it had bene the Baronie of Roger Fitz-Richard, by the gift of Henric the second King of England, who gave also unto his sonne, Clavering in Essex, whereof at the commandement of King Edward the first, they assumed unto them the surname of Clavering, leaving the ancient maner of taking their names from the forename, or Christian name of the father: for before that time they were surnamed according to the forename of the father, as Robert Fitz-Roger, Roger Fitz-John, &c. Part of this inheritance the Nevills entred upon by Fine and Covenant, who afterward were Earles of Westmorland; and part of it a daughter named Eve inherited, who was wedded to Sir Th. Clifford; from whose posteritie it came hereditarily unto the Fienes Barons of Dacres. But from the younger sonnes branched the Barons of Evers, the Evers of Axholme, and the Claverings of Kalaly in this Countie, and others. Hard unto this also lieth Morwick, which may likewise boast of the Lords it had, whose issue male had an end about the yeere of our Lord 1258. and so the inheritance passed over by the daughters unto the Lumleies, Seimors, Bulmers, and Rosells.

Warkworth.

Rot. Parliament 5. Ed. 3.
Clavering.

Morwick.

Aulne river.

Alnewick.

1174.

1097.

Testa Nevill;

Carmelites.

Historie of Durham.Dunstaburg.
Bebban.

Bamborow.

The shore after this openeth it selfe to give passage unto the river ALAUNUS, which being not yet bereft of that name, whereby it was knowne unto Ptolomee, is called short Alne: Upon the bank whereof, besides Twissford, that is, A double fowrd (where was holden a solemne Synod under King Egfrid) and Eslington, the habitation of the Collingwoods (men renowned for their warlike exploits) there sheweth also it selfe Alan-wic, in the English Saxon tongue Caln-pic, now commonly called Alnewick, a towne ennobled by the victorie of Englishmen (wherein our ancestors shewed such valour and prowesse, that they tooke William King of Scots, and presented him prisoner unto King Henric the second) and fortified besides with a goodly castle: which when Malcome the third, King of the Scots, had by long siege enforced to such extremitie, that it was at the point now to bee yeelded up, hee was slaine by a souldier, that making semblance to deliver unto him the keyes of the Castle hanging at the head of a spear, ranne him into the bodie with it. And withall, his sonne Edward, whiles to revenge his fathers death he charged unadvisedly upon the enemy, was so wounded, that hee died thereof shortly after. This was a Baronie sometimes belonging to the Vescies. For King Henric the second gave it unto Eustach Fitz-John, father to William Vesci, to be held by the service of twelve knights. Sir John Vescy, of this race, returning out of the sacred warre in the Holy-land, was the first that brought with him into England the Friars Carmelites, and built for them a Covent here in Holme, a desert place, not unlike to Mount Carmel in Syria. William, the last of the Vescies, made Antonine Bec Bishop of Durham: his possie upon trust, that he should deliver this Castle, with all the lands lying thereto, unto his base sonne, the onely childe that he left behind him; but the Bishop falsly conveyed away from him the inheritance, and for readie money sold it unto William Lord Percie: since which time it hath evermore belonged to the Percies.

From hence the shore making divers angles and points, passeth by Dunstaburg, a Castle belonging to the Duchie of Lancaster, which some have untruly supposed to be Bebban; for Bebbane standeth higher, and in stead of Bebbanburg is now called Bamborow. Our Bede, where hee reports that this Castle was besieged and burnt by Penda King of the Mercians, writeth that Queene Bebb gave it this name; but the Floure-gatherer recordeth, that Ida the first King of Northumberland built it, which hee fenced first with great stakes or piles of timber, and afterward with a wall. But take here with you the description thereof out of Robert Hoveden: Bebba (saith hee) is a most strong Citie, not verie great, but containing the space of two or three fields, having into it one hollow entrance, and the same raised on high with staires after a wonderfull manner, and on the pitch of an hill, a very faire Church, and westward on the top thereof, there is a well set out with marvailous workmanship, sweet to drink of, and most pure to see to.

But in our age it is counted a castle, rather than a city, yet so bigge and large, as that it may seeme to match with a city. Neither went it for any other but a castle, when King William Rufus having raised over against it a tower called Mal-voisin, gave assault continually to Mowbray, while hee rebelled and lurked there, who at length privily stole away, & escaped by flight. The greatest part of the beauty thereof was lost long time after, in the civill warre, when Bresie the Norman, a redoubted souldier, who sided with the house of Lancaster, exercised his rage against it very outrageously. Since then it hath bene sore beaten with time, and the windes together, which have blowne by drifts an incredible deale of sand of the sea into the fortresses. Hereto adjoyneth Emildon, sometime the Barony of John Le Viscont, but Rameita the heire of that house sold away the possessions to Simon de Monfort, Earle of Leicester. In this was borne John Duns, called Scotus, because hee was descended of Scottish blood, who being brought up in Merton Colledge at Oxford, became wonderfull well learned in Logicke, and in that crabbed and intricate Divinity of those dayes: yet as one still doubtfull and unresolved, he did overcast the truth of religion with mists of obscurity. And with so profound and admirable subtilty, in a darke and rude stile hee wrote many workes, that hee deserved the title of the Subtile Doctor: and after his owne name erected a new sect of the Scotists. But hee died pitifully, being taken with an Apoplexy, and overhastily buried for dead; whiles upon returne of life, nature (though too late) was about to dislodge the violence of the disease, and hee, making meanes in vaine by a lamentable noise to call for helpe, after he had a long time knocked his head against the grave stone, dashed out his owne braines, and at last yeelded up his vitall breath. Whereupon a certain Italian wrote thus of him.

*Quaecunque humani fuerant, jurisque sacras,
In dubium veniunt cuncta vocant Scoti.
Quid? quod & in dubium illam sit vita vocata,
Moris illum simili ludificans strophâ.
Quum non ante virum vitâ jugularis ademptâ,
Quam vivum tumulo conditus ille foret.*

All learning taught in humane books, and couch'd in holy writ,
Dan Scotus darke and doubtfull made by subtilty of wit.
No marvaile that to doubtfull termes of life himselfe was brought,
Whiles with like wile and subtle tricked death on his body wrought.
When as her stroke to kill outright she would not him vouchsafe,
Untill the man (a piteous case) was buried quicke in grave.

That he was borne here in England, I avouch it out of his owne manuscript works in the Library of Merton Colledge in Oxford, and upon their faithfull testimony, which conclude in this manner: Explicit Lectura, &c. that is, Thou endest the Lecture of the Subtle Doctor in the University of Paris, John Duns, borne in a certaine little village or hamlet within the Parish of Emildon, called Dunston, in the county of Northumberland, pertaining to the house of the scholars of Merton Hall in Oxford.

On this shore forward there is nothing to be scene worth relation, but the Holy Island (whereof I will write in due place) untill a man come to the mouth of Tweed, which parteth England and Scotland a great way asunder, and is called the East-Mit: and thereupon our Necham thus writeth, insinuating that the higher part of Scotland was called Pi&-land.

Anglosâ Pi&is sejungis limine certo Flumen, quod Tuedam pristina lingua vocat.

The

The river Tweede, a certaine bound,
Divides * Pi&-land from English ground.

This river breaking forth at a number of Springs out of the mountaines of Scotland, wandereth a great while with many a crooked winding in and out, among the ranke-riders and borderers (to give them no worse tearme) whose manner is, as one saith, to try their right by the swords point. But when hee is come hard to a village called Carram, waxing a great deale bigger by reason of many waters fallen unto him, hee begins to distinguish the Confines of the Kingdomes. And when hee hath watered Werke, a Castle often assaulted by the Scottish, belonging in times past to the Rosses, and now to the Graies, who by feats of armes have wonne much honour, hee is increased more with the streame of Till, a river that hath two names. For at the head, which is in the innermore part of this country, it is called Bramish, and upon it standeth Bramton, a little village, very obscure and almost of no reckoning: from whence it goeth Northward by Bengeley, which together with Brampton it selfe, with Broundum, Rodam (which hath given name to a stock in this tract of good note) Edellingham, &c. was in King Henry the third his time the Barony of Patrick Earle of Dunbar: who also, as we read in the book of Inquisitions, was Inborow and Outborow betwene England and Scotland, that is to say if I mistake it not, he was to allow and observe in this part, the ingresse and egress of those that travailed too and fro betwene both Realmes. For Englishmen in ancient time called in their language an Entry, and fore Court or Gatehouse, Inbopou. Higher somewhat standeth Chevelingham, now called Chillingham, hard by the river, which, like as Horion not farre distant from it, had their Castles belonging to the Greies, ever since that those two families of the Greies were conjoynd in one by marriage.

There lyeth neere unto it Wollover, a Barony which King Henry the first gave to *Robert * Muschampe*, who bare Azure three Butterflies or Papilions Argent: of whose race descended Robert, who in Henry the third his reigne was reputed the mightiest Baron in these North parts. But the inheritance was quickly dismembered and parted among the females: one of whom was married unto the Earle of D Strathorne in Scotland, a second to Sir William de Huntercombe, and a third to Odonell Ford. Then the river of Glen from out of the West augmenteth Till with his waters, and nameth the vale that he runneth thorow Glendale. Touching this little river Bede writeth thus: Paulinus coming with the King and Queen into a Manour or house of the Kings, called Ad-Gebrin (at this day Teverin) abode with them 36. daies there, employed wholly in the catechizing and baptizing: during all which time he did nothing from morning but instruct the people resorting to him in the saving word of Christ, and being thus instructed, he baptised them to the forgiveness of their sinnes in the river of Glen, which was hard by. This house was in the time of the succeeding Kings neglected, and another made for it in a place called Melmin, but at this day Melfeld.

Here within a little of Brum-ridge, by Brumeford, K. Athelstan fought a pitched field with Aulase the Dane, Constantine K. of Scots, and Eugenius or Owein Prince of Cumberland, with so fortunate successe, that this battaile was most famous farre and neere, yea and triumphantly described by the Historians and Poets of that time in the highest degree, with stately stile and lofty verse in the language of that age, in barbarous Latin.

Here Bramish, losing his owne name, comes to bee called Till, and first saluteth Ford Castle, belonging sometimes to the warlike and valiant house of the *Heron*s, now to the family of the Carrs: then Etall, where the family surnamed De Maneris, or Manours sometimes inhabited, reckoned in the ranke of worshipfull Knights, out of which flourish the right honourable Earles of Rutland at this day. Many small castles and piles in this tract I wittingly let passe: For an endlesse peece of worke it were to goe through them all one by one, considering it is certaine that in King Henry the second his time there were eleven hundred and fiftene Castles in England.

Yyy 4

Right

* Male vicina.

Viscounts.

Jo. Scotus the subtle Doctor flourished in the yeere 1300.Paul. Jovius in Elogiis Docto-rum.The river
Tweede.

Carram.

Werke.

River Bramish.

Bramton.

Inborow and Outborow
what they sig-
nifie.Wollover.
* De Musco Campo.
Fin. 3. H. 3.
Glendale.
Lib. 2. cap. 14.

Melfeld.

The battaile of Brunford.See Henry
Huntingdon;
William
Malmesbur.
and Ingulph.Fort.
Etall.Castles 1115.
in England.

Right over against this Ford westward, there mounteth aloft an high hill called A Floddon neere Bramson, memorable in regard of James the fourth, King of Scots, who was there slaine, and his army overthrowne: who, whiles King Henry the eighth lay at the siege of Tournay in France, marched forward in great courage, and greater hope with Banner displayed against England. But Thomas Howard Earle of Surry, arraunged in good order of battaile, valiantly in this place received him: where the fight continued sharpe and hot on both parts, untill the night came upon them, uncertaine as then whether side had the victory. But the day ensuing manifested both the Conquerour and conquered: and the King of Scots himselfe with many a mortall wound, was found among the heapes of dead bodies. And hereupon was granted a new augmentation unto the Armes of the Howards, as I have formerly specified.

Tweede having now entertained Till, runneth downe with a fuller streame by Norham or Northam, in old time called Ubbanford, a towne belonging to the Bishops of Durham. For Egfrid the Bishop built it, and Raulph his successour erected a Castle upon the top of an high steepe rocke, and fortified it with a trench: in the more wall whereof, which is of greater circuit, are placed sundry turrets in a Canon toward the river: within there is another enclosure or wall much stronger: in the midst of which there riseth up the Keepe of great height. But the secure peace of our age, hath now a long time neglected these fortifications, albeit they stand in the borders. Under it lieth the towne in a plaine Westward, and hath in it a Church, wherein was entered Ceolwulph King of Northumberland, unto whom Venerable Bede dedicated his booke of the Ecclesiastical history of England; and who afterwards renouncing the world, became a Monke in Lindisfarn Church, and served as a Christian souldier for the Kingdome of heaven, and his body was conveyed after that into the Church of Norham. Also when the Danes harried and spoiled the Holy Island, where Saint Cuthbert, whom Bede so highly extollet, both late as Bishop, and lay buried: and some went about by a devout and religious kind of stealth, to transport his body over; by occasion that the winds were against them, they laid the sacred body downe with due honour at Ubbanford, (whether it were an Episcopall See or no, it is uncertaine) hard by the river Tweede, and there it lay for many yeeres together, untill the coming of K. Etheldred. Of this, and of other things, I had information (for I will never conceale by whom I have found any good) by George Carleton borne here, as who was the Castellanes sonne of this place; whom for that I have loved in regard of his singular knowledge in Divinity (which hee professeth) and in other more delightful literature, and am loved againe of him, I were not worthy I assure you of love, if I did not acknowledge thus much. Beneath Norham, at Killey a little village hard by, were found, as I have heard old men say, in our grandfatheres remembrance, the ornaments or Harnish of a Knights belt, and the hilt of a sword of massie gold, which were presented unto Thomas Ruthall then Bishop of Durham.

A little lower appeareth the Mouth of Tweede; upon the farther side whereof standeth Berwicke, the utmost towne in England, and the strongest hold in all Britaine. Which name some derive from one Berengarism a Duke, whom they never heard of, unless it were in a dreame. Leland fetcheth it from Aber, which in the British tongue signifieth the mouth of a river, so that Aberwic should sound as much as The towne by the rivers mouth. But he that knowes what Berwic in the Charters of our Kings signifieth, wherein nothing is more common than these words, I give C. and D. that is, such and such townes, cum suis Berniciis, surely he must needs understand the true Etymologie of this Berwicke. For mine owne part I cannot conjecture what it meaneth, unless it be a Village or Hamlet annexed, as it were a parcell of the Demesne, unto some place of greater reckoning. For in the donations of Edward the Confessor, Touhill is called the Berwicke of Westminster, and Wandleworth the Berwicke of Parisseie, and a hundred such. But to what end is all this? Surely we doe but lose this labour, if, as some will have it, the name thereof were in old time Beornica, in

William
Malmesbury
lib. 1. de Gestis
Pontificum
In printed books corruptly ye read Bubbeford.

In gulph expoundeth Ber-wicke a Ma-nour.

A in the English Saxon tongue, that is, The towne or village of the Bernicians. Now that these countries were named Bernicia, it is better knowne than can bee said, and I have already notified as much. But whence soever it hath the name, it is so situate that it shooteth farre into the sea, in so much as it is well neere compassed about with the sea, and Tweede together; and seated betwixt two most mighty Kingdomes, as Pliny hath reported of Palmyra in Syria. It was the first thing alwayes that both nations tooke care of whensoever they were at any discord: so that since the time that King Edward the first of that name, first wrested it perforce out of the Scots hands, the Scots have oftentimes repossessed it, and the Englishmen as often recovered it from them againe. But let us here (if you please) abridge the History thereof. Of this Berwicke I have read nothing of greater antiquity than this, that William King of Scots being taken Prisoner in the field by the English, delivered it up unto our King Henry the second for his enlargement out of prison, on this condition, that unless by a certaine day appointed hee paid a summe of money for his ransom, it should belong unto the Crowne of England for ever; and presently, as it is in the Polychronicon of Durham, the said King Henry fortified it with a Castle. Howbeit King Richard the first, upon payment of the money released it againe unto the Scottish. Afterwards King John, as we read in the history of Melrose, wonne both the towne and Castle of Berwick, what time as he with his Rutars burnt Werke, Roxburgh, Musford and Morpeth, yea and laid all Northumberland wast, because the Barons of Northumberland had done homage at Felton to Alexander King of Scots. Many yeeres after, when John Balioll King of Scots had broken his oath, King Edward the first, in the yeere of salvation 1297. brought Berwick under his subjection: yet within a little while after, when the fortune of warre began to smile upon the Scots, they surprisid it standing for-let and neglected, but straightwayes it was yeilded up, and the English became Masters of it. Afterward, in that loose reigne of King Edward the second, Peter Spalding betraied it unto Robert Bruce King of the Scots, who hotly assaulted it: and the English laid siege unto it in vaine, untill that our Heftor, King Edward the third, in the yeere of Christ 1333. setting valiantly upon it, wonne it as happily. Howbeit in the reigne of Richard the second, certaine Scottish robbers upon a sudden surprisid the Castle: but within nine dayes Henry Percy Earle of Northumberland regained it. Scarce seven yeeres were overpassed, when the Scots recovered it againe, not by force but by money: For which cause, the said Henry Percy, Governour of the place, was accused of high treason: but he, with money likewise corrupted both their faith and fortitude, and streightway got it in his hands againe. A great while after, when England was even pining by reason of civill warre, King Henry the sixth being now fled the Realme into Scotland, surrendered it up into the hands of the Scot, for to be secured of his life and safety in Scotland. But after twenty two yeeres were expired, Sir Thomas Stanley, not without losse of his men, reduced it under the command of King Edward the Fourth. Since which time, our Kings have at divers times fortified and fenced it with new works: but especially Queen Elizabeth, who of late, to the terrour of the enemy, and safeguard of her state, enclosed it about in a narrower compasse within the old wall, with an high wall of stone most strangely compacted together; which shee hath so forewarded againe with a counterscarpe, a banke round about, with mounts of earth cast up by mans hand, and open terraces above head, that either the forme of these munitions, or strength thereof may justly cut off all hope of winning it. To say nothing all this while of the valour of the garison souldiers, the store of great Ordnance and furniture of warre, which was wonderfull. He that was wont to be chiefe Governour of this towne (that I may note thus much also) was alwaies one of the wisest and most approved of the Nobility of England, and withall Warden of these East marches against Scotland. The Longitude of this towne, as our Mathematicians have observed, is 21. degrees and 43. minutes: the Latitude 55. degrees and 48. minutes. And by this inclination and position of the heaven, the longest day is 17. houres and 22. minutes, and the day plenty.

Britaine hath

the night but fixe houres and 38. minutes: so that that there was no untruth in Servum Honoratum, when he wrote thus, Britanni lucis dives, &c. that is, Britain is so plentiful of day light, that it affordeth scarce any time for the nights. Neither is it any marvelle that fouldiers without other light doe play here all night long at Dice, considering the side light that the sunne beames cast all night long: and therefore this verse of Juvenall is true:

Minima contentos nocte Britannos.
The Brittaines who with least night stand content.

Concerning Berwicke, have here now for an Overdeale, these verses of Master I. Jonston.

*Scotorum extremo sub limite, meta furoris
Saxonidum: gentis par utriusque labor.
Mille vices rerum, quæ mille est passus ruinas,
Mirum, qui potuit tot superesse malis:
Quin superest, quin extremis exhausta ruinis,
Funere sic crevit firmior usque suo:
Oppida ut exaquet jam munissima. Civis Militis & censum, & munia Martis obit.
Postquam servitio durisque est funis periculi,
Effert lætitia signa serena sue:
Et nunc antiquo felix se jactat honore,
Cum reddit Domino debita jura suo:
Cujus ab auspiciis unita Britannia tandem Excelsum tollit libera in astra caput.*

Afront the bound of Scottish ground, where staid the furious broile
Of English warres; and Nations both were put to equall toile.
Now won, then lost, a thousand turnes it felt of fortunes will,
After so many miseries, wonder, it standeth still.
And still it stands: although laid wast it were and desolate,
Yet alwaies after every fall it rose to firmer state:
So that for strength best fenced townes it matcheth at this day.
The Citizens were souldiers all, and serv'd in warres for pay.
But after service long performed, and hard adventures past,
Of joy and mirth the glad some signes it putteth forth at last.
And now her ancient honour she doth vaunt in happy plight,
When to her Sovereigne Lord she yeelds all service due by right.
Whose blessed Crowne united hath great Britain now at last,
Whereby her head she lifts on high, since quarrels all be past.

The Commentary of Pius Secundus, set forth in the name of Joan Gebellin.

That which Aeneas Sylvius, or Pope Pius the second, who when hee was a private person was Embassadour into Scotland about the yeere 1448. hath reported in his owne life, by himselfe penned, and published under the name of another, touching the borderers that dwelt there round about, I thinke good here to put downe, considering that as yet they have nothing degenerated.

There is a river (saith he) which spreading broad from out of an high hill, confineth both the lands: This river when Aeneas had ferried over, and turned aside into a great village about sun setting, where he supped in a country-mans house, with the Priest of the place and his host, many sorts of gruels and pottage, hens and geese, were set on the board, but no wine nor bread at all, and all the men & women of the village came running thither, as it were to see some strange sight: and as our countrymen are wont to wonder at Black-mores

A Moors, or men of Inde, so they stood gasing & gaping, as astonished at Aeneas, asking of the Priest what countryman he was? upon what busines he came? and whether he were a Christian or no? Now Aeneas having bin enformed before what scarcity of vituals he should finde in those parts, had received at a certaine Abbey some loaves of white bread, and a runnel of red wine: which when they had brought forth, the people made a greater wonder than before, as who had never seen either wine or white bread. There approached unto the table great bellied women and their husbands, who handling the bread, & smelling to the wine, craved some part thereof, and there was no remedy but to deale and give all away among them. Now when we had sitten at supper untill it was two houres within night, the Priest and our Host, together with the children and all the men, left Aeneas, and made haste away; for they said they were to flye for feare of the Scots unto a certaine pile, that stood a great way off: which Scots, at a low water when the tide was past, used to passe over the river, and fall to boot-haling. But they would in no wise take Aeneas with them, although hee intreated them very instantly; no nor any woman, albeit amongst them there were many both young maids, and wives passing faire: For they are perswaded verily, that the enemies will doe them no hurt, as who reckon whoredome no hurt nor evill at all. So Aeneas remains there alone with two servants and his Guide, in company of an hundred women; who sitting round in a ring, with a good fire in the mids before them, fell to butchell and dresse hemp, sate up all night without sleep, and had a great deale of talk with his Interpreter. When the night was far spent, what with barking of dogs, and gaggling of geese, a mighty noise and outcry was made: then all the women slipped forth divers waies, his Guide also made shift to be gone, and all was of an hurry, as if the enemies had beene come. But Aeneas thought it his best course to expect the event within his bed-chamber, (and that was a stable) for feare lest if he had runne forth of dores, knowing not the way, he should become a prey and booty to him that should first meet him. But see, straightwaies the women returned with the Interpreter, bring word all was well, and that they were friends and not enemies were come thither.

There have been in this country certaine petty nations, called Scovenburgenses, and Fisburgings; but to point out precisely the very place of their abode, in so great obscurity, passeth my skill: Neither can I define whether they were Danes or English. But Florentinus of Worcester, published by the right honourable Lord William Howard, writeth, That when there was an assembly or Parliament holden at Oxenford, Sigefrith and Morcar, the worthier & mightier ministers of the Scovenburgenses, were secretly made away by Edrike Streona. Also that Prince Edmund against his fathers will married Alfrith the wife of Sigefrith, and having made a journey to the Fisburgings, invaded Sigefrith his land, and brought his people in subjection to him. But let others inquire farther into these matters.

E This region of North-humberland being brought under the English Saxons dominion by Oscar Hengists brother, and by his sonne Jebusa, had first official governors under the fealty of the Kings of Kent. After that, when the kingdome of the Bernicians, whom the Britans call Guita Brinaich, as it were, Mountainers, was erected; that which reached from Tees to the Scottish Frith, was the best part thereof, and subject to the Kings of North-humberland: who having finished their period, whatsoever lay beyond Twede, became Scottish and was counted Scotland; Then Egbert King of the West-Saxons laied it to his owne kingdome, when it was yeelded up to him. Afterwardes King Aelfred permitted the Danes to possesse it, whom Athelstane some few yeeres after dispossessed and drave out: yet after this the people set up Eilrick the Dane for their king, whom King Ealdred forthwith displaced and expelled. From which time forward this country had no more Kings over it, but such as governed it were rearm'd Earles: Amongst whom these are reckoned up in order successively in our Histories, Osulf, Osake, Edulph, Walde of the elder, Uchired, Adulph, Alred, Sivard, Tostie, Edwin, Morcar, Osculph, and that right valiant Sivard, who as he lived in armes, so would he dye also armed. Then his Earldome and these parts were given unto Tostie the brother of Earle Harold: but the Earldomes of Northampton and Hunting-

Scovenburgen-
ses.
Fisburgenses.
1013.

Citonen.
Prince of Fisburgings.
1015.

Kings, Dukes, and Earles of Northumber-
land.
Bernicia.

Huntingdon, with other lands of his, were assigned to the noble Earle Waldeof his sonne A and heire. These words of Ingulphus have I put downe, because some deny that hee was Earle of Huntingdon. And now will I adde moreover to the rest, that which I have read in an old manuscript memoriall of this matter in the Librarie of John Stow, a right honest Citizen, and diligent Antiquarie of the City of London. Copsa being made Earle of Northumberland by the gift of King William Conquerour, expelled Oskulph, who notwithstanding within a few daies after slew him. Then Oskulph being runne through with a Javelin by a thiefe, ended his life. After this, Gospatrick purchased the Earldome of the Conquerour, who not long after deposed him from that honour; and then succeeded after him Waldeof Siwards sonne. His fortune was to lose his head; and in his roome was placed Walcher Bishop of Durham, who (like as Robert Comin his successeur) was slaine in a tumultuous commotion of the common people. Afterwards Robert Mowbray attained to the same honour, which hee soone lost through his owne perfidious treacherie, when he devised to deprive King William Rufus of his royall estate, and to advance Stephen Earle of Albemarle, a sonne to the Conquerors sifter, thereunto. Then K. Stephen made Henrie, the sonne of David King of Scotland (as wee read in the Poly Chronicon of Durham) Earle of Northumberland: whose sonne also William, that afterwards was King of Scots, writ him selfe, William de Warrenna Earle of Northumberland: for his mother was descended out of the familie of the Earles of Warren, as appeareth out of the booke of C Brinkburne Abbey. After some few yeeres, King Richard the first passed away this Earldome for a summe of money, unto Hugh Pudsey Bishop of Durham for term of his life, scoffing that he had made a young Earle of an old Bishop. But when the said King was imprisoned by the Emperour in his returne out of the Holy-land, and Hugh for his deliverie had contributed only 2000. pounds of silver, which the King took not well at his hands, because he was deemed to have performed but a litle, whom hee understood to have raised and gotten together a huge masse of money, under pretence of his ransom and release, hee deposed and deprived him of his Earldome. After which time the title of the Earldome of Northumberland lay discontinued about an hundred and foure score yeeres.

Percies descended from Charlemaine.

But at this day the family of the Percies enjoyeth the same, which family being descended from the Earles of Brabant, inherited together with the surname of Percie the possessions also of Percie, ever since that Joscelin of Lovaine, younger sonne of Godfrey Duke of Brabant, the true issue of the Emperour Charles the Great by Gerberga, the daughter of Charles, a younger brother to Lothar, the last King of France of the line of Charles, tooke to wife Agnes the daughter and sole heire of William Percie: of which William the great grandfather William Percie, coming into England with King William the Conquerour, was rewarded by him for his service, with lands in Tascaster, Limon, Normanby, and other places. Between this Agnes and Joscelin it was covenanted, that hee should assume the name of Percies, and retaine still unto him the ancient Armes of Brabant, viz. A Lion azure (which the Brabanters afterwards changed) in a shield Or. The first Earle of Northumberland out of this family, was Henrie Percie, begotten of Marie daughter to Henrie Earle of Lancaster, who being descended of ancient blood, and renowned for his martiall prowesse, was rewarded also by King Edward the third with faire possessions in Scotland, created Earle of Northumberland by King Richard the second on the day of his Coronation, and much enriched by his second wife Dame Maud Lucie (although by her hee had no issue) upon a fine levied unto her, that hee should beare quarterly the Armes of the Lucies with his owne, and lived in great honour, confidence, and favour with King Richard the second. Yet full badly hee requited him againe for all his singular good demerits. For in his adversitie hee forsooke him, and made way for Henrie the fourth to the kingdome, who made him Constable of England, and bestowed upon him the Isle of Man: against whom within a while, hee feeling the corrosive and secret pricke of conscience, for that King Richard

A Richard by his meane was unjustly deposed, and besides, taking at the heart indignantly, that Edmund Mortimer Earle of March, the true and undoubted heire of the Kingdome, and his neere ally, was neglected in prison, hee conceived inward enmity, grievously complaining, and charging him with perjury, that whereas hee had solemnly sworn to him, and others that hee would not challenge the Crowne, but only his owne inheritance, and that King Richard should be governed during his life by the good advice of the Peeres of the realme: he to the contrary had by imprisonment and terror of death enforced him to resigne his Crowne, and usurped the same, by the concurrence of his faction, horribly murdering the said K. and defrauding Edmund Mortimer Earle of March of his lawfull right to the Crowne, whom he had suffered to languish long in prison under Owen Glendowr, reputing those traitours who with their owne money had procured his enlargement. After the publication of these complaints, he, confident in the promises of his confederates, who yet failed him, sent his brother Thomas Earle of Worcester, and his courageous sonne Henry surnamed Hot-Spurre, with a power of men against the King, who both lost their lives at the battaile of Shrewesbury. Whereupon he was proclaimed traitour, and attainted; but shortly after, by a kind of connivency, received againe into the Kings favour (unto whom he was a terrour) yea and restored to all his lands and goods, save only the Isle of Man, which the King resumed into his owne hands. Howbeit within a while after, being now become popular, and over forward to entertaine new designs, and having procured the Scots to bandy and joyne with him in armes, himselfe in person entred with banner displayed into the field, against the King, as an Usurper, and on a sudden at Baryhammore in a tumultuary skirmish in the yeere 1408. was discomfited and slaine by Thomas Rokesby the high Sheriffe of Yorke-shire. Eleven yeeres after, Henry, this mans nephew by his sonne Henry Hot-Spur (whose mother was Elizabeth, daughter to Edmund Mortimer the elder, Earle of March, by Philippa the daughter of Leonel Duke of Clarence) was restored in blood and inheritance by authority of Parliament, in the time of King Henry the fifth: which Henry Percie, while he stoutly maintained King Henry the sixth his part against D the house of Yorke, was slaine at the battell of Saint Albans, like as his sonne Henry, the third Earle of Northumberland, who married Aelenor, the daughter of Richard Lord Poinings, Brian, and Fitz-Pain, in the same quarrell lost his life in the battaile at Towton, in the yeere 1461. The house of Lancaster being now kept under, and downe the wind, and the Percies with it troden under foot, King Edward the fourth made John Nevill, Lord Montacute, Earle of Northumberland: but he after a while surrendered this title into the Kings hands, and was created by him Marquesse Montacute. After this Henry Percy, the sonne of Henry Percy aforesaid, recovering the E favour of King Edward the fourth, obtained restitution in blood, and hereditaments; who in the reigne of Henry the seventh was slaine by the cuntry people, that about a certaine levie of money exacted by an Act of Parliament, rose up against the Collectours and Assessours thereof. After him succeeded Henry Percy, the fifth Earle, whose sonne Henry by a daughter and Coheire of Sir Robert Spenser, and Eleanor the daughter likewise and Coheire of Edmund Beaufort Duke of Somerset, was the sixth Earle; who (having no children, and his brother Thomas being executed for taking armes against King Henry the eighth, in the first difference about Religion) as if now that family had beene at a finall end for ever) prodigally gave away a great part of that most goodly inheritance unto the King and others. Some few F yeeres after, Sir John Dudley Earle of Warwick, got to himselfe the title of Duke of Northumberland, by the name of John Earle of Warwick, Marshal of England, Vicount Lisle, Baron Somery, Bassett, and Ties, Lord of Dudley, Great Master and Steward of the Kings house; when as in the tender age of King Edward the sixth, the Chieftaines and leaders of the factions shared titles of honour among themselves, their fautors, and followers. This was that Duke of Northumberland, who for the time, like unto a tempestuous whirlwind, began to shake and teare the publicke peace of the John Harding Manuscript.

State

3. & 4. Philip and Mary.

stare, whiles he with vast ambition plotted and practised to exclude Mary and Elizabeth the daughters of King Henry the eighth from their lawfull right of succession, and to set the Emperiall Crowne upon Lady Jane Grey, his daughter in law (being seconded therein by the great Lawyers, who are alwaies forward enough to humour and sooth up those that bee in highest place.) For which being attainted of high treason, he lost his head, and at his execution embraced and publicely professed Popery, which long before, either seriously or colorably for his own advantage, he had renounced. When he was gone, Queene Mary restored Thomas Percy, nephew unto Henry the sixth Earle by his brother Thomas, unto his bloud, and by a new Patent created him first Baron Percy, and anon Earle of Northumberland, to himselfe and the heires males of his body, and for defaults thereof, to his brother Henry, and his heires males. But this Thomas the seventh Earle, for his treason to Prince and country, under maske of restoring the Romish religion againe, lost both life and dignity in the yeere 1572. Yet through the singular favour and bounty of Queen Elizabeth, according to that Patent of Queene Mary, his brother Henry succeeded after him, as the eighth Earle; who in the yeere 1585. ended his dayes in prison, and had for his successor Henry his sonne, by Katherin the eldest daughter, and one of the heires of John Nevill, Lord Latimer, the ninth Earle of Northumberland of this family.

Parishes in Northumberland about 46.

SCOTLAND.

DEUCALEDONII

OCEANUS

MARE HIBERNI

IRLANDIAE huc HIBERNIAE PARS

Stronza
Louis Kell
Cull Kell
Cull Kell

Scutrowalsa insula

Scutrowalsa insula

Scutrowalsa insula

Scutrowalsa insula

Scutrowalsa insula

Scutrowalsa insula

Scutrowalsa insula

Scutrowalsa insula

Scutrowalsa insula

Scutrowalsa insula

Scutrowalsa insula

Scutrowalsa insula

Scutrowalsa insula

Scutrowalsa insula

Scutrowalsa insula

Scutrowalsa insula

Scutrowalsa insula

Scutrowalsa insula

Scutrowalsa insula

Scutrowalsa insula

Scutrowalsa insula

Scutrowalsa insula

Scutrowalsa insula

Scutrowalsa insula

Scutrowalsa insula

Scutrowalsa insula

MARE

GERMANI

ICUS

SCOTLAND.

Now am I come to SCOTLAND, and willingly I assure you will I enter into it, but withall lightly passe over it. For I remember well that said saw, In places not well knowne lesse while wee mult stay: as also the admonition of that Grecian, ΖΕΝΟΣ ΩΝ ΑΠΡΑΓΜΩΝ ΙΣΟΙ: that is, Art thou a stranger? be no medler. And verily I should play an unadvised part, if I would insist long in that, wherein I am but little conversant. But yet seeing Scotland also joyeth in the name of BRITAIN, let it bee lawfull for me (reserving the due honour to the Scottissh) according to my purpose, having boldly undertaken to illustrate BRITAIN, to proceed with their good favour, leave, and licence, and by drawing aside in some sort the curtaine of obscure antiquity, to point out with my finger, if I shall be able, some places of ancient note and memory. Certes, I assure my selfe that I shall bee easily pardoned in this point, the people themselves are so courteous and well meaning, and the happinesse of these daies so rare and admirable, since that by a divine and heavenly oportunitie is now fallen into our laps, which we hardly ever hoped, & our Ancestors so often and so earnestly wished: namely, that Britaine, so many ages disjoined in it selfe and unsociable, should all throughout, like one uniform City, under one most sacred and happy Monarch, the founder of perpetuall peace, by a blessed Union be conjoynd in one entire body. Who being through the propitious goodnesse of Almighty God, elected, borne, and preserved to the good of both nations, as he is a Prince of singular wisdom and providence, and fatherly affected to all his subjects, doth so cut off all causes and occasions of feare, of hope, of revenge, complaint, and quarrell; that the dismall DISCORD which hath set these nations (otherwise invincible) so long at debate, might be sifted and crushed for ever; and sweet CONCORD triumph joyously with endlesse comfort, when (as one sometimes sung this tenour) Jam cuncti gens unumus, that is, Wee all one Nation are this day, whereunto as a Chorus both nations resound, Et simus in ævum, that is, God grant wee may be so for aye.

But before my pen commeth to Scotland, thus much I thinke it good to advertise the Reader aforehand, that I leave the first original of the Scottissh

A a a nation

nation to their owne Historians: also the primitive derivation of their name A to the learned among them, banishing all conjectures whatsoever of others, which either hasty credulity or carelesse negligence hath forged, as well in the late foregoing age, as in these our dayes. And according to the same order which I kept before in England, I will premise some few lines touching the division of Scotland, the States of the Kingdome, and the Tribunals or Courts of Justice: then will I briefly touch the situations and Commodities of the soile in every severall Region: what places there be of greater fame B and name, and what Families more noble and notable than the rest, have most flourished with the title and honour of Earles and Barons of the Parliament, so far forth as hitherto I could find by reading or enquiry: And that so circumspectly, with such an honest desire and sincere affection to truth, that I hope I shall not give offence to the malicious; and with so compendious brevity, that I will not prevent their curious diligence, who are in hand to set out these matters with a fuller pensill, and to polish the same with more lively and lasting colours.

THE

E

THE DIVISION OF SCOTLAND.

He North part of the Island of Britaine, was of old time inhabitated throughout by the Picts, who were divided into two Nations, the DICALIDONII, and VECTURIONES: of whom I have spoken already out of Ammianus Marcellinus. But when the Scots became Lords and Rulers over all this part, it was shared into seven parts among seven Princes, as we finde in a little ancient pamphlet touching the division of Scotland, in these words and old name.

- The first part contained Enegus and Maern.
- The second, Aibeod and Goverin.
- The third, Stradeern and Meneted.
- The fourth was Foribever.
- The fifth, Mar with Buchen.
- The sixth, Mures and Ros.
- The seventh Cathanes, which Mound, a mountaine in the midst divideth, running on forward from the West sea to the East.

Then afterwards the same Author reporteth, according to the relation of Andrew Bishop of Cathanes, that the whole Kingdome was divided likewise into seven territories.

- The first from Frith, in the British tongue, called by the Romans Worid, now Scotwade, to the river Tae.
- The second to Hilef, according as the sea fetcheth a compasse, to a mountain in the North-east part of Strivelin, named Athran.
- The third from Hilef to Dee.
- The fourth from Dee to the river Spe.
- The fifth from Spe to the mountaine Brunalban.
- The sixth, Mures and Ros.
- The seventh, the kingdome Argathel, as it were the border and skirt of the Scots: who were so called of Gathelgas their Captaine.

Also according to the habitation of the people, Scotland is now divided into High- land-men and Lowland-men: These being more civill, use the English language and apparrell: the other, which are rude and unruly, speak Irish, and goe apparelled Irish-like, as I have already said. Out of this division I exclude the Borderers, because by reason of peace shining now upon them on every side, by a blessed and happy Union, they are to bee ranged and reckoned in the very heart and midst of the British Empire, as who begin to be weary of wars, and to acquaint themselves with the delight-full benefits of peace.

Moreover, according to the situation and position of the places, the whole Kingdome is divided into two parts: the South, on this side the river Tay, and the North beyond Tay; besides a number of Islands lying round about. In the South part these countries are more remarkable than the rest.

Aaaa 2

Teifdale

Highlandmen.
Lowlandmen.

Borderers.

Teisdale.	Arran.
Merch.	Cluydesdale.
Lauden.	Lennox.
Liddesdale.	Stirling.
Eskdale.	Fife.
Annandale.	Strathern.
Niddesdale.	Menteith.
Galloway.	Argile.
Carrick.	Cantire.
Kyle.	Lorn.
Cunningham.

In the North part are reckoned these Countries.

Loquabrea.	Buguban.
Brasdalbin.	Murray.
Perib.	Rosse.
Aihol.	Sutherland.
Anguist.	Caithnes.
Adern.	Strathnavern.
Marr.

These are subdivided againe according to their civill government, into counties, which they call Sherifdomes, Seneschalties, commonly Stewarties, and Bailiwicks, or Baileries.

Edenburgh.	Perib.
Linlythquo.	Clackmannan.
Selkirk.	Kinross.
Roxburgh.	Fife.
Pebliu.	Kincardin.
Berwick.	Forfaire.
Lanark.	Aberdene.
Renfrew.	Bainff.
Dunfreu.	Elgin.
Wighton.	Forres.
Aire.	Narne.
Bute.	Inverness.
Argyle and	Cromartie.
Tarbet.	Orkney and
Dunbarton.	Shetland.

Seneschalties or Stewarties. { Menteith. { Kircudbricht.
 { Strathern. { Annandale.

Bailiwicks or Baileries. { Kile.
 { Carrick.
 { Cunningham.

Hadington a Constabulary.

Bishopricks.

As touching the administration of that divine City and commonwealth, which we terme the Church, like as the Bishops in all the world besides, had no certain dioceses, before that Dionisius Bishop of Rome, about the yeere 268. did set out dioceses for Bishops: so the Bishops of Scotland executed their Episcopall functions in what place soever they came, indifferently and without distinction, untill the time of King Malcolm the third, that is, about the yeere of our redemption 1070. at which time the dioceses were confined within their bounds and limits.

After.

Afterwards, in proceffe of time, this Hierarchie, or Ecclesiasticall government, was established in Scotland. Two Archbishops, one of Saint Andrews, the other of Glasgo; whereof the former is counted Primate of all Scotland: under whom there be eight Bishopricks.

Dunkeld.	Brechin.
Aberdon.	Rosse.
Murray.	Caithnes.
Dunblan.	Orkney.

Under the Archbishop of Glasgo there be onely three.

* Candida Casa, or Galloway.
* Lismore, or Argile.
The Iles.

* Whiterne.

THE STATES OR DEGREES OF SCOTLAND.

He Republicke, or Commonwealth of the Scots, like as that of Englishmen, consisteth of a King, the Nobility or Gentry, and Commons.

The King, that I may use the words of their owne Record, is Directus totius Domini, that is, The direct Lord of the whole Domain, or Dominion, and hath royall authority and jurisdiction over all the States and degrees, as well Ecclesiasticall as Lay or Temporall.

Next unto the King is his eldest Sonne, who is called PRINCE OF SCOTLAND, and by a peculiar right Duke of Rothsay, and Seneschall or Steward of Scotland. But all the rest of the Kings children are named simply Princes.

Among the Nobles, the greatest and most honourable were in old time, The Thanes, that is, those who (if my judgement be ought) were ennobled onely by the office which they administred. For the word in the ancient English Saxon tongue signifieth, The Kings Minister. Of these, they of the superior place were called Abthanes, the inferior, Under Thanes. But these names by little and little grew out of use, ever since that King Malcolm the third conferred the titles of Earles and Barons, after the manner received from the English, upon Noble men of good desert. Since when, in proceffe of time new titles of honours were much taken up, and Scotland as well as England, hath had Dukes, Marquesses, Earles, Vicounts, and Barons. As for the title of Duke, the first that brought it into Scotland was King Robert the third, about the yeere of Salvation 1400. like as the honourable titles of Marquess and Vicount were first brought in by our most gracious Sovereigne, King James the sixth. These are counted Nobles of the higher degree, and have both place and voice in the Parliaments, and by a speciall name are called Lords, like as also the Bishops.

Among the Nobles of a lower degree, in the first place are ranged Knights, who severally are dubbed with greater solemnity than in any other place throughout all Europe, by taking of an oath, and are proclaimed by the publike voice of an Herald. Of a second sort are they, who are tearmed Lairds and Barons: among whom none were reckoned in old time, but such as held immediatly from the King, lands in Chief, and had ius furcaram, that is, power to hang, &c. In the third place are all such as being descended from worshipfull houses, and not honoured with any especiall dignitie, be termed Gentlemen. All the rest, as Citizens, Merchants, Artisans, &c. are reputed among the Commons.

Aaaa 3

THE

THE JUDICATORIES, OR COURTS OF JUSTICE.

Parliament.

He supreme Court, as well for dignitie as authoritie, is accounted the Assembly of the States of the Kingdome, which is called by the very same name as it is in England, A Parliament: & hath the same verie power as absolute. It consisteth of three States, of Lords Spirituall, namely, Bishops, Abbots, and Priors: and of Lords Temporall, to wit, Dukes, Marquesses, Earles, Viscounts, and Barons: and Commissioners for Cities & Burghs, unto whom were adjoined not long since for everie Countie also two Commissioners. It is appointed and solemnly called by the King at his pleasure, at a certain set time, before it be holden. When these States above said are assembled, and the causes of their assembly delivered by the King or the Chancellour, the Lords Spirituall chuse out, apart by themselves, eight of the Lords Temporall. Semblably, the Lords Temporall make choise of as many out of the Lords Spirituall: then the same all jointly together nominate 8. of the Commissioners for the counties, & as many of the Commissioners for the free Burghs regall, which make up in all the number of 32. And then these * Lords of the Articles (so they are termed) together with the Chancellor, Treasurer, Keeper of the Privie Seale, Kings Secretarie, &c. do admit or reject everie bill proposed unto the States, after they have bin first imparted unto the King. Being allowed by the whole assembly of the States, they are thoroughly weighed and examined, and such of them as passe by the greater number of voices, are exhibited unto the King, who by touching them with his Scepter, pronounceth that hee either ratifieth and approveth them, or disableth and maketh the same voide: But if any thing disliketh the King, it is razed out before.

* Domini pro articulis.

The Session.

The Second Court, or next unto the Parliament, is the Colledge of Justice, or as they call it, The Session, which King James the fifth 1532. instituted after the forme of the Parliament of Paris, consisting of a President, 14. Senatours, seven of the Cleargie, and as many of the Laity (unto whom was adjoined afterward the Chancellour, who hath the chiefe place, and five other Senatours) three principall Scribes or Clerks, and as many Advocates as the Senatours shall thinke good. These sit and minister justice, not according to the rigour of law, but with reason and equitie, every day (save onely on the Lords day and Monday) from the first of November to the fifteenth of March; and from Trinitie Sunday unto the Calends of August. All the space betweene, as being the times of sowing and harvest, is vacation and intermission of all suites and law matters. They give judgement according to the Parliament Statutes and Municipall Lawes, and where they are defective, they have recourse to the Imperiall Civill Law.

There are besides in everie Countie inferiour civill Judicatories or Courts kept, wherein the Sheriffe of the shire, or his depute, decideth the controversies of the inhabitants, about violent ejections, intrusions, dammages, debts, &c. From which Courts and Judges, in regard of hard and unequall dealing, or else of alliance and partialtie, they appeale sometime to the Session. These Sheriffes are all for the most part hereditarie. For the Kings of Scots, like as of England also, to oblige more surely unto them the better sort of Gentlemen by their benefits and favours, made in old time these Sheriffes hereditarie and perpetuall. But the English Kings soone perceiving the inconveniences thereby ensuing, of purpose changed this order, and appointed them from yeere to yeere. There be civill Courts also in everie regalltie, holden by their Bailiffes, to whom the Kings have graciously granted royalties: as also in free Burroughs, by the Magistrates thereof.

There are likewise Judicatories, which they call Commissariats, the highest whereof is kept at Edensburgh: in which before foure Judges, actions are pleaded concerning Wills and Testaments, the right of Ecclesiasticall benefices, Tithes, Divorces, and such other Ecclesiasticall causes. In every other severall part almost throughout the Kingdome, there sitteth but one Judge alone in a place about these matters.

A

In criminall causes, the Kings chiefe Justice holdeth his Court for the most part at Edensburgh (which office the Earles of Argile have executed now for some yeeres.) And he doth depute two or three Lawyers, who have the hearing and deciding of capitall actions concerning life and death, or of such as inferre losse of limbs, or of all goods. In this Court the Defendant is permitted, yea in case of high treason, to entertaine a Counsellor or Advocate to pleade his cause.

Courts of criminall matters.

Moreover, in criminall matters there are sometimes by vertue of the Kings commission and authoritie, Justices appointed for the deciding of this or that particular cause.

Also the Sheriffes in their territories, and Magistrates in some Burghs, may sit in judgement of man-slaughter (in case the man-slayer be taken within 24. houres after the deed committed) and being found guiltie by a Jurie, put him to death. But if that time be once overpast, the cause is referred and put over to the Kings Justice, or his Deputies. The same priviledge also some of the Nobilitie and Gentrie enjoy against theeves taken within their owne jurisdictions. There bee likewise that have such Roialties, as that in criminall causes they may exercise a jurisdiction within their owne limits, and in some cases recall those that dwell within their owne limits and liberties from the Kings Justice, howbeit with a caution and proviso interposed, That they judge according to Law.

Thus much briefly have I put downe, as one that hath but sleightly looked into these matters, yet by the information of the judicious Knight, Sir Alexander Hay, his Majesties Secretarie for that kingdome, who hath therein given me good light. But as touching SCOTLAND, what a noble countrey it is, and what men it breedeth (as sometimes the Geographer wrote of Britaine) there will within a while more certaine and more evident matter be delivered, since that most high and mightie Prince hath set it open now for us, which had so long time beene shut from us. Meane while I will come unto the description of places, the project that I intended especially.

GADENI, or LADENI.

Upon the Ostadini, or Northumberland, bordered as next neighbours the TAAENOI, that is, GADENI, who also by the inversion or turning of one letter upside downe, are called in some Copies of Ptolomee, LADENI, seated in that countrey which lieth betweene the mouth of the river Twede and Edensburgh Forth: and is at this day divided into many petty Countries: the chiefe whereof are Teisidale, Twedale Merch, and Lothien, in Latine Lodeneium, under which one generall name alone the Writers of the middle time comprised all the rest.

TEIFIDALE.

Teisidale, that is to say, the Vale by the river Teise, or Teviat, lying next unto England, among the edges of high craggie hills, is inhabited by a warlike nation, which by reason of so many encounters in foregoing ages betweene Scottish and English, are alwaies most readie for service and sudden invasions. The first place among these that wee meet with, is Jedburgh, a Burrough well inhabited and frequented, standing neere unto the confluence

of Roxburg.

of Teife and Jed, whereof it took the name: also Mailros, a very ancient Monastery, A wherein, at the beginning of our Church, were cloistered Monkes of that ancient order and institution, that gave themselves to prayer, and with their hand-labour earned their living; which holy King David restored, and replenished with Cistercian Monkes. And more Eastward, where Twede and Teife joine in one streame, Roxburg sheweth it selfe, called also Roxburg, and in old time MARCHIDUN, because it was a towne in the Marches; where stands a Castle, that for naturall situation and towred fortifications, was in times past exceeding strong. Which being surprisid and held by the English, whiles James the second King of Scots encircled it with a siege, hee was by a peece of a great Ordnance that brake, slaine untimely in the B very floure of his youth; a Prince much missed and lamented of his Subjects. As for the castle, it was yeilded; and being then for the most part of it layed even with the ground, is now in a manner quite vanished and not to bee seene. The territory adjoining, called of it the Sherifdome of Roxburg, hath one hereditary Sheriffe out of the family of the Douglases, who is usually called the Sheriffe of Tervot Dale. And now hath Roxburg also a Baron, Robert Kerr, through the favour of King James the sixth, out of the family of the Kerrs, a famous house, and spred into a number of branches, as any one in that tract: out of which the Fernhersts, and others inured in martiall feats, have been of great name.

Twede afore said runneth through the middest of a Dale, taking name of it, replenished with sheepe that beare wooll of great request. A very goodly river this is, which springing more inwardly Eastward, after it hath passed, as it were, in a streight channell by Drimlar Castle, by Pebblis a mercate towne, which hath for the Sheriff thereof Baron Zeister, like as Selkirk hard by hath another out of the family of Murray of Fallohill, entertaineth Lauder a river; at which appeareth Lauder, together with Thirlestane: where stands a very faire house of Sir John Mutellan, late Chancellor of Scotland, whom, for his singular wisdom, King James the sixth created Baron of Thirlestane. Then Twede beneath Roxburg, augmented with the river of Teviot resorting unto him, watereth the Sherifdome of Berwick throughout; a great part whereof is possessed by the Humes (wherein the chiefe man of that family exerciseth now the jurisdiction of a Sheriffe) and so passeth under Berwick, the strongest towne of Britain (whereof I have spoken already) where hee is exceeding full of Salmons, and so falleth into the sea.

MERCHIA, MERCH, or MERS.

MERCH, which is next, and so named because it is a march country, lyeth wholly upon the German sea. In this, first Hume Castle sheweth it selfe, the ancient possession of the Lords of Hume, E or Hume, who being descended from the family of the Earles of Merch, are grown to be a noble and faire spred family: out of which Alexander Hume, who before was the first Baron of Scotland, and Sheriff of Berwick, was of late advanced by James King of great Britaine to the title of Earle Hume. Neere unto which lieth Kelso, famous sometime for the monastery, which with thirteen others, King David the first of that name built out of the ground, for the propagation of Gods glory, but to the great empairing of the Crowne land.

Earle Hume.
Kelso.Coldingham.
Colania.

Then is to be seene Coldingham, which Bede calleth the City Coldana, and the City of Coludum, haply COLANIA mentioned by Prolemee, a place consecrated many ages since unto professed Virgins or Nunnes, whose chastity is recorded in ancient bookes. For that they, together with Ebba their Prioresse, cut off their owne noses and lips, choosung rather to preserve their virginity from the Dances, than their beauty and favour: and yet for all that the Danes burnt their monasterie, and them withall. Hard by is Fast-castle, a castle of the Lords Humes, so called for their firmnesse and

A and strength thereof, at the Promontory of the said Saint Ebbe, who being the daughter of Edilsfrin King of Northumberland, when her Father was taken prisoner, got hold of a boat in Humber, and passing along the raging Ocean, landed here in safety, became renowned for her sanctimony, and left her name unto the place. But this Merch is mentioned in the Historiographers, a great deale more for the Earles thereof, than for any places therein, who for martiall prowesse were highly renowned, and descended from Gospatrice Earle of Northumberland, whom after he was fled from William Conqueror of England, Malcom Canmor, that is, With the great head, King of Scotland, entertained, enriched him with the castle of Dunbar, and honoured with the Earldome of Merch. Whose posterity, besides other goodly and faire lands in Scotland, held (as appeareth plainly in an old Inquisition) the Barony of Bengeley in Northumberland, that they should be Inborow and Niborow, betweene England and Scotland. What the meaning should be of these tearmes let others ghesse, what my conjecture is I have said already. In the reigne of King James the first, George de Dunbar Earle of Merch by authority of Parliament, for his Fathers rebellion lost the Propriety and possession of the Earldome of Merch, and the Seignorie of Dunbar. And when as hee proved by good evidences and writings brought forth, that his father had bene pardoned for that fault by the Regents of the Kingdome, he was answered againe, that it was not in the Regents power to pardon an offence C against the State; and that it was expressly provided by the Lawes, that children should undergoe punishment for their fathers transgressions, to the end that being thus heires to their fathers rashnesse, as they are to their goods and lands, they should not at any time in the haughty pride of their owne power, plot any treason against Prince or country. This title of Earle of March, among other honourable titles, was given afterward to Alexander Duke of Albany, and by him forfeited. And in our remembrance, this title of honour was revived againe in Robert, the third brother of Mathew Earle of Lennox, who being of a Bishop of Cathanes made Earle of Lennox, resigned up that title soone after unto his nephew, then created Duke of Lennox; and he himselfe in lieu thereof received of the King the name and stile of the Earle D of Merch.

LAUDEN, or LOTHIEN.

LOTHIE, which is also called Lauden, named in times past of the Pihs, Piiland, shooteth out along from Merch unto the Scottish sea, or the Forth, having many hills in it, and little wood; but for fruitfull corn-fields, for courtesie also and civility of manners, commended above all other countries of Scotland. About the yeere of our salvation 873. Eadgar King of England (betweene whom and Keneth the third, King of Scots, there was a great knot of alliance against the Danes, common enemies to them both) resigned up his right unto him in this Lothien, as Mathew the * Flourgatherer witnesseth: and to winne his heart the more unto him, He gave unto him many mansions in the way, wherein both he and his successours in their coming unto the Kings of England, and in returne homeward might be lodged: which unto the time of K. Henry the second continued in the hands of the Kings of Scotland. In this Lothien, the first place that offereth it selfe unto our sight upon the sea side is Dunbar, a passing strong castle in old time, and the seat of the Earles of Merch afore said, who thereupon were called Earles of Dunbar. A peece many a time wonne by English, and as often recovered by the Scottish. But in the yeere 1567. by authority of the States in Parliament it was demolished, because it should not be an hold and place of refuge for rebels. But James King of great Britain conferred the title and honour of Earle of Dunbar upon Sir George Hume, for his approved fidelity; whom he had created before Baron Hume of Barwick, to him, his heires, and assignes. Hard by, Tine a little river

Lauden:

* Florigeni.Earles of Dunbar.

1548.

Vicount Had-dington.

ver after it hath runne a short course, falleth into the sea; neere unto the spring-head A whereof standeth Zeifer, which hath his Baron out of the family of the Haies Earles of Aroll, who also is by inheritance Sheriffe of the little territory of Twedall, or Peb- blin. By the same riveret, some few miles higher, is seated Hadington or Hadina, in a wide and broad plaine: which towne the English fortified with a deepe and large ditch, with a mure or rampire also without, foure square, and with foure bulwarks at the corners, and with as many other at the inner wall: and Sir James Wilford, an Englishman valiantly defended it against Desie the Frenchman, who with ten thousand French and Dutch together fiercely assaulted it, untill that by reason of the plague, which grew hot among the garrison souldiers, Henry Earle of Rutland B comming with a royall army, raised the siege, removed the French, and having laid the munitions leuell, conducted the English home. And now of late, King James the sixth, hath ranged Sir John Ramsay among the Nobles of Scotland, with title and honour of Vicount Hadington, for his faithfull valour, as whose R I G H T H A N D was the DEFENDER OF PRINCE AND COUNTRY, in that most wicked conspiracy of the Gowries against the Kings person. Touching this Hadington thus hath Master I. Jonston verified.

*Planities præensa jaces prope flumina Tine,
Fluminis argui claudunt ista sinu.
Vulcani & Maris que passa incendia, fuit
Ingemir alicerno vulnere fracta vices.
Nunc tandem sapi iſta. Dei præcepta secuta Præsidio gaudet jam potiore Poli.*

Before it lies a spacious plaine, the Tine his streame hard by,
In bofome of that river shrill, this towne enclos'd doth lie.
Which having suffered grievous smart of fire and sword by turnes, Grones under these misfortunes much, and for her losses mournes.
But now at length selfe-harmes have made it wise, and by Gods lore Directed, helpe it hath from heaven, which steedeth it much more.

Athelstanford.

Within a little of Hadington standeth Athelstanford, so called of Athelstane, a chiefe leader of the English, slaine about the yeere 815. But that he should be that warlike Athelstane, which was King of the West-Saxons, both the account of the times, and his owne death doe manifestly controule it.

Above the mouth of this Tine, in the very bending of the shore, standeth Tanallon Castle; from whence Archibald Douglas Earle of Angus, wrought James the fifth, King of Scots, much teene and trouble. Here by retiring backe of the shores on both sides, is roome made for a most noble arme of the sea, and the same well furnished with Islands, which by reason of many rivers encountering it by the way, and the tides of the furling sea together, spreadeth exceeding broad: Polomee calleth it BODERIA, Tacitus BODOTRIA, of the depth, as I guess; the Scots The Forth, and Frith; we Edenburgh Frith; others the Fresian sea, and the Scottish sea, and the Eulogium, Morwiridh. Upon this, after you be past Tanallon, are seated, first, North-Berwick, a famous place sometime for an house there of religious Virgins; and then Dyrton, which belonged in times past to the notable family of the Halburtons, and now to S. Tho. Ereskin Captain of the guard, whom James K. of great Britain for his happy valour, in preserving him against the traitorous attempts of Gowrie, first created Baron of Dirlon, and afterward advanced him to the honourable title of Vicount Felton, making him the first Vicount that ever was in Scotland. Against these places there lyeth in the sea, not far from the shore, the Island Bar, which riseth up as it were all one craggy rocke, and the same upright and steep on every side: yet hath it a Block-house belonging to it, a fountaine also and pastures: but it is so hollowed with the waves working upon it, that it is almost pierced thorough. What a multitude of sea-fowles, and especially of those geese which they call Scouts and Soland geese Bodotria.

Tanallon.

Dyrton.

Vicount Fel-
ton.

A geese, focke hither at their times (for, by report, their number is such, that in a cleere day they take away the sunnes light) what a sort of fishes they bring (for as the speech goeth, a hundred garrison souldiers that here lay for defence of the place, fed upon no other meat but the fresh fish that they brought in) what a quantity of stickes and little twigges they get together for the building of their nests, so that by their means the inhabitants are abundantly provided of fewell for their fire; what a mighty gaine groweth by their feathers and oyle; the report thereof is so incredible, that no man scarcely would beleve it, but he that had seene it.

Then as the shore draweth backe Seton sheweth it selfe; which seemeth to have B taken that name of the situation by the sea side, and to have imparted the same unto a right noble house of the Setons, branched out of an English family, and from the daughter of King Robert Bru: out of which the Marquesse Hunley, Robert Earle of Wentoun, Alexander Earle of Dunfirmling, advanced to honours by K. James the sixth, are propagated.

After this the river Eske dischargeth it selfe into this Frith, when it hath runne by Borthwic (which hath Barons furnamed according to that name, and those deriving their pedigree out of Hungary) by Newbottle, that is, The new building, sometimes a faire monastirie, now the Barony of Sir Mark Kersey by Dalkeith, a very pleasant habitation of the late Earles of Morison, and Musselborough, hard under which, in the yeere C of our Lord 1547. when Sir Edward Seimor Duke of Somerset, with an army royall had entred Scotland, to claime and challenge the keeping of a covenant made, concerning a marriage betweene Marie Queene of Scotland, and Edward the sixth King of England, there happened the heaviest day that ever fell, to the adventurous youth of the most noble families in all Scotland, who there lost their lives. Here I must not over-passe in silence this Inscription, which John Napier, a learned man, hath in his Commentaries upon the Apocalyps recorded to have bene here digged up, and which the right learned Knight Sir Peter Young, teacher and trainer of King James the sixth in his youth, hath in this wise more truly copied forth.

Soland Geese, which seeme
to be Plinius Picarius.

Seton

Earle of Weirtoun.

Borthwicke

Newbottle: i.

Dalkeith.
Musselborough

* Procurator.
* Votum susceptum solvit lubens merito.

Who this Apollo Granus might bee, and whence hee should have this name, not one, to my knowledge, of our grave Senate of Antiquaries hitherto could ever tell: But if I might be allowed, from out of the lowest bench, to speak what I think, I would say that Apollo Granus amongst the Romans, was the same that Ambrosius amongst the Greeks: for Isidor calleth the long haire of the Gothes, Grannos. But here I may seem to wander out of my way; and therefore will returne to it.

Lower yet, and neere unto the Scottish Forth, is seated Edenborough, which the Irish Scots call Dun Eaden, that is, the towne Eaden, or Eden Hill, and which no doubt is the very same that Polomee named Στεγνιδιον σπηλαιον, that is, The winged Castle: for Adain in the British tongue signifieth a wing; and Edenborough a word

Apollo Grannus.

Edenborough

(a word compounded out of the British and Saxon language) is nothing else but A The Burgh with wings. From Wings therefore wee must fetch the reason of the name: and fetched it may be, if you thinke good, either from the Companies of Horsemen, which are called Wings, or else from those Wings in Architecture, which the great Master builders tearme Pteromata, that is, as Petrus sheweth, two Walls so rising up in heighth, as that they resemble a shew of Wings: which, for that certaine City of Cyprum wanted, it was called in old time (as wee read in the Geographers) Apiera, that is, Without Wings. But if any man beleve that the name was derived from Ebrauk a Britaine, or from Heib a Pict, good leave have he for me, I will not confront them with this my conjecture.

This Citie in regard of the high situation, of the holsome aire and plentifull soile, and many Noble mens towred houses built round about it, watered also with cleere springing fountaines, reaching from East to West a mile out in length, and carrying halfe as much in bredth, is worthily counted the chiefe Citie of the whole Kingdome; strongly walled, adorned with houses as well publike as private, well peopled and frequented, by reason of the opportunity from the sea which the neighbour haven at Leith affordeth. And as it is the seat of the Kings, so is it the oracle also, or closet of the Lawes, and the very Palacé of Justice. For the high Courts of Parliament are here for the most part holden, for the enacting or repealing of Lawes: also the Session, and the Court of the Kings Justice, and of the Commissariat, where, of I have spoken already, are here settled and kept.

On the East side, hard unto the Monastery of Saint Croffe, or Holy ruide, is the Kings palace, which King David the first built: over which, within a Parke stored with game, riseth an hill with two heads, called of Arthur the Britaine, Arthurs Chaire. On the West side a most steepe rocke mounteth up aloft to a stately heigh every way, save onely where it looketh toward the City: on which is placed a Castle with many a towre in it, so strong that it is counted impregnable, which the Britains called Castle Myned Agned, the Scots, The Maidens Castle, and the Virgins Castle, of certaine young maidens of the Picts royall blood, who were kept there in old time, and which may seeme in truth to have beene that Castrum Alatum, or Castle with A-v-v-i-n-g, above said.

How Edenborrow in the alternative fortune of warres was subject one while to the Scots, and another while to the English, who inhabited this East part of Scotland, untill it became wholly under the Scots dominion, about the yeere of our salvation 960. what time the English Empire, sore shaken with the Danish wars, lay as it were gasping and dying.

How also, as an old booke Of the division of Scotland, in the Library of the right honourable Lord Burghley late high Treasurer of England, sheweth: Whiles Indulph reigned, the town of Eden was voided and abandoned to the Scots unto this present day, as what variable changes of reciprocall fortune it hath felt from time to time, the Historiographers doe relate, and out of them ye are to be informed. Meane while read if you please these verses of that most worthy man Master I. Jonston, in praise of Edenborrow.

Monte sub acclivi Zephyri procurrat in auras
Hinc arx celsa, illinc Regia clara nitet.
Inter utramque parei sublimibus ardua tellus
Urbs armis animis, clara frequensque viris.
Nobile Scotorum caput, & pars maxima regni,
Penè etiam gentis integra regna sua.
Rara artes & opes, quod mens optaverit aut hic
Inveniat, aut non Scotia tota dabit.
Compositum hic populum videas, sanctumque Senatum, Sanctaque cum puro lumine jura Dei.
An quisquam Arctoi extremo in limine mundi

Aut

*Aut hac aut paria his cernere posse puer?
Dic hospes, postquam externas lustraveris urbes,
Hac cernens, oculis credis an ipse tuus?*

Under the rising of an hill, Westward there shoots one way
A castle high, on th'other side the Kings house gorgeous gay.
Betweene them both the citie stands, tall buildings shew it well,
For armes, for courage much renown'd, much people therein dwell.
The Scots head citie large and faire, the kingdome greatest part,
Nay, even the nations kingdome whole well heere, by just desert.
Rare arts and riches: what ones minde can wish is therein found,
Or else it will not gotten be throughout all Scottish ground.
A civill people here a man may see, a Senate grave, Gods holy lawes with purest light of Preachers here ye have.
In parts remote of Northren clime would any person weene,
That ever these, or such like things might possibly be seene?
Say Travailer, now after that thou forraine towne hast knowne, Beholding this, beleevest thou these eyes that are thine owne.

A mile from hence lyeth Leith, a most commodious haven, hard upon the river Leith, which when Desley the Frenchman for the securitie of Edenborrow had fortified, by reason of manie men repairing thither, within a short time from a meane village it grew to be a bigge towne. Againe, when Francis the second, King of France, had taken to wife Marie the Queene of Scots, the Frenchmen, who in hope and conceit had already devoured Scotland, and began now to gape for England, in the yeere 1560. strengthened it with more fortifications. But Elizabeth Queene of England, solicited by the Nobles of Scotland that embraced the reformed religion to side with them, by her puissance and wisdome effected, that both they returned into France, and these their fortifications were laied level with the ground, and Scotland ever since hath been freed from the French.

Where this Forth groweth more and more narrow, it had in the midst of it the citie Caer Guidi, as Bede noteth, which now may seeme to be the Island named Inch-Keith. Whether this were that VICTORIA which Ptolomee mentioneth, I will not stand to prove: although a man may beleve, that the Romans turned this Guidi into Victoria, as well as the Isle Guith or Wight into Videssus or Vesla: certes, seeing both these Islands bee dis severed from the shore, the same reason of the name will hold well in both languages. For Ninius hath taught us, that Guith in the British tongue betokeneth a separation. More within, upon the same Forth is situate Abercorn, in *Bede*s time a famous Monasterie, which now by the gracious favour of King James the sixth, giveth unto James Hamilton the title of the Earle of Abercorn. And fast beside it standeth Blacknesse Castle; and beneath it Southward, the ancient citie LINDUM, whereof Ptolomee maketh mention: which the better learned as yet call Linlithquo, commonly Lithquo, beautified and set out with a verie faire house of the Kings, a goodly Church, and a fishfull lake; of which lake it may seeme to have assumed that name: for Lin, as I have already shewed, in the British tongue soundeth as much as a Lake. A Sheriffe it had in times past by inheritance out of the family of the Hamiltons of Peyle: and now in our dayes it hath for the first Earle, Sir Alexander Levingston, whom King James the sixth raised from the dignitie of a Baron, wherein his Ancestours had flourished a long time, to the honour of an Earle: like as within a while after he promoted Mark Ker, Baron of Newbottle afore said, to the title of Earle of Lothien.

Bbbb

SEL-

Lyth.

Caer Guidi.

Earle of Abercorn.
Black-nesse.

Linlithquo.

Earle of Linlithquo.

Earle of Lothien.

SELGOVÆ.

Beneath the GADENI, toward the South and West, where now are the small territories of Lidedale, Eufdale, Eskdale, Annandale, and Nidesdale, so called of little rivers running through them, which all lose themselves in Solway Frith, dwelt in ancient times the SELGOVÆ; the reliques of whose name seeme unto mee, whether unto others I know not, to remaine in that name Solway.

Lidedale.

Hepburnes
Earles of Bothwell.Brakenfey,
Backlugh,
Eufdale,
Uzellum;Eskdale:
Horefi.

In Lidedale there riseth aloft Armitage, so called, because it was in times past dedicated to a solitarie life; now it is a very strong Castle, which belonged to the Hepburns, who draw their originall from a certaine Englishman a prisoner, whom the Earle of March, for delivering him out of a danger, greatly enriched. These were Earles of Bothwell, and a long time by the right of inheritance Admirals of Scotland. But by a sister of James Earle of Bothwell, the last of the Hepburns, married unto John Prior of Coldingham, base sonne to King James the fifth (who begat too too many bastards) the title and inheritance both came unto his son. Hard by is Brakenfey, the habitation of the warlike family of Backlugh, surnamed Scot; beside many little piles or forts of militarie men everie where. In Eufdale, I would deeme by the affinity of the name, that old Uzellum, mentioned by Prolomee, stood by the river Eske.

In Eskdale some are of opinion that the HORESTI dwelt, into whose borders Julius Agricola, when he had subdued the Britans inhabiting this tract, brought the Roman armie: especially if we read Horefi in stead of Horesti. For Ar-Ese in the British tongue betokeneth a place by the river Eske. As for Esica in Eskdale, I have spoken of it before in England, and there is no cause wherefore I should iterate the same.

ANNANDALE.

Annandale.

Lough Maban.

The Jonstons.

The Stewarrie of Annandale.

The Brusfes.

Unto this on the West side adjoyneth ANNANDALE, that is, The vale by the river Annan; into which the access by land is very difficult. The places of greater note herein are these: a castle by Lough-Maban, three parts whereof are environed with water, and strongly walled; and the towne Annandale, at the very mouth almost of the river Annan: which lost all the glorie and beautie it had, by the English warre in the reigne of Edward the sixth.

In this territorie, the Jonstons are men of greatest name; a kindred even bred to warre: betweene whom and the Maxwells there hath beene professed an open enmitie over long, even to deadly feud and blood-shed: which Maxwells by right from their ancestors, have the rule of this Seneschallie, for so it is accounted. This vale Eadgar King of Scots, after hee was restored to his kingdome by auxiliarie forces out of England, gave in consideration and reward of good service, unto Robert Bruse or Brus Lord of Cliveland in Yorke-shire; who with the good favour of the King bestowed it upon Robert his younger sonne, when himselfe would not serve the King of Scots in his warres. From him flowered the Brusfes Lords of Annandale, of whom Robert Brus married Isabel, the daughter of William King of Scots by the daughter of Robert Avenall: his sonne likewise, Robert the third of that name, wedded the daughter of David Earle of Huntingdon and of Gariob: whose sonne Robert, surnamed The Noble, when the issue of Alexander the third King of Scots failed, challenged in his mothers right the Kingdome of Scotland, before before Edward the first King of England, (as the direct and superiour Lord of the Kingdome of Scotland (so the English give it out) or, an honourable Arbitrarour (for so say the Scots) as being neerer in proximitie, in degree and blood, to King Alexander the third and Margaret, daughter to the King of Norway, although hee were the sonne by a second sister: who soon after resigning up his own right, granted and gave over to his son Robert Brus Earle of Carrick, and to his heires (I speak out of the verie originall) all the right and claime, which he had or might have to the Kingdome of Scotland. But the action and suit went with John Balliol, who sued for his right, as descended of the eldest sister, although in a degree farther off: and sentence was given in these words, For that the person more remote in the second degree descending in the first line, is to bee preferred before a neerer in a second line, in the succession of an inheritance that cannot be parted. Howbeit, the said Robert, sonne to the Earle of Carrick, by his own vertue at length recovered the Kingdome unto himself, and established it to his posteritie. A Prince, who as he flourished notably in regard of the glorious ornaments of his noble acts, so he triumphed as happily with invincible fortitude and courage, over forme that so often crossed him.

NIDISDALL.

Close unto Annandale on the West side lyeth NIDISDALE, sufficiently furnished with corne-fields and pastures; so named of the river Nid, which in Prolomee is wrongly written NOBIUS, for NODIUS or NIDIUS: of which name there bee other rivers in Britaine, full of shallow foords and muddie shelves, like as this Nid is also. It springeth out of the Lake Lagh-Cure, by which flourished CORDA, a towne of the Selgovæ. He taketh his course first by Saughuera Castle of the Creightons, who a long time kept a great port, as enjoying the dignitie of the Barons of Saughuera, and the authoritie besides of hereditarie Sheriffs of Nidisdale: then by Morton, which gave title of Earle to some of the family of Douglas: out of which others of that surname have their mansion and abiding at Drumlanrig, by the same river: neere unto the mouth whereof standeth Dunfreys, betweene two hills, the most flourishing towne of this tract: which hath to shew also an old Castle in it, famous for making of woollen clothes, and remarkable for the murder of John Commin, the mightiest man for manred and retinew in all Scotland; whom Robert Brus, for feare he should foreclose his way to the kingdome, ranne quite through with his sword in the Church, and soon obtained his pardon from the Pope, for committing that murder in a sacred place. Neerer unto the mouth, Solway, a little village retaineth still somewhat of the old name of Selgovæ. Upon the verie mouth is situate Caer Laverock, which Prolomee I suppose called CARBANTORIUM, accounted an imprenable fort, when King Edward the first, accompanied with the floure of English Nobilitie, besieged and hardly wonne it: but now it is a weake dwelling house of the Barons of Maxwell, who being men of an ancient and noble lineage, were a long time Wardens of these West marches, and of late advanced by marriage with the daughter one of the heires of the Earle of Morton; whereby John Lord Maxwell was declared Earle of Morton: as also by the daughter and heire of Hereis Lord Toricles, whom I. a younger sonne took to wife, and obtained by her the title of Baron Hereis. Moreover, in this vale by the Lake side lyeth Glencarn, whence the Cunninghams, of whom I am to write more in place convenient, bare a long time the title of Earle.

This Nidisdale, together with Annandale, nourisheth a warlike kind of men, who have beene infamous for robberies and depredations: for they dwell upon Solway Frith, a fouldable arme of the sea at low waters, through which they made many times outrodes into England for to fetch in booties, and in which the inhabitants thereabout on both sides with pleasant pastime and delightfull fight on horse-backe

Bbbb 2

The river Nid;

Corda.

Creightons
Barons de Saughuera.
Earles of Morton.

Dunfreys;

Caer Laverock.

Barons Hereis; Glencarn.

Salmons;

with

The behaviour of Scottish borderers.

with speares hunt Salmons, whereof there is abundance. What manner of cattle-stealers these be, that inhabite these vales in the marches of both kingdomes, John Lesley, himselfe a Scottish man, and Bishop of Rosse, will tell you in these words. They go forth in the night by troops out of their own borders, through desert by-waies, and many winding cranks. All the day time they refresh their horses, and recreate their owne strength in lurking places appointed before hand, untill they be come thither at length, in the dark night, where they would be. When they have laid hold of a bootie, back again they returne home likewise by night, through blinde waies onely, and fetching many a compassse about. The more skilfull any leader or guide is, so passe through those wild desarts, crooked turnings, and steep downe-falls, in the thickest mists and deepest darknesse, hee is held in greater reputation, as one of an excellling wit. And so craftie and wily these are, that seldome or never they forgo their bootie, and suffer it to be taken out of their hands, unless it happen otherwhiles that they be caught by their adversaries following continually after, and tracing them directly by their footing, according as quick-fencing Slugh-bounds doe lead them. But say they be taken, so faire spoken they are and eloquent, so manie sugred words they have at will, sweetly to plead for them, that they are able to move the Judges and adversaries both, be they never so austere and severe, if not to mercie, yet to admiration, and some commiseration withall.

NOVANTES, GALLOWAY.

From Niddale as you goe on Westward, the NOVANTES inhabited in the vales, all that tract which runneth out far and wide toward the West, between the sea and Dunbritain Friith, or Chydforth: yet so indented and hollowed with nookes and creekes, that here and there it is drawne into a narrow roome: and then again in the verie utmost skirt it openeth and spreadeth it selfe broad at more libertie: whereupon some have called it the CHERSONESUS, that is, The Biland of the NOVANTES. But at this day their countreie containeth Galloway, Carick, Kyle, and Cunningham.

Galloway.

Galloway, in the Latine Writers of the middle time Gaelwallia and Gallovidia, so called of the Irish, who in times past dwelt there, and terme themselves short in their owne language Gael, is a countrey rising up everie where with hills, that are better for feeding of cattell than bearing of corne: the inhabitants practise fishing, as well within the sea lying round about them, as in little rivers, and the Loches or meeres in everie place standing full of water at the foot of the hills: out of which in September they take in Weeles and Weere-nets, an incredible number of most sweet and favourite eeles, whereby they make no lesse gain than others do by their little nagges, E which for being well limmed, fast knit, and strongly made for to endure travails, are much in request and bought from hence. Among these, the first place that offereth it selfe by the river DEA, mentioned in Ptolomee, which keeping the name still full and whole, they call Dee, is Kircoubricht, the most commodious port of this coast, & the second Stewartie of Scotland, which belongeth also to the Maxwells: then Cardines, a fort set upon a craggie and high rocke by the river Fleet, and fenced with strong walls. Neere unto it the river Ken, corruptly read in Ptolomee IENA, runneth into the sea: after it is Wigton, an haven towne with a narrow entrance unto it, between the two rivers, Bluidnoo and Crea, which also is counted a Sherifdome, over which Agnew is Sheriffe. In times past it had for Earle Archibald Douglass, renowned in the French warre, and at this day, by the favour of King James the sixth, John Lord Fleming, who deriveth his pedigree from the ancient Earles of Wigton.

Earles of Wig-
ton.

Leucopibia.

Neere unto this Ptolomee placed the Citie LEUCOPIA, which I know not, to say truth, where to seeke. Yet the place requireth that it should be that Episcopall seat of Ninian, which Bede calleth Candida Casa, and the English and Scottish in the verie

Horn a house or habitation.
* Or Copier.

A verie samie sense whit-berne: what say you then if Ptolomee after his manner translated that name in Greek Λευκωπία, that is, white-houses (in stead whereof the * Transcribers have thrust upon us Leucopibia) which the Britans tearmed Candida Casa. In this place Ninia or Ninian the Britan, an holy man, the first that instructed the South-Picts in Christian faith, in the reigne of the Emperour Theodosius the younger, had his seat, and built a Church consecrated to the memorie of Saint Martin, after a manner unusuall among the Britans, as Bede saith, who wrote that the English in his time held this country, and when the number of the faithfull Christians multiplied, an Episcopall See was erected at this Candida Casa. A little higher there is a Bi-land
B having the sea insinuating it selfe on both sides with two Bayes, that by a narrow neck it is adjoined to the firme land: and this is properly called CHERSONESUS, and PROMONTORIUM NOVANTUM, commonly, the Mull of Galloway.

Beyond this Northward, there is a Bay taking a great compassse, and full of Ilands, into which very many rivers on everie side doe out-lade themselves. But first of all, from the verie cape or top of the Promontarie is ABRANUS, which being set a little out of his own place, is so called of Ptolomee, for Aber-Ruanus, that is, The mouth of Ruan. For at this day that river is named Rian, and the lake out of which it floweth, Lough-Rian, exceeding full of Herrings and Stone-fishes.

This Galloway had in times past Princes and Lords over it: of whom the first recorded in Chronicles was Fergus, in the reigne of Henric the first, King of England, who gave for his Armes, A Lion rampant Arg, crowned Or in a shield Azure: who after many troubles that he had stirred, was driven to this exigent by King Malcolm, that he gave his sonne Uubred to the King for an hostage, and himselfe wearie of this world, tooke the habit of a Chanon at Holy Rood house in Edinburgh. As for Uuubred, Gilbert his younger brother tooke him prisoner in battaile, and when hee had cut out his tongue, and plucked his eyes forth of his head, he cruelly bereaved him both of life and inheritance. But within some few yeeres, when Gilbert was dead, Uubreds sonne recovered his fathers inheritance, who of a sister of William Morvill
Constable of Scotland, begat Alan Lord of Galloway, and Constable of Scotland: D
This Alan, by Margaret the eldest daughter of David Earle of Huntingdon, had Der-colgilda wife to John Balliol, and the mother of John Balliol King of Scotland, who coerced with Robert Bru for the Kingdome of Scotland; and by a former wife, as it seemeth, hee had Helen, married to Roger Quincy Earle of Winchester, who thereby was Constable of Scotland, like as William Ferrars of Groby, the Nephew of the said Roger by a daughter and one of the heires. But these Englishmen soone lost their inheritance in Scotland, as also the dignitie of Constable: which the Commons Earles of Bucquan, descended likewise from a daughter of Roger Quincie, obtained, untill it was translated unto the Earls of Arroll. But the title of the Lords of Galloway fell afterward to the family of the Douglasses.

Lords of Galloway.

Constables of Scotland.

CARRICTA, CARRICT.

Now followeth Carriit upon Dunbritain Friith, faire to be scene with fresh pastures; supplied both by land and sea with commodities abundantly. In this province Ptolomee placed RARI-GONIUM a Creeke, and RERIGONIUM a Towne. For which BERIGONIUM is read in a verie ancient copie of Ptolomee, printed at Rome in the yeere 1480. so that wee cannot but verily thinke it was that which now is called Bargeney. A Lord it hath out of the family of the Kennedies, which came forth of Ireland in the reigne of Robert Bru, and is in this tract of high birth, spread into many branches, and of great power. The chiefe of which linage is Earle of Cassile: for this is the name of a Castle wherein he dwelleth by the river Dun: upon the banke whereof he hath also another

Berigonium, Bargenie.

another Castle, named Dunmure; and he is the hereditarie Bailiffe of this Country. A For this Carriſh, together with Kyle and Cunningham, are counted the three Bailleries of Scotland, because they that governe these with an ordinarie power and jurisdiction are called Baillives, by a tearme that came up in the middle times, and among the Greeks, Sicilians, and Frenchmen signifieth a Conſervator or Protector. But in the age aforegoing Carriſh had Earles: for, to say nothing of Gilberts of Galloway, sonne unto whom King William gave all Carriſh to bee possessed for ever, wee read that Adam of Kilconath was about the yeere 1270. Earle of Carriſh, and died serving in the Holy-land: whose onely daughter Martha fell extremely in love with Robert Bru, a beautifull young Gentleman, as she saw him hunting, and thereupon B made him her husband, advanced him with the title of Earle, and with possessions: unto whom she bare Robert Bru, that most renowned King of Scots, from whom the royall line of the Kings is descended. But the title of the Earle of Carriſh being left for a time to the younger sonnes of the family of Bru, afterwards among other honours encreased the stile of the Princes of Scotland.

KYLE.

More inward from Clids-forth followeth KYLE, plentifull small C things, and as well inhabited. In Bedes Ausharium it is called Campus Cyel, that is, The Field Cyel, and Coil: where it is recorded, That Eadbert King of Northumberland annexed this with other territories unto his owne Kingdome. In Ptolomees time there was known a place here named Vidogara, haply Aire, which is a Sherisdome, hath a townlet also of merchandise, and a well known port by a little river of the same name. Touching which I can thinke of no better thing to write, than these verses sent unto mee from Master John Jonſoun.

Æ R A, five Æ R I A.

*Parva urbs, aſt ingens animus in fortibus heret,
Inferior nulli nobilitate virum.
Aeris è campis haurit puriſſima cælum,
Incubas & miti mollior aura ſolo.
Aeria hinc, non Æra prius credo illa vocata eſt,
Cum duris quid enim mollia juris habent &
Infera cum ſuperis quod ſi componere fas eſt, Aurea fors dici debuit illa prius.*

A City ſmall, but yet great mindes in valiant bodies reſt,
For nobleneſſe of Gentlemen matching the very beſt.
Out of the fields what aire it drawes is right pure, freſh, and kinde,
The ſoile is milde, and upon it there breathes a gentle winde.
Hence I ſuppoſe Æ R I A firſt, not Æra call'd it was,
For what have elements to doe with matters hard as braſſe &
But to compare low things with high if that I may be bold,
Then haply well it ſhould have beene nam'd A U R E A of old.

Besides the river Aire there be other two riverets that water this little territorie, F having many villages ſcattering along their bankes: namely, Longar, neere unto which the Caufords, and Cefnocke, by which the Cambells, families (in this tract) of good worſhip, dwell: upon the banke whereof ſtandeth Uchiltre caſtle, the ſeat of the Stewarts that are of the blood royall, as who iſſued from the Dukes of Albanie, and

Earles of Carrick.
Booke of Mal-roſſe.

Aano 759.

A and thereupon are the Barons of Uchiltrey, out of which houſe was that noble Robert Stewart, who kept continually with the Prince of Condie, as an inſeparable companion, and was with him ſlain in France in battaile. The government of Kyle belongeth by an heritable right to the Cambells of Louden, as Bailiffe thereof.

CUNNINGHAM.

CUNNINGHAM adjoining to Kyle on the Eaſt ſide and the North, butteth upon the ſame Forth ſo cloſe, that it reſtraineth the breadth thereof, which hitherto lay out and ſpread at large. The name, if one interpret it, is as much as the Kings Habitation: by which a man may gheſſe how commodious and pleaſant it is. This territorie is watered with Irwin, that divideth it from Kyle: at the ſpring-head well neere whereof, Kilmarnock ſheweth it ſelfe, the dwelling place of the Barons Boids: of whom in the reigne of James the firſt, Thomas, by a prosperous gale of Court favour, was advanced to the authoritie of Regent or Vice-Roy, Robert his ſonne to the dignitie of Earle of Arran, and marriage with the Kings ſiſter. But ſoone after, when the ſaid gale came about, and blew contrarie, they were judged enemies to the State: Robert alſo had his wiſe taken from him, and given unto James Hamilton; their goods were confiscate, fortune made a game of them, and when they had loſt all they died in exile. Howbeit their poſteritie recovered the ancient honour of Barons, and honorably enjoy it at this day. At the mouth of the river Irwin, ſtandeth Irwin a Burrough, with an haven ſo barred up with ſhelves of ſand, and ſo ſhallow withall, that it can beare none other veſſels but ſmall barks and boates: Ardrifan alſo, a pile belonging to the Montgomeries, more above ſtandeth higher over the Creeke: this is a verie ancient and famous family as any other, who have to ſhew for witneſſe of their warlike prowefſe, Pounnny, a fort built with the ranſome mony of Sir Henrie Percie, ſurnamed Hot-Spur, whom D I. Montgomerie with his owne hand tooke priſoner in the battaile at Otterburne, and led away captive. Not farre from Ardrifan is Largie, embued with the blood of the Norwegians by King Alexander the third. From whence, as you follow the ſhore bending and giving in, you meet with Eglington, a faire caſtle, which was the poſſeſſion of certaine Gentlemen highly deſcended of the ſame ſurname: from whom it came by marriage unto the Montgomeries, who thereby received the title of Earles of Eglington. But whence the ſaid ſurname ſhould come, a man can hardly tell: this I know, that out of Normandie it came into England, and that divers families there were of the ſame name: but that in Effex, from which Sir Thomas Montgomerie, Knight of the order of the Garter, deſcended, in the reigne of Edward the fourth E gave Armes a little different from theſe.

This noble linage is faire and farre ſpread, and out of thoſe of Geuan was that Gabriel de Lorges, called Earle of Montgomerie, Captain of the guard of Scots (which Charles the fifth King of France inſtituted for defence of his owne perſon, and his ſucceſſors, in teſtimonie of their fidelitie, and his love toward them) who in running at tilt ſlew Henrie the ſecond King of France, by occaſion that a broken ſplint of his ſpeare, where the helmet chanced to be open, entred at his eye, and pierced into his brain; and afterwards in that civill war, wherein all France was in a broile, whiles he took part with the Proteſtants, he was apprehended and beheaded. But the Cunninghams in this tract are counted to be the greater and more numerous family, the chiefe F whereof, enjoying the honour of Earle of Glencarn, dwelleth at Kilmarnock, and fetcheth his deſcent out of England, and from an Engliſh Gentleman, who, together with other, killed Thomas Archbiſhop of Canterburie. How true this is I know not, but they ground it haply upon a probable conjecture, taken from an Archbiſhops pall, which the Cunninghams give in their coat of Armes.

Montgomerie
Earles of Eg-lington.

Cunningham
Earles of Glencarne.

ISLE

ISLE GLOTTA, OR ARRAN.

In the fight of Cunningham, among sundry other Ilands, GLOTTA, the Isle mentioned by Amorine the Emperour, beareth up his head, in the very Forib and salt water of the river Glotta, or Cluyd, called at this day Arran, of a castle bearing the same name. Inwardly it mounteth up altogether with high rising hills, at the bottome and foot whereof, along the shore it is well inhabited. The first Earle hereof, that I can read of, was Robert Earles of Arran.

Boide, whose wife and Earldome together, when Boide was banished the realme, James L. Hamilton, as I said erewhile, obtained, and his posteritie enjoyed the same Earldome, saving that of late Sir James Steward, appointed guardian to James Hamilton Earle of Arran, when hee was so defective in understanding that he could not manage his estate, tooke this title in the right of being guardian.

Rothsay Dukedom.

Neere unto this standeth Buibe, so called of a little religious Cell which Brendan founded (for so is a little Cell tearmed in the Scottish tongue.) In this Iland is Rothsay Castle, which giveth the title of Dukedom unto the King of Scots eldest sonne, who is borne Prince of Scotland, Duke of Rothsay, and Seneschall of Scotland, since time that King Robert the third invested Robert his eldest sonne Duke of Rothsay, the first in Scotland that ever was created Duke. With which title also Queene Marie honoured Henrie Lord Darly before she tooke him to be her husband. Then shew themselves Hellan, sometimes called Hellan Leneow, that it, as John Fordon interpreteth it, The Saints Ilands, and Hellan Tinoc, that is, The Swines Iland, with a great number of other Ilands of lesse note and reckoning in the same Forib.

DAMNII, CLUYDS DALE, &c.

Beyond the NOVANTES, more inward, by the river Glotta or Cluyd, and farther still even to the verie East sea, dwelt intimes past the DAMNII, in those countries, if I have any judgement, (for in things so farre remote from our remembrance, and in so thick a mist of obscuritie, who can speake of certaintie?) which are now called Cluydsdale, the Baronic of Renfraw, Lennox, Sirivelmschire, Menieib, and Fife.

Earles of Crawford.

Neere unto the head of Cluyd in Crawford Moore, among the wilde wafts, certaine husbandmen of the countrey, after great store of violent raine, happened to finde certaine small peeces like scrapings of gold, which have this long time given great hope of much riches, but most of all in our dayes, since that Sir Beamis Bulmer undertooke with great endeavour to finde out here a Mine of gold. Certes there is Azur gotten forth everie day, without any paines in manner at all. Now the Castle of Crawford, together with the title of the Earle of Crawford, was by Robert the second, King of Scots, given unto Sir James Lindsey, who by a single combate performed with Baron Welles an Englishman, won high commendation for his valour. These Lindseys have deserved passing well of their country, and are of ancient nobilitie, ever since that Sir William Lindsey married one of the heires of William of Lancaster Lord of Kandale in England, whose neice in the third degree of lineall descent, was married into the most honourable family of Coucey in France.

A France. Cluyd, after hee hath from his spring head with much struggling got out Northward by Baron Somervils house, receiveth unto him from out of the West the river Duglasse or Douglass, so called of a blackish or greenish water that it hath: which river communicateth his name both to the vale through which hee runneth, called Douglasdale, and also to Douglass castle therein: which name that castle likewise hath imparted unto the family of the Douglases. Which I assure you is very ancient, but most famous ever since that Sir James Douglass stucke verie close at all times as a most fast friend unto King Robert Bruce, and was readie alwaies with singular courage, resolution, and wisdom, to assist him, claiming the kingdome in most troublesome and dangerous times: and whom the said King Robert charged at his death to carrie his heart to Jerusalem, that hee might bee discharged of his vow made to goe to the Holy-land. In memoriall whereof the Douglases have inserted in their Coat of Armes a mans heart. From which time this family grew up to that power and greatnesse, and namely, after that King David the second had created William Earle of Douglass, that they after a sort awed the Kings themselves. For at one time well neere there were fixe Earles of them, namely, of this Douglass, of Angus, of Ormund, of Wigton, of Murray, and of Morton: among whom, the Earle of Wigton, through his martiall prowesse and desert, obtained at the hands of Charles the seventh king of France, the title of Duke of Tourain, and left the same to two Earles of Douglass his heires after him.

Baronic Somervils, Douglass.

Above the confluence of Douglass and Cluyd is Lanric, the hereditarie Sheriffdom of the Hamiltons, who for their name are beholden unto Hamilton castle, which standeth somewhat higher upon Cluyds banke, in a fruitfull and passing pleasant place; but they referre their originall, as they have a tradition, to a certaine Englishman surnamed Hampion, who having taken part with Robert Bruce, received from him faire lands in this tract. Much increase of their wealth and estate came by the bounteous hand of King James the third, who bestowed in marriage upon Sir James Hamilton his own eldest sister, whom he had taken perforce from the Lord Boide her husband, together with the Earldome of Arran; but of honours and dignities by the States of the kingdome, who after the death of King James the fifth, ordained James Hamilton grandionne to the former James, Regent of Scotland, whom Henrie also the second, King of France, advanced to be Duke of Chateau Heraldin Poitou: as also by King James the sixth, who honoured his son John with the title of Marquesse of Hamilton, which honourable title was then first brought into Scotland.

Sheriffdom of Lanric.

Marquesse Hamilton.

The river Glotta or Cluyd runneth from Hamilton by Bothwell, which glorieth in the Earles thereof, namely, John Ramsey, whose greatnesse with King James the third was excessive, but pernicious both to himselfe and the King: and the Hepburns, whom I have already spoken of, & so streight forward with a readie stream through Glasgow, in ancient times past a Bishops seat: but discontinued a great while, untill that King William restored it up againe: but now it is an Archbishops See, and an Universitie, which Bishop Turnbull, after hee had in a pious and religious intent built a colledge in the yeere 1554. first founded. This Glasgow is the most famous town of merchandise in this tract: for pleasant site, and apple trees, and other like fruit trees much commended, having also a verie faire bridge supported with eight arches. Of which towne I. Jonstoun thus verified.

Earles of Bothwell.

Non te Pomificum luxu, non Insula tantum
Ornavit, diri quæ tibi causa mali.
Gloriade quantum decorant te, Glasgwa, Musæ,
Quæ celsum attollunt clara sub astra caput.
GLOTTA decus rerum, piscosis nobilis undis,
Fœnitimi recreat jugera læta soli.
Ast Glottæ decus, & vicinis gloria terris
Glasgwa fecundat flumine cuncta suos.

The

The sumptuous port of Bishops great bath not adorn'd thee so,
Nor mitre rich, that hath bene cause of thine accursed woe,
As Cluyds Muses grace thee now, O Glasgow towne: for why?
They make thee beare thy head aloft up to the starrie skie.
Cluyd the beautie of the world, for fishfull streame renown'd,
Refresheth all the neighbour fields that lye about it round:
But Glasgow beautie is to Cluyd, and grace to countries nye,
And by the streames that flow from thence, all places fructifie.

Reinfray Bar-
onie.

Along the hithermore banke of Cluid lyeth the Baronie of Reinfray, so called of B the principall towne, which may seeme to bee RANDVARA in Ptolomee, by the river Carbairi, that hath the Baron of Carbairi dwelling upon it, carrying the same surname, and of ancient nobilitie: neere unto which (for this little province can shew a goodly breed of nobilitie) there border Cruckston, the seat in times past of the Lords of Darley, from whom by right of marriage it came to the Earles of Lennox, whence Henrie the Father of King James the sixth was called Lord Darley; Halkead, the habitation of the Barons of Ros, descended originally from English blood, as who fetch their pedigree from that Robert Ros of Warke, who long since left England, and came under the allegiance of the King of Scots: Pasley, sometimes a famous Monasterie founded by Alexander the second of that name, high Steward of Scotland, which for a gorgeous Church, and rich furniture was inferiour to few: but now, by the beneficiall favour of King James the sixth, it yeeldeth both dwelling place, and title of Baron to Lord Claud Hamilton, a younger sonne of Duke Charles Herald: and Sempill, the Lord whereof Baron Sempill, by ancient right is Sheriffe of this Baronie. But the title of Baron of Reinfray, by a peculiar priviledge doth appertaine unto the Prince of Scotland.

Barons de Ros.

Pasley.

Baron Sempill.

LENNOX.

Long the other banke of Cluyd above Glasgow, runneth forth Levinia or LENNOX Northward, among a number of hills close couched one by another, having that name of the river Levin, which Ptolomee calleth LELANONIUS, and runneth into Cluyd out of Logh Lomund, which spreadeth it selfe here under the mountaines twenty miles long and eight miles broad, passing well stored with varietie of fish: but most especially with a peculiar fish that is to be found no where else (they call it Pollac) as also with Islands, concerning which manie fables have bene forged, and those rise among the common people.

As touching an Iland here that floateth and waveth too and fro, I list not to make question thereof. For what should let, but that a lighter bodie, and spongyous with all in manner of a pumice stone, may swimme above the water? and Plinie writeth, how in the Lake Vadimon there be Islands full of grasse, and covered over with rushes and reeds, that float up and downe. But I leave it unto them that dwell neerer unto this place, and better know the nature of this Lake, whether this old Distichon of our Necham be true or no:

*Diatur fluvio Albania, saxea ligna
Das Lomund multa frigiditate potens.*

With rivers Scotland is enrich'd, and Lomund there a Lake
So cold of nature is, that stickes it quickly stones doth make.

Round about the edge of this Lake there bee fishers cottages, but nothing else memorable, unlesse it be Kilmoronoc, a proper fine house of the Earles of Cassides on the

A the East side of it, which hath a most pleasant prospect into the said Lake. But at the confluence where Levin emptieth it selfe out of the Lake into Cluyd, standeth the old Citie called Al-Cluyd. Bede noteth that it signified (in whose language I know not) as much as The rocke Cluyd. True it is, that Ar-Cluyd signifieth in the British tongue, upon Cluyd, or upon the rocke; and Cluyd in ancient English founded the same that a Rocke. The succeeding posteritie called this place Dunbritton, that is, The Britans towne (and corruptly by a certaine transposition of letters, Dunbarton) because the Britans held it longest against the Scots, Picts, and Saxons. For it is the strongest of all the castles in Scotland by naturall situation, towering up on a rough, craggie, and two-headed rocke, at the verie meeting of the rivers in a Greene plaine. In one of the tops or heads abovesaid, there standeth up a aloftie watch-tower or Keep: on the other, which is the lower, there are sundrie strong bulwarks. Betweene these two tops on the North side, it hath one onely ascent, by which hardly one by one can passe up, and that with a labour by grees or steps, cut out aslope travers the rocke. In steed of ditches, on the West side serveth the river Levin; on the South, Cluyd; and on the East a boggie flat, which at everie tide is wholly covered over with waters; and on the North side the verie upright steepness of the place is a most sufficient defence. Certain remaines of the Britans, presuming of the naturall strength of this place, and their owne manhood, who, as Gildas writeth, gat themselves a place of refuge in high mountaines and hills, steep and naturally fenced, as it were, with rampires and ditches, in most thick woods and forests, in rocks also of the sea, stood out and defended themselves here, after the Romans departure, for three hundred yeeres, in the midst of their enemies. For in Bedes time, as himself writeth, it was the best fortified citie of the Britans. But in the yeere 756. Eadbert King of Northumberland, and Oeng King of the Picts, with their joint forces enclosed it round about by siege, and brought it to such a desperate extremitie, that it was rendred unto them by composition. Of this place the territorie round about it is called the Sherifdome of Dunbarton, and hath had the Earles of Lennox this long time for their Sheriffes, by birth-right and inheritance.

Al-Cluyd.

Dunbritton.
Britannodunum.

R. Hoveden.

Earles of Lennox.

Steward.

A troupe of Scots in France.

As touching the Earles of Lennox themselves, to omit those of more ancient and obscure times, there was one Duncane Earle of Lennox in the reigne of Robert the second, who died and left none but daughters behinde him. Of whom one was married to Alan Steward; descended from Robert, a younger sonne of Walter the second of that name, High Steward of Scotland; and brother likewise to Alexander Steward the second, from whom the noblest and royall race of Scotland hath bene propagated. This surname Steward was given unto that most noble family, in regard of the honourable office of the Stewardshippe of the kingdome, as who had the charge of the Kings revenues. The said Alan had issue John Earle of Lennox, and Robert, Captain of that companie of Scottisshmen at Armes, which Charles the sixth K. of France first instituted, in lieu of some recompence unto the Scottissh nation, which by their valour had deserved passing well of the kingdom of France, who also by the same Prince for his vertues sake was endow'd with the Seigniorie of Aubigny in Auvergne. John had a sonne named Matthew Earle of Lennox, who wedded the daughter of James Hamilton by Marion daughter to King James the second; on whom he begat John Earle of Lennox: hee taking armes to deliver King James the fifth out of the hands of the Douglases and the Hamiltons, was slaine by the Earle of Arran his Unkle on the mothers side. This John was father to Matthew Earle of Lennox, who having sustained sundrie troubles in France and Scotland, found fortune more friendly to him in England, through the favour of King Henrie the eighth, considering that hee bestowed upon him in marriage his Neice, with faire lands. By the meanes of this happie marriage were brought into the world Henrie and Charles.

Henrie, by Marie Queene of Scots, had issue JAMES the sixth, King of Britain, by the propitious grace of the eternall God, borne in a most auspicate and lucky houre, to knit and unite in one bodie of an Empire the whole Island of Britaine, divided as well in it selfe, as it was heretofore from the rest of the world, and (as we hope and pray)

James King of Britaine.

pray) to lay a most sure foundation of an everlasting securitie, for our heires, and the posteritie. As for Charles, he had issue one onely daughter Arbella, who above her sexe hath so embraced the studies of the best literature, that therein shee hath profited and proceeded with singular commendation, and is comparable with the excellent Ladies of old time. When Charles was dead, after that the Earledome of Lennox, whereof he stood enfeofed, was revoked by Parliamentarie authoritie in the yeere of our Lord 1579. and his Uncle by the fathers side, Robert Bishop of Caithanes, had some while enjoyed this title (in lieu whereof he received at the Kings hands the honour of the Earle of March) King James the sixth conferred the honourable title of Duke of Lennox upon Esme Steward, sonne to John Lord D' Aubigny, younger brother to Mathew aforesaid Earle of Lennox, which Lodowic Esme his son at this day honourably enioieth. For since the time of Charles the sixth, there were of this line Lords of Aubigny in France, the said Robert before named, and Bernard or Eberard under Charles the eighth & Lewis the twelfth, who is commended with great praise unto posteritie by P. Jovius, for his noble acts most valourously exploited in the warre of Naples, a most firme and trustie companion of King Henrie the seventh when he entred into England. Who used for his Emprise or devise, a Lion betweene buckles, with this Mot, DISTANTIA JUNGIT: for that by his means the Kingdomes of France and of Scotland, severed and dis-joined so farre in distance, were by a straighter league of friendship conjoynd: like as Robert Steward Lord C D' Aubigny of the same race, who was Marshall of France under King Lewis the eleventh, for the same cause used the royall Armes of France, with buckles Or in a border Gueules: which the Earles and Dukes of Lennox have ever since borne quarterly with the Armes of Steward.

Lords of Aubigny or Oubigny.

Paradise.

STIRLING Sheriffdome,

UPON Lennox North-eastward bordereth the territorie of STERLING, so named of the principall towne therein: for fruitfull soile, and numbers of Gentlemen in it, second to no province of Scotland. Here is that narrow land or streight, by which Dunbrioun Frish and Edenborough Frish (that I may use the termes of this our age) piercing farre into the land out of the West and East Seas, are divided asunder, that they meet n or the one with the other.

Which thing Julius Agricola, who marched hitherto and beyond, first observed, and fortified this space betweene with garrisons, so as all the part of Britaine in this side was then in possession of the Romans, and the enemies removed and driven, as it were, into another Island, in so much as Tacitus judged right truely, There was no other bound or limite of Britaine to bee sought for. Neither verily in the time ensuing, E did either the VALOUR of Armies, or the GLORIE of the Romane name, which scarcely could be stayed, set out the marches of the Empire in this part of the world farther, although with inrodes they other whiles molested and endamaged them. But after this glorious expedition of Agricola, when himselfe was called backe, Britaine, as saith Tacitus, became for-let, neither was the possession kept still thus farre: for the Caledonian Britans drave the Romans backe as farre as to the river Tine: in so much as Hadrian, who came into Britaine in person about the fortieth yeere after, and reformed many things in it, went no farther forward, but gave commandement that the GOD TERMINUS, which was wont to give ground unto none, should retire backward out of this place, like as in the East on this side Euphrates. Hence it is that P St. Augustin wrote in this wise: GOD TERMINUS, who gave not place to Jupiter, yielded unto the will of Hadrianus, yielded to the ralhnesse of Julian, yielded to the necessitie of Jovian. In so much as Hadrian had enough to doe, for to make a wall of turfe betweene the rivers Tine and Est, well neere an hundred mijles Southward on this side Edenborough Frish.

God Terminus.
Aug. de Civ.
Dei l. 4. c. 29.

But

A But Antoninus Pius, who being adopted by Hadrian bare his name, stiled thereupon TITUS AELIUS HADRIANUS ANTONINUS PIUS, under the conduct of Lollius Urbicus, whom he had sent hither Lievtenant, repelled the Northern enemies backe againe beyond BODOTRIA, or Edenborough Forth, and that by raising another wall of turfe, namely, besides that of Hadrianus, as Capitolinus writeth. Which wall, that it was reared in this verie place whereof I now speake, and not by Severus (as it is commonly thought) I will produce no other witnesse, than two ancient Inscriptions digged up here: of which the one fastned in the wall of an house at Cader, sheweth how the second Legion Augusta, set up the wall for the space of three miles and more: the other, now in the house of the Earle Marshall at Dunotyr, which implieth, that a band of the twentieth Legion Vistrix raised the said wall three miles long. But see here the verie inscriptions themselves, as Servatius Rihelley, a Gentleman of Silesia, who curiously travailed these countries, copied them out for mee.

The wall of Antoninus Pius.

IMP. CÆSARI
T. AELIO HADRI-
ANO ANTONINO.
AUG. PIO. P. P.
VEXILLATIO
LEG. XX. VAL. VIC. F.
PER. MIL. P. III.

IMP. CÆS. TIT. --- IO AELIO HADRIANO ANTON.
AUG. PIO. P. P. LEG. II. AUG.
PER. M. P. III. D. CIXVIS.

At Cadir, where this latter inscription is extant, there is another stone also erected by the second Legion Augusta, wherein within a Laurell garland, supported by two little images resembling victorie, are these letters.

LEG.
II
AVG.
FEC.

And in a village called Mimiaburch, out of a Ministers house there was removed this inscription into a Gentlemans house, which is there new built out of the ground:

Cccc

D. M.

* Cohors prima Hamiorum.

But when the Northerne nations in the reigne of Commodus, having passed once over this wall, had made much waft and spoile in the country, the Emperour Severus, as I have already said, repaired this wall of Hadrian. Howbeit afterwards the Romans brought eftsoones the country lying betweene, under their subjection. For Ninius hath recorded, that Carausius under Dioclerian strengthened this wall another time, and fortified it with seven castles. Lastly, the Romanes fenced this place (when Theodosius the younger was Emperour) under the conduct of Gallus of Ravenna. Now, saith Bede, they made a turfe wall, rearing it not so much with stone as with turfes (as having no cunning Artificer for so great a piece of worke) and the same to no use, betweene two Friths or Armes of the sea, for many miles in length: that where the sense of water was wanting, there by the helpe of a wall they might defend their borders from the invasion of enemies: of which worke, that is to say, a very broad and high wall, a man may see to this day most certaine and evident remains.

This wall began, as the Scots in these dayes give out, at the river Aven, that goeth unto Edenborough Forth, and having passed over the riveret Carron, reacheth unto Dunbritton. But Bede, as I said erewhile, affirmeth that it beginneth in a place called Pen vaell, that is, in the Picts language, as much as The head of the wall; in the Britans tongue Pen Gual, in English Penwalton, in Scottish Cevall: all which names no doubt are derived from Vallum in Latine: and he saith, That place is almost two miles from Abercurvig or Abercurving. And it endeth, as the common sort thinke, at Kirk-Patrice, the native soile (as some writeth) of Saint Patrick the Irish-mens Apostle, neere unto Cluyd; according to Bede, at Alcluid; after Ninius, at the Citie Pen Alcluyt, which may seeme all one.

Now this wall is commonly called Grahams dyke; either of Graham a warlike Scot, whose valour was especially seene when the breach was made through it, or else of the hill Grampie, at the foot whereof it stood. The author of Rosa Temporum calleth it the wall of Aber-corneth, that is, of the mouth of the river Corneth: where, in Bede's time, there was a famous monasterie standing, as he hath recorded, upon English ground, but neere unto that frith or arme of the sea, which in those daies severed the lands of the English and the Picts.

Hard by this wall of turfe, what way as the river Carron crosseth this Sheriffdome of Sterling, toward the left hand are seene two mounts cast up by mans hand, which they call Duni pacis, that is, Knolles of peace: and almost two miles lower there is an ancient round building, foure and twentie cubits high, and thirteene broad, open in the top, framed of rough stone without lime, having the upper part of everie stone so tenanted into the nether, as that the whole worke still rising narrow, by a mutuall interlacing and clasping, upholdeth it selfe. Some call this the Temple of God

Arthurs oven. TERMINUS, others Arthurs-Oven, who father everie stately and sumptuous thing upon Arthur. Others againe, Julius Hoff, and suppose it to have been built by Julius Caesar. But I would thinke rather that Julius Agricola built it, who fortified this frontier part, were it not that Ninius hath already informed us, that it was erected by Carausius for a triumphall Arch. For hee, as Ninius writeth, built upon the banke of Caron, a round house of polished stone, erecting a Triumphall Arch in

memoriall

A memoriall of a victorie: hae wee diste also the wall, and strengthened it with seven Castles. In the middlest space betweene Duni pacis and this building, on the right-hand-banke of Carron, there is yet to be discerned a confused face of a little ancient Citie: where the vulgar people beleeveth there was sometimes a road for ships, who call it Camelot, by a name that is rise in King Arthurs booke; and they contend, but all in vaine, to have it that Camalodunum which Tacitus mentioneth. But it would seeme rather, by the name of the river Carron running underneath, to have beene CORTA DAMNI TORUM, which Protolomee mentioneth in this tract. And now take with you that which George Buchanan, that excellent Poet, wrote of the limit of the Roman Empire at Carron.

Coria Damni-torum.

*Roma securigenis præstendit mania Scotis,
Hic spe progressu posita, Carronis ad undam Terminus Ausonis signat divertia regni.*

Gainst warlike Scots with axes arm'd, a mightie frontier wall
The Romans rais'd: and limit there, which TERMINUS they call,
Neere Carron streame, now past all hope more British ground to gaine, Markes out the Roman Empires end, whence they to turne were faine.

C In this territorie of Sterling on the East side, there sheweth it selfe Castle Callendar, belonging to the Barons of Levingston; and the family of the Barons Fleming dwelleth hard by at Cumbernald, which they received at the hands of King Robert Brus, for their service valiantly & faithfully performed in defence of their country: where-by also they attained unto the hereditarie honour to be Chamberlaines of Scotland. And even very lately the favour of King James the Sixth hath honoured this house with the title of Earle, what time as he created I. Baron Fleming Earle of Wigton. In a place neere adjoining standeth Elpheringston, which likewise hath his Barons, advanced to that dignitie by King James the fourth: And where Forth full of his windings and crooked cranks runneth downe with a rolling pace, and hath a bridge over him, standeth Sterlin, commonly called Strivelin, and Sterlin Burrough; where on the very brow of a steepe rocke there is mounted on high a passing strong Castle of the Kings, which King James the sixth hath beautified with new buildings, and where of this long time the Lords of Ereskin have been Captaines, unto whom the charge and tuition of the Princes of Scotland during their minoritie hath been otherwhiles committed. Whereas some there be, that would have the good and lawfull money of England, which is called Sterling money, to take the name from hence, they are much deceived: for that denomination came from the Germans, of their Easterly dwelling termed by Englishmen Esterlings; whom King John of England first sent for to reduce the silver to the due fineness and puritie: and such monies in ancient writing are evermore found by the name of Esterling. But concerning Sterlin towne the verses that I. Jonston hath made shall supply all the rest.

Callendar.
Barons Le-vingston.

Fleming Earle of Wigton.

Sterling mony.

*Regia sublimis celsa despectat ab arce
Pendula sub bisferis mania strutta jugis.
Regum augusta parens, Regum nutricula natis,
Hinc sibi Regifico nomine tota placet.
Hospita sed curvis quovis sub nomine, amicus
Sive es, seu non es, hospes an hostis item.
Pro lucro cedis damnum. Discordia tristis Hæc quoties procerum sanguine tinxit humum?
Hoc uno infelix, at felix cætera, nusquam
Latior aut calis frons, genisque soli.*

A regall palace stately set, beholds from mount aloft,
Towne wall, built hanging on the side of hill with double cost.
Cccc 2

The

The sacred mother unto Kings, of Kings babes eke the nourse, Hence is it that she prides her selfe in Kings names and no worfe.
But entertaineth every one, by name it skills not what,
A friend or foe, friend guest or no, she reckneth nought of that.
In steed of gaine this turnes to losse. Besides, how oft alas,
Hath discord foule with Nobles blood stain'd hence both ground and grasse:
In this alone unhappie she, else not; nor shall ye finde,
Else where the aire more mild and cleere, or soile of better kinde.

Banochbourn.

About two miles hence the Banochbourn runneth between exceeding high banks on both sides, and with a verie swift streame in winter, toward the Forth: a bourn most famous for as glorious a victorie as ever the Scots had, what time as Edward the second King of England was put to flight, who was faine to make hard shift, and in great hast and feare to take a boat and save his life: yea and the most puissant armie which England had before sent out, was discomfited through the valiant prowesse of King Robert Bruce; inso much as for two yeeres after the English came not into the field against the Scots. About Sterlin Ptolomee seemeth to place ALAUNA, which is either neere the little river Alon, that here entrencheth into the Forth; or else by Alway, an house of the Ereskins, who by inheritance are the Sherifes of all this territorie without the Burgh. But I have not yet read of any one dignified by the title of Earle of Sterlin.

Alauna.

CALEDONIA.

Whatsoever part of Britain lieth Northward beyond Grahames Dyke, or the wall of Anoninus Pius before named, and beareth out on both seas, is called by Tacitus CALEDONIA, like as the people thereof, Brians inhabiting CALEDONIA. Ptolomee divideth them into many nations, as CALEDONII, EPIDII, VACOMAGI, &c. who were all of them afterward, for continuing their ancient manner and custome of painting their bodies, named by the Romans and the Provinciaall people, PICTS: divided by Ammianus Marcellinus into two nations, the DICALDONES and VECTURIONES, touching whom I have spoken already before. Howbeit in the approved and best writers they goe all under the name of Caledonians: whom I would think to have beene so called of Kaled, a British word that signifieth Hard, and in the plurall number maketh Kaledion: whence the word Caledonis may be derived, that is to say, hard, rough, uncivill, and a wilder kind of people, such as the Northren nations for the most part are: who by reason of the rigor of cold of the aire, are more rough and fierce, and for their abundance of blood more bold and adventurous. Moreover, beside the position of the climate, this is furthered by the nature and condition of the soile, which riseth up all throughout with rough and rugged mountaines: and mountaineers verily all men know and confesse to be hardie, stout, and strong. But whereas Varro alledgeth out of Pacuvius, that Caledonia breedeth and nourisheth men of exceeding bigge bodies, I would understand the place rather of Caledonia the region of Epirus, than this of ours; although ours also may justly challenge unto it selfe this commendation. Among this was the wood CALEDONIA, tearmed by Lucius Florus, Salmus Caledonius, that is, the Forrest of Caledonia, spreading out a mightie way, and impassable by reason of tall trees standing so thicke, divided also by Grampe hill, now called Granzebaine, that is, the crooked bending mountaine. That Ulysses arrived in Caledonia (saith F. Solinus) appeareth plainly by a votive altar with an inscription in Greek letters; but I would judge it to have been rather erected to the honour of Ulysses, than reared by Ulysses himselfe. Martiall the Poet likewise in this verse maketh mention of Caledonian beares.

Caledon Forrest.

Ulysses his Altar.

Caledonian Beares.

Nuda Caledonio sic peiora praebeis urso.

Thus

Thus yeelded he his naked brest
To beare of Caledon Forrest.

Plutarch also hath written, that Beares were brought out of Britaine to Rome, and had there in great admiration; whereas notwithstanding Britaine for these many ages past hath bred none. What Caledonian monster that should bee, whereof Claudian wrote thus,

Caledonio velata Britannia monstro,

With monster Caledonian Britaine all attired, to tell you truth, I know not. Certes, it nourished in times past a number of white wilde buls, with thicke manes in manner of Lions (but in these dayes few) and those verie cruell, fierce, and so hatefull of mankinde, that for a certaine time they abhorre whatsoever they had either handled or breathed upon: yea, they utterly scorned the forcible strength of dogges; albeit Rome in times past wondered so much at the fiercenesse of Scottish dogges, that it was thought there, they were brought thither within yron grates and cages. Well, this tearme and name CALEDONII grew so ripe with Roman writers, that they used it for all Britaine, and for all woods of Britaine whatsoever. Hereupon L. Florus writeth, that Caesar followed the Britans unto the Caledonian woods, and yet he never saw them in his life: Hence also Valerius Flaccus writeth thus to Vespasian the Emperour, Caledonian buls.

— Caledonius postquam tua carbasa vexis Oceanus: that is, the British Ocean.

Hence likewise it is that Statius verified thus unto Crispinus, sonne of Vitellius Propretour of Britaine about the time of Vitellius.

*Quanta Caledonios attollet gloria campos,
Cum tibi longaevis referet truncus incola terrae?
Hic suum dare jura parens, hoc cespitem turmas
Affari, ille dedit, cinxitque haec moenia fossa:
Belligeris haec dona deis, haec vela dicitur,
Cernis adhuc titulos: hunc ipse vacantibus armis
Induit, hunc regi rapuit thoraca Britanno.*

How much renowned shall the fields of Caledonia bee,
When as some old inhabitant of that fierce land to thee
Shall in these tearmes report and say: Behold, thy father oft
Was wont in judgement here to sit: upon this banke aloft
To th'armed troupes to speak; also 'twas he that wall'd this fort.
That built thus strong, and it with ditch entrenched in this sort.
By him to gods of warre these gifts and armes were consecrate,
The titles (lo) are extant yet; himselfe this brave brest-plate
In time of battaile did put on, this cuirace, finally,
In fight he pluckt by force of armes from King of Britannie.

But in these, as in other things, I may say,

Crescit in immensum facunda licentia vatum.
Poeticall licence is boundlesse.

For neither Caesar, nor Volanus so much as ever knew the Caledonians. In Plinius time, as himselfe witnesseth, thirtie yeeres almost after Claudian, the Romanes with all their warlike expeditions, had discovered no farther in Britaine than to the vicinitie of the Caledonian wood. For Julius Agricola under Domitian, was the first that entred Caledonia: whereof at that present Galgac was Prince (who is named Galgacus in the book of  Triplicites*, among the three worthies of Britaine) a man

Galgacus the Britan.

* Triadant

Cccc 3

of a mightie spirit and stout stomach : who having put to flight the ninth Legion, in exceeding heat of courage joyned battaile with the Romans, and most manfully defended his country so long, untill fortune rather than his owne valour failed him. For then, as he saith, These Northern Britans, beyond whom there was no land, and beside whom none were free, were the utmost nation verily of this Island, like as Catullus called the Britans the utmost of all the world, in that verse unto Furius.

Cæsaris visens monumenta magni, Gallicum Rhenum, horribiles & alti-mosque Britannos.

Great Cæsars monuments to see in his memoriall,
The Rhene in Gaul, and Britans grim, the farthest men of all:

Argesecoxus.

In the daies of Severus, as we read in Xiphilinus, Argesecox a pettie Princetigned over this tract; whose wife being rated and reviled as an adulteresse by Julia the Emperresse, frankly and boldly made this answer: We Britaine Dames have to doe with the bravest and best men, and you Roman Ladies with everie leud base companion secretly.

FIFE.

In this large countrey of the Caledonians, beyond the Territorie of Sterlin, whereof I wrote last, and two countries or Sheriffdomes of lesse note, Clackmans, over which a Knight named de Casse; and Kinross, over which the Earle of Morton are Sheriffes, FIFE, a most goodly Bland, wedged, as it were, betwene the two Armes of the Sea, Forth and Tau, shooteth out farre into the East. This land yeeldeth plentie of corne and forage, yea and of pit coales: the sea, besides other fishes, affordeth Oysters and

Shell-fish in great abundance: and the coasts are well bespred with prettie townlets, replenished with stout and lustie mariners. In the South side hereof by Forth, first appeareth Westward Cul-ros, which giveth the title of a Baronie to Sir J. Colvill: then standeth Dunfermling, a famous monasterie in old time, both the building and buriall place of King Malcolm the third. But now it giveth both name and honour of an Earle unto Sir Alexander Seton a most prudent Counsellor, whom lately James King of great Britain worthily raised from Baron of Frie to be Earle of Dunfermling, and Lord Chancellour of the realme of Scotland. Then Kinghorne standeth hard upon the Forth, from which place Sir Patrick Lion, Baron Glamys, lately received at the bountifull hand of King James the sixth the title and honour of an Earle. After this, there is upon the shore Disert, situate on the rising of an hill, from whence there lieth an open Heath of the same name, where there is a good large place which they call the Cole-plor, that hath great plentie of an earthie Bitumen, and partly burneth, to some damage of the inhabitants. Unto it adjoineth Ravins-Heuch, as one would say, The sheepe hill of Ravens, the habitation of the Barons Seincler. Above it the river Levin hideth himselfe in the Forth: which river running out of the Lake Levin, wherein standeth a Castle of the Douglasses now Earles of Morton, hath at the verie mouth of it Wemmis Castle, the seat of a noble family, bearing the same surname: which King James the sixth hath of late honoured with the dignity of a Baron. From hence the shore draweth backe with a crooked and winding tract unto Fife-ness, that is, The Promontorie or Nose of Fife. Above it Saint Andrews an Archiepiscopall Citie hath a faire prospect into the open maine sea. The more ancient name of the place, as old memorials witness, was Regimund, that is, Saint Regulus mount: in which we read thus, Oeng or Ung King of the Picts, granted unto God and Clarkmans.

Dunfermling.

Earle of Dunfermling.
Earle of Kinghorn.

Disert.

River Levin.

Wemmis.

Saint Andrews.
Saint Regulus.

A Saint Andrew, that it should be the chiefe and mother of all Churches in the Picts Kingdome. Afterward there was placed here an Episcopall See, the Bishops whereof, like as all the rest within the Kingdome of Scotland, were consecrated by the Archbishop of Yorke, untill at the intercession of King James the third, by reason of so many warres betwene the Scottish and Englishmen, Pope Sixtus the fourth ordained the Bishop of Saint Andrews to be Primate and Metropolitane of all Scotland; and Pope Innocentius the eighth bound him and his successours to the imitation and precedent of the Metropolitane of Canterbury, in these words: That in matters concerning the Archiepiscopall state, they should observe and firmly hold the offices, drouis, and rights of Primacie, and such like Legacie, and the free exercise thereof, the honours, charges, and profits: and that they should endeavour to performe inviolably the laudable customes of the famous Metropolitane Church of Canterbury, the Arch-bishop whereof is Legatus natus of the Kingdome of England, &c. Howbeit before that, Laurence Lundoris and Richard Corvel, Doctors of the Civill law, publicly professed here good literature, laid the foundation of an Universitie: which now, for happie increase of learned men, for three Colledges and the Kings Professours in them, is become highly renowned. In commendation whereof Master Jonston, the Kings Professor there in Divinitie, hath made these verses.

Ex Camera Apostolica lib. 24. fol. 24.

FANUM REGULI, SIVE ANDREAPOLIS.

*Imminet Oceano paribus descripta viarum
Limitibus, pingui quam bene septa solo!
Magnificis opibus, staret dum gloria prisca
Pontificum, hic fulsit Pontificalis apex.
Musarum ostentat surrecta palatia caelo,
Delicias hominum, deliciasque Deum.
Hic nemus umbriferum Phœbi, Nymphæque sorores,
Candida quas inter præsit Uranie.
Quæ me longinquis redeuntem Teutonis oris
Suscipit, excelsa collocat inque gradu.
Urbs nimium felice, Musarum si bona nôset Munera, & ætherei regna beata Dei:
pellem alas pestes urbe, & quæ noxia Musis Alme Deus, coeant Pax pietasque simul.*

SAINT REGULUS, OR S. ANDREWS.

Seated it is hard by the sea, at even and equall bounds
Of streets, how well enclosed besides with far and fertile grounds!
Whilom, when Prelates state was great and glorious withall,
There flourish'd here in sumptuous port a See Pontificall.
Now Schooles it shewes and Colledges, both Gods and mans delight,
To Muses which be dedicate, and built to stately height.
Here Phabus hath his shady grove, here dwell the Sisters nine,
And chiefe of them the Ladie bright, Uranie divine.
Who when I was returned from farre coasts of Germanie,
With welcome kinde here did me place in chaire of high degree.

Most

Most happie towne, wist it what were the gifts of learning true,
The blessed Kingdome, if withall of God in heaven it knew.
All plagues, good God, all nocive things to Muses hence repell,
That in this Citie Godlineffe and Peace may jointly dwell.

Falkland.

Studer.

Cuper.

Hard by there loseth it selfe in the sea Eden or Eshan, a little river, which springing up neere unto Falkland (belonging in times past to the Earles of Fife, but now a reryring place of the Kings, verie well seared for hunting pleasures and disports) runneth under a continued ridge of hills, which divide this countrey in the midst, by Struthers (a place so called of a Reedplot) a Castle of the Barons Lindsey; and by B Cupre, a notable Burrough, where the Sheriffe sitteth to minister justice. Concerning which the same I. Jonson hath thus verified.

CUPRUM FIFÆ.

*Arva inter nemorisque umbras & pascua lata,
Lenè fluens vitreus labitur Eden aquis.
Huc veniat si quis Gallorum à sinibus hospes,
Gallica se hic iterum foris videre putet.
Anne etiam ingenium hinc & servida pectora laxis?
An potius patrius hauserit illa focus?*

By rich corne fields, by shadie woods and pastures fresh among,
The river Eden glideth soft with chrystall streame along.
Hither to come from coasts of France if any stranger chance,
Here haply may he thinke he hath a fight againe of France.
What? drew this place from thence their wit and spirit hot trow yee?
Or rather had the same at first by native propertie?

Now where the shore turneth inward a front Northward, hard by the salt water of Tau, there flourished in old time two goodly Abbeyes, Balmerinoch, built by Queene Ermengard, wife to King William, daughter of Vicount Beaumont in France. But lately King James of great Britaine advanced Sir James Elphinston to the honour of Baron Balmerinoch; and Lundoris, founded among the woods by David Earle of Huntington, and at this day the Baronie of Sir Patrick Lesley: betweene which standeth Banbrich, the habitation of the Earle of Rothies, strongly built castle wise. But as touching the townes of Fife planted along the sea side, have here now, if it please you, these verses of Master Jonson.

Balmerinoch.
Lundoris.

*Oppida sic toto sunt sparsa in litore ut unum
Dixeris, inque uno plurima juncta eadem:
Litore quot curvo Forthæ volvuntur arena,
Quoque undis refluxo runditur ora salo.
Penè tot hic cernas instratum puppibus aquor,
Urbiùm & crebris penè tot ora hominum.
Cuncta operis intentis domus, fæda ora nescit,
Sedula cura domi, sedula cura foris.
Que maria, & quas non terras animosa juvenus
Ah! fragili fidens audet adire trabes?
Auxit opes virtus, virtuti dura pericla
Juncta etiam lucro damna fuere suo.
Que fecere viris animos, cultumque dedere,
Magnanimis profunt damna, pericla, labor.*

Who sees how thicke townes stand upon this coast, will say anon,
They are but one, and yet the same all joyned in that one.
How many sands on crooked shore of Forth are cast by tides,

Or billowes at the seas returne beat hard upon bankes sides.
So many ships well neere you may here see to saile or ride;
And in those townes so thicke, almost as many folke abide.
Ineverie house they ply their worke, no idle drones they are:
Busie at home with diligence, busie abroad with care.
What seas or lands are there to which a voiage for to make,
In brittle barks will not their youth courageous undertake.
By valour be they growne to wealth, yet valour meet with paines;
And perils too; some losses too have they had with their gaines.
These things have made them valiant, civill withall and courteous:
Losses, perill, painfull toile availe all such as be magnanimous.

The Governour of this province, like as of all the rest in this Kingdome, was in times past a Thane, that is, in the old English tongue, The Kings Minister: as it is also at this day in the Danish language: but Malcolm Canmore made Macduffe, who before was Thane of Fife, the first hereditarie Earle of Fife; and in consideration of his good desert and singular service done unto him, granted that his posteritie should have the honour to place the King, when hee is to be crowned, in his chaire; to lead the Vant-guard in the Kings armie; and if any of them should happen by casualty to kill either Gentleman or Commoner, to buy it out with a peece of money. And not farre from Lundoris there is to be seene a Crosse of stone, which standing for a limitt betweene Fife and Strathern, had an inscription of barbarous verses, and a certain privilege of Sanctuarie, that any Man-slaier allied to Macduffe Earle of Fife within the ninth degree, if he came unto this Crosse, and gave nine kine with an * heifer, should be quit of manslaughter. When his posteritie lost this title I could never yet find: but it appeareth out of the Records of the kingdome, that K. David the second gave unto William Ramsay this Earldome, with all and everie the immunities and law which is called Clan-Mac-Duffe: and received it is for certaine, that the linage of the Wemessies and Donglasse, yea and that great kined Clan-Hatan, the chiefe whereof is Mac-Intoskech, descended from them. And the most learned I. Skerne Clerke of the Kings Register of Scotland, hath taught mee in his significations of words, that Isabel daughter and heire to Duncane Earle of Fife, granted upon certain conditions unto Robert the third King of the Scots, for the use and behoofe of Robert Stewart Earle of Menteith, the Earldome of Fife: who being afterwards Duke of Albanie, and affecting the Kingdome, with cruell ambition caused David the Kings eldest son to be most pitifully famished to death, which is highest extremitie of all miserie. But his son Murdac suffered due punishment for the wickednesse both of his father, and his owne sonnes, being put to death by King James the first for their violent oppressions, and a decree passed, that the Earldome of Fife should be united unto the Crown for ever. But the authoritie of the Sheriffe of Fife belongeth in right of inheritance to the Earle of Rothies.

Earles of Fife.

* Coplandath.

1424.

Earles of Rothies.

STRATHERN.

As farre as to the river Tau, which boundeth Fife on the North-side, Julius Agricola, the best Propretour of Britaine under Domitian the worst Emperour, marched with victorious armes in the third yeere of his warlike expeditions, having wasted and spoiled the nations hitherto. Neere the out-let of Tau, the notable river Ern interminglith his waters with Tau: which river beginning out of a Lake or Loch of the same name, bestoweth his owne name upon the countrey through which he runneth: For it is called Straith Ern, which in the ancient tongue of the Britans, signifieth the Vale along Ern. The banke

The river Ern.

Barons of Dromund.Earles of Tul-bardin.Duplin.
Baron Oliphant.

banke of this Ern is beautified with Drumein Castle, belonging to the family of the Barons of Dromund, advanced to highest honours ever since that King Robert Stewart the third took to him a wife out of that linage. For the women of this race have for their singular beautie and well favoured sweet countenance won the prize from all others, inso much as they have beene the Kings most amiable paramours. Upon the same banke Tulibardin Castle sheweth it selfe aloft, but with greater jollitie, since that by the propitious favour of King James the sixth, Sir John Murray Baron of Tulibardin, was raised to the honour and estate of Earle of Tulibardin. Upon the other bank, more beneath, Duplin Castle, the habitation of the Barons Oliphant, reported yet what an overthrow (the like to which was never before) the Englishmen that came to aide King Edward Bathol, gave there unto the Scots; inso much as the English writers in that time doe write, that they won this victorie not by mans hand, but by the power of God: and the Scottish writers relate, how that out of the family of the Lindseies there were slaine in the field fourescore persons, and that the name of the Haies had bin quite extinguished, but that the chiefe of that house left his wife behind him great with child. Not farre from it standeth Invermeth, well knowne by reason of the Lords thereof, the Stewarts out of the family of Lorn. Insh-Chafra, that is in the old Scottish tongue, the Ile of Masses, hereby may bee remembered when as it was a most famous Abbey of the order of Saint Augustin, founded by the Earle of Strathern about the yeere 1200.

When Ern hath joined his water with Tau in one streame, so that Tau is now become more spacious, hee looketh up to Aberneith seated upon his banke, the royall seat in old time of the Picts, and a well peopled Citie: which, as we read in an ancient fragment, Ne Eane King of the Picts gave unto God and S. Brigide until the day of Doom, together with the bounds thereof, which lye from a stone in Aberneith, unto a knigh to Carfull, that is, Loughfoll, and from thence as farre as to Eihan. But long after it became the possession of the Douglasses Earles of Angus, who are called Lords of Aberneith; and there some of them lye entred.

Earles of Stra-thern.
Finis 35 H. 3.
n. 1.

The first Earle of Strathern, that I read of, was Malisse, who in the time of King Henrie the third of England married one of the heires of Robert Muschamp, a potent Baron of England. Long afterward Robert Stewart, in the yeere 1380. Then, David a younger sonne of King Robert the second, whose onely daughter given in marriage to Patrick Graham begat Malisse or Melisse Graham, from whom King James the first tooke away the Earledome as escheated, after that he understood out of the Records of the Kingdome, that it was given unto his mothers grandfather, and the heires males of his bodie. This territorie, as also that of Menteith adjoining, the Barons Dromund governe hereditarily by Seneschals authority, as their Stewarts.

Menteith Stewartie.
Dunblan.

Menteith hath the name of Teith, a river which also they call Taich, and thereof this little province they tearme in Latin Taichia; upon the banke of which lieth the Bishopricke of Dunblan, which King David the first of that name erected. At Kirk-Ebird, that is, Saint Brigids Church, the Earles of Menteith have their principall house, or Honour: as also the Earles of Montrose coming from the same stocke, at Kinkardin not farre off. This Menteith reacheth, as I have heard, unto the mountaines that enclose the East side of the Lough or Lake Lomund. The ancient Earles of Menteith were of the family of Cumen, which in times past being the most spread & mightiest house of all Scotland, was ruined with the over-weight and sway thereof: but the latter Earles were of the Grahams line, ever since that Sir Malisse Graham attained to the honour of an Earle.

Earles of Men-
teith.

ARGA-

ARGATHELIA, OR ARGILE.

Beyond the Lake Lomund and the West part of Lennox, there spreadeth it selfe neere unto Dunbrion Forth the large countrey called Argathelia, & Argadia in Latin, but commonly Argile, more truly Argathel, and Ar-Gwihil, that is, Neere unto the Irish; or, as old writings have it, The edge or border of Ireland: For it lyeth toward Ireland, the inhabitants whereof, the Britans tearme Gwihil and Gaoshel. The countrey runneth out in length and breadth, all mangled with fishfull pooles, and in some places with rising mountaines, very commodious for feeding of cattell; in which also there range up and downe wilde kine and red Deere: but along the shore it is more unpleasant in sight, what with rockes, and what with blackish barraine mountaines. In this part, as Bede writeth, *Britain received after the Britans and Picts, a third nation of Scots, in that countrey where the Picts inhabited: who coming out of Ireland under the leading of Reuda, either through friendship, or by dint of sword, planted here their seat amongst them, which they still hold. Of which their leader they are to this very day called Dalreudini: for in their language Dal signifieth (a part). And a little after, Ireland (saith hee) is the proper Countrey of the Scots, for, being departed out of it, they added unto the Britans and Picts a third nation in Britaine. And there is a very great Bay or arme of the sea, that in old time severed the nation of the Britans from the Picts, which from the West breaketh a great way into the land, where standeth the strongest Citie of all the Britans even to this day, called Alchiuh. In the North part of which Bay, the Scots afore said when they came, got themselves a place to inhabit. Of that name Dalreudini, no remains at all, to my knowledge, are now extant; neither finde wee any thing thereof in Writers, unlesse it bee the same that Dalrieta. For, in an old Pamphlet, touching the division of Albanie, wee read of one Kinnadie (who for certaine was a King of Scots, and subdued the Picts) these very words; Kinnadie two yeeres before hee came into Pictavia (for so it calleth the countrey of the Picts) entred upon the Kingdome of Dalrieta. Also in an historie of later time, there is mention made of Dalreia in some place of this tract, where King Robert Brus fought a field unfortunately.*

Dalreudini
Dal.Dalrieta
Dalreia

That Justice should be ministred unto this Province by Justices Itinerant at Perth, whensoever it pleased the King, King James the fourth by authoritie of the States of the Kingdome enacted a law. But the Earles themselves have in some cases their royalties, as being men of very great command and authoritie, followed with a mightie traine of retainers and dependants: who derive their race from the ancient Princes and Potentates of Argile, by an infinite descent of Ancestours, and from their castle Cambell tooke their surname: but the honour and title of Earle was given unto them by King James the second, who, as it is recorded, invested Colin Lord Cambell, Earle of Argile, in regard of his owne vertue, and the worth of his family. Whose heires and successours standing in the gracious favour of the Kings, have bin Lords of Lorn; and a good while Generall Justices of the Kingdome of Scotland, or, as they use to speake, Justices ordained in General, and Great Masters of the Kings royall house- hold.

Earles of Argile.

CANE

CANTIRE.

Logh Fin.

Epidium.

Plinius.

*L*ogh Fin, a lake breeding such store of herrings at a certaine due season, as it is wonderfull, fevereth Argile from a Promontorie, which for thirtie miles together growing still toward a sharpe point, thrusteth it selfe forth with so great a desire toward Ireland (betwixt which and it there is a narrow sea, scarce thirtene miles over) as if it would conjoine it selfe. Ptolomee B termeth this, the Promontorie EPIDIORUM, betweene which name, and the Islands EBUDÆ lying over against it, there is, in my conceit, some affinitie. At this day it is called in the Irish tongue (which they speake in all this tract) CANTYRE, that is, The lands Head; inhabited by the Mac-Conells, a family that here swayeth much, howbeit at the pleasure and dispose of the Earle of Argile: yea and otherwhiles they make out their light pinnaces and gallies for Ireland, to raise booties and pillage, who also hold in possession those little provinces of Ireland, which they call Glines and Rowts. This Promontorie lyeth annexed to Knapdale by so thin a necke (as being scarce a mile broad, and the same all sandie) that the mariners finde it the neerer way to convey their small vessels over it C by land. Which I hope a man may sooner beleve, than that the Argonaus laid their great ship Argos upon their shoulders, and so carried it along with them five hundred miles, from Æmonia unto the shores of Theffalia.

LORN.

Beregomum.

Logh-Aber.

Omwat higher toward the North lyeth LORN, bearing the best kinde of barley in great plentie, and divided with Leane a vast and huge lake: by which standeth Beregomum a castle, in which sometime was kept the Court of Justice, or Sesson: and not farre from it Dunstaffag, that is, Stephens Mount, the Kings house in times past: above which Logh Aber, a Lake insinuating it selfe from out of the Westerne sea, winderh it selfe so farre within land, that it had conflowed together with Nesse, another Lake running into the East sea, but that certaine mountaines betweene kept them with a verie little partition asunder. The chiefeft place of name in this tract is Tarbar in Logh Kinkoran, where King James the fourth ordained a Justice and Sheriffe, to administer justice unto the Inhabitants of the out Islands. These countries and those beyond them, in the yeere of our Lords Incarnation 655. the Pi&ts held: whom Bede calleth the Northern Pi&ts, where hee reporteth, that in the said yeere Columbane a E Priest and Abbat, famous for his Monkish profession and life, came out of Ireland into Brutaine, to instruct these in Christian religion, that by meanes of the high rough ridges of the mountaines were sequestred from the Southerne countries of the Pi&ts: and that they, in lieu of a reward, allowed unto him the Iland Hii, over against them, now called I-Comb-Kill, of which more in place convenient. The Lords of Lorna in the age aforegoing were the Stewarts: but now, by reason of a female their heire, the Earles of Argile; who use this title in their honourable stile.

1503.
Lib. 3. cap. 4.

BRAID F

BRAID ALBIN, or ALBAN Y.

*M*ore inwardly, where the uninhabitable, loftie, and rugged ridges of the Mountaine Grampius begin a little to slope and settle downward, is seated BRAID-ALBIN, that is, The highest part of Albanie. Scotland: for they that are the true and right Scots indeed, call Scotland in their mother tongue Albin; like as that part where it mounteth up highest, Drum Albin, that is, the Ridge of Scotland. But in an old booke it is read Brun Albin, where wee finde this written: Fergus filius Eric, &c. that is, Fergus the sonne of Eric was the first of the seed or line of Chonare, that entred upon the Kingdome of Albanie, from Brun-Albain unto the Irish sea and Inch-Gall. And after him the Kings descended from the seed or race of Fergus reigned in Brun-Albain or Brunhere unto Alpin the sonne of Eochall.

But this Albanie is better knowne for the Dukes thereof, than for any good gifts that the soile yeeldeth. The first Duke of Albanie that I read of, was Robert Earle of Fife, whom his brother King Robert the third of that name advanced to that honour: yet he (ungratefull person that he was) pricked on with the spirit of ambition, famished to death his sonne David, that was heire to the crown. But the punishment due for this wicked fact, which him selfe by the long-sufferance of God felt not, his son Mordac, the second Duke of Albanie, suffered most grievously, being condemned for treason and beheaded, when hee had seene his two sonnes the day before executed in the same manner. The third Duke of Albanie was Alexander, second sonne to King James the second, who being Regent of the Kingdome, Earle of March, Marr, and Garioch, Lord of Annandale and of Man, was by his own brother, King James the third outlawed, and after hee had bene turmoiled with many troubles, in the end, as hee stood by to behold a Justs and Tourneament in Paris, chanced to bee wounded with a peece of a shattered lance, and so died. His sonne John, the fourth Duke of Albanie, Regent likewise and made Tutour to King James the fifth, taking contentment in the pleasant delights of the French Court, after hee had wedded there the daughter, and one of the heires of John Earle of Auverne and Lauragvaze, died there without issue: Whom in a respective reverence to the bloud royall of the Scots, Francis the first King of France gavethus much honour unto, as that hee allowed him place betweene the Archbishop of Langres, and the Duke of Alençon, Peeres of France. After his death there was no Duke of Albanie untill that Queene Marie in our memorie conferred this title upon Henrie Lord Darby, whom within some few daies after shee made her husband, like as King James the sixth granted E the same unto his owne second sonne Charles being an Infant, who is now Duke of Yorke.

There inhabit these regions a kinde of people, rude, warlike, readie to fight, quarrelous, and mischievous: they bee commonly tearmed High-landmen, who being in deed the right progenie of the ancient Scots, speak Irish, & call themselves Albinich; their bodies be firmly made and well compact, able withall and strong, nimble of foot, high minded, inbred and nuzzled in warlike exercises, or robberies rather, and upon a deadly feud and hatred most forward and desperate to take revenge. They goe attired Irish-like, in stript or streaked mantles of divers colours, wearing thicke and long glibbes of haire, living by hunting, fishing, fowling, and stealing. In the warre their armour is an head-peece or Morion of iron, and an habergeon or coat of maille: their weapons bee bowes, barbed or hooked arrowes, and broad backe-swords: and being divided by certaine families or kinreds, which they terme Clannes, they commit such cruell outrages, what with robbing, spoiling, and killing, that their savage crueltie hath forced a law to bee enacted, whereby it is lawfull, That if any person out of any one Clanne or kinred of theirs hath trespassed

D d d d

passed

Parliament.
1581.

passed ought and done harme, whosoever of that Clanne or linage chance to bee taken, he shall either make amends for the harmes, or else suffer death for it; when as the whole Clan commonly beareth feud for any hurt received by any one member thereof, by execution of lawes, order of justice, or otherwise.

PERTHIA, OR PERTH Sherifsdome.

The river Tau.

Ut of the very bosome of Mountaines of Albany, Tau the greatest river of all Scotland issueth: and first runneth amaine through the fields, untill that spreading broad into a lake full of Islands, hee restraineth and keepeth in his course. Then gathering him selfe narrow within his bankes into a channell, and watering Perib, a large, plentifull and rich countrey, he taketh in unto him Amund, a small river coming out of Athol.

Athol.

Caledon
wood.

This Athol, that I may digresse a little out of my way, is infamous for witches and wicked women: the countrey, otherwise fertile enough, hath vallies bespread with Forrests: namely, where that WOOD CALEDONIA, dreadfull to see to for the sundrie turnings and windings in and out therein, for the hideous horrour of dark shades, for the burrowes and dennes of wild bulls with thicke manes (whereof I made mention heretofore) extended it selfe in old time farre and wide everie way in these parts. As for the places herein, they are of no great account, but the Earles thereof are verie memorable.

Earles of Athol.Chroniron Vailroile.

Thomas, a younger sonne of Rolland of Galloway, was in his wives right Earle of Athol, whose sonne Patrick was by the Bissops his concurrents murdered in Hadington in his bed-chamber, and forthwith the whole house wherein hee lodged burnt, that it might be supposed he perished by casualltie of fire.

In the Earldome there succeeded David Hastings, who had married the aunt by the mothers side of Patrick; whose sonne that David surnamed of Straibhogie may seeme to be, who a little after, in the reigne of Henrie the third King of England, being Earle of Athol, married one of the daughters and heires of Richard, base sonne to John King of England, and had with her a verie goodly inheritance in England. She bare unto him two sonnes, John Earle of Athol, who being of a variable disposition and untrusting, was hanged up aloft on a gallows fiftie foot high; and David Earle of Athol, unto whom by marriage with one of the daughters and heires of John Comin of Badenoch, by one of the heires of Aumar de Valence Earle of Penbroch, there fell great lands and possessions. His sonne David, who under King Edward the second was otherwhiles amongst English Earles summoned to the Parliaments in England, and under King Edward Balliol made Lord Lievtenant Generall of Scotland, was vanquished by the valerous prowesse of Andrew de Murray, and slaine in battaile within the Forrest of Kelblen in the yeere of our Lord 1335. And his sonne David left two young daughters only, Elizabeth wedded unto Sir Thomas Percie, from whom the Barons of Burrough are descended: and Philip, married to Sir Thomas Halsham an English Knight. Then fell the title of Athol unto that Walter Stewart, sonne to King Robert the second, who cruelly murdered James the first, King of Scotland, and for this execrable crueltie suffered most condigne punishment accordingly: in so much as Aeneas Sylvius, Embassadour at that time in Scotland from Pope Eugenius the fourth, gave out this speech: That hee could not tell whether hee should give them greater commendations that revenged the Kings death, or brand them with sharper censure of condemnation, that distained themselves with so heinous a parricide.

After some few yeeres passed betweene, this honour was granted unto John Stewart

B

D

E

F

A warre of the family of Lorne, the sonne of James, surnamed The Black Knight, by Joan the widow of King James the first, daughter to John Earle of Somerset, and Niece to John of Gaunt Duke of Lancaster, whose posteritie at this day enjoy the same.

Tau bearing now a bigger streame, by receiving Almund unto him, holdeth on his course to Dunkelden, adorned by King David with an Episcopall See. Most writers grounding upon the signification of that word, suppose it to be a towne of the Caledonians, and interpret it, The Mount or hill of Hazeles, as who would have that name given unto it of the Hazel trees in the wood Caledonia. From hence the Tau goeth forward by the carkasse of Berib, a little desolate Citie, remembering well enough what a great losse and calamitie hee brought upon it in times past, when with an extraordinarie swelling flood, hee surrounded all the fields, layed the goodly standing corne along on the ground, and carried headlong away with him this poore Citie, with the Kings childe and infant in his cradle, and the inhabitants therein. In steed whereof in a more commodious place, King William builded Perib, which straightwaies became so wealthy, that Necham, who lived in that age, verifified of it in this manner:

Dunkelden.

Berth.

Perth.

Transis ample Tai per rura, per oppida, per Perth,
Regnum sustentant istius urbis opes.

C By villages, by townes, by Perth, thou runn'st great Tay amaine,
The riches of this Citie Perib doth all the realme sustaine.

But the posteritie ensuing called it of a Church founded in honour of Saint John, Saint Johns towne: and the English, whiles the warres were hot betweene the Brasses and the Balliols, fortified it with great bulwarks, which the Scots afterwards, for the most part overthrew, and dismantled it themselves. Howbeit it is a proper pretie Citie, pleasantly seated betweene two Greeces: and for all that some of the Churches be destroyed, yet a goodly shew it maketh; ranged and set out in such an uniforme maner, that in everie severall street almost there dwell severall artificers by themselves, and the river Tau bringeth up with the tide sea commodities by lighters: whereupon J. Jonston, so often now by me cited, writeth thus.

Saint John
Towne.

PERTHUM.

Propter aquas Tai liquidas, & amana vineta,
Obtinet in medio regna superba solo.
Nobilium quondam regum clarissima sedes,
Pulchra situ, & pinguis germine dives agri.
Finitimis dat jura locis, moremque modumque,
Huic dare, laus illi hæc meruisse dari.
Sola inter patrias incincta est mœnibus urbes,
Hofibus assiduis ne vaga præda foret.
Quanta virum virtus, dextra quæ præmia, nōrunt Cimber, Saxo ferox, & genus Hebrorum.
Felix laude novâ, felix quoque laude vetustâ,
Perge recens præscum perpetuare decus.

PERTH.

F Neere to the waters cleere of Tay, and pleasant plaines all greene,
In middle ground betweene them stands Perib proudly like a Queene.
Of noble Kings the stately seat and palace once it was,
Faile for the site, and rich with all for spring of corne and grasse.
To neighbour places all it doth lawes, customes, fashions give,
Her praise to give; theirs to deserve the fame for to receive.

Dddd a

of

Of all the Cities in these parts walled alone is she,
Left she to foes continuall a scrambling prey might be.
What Knights she bred, and what rewards they won to knighthood due,
Danes, Saxons fierce, bold Britans eke the Trojans off-spring knew.
Happie for praises old, happie for praises new of late,
New as thou art, thine honour old strive to perpetuate.

Earle of Perth. And now of late King James the sixth hath erected it to the title of an Earldome, having created James Baron Dromund Earle of Perth.

Baron Methuen.

Unto Perth these places are neere neighbours, Methuen, which Margaret an English Ladie, widow unto King James the fourth, purchased with readie money for her third husband Henrie Steward descended of the royall blood, and for his heires; and withall obtained of her sonne King James the fifth for him the dignitie of a Baron. More beneath is Rethuen, a castle of the Rethuens, whose name is of damned memorie, considering that the three states of the kingdome hath ordained, that whosoever were of that name, should forgoe the fame, and take unto them a new; after that the Rethuens, brethren in a most cursed and horrible conspiracie, had complotted to murder their soveraigne King James the sixth, who had created William their father Earle of Gourie, and afterward beheaded him being lawfully convicted, when he would insolently prescribe lawes to his soveraigne. But of men condemned to perpetuall oblivion I may seeme to have said overmuch, although it concerneth posteritie also for a Caveat, that wicked generations be notified, as well as noisome weeds and venomous plants.

Gourie.

As for the countrey Gourie aforesaid, famous for the corn-fields, and singular fertilitye of the soile, it lyeth more plaine and flat along the other banke of Tay. In this tract over against Perth, on the farther side of Tay, standeth Scone, a renowned monastrie in old time, and of reverend respect for the coronation thereof of the Kings of Scotland: since that time K. Kenneth having hard by put the Picts for the most part to the sword, placed a stone here enclosed within a chaire of wood for inauguration of the Kings of Scotland, that had bene transported out of Ireland into Argyle: which stone Edward the first King of England, caused to be conveyed unto Westminster. Touching which I have put down this prophesie, so rise in everie mans mouth, since it hath now proved true and taken effect; as verie few of that sort doe.

Scone.

Ni fallit fatum, Scoti quocunque locatum Inveniunt lapidem, regnare tenentur ibidem.

Except old lawes be vaine,
And wits of wifards blind,
The Scots in place must raigne,
Where they this stone shall finde.

Baron of Scone.

But now Scone giveth title of Baron of Scone to Sir David Murray, whom K. James E for his good service advanced lately to that honour.

Arrol.
Earls of Arrol.

Where Tay now growne bigger enlargeth himselfe, there appeareth over it Arrol, the habitation of the noble Earles of Arrol, who ever since the Bruses daies have bene by inheritance the Constables of Scotland: and verily they deduce an ancient pedigree from one Hay, a man of exceeding strength and excellent courage; who together with his sonnes, in a dangerous battaile of Scots against the Danes at Longcartie, caught up an Oxe yoke, and so valiantly and fortunately withall, what with fighting, and what with exhorting, re-enforced the Scots at the point to shrink and recule, that they had the day of the Danes, and the King, with the States of the kingdome, ascribed the victorie and their owne safetie unto his valour and prowess. F Whereupon in this place, the most battle & fruitfull grounds were assigned unto him and his heires; who in testimony hereof have set over their coat a yoke for their crest, over their Armes, Three Escutcheons Geules in Argent. Touching Humley castle, that joyneth unto it, I have nothing to write, but that it hath given title to a very potent, great, and honourable family, whereof I am to speake hereafter.

Humley castle.

ANGU:

ANGUSIA, or ANGUS.

BY the out-let or mouth of Tay, and more within, beside the river North-Eske, Angus called by the naturall and true Scots Aeneia, lyeth extended with goodly fields bearing wheat and corne of all kinds plentifully, with large hills also and pooles, forrests, pastures, and meadows, and also garnished with many forts and castles. In the very first entry into it from Goury, standeth Glamis, a castle, and the Baronie of a family surnamed Lions, which arose to honour and reputation, ever since that Sir I. Lion standing in the high favour of King Robert the Second, received this and the dignity of a Baron with the Kings daughter, for her marriage portion, and therewith, as I finde written, the surname of Lion: with a Lion in his Armes, within a Treasfure Flourey, as the Kings themselves doe beare, but in different colours: like as Sir Patrick Lion, Lord Glamis, who now liveth, was advanced very lately by King James the Sixth of that name to the honour of the Earle of Kinghorn.

Barons Glamys.

Not farre hence standeth Forfar, where for the administration of justice, the Barons Greies are hereditary Sheriffs, who being descended from the Greies of Chillingham in the county of Northumberland, came into Scotland with King James the first, at his returne out of England: upon the first of whom named Andrew, the King of his bounteous liberality bestowed the Seigniorie of Foullis, together with Helen Mortimer in marriage for his advancement.

Forfar Sheriff-dome.

Hard by the mouth of Tay is situate Dundee, sometimes called Alectum: others tearme it in Latin Taodunum; a towne verily of great resort and trade, and the Constable whereof by a speciall priviledge is Standard-bearer to the King of Scots. Heitor Boetius, who was here born, expoundeth this name Dundee by way of allusion, to Donum Dei, that is, Gods gift. This Heitor, in the flourishing time of learning, wrote the Scottish historie elegantly, and that out of such hidden and farre fetched monuments of antiquitie, that Paulus Jovius wondered in his writings, there should be records extant for above a thousand yeeres, of these remote parts of the world, Scotland, the Hebrides, and the Orcades: considering that Italy, the nource of fine wits, for so many ages after the Goths were cast out, was defective of writers and records. But of this place Master Jonston, borne not farre from it, writeth thus.

Jo. Skene de Verbor. signif.

Heitor Boetius.

TAODUNUM, OR DEIDONUM.

*Qua Notus argatis adspirat molliter auris, Hac placide coeunt Taus & Oceanus.
Hic facili excipiens venientes litore puppes
Indigenis vasti distrahit orbis opes.
Sape dolis tentata, & belli exercita damnis,
Invictis animis integra praestat adhuc.
Fama vetus crevit cum Religione renata,
Lucis & hinc fulsi pura nitela aliis.
Alectum duxere prius; si maxima spes
Commoda, fors Donum dixeris esse Dei.
Tu decus aeternum gentisque urbisque Boeti, Cetera dic patria dona beata tua.*

Dddd 3

DONDEE

DONDEE, or DUNDEE.

Where South wind with his whistling blasts aloft doth mildly blow,
There Tay with streame, and sea with tide doe friendly meet below.
And here Dundee, ships under saile harbring in gentle road,
The wide worlds wealth to Inlanders both sells and sends abroad.
By wiles betrayed, by force assailed oft times like to have beene,
With heart undaunted to this day it stands found to be seene.
With new spring of religion her old fame more did grow:
Hence shone pure light, hence to the rest cleere beames full bright did show.
At first Alethum clep'd it was: but if you marke withall
Her gifts so great, perhaps you will it * Donum Dei call.

* Gift of God.

Brochty Crag.
1547.

Arbroth.

* Red-head,
a Promontorie.Brechin.
Mont-Rose.

From hence standeth within sight Brochty-cragge, a good fortresse, which the English garrison souldiers manfully defended and made good for many moneths together, what time as in their affectionate love to a perpetuall peace, they desired and wished for a marriage betweene Marie, heire apparent of Scotland, and Edward the sixth King of England; and upon promise thereof, demanded it by force of armes: and in the end, of their owne accord abandoned the said piece. Then there lieth full against the open Ocean Aberbroth, short Arbroth, a place endowed with ample revenues, and by King William dedicated in old time to Religion, in honour of Thomas of Canterburie; beside which the * Red-head shooteth into the deepe sea, and is to bee seene a farre off: Hard by South Eske voideth it selfe into the Ocean; which river flowing amaine out of a lake, passeth by Finnevin Castle, well knowne by reason of the Lindeseies Earles of Crawford keeping residence there; of whom I have already written. Then upon the said river standeth Brechin, which King David the first adorned with a Bishops See; and at the very mouth thereof Mont-rose, as one would say the Mount of Roses; a towne in times past called Celurca, risen by the fall of D another towne bearing the same name, which is seated betweene the two Eskes, and imparteth the title of Earle to the family of the Grahams. Concerning which towne Jonston hath these verses.

CELURCA, five MONS
ROSARUM.

*Aureolis urbs picta rosis, mons molliter urbi
Imminet, hinc urbi nomina facta canunt.
At veteres perhibent quondam dixisse Celurcam,
Nomine sic prisco & nobilitata novo est.
Et prisca atque nova insignis virtute, virumque
Ingeniis, patria qui perperere decum.*

MONT-ROSE.

With Roses gay the towne is deckt, an easie Mount withall Stands neere the same, and hence they say MONT-ROSE folke did it call.
In former times by ancient name Celurca men it knew,
Ennobled thus you see it is by name both old and new:
Both old and new renowne it hath for prowesse and for wit,
Of men that have their countrey grac'd and honour won to it.
Not farre from hence is Boschain, belonging to the Barons of Ogilvy, of very ancient nobilitie, lineally descended from Alexander Sheriffe of Angus, who was slaine in the bloodie bartail at Harley against the Mac Donald of the out Isles.

Boschain.

As

As touching the Earles of Angus; Gilchrist of Angus, renowned for his brave exploits under King Malcolm the fourth, was the first Earle of Angus that I read of. About the yeere 1242. John Comyn was Earle of Angus, who died in France; and his widow (happily inheritor to the Earldome) was married to Sir Gilbert Umfranvill an Englishman. For, both hee and his heires successively after him, were summoned to the Parliaments in England (untill the third yeere of King Richard the second) by the title of Earles of Angus. Howbeit the Lawyers of England refused in their Brieves and instruments to acknowledge him Earle, for that Angus was not within the kingdome of England, untill hee had brought forth openly in the face of the Court, the Kings writ and warrant, wherein he was summoned to the Parliament by the name of Earle of Angus. In the reigne of David Bru, Thomas Stewart was Earle of Angus, who by a suddaine surprise won Barwicke, and (treightwaies lost it; yea, and within a while after died miserably in prison at Dunbrumion. But the Douglasse, men of haughtie mindes and invincible hearts, from the time of King Robert the third have beene Earles of Angus (after that George Douglass had taken to wife the Kings daughter) repured the chiefe and principall Earles of Scotland, and to whom this office belongeth, to carrie the regall Crown before the Kings at all the solemne assemblies of the kingdome. The sixth Earle of Angus out of this stocke, was Archebald, who espoused Margarer daughter to Henrie the seventh K. of England, and mother to James the fifth King of Scots, by whom he had issue Margarer wife to Matthew Stewart Earle of Lennox; who after her brothers decease, that died childlesse, willingly resigned up her right and interest in this Earldome, unto Sir David Douglass of Peteindreich, her uncles sonne by the fathers side, and that with the consent of her husband and sonnes; to the end that she might binde the surer unto her selfe, by the linke also of a beneficiall demerite, that family, which otherwise in blood was most neere; what time as Henrie her son went about to wed Marie the Queen: by which marriage King JAMES our Sovereigne, the mightie Monarch of great Britaine, was happily borne to the good of all Britaine.

Earles of Angus.

MERNIS.

These regions were in Ptolomees time inhabited by the VERNICONES, the same perhaps that the VICTURIONIS mentioned by Marcellinus. But this their name is now quite gone, unlesse wee would imagine some little peece thereof to remaine in Mernis. For many times in common speech of the British tongue, V. turneth into M.

This small province Mernis abutting upon the German Ocean, and of a rich and battle soile, lieth very well, as a plaine and levell Champion. But the most memorable place therein is Dunnotyr, a Castle advanced upon an high and unaccessible rocke, whence it looketh downe to the underflowing sea; well fenced with strong walls and turrets, which hath beene a long time the habitation of the Keiths, of an ancient and verie noble stock; who by the guidance of their vertue became hereditarie Earles Mareschals of the kingdome of Scotland, and Sheriffes of this province. In a porch or gallerie here, is to bee seene that ancient inscription which I mentioned even now, of a companie, belonging to the twentieth legion, the letters whereof the right noble and honourable Earle now living, a great lover of antiquitie, caused to be guided. Somewhat farther from the sea standeth Fordon, graced in some sort and commendable in regard of John de Fordon; who being borne here, diligently and with great paines compiled Scoti Chronicon, that is, The Scottish Chronicle: unto whose laborious studies the Scottish Historiographers are very much indebted: but more glorious and renowned in old time, for the reliques of St. Palladius, bestowed and shrined sometime, as is verily thought, in this place; who in the yeere 431. was by Pope Celestinus appointed the Apostle of the Scottish nation.

Dunnotyr.

Keith.
Earles Mareschals.Fordon.
Sherifdome of Kinkerdin, or Mernis.

St. Palladius;

MARRIA

MARRIA, or MAR.

From the sea in the mediterranean or inland parts above Merni, MAR enlargeth it selfe, and runneth forward threescore miles, or thereabout: where it lieth broadest Westwards, it swelleth up with mountaines, unless it bee where the rivers Dee, which Ptolomee calleth DIVA, and Done make way for themselves, and enfertile the fields. Upon the bank of Done, Kildrummy standeth as a faire ornament to the countrey, being the ancient seat of the Earles of Marre: and not farre distant from it the habitation of the Barons Forbois, who being issued from a noble and ancient stocke, assumed this surname; whereas before time they were called Bois, after that the heire of that family had manfully killed a savage and cruell Beare. But at the very mouth of this river, there be two townes that give greater ornament, which of the said mouth, that in the British tongue they call Aber, borrowing one name, are divided asunder by one little field lying betweene: the hithermore of them, which standeth neerer to Dee mouth, is much ennobled by an Episcopall dignitie (which King David the first translated hither from Muriblake a little village) by faire houses of the Canons, an Hospital for poore people, and a free Grammar schoole; which William Elphinston, Bishop of the place in the yeere 1480. consecrated to the training up of youth, and is called New Aberdon: The other beyond it, named Old Aberdon, is most famous for the taking of Salmons. But J. Jonston, a native hereof, in these his verses depainteth Aberdon thus.

Kildrummy.

Barons Forbois.

Salmons.

ABERDONIA.

*Ad Boream porrecta jugis obfessa superbis,
Inter connatas eminet una Deas.
Mior algens Phœbus sic temperat auras,
Non æstum ut rabidum, fragora nec metuas.
Fecundo ditat Neptunus gurgite, & amnes
Pisces: gemmis aliter adauget opes.
Candida mens, frons læta, hilaris, gratissima tellus
Hospitiis: morum cultus ubique decens.
Nobilitas antiqua, opibus subnixæ vetustis,
Martiaque invictæ pectore corda gerens.
Justitiæ domus, & studiorum mater honoris
Ingenio ars, certant artibus ingenia.
Omnia ei cedunt, meritis generisq; honores Pingere non ulla Ars, ingeniumq; valet.*

Beset with loftie tops of hills, and Northward lying spread,
Among her sister-townes alone she beareth up her head.
The warme sun-beames such temper give to sharpnesse of the aire,
That neither scorching heat you need, nor pinching cold to feare.
The sea, the fishfull rivers eke, with plenteous gulfes and streames,
Make this place rich, and one of them enriches it with gemmes.
Plain-hearted men, of lightsome lookes, and cheerfull, passing kind
To strangers: decent everie thing and neat you shall there finde.
Their noble gentrie ancient, their livings ancient were
And their demesnes: undaunted hearts and martiall mindes they beare.
The Justice Hall, as mother kinde, she honours due doth daigne Professions all; art strives with wit, and wit with arts againe.
All short of her. But praises all of this my genitresse
That she deserves, no wit nor art is able to expresse.

A It is almost incredible what abundance of * Salmons as well these rivers, as others also in Scotland on both sides of the realme, doe breed. This fish was altogether unknowne unto Plinie, unless it were that Esox of the Rhene: but in this North part of Europe passing well known, shining and glittering (as he saith) with his red bowels. In Autumne they engender within little rivers, and in shallow places for the most part, what time they cast their spawn, and cover it over with sand: and then are they so poore and leane, that they seeme to have nothing else in a manner but their small bones. Of that spawn in the spring next following there comes a frye of tender little fishes, which making toward the sea, in a small time grow to their full bignesse: and in returning backe againe to seeke for the rivers wherein they were bred; they strive and struggle against the streame: and looke whatsoever lyeth in their way to hinder their passage, with a jerke of their taile, and a certaine leape (whence haply they had their name Salmons) to the wonder of the beholders, they nimbly whip over; and keepe themselves within these rivers of theirs untill they breed. During which time it is enacted by law they should not bee caught; namely, from the feast of the Assumption of our Ladie, to the feast of Saint Andrew in winter. And it should seeme they were reputed among the greatest commodities of Scotland, when likewise it was ordained that they should not be sold unto Englishmen, but for English gold, and no other contentation. But these matters I leave for others.

* Bede, and our writers called them in Latin Eschii.

C To come now unto the Earles of Marre. In the reigne of Alexander the third, William Earle of Marre is named among those that were sore offended and displeased with the King. Whiles David Bruce reigned, Donald Earle of Marre, Protector of the Kingdome, was before the battaile at Dyplin murdered in his bed, by Edward Balliol, and the Englishmen that came to aide him: whose daughter Iabel King Robert Bruce tooke to be his former wife, on whom he begat Marjorie mother to Robert Stewart King of Scots. Under the same David there is mention also made of Thomas Earle of Marre, who was banished in the yeere 1361. Likewise in the reigne of Robert the third, Alexander Stewart is named Earle of Marre, who in the battell at Harley against the Ilanders lost his life, in the year 1411. In the daies of King James the first we read in Scots-Chronicon thus: Alexander Earle of Marre died in the yeere 1435. the base son of Alexander Stewart Earle of Bucquan, sonne to Robert the second King of Scots, after whom, as being a bastard, the King succeeded in the inheritance. John the second sonne of King James the second afterwards bare this title; who being convict for attempting by art magicke to take away the King his brothers life, was let blood to death. And after him Robert Cockeran was promoted from a Mason to this dignitie by King James the third, and soon after hanged by the Nobilitie. Since which time this honourable title was discontinued, untill that Queen Marie adorned therewith James her bastard brother: and not long after, when it was found that by ancient right the title of Earle of Marre appertained to John Lord Ereskin, in lieu of Marre she conferred upon him the honour of Earle Murray, and created John Ereskin, a man of ancient and noble birth Earle of Marre; whose sonne bearing the same Christian name, now enioieth also the same dignity, and is in both realmes one of the Kings Privie Council.

Earles of Mar.

Scots-Chronicon lib. 12. cap. 23.

BUCHANIA

BUQUHAN.

THE TAIZALI mentioned by Ptolomee, in ancient times inhabited where now Buquhan, in Latin Roghania and Buchania, above the river Done beareth forth toward the German sea. Some derive this latter name a Bobus, that is, From Oxen and Kine; whereas notwithstanding the ground serveth better to feed sheepe, whose woole is highly commended. Albeie the rivers in this coast everie where breed

River Ratra.

An admirable waters.

Claik-geefe.

Amber.

Concerning the manners of the Germans.Earles of Bu-quhan.The valour of Scots in the wars of France.

breed great store of Salmons, yet doe they never enter into the river Ratra, as Buchanan hath recorded. Neither let it be offensive if I cite his testimonie, although his bookes by authoritie of Parliament in the yeere 1584. were forbidden: because many things in them contained are to be dashed out. Who also hath written, That on the banke of Ratra there is a cave neere unto Stangs Castle, the nature whereof seemeth not to be passed over. The water distilling by drops out of a naturall vault, presently turneth into Pyramidall stones, and were not the said cave or hole otherwhiles rid and cleansed by mans labour, the whole space as far as up to the vault would in short time be filled therewith. Now the stone thus engendred is of a middle nature betweene yce and hard stone: for it is brittle and easie to crumble, neither groweth it ever to the soliditie and hardnesse of marble. Concerning those Claik-geefe, which some with much admiration have beleevd to grow out of trees, both upon this shore & elsewhere, and when they be ripe to fall downe into the sea, it is scarce worth the labour to mention them. That there be little birds engendred of old and rotten keeles of ships, they can beare witnesse, who saw that ship wherein Francis Drake sailed about the world, standing in a docke neere the Tamis; to the outside of the keele whereof a number of such little birds without life and feathers stuck close. Yet would I gladly thinke that the generation of these birds, was not out of the logges of wood, but from the very Ocean, which the Poets tearmed the Father of all things.

A mightie masse likewise of Amber, as bigge as the bodie of an horse, was not many yeeres since cast upon this shore. The learned call it Succinum, Glessum, and Chryso-Eletrum: and Soracm supposed that it was a certaine juice or liquor which distillith out of trees in Britain, and runneth downe into the sea, and is therein hardened. Tacitus also was of the same opinion, when he wrote thus: I can verily beleve, that like as there be trees in the secret and inward parts of the East, which sweate out frankincense and balme, so in the Islands and other countries of the west, there be woods and groves of a more fastid and firme substance, which melting by the hot beames of the Sunne approaching so neere, runneth into the sea hard by, and by force of tempest floateth up to the shores against it. But Serapio, and the Philosophers of later times write that it cometh out of a certain clammy and bituminous earth under the sea, and by the sea side; and that the billowes and tempests cast up part thereof a land, and fishes devour the rest. But I digresse extravagantly, I will into my way againe, and since I acknowledge my fault, let my confession purchase pardon.

In the reigne of King Alexander the second, Alexander Comin rose up to the honour of Earle of Buguban, who married the daughter and one of the heires of Roger de Quincie Earle of Winchester in England, and his Niece by a sonne brought the same title unto Henrie de Beaumont her husband: for he, in King Edward the third his daies had his place in the Parliament of England, by the name of Earle of Buguban. Afterwards, Alexander Stewart, sonne to King Robert the second, was Earle of this place; unto whom succeeded John, a younger sonne of Robert Duke of Albanie, who arriving in France with seven thousand Scottisshmen to aide Charles the seventh King of France, bare himselfe valiantly, and performed singular good service against the Englishmen, and that with so great commendation, as having victoriously slaine Thomas Duke of Clarence brother to Henrie the fifth King of England at Baugie, and discomfited the English, he was made Constable of France. But in the third yeere following, when the fortune of warre turned, hee, with other most valiant Knights, to wit, Archibald Douglass Earle of Wigton, and Duke of Touraine, &c. was vanquished at Vernoil by the English, and there slain. Whom notwithstanding, as that Poet said,

—eternum memorabit Gallia cives
Grata suos, titulos que dedit & summos.

France thankfully will ay recount, as citizens of her owne,

On whom both titles glorious, and tombes she hath bestowne.

Certes, whereas under the K.K. Charles the sixth and seventh France was preferred, and Aquitain recovered, by thrusting out the English, the Frenchmen cannot chuse

A chuse but acknowledge themselves much beholden to the fidelitie and fortitude of the Scottissh. But afterwards King James the first gave the Earldome of Buguban unto George of Dunbar, moved thereto upon pitie and commiseration, because hee had deprived him before of the Earldome of March by authority of Parliament, for his fathers crime: and not long after, James the sonne of James Stewart of Lorn, surnamed the Black Knight, whom he had by Q. Joan sister to the Duke of Somerfer, and widow to King James the first, obtained this honour, and left it to his posteritie: but for default not long since of heires male, it came by a daughter married to Robert Douglas, a younger brother of Douglas of Lochlevin, to the family of the Douglasses.

From Buguban, as the shore bendeth backward and turneth full into the North, lieth Boena, and Bamff a small Sherifdome, also Ajuza a little territorie of no especiall account, and Rothamay castle, the dwelling place of the Barons of Salton, surnamed Aberneiby. Beneath these lieth Strath-bolgy, that is, the vale by Bolgy, the habitation in times past of the Earls of Athol, who of it assumed their surname, but now the principall seat of Marquess Huntly. For this title K. James the sixth conferred upon George Gordon, Earle Huntly, Lord Gordon and Badzeneth, a man of great honour and reputation for his ancient noblesse of birth, and the multitude of his dependants and followers: whose ancestors descended from the Setons, by Parliamentary authoritie took the name of Gordon (when as Sir Alexander Seton had taken to wife the daughter of Sir John Gordon Knight, by whom he had a large and rich inheritance) and received the honour of the Earle of Huntly at the hands of King James the second, in the yeere 1449.

Boen.
Barons of Sal-
ton.
Strathbolgy.Marquess
Huntly.

MORAVIA, or MURRAY.

He Vacomagi, remembered by Ptolomee, anciently inhabited on the further side of Craniz-baine mountain, which, as it were in a continued range, by hills hanging one by another, driveth out his ridge with many a winding as far as to Murray frish, where now lieth Murray, in Latin Moravia, celebrated for the fertilitie, pleasant site, and commoditie of fruitfull trees. By this Province, Spey a famous river maketh his issue into the sea, wherein he lodgeth, when hee hath watered Roths Castle, whence the family of the Lesleys tooke the title of Earle, ever since that K. James the second conferred the honour of Earle of Roths upon Sir George Lesley. Concerning this Spey our Poet Necham hath thus written.

Vacomagi.
Murray bay.
Sinus Pararisi.The river
Spey.
History of John Lesley
Bishop of Ross.

Spey loca mutantis præceps agitator arena,
Inconstans certas nescit habere vias.
Officium limris corbis subit, hunc regis audax
Cursus labemnis nauta fluentia sequens.

Spey raising heaps of sand amaine, that shift oft times their place,
Inconstant he doth change oft soones, and keeps no certaine race.
A panier serves here for a boat, some ventrous swaine it guides,
Who followeth still the rivers course, while downe the streame it glides.

The river Loxa mentioned by Ptolomee, which now is called Losse, hideth himselfe in the sea hard by, neere unto which Elgina appeareth, in which and in Forres adjoining I. of Dunbar of Cummock, descended from the stock of the Barles of March, hath his jurisdiction as Sheriff by inheritance. But where it is now readie to enter into the sea, he findeth a more plaine and soft soile, and spreadeth abroad into a Meere full of swans, wherein the herbe Olorina plentifully groweth; hee hath Spiny Castle standing upon it, whereof now the first Baron is Alexander, of the lineage of the Lindseys; like as Kinloss also a neighbour by, sometime a famous Monasterie (some call it Kill flos, of certaine flowers miraculously there springing up on a sudden, when the carcase of King Duff, murdered and hidden in the same place, was found) hath also for the Lord thereof Edward Bryn, M. of the Rolls in England, & of the Kings Majesties Privie Counsell, whom King James the sixth created Baron Bryn of Kinloss.

The river
Loxa.

Baron of Spiny.

Baron Kinloss.

Thus

Banatia.

Narne Sherifdome.

Logh-Nesse.

Innerneffe.

Thus much for the shore. More inward, where now standeth Bean Castle (thought to bee BANATIA that Prologues mentioneth) there was found in the yeere 1466, a vessell of marble artificially engraven, and full of Roman coine. Hard by is Nardin, or Narne, an hereditable Sherifdome of the Cambels of Lorne; where there stood within a Biland, a fortresse of a mightie heighth, built with wonderfull bulwarks, and in times past defended by the Danish forces against the Scottis. A little off is Logh-Nesse, a very great Lake, as reaching out 23. miles in length; the water whereof is so warme, that even in this cold and frozen climate it never freezeth: from which, by a verie small Isthm or partition of hills, the Logh-Lorne or Louthea, which by Aberket teth it selfe forth into the West sea, is divided. Neere unto these Loghs, there stood in old time two notable fortifications, the one named Innerneffe, the other Innerlothea, according to the names of the said Loghs. Innernes hath for Sheriffe thereof by right of inheritance the Marquesse Huntly, who is of great command hereabout. But have here what M. Jonston hath written jointly of these two.

I N N E R N E S S E S,

&

I N N E R L O T H E A.

*Imperii veteris duo propugnacula quondam,
Primæque regali mania structa manu.
Turribus oppositis adverso in limine spectat
Hæc Zephyrum, Solus illa orientis equos.
Amnibus hinc atque hinc cincta, utraq; piscibus amnes
Fecundi, hæc portu perperè intapatæ.
Hæc fuit, ac jacer heu, jam nunc sine nomine tellus,
Hospita quæ Regum, est hospita facta feris.
Altera spirat adhuc renais sufflaminavite,
Quæ dabit & furi turbine vitæ manus.
Dic ubi hæc Carthago potens? ubi Martia Roma?
Trojæque, & immensa diu opes Asia?
Quid mireris enim mortalia cedere furis
Corpora? cum videas oppida posse mori.*

I N N E R N E S S E,

A N D

I N N E R L O T H E A.

Two mightie forts and holds these were in ancient kingdomes daies;
The first wall'd fences, as they say, that hand of Kings did raise.
Affront with towres oppos'd they stand, for one of them regards
The Westerne winde, but th'other looks the Sun-rising towards.
On both sides they their rivers have, and rivers full of fish:
One hath an haven frequented aye, and safe as heart can wish.
Such was it once; but now alas to wast and desert fields
Is turn'd, and that which lodged Kings to wild beasts harbour yeelds.
The other yet draw's breath, though deepe, and shewes that it doth live;
But over match'd, to destinie at length doth bucklers give.
What's now become of Carthage great? where is that martiall Rome?
Where Troy? of wealthie Asia the riches all and some?
No marvaile now that mortall wights to death be subject, why?
Because you plainly see that Townes and Cities great may dye.

Earles of Murray.

Under the reigne of Robert Brum, Thomas Randolph his sisters sonne, who in his Countries behalfe undertooke exceeding great paines, and most grievous quarrels, was highly renowned by the title of Earle of Murray. Under King Robert the Second, John of Dunbarre tooke to wife the Kings daughter, to make amends for

After her devirgination, received this Earldome of Murray with her in marriage. Under King James the second William Creighton Chancelour of the Realme, and Archibald Douglas grew to great variance and eagre contention about this Earldome, when as against the lawes and ancient customes, Douglas who had married the younger daughter of James of Dunbar Earle of Murray, was preferred to the Earldom before Creighton who had wedded the elder, and that through the powerfull authoritie that William Earle Douglass had with the King; which was so great that he advanced not onely him to the Earldom of Murray, but also another brother to the Earldome of Ormund; and made two cousins of his Earles, the one of Angus, and the other of Morton. But this greatneffe of his, not to be trusted upon because it was excessive, turned soone after to his owne confusion. Under King James the fifth, his own brother, whom he appointed his Vicegerent in the government of the Kingdome, enjoied this honour: and within our remembrance, James the base sonne of King James the fifth received this honour of Queene Mary his sister: but he requited her basely, when conspiring with some few of the Nobilitie, he deposed her from her Royall estate and kingdome; a foule president, and prejudiciall to all Kings and Princes. Which notwithstanding was revenged, for shortly after hee was shot through with a bullet. His onely daughter brought this title unto her husband Sir James Stewart of Downe, who was also of the blood royall from the Dukes of Albany: who being slain by his concurrents left his sonne James to succeed him in this honour.

L O Q H U A B R E.

Whatsoever beyond the Nesse bendeth to the West coast, and adjoineeth to the Lake Aber, is thereupon called Loquhabre, that is in the ancient tongue of the Britans, The mouth of the Lakes, as what lieth toward the North is commonly called Rosse.

Loquhabre is full of fresh pastures and woods, neither is without yron mines, but not so free in yeeld of corne; but for most fishfull pooles, and rivers scarce inferiour to any country thereabout. At Logh-Lothey, Innerlothey, fenced with a fort, and well frequented with Merchants, was of great name and importance in times past, but being razed by the piracies and warres of Danes and Norwegians, it hath lien for these many ages so forlorn, that there remaineth scarce any shew of it; which those verses that I alledged even now doe imply. Loquhabre hath had, so farre as I have read, no Earles: but about the yeere of our salvation 1050. there was a Thane over it of great fame, and much spoken of, named Banquo, whom Macbeth the bastard, when with murder & bloodshed he had usurped the crowne, being fearfull and suspicious, caused to bee made away; for that he had learned by a Prophecie of certaine wise women, that his posteritie, when the line of Macbeth was expired and extinct, should one day obaine the Kingdome, and by a long successive descent reigne in Scotland. Which verily hath fallen out accordingly. For Fleance the sonne of Banquo, who unknowne in the darke escaped the traines laid for him, fled into Wales, where for a time hee kept himselfe close: and having taken to wife Nesta the daughter of Griffith ap Lewellin Prince of North-wales, begat Walter, who returning into Scotland, with so great fame of his fortitude repressed the rebellion of the Islanders; and with as great wisdom managed the Kings revenewes in this tract, that the King made him Seneschall, whom they commonly call Stewart of the whole Kingdome of Scotland. Whereupon this name of Office imposed the surname Stewart unto his posteritie: who spreading throughout all parts of Scotland into a number of noble branches, after many honours heaped upon them, have flourished a long time, and from out of them, three hundred yeeres agoe and thirtie, Robert Stewart by Marjorie his mother, daughter to King Robert Brum, obtained the Kingdome of Scotland:

Eccc

and

Innerlothe:

Thane of Lo-
quhabre.
Banquo.The beginning of the Stewart family.

and now lately James Stewart of that name the sixth King of Scots, by Margaret his great grandmother, daughter to King Henrie the seventh (the divine power of that most high and almighty Ruler of the world so disposing) is ascended with the generall applause of all nations, to the height of Monarchicall majestic over all Britaine, and the Isles adjacent.

ROSSIA.

THe Province Ross, so called by an old Scottish word, which some interpret to be a Promontorie, others a Biland, was inhabited by the people named CANTÆ (which terme in effect implieth as much) in the time of Ptolomee. This extendeth it selfe so wide and large, that it reacheth from the one sea to the other. What way it beareth upon the Vergivian or Western Ocean, by reason of huge swelling mountaines advancing their heads aloft; and many woods among them, it is full of staggess, roe buckes, fallow Deere; and wilde foule: but where it butteth upon the German sea, it is more lovely bedect with corne fields and pastures, and withall much more civill. In the very first entrance into it Ardmanoch, no small territorie, whereof the second sonnes of the Kings of Scotland beare the title, riseth up with high mountaines, that are most trustie preferers of snow. As touching their height, some have reported unto me strange wonders: and yet the ancient Geometers have written, that neither the depth of sea, nor height of hills exceed by the plumbe line ten stadia, that is, one mile and a quarter. Which notwithstanding, they that have beheld Tenariffe, amongst the Canarie Islands, which is fiftene leagues high, and sailed withall the Ocean neere unto them, will in no wise admit for truth. In this part standeth Lover Castle, and the Baronie of the worthy family of the Frasers, whom for their singular good service for the Scottish kingdome, King James the second accepted into the ranke of Barons: and whom the Clan-Ranalds, a most bloodie generation, in a quarrell and braule between them, had wholly destroyed every mothers sonne, but that by the providence of God, fourescore of the principall persons of this family left their wives at home all great with child, who being delivered of so many sonnes, renewed the house, and multiplied the name againe. But at Nesse mouth there flourished sometimes Chanonie, so called of a rich Colledge of Chanons, whiles the Ecclesiasticall state stood in prosperitie, in which there is erected a See for the Bishop of Rosse. Hard by is placed Cromartie, where Ferghuart, a Gentleman of noble birth, by hereditarie right from his ancestours, ministrerth justice as Sheriffe to this Sherifsdome: and this is so commodious and safe an harbour for any fleet, be it never so great, that both Sailers and Geographers name it PORTUS-SALUTIS, that is, The Haven of safetie.

Above it is LITTUS ALTUM, whereof Ptolomee maketh mention, called now, as it seemeth, Tarbarih: for there indeed the shore riseth to a great height, enclosed on the one side with Cromer a most secure and safe haven; and on the other with CELNIUS, now Killian the river: and thus much of the places toward the East Ocean. Into the west sea the river LONGUS, mentioned in Ptolomee, at this day named Lough Longus, runneth: then the CERONES anciently dwelt where now is Assinshire, a countrey much mangled with many inlets and armes of the sea inbofoming it selfe with manifold commodities.

As for the Earls of Rosse, it is full of difficulty to set them down in order successively out of writers. About foure hundred yeers past, we read that Ferghuard flourished & enjoyed this title: But for default of issue male, it came by a daughter to Walter Lesley, who for his noble feats of armes courageously achieved under Lewis the Emperour, was worthily named The Noble Knight: he begat Alexander Earle of Rosse, and a daughter married unto Donald Lord of the Islands Hebrides. This Alexander had issue one onely daughter, who made over by her deed all her owne title

and

The people
Cantæ.Baron of Ardmanoch.The height of hills, and depth
of sea.
Plutarch. in
Pub. Æmilius, concerning Olympus.Portus Salutis.
Littus Altum.The river Cel-nio.
Ceronas.

Earls of Rosse.

and right unto Robert Duke of Albany: whereat the said Donald of the Islands being highly enchaifed and repining, stiled himselfe in the reigne of James the third, King of the Islands, and Earle of Rosse, having with fire and sword laied waste his native country far & neere. At length, the said K. James the third by authoritie of Parliament, in the yeere 1476, annexed the Earldome of Rosse to the crowne, so as it might not be lawfull for his successours to alienate by any meanes from the crowne, either the Earldome it selfe, or any parcell thereof; or by any device to grant the same unto any person, save onely to the Kings second sonnes lawfully borne: whence it is that Charles the Kings second sonne, Duke of York, at this day holdeth and enioieth the title of Earle of Rosse.

SUTHERLAND.

BEyond Rosse, Sutherland looketh toward the East Ocean; a land more meet to breed cattell than to beare corne: wherein there be hills of white marble (a wonderfull thing in this so cold a climate) but of no use almost, considering excesse in building, and that vain ostentation of riches, is not yet reached to these remote regions. Here is Dunrobin, a castle of very great name, the principall seat of the ancient Earles of Sutherland, descended, if I be not deceived, out of the family of Murray. Among whom, one William under King Robert Brus is most famous, who married the sister of the whole blood to K. David, and had by her a son, whom the said David declared heire apparant of the crown, and compelled his Nobles to sweare unto him alleageance: but he within a little after departed without issue, and the Earldome in the end came by a daughter and heire hereditarily unto A. Gordon, one of the line of the Earles of Huntly.

Mountains of white marble.

Dun-robin.

Earles of Sutherland.

CATHANES.

Higher lieth CATHANES, butting full upon the said East sea bending inward with a number of creakes and compasses, which the waves as it were indent: In which dwelt in Ptolomees time the CATINI, but written falsly in some copies CARINI, among whom the selfe same Ptolomee placeth the river Ila, which may seem to be the Wisle at this day. The inhabitants of this province raised their greatest gaine and revenues by grazing and raising of cattell, and by fishing. The chiefe castle therein is called Girnego, in which the Earls of Cathness for the most part make their abode. The Bishops sea is in Dornock, a little meane town otherwise; where also King James the fourth appointed the Sheriffe of Cathness to reside, or else at wik, as occasions should require, for the administration of justice.

Catini a people.

The Earles of Cathness in ancient times were also Earles of the Orcades, but at last they became distinct, and by the eldest daughter of one Malise given in marriage to William Seindler the Kings Pantler, his heires successively came to be Earls of Cathness, and doe still enjoy the same honour.

Earls of Cathness.

STRATHNANERN.

He utmost and farthest coast of all Britaine, which with the front of the shore looketh full against the North point, and hath the midst of the greater Beares taile, which, as Cardan was of opinion, causeth translations of Empires, just over head, was inhabited, as wee may see in Ptolomee, by the CORNABII, among whom he placeth the river NABEUS, which names are of so Cornabii.

The river
Nabe.

Eccc 2

Wolves.

The longest daies.

Berubium.

Virvedrum.
Orcas.Tarvisium, or Tarvodunum
in Marcianus.
Tarvis what it
is.
Shetland.

neere affinitie; that the nation may seeme to have drawne their denomination from A the river that they dwelt by: neither doth the moderne name Strath-Navern, which signifieth the Valley by Navern, jarre altogether in sound from them. The country it selfe is for the soile nothing fertile, and by reason of the sharpe and cold aire, lesse inhabited; and thereupon fore haunted and annoied with most cruell wolves. Which in such violent rage not only set upon cattell, to the exceeding great dammage of the inhabitants, but also assaile men with great danger; and not in this tract onely, but in many other parts likewise of Scotland, in so much as by vertue of an act of Parliament, the Sheriffs and inhabitants in every countrey, are commanded to goe forth thrice a yeere a hunting, for to destroy the wolves and their whelpes. But (if in this B so Northerly a countrey this be any comfort to speak of) it hath of all Britain again the shortest night, and the longest day. For, by reason of the position of heaven here distant from the Equinoctiall line 59. degrees and fortie minutes, the longest day containeth 18. houres and 25. scruples: and the shortest night not above five houres and 45. scruples. So that the Panegyrist is not true in this, who made report in times past, That the sunne in manner setteth not at all, but passeth by, and lightly glanceth upon the Horizon: haply relying upon this authoritie of Tacitus, for that the extreme points, and plaine levels of the earth, with their shade so low raised up no darknesse at all. But more truly Plinie (according to true reason) where hee treateth of the longest dayes, according to the inclination of the sunnes circle to the Horizon. The longest daies (saith he) in Italy are 15. houres, in Britaine 17. where the light nights doe prove that undoubtedly by experience, which reason forceth credibly, that in Midsummer daies, when the sunne approacheth neer to the Pole of the world, the places of the earth under the Pole have day 6. months, though the light having but a narrow compasse, the night contrariwise when he is farre remote in middle winter.

In this utmost tract, which Ptolomee extendeth out farre East, whereas indeed it beareth full North (for which Roger Bacon in his Geography taxed him long since) where Tacitus said, That an huge and enorme space of ground running still forward to the farthest point, groweth narrow like a wedge. There run out three Promontories, mentioned by the old writers, namely BERUBIUM, now called Urdehead, neere to Bernswale a village: VIRVEDRUM, now Dunsby, otherwise named Duncansby, which is thought to be the most remote promontorie of Britain: ORCAS, now named Howburn, which Ptolomee setteth over against the Islands Orcades, as the utmost of them all: this also in Ptolomee is called TARVEDRUM, and TARVISIUM, and so named, if my conjecture faile me not, because it is the farthest end of Britaine: for Tarvis in the British tongue hath a certaine signification of ending. With which I accordingly will end this booke, purposing to speake of the out-Isles, Orcades, Hebudes or Hebrides, and of Shetland, in their due place.

THus have I briefly run over Scotland, and verily more briefly than the worth of so great a kingdom requireth: neither doubt I but that some one or other will set it forth more at large, and depaint it (as I said) with a more flourishing penfill, in greater certainty, and upon better knowledge; when as our most mighty Monarch now openeth those remote places, hitherto fore-closed from us. Meane while, if I have at any time dropt asleepe (for the most watchfull may sometimes bee taken napping) or if some error in this unknowne tract hath misled mee from the truth (as nothing is more rife and easie than error) I hope the courteous Reader will pardon it upon my acknowledgment; and of his kindnesse recalling me from error, direct me in the right way to the truth.

IRELAND

IRELAND;
AND
THE SMALLER ISLANDS IN THE BRITISH OCEAN.

Eccc 3

THE BRITISH OCEAN.

Now have I rather passed over than thoroughly surveyed all BRITAIN, namely, those two most flourishing Kingdomes, ENGLAND and SCOTLAND: And whereas I am now to crosse the seas for IRELAND, and the rest of the Isles, if I premise some few lines touching the British sea, I hope it shal not seem a crooked course, or an extravagant digression.

The British sea

BRITAIN is encompassed round about with the vast open and main Ocean, which ebbeth and floweth so violently with main tides, that, as Pytheas of Marfiles hath reported, it swelleth 80. cubits about Britaine: and St. Basile hath termed it Mare Magnum, &c. The great sea and dreadfull to Sailers: yea and S. Ambrose wrote thus of it; The great sea not adventurous on by sailers, nor attempted by Mariners, is that which with a roaring and furling current environeth Britaine, and reacheth into far remote parts, and so hidden out of sight, as that the fables have not yet come hither. Certes this sea sometimes overfloweth the fields adjoining, other whiles again it retireth & leaveth all bare: and that I may use the words of Plinie, by reason of this open largenesse, it feeleth more effectually the force and influence of the Moone, exercising her power thereupon without impeachment: and it floweth at waies up within the land with such violence, that it doth not onely drive back the streames of rivers, but also either overtaketh and surpriseth beasts of the land, or else leaveth behind it those of the sea. For there have bin seen in everie age, to the great astonishment of the beholders, so many and so huge Seamonsters left on dry land on our shore, that Horace sang this note not without good cause:

Lib. Hexamet.
ron. cap. 3.

British sea in times past un-knowne.

Belluosus qui remotis Obstrepat Oceanus Britannis.

The Ocean of sea-monsters freight with store,
Upon the Britans farre remote doth roare.

And Juvenal in the like tune.

Quanto Delphino Balæna Britannica major.

As much as Whales full huge, that use to breed
In British Sea, the Dolphins doe exceed.

And

And so great an adventure and exploit it was thought, but to crosse only this our sea, that Libanius the Grecian sophister, in a Panegyricall oration unto Constantinus Chlorus, cried out in these words: ἡ ἀποβασις ἡ εἰς τὴν βρετανίαν: that is, This voiage into Britain seemed comparable to the greatest triumph. And Julius Firmicus, not that famous Astrologer, but another that was a Christian, in a little treatise of the error of profane religions, written unto the Emperours Constant & Constantius, brake out into this exclamation. In winter time (a thing that never was done before, nor ever will be done again) ye trampled under your oares the swelling and raging billowes of the British Ocean. The waves of the sea, unknown in a manner before times unto us, then trembled and quaked, and the Britans were terrified at the sudden presence of the Emperor: What will ye more? the very elements yielded themselves as conquered unto your valerous vertues.

Jul. Firmicus.

The winde Caurus.

The famous learned man Julius Scaliger in his Poeticalls, affirmeth that Caurus the North-west winde arise and bloweth out of this British sea, and that against the opinion of Lucan, who wrote thus:

Primus ab Oceano caput exeret Atlantæo,
Caurus, movens ætus.

From Ocean call'd Atlantick, Caurus thou first Thy head dost shew, making seas fell and curst.

Certes in Ireland he keeps foule work, and plaies the tyrant; and Cæsar writeth that a great part of the yeere he stands in this coast.

But whereas some write that in this our sea ships were first devised & used, I am not disposed to beleieve them. But Plinie witnesseth that the Britans used small wicker vessels, covered over with hides (which at this day they tearm Corraghs) and with Plinie accordeth Lucan, who versifieth in this wise.

The old twigen or wicker ships of the Britans.

Primum cana salix madefacto vimine parvam
Texitur in puppim, cæloque induta juvenco,
Vectoris patiens tumidum super emicat, annem:
Sic Venetus stagnante Pado, fuso que Britannus Navigat Oceano.

At first wet twiggies of willow grey, that long in soake had laine,
And covered over close with hide of Oxe or Bullocke laine,
(But wrought before unto the forme of little barke or boat)
Used to carrie passengers, the swelling streames afloat.
Thus over Po, that river large, sailes the Venetian,
And thus the Britan maketh way upon the spacious Ocean.

Semblably Solinus Polyhistor. In the sea between Britain and Ireland they saile in wicker bottomes, which they cover round about with Oxe

A Oxe hides. And how long soever as the course holdeth, so long the sailers forbear food.

As for the commodities which this sea affordeth, the warmth whereby it comforteth and cherisheth the earth, the vapours wherewith it nourisheth the aire, and bedeweth the fields: touching also the great varietie of fishes that it breedeth, as Salmons (which Bede calleth Ilcios, as Plinie Esox) Plaice, Pungers, Cods, Hadocks, Whittings, Herrings, Basse, Maccarell, Mullets, Turbits, Seales or Sea-calves, Rochets, Soles, Pilchards, Raifish or Scale, Thorn-back, Oysters, Lobsters, Crab-fish, and an infinite number of others, whereof it maintaineth and feedeth innumerable skuls and beds, it is not materiall to speake, they are so well knowne. Yet the pearles are not to bee overpassed in silence, which King Iubas reporteth to be shaped round, and to swim in the British sea by flocks or swarms, in manner of bees, following their Captaine and Leader.

Pearles.

And Marcellinus, when he had spoken of the Persian and Indian pearles; which kind of gemme (saith he) we are not ignorant to be engendred and gathered in the creekes of the British sea, although they bee not of that beautie and worth. Which although they be accounted by Plinie small ones, and ill coloured, yet Suetonius writeth, that Cæsar made his voiage into Britaine in hope of them; and that they were of such bignesse, as he took the peise of some of them by hand, and dedicated a brest-plate made of them unto Venus Genitrix, which he also witnessed by a subscription. Origen likewise as touching these pearles writeth thus: Sea-pearles, such as be most notable, are found among the Indians, but the best are bred in the Red-sea: In the next place are those pearles which are taken in the British Ocean: but of a third sort, and inferiour in goodnesse not to those first only, but also to these of the second degree, are they that be found in Bosphorus neere Scythia. And after a few lines: But that kind which they say is gotten in Britain, for the superficiall colour verily somewhat resembleth a golden hew, but cloudie it is and troubled, and for the lustre with the dimmest. Furthermore, our Venerable Bede writing of the Shell-fishes of this our sea: Among them (saith he) there bee * Muscles, wherein they find enclosed oftentimes the best pearle of all colours, of purple, violet, and greene, but especially of bright white. There be cochles also in exceeding great abundance, wherewith they die a scarlet colour: the most beautifull red hew whereof, no heat of sunne, nor injurie of raine is ever able to make pale; but the * older it is, the fairer it sheweth. And Tertullian reproving the lavish expence and superfluitie in his time: If ambitious pride (saith he) may be maintained from the British or Indian seas, there is a kind of shell-fish more pleasant in taste, I say not than the purple fish or oyster, but than the very scallop it selfe.

* Muscles

* Verruor
Venustior

This sea, which generally is called MARE BRITANNICUM, and OCEANUS CALEDONIUS, according to the divers situation of places hath sundry and distinct names.

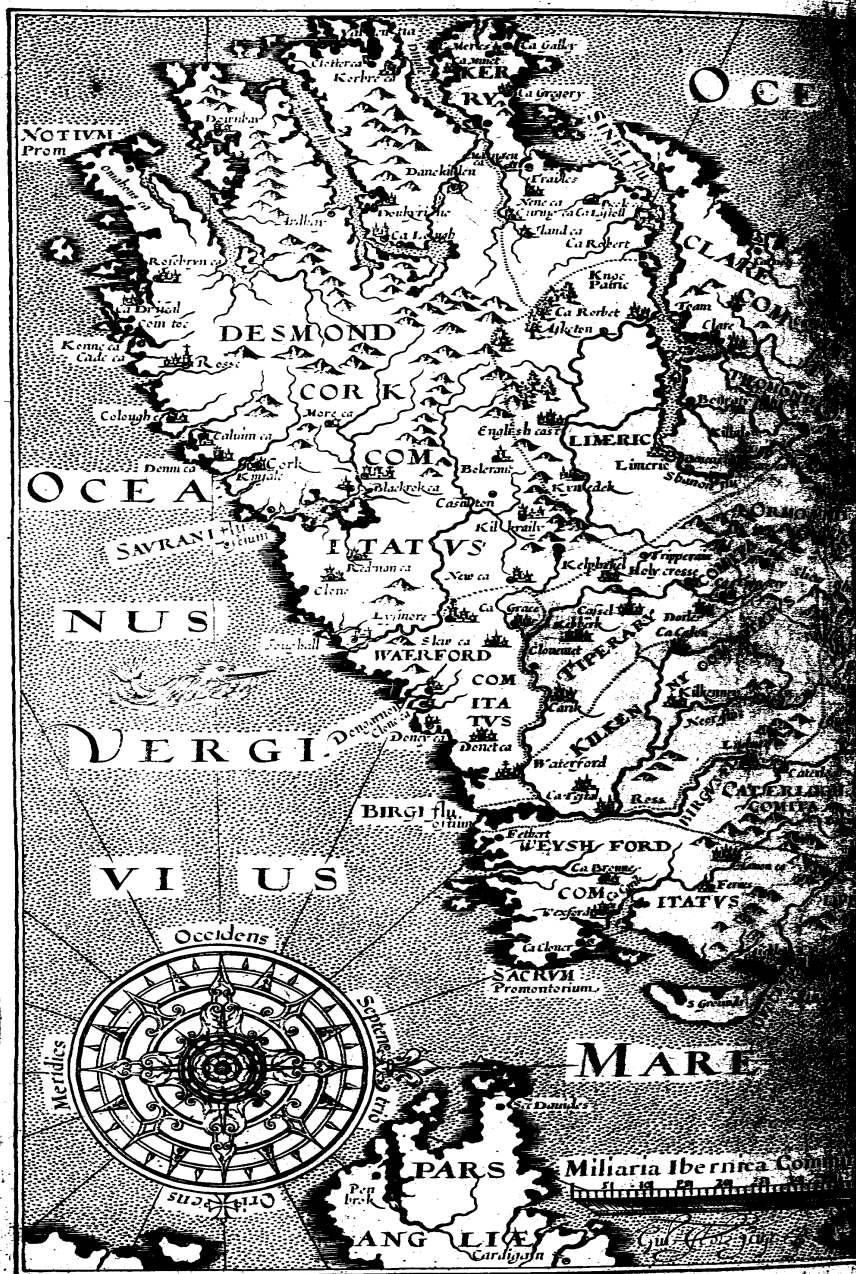

Eastward

Eastward, where it bath Germanie opposite unto it, they call it the GERMAN A sea: Northward, it is tearmed the Hyberborean sea, which ancient writers reported untruely, to be dead, dull, and heavie for the oare, and in that respect not raised with winds: and Tacitus beleev'd it was so, belike, because, as he writeth, the Lands and Mountaines be rare, which minister cause and matter of tempests, and for that a deep masse of continuat sea is more slowly stirred to work and rage. On the West side it is named OCEANUS DEUCALEDONIUS, and VERGIVIVS, both South and West from Ireland: but all the way that it runneth between Britain and Ireland, the Hi-BERNICUS, that is, Irish sea, and by Sea-men at this day S. Georges Chanel, And ancient writers have recorded that it rageth all the yeer long, with surging billowes and counter seas, and never is at rest nor navigable, unlesse it be in some few summer daies. But Southward, where it interfloweth France and Britain, it is properly called the BRITISH sea, and by the common mariners, the Chanel, by English sailers the SLEEVE; and in the same sense Le Manche in French, because it groweth narrow in manner of a sleeve. And this name of the BRITISH sea extended as farre as to Spaine, as C writeth Pomponius Mela, being himselfe also a Spaniard, where he reporteth that the Pyrene Mountain runneth forth into the BRITISH OCEAN.

Moreover, there be certain Ilands, which, as it were for a shew, Nature hath besprinkled along these seas, fewer toward the East and South parts, but Westward and Northward more in number. For there, by their thick standing together, they do after a sort garnish the sea, yea and depaint it as it were with their colours, in most pleasant sort. But for as much as Ireland farre excelleth all the rest, in regard of the greatnesse thereof, and frequencie of resort thereto, it requireth by due right, that it should first be treated of.

HIBER-
 E

F

HIBERNIA, IRELAND.

IN the Vergivian sea, which name is derived, not à vergendo, that is, of bending towards, as some are of opinion, but of Mor-veridibz for this name the Britans gave it: or else of Farigi, by which name the Irish men call it, the most famous Iland HIBERNIA, that is to say, IRELAND, encloseth the West side of Britain; an Iland which in times past challenged the third place amongst all the Isles of the then knowne world. For thus as touching Ilands writeth the ancient Geographer. Τὸν νῦν κατὰ τοὺς Ἕλληνας ΤΑΠΡΟΒΑΝΗ καλεῖσθαι τὴν Ἰνδοῦ ἢ ΒΡΕΤΑΝΝΙΚΗ. Οὐτὴν ἑστὶν Ὀτὴννία: that is, Of all Ilands for greatnesse the Indian TAPROBAN is prime and principall; next after it BRITAIN; and in a third degree another British Iland, named HIBERNIA, that is, Ireland; and thereupon Ptolomee called it LITTLE BRITAIN.

The Ocean
Vergivius.

Libro magne constructionis.

This Isle by Orpheus, Aristotle, and Claudian is named IERNA; by Juvenal & Mela JUVERNA; by Diodorus Siculus IRIS; by Martian of Heraclea JOYEPNIA; by Eustathius OYERNIA and BERNIA; by the native inhabitants Erin; by the Britans Tuerdon, and of English men Ireland. Whence these names have had their originall, sundry and divers opinions have beene conceived from time to time, as in a doubtfull matter. Some derive Hibernia from Hibernio tempore, that is, from the Winter season; others from Hiberus a Spaniard; and some againe from the river Iberus: the author of the booke entituled Eulogium, from Duke Irinalph: Possellus, a fancifull man, when he read Pomponius Mela publikely in Paris, because hee would seeme to have a reach beyond other men, fetcheth the originall thereof from the Hebrewes: so that Irin should bee as much as Jurin, that is, the Jewes land: The Jewes, forsooth saith he, being most wise Sages, and learned Philosophers, knowing by their learning that the Empire of the world should be settled in the strongest Angle, which lieth west, seized upon those parts, and Ireland with the first: The Syrians also and Tyrians, to lay the foundation of their future Empire, endeavoured all they could to inhabit those Regions. Pardon me I pray you if I dare not subscribe hereto, no nor give my consent to that opinion most received, as touching the winter season aforesaid: although I have read, that in this Iland the aire upon every winde is cold and winterlike. As for Hibernia, Juverna, and Ouernia, they came doubtlesse from IERNIA, spoken of by Orpheus and Aristotle: and the same Ierna, as also Iris, Tuerdon, and Ireland, from Erin, the tearme that the inhabitants use. From this Erin therefore, a word proper unto the nation, the originall must be deduced. Here I, with those great Philosophers, inter, that is, hold off and suspend my judgement: neither know I what to divine and ground my conjecture upon, unlesse peradventure that name may come from Hiere, an Irish word, which with them signifieth the West, or a Western coast; whence Erin may seeme to bee derived, as one would say, a Western countrey. Of this opinion have I been a good while since, induced thereto with my owne conceit and flattering conjecture, both because it lieth furthest Westward of any region in all Europe (as being no more than twelve degrees distant from the utmost West point) as also for that the river running in the most remote West part of this Iland, is in Ptolomee called IERNUS, like as the Promontorie or Cape bearing out farthest West in Spaine (from whence our Irish-men came) is named by Strabo IERNES, and as the next river unto it, which also is most West of all the rivers in Spaine, is called by Mela IERNA. Moreover, by reason of the Western situation Spaine is named Hesperia, and that West Cape in Affrick, Hesperium cornu.

cornu, yea and even in Germanie these countries, Westrich, Westphalen, &c. have A their denomination from that position and site: so that it is no marvaile if Ireland were tearmed Erin of the Western situation. Besides, these names of Ireland which I have spoken of, the Irish Bards or Poets have usually taken up in their ballads these tearmes, Tirvolas, Toiidanan, and Banno, as the most ancient names of this Iland, but upon what reason I wot not, unlesse Bannow were that Bannomanna which Plinie mentioneth out of Timaeus, whiles his pen coasteth along the outmost fides and skirts of Europe, and the shore of the Northren Ocean on the left hand from Scythia, even as farre as Cadis in Spaine. For what countrey that same Bannomanna should bee, the Geographers have not yet found out But Biaun in Irish signifieth Sacred or Holy, and verily Festus Avienus calleth Ireland SACRAM INSULAM, that is, The holy Iland, in that little booke intituled ORÆ MARITIMÆ, that is, The Sea coast, which he compiled out of most ancient Geographers: namely, Hecataeus of Mileum, Hellanicus of Lesbos, Phileas of Athens, Caryandaeus, Pausymachus of Samos, Damasius, Eusemon, and others. But I will write downe his verses: for when he had spoken of the Ilands Ostryades, thus he versifieth:

*Ast hinc duobus in SACRAM, sic insulam
Dixere prisca, solibus cursus raris est.
Hac inter undas multum cespitem jactis,
Eamque latè gens Hibernorum colit.
Propinqua rursus insula Albionum patet.*

But to the SACRED Isle (for so They us'd to call it long agoe)
From hence a course who so desires,
Just two dayes sailing it requires.
Much turfe it casts the waves among,
And Irish dwell therein along.
Now very neere to it againe,
The Albions Isle is kened plaine.

Ogygia. In his book De macula in Luna, that is, Of the spot in the Moone.

Isle Cerne.

Hibernia called Scotia.

The state of Ireland.

If that O GYGIA, which Plutarch placed on the West side of our Britaine were not ivap, but Imap, not a vaine dream, but a matter in truth, hee may seeme by that name plainly to point at Ireland, although the reports that he so sadly telleth of it, be meer poeticall fictions & Milesian toies. Neither can any man readily tell, why they called it Ogygia; unlesse haply of the antiquitie: For the Grecians tearmed nothing by the name of Ogygia but that which was very ancient. And Robert Constantine seemeth to have shot wide all the world over, when he affirmeth that CERNE, mentioned in Lycophron, was our Ireland: for Lycophron himselfe, and Tzetzes that commenteth upon him, doe place Cerne toward the sunne rising: and all the best learned men thinke it to be Madagascar, situated as it were in another world, right under the Tropique of Capricorne, right over against Ethiopia. Thus much touching the names of Ireland, yet so, as we remember withall to take this by the way, that in these later times it was called also SCOTIA, that is, Scotland by Isidor and Bede, of the Scots who inhabited it: and that thence the name of Scotland, together with the Scots themselves, came into Britaine. But of this we have spoken already once before, and therefore have no cause to repeat here.

This Iland is stretched out from South to North not broader than it is long, as Sirabo hath recorded, but shaped in forme of a lentile, or an egge; nor of twentie dayes sailing, as Philemon in Psolomee hath set it downe: but according to the later writers, it taketh up three hundred miles and no more in length, and is scarcely one hundred and twentie miles broad. On the East side it hath England severed from it with a troublous and tempestuous sea, which is called the Irish sea: on the West the huge

A huge maine Western Ocean; on the North the Deucaledonian sea, and on the South the Vergivian sea worketh upon it.

The country, if you would heare Giraldus Cambrensis to speak, is uneven, full of hills, fosi, waterish, and boggie, wild and overgrowne with woods, lying open to the winds, and so full of meeres or lagoes, that a man may see ponds and standing waters even upon the mountaines. The aire (as Mela saith) is nothing good and favourable for ripening of corn: but the ground is so ranke of grasse, and the same not onely fresh and long, but sweet also withall, that the cattell may fill their bellies in a small piece of the day, and unlesse they be kept from grazing, and not suffered to feed long together, their bellies will burst. Hence B it is that they have such an infinite number of cattell, as being indeed the chiefe and principall wealth of the inhabitants, and many goodly flockes of sheepe, which they sheare twice a yeere, and make of their course wooll, rugges or shagge mantles, cad-dowes also or coverlets, which are vented into forraine countries. They have likewise excellent good horses (we tearme them Hobbies) which have not the same pace that other horses in their course, but a soft and round amble, setting one legge before another very finely. Their haukes also are right commendable, but these, as all other living creatures (besides men, women, and greyhounds) are smaller here than in England. Now as well the aire as the ground is excessive moist; whence it is that very many there be fore troubled with loosenesse, and rheumes, but strangers especially: yet for the staying of the same they have an Aqua vite of the best, which inflameth a great deale lesse, and dryeth much more than ours. Whereas Giraldus writeth, that those which are borne here sicken never of any of the three kinds of feavers, it is daily found by experience to be false. As for the land it selfe (that I may use the testimonie here of the said Giraldus) it is of all countries most temperate; neither doth any frying heat of Cancer drive folke to seeke shade, nor chilling cold of Capricorne call them in to the fire: but all times in manner, by reason of the pleasantnesse and tempered disposition of the aire, have a gentle kinde of warmth.

Of Bees there are such numbers, that they bee found not onely in hives, but also within the bodies of trees, and holes of the earth. Likewise it hath vines, but more D for shade, than for any fruit they yeeld. For no sooner is the sunne passed out of Leo, but cold blasts here in this our climat are wont presently to follow, and in Autumne the after-noonne heats are lesse effectuall and shorter, both here and in our Britaine, than to give the full and kinde ripening unto Grapes. Besides this, there is no snake in this countrey, nor any venomous thing whatsoever: howbeit much noisance they have every where by wolves. And that I may speake all at a word, whether a man respect the fertilitie of the soil, or the commodiousnesse of sea and havens, or the inhabitants themselves, who are stout, hardie, warlike, wittie, proper men of bodie, and goodly feature, of a wondrous soft skin, by reason also of the tendernesse of muscles passing nimble; the Iland aboundeth in so many blessings, that Giraldus said E not without just cause, That nature had cast into this western kingdome of Zephirus, a more gracious eye than ordinarie. Now that otherwhiles there goeth of it an ill name, it is for that the inhabitants are in some places wilde and very uncivil, who in a marvellous contrarietie of nature, both love idlenesse, and withall hate quietnesse: who also are immoderately given to fleshly lust, and that over soone. For among the wildest sort they bestow their maidens in marriage, as ripe and readie for husbands, when they be once ten or twelve yeeres of age. Neither will they by any meanes stay for a competent maturitie of yeeres, a thing observed in all other countries. But as touching the manners and qualities of the Irish nation, I will discourse more at large in the end of this booke. And now, if it please you, give Ireland the hearing, whiles she speaketh of her selfe and her commodities, in these verses of that most learned man Hadrianus Junius.

*Illa ego sum Graiis olim glacialis Ierne
Diisa, & Iasonis puppis bene cognita nautis:
Qua Tariffiacopropior se tingere soles
Ffff*

Flumine

Giraldus Cambrensis in Topographia Hibernia.

Cattell.

Irish mantles and rugges. Horses called Hobbies, Haukes.

*Diseases. * Uskebah.*

Why grapes are not ripe in Britaine.

*Flumine conspicio, Cauro subiecta procaci :
Cui Deus, & melior rerum nascentium origo
Ius commune dedit cum Creta altrice tonantis,
Noxia ne nostris diffundant sibila in oris
Terrifica creti tabo Phorcynidos angues :
Et forte illati compressis faucibus aëris
Viroso pariter vitam cum sanguine ponant.
En ego cum regni scepro, Mavoria bello
Peiora, & horriferas hominum, nil fingo, figuras,
Qui cursu alipedes norint præverere cervos,
Dedico, piscososque lacus, volucrumque paludes
Omnigenum lustris fœtas, stannique fodinas,
Et puræ argenti venas, quas terra repositis
Visceribus manes imos visura recludit.*

I am that frozen Isle, which Greekes once did Ierne call,
Well knowne to Argo Jasons ship, and to her sailers all.
Which subiect unto Caurus curst have sunne more neer in fight,
When in Tartessus floud he sets and seemes to drench his light.
Whom God and better Nature hath secured from this feare
(A gift imparted eke to Crete which Jupiter did reare)
That snakes of grim Medusa's blood so filthie that were bred,
Should dare in these my coasts to hisse, and hurtfull venom spread.
And say, that some by chance there were brought thither of that brood, Throtled anon they lose at once their life with poison'd blood.
Lo here with regall scepter I present most martiall mindes,
And dreadfull shapes (I fable not) of men who harts and hinds
So swift of foot in running can out-strip and leave behind.
With fishfull lakes besides and fennes, where fowles of everie kinde
Their eeries have and harbours safe: moreover Delfes of tin, Rich Mines likewise of silver pure, which wondrous farre within
The earth hath kept, whose bowels now digg'd up for men to prie,
As if she meant even hell to see, she shew's them to the eye.

If that be true which the Irish Historiographers record, this Island was not without cause by Plutarch tearmed Ogygia, that is, very ancient. For they fetch the beginning of their histories from the most profound and remote records of antiquitie, so that in comparision of them, the antientnes of all other nations is but novelty, and, as it were, a matter of yesterday. They write that one Casaria Noah his Niece, inhabited it before Noahs flood: Then that Bartholomæus a Scythian came hither about three hundred yeeres after the said Noahs flood, and fought right doughtie battels with giants: That many yeeres after Nemethus a Scythian arrived here, and forthwith was cast out by the Giants: After this, that Dela with certaine Grecians seized upon this Island; and soone after, that Gaothel with Scota his wife, daughter to Pharaoh King of Egypt landed here, and nominated after his wives name the Island Scotia, and according to his owne name the language Gaothela; and that, about the time of the Israelites departure out of Egypt. And the British historie reporteth how some few ages after, Hibernus and Hermion (Ever and Erimon the Irish writers terme them) the sonnes of Milefius King of Spaine, by the sufferance of Gurguntius King of the Britans, planted colonies in this countrey, after it had bene dispeopled by a pestilence. My purpose is not either to averre these reports for true, nor yet to refuse them: In such things as these let Antiquitie bee pardonable, and enjoy a prerogative.

Surely, as I doubt not but that this Island became inhabited even of old time, when as man-kinde was spread over all quarters of the world: so it is evident, that the first inhabitants thereof passed thither out of our Britaine: For (to say nothing of an infinite number of British words in the Irish tongue, together with the ancient

Ireland why called Ogygia.

A ancient names which favour of a British originall); the natures of the people, and their fashions, as Tacitus saith, differ not much from Britain: of all ancient writers it is called A British Island: Diodorus Siculus termed Irin a part of Britaine: and Ptolomee named the same BRITANNIA PARVA, that is, little Britaine, as you may see, if you list to compare his Geographickes with his book of Great Construction. And the Epitome of Sirabo calleth the inhabitants in plaine words, BRITANS: the old Geographers also named it The Britans Island: yea and Festus Avenius sheweth this out of Dionysius Afer, when he treateth of British Islands, in these verses.

Britans the first inhabitants of Ireland.
Little Britain.

*Eminus hic alia gelidi prope flabra Aquilonis Exuperant undas, & vasta cacumina tollunt,
Hæ numero gemina, pingues sola, cespitis ampli,
Conditur occidui quæ Rhæni gurgitis unda,
Dira Britannorum sustentant agmina terris.*

Here other Islands neere unto the chilling North winds blast,
The waves of sea surmount aloofe, and shew their mountaines vast,
In number twaine, their foile is far, their ground both large and wide
What way the Western Rhene his gulfes and waters deepe doth hide:
These Lands fierce Britan troupes maintaine, and thereon they abide.

C Neither is there any other countrey, out of which by reason of the vicinitie they might passe over more commodiously into Ireland than out of Britaine: from whence there is the like passage thither, in respect of the space of sea betweene, as is out of France into Britaine. But afterwards, when the Romanes had enlarged their Empire every way, many there were no doubt who out of Spaine, Gaule, and Britaine withdrew themselves hither, that they might shake off that intolerable yoke of the Romans slavery: Neither do some otherwise understand these words of Tacitus: Ireland being situate in the middest betweene Spaine and Britanie, lying also very nighly for the French sea, would aptly have united, to the great use & advantage of the one and the other, the strongest members of the Empire together: the landing places and ports whereof, by intercourse of trafficke, were better known than those of Britain. And albeit Julius Agricola also kept with him a pettie King or Prince of Ireland, who was driven thence by occasion of civill dissention, that hee might have the more advantageous opportunitie thereby to invade the Island, which he thought would be subdued and held with a legion, and a small power of aide forces; and was perswaded withall, that the same would availle much for the affaires of Britaine, in case the Roman forces were planted everie where, and hope of libertie banished, as it were, farre out of sight: yet wee read not that the Romans gave any attempt that way. Notwithstanding some are verily perswaded that they assaied the conquest of it, and doe gather the same hardly out of this place of Juvenal.

*Arma quid ultra
Littora Juvæna promovimus, & modò captas Orcadas, & minimâ continens nocte Britannos?*

Why warred we past Irish coasts, and the Oxknæ lately wonne,
Beyond the Britans eke that have least night and longest Sunne?

Yet the Panegyricall oration pronounced before Constantinus the Emperour, implieth that Ireland was under his government: Britaine (saith he) is so recovered, that even those nations also which join upon the coasts of the same Island, are become subiect and obedient unto your command. Also we find written in the Chronicles of later historians, that Ireland, together with Britain and Thule, at the division of the Empire fell unto Constantine, the sonne of Constantine the Great. And that very fond fable of Casaria Noahs Niece, carrieth before it the name of Cæsars, so as that therein may seeme covertly couched the coming of some Cæsar into Ireland. Howbeit I can hardly Cæsarea.

Romane Conquests.

perswade my selfe to beleeve, that this country at any time became subject to the Romans. But a blessed and happie turne had it beene for Ireland, if it had at any time beene under their subjection: surely, it had then beene reduced from barbarisme to civilitie. For wheresoever the Romans were victors, they brought them whom they conquered to civilitie: neither verily in any place else throughout Europe was there any civilitie, learning, and elegance, but where they ruled. And very inconsiderately also they may seeme to have neglected this Island. For from hence (to the plague and spoile of Britaine) brake out most dangerous enemies: which Augustus seemeth to have foreseene, when he tooke so small care of Britaine, for the danger which hee prefaged to hover and approach from the nations round about adjoyning. But when the Roman Empire began now to decay, the nation of the Scots or Scythians (for, in times past, as Sirabo writeth, all people westward were termed Celto-Scythæ) grew mightie in Ireland, and began to be renowned. Furthermore, under the Emperours Honorius and Arcadius it was inhabited by the Scottish nations, as Orosius hath written. Whereupon Claudian living in the same age, wrote thus:

Scotorum cumulos flevit glacialis Ierne.
Yce-frozen Ireland wept amaine,
To see the Scots on heaps lye flaine.

And in another place,

Totam cum Scotus Hibernem
Movit
What time as Scots did make,
All Ireland armes to take.

Irishmen out of Spaine.
In other copies Tholanus.

For from hence it was that the Scots made their forcible invasions into Britaine, and hither they were otherwhiles with great losses and overthrowes repulled. But whence they came into Ireland, Ninnius a disciple of Evodugus, an author of good antiquitie, shall enforme you by his own words; who lived, as himselfe wimeth, in the yeere 830. under Anaraugh King of Anglesey and Guineib, or North-Wales. For after he had related, that in the third age of the world the Britans came into Britain, and in the fourth age, the Scythians or Scots into Ireland, hee proceedeth thus: Last of all came the Scots, from the parts of Spain into Ireland. But the first that arrived there, was Paribolanus, with a thousand men and women together, and they grew after to be four thousand: and there fell a mortalitie among them, so that in one week they all died, and there remained of them not so much as one alive. The second that landed in Ireland was one Nemeth, the son of Aguomenes, who, by report, sailed upon the sea one yeere and an halfe; and afterward, when he had suffered shipwrack, fell with an haven in Ireland, and he returned into Spain. And after that came three sonnes of a Spanisb knight, with thirrie Ciules with them, and in every Ciule thirrie wives; and they continued there for the space of one yeere. Last of all came Elam-Hoior, and dwelt there with all his progenie and generation, even to this day. With this Ninnius accordeth Henry of Huntingdon. The Britans (saith he) in the third age of the world came into Britain, and the Scots in the fourth into Ireland.

And how ever these reports be not most certaine, yet sure it is that they came out of Spaine into Ireland: and part of them departing thence, came and added a third nation unto the Britans & Picts in Britaine. The received opinion of the Irish is agreeable hereunto, for they most willingly acknowledge themselves to be an off-spring of the Spaniards. Neither verily can it bee a marvaile, that a number of them withdrew themselves into Ireland out of the North part of Spaine, which, as Sirabo writeth, is most barren, and wherein men live most miserably. Out of those words of Ninnius a man may see, that those entries made of Paribolanus and Nemethus, which fabulously they fetch so farre off, out of most profound and remote antiquitie, are to be drawne backe unto later times. Neither is it needfull for me to note againe, that this Island was of the Scottish inhabitants called Scotia.

Nor

Not many yeeres after, these Scots in Ireland began to professe Christianitie, although they would needs appropriate unto themselves that historie out of Rufinus, concerning the conversion of the Hiberians in Asia, and Celestin Pope of Rome sent unto these Scots Palladius the Bishop. Whereupon Prosper Aquitanus writeth in this manner against Collator. Celestin delivered the Britans from the Pelagians heresie, when he secluded certain enemies of grace, who held their own native country, even from that unknown part of the Ocean: and having ordained a Bishop among the Scots, whiles he laboured to keep an Island of the Romans in the Catholike faith, he brought also a barbarous nation to be Christian. Yet Ninnius writeth, that Palladius being taken away by untimely death in Britaine, effected nothing: who also reporteth out of the Irish writers, that Christian religion was published and preached throughout Ireland by Saint Patrick. For he being a Britan borne, and that as some will in Cluidsale, allied also to Sir Martin of Tourain, and a disciple of Saint German, was appointed successour by Pope Celestin to Palladius deceased; who with so good successe taught and sowed the seed of Christian religion over all Ireland, that hee converted the greatest part by farre thereof unto Christ, and deserved the name of the Apostle of the Irish nation. Touching whom an ancient writer, Hiericus Antisiodorensis in his booke of Saint Germans miracles; For as much as (saith he) the glory of a Father appeareth bright in the governance of his owne sonnes, among many sons whom we beleeve S. German had in Christ, and Disciples in religion, it shall suffice by way of compendium brevitie to insert here the mention of one only, and the same of all others most famous: namely Patrick, as the whole course of his acts declareth, the peculiar Apostle of the Irish nation, wholly addicted for 18. yeeres unto his most holy discipline, out of the veins of so worthie a fountaine drew no mean knowledge & learning in the heavenly scriptures. Whom also that most divine and godly Bishop, considering to be in religion magnanimous, in vertues excellent, and in learning powerfull: and deeming it meere folly, that so strong and able an husbandman should live idle in the tillage and ordering of the Lords cornfield, directed him unto holy Celestin Pope of Rome, by Segetius a Priest of his, who should give testimonie unto the Apostolicall See, of Ecclesiasticall honestie in the behalfe of that right excellent man. Being therefore approved with the judgment, supported with the authority, and lastly strengthened with the blessing of him, he made a voiage into Ireland, and being peculiarly appointed an Apostle of that nation, as he then lightened them with his doctrine & miracles, so now also and for ever adorneth them with wonderful priviledges of his Apostleship. The Irish scholars of Patrick profited so notably in Christianitie, that in the age next following, Ireland was termed Sanctorum patria; that is, The native country of Saints; and the Scottish Monks in Ireland and Britaine highly excelled for their holinesse and learning, yea and sent out whole flocks of most devout men into all parts of Europe, who were the first founders of Luxeuil Abbey in Burgundie, of Bobie Abbey in Italy, of Wirzburge Abbey in Francland, of St. Gallus in Sweitzerland, of Malmesburie, Lindisfarn, and of many other Monasteries in Britaine. For out of Ireland came Celius Sedulius a Priest, Columba, Columbane, Colman, Aidan, Gallus, Kiwan, Maidulph, Brendan, and many other celebrated for their holy life and learning. Of these Monks is that Hieric above named of Auxerre to be understood, when he writeth thus to the Emperour Charles the Bald: what should I speake of Ireland, which setting light by the dangers of sea, fluteth all of it well neere with whole flocks of Philosophers unto our shores? of whom so many as are more skilfull and learned than the rest, doe voluntarily banish themselves, to attend dully upon the most wise Salomon, and be at his command.

This Monasticall profession, although but then newly come up, was farre different in those daies from that of our time. They desired to be that indeed which they were named to be: they were farre from colourable dealing or dissembling: Erred they in any thing: it was through simplicitie, not through lewdnesse, much lesse of wilfull obstinacie. As for wealth and these worldly things, they so highly contemned them, that they did not only not seeke after, but also refused the same, though they were offered unto them descended by inheritance. For a notable apophthegme

Ffff 3

was

Anno Christi
431.
Palladius.
Vincent. l. 9. c. 7

Monks of Ireland holy men
and learned.

was that of Columban (a Monke of Ireland) who, as the Abbat Walafride writeth, A when Sigebert King of the Franckners dealt very earnestly with him, and that by way of many large and faire promises, that he should not depart out of his kingdome, answered him after the same sort, as Eusebius hath reported of Thaddæus, namely, That is be- came not them to embrace other mens riches, who for Christi's sake had forsaken their own. And the Bishops of Britain seemed no lesse to have despised riches, seeing they were so poore, that they had nothing of their owne. For, as we read in Sulpitius Severus, three Bishops of Britaine, in the Councell holden at Rimine, for want of their owne lived of the publick charges. The English Saxons also in that age conflowed and resorted from all parts into Ireland, as it were to the mart of good learning: and hence it is B that we read so often in our writers, concerning holy men thus, Such a one was sent over into Ireland, for to be trained up in learning: and in the life of Sulgen, who flourished 600. yeeres agoe.

Contempe of riches,

*Exemplo patrum commotus, amore legendi,
Ivit ad Hibernos, sophia, mirabile, claros.*

The fathers old he following, for love to read good works,
Went unto Irish men, who were (O wonder) famous Clarke.

English Saxons
seeme to have had their letters and writ-ting from the Irish.

And from thence it may seeme our forefathers the ancient English learned the C manner of framing their letters, and of writing; considering that they used the selfe same character, which the Irish commonly use at this day.

And no cause have wee to marvaile that Ireland, which now for the most part is rude, halfe barbarous, and altogether void of any polite and exquisite literature, was full of so devout, godly, & good wits in that age, wherein good letters throughout all Christendome lay neglected and halfe buried, seeing that the divine providence of that most gracious and almightie ruler of the world, soweth the seeds and bringeth forth the plants of sanctitie and good arts, one whiles in one nation and o- D ther whiles in another, as it were in garden beds and borders, and that in sundry ages: which being removed and translated hither and thither, may by a new growth come up one under another, prosper, and bee preserved to his owne glory, and the good of mankind.

But the outrage of warres by little and little quenched these hot affections and studies of holinesse and good literature. For in the yeere 644. after Christs nativ- E tie, Egfrid King of Northumberland with fire and sword made spoile and havock of Ireland, a nation most friendly unto England; for which cause Bede chargeth him after a sort, in most grave and important tearmes. Afterward the Norwegians, under the leading of Turges their Captaine, spoiled and wasted the countrey in most lamentable manner for the space of 30. yeeres: But when he was once slaine by a train and ambush laid for him, the inhabitants fell upon the Norwegians, and made such a F bloodie massacre of them, that scarce any one survived to be a messenger of so great a slaughter. These Norwegians were no doubt those Normans, who, as Rheginus saith, in the time of Charles the great, setting upon Ireland, an Isle of the Scots, were by the Scots put to flight. After this the Oustmans, as one would say Esterlings, or Eastmen, came out of the sea-coasts of Germanie into Ireland; who having entred into certain Cities under the pretence of great trafficke, in a short space raised a most dangerous warre. About the very same time in manner, Eadgar that most puissant King of Eng- land, conquered also a great part of Ireland: For thus we read in a certaine Charter of his: Unto whom God of his gracious favour hath granted, together with the Empire of England, dominion over all the kingdomes of the Isles lying in the Ocean, with their most flour and fierce Kings, even as farre as to Norway, yea and to subdue under the English Empire, the greatest part of Ireland, with her most noble Citie Dublin.

After these tempestuous forraigne warres were alliaied, there followed a most grie- C vious storme of civill dissention at home, which made way for the English to con- quer Ireland. For Henrie the second King of England, taking occasion and opportu- nitie

Arts and picie fowed among nations in sundry ages.

Oustmanni, who haply are those that Tacitus nameth Aestiones, and Egiptus Aiffi.

A tunitie, by the privie dislikes, heart-burnings, and malicious emulations among the Irish Princes, grew into a serious deliberation with the Nobles of England, in the yeere of Salvation 1155. about the conquest of Ireland, for the behoof of his brother William of Anjou: But through the counsell of his mother Maud the Emperesse, this project was rejected unto another time. Howbeit not many yeeres betwene, Der- micus, the son of Murchard (Dermot Mac Morrog they call him) who reigned over the East part of Ireland, which in Latin is called Lagenia, and commonly Leinster, being for his tyrannie and lustfull leudnesse thrust out of his kingdome (for hee had ravished the wife of O Rorke, a pettie King of Meib) obtained aide and forces of Hen- rie the second King of England, to be restored into his kingdome againe: and made B a covenant with Richard Earle of Pembroke, surnamed Strongbow, of the house of Clare, that he for his part should aide him in the recovering of his Kingdome, and that himselfe would assure unto the Earle, together with his daughter Eva, the said Kingdome in succession after him. Hereupon the said Earle having forthwith muste- red up and raised an armie of Welsh and English together, and joined unto him to accompanie him in the warres, the Fitz-Giralds, Fitz-Stephans, and other Gentle- men out of England and Wales, restored his father in law Dermot into his former Kingdome againe: and within few yeeres gat by conquest so great a part of Ireland into his owne hands, that his power became now suspected to the King of England; C who by proclamation, and that with grievous menaces, recalled home the said Earle and his followers out of Ireland, and unless they obeyed without delay, pronounced them traitours, and their goods confiscate. Whereupon the Earle granted unto the King by covenant and writing, whatsoever he either inherited in right of his wife, or won with his sword, and as his tenant in vassallage received from him the Earldomes of Wexford, Offorie, Caterlogh, and Kildare, with certain Castles. Then King Henrie the second, having gathered a power together in the yeere of Christ 1172. failed over in- to Ireland, and obtained the Princely title of soveraigne rule of the Iland.

Dermot Mac Morrog.

Richard Strongbow.

*Henrie the second entred
Ireland.*

Girald. Cambri and a Manuscript in the hands of Baton Houth.

For the States of Ireland passed over unto him all their rule and power, namely, Rothericke O Conon Dun, that is, The Browne, Monarch of Ireland, Dermot Mac Carti King of Corke, Donald O Bren King of Limiricke, O Carell King of Uriel, Macshaglin King of Ophaly, O Rorke King of Meib, O Neale King of Ulster, with the rest of the Nobles and their people, and the same under their Charters sub- scribed, signed, delivered, and transmitted to Rome. Which was ratified and confir- med moreover by a Patent of Pope Hadrian, by a ring delivered unto him in token of his investiture, and also by the authoritie of certaine Provinciall Synods. This King Henrie afterward delivered up the Seigniorie of Ireland, into the hands of his sonne John; which conveyance Pope Urban confirmed by his Bull, and in testimonie of E his confirmation sent him a Coronet of Peacocks feathers broided and embroidered with gold. Whom, after hee was once established in his Kingdome, divers authors as- firme to have granted by his Charter or Patent, Ireland and England both unto the Church of Rome, to be held of it ever after in fee, and to have received it againe from the Church, as a Fendatarie: also to have bound his successours to pay three hundred Markes unto the Bishop of Rome: But that most worthie and famous Sir Thomas Moore, who tooke the Popes part even unto death, affirmeth this to be false: For hee writeth that the Romanists can shew no such grant; that they never demanded the foresaid money, and that the Kings of England never acknow- ledged it. But by his leave, as great a man as hee was, the case stood otherwise, as evi- dently appeareth by the Parliament Records, the credit whereof cannot bee im- pugned. For in an assembly of all the States of the Realme, in the reigne of Edward the third, the Lord Chancellour of England proposed and related, that the Pope would judiciously sue the King of England, as well for the Homage as the tribute, which was to be yeelded for England and Ireland, to the performance whereof King John in times past had obliged himselfe and his successours: and of this point which hee put to question, required their opinion. The Bishops desired to have a day by them selves for to consult about this matter: the Nobles likewise and the people or Com- munalitie

munaltie. The day after, they all met, and with one generall accord ordained and enacted: That forasmuch as neither King John, nor any other King whatsoever, could impose such servitude upon the Kingdome, but with the common consent and assent of a Parliament; which was not done: and whatsoever he had passed was against his oath at his coronation by him in expresse words religiously taken before God: Therefore in case the Pope should urge this matter, they were most readie, to the uttermost of their power, to resist him resolutely with their bodies and goods. They also who are skilfull in scanning and sifting everie pricke and tittle of the lawes, cry out with one voice, That the said Grant or Charter of King John was void in Law, by that clause and reservation in the end thereof; Saving unto us and our heires, all our Rights, Liberties, and Regalities. But B this may seeme beside my text.

Ever since King Johns time, the Kings of England were stiled Lords of Ireland, untill that King Henrie the eighth in the memorie of our fathers was in a Parliament of Ireland, by the States thereof declared King of Ireland, because the name of Lord seemed in the judgement of certaine seditious persons, nothing so sacred and full of majestie as the name of King.

This name and title of the Kingdome of Ireland were by the Popes authoritie (what time as Queene Marie in the yeere 1555. had by her Embassadours in the name of the Kingdom of England tendred obedience unto the Pope Paul the fourth) confirmed in these words. To the laud and glorie of almighty God, and his most glorious mother the Virgin Mary: to the honour also of the whole Court of heaven, and the exaltation of the Catholike faith, at the humble request and suite made unto us by King Philip and Queen Marie about this matter, wee, with the advice of our breithren, and of plenarie power Apostolicall by our Apostolicall authoritie, erect for ever Ireland to bee a Kingdome, and endow, dignifie, and exalt with the title, dignitie, honour, faculties, rights, ensignes, prerogatives, preferments, preeminencies royall, and such as other Realmes of Christians have, use, and enjoy, and may have, use, and enjoy for the times to come. C

And seeing that I have hapned upon those Noblemens names, who first of all English gave the attempt upon Ireland, and most valiantly subdued it under the imperial crowne of England, lest I might seeme upon envie to deprive both them and their D posteritie of this due and deserved glorie, I will set them downe here out of the Chancerie of Ireland, according as the title doth purport.

The names of them that came with Dermot Mac Morrog into Ireland.

Richard Strongbow Earle of Pembroke, who by Eve the daughter of Morrog the Irish pettie King aforesaid, had one only daughter, and she brought unto William Marshal the title of the Earldome of Pembroke, with faire lands in Ireland, and a goodly issue, five sonnes, who succeeded one another in a row, all childlesse: and as many daughters, which enriched their husbands, Hugh Bigod Earle of Norfolk, E Guarin Montchensey, Gilbert Clare Earle of Gloucester, William Ferrars Earle of Derby, and William Breose, with children, honours, and possessions.

Robert Fitz-Stephen.

Harvey de Mont-Marish.

Maurice Prendergest.

Robert Barr.

Meiler Meilerine.

Maurice Fitz-Girald.

Redmund nephew of Fitz-Stephen.

William Ferrand.

Miles de Cogan.

Richard de Cogan.

Gualter de Ridensford.

Gualter and

Alexander

{ sonnes of Maurice Fitz-Girald.

William

William Notte.

Robert Fitz-Bernard.

Hugh Lacie.

William Fitz-Aldelm.

William Maccarell.

Hunfrey Bohun.

Hugh de Gundevill.

Philip de Hasting.

Hugh Tirell.

David Walfh.

Robert Poer.

Osbert de Herloter.

William de Bendenges.

Adam de Gernez.

Philip de Breos.

Griffin, nephew of Fitz-Stephen.

Raulfe Fitz-Stephen.

Walter de Barry.

Philip Walfh.

Adam de Hereford.

To whom may be added out of Giraldus Cambrensis,

John Curcy.

Hugh Contilon.

Redmund Cantimore.

Redmund Fitz-Hugh.

Miles of S. Davids, and others.

The Government of the Kingdome of Ireland.

Ver since that Ireland became subject unto England, the Kings of England have sent over thither, to manage the state of the Realme, their Regents or Vice-gerents, whom they tearmed in those writings or letters Patents of theirs (whereby authoritie and jurisdiction is committed unto them) first, * Keepers of Ireland: then afterwards, according as it pleased them, Justices of Ireland, Lieutenants, and Deputies. Which authoritie and jurisdiction of theirs is very large, ample, and royall; whereby they have power to make warre, to conclude peace, to bestow all Magistracies and Offices, except a very few; to pardon all crimes, unlesse they be some of high treason, to dub Knights, &c. These letters Patents, when any one entreth upon this honourable place of government, are publickly read, and after a solemne oath taken in a set forme of words before the Chancellour, the sword is delivered into his hands, which is to be borne before him; he is placed in a chaire of estate, having standing by him the Chancellour of the Realme, those of the Privie Councell, the Peeres and Nobles of the kingdome, with a King of Armes, a Serjeant of Armes, and other Officers of State. And verily there is not (looke throughout all Christendome againe) any other Vice-Roy that commeth neerer unto the majestie of a King, whether you respect his jurisdiction and authoritie, or his traine, furniture and provision. There bee assistant unto him in counsell, the Lord Chancellour of the Realm, the Treasurer of the Kingdome, and others of the Earles, Bishops, Barons, and Judges, which are of the Privie Councell. For Ireland hath the very same degrees of States that England hath, namely, Earles, Barons, Knights, Esquires, &c.

The Vice-roys of Ireland.
* Custodes, or Wardens.

The States of Ireland.

The

The Courts of Justice, or Tribunals of Ireland.

Parliamentum
claus. anno 12.
The Tribunals
of Ireland.

The supreme Court of the Kingdome of Ireland is the Parliament, whichat the pleasure of the Kings of England is usually called by the Deputie, and by him dissolved: although in the reigne of King Edward the second, a Law was enacted, That every yeer there should be Parliaments holden in Ireland, which seemeth yet not to have been effected. There be likewise foure Tearmes kept, as in England, yeerely: and there are five Courts of Justice; The Star-chamber, the Chancerie, the Kings Bench, the common Pleas, and the Exchequer. There are also Justices of Assizes, of Nisi prius, and of Oyer and Determiner, according as in England: yea and Justices of Peace in every countie, for the keeping of peace. Moreover, the King hath his Serjeant at law, his Attorney Generall, his Sollicitour, &c.

Over and besides, in the more remote Provinces there be Governours to minister Justice; as a principall Commissioner in Connaught, and a President in Mounster: who have to assist them in Commission certaine Gentlemen and Lawyers, and yet every of them are directed by the Kings Lieutenant Deputie. As for the common lawes, Ireland is governed by the same that England hath. For we read in the Records of the Kingdome thus: King Henry the third, in the 12. yeere of his reigne, gave commandment to his Justice of Ireland, that calling together the Archbishop, Bishops, Barons, and Knights, he should cause there before them to be read the Charter of King John; which he caused to be read accordingly, and the Nobles of Ireland to be sworn, touching the observation of the lawes and customes of England, and that they should hold and keepe the same. Neverthelesse the meere Irish did not admit them, but retained their owne Brehon lawes and leud customes. And the Kings of England used a connivence therein upon some deepe consideration, not vouchsafing to communicate the benefit of the English lawes, but upon especiall grace to especiall families or sects; namely, the O Neales, O Conors, O Brien, O Maloghblins, and Mac Murrough, which were reputed of the blood roiall among them. The Parliamentary or Statute lawes also of England being transmitted, were usually in force in Ireland unto the time of K. Henrie the seventh. For in the tenth yeere of his reign, those were ratified & confirmed by authoritie of Parliament in Ireland, in the time of Sir Edw. Poinings government, but ever since they have had their Statutes enacted in their owne Parliaments. Besides these civill Magistrates, they have also one militarie officer, named the Mareschal, who standeth here in great stead, to restrain as well the insolencie of souldiers, as of rebels, who otherwhiles commit many & great insolencies. This office the Barons de Morley of England bare in times past by inheritance, as appeareth by Records: for King John gave it to bee held by right of inheritance, in these very expresse words, We have given and granted unto John Mareschal for his homage and service, our Mareschalship of Ireland, with all appurtenances. We have given also unto him for his homage and service, the Cantred in which standeth the towne of Kilbunny, to have and to hold unto him and his heires of us and our heires. From whom it descended in the right line to the Barons of Morley. This Mareschal hath under him his Provost Marshall, and sometime more than one, according to the occasions and troubles of the time, who exercise their authoritie by limitation under the great seale of Ireland, with instructions. But these, and such like matters, I will leave to the curious diligence of others. Touching the order of justice and government among those more uncivill and wilde Irish, I will write somewhat in place convenient, when I shall treat of their manners.

THE DIVISION OF IRELAND.

Division of Ireland.

IRELAND, according to the maners of the inhabitants, is divided into two parts: for they that refuse to be under lawes, and do live without civillie, are termed the Irishbry, and commonly the wild Irishb; but such as being more civill do reverence the authoritie of lawes, and are willing to appeare in Court, and judicially to be tried, are named Englishb Irishb.

A Irishb, and their country goeth under the tearm of The English Pale, because the first Englishmen that came thither did empale for themselves certaine limits in the East part of the Iland, and that which was most fruitfull: Within which there bee even at this day, those also that live uncivillly enough, and are not very obedient unto the lawes: like as others without the pale are as courteous and civill as a man would desire. But if we look into higher times, according to the situation of the country, or the number rather of governors in old time, it containeth five portions (for it was sometimes a Pentarchie) namely, Mounster Southward: Leinster Eastward: Connacht in the West: Ulster in the North: and Meth, well neere in the very middest.

In Mounster are these Counties,

{ Kerry.
Desmond.
Cork.
Waterford.
Limericke.
Tipperary, with the county of holy Crosse
in Tipperarie.

In Leinster be these Counties,

{ Kilkenny.
Caserlough.
Queenes County.
Kings Countie.
Kildare.
Wexford.
Dublin.

In Meth are these Counties, { East Meath.
West Meath.
Longford.

In Connaught are these Counties,

{ Clare
Galloway.
Majo.
Slego.
Leitrim.
Roscoman.

In Ulster be these Counties,

{ Louth.
Cauon.
Fermanagh.
Monaghan.
Armagh.
Down.
Antrim.
London-Derry.
Tir-Oen.
Tir-Conell, or Donegall.

The Ecclesiasticall State of Ireland was ordered anciently by Bishops, whom either the Archbishop of Canterburie consecrated, or they themselves one another. But in the yeere 1152. as we read in Philip Flatesburie, Christianus Bishop of Lismore Legate of all Ireland, held a most frequent and honourable Councell at Mell, whereat were present the Bishops, Abbats, Kings, Captaines, and Elders of Ireland. In which, by authoritie Apostolicall, and by the counsell of Cardinals, with the consent of Bishops, Abbats, and others, there in Confitorie he ordained foure Archbishopricks in Ireland, Armagh, Dublin, Cashile, and Tuem or Toam.

The Bishopricks which were Diocessans under these, seeing that now some of them are by the covetous iniquitie of the times abolished, others confounded, and conjoined, others againe translated another way, I am disposed here to put downe (according as they were in old time) out of an ancient Roman PROVINCIAL, faithfully exemplified out of the originall.

Under

Ecclesiasticall Jurisdiction.

Under the Arch-Bishop of Ar-magh, Primate of all Ireland, are the Bishops of

Meath, or — Elnamirand.
Dune, alias — Dundalethglas.
Cblacor, otherwise
— Lugundun.
Conner.
Ardachad.
Rathbor.
Rathbluc.
Daln-Liquir.
Dearrib or Derrie.
Cloemacnois.
Dromor.
Brefem.

To the Archbishop of Dublin are subject the Bishops of Glendelach.

Fern.
Offory, alias — De Canic.
Lechlin.
Kil-dare or Dage.

Under the Archbishop of Caffile are the Bishops
of

Láonie, Or — De Kendal-
nan.
Limric.
The Isle Gashay.
Cellumabrab.
Melise or of Emileth.
Rofsi, alias Rosfree.
Waterford, alias — De Baltifordian.
Lismore.
Clon, alias — De Clua-
nan.
Corcage, that is, Cork.
De Rosaliber.
Ardeferi, or Kerry.

Unto the Archbishop of Tuam or Toam are subject the Bishops
of

Duac, alias — Kilmacdoo.
Mage.
Enachdun.
De Celaia.
De Roscommon.
Clonsferi.
Achad, or Achonry
Lade or Killaleh.
De Conary.
De Kilmunduach.
Elphin.

MOMONIA, or MOUNSTER.

MOMONIA, in Irish Mown, and in ordinarie construction of speech woun, in English Mounster, lieth Southward open to the Vergivian sea; separated in some place from Connaghi by the river Siney or Shanon, and elsewhere from Lemster by the river Neor. In times past it was divided into many parts, as Towoun, that is, North Mounster, Deswoun, that is, South Mounster; Hier woun, that is, West Mounster; Mean woun, that is, Middle Mounster; and Ur woun, that is, The Front of Mounster: but at this day into two parts, that is, into West Mounster, and South Mounster. In the West Mounster there dwelt in old time the LUCENI, the VELABRI, and UTERINI: in the South, the ODIÆ or VODIÆ, and the CORI ONDI: but at this day it is distinguished into seven Counties, Kerry, Desmund, Corke, Limiric, Tipperary, Holy Croffe, and Waterford.

Where Ireland lieth out most Westward, and treanding toward the Cantabrian Ocean, looketh as farre off South-west, with a large interpace, to Gallia in Spaine, there inhabited in old time the VELABRI and LUCENI, as Orosius writeth. The LUCENI of Ireland (who may seeme to have had their name and beginning from the LUCENII of Gallia, in the opposite coast of Spaine, and of whose name some reliques still remain in the Barony of Lyxnaw) were seated as I suppose in the Countie of Kerry, and in Conoglogh hard by upon the bank of the river Shanon.

Luceni.

THE

THE COUNTIE OF KERRY.

The Countie of Kerry neere unto the mouth of Shanon, runneth forth like a little tongue into the sea; beaten on with barking billowes on both sides: a country mounting aloft with woody wild, and solitary mountaines; between which there lye many vallies, in some places garnished with corn-fields, in others beset also thicke with woods. This is reputed a Countie Palatine, and the Earles of Desmund had in it the dignitie and priviledges of a Count-Palatine, and that by the bountifull gift of K. Edward the third; who granted unto them all Regall liberties, except four pleas, namely, of Burning, Rape, Forfall, and Treasure trove, with the profit growing de Croccis, reserved for the Kings of England. But through the licentious iniquitie of the men, who neither would nor knew how to use this liberie, it became of late a very sinke of mischiefs, and a common receptacle for rebels. In the entrance into this countie there is a territorie called Clan-Moris, of one Moris descended from the stocke of Raimund le Grosse, whose heires successively were called the Barons of Lixnaw. A little river now namelesse (which the situation in some fort implieth to be Dun in Ptolomee) cutteth through the midst of this, running by Trayle, a small towne, laid now in manner desolate, (where the Earles of Desmund had an house.) Hard by standeth Ardar, where the Bishop called of Ardeferi, a poore one God wor, hath his poore See. In the farthest point well neere of this, where it maketh a promontorie, there sheweth it selfe on the one side Dingle, a commodious port, on the other side Smerwic Sound a road for ships, for so they teame it short in steed of S. Mary-wic: at which of late, when Girald Earle of Desmund, a man notorious for deep treacherie to his Prince and countrey, wickedly wasted Mounster with continuall harrying and raising booties out of the fields, there arrived certaine companies of Italians and Spaniards, sent under-hand to aide him from Pope Gregorie the thirteenth, and the King of Spaine; who here fortifying a place which they called Fort del Ore, made their bragging bravadoes, and thundred out many a terrible threat. But the most noble and martiall Baron, Arthur Lord Grey, Lord Deputie, with his very comming and first onset that he made upon them, decided the matter, and ended the quarrell. For immediately they yeilded themselves, and the most part of them were put to the sword, which was in policie thought the wisest and safest course, considering in what ticklish tearmes the state of this Realme then stood, and how the rebels in every place were up in armes. And the Earle of Desmund himselfe at length in his fearefull flight being forced to take the woods hard by for his refuge, was soone after in a poore cottage by a souldier or two rushing in upon him, first wounded, and afterwards being knowne, cut shorter by the head, and so paid worthily for his perfidious treason, and the wasting of his countrey.

Here some man happily would thinke it not correspondent to the gravity of this worke, if I should but relate what a ridiculous opinion hath fully possessed the minds of a number of the Irishry, yea and perswaded them verily to beleve that he who in that barbarous Pharaoh and out cry of the Souldiers, which with great straining of their voice they use to set up when they joine battaile, dorth not cry and hout as the rest doe, is suddenly caught up from the ground, and carried as it were flying in the aire, into these desert vallies, out of any country of Ireland whatsoever: where he eateth grasse, lappeth water, knoweth not in what state he is, good or bad, hath some use of reason but not of speech, but shall be caught at length with the help of hounds and the hunters, and brought home to their owne homes.

Clan-Moris.

The river Dur.

Bishoprick of Ardar.

Dingle.

Smerwic.

Arthur Baron.
Grey.

1583.

A ridiculous conceit.

Gggg

DES-

DESMONIA, or DESMOND.

Velabrie.

Beneath those ancient LUCENI lieth DESMOND, stretched out farre and wide toward the South, called in Irish Desmown, in Latine Desmonia, inhabited in ancient times by the VELABRI and IBERNI, which in some copies are written U YERNI. As for these VELABRI, they may seeme so named of AZER, that is, salt water washes, for that they dwelt upon such Friths, divided one from another by many and those notable armes of the sea running betweene: whence also the Ariabri and Caniabri in Spaine had their denomination. Among these armes of the sea, three promontories, beside Kerry aforesaid, with crooked and winding shoares run out into the Southwest, and those the inhabitants termed in old time Hierwoun, that is, west-Mounster. The first of them betwene Dingle bay and the river Mair, is named Clan-Car, and hath a castle built at Dunkeran by the Carews of England. In this dwelt Donald Mac Cury More, a Lord of the Irish blood, who in the yeere 1566. resigned up unto Queen Elizabeth his possessions and lands, and tooke them againe of her, to hold the same after the English manner by fee, doing homage and fealtie. And at the same time he was created Baron of Valentia (an Island adjoining) and Earle of Clan-car. A man in this tract of great name and power, a most deadly foe in times past of the Fitz-Giralds, who disseized his ancestours, Kings (as hee stiffly avoucheth) of Desmond, of their ancient seat and habitation. But long enjoied not hee this honour: and having but one onely daughter legitimate, he matched her in marriage with Florence Mac Cury, and departed out of this life an aged man.

1565.
Barons of Valentia.
Earle Clan-Car.

Beare.
O'Swiliuane.

The second promontorie enclosed within two baies, Maire and Bantre, is named Beare, standing for the most part upon hungry gravell, and a leane stony soile: In which live O'Swiliuane Beare, and O'Swiliuane Bantre, descended both of one and the same stocke, men of great nobility in their country.

O Mahon.

Notum Promontorium.
The river Iernus.

Earles of Desmond.

The third is called Eraugh, lying betweene Bantre and Balimore or Baltimore, a Bay or Creeke passing well knowne by reason of the abundance of Herrings taken there: whereunto resorteth every yeere a great fleet of Spaniards and Portugals, even in the mids of winter, to fish for Cods. In this the O Mahons by the beneficial gift of M. Carew received faire lands and Lordships. This is that Ptolomee calleth NOTIUM, that is, the South-Promontorie, at this day named Missen-head, under which (as we may read in him) the river IERNUS is disgorged into the Ocean. But what name the said river now hath, in so great obscurity I hardly dare divine, unlesse it be that which they call Maire, and runneth hard under Dunkeran aforesaid. Neither wot I how to ghesse at those people, whom the same Ptolomee placeth upon these promontories, seeing that according to the varietie of copies they have sundry names, as IBERNI, OUTERNI, IBERI, and IVERNI, unlesse peradventure, like as their neighbours the LUCENI and CONCANNI did, they sitted hither from among the Iberi of Spaine. Well, this name of Desmond in the foregoing ages stretched farre and wide in this tract, even from the sea unto the river Shannon, and was called also South-Mounster. The Fitz-Giralds descended out of the house of Kildare, having subdued the Irish, became Lords here of very large and goodly possessions: and of them Maurice Fitz-Thomas (unto whom T. Carew heire unto the Seigniory of Desmond, had before passed away his right of Desmond) was in the third yeere of King Edward the third created the first Earle of Desmond. Among whose posterity many there were, great men for their valour and wealth, whose credit also and reputation reached farre. But a bad name there went, and still doth, of James; who having excluded his nephew from the inheritance, entred himselfe by force upon it, and imposed upon the people those most grievous tributes of Coyne, Livery, Cocherings, Bonaghry, &c. for the maintenance of Galloglasses and Souldiers to spoile and harry the country. Which when his sonne Thomas exacted and gathered of the poore people, hee was by the commandement of John Tiptoft Deputy Lievtenant beheaded beheaded in the yeere 1467. and so suffered due punishment for his owne and his fathers wickednesse. Howbeit when his children were restored againe, in their offspring this honour continued, and descended in right of inheritance unto Girald that rebell, whom erewhile I named, who wilfully overthrew a most noble and potent family. And when hee was attainted by Parliamentary authority, Desmond was adjudged and annexed to the Crowne land, reduced into the ranke of counties, and a Sheriffe was ordained to governe it from yeere to yeere. Neverthelesse in the last rebellion the rebels erected a titularie Earle; and against him Queene Elizabeth granted the title of Earle of Desmond unto James Fitz-Girald, sonne to the foresaid rebell, who shortly after died issuelesse in the yeere 1601. They that herein beare the greatest name and most puissance are of the race of the Giraldines, or Fitz-Giralds, although they have for sundry respects assumed unto themselves divers surnames.

VODIÆ, and CORIONDI.

fter the Iberi, there dwelt farre in the countrey the OTAI, who are termed also VODIÆ, and UDIÆ: the footing of which name doth more expressly shew it selfe in Idou and Idowib, two small territories: like as the name of CORIONDI, in the countie of Corke bordering upon them. These nations inhabited the counties of Corke, Tipperary, Limericke, and Wexford.

Vodie a people,

Coriondi a people.

COMITATUS CORCAGIENSIS, commonly called
THE COUNTY OF CORKE.

He County of Corke, which in old time was repured a Kingdome, comprised the whole tract along the sea from Lismore unto Saint Brend, where it affronteth Desmond Westward, hath in the midland parts thereof Munkerray, a wild and woody country; wherein Cormac Mac-Tege is of great name: and toward the sea coast Carbray, in which the Mac-Carties beare the most sway. By the sea side, the first place that we meet with is Rosse, a road and port in times past well frequented, but now lesse resorted unto by reason of a bar of sand. From thence with a narrow neck runneth out a biland, called the Old head of Kinsale, neere unto which the family of the Curcies flourished in ancient times, famous for their wealth; descended from a brother of John Curry the Englishman that subdued Ulster; and out of which there remaineth here still Curcy E Baron of Ringrom; but at this day (this is the world) of weak and meane estate. After it, at the mouth of the river Bany, in a fertile soile and well woodded, standeth Kinsale, a very commodious port, and a towne fortified with old walls: under which in the yeere 1601. the kingdome of Ireland lay a bleeding, and put it was upon the hazzard, as it were, of one cast of a die, whether it should be subject to England or Spaine: what time as the Iland was endangered both with forraigne and domestick warre, and eight thousand old trained souldiers under the conduct of Don John D'Aquila, had of a sudden surprized and fortified it, confident upon the censures and excommunications of Pius the fifth, Gregorie the thirteenth, and Clement the eighth, Popes of Rome, discharged like thunderbolts upon Queene Elizabeth, and presuming confidently upon the aides of rebels, who had sent for them, under a goodly shew of restoring religion (which in this age and variance about religion, is every where pretended for to maske and cloak most ungracious and wicked designs.) But Sir Charles Blunt Baron Mounjoy, L. Deputy, presently belaid it round about both by sea and land, albeit his souldiers were tired, toiled out, and the season of the yeere most incommodious, as being midwinter: and withall, made head also against a rabble Muskerry.

Carbray,

Spaniard landed in Ireland, and from thence driven,

ble of rebels, whom the Earle of Tir-Oen, O-Donel, Mac-Gwyre, and Mac-Mahound had raised and gotten thither; and with such valour and fortitude so fortunately daunted and repressed their malapert boldnesse, that with one victory hee both had the towne with the Spaniards in it yeelded unto him, and also wrested, as it were, out of the hands of all Ireland throughout, now at the point of revolt, (for they that deliberate are revolted already) both sword and fire. On the other side of the river from Kinsale lieth Kerry-wherry, a little territorie of late belonging to the Earles of Desmond. Just before which runneth the river that Ptolomee calleth DAURONA, Giraldus Cambrensis, by changing onely one letter, Sauranum and Saveranum, which issuing out of Mukerey mountaines, passeth along by that principall Citie of the countie, graced with an Episcopall dignitie (whereunto is annexed the Bishops See of Clon) which Giraldus nameth Corragia, Englishmen Corke, and the naturall inhabitants of the country Coreach: enclosed within a circuit of walls in forme of an egge, with the river flowing round about it and running betweene, not passable through but by bridges, lying out in length, as it were, in one direct broad street, and the same having a bridge over it: Howbeit a pretty towne of merchandise it is, well peopled, and much resorted unto; but so beset on every side with rebels neighbouring upon it, that they are faine to keepe alwaies a set watch and ward, as if they had continual siege laid unto their Citie, and dare not marrie their daughters forth into the country, but make marriages one with another among themselves; whereby all the Citizens are linked together in some degree or other of kined and affinity. Thereport goeth that Brioc that most devout and holy man (who in that fruitfull age of Saints flourished among the Gauls, and from whom the Diocese of Sanbroich in Britaine Armorica, commonly called S. Brien tooke the name) was borne and bred here.

Beneath Corke the river parting in twaine, environeth a large and very pleasant Iland, over against the principall dwelling house of that most ancient and noble family of the Barries, which thereupon is called Barry Court. For that family is derived from Robert de Barry an Englishman, a personage of great worth, and renowned: who notwithstanding chose rather among the first to be chiefe indeed, than to be chiefe; who in the winning of Ireland received wounds and hurt, and the first man he was in Ireland that manned and brought the Hawk to hand. His posterity by their long approved loyaltie and martiall prowesse, deserved to receive of the Kings of England, first the title of Baron Barry, afterwards of Vicount Butiphani, & for their great lands and wealth, gat among the people the surname Barry more, that is, Barry the great. Below Barry-court, the river Saveren, hard by Imokelly a faire possession long since of the Earle of Desmond, loseth it selfe in the Ocean, affording at the very mouth commodious harbours and havens.

As Saveren watereth the neather part of this countrey, so Broodwater, called in times past Aven-more, that is, The great River, moisteneth the upper: upon which inhabiteth the Noble family of Roch, which being transplanted out of England hath growne up and prospered here very well, and now enioieth the title of Vicount Fermoy. Certaine it is, that in the reigne of Edward the second, they were entituled with the honour of Parliament-Barons, considering that George Roch was fined in two hundred Markes, because upon summons given, hee came not to the Parliament at Dublin: where Broodwater (which for a good while runneth as a bound between this county and the county of Waterford) entering into the sea maketh an haven, standeth Yoghall; no great towne, but walled round about, built in fashion somewhat long, and divided into two parts: the upper, which is the greater part, stretching out Northward, hath a Church in it, and without the wall a little Abbey which they call North Abbey: the neather part reaching Southward, called the Base-towne, had also an Abbey called South Abbey; and the commodiousnesse of the haven, which hath a well fenced Kay belonging unto it, and the fruitfulnessse withall of the country adjoining, draweth Merchants unto it, so as it is well frequented and inhabited, yea and hath a Mayor for the head Magistrate.

Thus

Kerry-wherry.

Vicount Butiphant.

Baron Roch
Vicount Fermoy.

Yoghall.

The Kay.

Thus farre in these daies reacheth the countie of Corke, which in times past, as I said even now, was counted a kingdome; and went farther, as which contained within it Desmond also. This kingdome King Henry the second gave and granted unto Sir Robert Fitz-Stephen, and to Sir Maler de Cogan in these words: Know ye that I have granted the whole kingdome of Corke, excepting the City and Cantred of the Oustmans, to hold for them and their heires, of mee and John my sonne, by the service of 60. knights. And the Carews of England were heires to that Fitz-Stephen, from whom Sir George Carew, now Baron Carew of Clopton, lineally and directly deriveth his descent, who not long since was the Lord President of Mounster, and in some of these obscure Irish matters (which I willingly acknowledge) hath directed me by the light of his knowledge.

The kingdome of Corke.

THE COUNTY OF WATERFORD.

IN the East coast of Ireland the county of WATERFORD extendeth it selfe between the rivers Broodwater West, Shour East, the Ocean from the South, and the county of Tipperary Northward: a goodly country, as well for pleasant site as fertile soile. Upon Broodwater, so soone as it hath left Corke county behinde it, Lismore sheweth it selfe, well knowne for an Episcopall See in it, where Christian late sometime the Bishop, and Legate of Ireland about the yeere 1148. a Prelate that deserved passing well of the Irish Church, trained in his youth at Clarevall in the same cloister with St. Bernard and Pope Eugenius.

Lismore.
Christian a Bishop.

But now, since that the possessions in manner all have beene alienated, it is united unto the Bishopricke of Waterford. But neere unto the mouth of the said river, standeth Ardmore a little towne, so called because it standeth neere the sea, of which, and of this river Necham long since verified thus.

urbem Lismor pertransit flumen Avenmor,

Ardmor cernit ubi concium aquor adit.

Ard-mor,

The river named Aven-Mor through Lismore towne doth runne, Ardmor him sees, and there apace to sea he speeds anon.

The little territory adjoining unto it is called Dessee, the Lord whereof, one of the family of Desmond, received in our remembrance the honourable title of Vicount Dessee: but for that he had no issue male, it vanished with him in a short time. Not farre from hence standeth Dungarvan upon the sea, a towne well fortified with a castle, and as commodious by reason of the roade for ships: which together with the Baronie of Dungarvan King Henry the sixth bountifully granted unto John Talbot Earle of Shrewsbury: but afterward, seeing it stood hand somely to that part of Mounster which was to be brought under and reduced to order, it was by authority of Parliament annexed to the Imperiall Crowne of the Kings of England for ever. Neer unto it flourished the Poers of ancient nobility (from the very first time that Ireland was conquered by the English) and afterward advanced to the honourable title of the Barons of Curraghmore. But upon the banke of the river Suyr, Waterford the chiefe and principall city of this county maketh a goodly shew. Concerning which old Necham writeth in this wise.

Dessee.

Dungarvan.

Poers Barons of Curraghmore,
Waterford.

Suirius insignem gaudet diare Waterford,

Aquoreis undis asoriatu ibi.

The river Suyr hath great desire,

Faire Waterford rich to make:

For in this place he hies apace,

His course with sea to take.

This city which the Irish and Britans call Porihlary, the English Waterford, was buile by certaine Pirates of Norway; and although it standeth in an aire somewhat grosse, and upon a soile not very fruitfull, and the streets therein bee with the narrowest, thrust close and pent together; yet such is the convenience and commodiousnesse

G g g g 3

of

of the haven, that for wealth, fresh trading, and frequent resort it is the second City A in all Ireland, and hath alwaies shewed a singular loialty, fidelitie, and obedience to the Imperiall Crowne of England. For ever since that Richard Earle of Pembroke wanne it, it hath continued so faithfull and quietly disposed, that it performed all times safe and secure peace unto the English on their backs, whiles they went on in the conquering of Ireland. Whence it is that the Kings of England have granted unto it very many, and those right large Franchises, which King Henry the seventh augmented, and confirmed, because the Citizens had demeaned themselves most valiantly and wisely against that Mock-Prince Perkin Warbeck, who being a young man of base condition, by hoisting up the full sail of impudence went about B to mount up aloft unto the Imperiall diadem, whiles he a meer suborned counterfeit tooke upon him to be Richard Duke of Torke, the second sonne of King Edward the fourth.

Earle of Waterford.

This countie of Waterford together with the city, King Henry the sixth gave unto John Talbot Earle of Shrewsbury aforesaid, by these words, which because they testify the valorous vertue of that most martiall Knight, to the end that vertue might have the due honour thereto belonging, I thinke it worth my labour, and haply any man else would deeme no lesse, to put downe out of the Record; which may be Englished thus. We therefore, saith the King, (after other eloquent termes penned by the Secretaries of that age, when there was but simple Latin) weighing with due consideration the valiant prowesse of our most deere and faithfull cousin, John Earle of Shrewsbury and of Weisford, Lord Talbot, Furnivall, and Le Strange, sufficiently tried and approved even unto his old age in the warres aforesaid, upon his body no lesse bedewed with sweat many a time than embued with blood; and considering in what sort our Countie and Citie of Waterford in our land of Ireland, the Castle, Seigniorie, Honour, Land, and Baronie of Dungarvan, and all the Lordships, Lands, Honours, and Baronies with the pertinences within the same Countie, which by forfeiture of rebels, by reversion or decease of any person or persons, by escheat, or any other title of law ought to come into our hands or our progenitors, or in the same to be by reason of the hostile invasions of our enemies and rebels in those parts, are become so desolate, and lye so much exposed to the D spoiles of warre, wholly as it were wasted, that they turne us to no profit, but have and doe redound oftentimes to our detriment: in this regard also, that by the same our Cousin our foresaid land of Ireland may be more valiantly be defended in those parts against such attempts and invasions of our enemies and rebels, doe ordaine, promote, and create him Earle of Waterford, together with the stile, title, name, and honour thereto belonging. And because as the highnesse of his state and degree groweth, all things consequently of necessity grow withall, upon our speciall grace, certaine knowledge, and meere motion, and for the estate of the Earle himselfe our Cousin to be maintained in more decent manner, we have given, granted, and by these our letters confirmed unto the same Earle the Countie aforesaid, together with the foresaid stile, title, name, and honour of E Earle of Waterford; yea and the foresaid City, with the feeferme of the same, the Castles, Lordships, Honours, Lands and Baronies, with the pertinences within the Countie: likewise all and every for the Manors, Hundreds, Wapenakes, &c. all along the sea coast, from the towne of Toghball unto Waterford City aforesaid, To have and to hold the foresaid Countie of Waterford, the stile, title, name, and honour of Earle of Waterford, and the City Waterford aforesaid, the Castle, Seigniorie, Honour, Land, and Baronie of Dungarvan, and all other Lordships, Honours, Lands and Baronies within the said countie: as also all and every the foresaid Manors, Hundreds, &c. unto the above named Earle and the heires males issuing out of his body (to have I say and to hold) of us and our heires, by homage, fealty, and the service of being and to be our Seneschall or Steward, and that his heires be the Seneschalls of Ireland to us and our heires, throughout our whole land of Ireland, to do and that hee doe, and ought himselfe to doe in the same his office, that which his predecessors Seneschalls of England were wont to doe hitherto in that office, for ever. In witness whereof, &c.

Steward of Ireland.

But when as (whiles the Kings of England and the Nobles, who had large and goodly

A goodly possessions in Ireland, were much busied and troubled a long time; first, with the warres of France, and afterward with civill warres at home) Ireland lay in manner neglected, and the State of English there falling still to decay, was now in manner come to nothing: but the Irishry, by occasion of the others absence, grew exceeding mighty: for to recover these losses, and to abate the power of the Irish, it was ordained and enacted by the States of the Realme in Parliament, that the Earle of Shrewsbury, for his absence and carelesnesse in maintaining of his owne, should surrender into the hands of the King and his successors the Earldome and towne of Waterford: the Duke of Norfolke likewise, the Baron Barkley, the heires generall of B the Earle of Ormond, and all the Abbats, Priors, &c. of England, who had any lands, should surrender up all their possessions unto the King and his successors for the same absence and neglect.

An. 18. H. 8.

THE COUNTY OF LIMERICK.

Hitherto have wee gone over the Maritime counties of Mounster: two there remaine yet behind that bee in-lands, Limericke and Tipperary, which wee are now to goe unto. The countie of Limerick lieth behinde that of Corke Northward, betweene Kerry, the river Shanon, and the countie of Tipperary. A fertile countrey, and well peopled, but able to shew very few places of any good account and importance. The more Western part of it is called Conilagh; wherein among the hills, Knock-Patric, that is Patricks hill, mounteth up of a mighty height, and yeelding a pleasant prospect into the sea, beholdeth asfarre off the river Shanon, falling with a wide and wast mouth into the Vergivian or Ocean. Under which hill a sept of Fitz-Giralds, or Giraldines, lived honourably a long time, untill that Thomas, called the Knight of the Valley, or of the Glin, when his gracelesse sonne that wicked firebrand suffered death (for to set villages and houses a fire is by the lawes of Ireland high treason) because himselfe advised his sonne, and set him on to enter into these lewd actions, by authority D of the Parliament was disseized of his goodly and large possessions. The head City of this countie is Limerick, which Shanon, a most famous river, by parting his chanel compasseth round about.

Conilagh.
Knock-Patric.

Knight of the Valley.
Anno 11. Reg.
Eli'z.

The Irish call it Loumeag, and the English Limirick. A Bishops See this is, and every famous mart towne of Mounster; first forcibly won by Reimundo the Grosse, an Englishman, the sonne of William Girald, afterwards burnt by Duvenald an Irish petty King of Thurmond: and then in proceesse of time Philip Breos an Englishman was enfeofed in it, & King John fortified it with a castle. At this day it is counted two townes. The upper (for to they call it) wherein stand the Cathedral Church and the castle, hath two gates opening into it, and each of them a faire bridge unto it off stone, E with bulwarkes and little draw bridges: the one leading into the West, the other into the East, unto which the nether towne joineth, fenced with a wall, with a castle also thereto, and a foregate at the entrance into it. More into the East standeth Clan-William, so named of the sept or kined of William, who came out of the family de Burgo (the Irish call it Burke) which dwelleth therein: and out of which house Queene Elizabeth conferred upon William, who slew James Fitz-Morris that tempestuous troubler of his country, the title and honour of Baron of Castle-Connell, (where Richard the Red Earle of Ulster, had strengthened a castle) together with a yeerly pension, as a reward of his valour, and to his comfort and meed for the losse of his sonnes, flaine in that encounter.

Limerick.

Clan-William.

Baron of Castle-Connell.

F In the South part of this countie is Kil-Mallo, the second towne next to Limerick both for wealth and for number of inhabitants, enclosed also with a wall about it: likewise Adar, a little towne in old time fortified, standing upon the same river; which straightwaies emptieth it selfe into Shanon: hard unto which lieth Clan-Gibbon, the Lord whereof John Fitz-Girald, called John Oge Fitz-John Gibbon, and for the gray haire of his head, The white Knight, was attained by Parliament

Clan-Gibbon.

for

for his wicked acts : but his sonne through the clemency of Queene Elizabeth was A restored to his full estate. Of great note and name above the rest in this tract, besides those Bourks, Giraldines, and Fitz-Giralds, are the Laceys, Browns, Hurleys, Chaceys, Sapells, and Pourcels, all of the English race : also the Mac-Shees, Mac-Brien O-Brian, &c. of Irish breed.

THE COUNTY OF TIPPERARY.

 He county Tipperary Westward is bounded with Limerick-shire afore- said and the river Shanon, Eastward with the county of Kilkenny, toward the South with the counties of Corke and Waterford, and North with the territorie of the O-Carolls. The South part is an exceeding fertile country, and yeeldeth corne abundantly, furnished also sufficiently with good and frequent buildings. The West part of it the river Glason passeth through, and watereth with a long course : not farre from the banke whereof standeth Emely, or Awne, a Bishops See, which hath beene in times past, by report, a City very populous and of great resort. Through the midst of it runneth the noble river Shower, or Smire, which streaming out of Bladin hill, speeding through the lower Ossery (which by the bountifull favour of King Henry the eighth entuled the Butlers Earles of Ossery) and through Thurles, which honourath them with the dignity of Vicounts, C first goeth unto Holy Crosse, a right famous Abbey in times past (whence the County also adjoining is commonly termed the Countie of the Holy Crosse of Tipperary) and enioieth certaine peculiar freedoms, granted in honour of a peece of Christs crosse there sometimes preserved. The whole world (saith Saint Cyrrill) is full of peece of this wood, and yet by a continuall miracle (as Paulinus saith) it hath never beene impaired.

Thus were Christians perswaded in ancient times. And incredible it is what a confluence there is even yet of people continually upon devotion hither, as unto a holy place. So firmly doth this nation persevere in the old Religion of their forefathers, which the carelesse negligence of their Prelates, and ignorance together, hath beyond all measure encreased, when as there be none to instruct and teach them otherwise. Then Shour passeth beside Cassile, beautified with an Archiepiscopall dignity by Engenium the third Bishop of Rome, which had under it in times past many Bishops as Suffragans. From thence runneth the river downe, sprinkling Islands here and there in the way, and fetcheth a compass about Cahir Cassile : which out of the family of the Butlers hath a Baron advanced to that dignity by Queene Elizabeth : but his sonne stained himselfe with perfidious disloyalty, and suffered for it, when as the Castle was by the Earle of Essex taken in the yeere 1599. and himselfe cast into prison. Then holding on his course by Clomell, a mercate towne well frequented and fenced, as also by Carick Mac-Griffin, situate upon a rock, whereof also it rooke name (the habitation of the Earles of Ormond, which together with the honour of Earle of Carrick King Edward the second granted unto Edmund Boteler or Butler) it leaveth Tipperary behinde it, and serveth in stead of a limit to confine the Counties of Waterford and Kilkenny.

Thus much of the places in the South side of this county. As for that which lieth Northward, leane it is and very barren, peaking up with high tops of mountaines, and twelve above the rest, as it were, huddled up together, which they terme Phlem-ge Modona. This part in Latin is called Ormondia, in Irish Orwown, that is, the Front of Mounster, in English Ormond, and most men name it very corruptly Wormewood. All the name and glory whereof ariseth from the Earles, of whom there hath beene a number since James Butler, upon whom and his heires King Edward the third conferred this title of honour for terme of life, with the Royalty also and other liberties with Knights fees in the county of Tipperary, the which his posterity through the favour of the Kings of England still enjoy : whence this County is reputed Palatine, and he of some was stiled Earle of Tipperary.

The

The ancestors of this James were in old time the Butlers (an honourable office) of Ireland ; and from thence came this surname Le Boteler or Butler imposed upon them : and certaine it is that they were linked in most neere alliance unto St. Thomas Becket Archbishop of Canterbury (as who derive their descent from his sister) : and that after hee was murdered, they were by King Henry the second removed into Ireland, who supposed that hee should disburden himselfe of the worlds hatred for that fact, in case he advanced the kinsfolkes and allies of the said Thomas to rich revenues and high honours.

The first Earle of Ormond in this family, was James sonne to Edmund Earle of Carricke, who wedded the daughter of Humfrey Bohun Earle of Hereford, whom he had by a daughter of King Edward the first : and here was his first step unto this honour. Hereupon James his sonne by this marriage came to be commonly named among the people, Thenoble Earle. The fifth Earle of these named James (that I may not stand particularly upon every one) received at the hands of King Henry the sixth the title and honour of Earle of Wiltshire, to him and to the heires of his body : who being Lord Deputy of Ireland, as divers others of this race, and Lord Treasurer of England, standing attainted by King Edward the fourth, was straightwaies apprehended and beheaded : but his brethren John and Thomas, likewise proclaimed traitors, kept themselves close out of the way : John died at Jerusalem without issue. C Thomas, through the speciall favour of King Henry the seventh, was in the end restored to his blood : who departed this life in the yeere 1515. leaving behinde him two daughters, Anne married to Sir James de sancto Leodegano, called commonly Selenger and Margaret unto Sir William Bollein, who bare unto him Sir Tho. Bollein : whom King Henry the eighth created first Viscount Rochfort, afterwards Earle of Wiltshire and of Ormond, and afterward took Anne Bollein his daughter to wife ; who brought forth for England Queene Elizabeth, a Prince of most happy memory, and with all thankfulnessse to be alwaies remembred by the English and Irish. When Thomas Bollein was dead leaving no issue male, Sir Pierce Butler, a man of great power in Ireland, descended of the Earles race, whom Henry the eighth had before time created Earle of Osserie, attained also to the title of Ormond, and left the same unto his sonne James, who had issue by the daughter and heire of James Earle of Desmond a sonne named Thomas Earle of Ormond now living ; whose faith and loyaltie hath been passing well tried and approved in many troubles and dangerous affaires : who also hath joined in marriage his only daughter unto Theobald Butler his brothers son, whom King James hath advanced lately to the title of Vicount Tullo.

Whereas some of the Irish, and such as would be thought worthy of credit, doe affirme, that certaine men in this tract are yeerely turned into Wolves : surely I suppose it be a meere fable : unlesse haply through that malicious humour of predominant unkind Melancholy, they be possessed with the malady that the Physicians call Lycanthropia, which raiseth and engendereth such like phantasies, as that they imagine themselves to bee transformed into Wolves. Neither dare I otherwise affirme of those metamorphosed Lycaones in Liveland, concerning whom many Writers deliver many and marvellous reports.

Thus farre as touching the Province of Mounster, for the government whereof Queene Elizabeth, when shee bethought herselfe most wisely, politickly, and princely, which way she might procure the good and wealth of Ireland, ordained a Lord President to be the reformer and punisher of inconsiderate rashnesse, the director also and moderator of duty, together with one Assistant, two learned Lawyers, and a Secretary : and the first President that shee made was Sir Warham S. Leger Knight, a man of great experience in Irish affaires.

LAGE

Wolf-men.

The disease
Lycanthropia.13. Elizab.
Fitz-Geralds.

Emely.

The lower Of-fery.The county of Holy Crosse of Tipperary.
Wood of the Crosse.

Cassile.

Baron de Ca-
hir.

Clomell.

Earle of Ca-
ricke.
Anno 9. Ed. 2.

Ormond.

Butlers Earles
of Ormond.
Anno 2. Ed. 3.Earle of Tipperary.

LAGENIA, or LEINSTER.

L He second part of Ireland, which the inhabitants call Leighnigh, the Britans Leim, the English Leinster, and Latine writers Lagenia, and in the ancient lives of the Saints, Lagen, lieth all of it on the Sea-side Eastward, bounded toward Mounster with the river Neor (which notwithstanding in many places it passeth beyond) on Connaght side for a good space with Shanon, and toward Meash with the peculiar knowne limits. The Countrey is fertile and fruitful, the aire most milde and temperate, and the people there inhabiting come neereſt of aliother to the gentle disposition and civill conversation of England their neighbour Island, from whence they are for the most part descended. In Ptolomees dayes therein were seated the BRIGANTES, MENAPII, CAUCI, and BLANI: and peradventure from these Blani are derived and contracted these later and moderne names, Lein, Leighnigh, and Leinster. But now it is divided into the Counties of Kilkenny, Caterlogh, Queenes County, Kings County, Kildare, Wexford, and Dublin: to say nothing of Wicklo and Fernes, which either be already, or else are to be laid thereto.

BRIGANTES, or BIRGANTES.

B He BRIGANTES seeme to have planted themselves betweene the mouth of the river and the confluence of Neor and Barrow, which in Ptolomee is called BRIGUS. Now because there was an ancient City of the Brigantes in Spaine, named BRIGANTIA, Florianus del Campo labourerh with and naile to fetch these BRIGANTES out of his owne countrey Spaine. But if such a conjecture may take place, others might with as great probability derive them from the Brigantes of Britaine, a nation both neere and also exceeding populous. But if that be true which I finde in certaine copies, that this people were called BIRGANTES, bubbee and the other have missed the marke: For, that these tooke their denomination of the river BIRGUS, about which they doe inhabit, the very name is almost sufficient to persuade us. These BRIGANTES, or BIRGANTES, whether you will, dwell in the Counties of Kilkenny, Offery, and Caterlogh, watered all with the river BIRGUS.

THE COUNTIE OF KILKENNY.

County of Kilkenny.

K He Countie of Kilkenny is bounded West with the countie of Tipperary, East with the counties of Wexford and Caterlogh, South with the countie of Waterford, North with Queenes Countie, and Northwest with upper Offerie. A countrey that with townes and castles on every side maketh a very goodly shew, and for plenty of all things surpasseth the rest. Neere unto Offerie the mighty and huge mountaines Sleiew Bloemy, which Geraldus calleth Bladina Montes, with their rising toppes mount up to a wonderfull heighth: out of the bowels whereof, as from their mothers wombe, issue the rivers Shour afore-named, Neor, and Barrow: which running downe in severall chanelles, before they enter into the Ocean joine hand in hand all together, whereupon they in oldtime teamed them The three sisters.

Upper Offerie.
Baron of upper Offerie.

The Neor, commonly called also Neure, runneth in manner through the midst of Kilkenny countie: and when it is passed with a forward course by the upper Offerie, the first Baron whereof was Barnabas Fitz-Patrick, promoted to that honor by King Edward the sixth, and hath watered many fortresses on both sides, floweth beside Kilkenny, which is as much to say, as the Cell or Church of Canic; which for the sanctimony of his solitary life in this country, was highly renowned: a proper, faire, and wealthy

A A wealthy Burrough towne this is, and far excellling all other midland Boroughs in this Island: divided into the Irish towne and the English towne. The Irish towne is, as it were, the Suburbs, and hath in it the said Canicks Church, which both gave name unto it, and now also affordeth a See unto the Bishop of Offerie. But the English towne is nothing so ancient, built, as I have read, by Ranulph the third Earle of Chester, and fortified with a wall on the West side by Robert Talbot a Nobleman, and with a castle by the Butlers. And sure it is that in the division of lands between the daughters of William Mareschal Earle of Penbroch, it fell unto the third daughter; whom Gilbert Clare Earle of Glocester married.

B Somewhat beneath the same Neore, standeth a little walled towne, named in English Thomas Towne: in Irish, Bala-Mac-Andan, that is, The towne of Antonies sonne: For it tooke both names of the founder Thomas Fitz-Anthonie, an Englishman, who flourished under King Henry the third, whose heires are yet acknowledged the Lords thereof. Beneath this towne the river Callan voideth his streame into Neore: upon which standeth the third Burrough or incorporate towne of this country, bearing the same name Callan. Like as Inise-Teog, which is the fourth.

Thomas
Towne.

Callan.

Inise Teog.

The family of Butlers hath spread and branched farre and wide throughout this County, men that with much honour bare a great part, and for their worth and virtues were adorned with the titles of Earles of Carick, Ormond, Wiltshire in England and of Offorie, as is before said: and at this day there remaine of their line, beside the Earle of Ormond, Vicount Thurles, and Knight of the Order of Saint George, Vicount Montgarret, Vicount Tullo, the Barons of Dunboyn and of Cahir, a goodly race also and progenie of Noble Gentlemen. The rest of the Gentry in this Tract that are of better birth and parentage be likewise of English descent, as the Graces, Walshes, Lovells, Foresters, Shortels, Blanch-felds, or Blanchevelstons, Drilanás, Comerfords, &c.

THE COUNTY OF CATERLOGH.

C He County of CATERLOGH, by contraction Carlogh, toward the Sunne rising adjoineth to the County of Kilkenny, wholly, in manner, situate betweene the rivers Barrow and Slane; of a fertile soile and shaded well with woods; hath two townes in it of better note and importance than the rest, both standing upon the West banke of Barrow: namely, Caterlogh, which Leonel Duke of Clarence began to wall; and Bellingham a most renowned Lord Deputy fortified with a castle; Also Leighlin, called in Latine Lechlinia, where there was an Episcopall Chaire, now united to the See of Fernes. These townes have both of them their wards or garrisons, and Constables over them. And whereas the greatest part of this County belonged in right of inheritance unto the Howards Dukes of Norfolk (who by the Earles of Warren drew their descent from the eldest daughter of William Mareschal Earle of Penbroch) King Henry the eighth by ageneral consent of the States of the Realme tooke unto himselfe, both from them and also from other Noblemen, yea and from Monasteries in England, all their lands and possessions in Ireland; for that the Lords thereof by neglecting in their absence their owne private estates carelesly, brought therewith the publike state into danger, as is already shewed.

The Statute of Absentees.

From hence Barrow passeth through the Baronie Ydron, which by right belonged to the Carews: for Sir John Carew an English Knight, died seized thereof in the time of King Edward the third: and which Peter Carew within our memorie recovered, as it were by a writ of remitter, after it had been unlawfully usurped, and a long time in the occupation of unjust detainers.

Barony Ydron.

Upon the river Slane appeareth Tullo, memorable in this regard, that King James hath lately honoured Theobald Butler, the Earle of Ormonds brothers sonne, with the title of Vicount Tullo. The Cavanaghs dwell a great many of them every way hereabouts, who being descended from Dovenald a younger sonne, as they say; the Bastard of Dermot the last King of Leinster, are spread and branched out into a very very great sept or linage, a warlike generation renowned for their good horse-man-ship, and who as yet, though they bee exceeding poore, beare themselves in spirit, answerable to their ancient nobilitie. But being at deadly feud amongst themselves, for I wot not what man slaughters, which many yeeres agoe they committed one upon another, they daily work their owne mischief by mutuall wrongs and hurts. When as the English had set some of these to oversee and manage the possessions they had in this part of Ireland, about King Edward the seconds time, they by little and little usurped the whole country unto themselves, and assumed the name of O-Mores, and taking into their societie the Toles and Brenes, by little and little dis- seized the English of all the territorie betweene Caterlogh and the Irish sea.

Cavanaghs.

O More.
Out of a pamphlet of Patrick Bingham.

Hook-Tower.

Among these is the confluence of Neore and Barrow, which after they have tra-vailed in a joint streame some few miles from hence in one channell, present both their name and their waters unto their eldest sister the Shour, which straightwaies is swallowed up at a mouth full of rockes within the gulfes of the Ocean: where on the left hand there shooteth out a little promontorie with a narrow necke, that sheweth a prettie high tower unto the sailers, erected by the merchants of Rosse, whar time they were in their prosperity, for their direction and safer arrivall at the rivers mouth.

QUEENES COUNTIE.

Lease.

Mary Burgh.

Donemaws.

Rheba.

Baronet of Rheban.

Above Caterlogh, toward the North-west there spreadeth out a little country full of woods and bogs, named in Irish Lease, and Queens Countie in English: which Queene Mary ordained to be a Countie by Commission given unto Thomas Rastelisse Earle of Suffex, then Lord Deputie, who reduced it into the tearmes of civill order and government: whence it is that the chiefe towne thereof is called Mary-Burgh: where certaine garrison fouldiers with their Seneschall keep ward, and have much adoe to defend themselves against the O-Mores (who beare themselves as the ancient Lords thereof) against Mac-Gilpatrick, the O-Dempsey, and others, a mischievous and tumultuous kind of people, who daily practise and plot all they can to annoy the English, and to shake off the yoke of lawes. For to subdue this wilde and hostile part of the country, at the first entrie of the English thither, Meilere was sent: For whom Hugh Lacie governour of Ireland, erected one Castle at Tahmelio, like as a second at Obowy, a third likewise upon the river Barrow, and a fourth at Norrach. But among the rest, he fortified Donemaws, an ancient Castle standing in the most plentifull part of the territorie, which came hereditarily unto the Breoses Lords of Brecknocke, by Eua the younger daughter of William Mareschall Earle of Pembroch, and what way as Barrow, which rising out of Slew Blomey hills Westward, runneth solitarie alone amongst the woods, he visiteth that ancient Rheban, mentioned by Ptolomee, which keeping the name still intire is called at this day Rheban: but instead of a citie it is altogether, E as one faith, non citias, that is, A citie civillisse, or, The remains of that which was a citie; even a few little cottages with a fortresse. Notwithstanding it giveth the title of a Baronet unto that Nobleman Nicholas of Saint Michael, the Lord thereof, who is commonly called the Baronet of Rheban.

KINGS COUNTIE.

Offaly.

Philips towne.

Like as the Queenes Countie aforesaid was so named in honour of Queene Marie, so the territorie bordering next unto it Northward, divided with Barrow running betweene, and called in times past Offalie, was in honour of Philip King of Spaine her husband, tearmed Kings Countie, and the principall towne in it Philips Towne; where is placed a Seneschall with a ward: and divers Gentlemen of English blood are here planted, namely, the Warrens, Herberys, Colbies, Mores, and Leicesters: amongst the Irish septs of O-Conor, unto whom a great part hereof in old time belonged; Mac-Coghlan.

Coghlan, O-Maisy, Fox, and others stand stoutly in defence of the lands wonne by their ancestors, and left unto them. Now these naturall Irish inhabitants grumble and complaine that their livings and patrimonies have beene taken from them, and no other lands assigned and set out for them to live in: Hence it is that taking hold of every occasion to make uprores, they put the English dwelling among them to much trouble ever and anon: yea and oftentimes in revengefull minds festered and poisoned with hostile hatred, they breake out furiously into open and actuall rebellions.

THE COUNTY OF KILDAR.

Ver against these all along Eastward, affronteth the county of Kildar a most rich and plentifull country: concerning the pastures whereof Giraldus Cambrensis useth these verses of Virgill.

Et quantum longis carpunt armenta diebus, Exiguam tantum gelidum ros nocte reponit.

And looke how much when daies are long the beasts by grazing ear,
So much cold dewes make good againe by night when 'tis not great.

C The chiefe and head towne of the shire is Kildar, much honoured and graced in the first infancy of the Irish Church, by reason of Saint Brigid a Virgin right venerable and highly esteemed of for her devotion and virginity (I meane not that Brigid which about 240. yeeres agoe erected that order of the sisters or Nunnes of Saint Brigid: namely, that within one Monastery both Monkes and Maidens should live, divided asunder by walls, and suffered onely one to see another) but another Brigid of greater antiquity by farre, as who was a Disciple of Saint Patrick, of great fame and renowne throughout Ireland, England, and Scotland. Whose miracles and fire never going out, but kept by Nunnes, as it were, in that secret Sanctuary of Festa, and of the ashes that never encrease, are mentioned by writers. This Kildar is adorned with an Episcopall See, named in the Popes letters in old time, Episcopatum Darenfis. After the entrance of the English into Ireland, it was the habitation of Richard Earle of Pembroch, then of William Mareschall his sonne in law, that married his daughter, Earle of Pembroch likewise: by whose fourth daughter Sibyll it came to William Ferrars Earle of Derby, and by his daughter likewise begotten of her, unto William Lord Vesey: whose sonne William Vesey, Lord chiefe Justice of Ireland, standing in termes of disfavour and disgrace with King Edward the First, for certain quarrels arising between him and John the sonne of Thomas Fitz-Girald, and being bereft of his only sonne lawfully begotten, granted and surrendered Kildare and other his lands in Ireland unto the King, so that he might enfeoffe his base sonne surnamed De Kildare, in his other lands in England. And a little while after, the said John sonne of Thomas Fitz-Girald, whose ancestors (descended from Girald Windsor, Castellan of Pembroch) had with passing great valour performed most painefull service in the conquest of this Island, was by Edward the second King of England endowed with the castle and towne of Kildar, together with the title and name of Earle of Kildar.

Kildar.
S. Brigid.

These Fitz-Giralds, or as they now tearme them, the Giraldines, are a right noble family, and for their exploits highly renowned: by whose valour, as one said, The Englishmen both kept the sea coasts of Wales, and also forced and won the walls of Ireland. And verily this house of Kildare flourished a long time without taint of honour and name (as which never bare armes against their Prince) untill that Thomas Fitz-Girald, the sonne of Girald Fitz-Girald Earle of Kildare, and Lord Deputy of Ireland under King Henry the eighth, hearing that his father sent for into England, and accused for misgoverning Ireland, was put to death; upon this light and false rumour, unadvisedly and rashly carried away with the heat of youth, put himselfe

Ch. 9. Ed. 2.
N. 12.

H h h

into

into armes against Prince and countrey, solicited the Emperour Charles the fifth to A enter and seize upon Ireland, wasted the land farre and neere with fire and sword, laid siege to Dublin, and killed the Archbishop thereof: For which outrages shortly after he with five of his uncles were hanged, when his father for very sorrow was dead before. Howbeit Queene Mary restored the family unto their blood and full estate, when shee advanced Girald brother unto the aforesaid Thomas to bee Earle of Kildare, and Baron of Offaly. He ended this life about the yeere 1558. His eldest son Girald died before his father, leaving one onely daughter married to Sir Robert Digby: Henry his second sonne succeeded, who when he had by his wife L. Francis daughter to Charles Earle of Nottingham only two daughters, William the third son succeeded in the Earledome, who was drowned in passing into Ireland in the yeere 1599. having no issue. And then the title of Earle of Kildare came to Girald Fitz-Girald sonne to Edward their Uncle, who was restored to his blood in lineage to make title by descent lineall or collaterall from his father and brother, and all his ancestours, any attaindour or corruption of blood to the contrary notwithstanding. There be also in this Countrey these places of better note than the rest; Nas a mercate towne, Athie upon the river Barrow, Mainosh a castle belonging to the Earles of Kildare, and a towne unto which King Edward the first, in favour of Girald Fitz-Moris granted a mercate and Faire: Castle Martin, the chiefe seat of the family of Fitz-Eustace; which descending from the Peers in the Countrey of Waterford, for C their valour received the honour of a Parliament Barons, bestowed upon Rowland Fitz-Eustace by King Edward the fourth, together with the Manour of Port Lester, and the title of Vicount Balinglas, at the hands of King Henry the eighth: which dignities with a faire patrimony Rowland Fitz-Eustace, seduced by the religious pretext unto rebellion, and flying his countrey lost by attaindour under Queene Elizabeth. The families here remaining, besides the Giraldines, that be of higher birth above others, fetch their descent also out of England, namely, the Ougans, De-la-Hides, Ailmers, Wasbes, Boisels, Whites, Sustons, &c. As for the Giants dance, which they talke of that Merlin by art magick translated out of this territorie unto Salisbury plaine, as also of that most bloody battell which shall be one day betweene the D English and the Irish at Molleaghmast, I willingly leave unto the credulous lovers of fabulous antiquity, and the vaine beleivers of prophesies. For my purpose is not to give fond tales the telling. These bee the midland counties of Leinster now are we to goe unto those by the sea side.

THE COUNTY OF WEISFORD.

Beneath that mouth, at which Barrow, Neore, and Shoure, the sifter-like rivers, having embraced one another and joynd hands, are laid up in the Ocean, there sheweth it selfe Eastward in a Promontorie E where the shore fetcheth a compasse round, the County of Weisford or Wexford. In Irish, County Reogh, where Protemee in times past placed the Menapii. That these Menapians came hither from the Menapii, a nation in low Germany that dwelt by the sea coasts, the name doth after a sort imply. But whether that Carauisus were of this or that nation, who taking upon him the imperiall purple robe seized upon Britaine against the Emperour Dioclesian, I leave to others. For Aurelius Victor calleth him a Citizen of Menapia; and the Citie Menapia is placed by the Geographers not in those Low-countries of Germany but in Ireland. In this county, upon the river Barrow, there flourished sometimes Rosse, a great Citie, well traded by merchants and peopled with inhabitants, fenced with F a wall of great compasse by Isabell daughter to the Earle Richard Strongbow: and that is the only monument which now it sheweth. For by reason of discord and home broiles betweene the Citizens and the religious orders, it is a good while since brought in manner to nothing.

More East, Duncannon, a castle with a garrison, standeth over the river, so as that it Barons Fitz-Eustace.

Pat. 2. Ed. 4.

Carauisus.

A it is able to command the river, that no ships should passe either to Waterford, or to Rosse: and therefore it was thought good policie, to fortifie this place when the Spaniards hovered and gaped for Ireland, in the yeere 1588. From thence at the very mouth of the river, there runneth out a narrow necke of land, which presenteth unto the sailers an high Turret, erected by the Citizens of Rosse when they were in flourishing estate, that they might more safely enter into the rivers mouth. A little from hence standeth Tintern, upon the shore with many winding creekes, where William Marechal Earle of Penbroch founded a notable Abbay, and called it de Voto, for that he had vowed to God to erect an Abbay, when hee was tossed in a fore and B dangerous tempest: and being after shipwracke cast up a land in this place, performed it here according to his vow.

Tintern Monastery.

This very Promontory Protemee calleth Hieron, that is, Holy: and in the same signification, I would make no doubt but the inhabitants also called it. For the utmost towne thereof, at which the Englishmen landed, and set first foot in this land, they named in their native language Banna, which foundeth all one with Holy.

Hieron a Promontory.

From this Holy point, the shore turning full upon the East, runneth forth along Northward; over against which there lye flats and shallows in the sea, that indanger many a ship, which the Mariners call The Grounds. In this place Protemee setteth out of their names, that I am out of all hope in so great darkenesse to discover any twy-light of the truth. But seeing there is one onely river that voideth it selfe in this place, which cutteth this county as it were just in the mids, and is now called Slane: seeing also at the very mouth thereof, where it maketh a Poole, there is a towne by a German name called Weisford, the head place of the whole county, I may the more boldly conjecture that Slane was that MODONA, and Weisford MENAPIA; and so much the rather, because this name is of a later date, to wit, a meere German, and given unto it by those Germans, whom the Irish tearme Quistmans. This towne is for the bignesse inferiour to many, but as memorable as any; because it was the first in all Ireland that when Fitz-Stephen, a most valiant Captaine, assaulted it, yielded D it selfe unto the protection of the English, and became a Colonie of the English: Whence this whole territorie is passing well peopled with English, who to this very day use the ancient Englishmens apparell and their language; yet so, as that they have a certaine kinde of mungrell speech between English and Irish. Dermot, who first drew the Englishmen over into Ireland, granted this and the territorie lying to it unto Fitz-Stephen for ever, who beganne a Burgh hard by at Carricke: and albeit the place were strong by naturall situation, yet hee helped it by art. But when as the said Fitz-Stephen had surrendered up his right into the hands of King Henry the second, he made it over to Richard Earle of Penbroch, that he should hold it in Fee from him and the Kings of England as superiour Lords. From whom by the Earles E Marechals, the Valences of the Lusignian line in France, and the Hastings, it descended to the Greies Lords of Rushin, who commonly in ancient Charters are named Lords of Weisford; although in the reigne of King Henry the sixth, John Talbot is once called in the Records Earle of Shrensbury and of Weisford. Touching this river, take with you this verse, such an one as it is, of Nechams making.

Dicit Eniscortum flumen quod Slana vocatur,

Hunc cernit Weisford se sociare sibi.

The river which is called Slane enricheth Eniscort,
And this said river Weisford sees gladly with him to sort.

For Eniscourt, a Burrough or incorporate Towne, is seated upon it. More inward by the same rivers side, ye have Fernes, known onely for the dignity of an Episcopall See in it; which in old time the Giraldines fortified with a Castle. Hard by, but beyond the river Slane dwell the Cavenaghs, Donels, Montaghs, & O-Mores, Irishmen of a stirring and tumultuous spirit: and among them the Sinottes, Roches, and Pepards, Englishmen. On this side Slane the men of greatest name bee the Vicounts Mont-Garret: of whom the first was Richard Butler, a younger son of Pierce Earle

H h h h 2 of

of Ormond, adorned with that title by Edward the sixth, and many more of the same A surname; the Devereuxes, Staffords, Chevers, Whites, Forlongs, Fitz-Harris, Browns, Hores, Haies, Cods, Maylers, all of the English race and blood, like as be most of the common people.

CAUCI.

Cauci.

O Tooles.
O Birns.

Arklo.

He CAUCI, who were likewise a people inhabiting the sea coast of Germany, seated themselves next unto the Menapii, but not so farre distant a sunder as those in Germany. Their country lying upon the sea was that which the O Tooles and O Birns, families of Irishry dwel in, men fed and maintained by wickednesse and bloodshed, impatient of rest and quietnesse; and who presuming upon the strength of their holds and fastnesse, carry an obstinate minde against all lawes, and implacable hatred to English. For the repressing of whose audacious outrage, and to strengthen the authority of lawes, there hath been serious consultation had by most prudent and politicke persons in the yeere 1578. that these small territories should be reduced into the forme of a county: and set out they were into fixe Baronies within certain appointed limits, which should make the county of Wicklo or Arklo. For a place this is of greatest name, and the Earle of Ormonds castle, who write themselves among other honourable titles in their stile, Lords of Arklo: under which castle that river which Protemee calleth OVOCA fallerth into the sea, making a creeke, and as Giraldus Cambrensis writeth, The nature of this river is such, that as well when the sea floweth, as when it ebberth, in this creeke it retaineth still the taste of the naturall freshnesse, saving his owne water entire and void of all brackishnesse, even as far as to the maine sea.

COMITATUS DUBLINIENSIS,

The Countie of Divelin.

Glynnes.

Beyond the CAUCI inhabited the EBLANI, where now lieth the D county of DUBLIN or DIVELIN; which on the East side is wholly washed with the Irish sea, on the West bounded with the county of Kildare, on the South joyning to the little territories of the O Tooles and O Birns, and those which they tearme the Glynnes, and limited Northward with the county of Meth and Nanny a little river: the soile thereof bringeth forth corne abundantly, and yeeldeth grasse and fodder right plentifully, besides it is well stored with all sorts of living creatures that are gotten by hunting and hawking for the table: but so destitute, for the greatest part, of woods, that in most places they use a clammy kind of fat turfe, or Sea-coale out of England for their fewell. In the South part thereof, which is lesse inhabited and more uncivil, and riseth up here and there with an hilly ridge, full enough of woods, and under which lye hollow vallies shaded with trees, which they call Glynnes; every place is fore annoied with the two pernicious and mischievous septs or kindreds of the O Tooles and the O Birns. Among these Glynnes appeareth the Bishopricke of Glandilaw, but utterly desolate, ever since it was annexed to the Archbishopricke of Divelin. All this county besides is passing well replenished with inhabitants and townes, and for wealthy port, and a certain peculiar finenesse and neatnesse that they use, surpasseth all other parts of Ireland, and is divided into five distinct Baronies, namely, Rath down, New castle, Castle-Knoc, Comloc, and Bal rodry, which notwithstanding I am not able to goe through as I would, for that their bounds are unknown E to mee.

Wicklo lately
made a county, 1606.

First therefore I will runne along the sea coast only, and from thence, as the courses of the rivers lead me, survey the more in-land places; for there is no part of this county twenty miles from the shore. To beginne then at the South side, the first place that sheweth it selfe upon this coast is Wicklo: where there standeth over the narrow

A narrow haven a rocke, enclosed within a strong wall in stead of a castle, over which, as divers other castles besides of this kingdome, there can none by authority of Parliament bee set as Constable, but an Englishman borne, because to the hurt of the State, the Irishmen that were Constables had both defended the same badly, and also by a certaine connivencie suffered the prisoners to make escapes. As touching this haven hearken what Giraldus saith, who tearmeth it Winchilgillo. There is an haven at Winchilgillo, on that side of Ireland where it lieth neerer unto Wales, than ordinarily and usually at every ebbe of the sea receiveth waters flowing into it; and againe at every return of tide, dischargeib and voideth the said water which it entertained: and when as the sea in the ebbe hath now by the going away of the tide forsaken the creeke, yet the river that runneth in by every chinke and winding cranke, becommeth bitter and salt with continuall brackishnesse.

Then from the toppe of an hill New-castle looketh into the sea, and seeth the shelves of sand, which they call The Grounds, lying opposite a great way in length: Howbeit betwene them and the shore it is reported to bee seven fathom deepe of water. A little higher, where the riveret Bray commeth into the sea, appeareth Old-Court, the possessions of the Walshes of Caryckmain, who as they are of ancient stocke and gentry, so their family hath shot forth many branches in this tract. Next unto it is Powers or Poers-Court, belonging in times past, as appeareth by the name, C unto the Poers; a large and great castle, untill that Tirlough O Toole, after hee had revolted and rebelled, undermined and overthrew it. From Bray mouth the shore for to let in a creeke bendeth and windeth it selfe inward, and at the very bent of the elbow lieth a little Island called Saint Benets, belonging to the Archbishop of Divelin.

This creeke or Bay is called Dublin Haven, into which Liffy the noblest river of this county out-powreth his streame: who albeit his spring head where hee riseth bee but fiftene miles from his mouth, yet with so many winding cranks he fetcheth such a compasse, that first hee turneth into the South by Saint Patrickes land; then Westward, afterwards North, watering the county of Kildare, and at length into the East by Castle Knoc, the Barony in times past of the Tiruls, whose inheritance by the females was devolved upon other about the yeere 1370. and so by Kilmairnam, an house in old time of Saint Johns Knights of Jerusalem, now converted to a retiring place of the Lords Deputies. This Liffy doubtlesse is mentioned by Protemee, but through carelesnesse of the transcribers banished out of his owne due place. For the river L. BENIUS is set downe in the copies of Protemee at the very same latitude or elevation of the Pole, in the other part of the Iland, where there is no such river at all: but let him, if it please you, by a writ of recovery returne out of exile now to his owne city EBLANA, from whence unjustly he hath been for a time alienated: and take withall, if you think good, these verses of Necham as touching this river.

*Vifere Castle-Knoc non dedignatur * Aven-Liff,*
Istum Dublini suscipit unda maris.

* That is, the river Liff.

To see and visit Castle Knock Liffy doth not disdain,
At Dublin ready is the sea this streame to entertaine.

For seated it is seven miles from his mouth, which alone fame may celebrate for all the cities of Ireland. This is that very city which Protemee called EBLANA, we DIVELIN, the Latine writers Dublinium and Dublinia, the Welsh Britans Dinas Dalin, the English Saxons in times past Duplin, and the Irish Bala-cleagh, that is, The towne upon Hurdles: for men say when it was built the foundation was laid upon Hurdles, the place was so fennish and moorish: like as Hispalis or Sivill in Spaine, F which Isidore reporteth to have been so named, because it stood in a marish ground, upon piles and stakes deeply pitched into the earth. For the antiquity of Dublin I finde no certainty; but that very ancient it is the authority of Protemee perswadeth me to thinke. Saxo Grammaticus writeth, how it was pitifully rent and dismembered in the Danish warres: afterwards it came under the subjection of Edgar King of England, which his Charter before mentioned confirmeth, wherein hee calleth it Eblana.

Dublin.

H h h h 3

the

the most Noble City of Ireland. Then the Norwegians possessed themselves of it: A Whence in the life of Gryffib Ap Cynan Prince of Wales, we read that Harald of Norway when he had subdued the greatest part of Ireland, built Develin. This may seeme to be that Harald Harfager, that is, with the faire lockes or tresses, who was the first King of Norway, whose line in descent goeth thus in the life of Gryffib: Harald begat a sonne named Auloed: Auloed begat another Auloed; he had a sonne named Siiric King of Develin: Siiric begat Auloed, whose daughter Racwella was mother to Gryffib Ap Cynan borne at Dublin, whilst Tirlough reigned in Ireland. But this is extravagant. Develin at length when the English first arrived in Ireland, yeelded unto their valour, and by them was manfully defended, when Ausculph Prince of the Dublinians, and afterwards Gottred King of the Isles fiercely on every side assaulted it: within a while after a Colony of Bristow-men was deduced hither, unto whom King Henry the second granted this City (happely at that time dispeopled) for to inhabite, with all the Franchises and free Customes, which the men of Bristow have, and that by those very words which I have alledged. Since which time it hath flourished every day more and more, and in many tumultuous times and hard streights given notable proofe of most faithfull loyaltie to the Crowne of England.

This is the roiall City and seat of Ireland, a famous towne for Merchandize, the chiefe Court of Justice, in munition strong, in buildiags gorgeous, in Citizens populous. An old writer calleth it, a City in regard of the people noble, of the site most pleasant, by reason of the sea and river meeting together, rich and plentifull in fish, for trafficke famous, for the green plain delighfull and lovely, beset with woods of mast-bearing trees, environed about with Parkes harbouring Deere. And William of Newbrough of it writeth thus: Develin a maritime citie is the mother citie of all Ireland, having to it a haven passing well frequented, for trafficke and emercourse of Merchants matchable with our London. Seated it is in a right delectable and wholsome place: for to the South yee have hills mounting up aloft, Westward an open champion ground, and on the East the sea at hand and in sight; the river Liffy running downe at North-East affordeth a safe roade and harbour for ships. By the river side are certain wharves or Kaies, as we terme them, whereby the violent force of the water might be restrained. For this verbe (Caiare) in old writers signified to Keep in, to restrain and repress: which that most learned Scaliger hath well noted. A very strong wall of rough building stone reacheth hence along by the sides of it (and the same toward the South fortified also with rampires) which openeth at six gates, from whence there runne forth suburbs of a great length.

Toward the East is Dammes gate, and hard by standeth the Kings castle on high, most strongly fenced with ditches, towers, and an Armory or Store-house built by Henry Loundres the Archbishop, about the yeere 1220. In the East suburbs neere unto Saint Andrew the Apostles Church, Henry the second King of England, as Hoveden reporteth, caused a roiall palace (or rather a banquetting house) to be erected for himselfe, framed with wonderfull workmanship most artificially of smoothed wailes after the manner of this country, wherein himselfe with the Kings and Princes of Ireland kept a solemne feast upon Christmas day.

From hence is to bee seene just over against it a beautifull Colledge (in which place there stood in old time the Monasterie of All-Hallowes) consecrated unto the name of the holy and indivisible Trinity, which for the exercise and polishing of good wits with good literature, Queene Elizabeth of most happy memory endowd with the privileges of an University; and being furnished of late with a notable Library, giveth no small hope that both religion, and all the exquisite and liberall sciences will return eftsoones after their long exile to Ireland, as to their ancient home (unto which, as unto a Mart of Arts and good learning, strangers sometime used to flocke and repaire.) And verily in the reigne of Edward the Second Alexander Bicknor Archbishop of Develin began to recall the profession of learning hither, having obtained from the Pope the privileges of an University, and erected also publicke Lectures: but the troublesome times that presently ensued, interrupted the laudable

Who also is named Abloius. Aulafus and Olovus.

Jofcelin of Furnes in the life of S. Patrick. Lib. 2. verum Anglicar. c. 26.

Kaies.

* Upon Aufonius Lib. 2. c. 22.

Dammenis.

All-Hallowes. An University begun 1597. 13. May was the foundation laid, 1593. Scholars were first admitted.

1320. A Manuscript of Baron Hoults.

A dable enterprise of that good man. The North gate openeth at the bridge built with arched work of new hewen stone by King John, and this joineth Oustmanstowne to the City. For here the Oustmans, who came over, as Giraldus writeth, out of Norway and the parts of the Northern Islands, planted themselves, as the Annales beare record, about the yeere of salvation 1050.

In this suburbe stood in times past the goodly Church of Saint Maries of Oustmanby (for so in a Charter of King John it is called) an house also founded for preaching Friars, called of them Black Friars, unto which of late daies have beene tranflated the Judiciall Courts of the kingdome. In the South quarter of the City stand two gates, Ormonds gate and Newgate (which is their common house of correction.) These lead unto the longest suburbe of all, called Saint Thomas street, and a magnificent Abbey of the same name, called Thomas Court, founded and endowed in times past with very ample revenues by King Henry the second for the expiation of the murder of Thomas Archbishop of Canterbury. Into the South openeth Pauls gate, and that which taketh the name of Saint Nicolas, making way into Saint Patrickes suburbe, wherein standeth the Archbishops Palace, knowne by the name of Saint Sepulchres, and a most stately Church dedicated unto Saint Patrick, right goodly to bee seene, with faire embowed workes, stone pavements, an arched rooffe over head of stone worke, and a very high tower steeple. What time this Church was first built, it is, to say truth, uncertaine. That Gregorie King of the Scots came unto it about the yeere 890. the Scottish Historie doth record. The same afterward being much enlarged by John King of England, was ordained first to be a Church of Prebends by John Comyn Archbishop of Dublin in the yeere 1191. and Pope Celestine the third confirmed the same. Then after him, Henry Loundres his successour in the Archbishopricke augmented it with dignities of Personages (for I may be bold to use here the founders words) and framed it conformable to the immunities, orders, and approved customes of the Church of Salisbury. But in our daies it maintaineth a Deane, a Chanter, a Chancellor, a Treasurer, two Arch-Deacons, and two and twenty Prebendaries; The only light and lamp (that I may not conceale the most ample testimony which the Parliament of the kingdome giveth unto it) of all godly and Ecclesiasticall discipline and order in Ireland.

There is another Cathedral Church also standing in the very heart of the City, which being consecrate unto the Holy Trinity, is commonly called Christs Church; touching the building thereof thus we read in the ancient records of the same Church: Siiric King of Dublin, the sonne of Ableb Earle of Dublin, gave unto the blessed Trinity, and to Donatus the first Bishop of Dublin, a place to found a Church in unto the holy Trinity; and not onely so, but gold and silver also hee bestowed sufficiently for the building of the Church and the whole close. This was done in the yeere 1012. in which, as Lancarvanensis avoucheth, Siiric the sonne of Abloie (for so he calleth him) lived and flourished in great name. The worke begun by Donatus, Laurence Archbishop of Dublin, Richard Strongbow Earle of Penbroch, commonly called Earle of Strigulia (whose tomb is here to be seene, repaired by Sir Henry Sidney Lord Deputy) Robert Fitz-Stephen, and Reimund Fitz-Girald finished. Hard at the South side of this Church there standeth a stately Towne hall, built of foure square stone, and called the Tollesale, where causes are tried before the Maior of the City, and where the Citizens use to hold their Sessions and publicke assemblies, for it enjoyeth many immunities. In times past this Citie had for the chiefe Magistrate a Provost; but in the yeere of our redemption 1409. King Henry the fourth granted them licence to chuse every yeere a Maior and two Bailifs: also that the Maior should have a gilt sword carried before him for ever. But afterwards, King Edward the sixth changed the Bailiffs into Sheriffes. Neither wanteth any thing here which a man can wish for in a most flourishing City, save only that an heape of sand, which the ebbing and flowing of the sea casteth up into the mouth of Liffy, doth so dam up and bar the haven, that it is not able to bring up any great vessels but at high water. Thus much of Dublin, for the most part of which I acknowledge my selfe beholden unto the Thomas Court.

Statut. Parli. 18. H. 8. c. 15.

Tollesale.

the diligence and learning of James Ussher Chancellor of S. Patricks Church, whose A variety of knowledge and judgement are far above his yeeres.

Marquesse of Dublin.

Pr. p. Pat. anno
9. Rich. 2. m. 1.

As touching Robert Vere Earle of Oxford, whom King Richard the second, a Prince too too lavish in giving honourable titles, made Marquesse of Dublin, and afterwards Duke of Ireland, I have spoken already, and reason I have none to repeat the same here. Yet will I note thus much, which I have since happened upon in the Records. When as King Richard aforesaid had advanced that Robert Vere Earle of Oxford to bee Marquesse of Dublin, and had given to him the Seigniorie of Ireland during his life: hee, desirous to augment his honour by more ennoblising him with honourable Armes, granted also that as long as hee should live, and hold the said Seigniorie, he should beare these Armes, Azure 3. Crownes Or in a Bordur, in his Standards, Pennons, Coat-armours, and other things wherein Armes are to be shewed in all Marshall matters, and elsewhere at his pleasure. But this grant was soone after recalled, and those Armes abolished.

Saint Laurence
Barons of Houth.

Malchid.

Fingall.

Where the river Liffy lodgeth himselfe in the Ocean, Houth standeth, compassed in manner round about with the sea: of which the Noblemen surnamed Saint Laurence, and dwelling there, become named Barons of Houth; men of rare felicity, for that in so long a descent of their line (for they are able to derive their pedigree from the time of King Henry the second) there hath of them, by report, none bene attainted of high treason, none left ward in his minority. And within a little of this place is Malchide, or Molachid, ennobl'd by the Lords thereof the Talboys, English by their first originall.

More within the country, Northward there adjoineth hard to the country of Dublin, Fingall, that is, if you interpret it out of the Irish language, a nation of forerimers, (for they use to nominate the English Gall, as one would say, strangers; and Saxones, as it were, Saxons) a little country, but very good and passing well husbanded; even the garner and barn of this kingdome, so great store of corne it yeeldeth every yeere. And here the soile striveth after a sort with the painfull labour of the husbandman, which in other places throughout this Island lying neglected, without tillage and manuring, seemeth to make a very grievous complaint of the inhabitants sloth and laziness. There are planted every where throughout this country right worshipfull families, nobly descended of English blood; and namely, besides those which I have already mentioned, the Plonkeys, Barnwells, Russels, Talboys, Dillons, Nettervils, Holywoods, Lusterels, Burnels, Fitz-Williams, Gouldings, Usshers, Cadleys, Finglases, Sarfelds, Blackneys, Cruceys, Baths, &c.

Th. Stukely.

Marquesse of Leinster.

Thus farre forth summarily of Leinster, which in old time reached no farther. Now I wor not whether it bee worth the laughing at or the relating, that Thomas Stukely, when hee had in England and Ireland both made shipwracke of his good name, credit, and fortunes, having wound himselfe out of the danger of the lawes, curried such favour with Pope Gregory the thirteenth, what with making many faire promises, and what with bragging of great matters, that hee received at his hands these titles, Marquesse of Leinster, Earle of Weisford and Caterlogh, Vicount Murrumb, and Baron of Rosse and Taron. With which titles hee being puffed up in pride, whiles he thought to conquer Ireland, went aside into Africk, and there with the three Kings that were slaine in one battell, made up the enterlude of his life with an honest close and catastrophe.

MIDIA, OR MEDIAMETH.

Labecus.

He rest of the Countrey of the Eblani was in ancient time a kingdome, and the fifth part of Ireland, which in their owne native language they call Mish, the English Meth, Giraldus nameth it in Latin Midia and Media, perhaps, because it is in the very middle of the Island. For they say that Killair a castle in these parts, which seemeth to be in Psolomee LABRUS, is as it were the Navill of Ireland. And

And the very name implieth no lesse: For Lair in the Irish tongue signifieth The Middle. This Meth lieth stretched out from the Irish sea as farre as to the river Shanagh: For the soile thereof, as saith Bartholomew Anglicus, Fertile it is in corne, pasture ground, and cattell, plentifull in fish, fesh, and other victualls of white meat, as butter, cheese, and milke, watered also with rivers. The situation is delectable to the eye, and an wholesome aire. In regard of woods and marishes in the skirts and borders, it hath a very hard access and entry unto it: And therefore, considering the multitude of people, the strength of castles and townes, it is commonly called for the peace thereof, the CHAMBER OF IRELAND. Within the memorie of our fathers, because the country was too large for to be governed by one Sheriffe, and to the end that justice might with more facility be ministred, it was divided by authority of Parliament in the 38. yeere of King Henry the eighth into two parts, namely, the county of East Meth, and the county of West-Meth.

THE COUNTY OF EAST-METH.

The County of EAST-METH is environed round about with the county of Kildar South, with the county of Dublin and the sea East, with the territorie of Louth North; and with the county of West Meth on the West. The whole is divided into 18. Baronies: Dueleke, Scrine, Slane, Margallen, Navan, Kenles; halfe the Barony of Fower neer to Kenles, Killalou, Demore, Cloue, Moylagh, Loghern, Oldcastle, Lwyn, Moyseurarah, Deefe, Rath-touth, and Dunboyn.

Boyn, which Psolomee calleth BUVINDA, Giraldus BOANDUS, a noble river springing out of the North side of the Kings county, runneth through this county. In the hither part on this side Boyn, these are the places memorable: Galtrim, where the Husseys have dwelt a long time: Killin Castle, which Hugh Lacy Custos of Ireland under King Henry the second built; and Dunsany, which have their Parliament Barons, Noblemen of ancient descent out of the family of the Plonkeys, which others fetch out of Denmark: but they beare the very same Armes in sundry colours, which Alan Plonket of Kilpecke in England did: who also under King Edward the first lived in the dignity and port of a Baron. Now this house of the Plonkeys in Ireland came up and grew to bee of high estimation, ever since that Sir Christopher Plonket, a valiant and wise man (Deputy, as they terme him, unto Richard Duke of Yorke, Lord Lievetenant in King Henry the sixth his time) was advanced to the dignity of Baron of Killin, which fell unto him by his wife, heire to the family of the Cusakes: and his second son by his own worth & valour obtained the title of Baron Dunsany. On the farther side of Boyn, are Trimletstown, which hath his Baron out of the family of the Barnwells (for King Edward the fourth promoted Sir Robert Barnwell to the honour of a Parliamentary Baron; Gormanston, which now hath had honourable Vicounts, men of good desert in the Common-wealth, descended from the line of the Prestons (as it is verily thought) in Lancashire; and Slane, which is able likewise to shew Barons thereof, out of the family of the Flemings: and amongst them stands Aboy, a mercate towne well inhabited and of good resort, upon the river Boyn: which when it hath passed beside Glan-Jores, that is, The land of the sonnes of George (this George was of the Birminghams progeny, whose heire by marriage brought a faire inheritance with the castle of Carbray unto the Prestons) runneth under Trim a pretty towne of trade, and one of the better fort, where William Pepard erected a castle. This was an ancient Barony of the Lacies, which accrewed unto the titles of the Dukes of Yorke, who stiled themselves Lords of Trim. Then floweth it beside Navan, which hath a Baron or Barones, but not of the Parliament house, and affordeth for the most part a dwelling house unto the Bishop of the Diocesse, who hath now no Cathedrall Church, but doth all with the assent of the Clergy of Meth.

His See seemeth to have bene at Cluanavard, which is called also Clunari, where Hugh Lacy in times past built a castle: For in the letters Apostolicall we read him thus Barnwell.

Baron Trimlet
stown.

Baron Slane.

Navan.
B:ronet of Na-
van.

Bishop of Meth.

thus, Episcopus Midenfis, five Cluanarardenfis, that is, The Bishop of Meib or Cluana-rard, and corruptly, as it is to be thought, in a Roman Provinciall Elnamirand. Boyn now by this time carrying a fuller streame, after it hath with an hasty course swiftly passed on certain miles; neere unto Drodagh emptieth himselfe into the sea. Of this swift running what if I should thinke this Boyn tooke his name: for Boan both in Irish and British also signifieth swift, and our Poet Necham of this river hath thus verified.

Ecce Boan qui Trim celer influat, istius undas Subdere se salsis Drogheda cernit aquis.

Lo Boin that swiftly unto Trim doth run, and marke withall,
How at Tredagh his streame into the salt sea gulfe doth fall.

The men of greatest reputation and name in this county, besides those whom I rehearsed before, to wit, the Plunkets, Flemings, Barnwells, and Huffsays, are the Darcys, Cusakes, Dillons, Birminghams, De-la-bides, Neiterwils, Garvies, Cadels, and others: whom if I doe not name at all, or if I reckon either these or others elsewhere not in their owne ranke, according to their worth and degree, I desire no imputation may be laid upon me therefore.

THE COUNTY OF WEST-MEATH.

He county of WEST-MEATH, so called in respect of the other above said, unto which it adjoineth on the West side, reacheth unto the river Shanon, and lieth betweene the Kings County South, and Longford County North; unto which it is not willing to give place either in fertilitie of soile, multitude of inhabitants, or any thing else whatsoever, unless haply it bee inferiour in civility of manners. Molingar by authority of Parliament was ordained to be the head and principall shire towne, because it lieth, as it were, in the very middle: and the whole county is laid forth into twelve Hundreds or Baronies, viz. Ferriugh, where the Tirels, Ferbille, where the Darcies dwell; Delvin which adorneth the noble stock of the Nogents (who came first out of England) with the title of a Parliament Baron. These are descended from that Sir Gilbert Nogent, whom Hugh Lacy the Conqueror of Meib, for his courageous and valiant service in the wars of Ireland, rewarded both with these lands and those also of Furry, as that most learned Gentleman Richard Staniburgh hath recorded: Fourry aforesaid, as also Corkery, where the Nogents dwell; Moyassell, where the Tuis and Nogents; Magbertiernen, where very many of the Petuis and the Tuis; Moigossy, where the Tuis and Nangles; Rathcomire, where the Daltons; Magirquirk, where the Dillons, all propagated from English blood do inhabit; Clonlolan, where the O-Malaghlins, of the old roiall line of Meib; Moyassell, where the Magobigans, meere Irish beare sway: and others whose very names carry an harsh sound of more barbarousnesse: which notwithstanding, even as Martiall the Poet when hee had reckoned up certaine barbarous Spanish names of places, being himselfe a Spaniard, said, That he liked them better than British names, so the Irish love these rather than the English: in so much as one of their Potentates gave it out, that he would in no wise learne the English tongue, for feare he should in speaking English get a wry mouth. Thus the crow thinkes her owne birds fairest; and we all are given to like our owne too well, even with the disdain and contempt of others.

This Meib had in times past Kings, or pety Princes rather to rule it. And, as we read, that Monarch or sole King of Ireland, Slany, caused the revenues of Meib to bee assigned and appropriat to the furnishing of his royall table. But when the Englishmen had once set fast footing in Ireland, Hugh Lacy subdued a great part thereof, and King Henry the second enfeofed him in it, and made him Lord of Meib, who while he was building of a castle at Derwarth, and holding his head downe to prescribe a Carpenter somewhat that he would have done, had by him his head stricken off with his axe.

This

A This Hugh begat two sonnes, Hugh Earle of Ulster, of whom I will speake hereafter: and Walzer Lord of Trim, who begat Gilbert that died before his father. By the daughters of this Gilbert, Margaret and Maud, the one part by the Genevils, who were (as they write) of the house of Lorrain; and by the Morimers, came to the Dukes of Rouk, and so to the Kings domain or Crowne: for Peter de Genevile, sonne to that Maud, begat Joan espoused to Roger Morimer Earle of March: and the other part by Margaret wife to John Lord Verdon, and by his heires who were Constables of Ireland, was devolved at length upon divers families in England, as Furnivall, Burghersb, Crophul, &c.

Genevile.

Constables of Ireland.

THE COUNTY OF LONGFORD.

Unto west Meath on the North side joyneth the County of LONGFORD (reduced into this ranke of Countries a few yeeres since by the provident policy of Sir Henry Sidney Lord Deputy) called before time Anale, inhabited by a numerous Sept of the O-Pharols: of which house there be two great men and Potentates; one ruleth in the South part, named O-Pharoll Boy, that is, The yellow: the other in the North, called O-Pharall Ban, that is, The white. And very few Englishmen are there among them, and those planted there but of late.

Anale.

O-Pharoll.

Along the side of this County passeth Shannon, the noblest river of all Ireland, which as I have said runneth between Meib and Conaught. Ptolomee nameth it Sennus, Orosius Senna, and some copies SACANA, Giraldus Flumen Senense: but the people dwelling there by call it Shanon, that is, as some expound it, The ancient river. He springeth out of Thern hills in the county Le Trim, and forthwith cutting through the lands Southward, one while overfloweth the bankes, and enlargeth himselfe into open Pooles: and otherwhiles drawes backe againe into narrow straights, and after he hath run abroad into one or two Lakes, gathering himselfe within his bankes, valedth bonnet to MACOLICUM, now called MALC (as the most learned Geographer Gerard Mercator hath observed) whereof Ptolomee hath made mention; and then by and by is entertained by another broad Mere (they call it Lough Regib) the name and situation whereof doth after a sort imply, that the City RIGIA, which Ptolomee placeth there, stood not farre from hence. But when hee hath once gotten beyond this Poole, and draweth himselfe to a narrower channell within the bankes, there standeth hard upon him the towne Athlon, of which I will write in place convenient.

River Sennus or Sineus, Shannin and Shannon.

Macolicum; Malc.

Rigia.

From thence Shannon having gotten over the Water-fall at Killolo (whereof I must speake anon) being now able to beare the biggest ships that are, in a divided channell, as it were with two armes clasped about the city Limrick, whereof I have spoken already. From hence Shannon passing on directly for threescore miles or thereabout in length, bearing a great breadth, and making many an Island by the way, speedeth himselfe Westward; and in what place soever he becommeth shallow and affordeth fords at an ebbe or low water, there were planted little forts with wards (such was the careful providence of our forefathers) to restrain the inrodes of preying robbers. And so at length he runneth and voideth out at an huge mouth into the West Ocean beyond Knoc Patric, that is, Patricks hill: for so Necham termeth that place in these his verses of Shannon.

Which others call Mare Bre-dunium.

Fluminibus magnis latatur Hibernia, Sineus

Inter Connauiam, Momomiamque fluit.

Transit per muros Limirici, Knoc Patric illum

Oceanus clausum sub ditione videt.

Ireland takes joy in rivers great, and Shannon them among,
Betwixt Connaught and Munster both holds on his course along,
He runneth hard by Limrick wayes: Knoc Patric then at last Within the gulfe of th' Ocean doth see him lodged fast.

CON-

CONNACHTIA, OR CONAGHT.

Nagnarz.
Gangani.
Concanni.
Auteri.

The fourth part of Ireland, which beareth Westward, closed in with the river Shannon, the out-let of the Lake or Lough Erne, which some call Trovi, others Bana, and with the maine Western sea, is named by Giraldus Cambrensis Conachia and Conacia, in English Conaght, and in Irish Conaghty. In ancient times, as we may see in Ptolomee, it was inhabited by the GANGANI, who are also named CONCANNI, AUTERI and NAGNATÆ. Those CONCANNI or GANGANI, like as the LUCENI their next neighbours that came from the Lucensis in Spaine, may seeme by the affinity of name and also by the vicinity of place to have bene derived from the CONCANNI in Spaine, who in Sirabo are according to the diversity of reading named CONIACI and CONISCI: whom Salinus testifieth in these verses following to have bene the first Scythians, and to have usually drunke horses blood (a thing even of later daies nothing strange among the wild Irish.)

Et qui Massagetem monstrans feris ac parentem, Cornipedis fusa sarras Concane vena.

And Concane though in savagenesse that now resembling still Thy parents old the Massagets, of horse-blood drinkst thy fill.

And beside him Horace,

Et letum equino sanguine Concannum.

And Concane, who thinks it so good
To make his drinke of horses blood.

Unlesse a man would suppose this Irish name Conaghty to be compounded of CONCANNI and NAGNATÆ. Well, this Province as it is in some place fresh and fruitful, so by reason of certain moist places, yet covered over with grasse, which of their softnesse they usually tearme Boghes, like as all the Iland besides every where is dangerous, and thicke set with many and those very shady woods. As for the sea coast, lying commodious as it doth with many baies, creeks, and navigable rivers, after a fort it inviteth and provoketh inhabitants to navigation: but the sweetnesse of inbred idlenesse doth so hang upon their lazie limbes, that they had rather get their living from doore to doore, than by their honest labours keepe themselves from beggery. Conaghty is at this day divided into these counties, Twomond or Clare, Galway, Maio, Slego, Leirrim, and Roscoman.

The ancient CONCANNI above said, held in old time the more Southerly part of this Conaghty, where now lye Twomond or Clare, the county Galway, Clan-Richards country, and the Barony of Atterish.

TWO MOND, OR THE COUNTRY CLARE.

Twomond or Twomond, which Giraldus calleth Thuesmonia, the Irish Twomond, that is, The North-Mounster (which although it lye beyond the river Shannon yet was counted in times past part of Mounster, untill Sir Henry Sidney Lord Deputy laid it unto Conaghty) shootheth out into the sea with a very great Promontory growing by little and little thin and narrow. On the East and South sides it is so enclosed with the winding course of the river Shannon, which waxeth bigger and bigger, like as on the West part with the open maine sea, and on the North side confineth so close upon the county Galway, that there is no coming unto it by land, but through the Clan-Richards territory. This is a country wherein a man would wish for nothing more, either from sea or soile, were but the industry of the inhabitants correspondent to the rest; which industry

A industry Sir Robert Muscegros an English Nobleman, Richard Clare and Thomas Clare, younger brethren of the stock of the Earles of Glocester (unto whom King Edward the first had granted this country) stirred up long since by building townes and castles, and by alluring them to the fellowship of a civill conversation; of whose name the chiefe towne Clare, now the dwelling place of the Earle of Twomond, tooke denomination, as also the whole tract, of it called the county of Clare. The places of greater note and name than the rest, are Kilfennerag and Killaloe or Laon, the Bishops seat. This in the Roman Provinciall is tearmed Episcopatus Lidenfis, where there stands a rocke in the mid channell of the river Shannon, from which the water rusheth downe a maine with a great fall and noise, and by standing thus in the way as a bar, hindreth the river that it can carry vessels no further; which if it were cut down, or a draine made about it, the river were able to bring up vessels much higher, to the great commodity of all the neighbour inhabitants.

Not far from the banke of Shannon, is seated Bunratty, for which Sir Robert Muscegros obtained from King Henry the third the libertie of a Mercate and Faire, and when he had fortified it with a castle, gave it at length unto King Edward the first, who granted both this towne and the whole territory unto Richard Clare aforesaid. And seven miles from thence, appeareth Clare the principall towne, at a Creeke (flowing up out of Shannon) full of Islands: and these twaine are the onely mercate townes here, and those but small ones. Most of the English who were in times past brought hither to inhabite, are either rooted out, or become degenerate and growne Irish: but they who carry the whole sway here at this day, be of the Irish blood; as Mac-Nemors, Mac-Mahon, O-loughlin, and the mightiest by far of all other, the O-Briens, descended from the ancient Potentates or Kings of Conaghty, or as themselves give it forth, from the Monarchs of Ireland. Of these, Merogh O-Brien was the first Earle of Twomond, created by King Henry the eighth for terme of life, and after him to Donough his brothers sonne, and his heires; who at the same time being made Baron of Ibargan, succeeded in the Earldome, and was slain by his brother Sir Donel O-Brien Connaghty, O-Brien Donaghs son, was the third Earle, and father to Donaghs now the fourth Earle, who hath shewed singular good prooffe of his faithfull loialty and courageous valour unto his Prince and country in most dangerous times, to his singular commendation.

THE COUNTY OF GALLWAY.

The county of GALLWAY meereth South upon Clare, West upon the Ocean, North upon the county Maio, and East upon the river Shannon. A land very thankfull unto the industrious husbandman, and no lesse profitable unto the Shepheard. The West shore endented in with small in-lets and out-lets, or armes of the sea, hath a border all along of greene Islands and rugged rockes, set orderly, as it were, in a row: among which, foure Islands called Arran, make a Barony, and many a foolish fable goes of them, as if they were the Islands of the living, wherein none doe dye: also Inis Ceath, well knowne in times past by reason of the Monastery of Colman a devout Saint, founded for Scots and Englishmen: and Inis-Buind, which Bede interpreteth out of the Scottish tongue to signifie, The Isle of white Heifers; whereas it is a meere British word. But the Englishmen soone forooke the Monastery, when the Scots and they could not well agree together. Further within lieth a Lake, called Lough-Corbes (where Ptolomee placeth the river Ausobla) spreading out twenty miles or thereabout in length, and three or foure in bredth, being navigable, and garnished with 300. petty Islands full of grasse, and bearing Pine-trees; which Lake when it reacheth neere the sea, growing narrow into a river, runneth under Gallway, in the Irish tongue Gallua, named so (or else I cannot tell) of the Gallers in Spaine, the very principall city of this Province, and which would thinke hardly to be reckoned the third in Ireland: Surely a very proper and faire City it is, built almost round, and in manner tower-like, of en-

Killaloe.

Catarafta.

Bunratty.

Clare.

Earles of Twomond.

Islands of Arran.

Bede l. 4. c. 4. Ecclesiast. hist.

Lough-Corbes.

Gallway.

try, and some stone, and hath beside to set it out a Bishops See: and withall, through A the benefit of the haven and rode above said under it, being well frequented with merchants, hath easie and gainfull trafficke, by exchange of rich commodities both by sea and land.

The battell of Knoc Doe.

1516.

Asterith.

Birminghams.

Clan-Ricard.
Earles of Clan-Ricard.

Archbishop-
rick of Toam, or Tuen.

Not full foure miles from hence standeth Knoc-toe, that is, the hill of Axes; under which that noble Girald Fitz-Girald, Earle of Kildare, and by times, for the space of three and thirty yeeres Lord Deputie of Ireland, discomfited and put to flight, after a bloody overthrow, the greatest rabble of rebels that ever was seen before in Ireland, raised and gathered together by William Burk, O-Bren, Mac-Nemare, and O-Carrall. Not farre from hence Eastward standeth Asterith (in which remaine some footings) of the name of AUTERIT commonly called Athenry, enclosed round about with a wall of great circuit, but slenderly inhabited. It glorieth much of that warlike Baron thereof, John de Birmingham an Englishman; out of which family the Earle of Lomb descended: but these Birminghams of Asterith, being now as it were degenerate into barbarous Irishry, scarce acknowledge themselves to have beene English originally. The septes or kinreds of the Irish here, that be of the better sort, are O Kelleh, O Mar, den, O Flaits, Mac Dervis, &c.

Clan-Ricard, that is, The sonnes, kinred, or Tube of Richard, or the Land of Richards sonnes, confineth upon these, and lieth to this county. The name it tooke, after the Irish manner, from one Richard of an English family, called de Burgh, that became afterwards of most high renowne and name in this tract, and out of which King Henry the eighth created Ulrich Burgh Earle of Clan-Ricard, whose eldest sonne carrieth the title of Baron Dun-Kellin. His sonne Richard was the second Earle, whose children, begotten of sundry wives, stirred up many troubles, to the grieve of their father, the overthrow of their owne country, and themselves. After Richard, who died an old man, succeeded his sonne Ulrich the third Earle, and father to Richard the fourth Earle now living, whose fast fidelity and singular fortitude hath, to his great praise, evidently appeared, when the English, and their whole estates in Ireland, were in great danger. In this territory is the Archbishoprick of Toam, unto which in old times many Bishops were subject; but at this day the Bishopricks of Anaghy, Dun, and Maio are annexed unto it. The Bishoprick likewise of Kilmacough, which in the old Provinciall, unless the name be corrupt, is not mentioned, as also of Clonfert, are seated in this part, and, as I have heard, united to the See of Toam.

THE COUNTY OF MAIO.

The county Maio, on which the Western Ocean beareth, lies bounded South with the county of Galway; East with the county Rescoman, and North with the county of Slego. A fertile country and a pleasant, abundantly rich in cattell, Deere, Hawkes, and plenty of hony: taking the name of Maio, a little city with a Bishops See in it, which in the Roman Provinciall is called Mago. But that Episcopall seat is now annexed to the Metropolitane of Toam, and the neighbour inhabitants repaire for Ecclesiasticall jurisdiction to the Bishop of Killaley, in the Barony of Tir-Auley.

In this Maio, if I deceive not my selfe, Colman a Bishop of Ireland built, as Bede writeth, a Monastery for thirty men or thereabout of the English Nation, trained in the profession of the Monasticall life, whom he brought out of England into Ireland. But heare what Bede saith. Colman found a place in the Isle of Ireland, meet for building of a Monastery, named in the old Scottish tongue Magia. And he bought a part of it, which was not much, of the Earle, unto whose possession it belonged, to found a Monastery therein: but with this condition annexed unto the sale, that the Monks, when they should pray unto the Lord for him also that permitted them to have the place. Now when hee had straightwaies erected this Monastery, with the helpe of the said Earle and all the neighbour inhabitants, hee placed the Englishmen there, leaving the Scots behind in the Isle Boynd. which very Monastery is inhabited at this day by Englishmen: for the Maio.

Killaley.
Bishoprick of Killaley.

Lib 4. cap. 4.

A the same it is, which now of a small one grown to be great, is usually termed, In Mago. And having now this good while turned all to better orders, it containeth a notable convent of Monkes, who being assembled there together out of the Province of England, according to the example of the reverend fathers, under Regularity and a Canonick Abbat, live in great continency and sincerity with the labour of their owne hands.

About the yeere of our Lord 1115. this monasterie was re-edified, and flourished in King Johns time, who by his Patent confirmed many farmes and faire lands unto it. Neither verily is there any other place, that I can finde memorable, unless it be Logh-Mesk a good large and fishfull Lake, in two small Islands whereof stand B sure forts, that belonged to the familie of Burke. This county is not so famous for the townes therein as the Inhabitants, who are either of the Irish race, as O-Mayles, Joies and Mac-vadus; or of the Scottish out of the Islands Hebrides, and out of the sept of Donell, whereupon they bee called Clan-Donells, all Galloglasses, and as it were, doughty mercenary souldiors, who fight with two edged axes, and be armed with habergeons or coats of maile, procured in times past to come hither by the rebels, and endowed here with lands: or else of English blood, as the said Burkes, Jordans, descended from one Jordan of Excester, Nangles of Castlough, Prendergast of Clan-Morris. But the most puissant be those Burkes, who after a fort are beholden both for their first beginning, and also for their glory unto William a younger brother of Walter de Burgo or Burk of Ulster. This William, highly renowned for his militarie prowess, being led away prisoner into Scotland, and leaving his wife behind him for an hostage, when he was restored to his owne home, by his manhood recovered Conaught (out of which in his absence all the English had been expelled by Phelim O Conor) having slaine in the field the said Phelim O Conor, Mac Dermond, Tego and Kelly, and was himselfe at last, in revenge, killed by Cormac Mac-Dermond. His grandson Thomas, by his son Edmund surnamed Albanach (because he was borne in Scotland) when he saw the goodly and rich inheritance of his owne familie, translated by a female unto Leonell Duke of Clarence, tooke it to the heart, and therefore raising a power of lewd lawlesse and desperate persons (who will be never wanting Logh-Mesk.

Galloglasses.

D in Ireland nor else where) by force and wrong seized the Patrimony of the Earles of Ulster in this County into his owne hands, and after the name of that Grandfather of his, whose glorious fame and gracious authority was then fresh in remembrance, called himselfe Mac-william, that is, the sonne of William. And his posterity under that name and title usurped a tyrannie in these parts, raging upon themselves other whiles, with mutuall injuries, and oppressing the poore people a long time with extorting, pillling and spoyling: insomuch as they left scarce one village or house in the Country unrased and unruined. This powerfull violence of theirs Sir Richard Bingham principall Commissioner, or Governour of Conaught, a man resolute, severe and valiant, fit for such a fierce and fell Province, thought not to be endured. For he well understood being prudent and politicke, that these unjust oppressions, pilllings and pillings were the principall causes of the rebellions, of barbarousnesse, and base beggary of Ireland, yea and that they drew the people away from their due obedience and allegiance to their Prince, so as that they would acknowledge no other sovereigne than their owne Lords and Captaines: he therefore to establish (what hee might) the royall power and authority there, and to overthrow this tyrannicall government of this Mac-william and of others getting head, employed with all diligence his whole care and cogitations to the uttermost: and albeit he had from time to time many imputations, suggestions, and complaints eagerly urged upon him, both before Queene Elizabeth and also the Lord Deputy, yet proceeded hee in his purpose. Contrariwise, those of the familie of Burke, their followers and dependants, that refused to obey the lawes, tooke armes and drew to band, and side with them, the Septes of the Clan-Donells, Joies and others, who distrusted themselves and their owne power, whom Bingham the Governour soone scattered: and having forced their forts, drave them into woods and lurking hooles, untill the Lord Deputy taking pittie of them, upon their hum-

Mac-William who also is called Mac-William
Eugher.
Cuttings,
Coyne, Liverey, &c.
Cause of Rebellions in Ireland.
Richard
Bingham.

ble supplication, commanded by his Missives that they should bee received upon A termes of peace. But they who by warre had troubled the peace, and knowing not how to lay downe warre for sweetnesse of peace, were no sooner relieved and raised as it were from death, but they tooke armes againe, entred afresh into actual rebellion, on, drave booties every where, and made foule uprores in all places, crying out, That they would they would set up their Mac-William, or else send for one out of Spaine: That they would not admit a Sheriffe, nor yeeld obedience to lawes. And herewith they closely procured the Scottish Ilanders from out of the Hebrides, to come over for to aide them, promising them faire lands and possessions: whereupon the Lord Deputy commanded the Governour to repress and bridle this their excessive and malapert insolence. He then immediately, when they rejected all equall and indifferent conditions offered unto B them, assembled an army, and pursued them so hotly through the woods and forests, that after six or seven weeks being grievously hunger-bitten, they most humbly submitted themselves. At which very time the auxiliary forces of the Scots aforesaid, came seeking through desert by-waies, and untravelled out waies, as closely as they could, to come into the county of Maio: but the Governour with continuall journeyes affronted them by night and day so neere, and followed upon them so hard, that in the end he intercepted them at Ardnary, & valiantly giving the charge, put them to flight, after he had killed and drowned in the river Moyn about three thousand of them. A happy victory this was, and of great consequence both for the present & future times: C whereby the rebellion, together with the title of Mac-William, was extinguished. De-nell Gormy, and Alexander Carrrough, the sons of James Mac-Conel, and those Ilanders who most of all had plagued Ireland were slaine. These occurrents have I briefly let down out of my Annales (impertinent though they be to my intended purpose) which for their worthinesse ought more at large to be penned by some Historiographer.

THE COUNTY OF SLEGO.

Somewhat higher lieth the county of Slego, a plenteous and battle country for feeding and raising of cattell, wholly also coasting upon the sea. D Betweene it and Ulster Northward runneth the river TROBIS, which Ptolomee calleth RAVIUS, as an out-let of the Lake Erne: it is severed from the neighbour counties, Le Trim and Roscoman, by the comberous Curlew hills; and the river Suc divideth it in twaine. In some place hereabout Ptolo-mee setteth the city NAGNATA; but what city it was it passeth my wit to find out.
 He hath placed also the river LIBNIUS in this tract, which through the retchlenesse of the transcribers, I reduced even now from out of exile to Dublin his owne city. But that place which Ptolomee here pointeth out, is now called THE BAY OF SLEGO, a rode full of harbours under Slego the principall place of this county: where standeth a castle, the seat at this day of the Sept of O-Conor, who of it take their ad- E dition of Slego, and fetch their pedigree, as they say themselves, from that Ratherick O-Conor Dun, who being a great man and of much puissance, bare himselfe as Monarch of Ireland, what time as the English entred first into Ireland, & hardly yeelded himselfe unto King Henry the second, although in words he professed submission, and oftentimes raising tumults (as an author without name of that age writeth) used ever and anon to cry out and say, That these words following of Adrian the Pope, in his Patent or Charter made unto the King of England, were prejudiciall unto him:
Enter you into that Iland, and execute whatsoever shall concerne the glory of God, and the salvation of that land: and let the people of the said land receive you and honour you as their Lord: untill such time as Pope Alexander the third by a new Bull or Charter F of his, had confirmed in like manner unto the Kings of England their right to Ireland:
 for then became he more tractable, and condescended unto more equall conditions, as I shall shew anon. After these O Conors, the greatest men of name in this territory are O Don, O Haru, O Ghar, and Mac-Donagh.

Nagnata.

Diplomat. l. 2.
 c. 6 Girald.
 Cambren. de expugnatio.
 Hibern p. 787.

THE

THE COUNTY OF LETRIM.

The County of Slego Eastward is enclosed with Breany, the possession of the ancient family of O-Rorck, which drew their descent from Ratherick Monarch of Ireland, whom they by contraction (which they take pleasure in) terme Rorck, untill that Brien O Rorck, Lord of Breany and Minterolife, fed with vaihe hopes by Pope Sixtus Quintus, and the King of Spaine, had perfidiously cast off his allegiance to Queene Elizabeth, and taken armes: who being streightwaies chased into Scotland, and sent backe into England, suffered for his inconsiderate rashnesse due punishment upon the gallowes, and his lands were adjudged to the Crown. This Breany, by John Perot Lord Deputie was made a county, and of the chiefe towne called Le-Trim, which riseth up throughout with hills, full of ranke grasse; yet not so, as that it should be altogether true which Solinus reporteth of Ireland: namely, that it is so full of forage, that unlesse cattell were kept other whiles from grasing, their fulnesse would endanger them. And so much cattell it feedeth, that within the little circuit which it hath, it may reckon at one time above a hundred and twenty thousand head of beafts. In this stan-deth Athony Bishopricke, united now to the See of Elphin. And Shannon, the Soveraigne of all rivers in Ireland, hath here his spring-head; which being one while narrower, and another while broader, with divers turning and winding reaches that he makes, washeth and watereth of either side, as I have said, many a country. The principall families be O Rorck, O Murreies, Mac Lochleims, Mac Glanchies, and Mac Graneller, all meere and stark Irish. Whereas John Burgh, sonne to Richard the Earle of Clan-Ricards, was created by Queene Elizabeth Baron Le-Trim, who was afterward slaine by his envious concurrents, I cannot say whether he had that title of this Le-Trim, or of some other place in this kingdome.

THE COUNTY OF ROSCOMAN.

Under the county of Leirim Southward lieth ROSCOMAN, ordained to be a county by Henry Sidney Lord Deputy; lying out a good length, but narrow; closed up between the two rivers Suc Westward, and Sha-non Eastward, and on the North side bounded with Curlew mountaines.
 A territory it is for the most part plaine, fruitfull, feeding many herds of cattell, and with meane husbandry and tillage yeeldeth plenty of corne. Where it beareth Northward, the steepe mountaines of Curlew perke up aloft, and those impassable untill by the carefull industry of George Bingham there was a way cut out: which Curlews not long since became more notorious, for the disastrous death of Sir Comi-Eers Clifford, and (by his default) for the slaughter with him of most valiant and experienced souldiers. In this county are reckoned foure Baronies. Under Curlew hills, by the river Shanon, the Baronic of Boyle first commeth in view: where was founded in times past a famous Abbey, in the yeere 1152. together with the Abbey of Beatitude, and Mac Dermot ruleth all there as Lord; then by the river Suc lieth the Baro-nic Balin Tober, where O Conor Dun is of the greatest command: and upon it joineeth Elphen an Episcopall See. Somewhat lower is Roscoman, the Baronic of O Conor Roo, that is, Conor the red, wherein is seated the chiefe towne of the whole countie, fenced in times past with a castle by Robert Ufford Lord Justice of Ireland; but all the houses are mean and thatched; and more Southward, Aibloné the Baronic of the F O Kellies, so named of the head towne, which hath a castle and ward in it, also a most beautifull bridge of hewen stone, which to the great terrour of seditious rebels, Queen Elizabeth in our memory appointing Henry Sidney Lord Deputy of Ireland overseer thereof, caused to be built, with a purpose to constitute in that place (as most fit of all others in Ireland to repress seditious) the seat of residence for the Lords Deputies: and thus much for the Counties of Conaght.

Curlew hills.

Barony of Boyle.

Balin Tober.

Iiii 3

LORDS

LORDS OF CONAGHT.

For the Lords of Conaght, wee finde it recorded in the Irish histories, that Turlough O Mor O Conor ruled absolutely in old time this country, and divided it wholly betweene his two sonnes, Cabel and Brien. But at the Englishmens first arrivall into Ireland, Roshericke bare rule, who stiled himselfe Monarch of Ireland, yet being put in feare with the great preparation for the English warre hanging so neere over his head, he betooke himselfe into the protection of King Henry the second, without trying the hazzard of battell. But when as forthwith he brake his allegiance, and revolted, Miles Cogan was the first Englishman that gave the attempt upon Conaght, yet sped hee not in his enterprise. Howbeit that King of Conaght above said, was driven to this exigent, as to acknowledge himselfe the King of Englands Liege-man, to serve him faithfully as his man, and to pay unto him yeerely of every tenth best, one hide mercable, &c. And King John granted that the third part of Conaght should remaine unto him still, to be held hereditarily for an hundred Markes. But William Fitz-A-delme, whose posterity are called in Latin de Burgo, and Burke or Bourke in Irish, Robert Muscegros, Gilbert Clare Earle of Gloster, and William de Birmingham were the first English that fully subdued this country, and laboured to bring it to civill government. And William Bourk and his lineall posterity, being called Lords of all Conaght, governed that province, together with Ulster, for a long time in great peace and tranquillity, yea and raised thereout rich revenues, untill the onely daughter of William Burke, sole heire in grosse of Conaght and Ulster both, was matched in marriage with Leonell Duke of Clarence, King Edward the thirds sonne. But when as he abode for the most part in England, and the Mortimers his heires and successours looked but negligently to their patrimony and inheritance in Ireland, the Bourkes there allies, whom they had appointed as overseers of their lands, taking the advantage of their Lords absence, and presuming upon the troubles in England, despising the authority of lawes, entring into alliance with the Irish, and contracting marriage with them, seized upon all Conaght to their owne behoofe, and degenerating by little and little, have laid downe English civility, and taken up Irish behaviour. Whereof some, who fetched their pedigree from Richard Burke, were called Clan-Ricard; others, Mac William Oughier, that is, The upper; others, Mac William Eughier, that is, The lower; even as they who in the countie of Maio were of greatest power and authority, affected to be tearmed simply Mac-William, as being a name full of honour, glory, and authority, because they descended from William de Burgo, or Burke, whom I mentioned erewhile: under countenance of which name, they for a long time tyrannized over the poore inhabitants with most grievous exactions.

ULTONIA,

OR

ULSTER.

LL the land beyond the mouth of the river Boyn, Meath, the County Longford, and the mouth of the river Kavie that stretcheth Northward, is counted the fifth part of Ireland, called in Latin Ultonia, and Ulidia, in English Ulster, in Irish Cui Guilly, that is, The Province Guilly, and of our Welsh Britans Ulsw. Which Province was wholly inhabited in Ptolomees time by the VOLUNTII, DARNI, ROBOGDII, and ERDINI: A large country, bespiced with many, and those very large loghes and lakes, shaded with many and thicke woods, in some places fruitfull, in others barren, howbeit fresh and green to see to in every place, and replenished with cattell. But as the country for want of manuring is growne to be rough,

Rog. Hoveden.
Anno 1175.
pag. 112.

A rough, so the naturall dispositions of the people, wanting civill discipline, are become most wild and barbarous. Yet to the end that they might be kept within the bounds of their duty, who were wont to breake in funder all bands of equity, of honesty, and of duty, the hecher part of it was in times past divided into three counties, Louth, Downe, and Antrim: and now the rest is laid out into seven new counties, that is to say, Cavan, Fermanagh, Monaghan, Armagh, Calran, Tyr-Oen, and Donegall or Tir-Conell, by the provident care of Sir John Perot L. Deputy: who being a notable and worthy man, well acquainted with the humours and haughty spirits of the Province, foreseeing that no policy would serve better to appease the tumults of Ireland, than to reduce these parts of Ulster into order, and to keepe them downe; going thither in a dangerous and ticklish time, when the King of Spaine hovered and gaped both for Ireland and England; with his gravitie and authority, whiles by barring all wrongs, hee did cut off the causes and quarrells of warre, brought all the Potentates or Captaines of Ulster to this passe, that willingly they suffered their Seignories to be divided into Counties, and Sheriffes to be appointed for the government thereof. But he being within a while after recalled home, and climbing still higher unto honours, the heave displeasure and envie of some, whom hee was not able to counterpoise, and his owne lavish tongue together (for unadvisedly he had let flye somewhat against the Princes Majestie, which to impaire in word is a capitall matter) plunged him headlong ere he was aware upon his owne destruction, as I have declared elsewhere more amply.

John Perot
Lord Deputy.
1585.

THE COUNTIE OF LOUTH.

HE county of Louth, in ancient bookes written Luvu and Luda, called in the Irish tongue Iriel or Uriel (if that be not rather a part of this territory situate beyond Meath and the mouth of the river Boyn, turning full upon the Irish sea, runneth out with a shore much winding into the North; the soile whereof is so full of forage and so fruitfull, that it soone answereth and recompenseth the husband mans toile and charges.

Uriel, in Latin Urgalia.

Neere unto Boynes mouth is seated Drogheda, or Droghda, in English Tredagh, a fine towne, well peopled and frequented, so called of the bridge, and divided by the river Boyne running through it. Unto which King Edward the second, for Theobald Verdons sake, granted licence for a mercate and faire; the Kings confirmed many and great liberties, and among other a Mint. Neere unto this standeth Mellifont Abbey founded by Donald a King of Uriel, and much praised by Saint Bernard: which Queene Elizabeth (when as the religious Monkes were before thrust out) gave unto Sir Edward More of Kent, for his good deserts both at home, and abroad in the warres.

Tredagh.

Mellifont Abbey.

Ardeib seven miles from hence is a dry in-land towne well knowne: and above it Dundalk, with a commodious haven, and in times past strongly walled; which Edward Bruu, brother to the King of Scots, who had proclaimed himselfe King of Ireland, burnt: but hee within a while after was with eight thousand two hundred of his men slaine neere thereabout. And in our remembrance Shan O Neale laied siege unto it, but straightwaies hee was forced with shame enough to dislodge. Eight miles from hence standeth Carlingford, a port also of good request and resort: neither be there, to my knowledge, any other places in this county worth the naming.

Dundalk.

Carlingford.

F This Louth had for Earle Sir John Birmingham an Englishman, whom in reward of his martiall valour, when hee had discomfited and in a pitcht field slaine that Edward Bruu, who assuming the title of King of Ireland for a time, had made foule work with fire and sword in Ireland, King Edward the second advanced to the honour of Earle of Louth, to have unto him and his heires males, and withall, the dignity of Baron of Arberny, so him and his heires. But this honourable title, as it began, so it ended in Birmingham, who also is called Brimicham.

Earle of Louth.

in him; for he that in warre vanquished his enemies, was soone after in a tumult of A rebellious people vanquished and slaine by his owne men in this territory, with many other of his surname, leaving no issue behinde him. But in our fathers remembrance King Henry the eighth honoured Sir Oliver Plunket with the title of Baron of Louth. There remaine in this county, the Ferdons, Tates, Clintons, Belles, Dowdals, Gernons, Hadfors, Wottons, Brandons, Mores, Warrens, Chamberlanes and very many besides of English blood; and of the Irish the Mac-Mahons, &c.

Baron Louth.

THE COUNTY OF CAVON.

East Breany.

O Reily.

Kilmore Bishopricke.

Poore Bishops.

The county of CAVON lieth next unto Louth to the West, called in times past East Breany, the habitation of the O-Reileys, who vaunt themselves to have had their beginning of the Ridleys in England, whereas in their whole course and manner of life they be mere Irish. These O-Reileys not long since were of great power in horsemen: but to the end they might be that way lesse powerfull, Sir Henry Sidney in his policy divided their county into seven Baronies; whereof the Lords out of that family should immediately hold the same by service, in fee from the Crowne of England. They dwell scattering in piles and ferts, not in towns. A Bishop they have of their own, and him a poore one, God he knoweth, whose See is at Kilmore: and yet is not he so poore as those Irish Bishops were, who had no other rents and revenues than three milch kine, which the parishioners exchanged for others new milch when they went dry, according as Adam Bremenfis from their owne relation, when they returned by Germany out of Italy, learned and put downe in writing.

THE COUNTY OF FERMANAGH.

Lough-Erne.

Bal-tarber.

Belek.

Beyond Cavan West and North FERMANAGH presenteth it selfe, where sometimes the ERDINI dwelt, a country full of woods, and very boggyish. In the midst whereof is that most famous and the greatest Meere of all Ireland, Lough Erne, stretching out 40. miles, bordered about with shady woods, and passing full of inhabited Ilands: whereof some containe an hundred, two hundred, and three hundred Acres of ground: having besides such store of Pikes, Trouts, and Salmones, that the fishermen complain oftner of too great plenty of fishes, and of the breaking of their nets, than they doe for want of draught. This Lake spreadeth not from East to West (as it is described in the common Maps) but as I have heard those say who have taken a long and good survey thereof, first at Bal-Tarber, which is a little towne farthest North of any in this county of Cavan; it stretcheth from South to North foureteene miles in length, and foure in bredth. Anon it draweth in narrow, to the bignesse of a good river, for six miles; in the chanell whereof standeth Inis Killin, the principall castle in this tract, which in the yeere 1593. was defended by the rebels, and by Dowdall a most valiant Captaine won. Then turning Westward, it enlargeth it selfe most of all, twenty miles long, and ten broad, as far as to Belek: neere unto which is a great downefall of water, and as they terme it, that most renowned Salmons Leape. A common speech is current among the inhabitants there by, that this Lake was once firme ground, passing well husbanded with tillage, and replenished with inhabitants; but suddenly, for their abominable buggery committed with beasts, overflowne with waters, and turned into a Lake. The Almighty God (saith Giraldus) Creator of Nature, judged this land privie to so filthy acts against Nature, unworthy to hold not only the first inhabitants, but any others for the time to come. Howbeit this wickednesse the Irish Annales lay upon certaine Ilanders out of the Hebrides, who being fled out of their owne Countrey lurked there. Among the Lords in this tract, Mac-Gwir was most noble and powerfull, untill he overthrew himselfe and his state in the late rebellion. And they that be of that Sept dwell on both sides, yet so as that those beyond the Lake are reckoned of Ulster, and they on this side of Conaght.

THE

THE COUNTY MONAGHAN.

Long the Lough-Erne, on the East side, stretcheth out the Countie Monaghan, mounting aloft with hills, well attired with woods, but knowne by no towne at all (unlesse it be Monaghan, which imparted the name unto the whole country.) It is divided into five Baronies, & containeth Iriel, Dartre, Ferey, Loughy (which by authority of Parliament were for rebellion, given away from the Mac-Mahons) with the little territory Donemain, which Queen Elizabeth bestowed upon Walter D'Evereux Earle of Essex.

Those Mac-Mahons, that is, if we interpret it out of the Irish language, The Sons of Ursu, or the Beare, ruled here as tyrannicall Lords a long time, and derive their Genealogy from Walter Fitz-Urse, who imbrued his hands with the bloody murdering of Thomas Archbishop of Canterbury. The most puissant of these, after the manner of that nation, tooke upon him to Lord it over the rest, and by way of excellency was termed Mac-Mahon. About which preheminance, when as of late daies they of that Sept or Family were at most bitter debate, by way of hard words, open armes, foule practises, yea and close corruptions, Sir William Fitz-William the Lord Deputy came hither among them, and judicially convened Hugh-Roe, Mac-Mahon, whom he by his authority had set up in this Seigniori, and being upon his triall condemned of treason, caused him to be hanged: and to the end that he might suppress for ever both the name and sovereignty of Mac-Mahon, he divided the territory betwene the kindred of the said Hugh, and certaine Englishmen, to have and to hold after the English tenure, to them and theirs.

Mac-Mahon.

Fitz-Urse.

1590.

THE COUNTY ARMAGH.

In the East side again lieth out in length the county of Armagh, so as that it is compassed as it were about with the river Neury by East, with the county of Louth by South, and with the Black-water by North. A County, as I have sundry times heard the Earle of Denshire Lord Lieutenant Generall say, that for a most rich and battle soile passeth all other parts of Ireland, inasmuch as if any compost be laid upon it to make it more fruitfull, it scornereth and disdaineth, as one would say, the same, and becommeth barren. The first place in it that we meet with, is Fewes, a little territory belonging to Turlough Mac-Henry, one of the family of O-Neale, thicke set with woods, and by reason of loughs and bogs unpassable. Then have you Orry, as scarce of woods, where dwelleth O-Hanlan, and the fort Mont-Norris, built by Charles Baron Mont-joy when he was Lord Deputy, and so named in honour of Sir John Norris, under whom he had served first, and was trained in military discipline. Eight miles from hence, neere unto the river Kalin, Armagh maketh a poore shew, albeit it is the Archiepiscopall See, and Metropolitane of the whole Iland. The Irish talke much, that it was so called of Queen Armacha: but in mine opinion it is the very same that Bede nameth Dearmach, and out of the Scottish or Irish language interpreteth it, The field of Okes. But it was named Drumfai-lich, before that Saint Patrick had built there a proper faire City, for sue, forme, quantity, and compasse, modelled out, as hee saith, by the appointment and direction of Angels. That Patrick I say, who being a Britan borne, and Saint Martins sisters sonne, named at his Baptisme Sucas, was sold into Ireland, where he became Heardman to King Miluc, afterwards was named by Saint German, whose disciple hee was, Magonius, as a Nurse-Father, out of a British word: and by Pope Celestine, Patrick, as a Father of the Citizens, and by him sent over to catechize Ireland in the Christian faith: which notwithstanding some had received there before, as wee may gather out of an old Synodall, wherein is urged the testimony of Patrick himselfe, against that consure or shaving of Priests which had bene used before his time in Ireland; whereby they were shaven only on the fore part of the head, and

Charles Blunt.
L. Mont-joy.

Fewes.

Orry.

Mont-Norris.

Armagh.

S. Patrick.
Vita Patricii.
Marianus
Scotus.

The Irish shaving.

See Bed. l. 5. c.
22.

S. Bernard in the life of Ma-lachy.

and not on the Crowne. Which manner of having he seemeth by way of contempt A to father upon a certaine Swineherd of King Lagerius the sonne of Nell: and the writ-ters of that age cried out, that it was Simon Magus his having, and not S. Peters: In this place about the yeere of our salvation 610. Columbane built a most famous Monastery, out of which very many Monasteries afterwards were propagated by his disciples, both in Britain and in Ireland. Of this Armach S. Bernard thus writeth. In honour of S. Patrick the Apostle of Ireland, who here by his life time ruled, and after death rested;
it is the Archiepiscopall seat and Metropolitane City of all Ireland, and of so venerable estimation in old time, that not only Bishops and Priests, but Kings also and Princes in generall, were subject to the Metropolitane thereof in all obedience, and he alone governed them all. But through the diabolish ambition of some mighty Potentates, there was taken up a very bad custome, that this holy See should be obtained and held in hereditary succession;
neither suffered they any to be Bishops, but such as were of their owne Clan, Tribe, and Family. Neither prevailed this execrable succession a little, but continued this wicked manner for the space well neere of fifteen generations.

When in proceffe of time the Ecclesiasticall discipline in this Iland was growne loose, so as in townes and cities, there were translations and plurality of Bishops, according to the will and pleasure of the Metropolitane; for reformation of this abuse, John Papyrio a Cardinall was sent hither from Pope Eugenius the fourth, as a namelesse writer then living wrote in these words. In the yeere of our Lord 1142. C John Papyrio, a Cardinall sent from Eugenius the fourth Bishop of Rome, together with Christian Bishop of Lismore Legate of all Ireland, came into Ireland. The same Christi- an held a solemne Counsell in Mell, at which were present all the Bishops, Abbats, Kings, Dukes, and Elders of Ireland: By whose consent there were established foure Archbishopricks, namely, of Armach, of Dublin, of Casile, and Toam. wherein Sae and ruled at the same time, Gelasius, Gregorius, Donatus, and Edanus: and so the Cardinall bestowing his blessing upon the Clergie, returned to Rome. For before that time, the Bishops of Ireland were wont to be consecrated by the Archbishops of Canterbury, in regard of the Primacy which they had in Ireland. This did the Citizens of Dublin acknowledge, when they sent Gregory elect Bishop of Dublin, unto Ralph Archbishop D of Canterbury for to be consecrated, by these words, Antecessorum vestrorum Magi- sterio, &c. that is, Unto the Magistracy of your Predecessors we willingly submitted our (Prelats) from which we remember that our Prelats have received their dignity Ecclesiasticall, &c. which appeareth for certain out of letters also bearing date of greater antiquity, namely, of Murchertach King of Ireland, written unto Anselm Archbishop of Canterbury, for the ordaining and entalling of the Bishops of Dublin and of Water- ford: likewise of King Gothrich unto Lanfrank his predecessor, in the behalfe of one Patrick a Bishop: of Lanfrank also unto Therdeluas a King of Ireland, unto whom he complaineth, That the Irishmen forsake and leave at their pleasure their wedded wives, without any canonick cause, and march with any others, even such as be neere of kinne, either to themselves or the said forsaken wives; and if another man with like wickednesse hath cast off any wife, her also rashly and hand over head they joine with, by law of marriage, or fornication rather: an abuse worthy to be punished. With which vices if this nation had not bin corrupted even unto these daies of ours, both the right of lineall succession among them had been more certain, and as well the gentry as the communal-ty had not embred themselves so wickedly with the effusion of so much blood of their owne kinred, about their inheritances and legitimation, neither had they become so infamous in these respects among forraigne nations. But these matters are exorbitant of themselves, and from my purpose.

Long had not that Archiepiscopall dignity and Primacy beene established, when F Pravian the Popes Legate confirmed the same againe; so that their opinion may seeme to be worthy of discredit and refutation, who affirme that the Archbishop of Armach had in regard of antiquity the priority and superiour place of the Archbishop of Canterbury in the Generall or Oecumenicall Councils; whereas by the first institution hee is by many ages the latter. Neither according to the antiquitie
of

A of places are the seats in Councils appointed. But all Prelates, of what degree soever they be, sit among their Colleagues, according to their owne ordination, entalling, and promotion.

What time as that Pravian was Legate in Ireland, Sir John Currey subdued Armach and made it subject to the English: and yet did he no harme then, but is reported to have beene very good and bountifull unto the Churchmen that served God there, and he re-edified their Church, which in our memory was fired and foulely defaced by the rebell Sham O Neale, and the city withall, so that they lost all the ancient beauty and glory, and nothing remaineth at this day but very few small warled cor-B tages, with the ruinous walls of the Monastery, Priory, and Primates palace. Among the Archbishops of this place, there goes the greatest fame and name of S. Malachy, the first that prohibited Priests marriage in Ireland, a man in his time learned and devout, and who tooke no lesse of the native barbarousnesse of that country, than sea fishes salinesse of the seas, as saith S. Bernard, who wrote his life at large: also Richard Fuz-Raffe, commonly called Armachanus, is of famous memory, who turned the edge of his stile about the yeere 1355. against the mendicant Friars, as detesting in Christians such voluntary begging. Neere to Armach, upon a rising hill, remain the reliques of an old castle (Owen-Maugh they call it) which was, as they say, the ancient habitation of the Kings of Ulster. More East glideth the Black-water (in the Irish C tongue More, that is, Great) which is the limit betweene this shire and Tir-Oen, whereof I am to speak in dae place. In this country and about it Mac-Genis, O Han- lan, O Hagan, and many of the sept of O-Neal, assuming unto them fundry additions and by-names, carry all the sway after a sort, and over-rule the rest.

THE COUNTY OF DOWNE.

Asward now followeth the county of DOWNE, and that very large and fertile in soile, stretched out even as farre as to the Irish sea, reaching on the North side to the Lake Eaugh, by a new name called Lough Sidney, and on the South to the county of Louth, from which the river Newry severeth it. Upon this river, in the very first entrance into this shire, within our remembrance Sir Nicolas Bagnall Marchall of Ireland, who by his conduct achieved here divers exploits, and reduced the country to more civility, built and fortified a towne of the same name. Hard by it, the river called Ban- belesse, issuing out of the desert mountaines of Maurne, passeth through the country of Eaugh, which belongeth to the family of Mac Gynnis. Betweene whom and the O Neals, who tyrannized in Ulster, there fell in times past a controversy, whether they were vassals to O Neale, and whether they should find their followers and soul-diers victuals, &c. (this kind of service they call Bonaghey). This hath unto it an Epi-F scopall See at Dromore, above which at the edge of Lough Eaugh, are the tracts of Kilwha and Kilmarny, much encombred with woods and bogges. These lye inwardly: but by the maritime coast the sea doth so wind it selfe in, and with sundry Creeks and Bayes encroach within the land, yea and the Lough and Lake dilate it selfe beside Dyffrin, a valley full of woods, the inheritance in old time of the Mandevils, afterwards of the Whites, in such sort that it maketh two bilands; Leall Southward, and Ardes Northward. Leall, a rich and harte ground, beareth out farthest into the East of any part of Ireland, and is the utmost Promontory or cape thereof, which the Mariners now terme Saint Johns Foreland, Prolema calleth it. Leall is a name perhaps of the British word Ips, which signifieth Lanest. In the very streight whereof flow-F rished Dunam, whereof Prolema also made mention (though not in the right place) now named Down, a towne of very great antiquity, and a Bishops See, renowned by the tombe of Saint Patrick, Saint Brigid, and Saint Columba, upon which was written this rude riming distichon:

Matres in Bonocumulo immolantur in uno, Brigida, Patricium, acque Columba pium.

Lib. 1. Cetermanorum sacra-
Sed. 14.

Isantium the Promontory.

Dunum.
Downe.

At Down these three lie buried in one tombe,
Brigid, Patrick, and that devout Colum.

A

Saint Patrick's Sepulcher.

Which monument of theirs, as the bruit runneth, was demolished by the Lord Leonard Grey, Deputy under King Henrie the eighth: and sure it is, that when he was arraigned for misgoverning, and condemned therefore to death, among other imputations he was charged, that he had profaned this Cathedral Church of Saint Patrick. But as touching the Sepulcher of Saint Patrick, the religious Priests were at variance, like as the Cities of Greece in times past strove about the native country of the Poet Homer: These of Downe challenge it to themselves, and that upon the authority of the verses aforesaid: Those of Armagh put in their claime out of the words of Saint Bernard, which erewhile I alledged: The Monkes of Glasfenbury in England averred it to be with them, and that out of the old Records and Evidences of their Abbey: and some Scots have likewise avouched, that as he was borne nere unto Glasco, so likewise he was enterr'd there at Kirk-Patrick. Into this Down, Sir John Curcy, that Martiall Englishman, and (for a Warrior) extraordinarily devout to Godward, after hee had brought this country in subjection unto him, was the first that brought in the Benedictine Monkes: and he translated the Monasterie of Cariche, which Mac Neal, Mac Eulef King of Ulster had founded in Erinach neere unto S. Finins Fountaine, into the Isle called after his name Ynis-Curcy, and endowed the same with lands assigned for it. For before time the Monkes of Ireland, as those of ancient times in Egypt, whose maner and order that devout man Congell, that is by interpretation, A faire pledge, brought over into Ireland, being wholly givento prayer, earned for themselves and the poore their living, with the labour of their own hands. Howbeit, these Monasticall orders and customes (as all humane things) continued not long, when their maners and carriage grew to be worse, and riches had by little and little polluted piety, which as a mother, had formerly bred them. Robert Abbat of Molisime in Burgundie studied and endeavoured earnestly in times past to reduce and set on foot againe the said ancient Discipline: and perswaded his Disciples to live with their handy labour, to leave Tithes and Oblations unto the Priests that served in the Diocesse, to forbear wearing of Breeches made of woven cloth, or of leather. But they labouring to the contrary, refused flatly to goe from the customes observed in the Monasteries of the west parts of the world, which were knowne for certaine, to have been instituted and ordained by Saint Maure scholar to Saint Benet, and by Saint Columban. But I have digressed too farre, now will I returne againe. By the sea-side stand Arglas, where Saint Patrick, by report, founded a Church: and Strangford, called in old time Strandford, a safe harbour, where the river Coyn with a great and violent streame breaketh into the Sea. Neere unto which, in the Biland Lecale, Queene Mary in her great bounty unto Noblemen liberally gave lands unto the Earle of Kildare. And here, of the English race the Russells, Audleys, Whites, and the Bagnells who came thither last, stoutly defend, among the wild and fierce Irish, not without danger, what they and their ancestours won in these parts.

Robert de Monts, de Im-mutatione Ordinis Monach-orum.

Ardes, the other Biland called The Ander, lieth over against it to the North, severed with a small chanell out of the Logh-Coim, which on the West side encloseth it, like as the sea on the East side, and the Bay of Knock-Fergus on the North. You may resemble it to the bent of the arme, which by a very narrow Isthmus or necke of land groweth to the rest of the Island, like as an arme to the shoulder. The soile is every where passing good and bountifull, but only in the mids, where lieth our fortwelve miles or thereabout in length, a moist, flat, and boggy plaine. The shore is sufficiently beset with small villages, and in times past had a most renowned Monasterie at the Bay of Knock-Fergus, of the same institution, order, and name, as was that right ancient and famous Abbey in England neere unto Chester, I meane, Banbor. Out of whether of these twaine that Arch-hereticke Pelagius came, it is uncertaine, whiles some will needs have him to spring from hence, others from that in Britaine: but neither of them grounding upon any certaine warrant of authority. Howbeit, certaine

Banbor
Abbey.

A certaine it is that he was of Britaine, as may appeare by other testimonies, as also by this distichon of Prosper Aquitanus, inveying against his impiety.

Pelagius the Arch-hereticke.

*I procul insana impietas, artesque malignas
Aufer, & auctorem comitare exclusa Britannum.*

Avaunt far hence impiety, and lewd Arts take with thee,
Once gone, with British fire of thine keep alwaies company.

But touching this place, heare what S. Bernard saith: A rich and mighty man gave a place called Banbor unto Malachy, to build, or rather to re-edifie there a Monastery. It had been ywis a most noble house before time, under the first founder and father Congel, breeding many thousand Monkes, and the head likewise of many Monasteries. A holy place in truth, and a breeder of many Saints, most plentifully fructifying unto God: so that one of the sons of that holy congregation, named Luan, is reported to have been the founder of an hundred Monasteries. Which I have bene more willing to relate, that by this one the reader may give a ghesse what a mighty multitude there was beside. Thus at length the sprouts thereof replenished Ireland and Scotland. From out of which S. Columban comming up to these parts of ours here in France, built the Monastery of Luxovium, which grew to a mighty multitude. And so great an Abbey by report this was, that the solemnity of divine service held out continually in one quire after another: so that there was not one moment of time, night or day, without singing praises. Take all this to be spoken of the ancient glory of Banbor Monastery. Malachia both in regard of the noble name that it bare, and of the ancient dignity, especially liked this place, although it was destroyed; as minding to replant it, like unto a certain garden or Paradise; as also because many bodies of Saints slepe there. For, to say nothing of those that were buried in peace, it is reported that 900. in one day were slaine by Pirats. Verily the possessions belonging to that place were great: But Malachias contenting himselfe only with the site of the holy place, surrendered the possessions and lands wholly to another: for from the time that the Monastery was destroyed, there wanted not one to hold it with the livings thereto belonging: For they were ordained by election also, and called Abbats, keeping still in name, though it were not so in deed, as it had been in old time. And when many gave advice not to alienate the possessions, but to retaine the whole together unto themselves, this professor of poverty agreed not thereto, but caused, according to the custome, one to bee chosen for to hold the same, reserving onely to himselfe and his the place, as I have before said. Moreover, within a few daies there was the Oratory or Church finished, of timber peeces made smooth but firmly and firmly knit together (a Scottish kind of work, faire and beautifull enough.) Afterwards Malachy thought it good to have a Church built of stone, proportioned like to those which he had seene built in other countries. And when hee had begun to lay the foundation, the native inhabitants of the counrey began to make a wonder thereat, because there were not found in that land as yet such maner of buildings: and thereupon one cried out, O good Sir, what meane you to bring in this new fashion into our countries? Scots we are and not French. What vanity is this? what need was there of such worke, so superfluous, so proud, and so glorious?

In the life of Malachias.

More inward, hard by the Lake is the Bishops See of Conereth or Coner, where sat the said Malachy as Bishop. But what manner of flock this so holy a Pastor fed, listen unto S. Bernard. Malachy in the thirtieth yeere almost of his age, was brought in and presented a consecrated Bishop of Conereth, for this was the cities name. Now when as he began to execute his function according to his office, then perceived this man of God, that it was his lot to come not unto men, but unto beasts. No where had he to that time experience of such, in the most barbarous parts that ever he came unto: No where had he found for manners so forward, for rites so dwellish, for faith so impious, for lawes so barbarous, for discipline so stiffe necked, and for life so slishy. Christians they were in name, and Pagans in deed. Tithes and first fruits they gave none, lawfull marriage they contracted none, confessions they made none, to crave or to give pennance there could be found none: And Ministers of the Altar there were very few or none: But what needs many

Bishoprick of Coner.

Kkkk

words &

words? where the very paucity and fewnesse among the lay persons, was in manner idle and A imploied about nothing, no fruit was to be expected by their dauses and sanctitions among so leud a people. For in the Churches there was heard neither voice of Preacher nor sound of singing. What should the Lords champion doe in this case? either wee must yeeld with shame, or bicker in jeopardy. But he who acknowledged himselfe to be a Shepherd, and not an hireling, chose rather to stand to it than to flye, ready to give his life for his sheep if it so behoved. And albeit they were all wolves and no sheepe, in the midst of wolves he stood as a fearlesse Shepherd, by all meanes casting about how to make of wolves sheepe. Thus wrote Saint Bernard; and little better can he that is Bishop there at this day say, as I heare, of his wilde flocke hereabout.

Savage.

This Ardes, the Savages, an English family in times past held in possession: a mongst whom there goeth a great name of him, who said no lesse stoutly than pleasantly, when he was moved to build a castle for his defence, That he would not trust to a castle of stones, but rather to a castle of bones, meaning thereby his owne bodie. Afterward the O-Neals wrekted it out of their hands: who being attainted of high treason, by permission of Queene Elizabeth, Sir Thomas Smith Knight, and the Queenes Secretary planted a Colonie there not long since: a worthy adventure, but it sped unhappily. For after great expences defraied, the Irish by a traine caught his base sonne, whom hee had made Captaine and ruler thereof, and cruelly cast him to hungry dogges: for which barbarous cruelty, those most wicked wretches suffered afterward most grievous punishment accordingly, being killed and given C unto Wolves to bee devoured. Above Ardes Westward the more Southerne Clan-boy, that is, the Yellow Nation or Sept, or the kinred of Hugh the Yellow, a country very full of woods, reacheth as farre as to the bay of Knock-Fergus, inhabited by the Sept of the O-Neales, and is counted the farthest territorie of this county of Downe.

Upper Clane-
Boy.

THE COUNTY OF ANTRIM.

ANTRIM, the next County in order unto Lough Northward, is that of AN-TRIM, so called of Antrim a base townelet of small reckoning at all, had it not imparted the name unto the whole countrey, which lieth betwene the Bay of Knock-Fergus, Lough Eaugh, and the river Ban. This Bay of Knock-Fergus which Ptolomee termeth VINDRIS, took name of a towne situate upon it, which the English call Knock-Fergus, the Irish Carig-Fergus, that is, the Rock of Fergus, of that most renowned Fergus, who first brought the Scottish out of Ireland into Britaine, there drowned. This is well inhabited and more frequented than the rest in this coast, by reason of the commodious haven, although the block-houses thereto be unfinished, having a fortresse pitched upon an high rocke, a ward of garrison souldiers to keepe the countrey in awe and good order, with an ancient E palace converted now into Magazin. Hard by it lieth the Nether Clane-Boy, which also was the habitation of O-Neales, notable for the death of that most leud rebell, Shan or John O-Neal, who after many robberies and sacrileages committed, being in one or two skirmishes under the leading of Sir Henry Sidney Lord Deputy, vanquished and weakened, was brought to that exigent, that hee was resolved to goe unto the Deputy with an halter about his neck and submissely to crave pardon: but being perfwaded by his Scribe first for aide of certaine Scots of the Islands, who under the conduct of Alexander Oge had encamped themselves here, and preyed in the countrey, hee came unto them, who gave him friendly entertainment, and presently massacted him and all his company in revenge of their kinsfolke whom hee F had before slaine. By whose death the warre being ended, and himselfe with all those that went with him into the field attainted, Queene Elizabeth granted this Claneboy unto Walter D'Eureux Earle of Essex, who crossed over the seas hither, and, I wot not, whether under a goodly colour of honour (for chosen he was Gover-nour of Ulster and Marechal of Ireland) hee was by the politicke praedice of some Courtiers

Knock-Fergus.

Nether Clane-
Boy.

A Courtiers finely packed away into a Country alwaies rebellious and untamed. But whiles with the exence of a mighty masse of money hee went about to reduce it to good order, after hee had beene crossed and tossed with many troubles both at home and abroad in the warres, hee was by untimely death taken out of this world, leaving unto all good men a wonderfull misse of himselfe, and this Country unto the O-Neales and Brian Carragh, of the Mac-Conells race, who since that time have gone together by the eares, and committed many murders one upon another, about the sovereignty of this Seigniory.

Neere unto Knock-Fergus there is a By-land, with a narrow necke (as it were) an-nexed to the maine, which notwithstanding is called the Isle of Magie, taking up foure miles in length and one in bredth: wherein, as some suppose, flourished that Monasterie of Magio so highly praised by Bede: whereof I have made mention before in the County of Majo.

Isle of Magie.

Then the Glinnes, that is, the Valleys, begin at Older-Fleet, a bad road for ships, and run out a great length upon the sea. This country belonged in ancient times to the Bissers Noblemen of Scotland, who when upon private grudges and quarrels they had made away Patrick Earle of Athol, were banished hither, and through the beneficiall favour of Henry the Third King of England, received Lands here.
 For John Bisset, who died in the beginning of Edward the First his reigne, had large possessions heere, and under King Edward the Second, Hugh Bisset for rebellion lost some of them. But in our fathers daies, the Highland Irish Scots, out of Cantire and the Hebrides, under the leading of James Mac-Conell Lord of Cantire in Scotland, made an entry upon the same, and he laying claime thereto challenged it as descended from the Bissers. Howbeit Shan O-Neale having slaine their Captaine easily chased them away. Yet returned they, and in this tract committed continually robberies and outrages in cruell manner, yea and maintained feditious commotions, untill that even of late Sir John Perot Lord Deputy of Ireland brought first Donell Goran (who together with his brother Alexander was slaine by Sr. Richard Bingham in Conaght) and afterward Agnus Mac-Conel, the sonnes of James Mac-Conel, to that passe, that they betooke themselves to the Queene of Englands protection, and upon their humble suite received at her hands this county to bee held of her by service under certaine conditions, namely, to beare armes within Ireland under none other but the Kings of England, and to pay yeerely a certain number of cowes and hawkes, &c.

Glinnes.

Bissers.

James Mac-Conell.

Above this, as farre as to the river Bann, all the tract is called Romte, the seat of the Mac-Guillies, a familie of good reputation in their county: which, notwithstanding the violence of the Islander Scots, and their continuall depredations, hath driven them into a narrow corner. For, Surley Boy, that is, Charles the Yellow, brother unto James Mac-Conel, who possessed himselfe of the Glines, became also in some sort Lord hereof; untill that Sir John Perot Lord Deputy, having won Donluse Castle, a very strong pile, seated upon a rocke that hangeth over the sea, and severed from the Land with a deepe ditch, dispossessed him and all his. Which for all that, hee recovered the next yeere following by treason, after he had slaine Carie the Captaine thereof, who manfully defended himselfe. But the Lord Deputy sending against him Captaine Meriman an approved warrior, who slew the two sonnes of James Mac-Conell, and Alexander this Surley Boys son, so coursed him from place to place, and drove away his cattell the onely riches he had (for hee was able to number of his owne stocke 50000. cowes) so that Surley Boy rendred Donluse, came to Dublin, and in the Cathedrall Church openly made his submission, exhibited a supplication craving mercy, and afterwards being admitted into the Lord Deputies Great Chamber, so soone as he saw the Picture of Queene Elizabeth upon a table, once or twice flung away his sword, fell downe at her feet, and devoted himselfe unto her Majesty.
 Whereupon being received into favour, and ranged among the subjects of Ireland, he abjured and renounced openly in the Courts of Chancery and Kings Bench all service and allegiance to any forraigne Kings whatsoever: and he had given unto him

The Romte.
Mac-Guilly.
Surley Boy.
Chairly Boy.

Donluse.

K k k k 2

him by the bounteous liberality of Queene Elizabeth, foure territories (Toughes A they call them) lying from the river Boys unto the Bay, Don severig, Loghill, and Balla-moyne, with the Constableship of Donluse Castle, to him and the beires males of his body, to hold of the Kings of England, with these conditions, That neither hee nor his, nor yet his posterity serve in the warres under any forraigne Prince without Licence; That they keepe their people from all depredations; That they furnish and finde twelve horsemen, and fortie footmen, at their owne charges for fortie daies in time of warre; and present unto the Kings of England a certaine number of cowes and hawkes yeerely, &c.

THE COUNTIE OF COLRAN.

Beyond the Glynnes West, standeth Krine, which now they call the county COLRAN, of the principall towne therein. It lieth between the river Ban and Lough-foile, and confineth South upon the county of Tir-Oen. This Ban, a passing faire river, as Giraldus saith (which the name also witnesseth) rising out of the mountaines of Mounin in the county of Downe, carrieth himselfe and his name into Lough E. C augh, or Lough-Sidney, a large Lake: which name for all that, after thirty miles or thereabout (for of so great length that Lake is esteemed to be) at his going forth in the end he resumeth againe at Tome castle, and being beset and shadowed along the sides with woods, by Glan-colkein, where by reason of thick woods, and unpassable bogges there is the safest place of refuge for the Scottish Ilanders and the rebels (and which the English felt, who pursued Surley Bay whiles hee lurked here) carrying a proud streame, entrencheth into the sea, breeding Salmons in abundance above any other river in all Europe: because, as some think, it passeth all the rest for cleerenesse, in the which kinde of water Salmons take speciall delight. In this part the O Cabans were of greatest authoritie; the principall person of which family O Caban is thought to be one D of the greatest of those Potentates, or Uraighs as they terme them, that ought service unto O Neal the Tyrant of Ulster: as who in that barbarous election of O Neal, which with as barbarous ceremonies is solemnized in the open aire upon an high hill, performed this honourable service forsooth, as to sling a shooc over the head of the elected O Neal. Howbeit he is not of power sufficient to restrain the Scottish Ilanders, who to save charges at home, every yeere in Summer time flocke hither out of those hungry and barren Ilands (where is nothing but beggery) to get their living; ready upon every occasion and opportunity to maintain rebellions; in so much as provided it hath been by law, under paine of high treason, that no person call them into Ireland, nor give them lodging or entertainment.

But this county with other confining is escheated to the King, who gratiofully purposing a civill plantation of those unreformed and waste parts, is pleased to distribute the said lands to his civill subjects, and the city of London hath undertaken to plant Colonies here.

THE COUNTIE OF TIR-OEN.

Beneath Colran lieth Southward the county of TIR-OEN, in old books F named also Tir-Eogain, that is, if a man interpret it, The land of Eugenius, which name the Irish have contracted into Eogain and Oen. This is altogether upland from the sea, divided towards the funnes setting by the river Liffey from Tir-Conell, toward the rising with the Lough Eaugh from the county of Antrim, and Southward with the Blackwater, which in Irish they call Aven More, that

A that is, The great waier, from the county of Armagh. A country though rough and rugged, yet fruitfull and very large, as which lieth out threescore miles in length, and thirty in bredth: divided by the mountaines called Sliew Gallen, into the Upper Tir-Oen Northward, and the Neiber Southward.

In it are first Cloghar, a Bishopricke, and that a slender one; then Dunganon, the chiefe habitation of the Earles; which through the favour of King Henry the eighth gave the title of Baron unto Matthew Sonne to the first Earle of Tir-Oen. And verily this is an house fairer built than commonly they bee in this county, but hath bene oftentimes by the Lords themselves defaced with fire, because it should not be burnt by the enemy: also Ablogahell, where O-Neal that most proudly ruleth and oppres- B seth Ulster was wont to be inaugurated after that barbarous manner and tradition of the country: and the fort at Black-water on the river More, which hath sustained the variable changes and chances of warre, whiles there was no other way into this country, being the place of refuge for the rebels: but now it is neglected, ever since there was found another Ford more below, at which on both sides of the river Charles Lord Mount-joy Deputy erected new Sconces, when with hot warre hee pursued the rebels in these parts. Who likewise at the same time raised another garri- son fort, called by his owne name Mount-joy, at the Lake Eaugh (Lough Sidney in honour of Henry Sidney souldiers now terme it) which encloseth the West side of this C shire, and is made, or much encreased by the river Bann, as I have said. Surely this is a goodly and beautiful Lake, passing fishfull, and very large, as stretching out thir- ty miles or thereabout, as the Poet saith.

Upper Tir-Oen.

Bishopricke of Clogher. Dunganon. Baron of Dunganon.

Fort of Black-water.

— Dulci mentitur Nereus fluviu.

Fresh water though it bee,
A sea folke thinke they see.

And considering the variety of shew upon the bankes, the shady groves, the meadows alwaies greene, the fertile corne fields; if they be well manured; the bending D and hanging hills, and the rills running into it, fashioned and shaped for pleasure and profit even by Nature her selfe, who seemeth as it were to be very angry with the inhabitants there by, for suffering all to grow wild and barbarous through their laziness. In the upper Tir-Oen stands Seraban, a Castle well knowne, wherein dwell in our daies Turlogh Leinigh of the sept of O-Neals, who after the death of Shan O-Neal, as I shall shew anon, by election of the people attained to the dignity of O-Neal: also some other Piles and fortresses of smaller reckoning, the which (like as else where in this Iland) be no more but towers with narrow loope-holes rather than windowes, unto which adjoine Hauls made of turfes, and roofed over head with thatch, having unto them belonging large Courts or yards fenced round about with E ditches and hedges of rough bushes for defence of their cattell against Cow-stealers. But if this country have any name or glory at all, it is wholly from the Lords thereof, who have ruled here as Kings, or Tyrants; rather: of whom there were two Earles of Tir-Oen, namely, Con O-Neale, and Hugh his nephew by his son Matthew. But of these I will speake more at large by and by, when I am to treat of the Earles and Lords of Ulster.

THE COUNTIE OF DONEGALL OR TIR-CONELL.

A L that remaineth now behind in Ulster toward the North and South, was possessed in ancient times by the ROBOGHII and VENNICHII: but at this day it is called the County of DONEGALL or TIR-CONELL, that is, as some interpret it, The land of Cornelius, or as others, The Land of Conall, and in truth, Marius plainly nameth it,

Kkkk 3

Conallea.

Conallea. The county is all in a maner champion and full of havens, as bounded with A the sea on the North and West sides beating upon it, and dis-joined on the East from Tir-Oen with the river Liffer, and from Conaght with the Lake Erne. Liffer neereunto his spring head, enlargeth his stream, and spreadeth abroad into a Lake, wherein appeareth above the water an Island, and in it hard by a little Monastery, a very narrow vault within the ground, much spoken of by reason of I wot not what fearefull walking spirits, and dreadfull apparitions, or rather some religious horror: which cave, as some dreame ridiculously, was digged by Ulysses when hee went downe to parley with those in hell.

Patrick's Purgatory.

Regia. Reglis.

The inhabitants terme it in these daies Ellan u' Frugatory, that is, The Isle of Purgatory, and Saint Patrick's Purgatory. For some persons devoutly credulous, affirme that Patrick the Irishmens Apostle, or else some Abbat of the same name, obtained by most earnest praier at the hands of God, that the punishments and torments which the godlesse are to suffer after this life, might here bee presented to the eye: that so he might more easily root out the finnes which stucke so fast to his Countymen the Irish, and withall their heathenish errours. But seeing that this place is named in Saint Patrick's life, Reglis, I would deeme it to be the other Regia, that Protemee mentioneth: and the very situation of it in the Geographer implieth no lesse. Besides this Patrick's Purgatory, there was another Purgatorie also of Sir Brendan in this Island; but since I could not finde out the place, take here with you that only which I found, namely, Nechams Tetraſtichon of it.

*Afferis esse locum solennis fama dicarum
Brendano, quo lux lucida sepe micat.
Purgandas animas datur hic transire per ignes,
Ut digna facie Judicis esse queant.*

If common fame say true, a place of Brendan taking name
There is, and often times cleere lights doe shine within the same.
The foules have licence here to passe through Purgatory fire,
That worthily before that Judge, they may at length appeare.

Where this river Liffer augmented by other waters comming unto it, approacheth neerer to the sea, it spreadeth out againe into a Lake, which Protemee called LOGIA, and now they usually terme it Logh Foile and Logh Der, whereupon Necham hath these verses.

Logh Der aquis dives Lacus est, Ultonia novis, Commodum indigenis utilitate placet.
Logh Der a Lake in waters rich, this Ulster knoweth well, Commodious, and pleasing much those that about it dwell.

Deny.

Hard by this, there flourished sometime Derry a Monasterie and Episcopall See; where in the yeere 1566. Edward Randolph, renowned for his long service in the warres, spent his life in the behalfe of his country to his everlasting fame, and gave Shan O-Neal (who had then assembled and armed all the power he could possibly against the English) such an overthrow, as that he could never after recover the losse he then sustained. But now of late Sir Henry Docwra knight, who in the warres of Ireland quit him so well, that with great praise he hath approved his singular valour and martiall skill, brought hither first a garison, and afterward planted here a Colony, to bridle the Earle of Tir-Oens insolent pride: and established and settled the same with so good orders, that it both standeth in good speed for helpe against the rebels, and also traineth the barbarous people to their duties. The ROBODII placed above LOGIA held all that Northern sea coast of Ireland, where O-Degberry an obscure Potentate had great sway. Amongst these, Robogh a little Episcopall towne retaineth the expresse footings of the old name Robogdii. Which should be that promontory ROBODIUM, unless it be Faire Foreland, I know not. From Robogdii.

Robogdium Promontory.

henc

A hence the utmost shores all rockie bend backe againe by the mouth of Swilly Lake, which Protemee seemeth to call ARGITA.

Beyond these more Westward were the VENNICNII seated, where Mac Rwyn Vennicni. Faid, Mac Swyn Necoeth, and Mac Swyn Bannigh have great lands and large possessions. Among these Protemee placeth the river VIDUA, which now is called Crodagh, and the Promontory VENNICNIUM, which they now call Rams-head, and the Foreland BORÆUM, now S. Helens head. River Vidua. Boreum Promontory.

Upon the shores it twineth backe from hence Southerly, Calebeg affordeth an Haven and commodious harbour for sailers: then appeare the ruins and rubbish of Sligah Castle, which Maurice Fitz-Gerald Lord Justice of Ireland built about the yeere 1242. when he had made himselfe Lord of this country. But John Fitz-Gerald the first Earle of Kildare was dispossessed of this castle and a goodly inheritance in this tract, fined also in a great sum of money, for that hee had raised a civill and dangerous war against the Earle of Ulster.

Sligah.

Lower yet, and not far from the mouth of Logh Earne, Donegal, that is, the towne of the Gallicians of Spain, with an Abby sheweth it selfe, whence this country when it was made a county tooke the name. Donegal.

There have beene rulers over this territory for these many ages they of the house of O-Donell, and those extracted from the same stock that the family of O-Neals, neither had they any other title than O-Donell, and Lords of Tir-Conell. For the getting of which title, and that they might be by a certaine election of the people inaugurated with their due complements at a stone beside Kilmacrenan, they were at deadly discord, and committed outrages one upon another, untill that King James not long since by his honourable Letters Patents conferred the honour, title, and stile of Earle Tir-Conell upon Rory O-Donell, the brother of that Hugh the rebell, who being fled out of his country died in Spain; and this Rory his successour practising new treason against King James his advancer, upon the terrour of a guilty conscience fled the realme in the yeere 1607. and died at Rome. O-donell.

The ancient inhabitants of this Ulster, like as the rest of all Ireland throughout, D were by one name in times past called SCOTI, and from hence carried they over with them the name of Scots into the North parts of Britain. For as Giraldus writeth, about the yeere of salvation foure hundred, six sons of Mured King of Ulster seized upon the North parts of Britain, whereupon it was by a speciall and peculiar name called SCOTIA. And yet it appeareth by the Scottish Annales that this happened long before. Also Fergus the second, who re-established the kingdome of Scots in Britain, came from hence, unto whom Patrick had prophesied by way of divination or Soothsaying, in these words: Although thou seemest at this day base and contemptible in the eyes of thy brethren, thou shalt shortly be the Prince and Lord of them all. And to avow the credit and authority of this prediction, the said writer addeth moreover and saith: E No long space of time after this, Fergus, according to the Holy mans prophesie, obtained the sovereignty in all that land, and his seed reigned for many generations together. From his stemme proceeded that most valerous King Edan, the sonne of Gabran, who subdued Scotland that is called Albanach, whose posterity in lineall descent and succession reigneth there still. Scoti.

In the life of S. Patrick.

The first Englishman that in the reigne of King Henry the second attempted this country was Sir John Curcy, who having by force won Downe and Armagh, either by dint of sword conquered, or by surrender gat the whole into his owne hands, and was the first that was stiled Earle of Ulster: but when his great exploits and fortunate achievements had wrought him such envie, that through his owne vertues and other mens vices he was banished out of the Realme; Hugh Lacy, the second sonne of Hugh Lacy Lord of Meib, who had commandement to pursue him by force and armes, was by King John appointed his successour, being created Earle of Ulster, by the sword, of which honour notwithstanding the same King afterward deprived him for his tumultuous insolvency: and hee was in the end received into favour againe. But for the sounder testimony hereof, it were good to exemplifie the same word for Earles of Ulster.

An. 7. Joannis.

for word out of the records of Ireland. Hugh de Lacy sometime Earle of Ulster, held all A Ulster (except and separate from all other countiees whatsoever) of the Kings of England in chiefe by service of three Knights so often as the Kings service was proclaimed:
 and he held all Pleas in his owne Court, that pertained to a Justice and Sherriffe, and held a Court of Chancery of his own, &c. And afterward all Ulster came into the hands of our Sovereigne Lord K. John, by the forfeiture of the foresaid Hugh: unto whom after that K. Henry the third demised it for terme of the said Hughs life. And when Hugh was deceased, Walter de Burgo did that service unto Lord Edward K. Henries son, Lord of Ireland before he was King. And the same Lord Edward feoffed the foresaid Walter in the said land of Ulster, to have and to hold unto the same Walter and to his heires, by the service aforesaid, as freely and wholly as the above named Hugh de Lacy held it, excepting the advowsons of Cathedrall Churches and the demesne of the same, also the Pleas of the Crowne, to wit, Rape, Forfeall, Firing, and Treasure Trowe, which our soveraigne Lord K. Edward retained to himselfe and his heires. This Walter de Burgo, who was Lord of Conaght, and Earle of Ulster, begat of the only daughter of Hugh de Lacy, Richard Earle of Ulster, who after hee had endured many troubles and calamities died in the yeere 1326. Richard had issue John de Burgo, who departed this life before his father, having begotten upon Elizabeth, sister and one of the heires of Gilbert Clare Earle of Gloucester, William, who succeeded after his grandfather. This William being slain by his own men when he was young, left behind him a little daughter his only child, who being married unto Leonell Duke of Clarence bare one daughter likewise, the wife of Edmund Mortimer Earle of March, by whom the Earledome of Ulster and Seigniory of Conaght came unto the Mortimers, and from them together with the kingdome of England unto the house of Yorke: and afterward Edward the fourth King of England adjoined it unto the Kings Domaine or Crowne land.

And when as at the same time England was divided into fides and factions, whiles the civill warre grew hot, and the English that abode here returned out of Ulster into England to follow the factions, O-Neale and others of Irish blood seized these countries into their own hands, and brought them to such wildnesse and savage barbarisme, as it exceeded: In so much as this province which in times past paid a mighty masse of money unto their Earles, scarcely ever since yielded any coin at all unto the Kings of England.

And verily in no one thing whatsoever (pardon this my over-boldnesse) have the Kings of England bene more defective in piety and policie, than that they have for these so many ages seen so slightly to this Province, yea and to all Ireland, in the propagation of religion, establishing the weale publike, and reducing the life of the inhabitants to civility: whether it was for carelessse neglect, sparing, or a fore-cast of dammage, or some reason of state, I am not able to say. But that the same may bene longer thus neglected, it seemeth of it selfe by good right to importune most carnest-ly, being an Island so great, so neere a neighbour, so fruitfull in soile, so rich in pastures more than credible, beset with so many woods, enriched with so many mineralis (if they were searched) watered with so many rivers, environed with so many havens, lying so fit and commodious for sailing into most wealthy countries, and thereby like to bee for impost and custome very profitable: and to conclude, breeding and rearing men so abundantly as it doth, who considering either their mindes or their bodies might be of singular employment for all duties and functions as well of warre as of peace, if they were wrought and conformed to orderly civility.

See pag. 624.
 and 725.

Ireland neglected.

IF

A Intimated even now, that I would speak touching the O-Neals, who carried themselves as Lords of Ulster; and I promised not long since a friend of mine, that I would write of their rebellions raised in our age. And verily I will performe my promise to his Manes, whom whiles he lived I observed with all respect, and being now in heaven I will not forget. Thus much onely I will promise by way of Preface, that I have compendiously collected these matters out of my Annales, and here conjoined them, which there are severed and divided according to their severall times: and withall, that whatsoever I shall write, is not upon uncertaine rumours, but gathered summarily from out o their owne hand writings who managed those affaires, and were present in the actions: And this will I doe with so sincere an affection to the truth, and so uncorrupt fidelity, that I doubt not but I shall have thanks at their hands who love the truth, and desire to understand the late affaires of Ireland, and not in-curre the blame of any, unlesse they be such as having done ill, take it not well if themselves be accordingly censured.

THE O-NEALES. AND THEIR REBELLIONS IN OUR TIME.

D  O say nothing of that GREAT NEALE, who ruled by force and armes in Ulster, and a great part of Ireland, before the coming of Saint Patrick; nor of those in the middle times, who were but of meane note and memoriall to speake of;
 this family, after the arrivall of the English in Ireland, lay close and obscure in remote lurking corners, unlesse it were when Edward Brus brother to Robert King of Scotland, named himselfe King of Ireland. For then in a troublesome time Dovenald O-Neale started and rowled himselfe out of his lurking holes, and in E his misstives unto the Pope used this title in his stile, Dovenald O-Neale King of Ulster, and in right of inheritance the undoubted heire of all Ireland: But after these stirres and troubles were laid, this new King soone vanished away; and Dovenalds posterity plucked in their hornes and hid their heads, untill that, whiles England was all in a combustion, kindled by the furious firebrands of civill warres betwene the houses of Yorke and Lancaster for the Imperiall Crowne, those English that served and lived here, abandoning Ulster, and committing it to the keeping of the O-Neals, returned home to follow the factions. For then Henry O-Neale, the sonne of Oen or Eugenius O-Neale, espoused the daughter of Thomas Earle of Kildare: and his son Con-More, that is, Con the great, married the daughter of Girald Earle of Kildare his F mothers brother.

These supported by the powerfull authority of the Earles of Kildare (who verily for many yeeres were Deputies of Ireland) carried their heads aloft, tyrannizing cruelly upon the people, & transported with the insolent spirit of pride, disdained all the titles of Prince, Duke, Marquesse, and Earles, in comparison of the name of O-Neale.
 Con the sonne of Con, surnamed Bacco, because hee halted, succeeded his father in the
 the

Scoto-Chronicon lib. 12. cap.
 26.

the dignity of O-Neale, who cursed all his posterity, in case they either learned to A speake English, or sowed wheat, or built houses: being fore affraid, left by these inducements the English might bee allured to enter againe into their Lands and possessions: often saying that language bred conversation, and consequently their confusion; that wheat gave sustenance with like effect: and by building they should doe but as the crow doth, make her nest, to be beaten out by the hawk.

When as the greatnesse of this Con O-Neale became very much suspected of King Henry the Eight, and the Kings power having now troden under foot the familie of Kildare, in whose rebellion O-Neale had engaged himselfe deepe, grew dreadfull to O-Neale also: into England he comes, and there renouncing the name of O-Neale, put his whole estate into the Kings hands: which within a while after was granted againe by letters Patent under the great seale of England, to hold as in fee, together with the title of the Earle of Tir-Oen, to him and to Matthew his false reputed sonne, and to the heires of their bodies lawfully begotten. And Matthew at the same time was created Baron of Dunganon. This Matthew being taken untill he was fiftene yeeres old for the sonne of a blacksmith in Dundalk, was by the said Smiths wife, whom Con had sometime kept as his concubine, tendred unto Con as his owne sonne, and hee accepting him for his owne sonne in deed, rejected John (Shan they call him) with the rest, whom he had begotten on his owne lawfull wife. Hereupon Shan, seeing a bastard preferred before him, so much made of, and highly honoured, suddenly set his heart wholly against his father, and withall burned in such hatred with most bitter malice against Matthew, that hee murdered him out of the way, and so plagued and vexed his father with injurious indignities, whiles he went about to deprive him of his Seigniorie, disseized him of his dwelling house, and stript him out of all he had, that the old man for very thought and griefe of heart pined away, and died. Straightwayes Shan being chosen, proclaimed and inaugurated O-Neale by an old shooe cast over his head, seized upon his fathers inheritance, and with all diligence fought after the sonnes of Matthew, that he might be secured from them; but they were fled and gone. Howbeit Brian the eldest sonne not long after was slaine by Mac-Donel Totan one of the O-Neals race, suborned as D some give it out, by Shan to doe that feat. Hugh and Cormack by the meanes and helpe of the English escaped, and yet remaine alive. Shan having thus gotten all into his owne hands (as hee was a man cruell and barbarous) began to exercise excessive cruelty over the great men of Ulster, and made his vaunt, that Mac-Genrys, Mac-Guyr, Mac-Mahon, O-Real, O-Hanlon, O-Cahan, Mac-Brien, O-Hagan, O-Quin, Mac-Canna, Mac-Carion, and all the Mac-Donels, the Galloglasses, were his subjects and vassels.

And when as Sir Henry Sidney Justice for the time being, in the absence of the Earle of Suffex Lord Deputy, expostulated with him about these points, he answered, that hee, the undoubted and lawfull sonne and heire of Con O-Neale, as being E borne of his lawfull wife, had entred upon his fathers inheritance: that Matthew was a Blacke-Smiths sonne of Dundalk, and by the said Smith begotten, and borne after his marriage with Alison his Wife, yet craftily obtruded upon Con as his son, thereby to intervert another way, and to alienate the inheritance and honour of O-Neale: which howsoever he would endure, yet none besides of the Sept of O-Neals would ever beare and digest. As for the letters Patent of King Henry the eighth, they were of no validity, considering that Con had no right in that hee surrendered into the Kings hands, longer than his owne life: neither could he surrender up the same without the consent of the Nobles and people of Ulster by whom hee had bene elected O-Neale: Neither were such Patents of any force, unlesse there were an undoubted heire apparent of the family authentically signified before by inquisition and the oath of twelve men, which in this matter was never certified. Also, that himselfe was by law both of God and man the true heire, as being the first begotten sonne of his father, lawfully borne in wedlocke; that with the generall assent and consent of Peeres and people he was chosen, declared, and proclaimed O-Neale,
O-Neale,

Shan or John
O-Neale.

O-Neale according to the ancient law of Tanistry, whereby a man at his full yeeres is to be preferred before a boy, and an uncle before that nephew, whose grandfather survived the father: neither had he arrogated unto himselfe any authority over the Peeres or Nobles of Ulster, other than his ancestors (as hee was able to prove by plaine proofes produced) had exercised in times past out of minde most rightfully.

Howbeit, soone after he outraged and overthrew O-Railly in the field, tooke Calagh O-Donnell Lord of Tir-Conell prisoner, and cast him with his children into prison, carried away his wife, on whom hee begat children in adultery, seized upon his fortresses, lands, and goods, and bare himselfe as absolute King of all Ulster.

But so soone as Thomas Earle of Suffex the Lord Deputy came with a power into the field for to abate this insolency of his, hee was strangely terrified, and by the perswasion of Gerald Earle of Kildare, whom Queene Mary had restored to his former estate, came into England unto Queene Elizabeth, cast himselfe prostrate at her feet in all submissive and humble manner, and being received with all curtesie, after he had promised his allegiance, returned home, and for a while in his feeding and apparell conformed himselfe to all kind of civility: he assailed the Scottish and drave them quite out of Ulster, slew James Mac-Conell their leader, kept himself and all his people in good order, and the poorer sort he carefully protected from wrongs: Howbeit he tyrannized most cruelly and insolently over the Nobility: who when they had craved aid of the L. Deputy for to repress his intolerable violence, hee thrust upon growing more outrageous, in furious manner with fire and sword drave Mac-Guir Lord of Fermanagh (who underhand had accused him) out of house and home, set fire upon the Metropolitan Church of Armagh, and burnt it, yea and laied siege unto Dundalk on every side: but his enterprise was made frustrate through the valour of the souldiers there in garrison, and William Sarfield Maior of Dublin, who went forth against him with the very floure of choise Citizens. Howbeit the neighbour Countries round about he harried and spoiled in all manner of hostility.

Then Sir Henry Sidney the Deputy, to restrain and bridle the boldnesse of the D man, came himselfe in person with an army into the field against him, and by politicke forecast sent before Edward Randolph, an old approved and renowned Coronell, with seven ensignes of foot-men, and a cornet of horsemen, by sea into the North side of Ireland; who encamped at Derry by Logh-foil, that he might charge upon the backe of the Rebels. Which hee fearing, came thither speedily with all the power and forces that hee had, to remove him: But Randolph in a pitch field gave him battell, and there manfully fighting, with honour lost his life in his Countries service, but gave him withall such an overthrow, that never after he was able to make head againe: and being elsewhere in light skirmishes foiled, and by little and little forsaken of his owne followers, hee was minded with an halter tyed about his necke humbly to beseech the Lord Deputy his protection and mercy. But being by his Secretarie perswaded first to try the friendship of the Scots, who under the conduct of Alexander Oge, that is, the younger, held their standing Summer Campe in Claneboy, having sent before Surley Boy Alexanders brother, whom hee had kept prisoner a long time, to prepare the way, hee came unto them with the wife of O-Donell whom hee kept, was kindly welcomed, and admitted with some few into a tent: where after they had bene in their cups, they brake out into a brawle about James Mac-Conell Alexanders brother, whom Shan had slaine, and also about the honesty of James his sister, whom Shan had married and cast off: by which time Alexander Oge, and his brother Mac-Gillaspie being hot set upon revenge, after a signall given, with their drawn swords set upon Shan, and with many a wound hacked and hewed him to death: whereby the Province recovered, after grievous oppressions and warre, the benefits of wished peace.

Within a while after a Parliament was holden at Dublin, where by the authority of all the States of the Realme there assembled, Shan was attainted, and all the Seig-

Thomas Earle of Suffex Lord Deputy.

Sir Henry Sidney
the Lord Deputy.

1565.

1567.

Seignories, lands, and goods which hee and his followers had, were invested in A Queene Elizabeth, her heires and successours. And a law was enacted, that from that day forward no man should assume unto him the name and title of O-Neale.
And yet shortly after Turlough Leinigh, a brothers sonne of Con-Mor O-Neale aforesaid, tooke it upon him by a popular election, being a man farre steep in yeeres, and therefore more calme and quiet, and so much the rather, because hee stood in feare of Shan O-Neale sonnes, and Hugh Baron of Dunganon, the sonne of Matthew, although he had given unto the said Hugh his daughter in marriage; whom hee notwithstanding quickly after did cast off and repudiate, taking another wife. This Turlough being most obsequious and dutifull unto the Queene of England, put B the English to no trouble at all; but hee molested O-Donell his neighbour and the Scots of the Ilands, and in an encounter slew Alexander Oge, who had killed Shan
O-Neale.

Hugh O-Neal
Earle of Tir-Oen.

Hugh the sonne of Matthew, commonly called Baron of Dunganon, who had lived a long time one while concealed in his owne countrey, other whiles in England in the retinue of Noble men, began now to put himselfe forth, and to raise himself out of that obscure condition, when Elizabeth had given him command of a company of horsemen in the warre against the Earle of Desmond, then in rebellion, and assigned to him a pension of a thousand Markes by the yeere. In that warre hee acquitted himselfe valiantly in all places against the rebels; and at length exhibited a suppli- C cation in the Parliament house; That by vertue of letters patents, granted into his Grandfather by King Henry the eighth, he might be admitted to the title and place of Earle of Tir-Oen, and settled in his ancestours inheritance. The title and place of Earle of Tir-Oen was presently granted: but as touching the inheritance, considering that upon the forfeiture and attainure of Shan O-Neale the Kings of England were invested therein, the matter was referred unto Queene Elizabeth: who most bountifully granted the same to him, for his faithfull service performed, and so be-performed. Yet so, as that the country should be first surveied, and laied out into severall divisions, one or two places fit for garisons reserved, and namely, the fort at Blackmaser, that good order might be taken for the maintenance of the sons of Shan and Turlough, and that he should not be permitted to have any authority at all against the noblemen his neighbours without the county of Tir-Oen. These conditions he most willingly accepted, and rendred very great thanks, accordingly promising to perform whatsoever he was able, with diligence, authority, study, and endeavour, in regard of so great benefits received: and verily he failed not in his promise, nor omitted any duty that might be expected from a most loiall subject. A body he had able to endure travell, watching and fasting: his industry was singular, his courage in warre great, and answerable to the most important affaires: good skill he had in martiall feats, and a profound wit and deep reach to discemle and carry his business closely:
in so much as even then some there were who gave this prediction of him, That he E was born either to the exceeding good, or as great hurt of Ireland. And such proofes he made of his valour and fidelity, that Turlough Leinigh at the Queenes intercession resigned up unto him his government upon certaine conditions. After whose decease he usurped unto himselfe the title of O-Neal, which by law was a capitall crime; but excused himselfe colourably, because others should not enter upon the same: and promised solemnly to renounce it quite, yet laboured hee most earnestly, that hee might not be urged thereunto by any oath.

1588.

Not long after, when that most puissant Armada of Spaine, which had in vaine given the attempt upon England, was put to flight, many ships in their returne homeward were cast away and lost in the Vergilian sea, and many of the Spaniards F after shipwracke were cast on shore; some of whom Tir-Oen is reported to have entertained and lodged, yea and to have consulted and complotted with them about en-tring into a secret confederacy with the King of Spaine. For which practice Hugh Ne Gaveloc, that is to say, Hugh in the fetters (surnamed so because he had been kept so long in fetters) a base sonne of Shan O-Neal informed against him, and that upon no

A no light but pregnant presumptions: whom the Earle afterward intercepted, and commanded to be strangled, but hardly could he finde any one, that for the reverent regard of the O-Neale blood, would lay hands upon him. For which barbarous and inhumane murdering of his cousin german, he was charged in England;
but the Queene of her royall clemency, and for the hope that she had conceived of the Earle, craving with repentance forgiveness of this fault, and submitting himselfe to divers good orders, for his obedience, pardoned him, to the great griefe of some good men. But this soone after more grieved him, yea pricked (as it were) and foregalled him, that the Deputy had suppressed the name of Mac Mahon in the country next adjoining unto him; and withall to abate and weaken the power of that mighty family, had divided the country among many. He I say hereupon conceived a feare, lest the same would befall unto him, and other Chieftanes of Ulster.
At which very time, there began some secret grudges, and heart burnings to arise between the Earle and Sir Henric Bagnall the Marshall, whose sister the Earle had carried away and married. The Earle complained, that whatsoever he had with the losse of his blood and painfull travell reduced to the obedience of the Prince, the Marshall, and not he, reaped the fruit and gaine thereof: that the Marshall by suborning most base and vile persons as witnesses, had falsely brought him into question for high treason, had incited Sir William Fitz-Williams, then Lord Deputy, his deadly enemy, by corruptions and bribery to worke his destruction; and that he lay in waite to take away his life. And in very truth the Deputies information against the Earle found credit in the Court of England, untill the said Earle wrote his letters, and offred judicially to be tried either in England or in Ireland. This is for certain known; that much about this time, he together with the chiefties, or greatest men of Ulster, by secret parties combined in an association, that they would defend the Romish religion (for Religion now a daies is made the mantle for all rebellion) that they would in no wise admit Sheriffes or Garrison souldiers in their Territories, and mutually maintain one anothers right, yea and withstand all wrongs offered by the English. The first Champion thrust forward to sound the alarum, was Mac-Gwyr, a man of a turbulent D spirit: he by way of preying all before him maketh a road into Conaght, accompanied with Gauran a Priest, who being ordeined by the Pope Primate of Ireland, commanded him in the name, and with the helpe of God to try his fortune, and to fight the Lords battell, assuring him of most happy successe: yet fell it out otherwise; for Mac-Gwyr, through the valour of Sir Richard Bingham, was discomfited and put to flight, and the Primate with others slaine. Soone after, Mac-Gwyr brake out into open rebellion; whom the Earle himselfe (together with the Marshall) in a shew of dutiful attendance pursued; and in this service, with great commendation of his for-wardnesse, was wounded in the thigh. Howbeit wholly intentive to provide for his own security, he intercepteth the sons of Shan O-Neale, and makes them sure for do-E ing any harme: neither would he by any meanes (being requested thereto) set them at liberty, but minding another matter, maketh most grievous complaints of the injuries offered unto him by the Deputy, the Marshall, and the garrison souldiers: which notwithstanding, within a while after he carried so covertly, that as if he had forgotten all quarels, he came under safe conduct unto the Deputy, submitted himselfe, and after hee had professed all manner of dutifull obedience, returned home with great commendation. When as now Sir William Fitz-Williams, the Lord Deputy was revoked home out of Ireland, Sir William Russell succeeded in that office. Unto him repaired the Earle of his own accord, exhibited an humble submission, upon his knees to the Lord Deputy, wherein he dolefully expressed his great griefe that the Queen F had conceived indignation against him, as of one undutifull and disloyall. Hee ac-knowledgeed that the late absenting himselfe from the state was disagreeable to his obedience; albeit it was occasioned by some hard measures of the late Lord Deputie, as though he and the Marshall had combined for his destruction.

He acknowledged that the Queene advanced him to high title, and great livings, that she ever upheld him, and enabled him, that shee, who by grace had advanced him,

L 111

him, was able by her force to subvert him, and therefore if he were void of gratitude, yet he could not be so void of reason, as to worke his owne ruine. Furthermore, he made liberall promises that he would most willingly do whatsoever should be enjoyed him, (which hee also had promised in his letters sent unto the Lords of the Councell in England) and earnestly besought that he might be received into favour againe with the Queene, as before time, which he had lost, not by any desert of his owne, but through the forged informations and suggestions of his adversaries. At the same time, Bagnall the Marshall was present in the place, who exhibited articles against the Earle, and accused him, that hee had underhand suborned and sent Mac-Guir, with the Primate above named into Conaght, that hee had complotted secretly with Mac-Guir, O-Donel and other conspirators, and had aided them by Cor-mac-Mac-Baron the Earles brother, and Con the Earles base son, and some of his servants, in the waisting of Monaghan, and besieging of Inis-Kelshin, and by means drawn away the Captaines of Kilulio and Kilwarny, from their loyalty and obedience to the Queen. Hereupon it was seriously debated among the Councillors of the kingdome, whether the Earle should be staied to make his answer or no. The Deputy thought good that he should be detained. But when it was put to question generally, the more part, either upon a vaine feare, or forward inclination to favour the Earle, were instant to have him dismissed, & the matter to be put off unto a further day of hearing, pretending certaine waighthy considerations, and that the Articles exhibited were without proofe or time. Thus the Deputie in a sort was forced to yeeld to the experience of the Councell, and the Earle was permitted to depart, and his accusers there present had no audience. Which troubled and disquieted the Queen not a little, considering that his wicked designements and acts were now apparent to every one, and the Queene her selfe had given warning afore hand, that he should be detained untill he had cleared himselfe of those imputations.

The Earle being now returned home, when he heard that a new supply of souldiers was comming out of England, and thirteene hundred besides of old servitors out of the Low-countries, who had served in litle Britaine under Sir John Norris, and that the English intended now to possesse themselves of Balahannon and Belik, Castles upon the mouth of Lough-Earn, he being privie to himselfe of his own evill purposes, and carrying a guilty conscience, on a sudden assaileth the fort at Blackwater, by which the entry lay into Tir-Oen his owne country, and had it surrendred up unto him. And at the very same instant in manner, hee (waverling in his minde) with one breath (as it were) by his letters offereth unto the Earle of Kildare, his helpe against the wrongs done by the Deputy, and withall, promisseth the Earle of Ormond, & Sir Henry Wallop Treasurer of the kingdome, to continue firme in his allegiance, yea and beseecheth in his letters Sir John Norris appointed Lord Generall, that he might be more mildly dealt with, nor against his will be driven headlong upon the dangerous rocks of disloyalty. But these letters unto Norris Bagnall the Marshall intercepted, and (as the Earle complained afterward) suppressed, to his greatest prejudice and hurt. For immediately he and his confederates were proclaimed traitors, both in Irish and English, and pardon offered to all such as had been seduced by false perswasions to take their parts, & would now relinquish them and submir themselves to the Queen. At which time there were accounted to be with the Rebells in Ulster, about a thousand horsemen, and 6280. footmen: and in Conaght 2300. who were all at the Earles command, very many of them trained souldiers: as who had been exercised in armes, ever since that Sir John Peroi Lord Deputy had appointed to every Lord and Chieftain of Ulster, a certain number to be exercised in their weapons, for to resist the Irish Scots of the Islands: or else had been employed in the warres of the Low-countries, whom he in no provident policie for the future time, had caused to be transported thither.

And verily the English forces were equivalent in numbers, which were commanded by Sir John Norris: for the Queene had selected him as a man of especiall trust and reputation, to be used martially in such journeyes as the Deputie himselfe in person could not undertake, in consideration that hee had performed divers honourable

A honourable services was now President of Mounster, and had formerly commanded the Brittain companies, which were to serve principally in this action. Yet achieved heno memorable exploit, by reason of private misconstruction, suspicious surmises, and dislikes conceived betwene him and the Deputy. Onely the time was spent in preying, truce-making, and frivolous parlies. And without doubt the martiall men on both sides were well content to have the war drawne out in length, and the Earle fed himselfe every day with hope of succour out of Spaine.

But among all these parlies, that was most memorable, which the two Commissioners, Sir Henry Wallop Treasurer of that Realme, and Sir Robert Gardener chiefe Justice, most grave personages and of approved wisdom, had with the Earle of Tir-Oen and O-Donell: at which they and others of the rebells both laied open their grievances, and exhibited also their petitions.

The Earle complained, that Sir Henry Bagnall the Mareschall had cunningly withdrawn unto himselfe the fruit of his labours; that with lyes and indirect meanes and subtle fetches, he had thrust him out of the Queenes favour, and after a sort brought him into disgrace: that to his great hinderance and prejudice, he had intercepted his letters written unto the Lord Deputy, unto Norris, and others; and still detained and withheld from him his wives portion: and herewith he protested, that he never negotiated with forraign Princes, before he was proclaimed Traitor.

C Now he exhibited his petitions in most humble manner, That hee and all his followers might be pardoned for their crimes; That they might be restored to their former estates, That they might exercise freely their own religion (and yet that had been alwaies tolerated) That the Mareschall should pay unto him a thousand pounds of lawfull mony of England for the dowry of his wife now deceased, That no garrison souldiers, Sheriffs, or other officer should be appointed within his countie and Earledome, That the company of fifty horsemen which he had led, with the Queenes pay thereunto, might be restored unto him, and that those who had robbed and spoiled his people might be punished accordingly.

D O-Donell for his part, when he had rehearsed his fathers and ancestours fidelity to the Kings of England, complained nevertheless, that Captaine Bain was sent from Peroi the Lord Deputy, with a band of souldiers into his Province, under a colour of teaching his people civility, who being kindly entertained by his father, and having certain townes assigned unto him, offered all maner of injurious indignity and rigour unto his father, and advanced a certaine bastard to the dignity of O-Donell: Also that the said Deputy by sending a Barke secretly intercepted him; thrust him (innocent man) into prison, and there unjustly kept him in duresse, untill that by the Almighties goodnesse he was delivered: Item that the Deputy Fitz-Williams laid up fast in close prison for seven yeeres together Sir Owen O-Toole, the second man next to O-Donell in this tract, notwithstanding he was guiltlesse, and sent for upon promise of his safe conduct: and that he oppressed his neighbours in Fermanagh with intolerable wrongs: neither could himselfe devise any other meanes for his owne safety and security, than to releeve his next neighbours thus vexed and molested. Hee likewise made the same request that the Earle did, and moreover demanded certaine fortresses and lands in the countie of Slego, which he challenged in right to be his inheritance. Shan Mac Brian Mac Phelim O-Neal laid downe his complaints, That Walter Earle of Essex had wrongfully taken from him the Isle of Magy, and Sir Henry Bagnall the Barony of Maughery-Mourn, both of them his ancient inheritance: That he was himselfe imprisoned, untill that by enforcement he had resigned his right unto Bagnall; beside other infinite injuries done unto him by the Garrison souldiers of Knock-Fergus. Hugh Mac-Guir made a great matter of the insolent outrages committed by the Garrison souldiers next unto him, in driving away his cartell as booties, and withall that the Sheriffe who was sent into his Territories, had cut off the head of his next kinsman, and spurned it under foot.

Brian Mac-Hugh-Oge, Mac Mahon and Ever Mac-Cowley came in with these their complaints, That over and above other wrongs Sir William Fitz-Williams the Deputy for great gifts and presents, had settled Hugh Roe in the dignity of Mac-Mahon: and A soone after, for that with banner displayed after the manner of the country he demanded a mulct or fine which hee had imposed, hanged him up, and granted his inheritance unto strangers, thereby to extinguish the name of Mac-Mahon. In a word, they were petitioners every one severally for the same things that I have above reherfed. When some of these their demands were thought reasonable, and others againe to be referred unto the Queenes consideration; the Commissioners also on the other side proposed certaine Articles unto the Rebels, that they should lay downe their armes, disperse their forces, acknowledge submissively their disloyalties, admit Sheriffes in their governments, re-edifie the Forts they had defaced, suffer B

 the garrisons to live without disturbance, make restitution of spoiles taken, confesse upon their oath how farre they have dealt with forraign Princes, and renounce all for-raine aide, &c.

But these seemed so unreasonable to them in their conceit, being now grown insolent, that after agreement of a cessation from armes for a short time, they departed on all hands; whereas the Queene both then and afterwards, as well to spare the effusion of blood, as to save expence of money, was willing enough to condescend unto any conditions of peace, that might have stood with the honour of her Majestie.

Lord Generall
 of the Army.

The time of cessation once expired, Norris (unto whom alone by the Queenes C commandement, the command of the military forces was conferred in the Deputies absence) marched with his armie against the Earle. Howbeit the Deputie joyned with him, and so with great terrour to the rebels, went forward as farre as Armagh:
 so that the Earle leaving the fort at Blackwater, set fire upon the villages all round about, and the towne of Dungannon; yea and plucked downe a great part of his owne house there, who bewailing now his owne estate, as quite undone and past all recovery, he thought of nothing but how to hide his head: when as they had marched so farre, they stayed there for default of victuals, and having proclaimed the Earle traitour within his owne territorie, and placed a garrison in the Church of Armagh, returned backe. In their returne, the Earle diligently attendeth and accosteth them D farre off (yet they strengthened the garrison at Monaghan) and when they were come neere unto Dundalke, the Deputy, according to the purport of her Majesties Commission, rendred the prosecution of the warre unto Norris, and after many words passed too and fro betweene them, with all the complements of kindnesse and custe-mie that might be, he retireth to Dublin, and providently looketh to the state of Lein- ster, Conaght, and Mounster.

Norris staid in Ulster, but achieved no exploit answerable to the expectation raised of so worthy a Warriour: whether it were upon emulation to the Deputy, or that Fortune altered and went backward (as who in the end is wont to crosse great Commanders) or in favour of the Earle, unto whom he was as forward in kind affection, as E the Deputy was estranged from him. For Norris seemed to blame the Deputy in some measure, for that entertaining an hard opinion of the Earle, his resolution was to make no peace with him: for he in no wise would be otherwise perswaded, but that hee trifled out the time, and made delaies for the nonce, expecting aide and succour still out of Spaine: whereas Norris in the meane while more favourable to him, and credulous withall, had conceived very good hope to bring the Earle to conditions of peace: which hope he working under hand sofed and fomented still in Nor- ris, as that he also presented unto him a fained submission, subscribed with his owne hand and signed, yea and humbly upon his knees craved pardon. Yet for all this in the meane time he dealt by his spying Agents and Curriers earnestly and secretly F with the King of Spaine, what with writing, and what with praying to have aide from him; so farre forth, as that there were secretly sent one or two messengers from the Spaniards to the Rebels, with whom it was agreed, that in case the King of Spaine sent at the prefixed time a competent Armie, able to vanquish the English, they would joine their owne forces, and if in the meane time he furnished them

A them with munition and provision for warre, they would reject all conditions of peace, whatsoever. To these covenants, O Rorke, Mac-William, and others set to their hands, but not the Earle himselfe, being providently cautelous, and yet no man doubts but his consent was thereto. And the letters which the King of Spaine wrote backe full of great promises, hee in outward shew of dutifull service, sent unto the Deputy, and withall relying himselfe upon assured hope of helpe from Spaine, started backe from that written submission aforesaid, and faithfull promise made to Norris: for which, Norris through his owne credulity thus deluded and engaged, taketh him up in hot and bitter termes, as if he had gulled him. But he knowing well enough how to temporize and serve the time, entreth againe into a parlie with Nor- ris and Fenton the Secretary: and so by giving hostages, a peace such as it was (or rather covenants of agreement) was concluded: which soone after with the like levi-tie as before, he brake; alledging for his reason and excuse, that he could not otherwise thinke, but hee was deceitfully dealt with, because the Deputie and Norris agreed so badly; because also the Deputie was discontented with them that in his behalfe travelled with him about peace, as though the Deputie desired nothing but warre, considering that the troups of horsemen were supplied out of England, the King of Spaines letter aforesaid detained, and the Marechall his most heavey enemy, even then was returned with new commission out of England.

C Hereupon therefore hee falleth to harrie and waste the countries confining, to burne townes and villages, to rouse and drive away booties: but within a while pricked with some remorse of conscience for such outrages committed, and hearing besides, that there was a peace like to be treated between England and Spaine, hee sued once againe for a parlie, and conditions of peace: it yrkes mee to run through all the cloakes of his dissimulation in particular. But to be short, when he was in any danger of the English, in semblance, countenance, and words from teeth outward he so masked himselfe under the vizard of submission, and pretended such repentance for his former misdemeanors, that he shifted off and dallied with them still, untill they had forslipt the opportunitie of pursuing him, and untill of necessity the forces were to be dissolved and withdrawn. Againe, such was the sloathfull negligence of the Captaines in Ireland, the thrifty sparing in England, the inbred lenitie of the Queene, who wished that these flames of rebellion (for warre it was not to be called) might be quenched without blood, that his faire words and pretences were believed, yea and hope otherwhiles was offered unto him of pardon, left his peevish perversicacie should be more and more enkindled.

In the yeere 1597. when as by this time all Ulster throughout beyond Dundalke, except seven Castles with wards, (namely, Newry, Knock-Fergus, Carlingford, Greene Castle, Armagh, Dondrom, and Oldersfleet) yea and in manner all Conaght, was revolted; Thomas Lord Burrough, a man full of courage and politike withall, was sent E Lord Deputie into Ireland. And about that time Sir John Norris distasting himselfe and the new Deputie, ended his life.

At which time the Earle beseeched by his letters a Cessation of armes; and verily it seemed good policie to grant it for a moneth. After the moneth expired, the Deputie brought his forces together, and which was thought to stand with his profit and honour both, at his first entry into government, aranged them in order of battell against the Earle: and albeit hee was welcomed by the Earle with a doubtfull and dangerous peece of service within the space of the Moiry, yet made hee way through by his valor, and most valiantly won the Fort at Blackewater, repaired and re-enforced by the Rebels, by which the way lieth into the Countie of Tir-Oen, F and which besides woods and marshes, was the onely strength that the Rebels had:
 and by this first attempt gave good proofe, that if the warre were well prosecuted, they might easily be vanquished. The very same day whereon this Fort was taken, while the Deputie together with his armie were giving thanks unto God for this victorie, suddenly an allarum was given, and the enemy shewed himselfe from an hill hard by: against whom, Henric Earle of Kildare presently marched, with a cornet

Baron Bu-rough, Lord
 Deputie, 1597.

net of horse and certaine of the better sort of Gentlemen voluntaries, and setting A upon them, put them to flight. Yet were there slaine of the English part, Francis Vagham brother to the Lord Deputies wife, R. Turner Serjeant Major a doughty and approved servitour, two of the Earle of Kildares foster brethren: whose death he tooke so heavily, that himselfe within few daies after for griefe of heart ended his life. For there is no love in the world comparable by many degrees to that of foster-brethren in Ireland.

But many more were wounded, and among the rest Sir Thomas Waler, highly commended for his Martiall forwardnesse. After that this Fort was with new munitions re-enforced, no sooner had the L. Deputy withdrawn his army from thence, but the Rebels waving now betwene hope, feare, and shame, thought it their best B and safest course straightly to besiege it: For the Earle supposed it was the most important place to offend and annoy them, as that both his honour and fortunes were for ever at their down-set if he might not recover it. With a strong power therefore he beleaguered it round about. Against whom the Deputy straightway setteth forward and marched without intermission: but alas, marching on thus in his full pace to victory, hee was arrested by violence of sicknesse, and cut off by untimely death, leaving a great misse of him to the State, and security to the ranging Rebels. Certes, if he had lived longer, by the judgement of wisemen, he had abated their insolencies, and the State had not beene plunged into so great perils.

The Rebels understanding of the Deputies death, became exceeding stout and bold, and so oft-soones with mighty out-cries and furious violence assaulted the Fort, but repulsed alwaies they were with the greater losse: they that gave the Scallado were thrown down headlong, and most of them, by the Garrison souldiers sallying resolutely upon them borne downe and troden under foot, in so much as distrusting now to maine force, they changed their copy and determined to protract the siege, being perswaded that they within had victuals but for few daies; and besides, they conceived good hope that the Garrison souldiers for very want would bee wavering in their allegiance and turne traitours. But through the singular valour of Thomas Williams the Captaine, and of the band within, the place was manfully defended: who having suffered hunger, sharp fights, and all extremities, after they had eaten D up their horses, were driven to pluck up the weeds growing among the stones for their food, and endured all the miseries that might be.

Now by this time the government was by authority from the Queene committed unto the Earle of Ormond, under the title of Lieutenant General of the Armie, unto the Chancellor, and Sir Robert Gardiner. Then Tir-Oen recapitulateth in a long letter unto the said Lievtenant all his greivances afore specified: and not leaving out the least insolencie either of souldiers, or of Sheriffes, coldly excuseth his breach of Covenants with Sir John Norris. But principally he complaines, that Feogh Mac-Hugh, a neere associate and kinsman of his, had been persecuted and executed: and in E the end, That his letters unto the Queen were in England intercepted and suppressed: as also, that those impositions and compositions laid both upon the Nobles and Commons were intolerable. He addeth moreover and saith, he saw full well, that all the Territories of the Nobility and Gentry of Ireland, would shortly bee parted and shared among the Councillors, Lawyers, Souldiers, and Notaries. And herewith he closely fendeth succour unto the sonnes of Feogh Mac-Hugh, that they might kindle new coales in Leinster. So that now, every man might see that this war was begun to no other end (whatsoever was pretended) but to extirpate the English quite out of Ireland.

1598.

All this while the Earle continued his siege about the Fort at Black-water, for the F raising whereof, the Lievtenant General of the Armie (for there was no Deputy as yet substituted) sent the most choice troupes, fourteene Ensignes, under the conduct of Sir Henry Bagnall, the Marefchall, and the bitterest adversary the Earle had: upon whom as he marched with divided troupes, the Earle, edged with fretfull malice, assailed most furiously neere unto Armagh, and forthwith (the Marefchall against whom

A whom he had bent all his force, being slaine amongst the thickest of his enemies) as he obtained a most joyous triumph over his private adverstary, so he went away with a glorious victory over the English.

And verily, since the time that they set first footing in Ireland, they never had a greater overthrow; wherein thirteene valiant Capitaines lost their lives, and fiftene hundred of the common souldiers; who being routed and put to shamefull flight, as they were disparted all over the fields were cut in pieces: and such as remained alive, laid the fault reproachfully, not upon their owne cowardice, but their chiefe leaders unskilfulnesse (a thing now a daies ordinary.) Immediately upon this, followed the B yeelding up of the Fort at Black-water: when as the garrison souldiers having held out with loyaltie in heart, and weapon in hand, unto extreme famine, being now driven to exceeding great distresse, saw all hopelesse of succour and reliefe. A notable victory this was, and of great consequence to the Rebels, who furnished themselves hereby with armour and victuals: and now the Earle renowned all Ireland over, and magnified in every place as the founder of their freedome, above all measure swelled with haughty arrogancy: and sent into Mounster, Ouny-Mac-Rory-Og-O-More, and Tirell (who although by his first originall he were of English blood, yet none so maliciously bent against the English name as hee) with 4000. preying rogues: against whom Sir Thomas Norris, President of that Province, advanced forward with a strong C power as far as to Kilmalock: but before hee saw the enemy he disperfed his forces, and retired backe to Corcke.

Which when the Rebels understood, having a great rabble of most lewd rascals flocking from all parts unto them, they fell to waste the country, to drive booties before them, to ransack and burne where ever they went, the castles, houses, and farme places of the English, and most cruelly in all places to kill them: James Fitz-Thomas, one of the family of the Earles of Desmond, they set up as Earle of Desmond; yet so, as he should hold as tenant in fee of the O-Neal, or Earle of Tir-Oen. And thus after a month, when they had kindled this fire, and set all in a flame in Mounster, they returned backe laden with rich booties. The Earle by this time in his letters to the King D of Spaine faileth not to recount his owne victories with full mouth; and therewith beseecheth him not to give eare and beleve, if happily hee should heare any Englishmen report that he desired peace: for why? hee had hardened his heart against all conditions of peace were they never so indifferent, and would most firmly keep his faithfull promise made unto the said King. Yet in this while wrought he meanes of intercession, by letters and messengers oft-soones sent unto the Earle of Ormond, (but all colourably) about a submission, and his demands withall were most unreasonable.

In this desperate estate stood Ireland when Queene Elizabeth chose Robert Earle of Essex (then glorious for the winning of Cadiz in Spaine) in regard of his approved E wisdome, fortitude, and fidelity, Lievtenant and Governour generall of Ireland, to repaire the detriments and losses there sustained, with most large and ample authority added in his Commission, To make an end of the war; and that which by importunity, as it were, hee wrested from her, To remit and pardon all crimes, even of high treason: which alwaies in the Patents of every Lord Deputy were thus in these very words before time restrained (All treasons and treacheries touching our own person, our beires and successours excepted.) And verily with good and provident forecast he obtained the authority to pardon crimes of this kinde, considering that Lawyers doe resolve and set downe, That all Rebellions whatsoever touch the Princes person. There was committed to his charge as great an army as he required, royally furnished and provided, and such as Ireland had never seen the like before: that is, sixteene thousand footmen, and thirteene hundred horsemen: which number was made up after twenty thousand compleat. And he had speciall charge given him, without regard of all other Rebels whatsoever, to bend the whole puissance and force of the war upon the Arch-Rebell the Earle of Tir-Oen, as the head of all the rest, and with all speed to presse hard upon him with garrisons planted at Lough-Foile, and Bala-

Shanon;

Robert Earle of Essex Lord
Lievtenant.
1599.

Shanon: a thing that himselfe had alwaies thought most important, and in accusatory A terms charged and challenged the former Deputies for their neglect in that behalfe.

Thus he, honourably accompanied with the flower of Noble gallants, and well wishing acclamations of the common people, yet with a strange thunder-clap in a cleare sun-shine day, hee setteth forward from London, toward the end of March: and being sore tossed and rejected with an adverse tempest, at length arrived in Ireland. Where having, after the manner, received the sword, presently contrary to his charge and commission, by the advice of some of the Councell of State there (who too much regarded their owne particular) he, neglecting the Arch-rebell, advanced forward with all his power against petty Rebels in Mounster; and having taken Cahir, a castle of Thomas Butlers Baron of Cahir (into which, being environed about with the river Shawr, certaine seditious persons had betaken themselves) and driven away a number of cartell, he made himselfe terrible to all the country farre and wide, and dispersed the Rebels every way into woods and forrests. Yet in this while he received no small foile and overthrow by the cowardile of some who served under Sir Henry Harrington, whom he punished very severely by martiall discipline. Neither returned he before the latter end of July, with his souldiers wearied, sickly, and their number more than a man would beleieve, diminished.

When upon his returne he understood that the Queene was displeased at this expedition of his, so costly, and yet damageable, and that she urged still a journey into Ulster against the Earle, and no other; in his missives unto her Majesty he transferred all the fault from himselfe upon the Councell of Ireland, unto whom for their manifold experience in the affaires of Ireland, he could not choose but condescend: promising and protesting most faithfully, to set forward with all speed into Ulster. Scarce were these letters delivered, when he dispatcheth others after them, wherein he signifieth, that upon necessity he must turne his journey aside into Ophaly, neere to Dublin, against the O-Conors, and the O-Moils, who were there risen and in armes, whom he quickly and fortunately vanquished with light skirmishes.

Now returning, and having taken a review of his army, he found it so weakened and impaired, that by his letters subscribed with the hands of the Councillers of Ireland, hee craved a new supply of a thousand souldiers for his expedition into Ulster, which he promised to undertake speedily with solemne protestations.

Being now fully resolved to turne the whole warre upon Ulster, hee commanded Sir Coniers Clifford Governour of Conaght, to goe with certain bands lightly appointed toward Bellike, to the end that the Earles forces might bee distracted one way, whiles he himselfe set upon him another way. Clifford forthwith putting himselfe on his journey with a power of 1500. commanded his souldiers out-toiled with traveling so farre, and having but small store of gun-powder, to passe over the mountaines of Curlew. And when they had gotten over the most part of them, the Rebels under the leading of O-Rorke assailed them on the sudden. The English easily at the first caused them to recule, and marched on forward in their journey: but when the enemies perceived once that they were at a default already for gun-powder, they charged them afresh, and for that they were tired with so long a march, and not able to make resistance, put them to flight, slew many of them, and among the rest Clifford himselfe, together with Sir Alexander Ratcliffe of Ordsall. Mean while, that supply which the Lord Lievtenant required was levied in England, and transported: some few daies after, hee gave the Queene to understand by other letters, that hee could for this yeere performe no more, than with a thousand and three hundred footmen, and three hundred horse goe to the frontiers of Ulster. Thither came hee about the thirteenth day of September; before whom the Earle with his forces two daies together from the hills made a Bravado, and shewed himselfe: and in the end sending Hagan before, he requested the Lievtenant that they might parlie together: which hee refused to doe, answering, that if the Earle would talke with him, he should finde him the next morrow in the head of his troopes. On which day, after a light skirmish made, a horseman from out of the Earles troopes with a loud voice delivered as a message, that the Earle was not willing to fight, but to parly with the L. Lievtenant: yet in no wise at that instant. The day following as the Lord Lievtenant was marching forward, Hagan meeteth him, who declareth that the Earle humbly desired to have the Queenes mercy and peace, and besought withall, that he might have but audience for a while: which if he would grant, then would he with all reverence and observance expect him at the Foord of the river hard by (Balla-Clinch they call it.)

This Foord is not far from Louth, the head towne of the County, and neere unto the Castle of Gerard Fleming. Thither sent the L. Lievtenant before some of purpose to discover the place; who found the Earle at the said Foord, and he told them, that although the river was risen, yet might a man be easily heard from one side to the other. Hereupon the Lord Lievtenant having bestowed a troupe of horsemen in the next hill there by came downe alone; the Earle riding his horse into the water up to the belly, in dutifull and reverent sort saluteth the Lievtenant being on the banke side, and so with many words passing to and fro betweene them; without any witenesse by to heare them, they spent almost an houre. Then both of them retire unto their companies: and Con a base sonne of the Earles following hard after the L. Lievtenant, besought him in his fathers name that certaine principall persons of his traine might bee admitted to a conference. The L. Lievtenant assented thereto, so they were not above six. Then forthwith the Earle taking with him his brother Cormac, Mac Gennys, Mac Guir, Ever Mac Conley, Henry Ovington and O-Quin, sheweth himselfe at the Foord. Unto them the L. Lievtenant came down, accompanied with the Earle of Southampton, Sir George Bouchier, Sir Warrham St. Leger, Sir Henry Danvers, Sir Edward Wingfeld, and Sir William Constable Knights. The Earle saluteth them every one with great courtesie; and after some few words between them passed, thought good that certaine Commissioners should the next day following treat of peace: between whom it was agreed, that there should be a truce from that very day for six weeks, and so forward from six weeks to six weeks unto the first of May: yet so, as it might be free for both sides, after fourteen daies warning given aforehand, to begin warre afresh. And if that any Confederate of the Earles would not yeeld his assent hereto, he left him unto the L. Lievtenant to prosecute him at his pleasure.

While these things were a doing, those letters of the Lord Lievtenant which I spake of erewhile, were delivered to the Queen by Henrie Cusse (a man very learned, but as unfortunate.) Which when she had perused through, and understood thereby, that her Lievtenant, with so great an armie, in so long time, and with the expence of so much money, had effected just nothing, nor would doe ought that yeeres; shee being highly offended thereat, writeth backe againe to himselfe; and to the Councillers of Ireland in these termes: That his proceeding answered neither her direction, nor the worlds expectation; that shee could not but marvel much, why the Lievtenant by prolonging thus from time to time, and by finding meanes still of further delay, had lost those excellent opportunities which he had of prosecuting war upon that Arch-rebell: considering that himselfe, whiles he was in England, advised nothing else, but to prosecute the Earle himselfe, and none but him; yea and in his letters otherwhiles seriously promised to doe the same. She expostulated, wherefore hee had made those unprofitable journeyes (even against his owne judgement when it was found) into Mounster and Ophaly, whereof he had not certified her, nor given so much as any notice before they were undertaken: which otherwise shee would expressly have countermanded. If his armie were now broken, weak, and much empaiied, why undertooke hee not the action upon the enemies whiles it was entire, strong, and complete? If the spring had not been a fit season for to make war in Ulster, wherefore was the summer, wherefore was the autumn neglected? what was there no time of the yeere meet for that war? Well, shee now foresaw that her Kingdome of England must be impoverished beyond all measure by such expences, her honour blemished among forrain Princes, and the Rebels encouraged by this unfortunate successe: yea they that shall pen the Story of this time, will deliver unto posterity, that she for her part was at great charge to hazzard her Kingdome of Ireland, land, and that he had taken great paines, and had left nothing undone, to prepare for A many purposes which perished without undertaking, if now at length he took not a course for the maine prosecution of the war. In tart termes therefore she admonisheth both him, and the Councillers of the Kingdome, to look more considerably to the good of the State, and not from thence forward to be transported contrary waies by indirect counsell; commanding them withall, to write into what case they had brought the Kingdome of Ireland; and carefully to foresee, that all inconveniences from thenceforth might be diligently prevented.

8 September
1599.

The Lord Lievtenant startled, or rather galled with these letters, speedeth in all B haste, and sooner than any man would have thought, into England, accompanied with some men of quality, and well and early in a morning comming upon the Queene at unwares, while she was most private and in her bed chamber, presents himselfe upon his knees unto her; who after she had welcomed him with a short speech (and not with that countenance as heretofore) commanded him to withdraw himselfe unto his owne chamber, and there to keepe. For the Queene was highly offended with him, both because hee, contrary to her commandement, had left his charge so suddenly without her leave, and before he had settled the State; and also had treated with the Rebels to her dishonour privately, and upon equall termes, with condition of toleration of Religion, and to her disservice, when as the Rebels made profit of all cessations: and moreover, that hee had agreed upon such a cessation as might every fourteenth night be broken, whereas it was in his power by the authoritie that he had, C to make a finall end with the Rebels, and to pardon their treason and rebellion.

What befell him afterwards in England, and how it appeared by pregnant presumptions, and some evidence, that he aimed at other matters than war against Rebels, whiles hee could not finde in his heart to remit private distastes for the publicke good; and relied too much upon popularitie (which is alwaies momentary, and never fortunate) it is impertinent to this place, neither take I pleasure so much as to remember the same.

The said cessation was scarcely once or twice expired, when the Earle of Tir-O D drew his forces together, and addresseth himselfe againe to war. Unto whom there was sent from the State Sir William Warren, to know of him wherefore he brake the Cessation that was made: Unto whom in the swelling pride of his heart he haughtily answered, That he had not broken the Cessation, considering he had given foure daies warning before, that he ment to renew the warre; and that he had just cause to war a freesh: for why? he understood that the Lord Lievtenant, in whom he had reposed all his hope and whole estate, was committed in England: Neither would he have any thing to doe from thence forth with the Councillours of the Kingdome, that had dealt before time so craftily and deceitfully with him. And as for the Cessation, would he never so faine, he could not revoke it, because he had already entered another course, and appointed O-Donel to goe into Conaught, and other of his confederates into other parts. E

In this meane space, there ran among the Rebels rumours very rife (and the Earle of Tir-O questionedle was the authour) that there should be within a while the greatest and strangest alteration that ever was in England; and lewd persons began daily to encrease both in number and in courage. For they that were of the Irishry, aspired now to their ancient freedome and Nobility; contrariwise good and honest men of the English blood were much dejected and discouraged, seeing so great hopes of the Prince came to nothing: who also complained one unto another, that they had been of late excluded as meere strangers from bearing offices in the common-Weale. But the Earle, all in a glorious jollity giveth it out every where, and F that with open mouth, That he would recover the liberty both of Religion and of his Country; he receiveth in every place busie and tumultuous persons into his protection, he sends them succour and aide, strengthneth and comforteth the distressed, stoutly streineth and setteth to his helping hand to subvert the English government in Ireland, being drawne on and fed with hope which the King of Spaine, by lending

A ding now and then munition, and some money made shew of; and the Pope by promises and indulgences maintained, as having sent unto him before the plume of a Phoenix, haply because Pope Urban the third had sent in times past a little Coronet, platted with peacocks feathers, unto John, King Henries the second his sonne, when he was invested Lord of Ireland.

And now triumphantly glorying of his victories, to the end that he might make a goodly shew of his greatnesse in every place, and by his personall presence set that fire to burne out light, which in his absence hee had kindled in Mounster; under a faire and religious pretence of visiting a little peece of wood of Christs Crosse (which is B thought to be kept in the Monastery of the Holy Crosse in Tipperary) in mid-winter thither hee goes on Pilgrimage, and sent out into the grounds of true and faithfull subjects a number of preying robbers, under the conduct of Mac-Guir: he by chance hapned upon Sir Warrham Saint Leger, who runne him through with his lance, and was withall at the same instant himselfe runne through by him. Whose funeralls when the Earle had performed, he hasteneth home sooner than all men looked for, as having heard, that the Earle of Ormond, appointed General of the Army, was raising of a power from all parts, and that Sir Charles Blunt Baron Monjoy, appointed the Lord Deputy, was comming; unto whom the Queene before time had purposed in her minde this government: but Robert Earle of Essex (who for to please C sure military men, and to deserve the better of them, into whose love he studiously insinuated himselfe, fought, though covertly, to compasse the same himselfe) wholly opposed against him, as if he, the said Lord Monjoy, had scene no service, nor bene experienced in the warres, more than in the Netherlands, had no followers and dependants, nor much aforehand with the world, and overmuch bookish. He arriveth in Ireland in the moneth of February, without any great noise and stirre, accompanied with a small traine, and so entred upon the Government. Now hee found the state of Ireland very distressed, or rather desperately sick, and past all hope of recovery, yea at the point, as it were, to give up the ghost: for every good and honest meaning minde was dismayed to see such a confluence of calamities, without all D hope of remedy, or any alleviation at all: but the worst sort seeing all to goe well on their side, and prosper still to their desire, rejoiced and applauded one the other; and the Earle himselfe without any resistance had passed through the whole length of the Iland in triumphant manner, even from the utmost part of Ulster, into Mounster. The Rebels moreover, to terrifie the Deputy now at his first comming, stricke up an Al'arme in the very suburbs of Dublin. But he, full of good courage, desired nothing more than to set upon the Earle himselfe, who, as hee had intelligence given him, was to returne out of Mounster. Mustering up therefore in all haste such a power as hee could (for the companies of choice souldiers were in Mounster already with the Earle of Ormond) he hastened to stop the Earles passage in Fereale, and there E to give him battell. But the Earle by celerity and quicke speed prevented him, being privily enformed of the Deputies designs: for certaine there were even of the Queens Councill there, who alwaies highly favoured and tendered his proceedings.

The Deputy being returned to Dublin, was wholly busied in mustering of the old souldiers, that should be sent by shipping to Logh-Foile and Bala-Shanon neere unto the mouth of Logh-Earn, that by placing garrisons there, they might make sallies upon the Earle both on backe and sides; as also about sending aide unto the garrison souldiers in Leafe and Opbaly, a matter by reason of so many enemies round about, of great danger and difficulty.

F In the beginning of May, the Deputy put himselfe on his march toward Ulster, with this purpose, to divert the Earle another way, whiles Sir Henry Docwra at Logh-Foile, and Sir Matthew Morgan at Bala-Shanon planted the garrisons: which they with small adoe effected; for Sir Henry Docwra tooke Logh-Foile, and Sir John Bolle who accompanied him, tooke Don-a-long and Lhiffier castles, suppressing the rebels with divers overthrowes.

Charles Blunt
Lord Deputy.
1600.

Whiles

Whiles the Earle was every day kept occupied by the Deputy with light skirmishes, wherein he evermore had so bad successe, that hee perceived now the fortune of warre was turned, and himselfe driven back into his owne corners. The Lord Deputy being returned in Mid-June, when as the garrisons aforesaid were placed accordingly, required out of England certaine companies of souldiers and victuals, for to besett and planta a garrison also in these parts at Armagh, thereby to bring the Rebels within a straighter compasse.

Meane while hee tooke a journey into Lease, which was the place of refuge and receipt of all the Rebels in Leinster: where he slew Ony-Mac-Rory-Og, the chiefe of the O-Mores family, a bloody, bold, and most desperate young man; who of late had made so foule a stirre in Mounster; him I say he slew, with other most wicked and mischievous Rebels: and after he had layed their fields waste, hee chased them into woods and forrests, so as that in those parts they were scarcely ever after seene. When as now new succours were come out of England, although he wanted both corne and money, the Equinoxe was past, and winter weather began already in that climate, yet marched hee forward to the very entrance of Moyery, three miles beyond Dondalk. This passage is naturally the most comberfome of all others well neere in Ireland, which the Rebels had fortified and blocked up with pallisadoes and fences, with stakes pitched into the ground, with hurdles joynted together, and stones in the midst, and turfes of earth, betwixt the hills, woods, and bogges quite overthwart on both sides, with great skill and greater industry, yea and manned the place with a number of souldiers. Besides these difficulties in his way, the weather also was passing rigorous, by reason of much raine that fell continually for certaine daies together, whereby the rivers swelling high and overflowing their banks, were altogether unpasseable.

But when the waters were fallen, the English courageously brake through those pallisadoes or fences aforesaid, and having beaten backe their enemies, and overcome all difficulties, the Lord Deputy placed a garrison eight miles from Armagh (for at Armagh the Rebels had eaten up and consumed all) which in memory of Sir John Norris, under whom he had his first rudiments in the profession of Arms, he commanded to be called Mount-Norris; over which he made Captaine E. Blany, a stout and valiant Gentleman, who afterwards in this part, like as Sir Henry Dourra in the other, troubled the Rebels sore, and withall kept them forcibly in awe. In his returne (that I may passe over with silence the skuffling skirmishes which happened every day) the Rebels in the passe neere unto Carlingford, where they had stopped up the way, in a memorable overthrow were discomfited, and put to fearefull flight.

Some few daies after, the Lord Deputy, because hee would lose no time, entered in the very middest of winter the Glynnes, that is, the vallies in Leinster, a secure receptacle of Rebels; where having wasted the countrey, he brought Donell Spanioh, Phelim Mac-Feogh, and that tumultuous and pernicious Sept of the O'Tuils unto submission, and tooke hostages of them. Afterward hee went as farre as Fereall, and drave Tirell, the most approved warrior of all the Rebels, out of his own holds, or as they call it, Fassnesses (a place full of bogges, and beset thicke with bushes) into Ulster. Now by this time by fetching many a compasse was he come victorious in every place, as farre as to the frontier of Ulster: which he entered, and first having slaine the two sôhnes of Ever Mac Cowley, he laied the territory of Fernes waste, and sent out Sir Richard Morison to spoile the Fues. In Breany he placed a garrison, by the conduct of Sir Oliver Lambard: and turning downe to Tredagh, hee received into his protection and mercy such of the principall Rebels as submitted themselves; namely, Turlough Mac-Henry, a great man and Potentate in Fues, Ever Mac Cowly, O-Hanlan, who glorieth in this, that by inheritance hee is Standard-bearer to the Kings of Ulster, and many of the Mac-Mahons, and O-Realies, who delivered up for hostages their dearest friends and kinsfolke. The spring now approaching, before all the forces were assembled and come together, the Lord Deputy marcheth to

A to Moyery, where by cutting down the woods, he made the way passable, and there erected a fort: out of Lecall he expelled the Mac-Geniffes, who usurped lands there, and reduced all the Rebels fortreffes and holds about Armagh to his obedience: Armagh also he fortified with a garrison. And so farre went he forward, that hee removed the Earle from Black-water (who had very artificially encamped himselfe there) and purposed somewhat lower to set up a fort.

About which time many signified unto him by letters for certainty, that which he had heard before bruited by a common rumour still more and more encreased, namely, that the Spaniards were arrived in Mounster. So that now he was of necessity to desist and give over this prosecution in Ulster, and Ireland was to be defended, not so much from inward rebellion, as from forraigne enemies. And yet, left what he had already recovered should be lost againe, after he had strengthened the garrisons, he speedily posteth into Mounster, journeying continually with one or two companies of horse, commanding the Captaines of the footmen to follow hard after.

For whiles he was earnestly busied about the warre in Ulster, the Earle, and his associates the Rebels of Mounsters by their Agents, a certaine Spaniard elect Archbishop of Dublin by the Pope, the Bishop of Clonfort, the Bishop of Killaloe, and Archer a Jesuite, had obtained at length, with praying, intreating, and earnest beseeching at the King of Spaines hand, that succour should bee sent into Mounster to the Rebels, under the conduct of Don John D' Aquila, upon assured hope conceived, that all Mounster would shortly revolt, and the titular Earle of Desmond, and Florens Mac-Cary joine great aides unto them. But Sir George Carew the Lord President of Mounster, had providently before intercepted them, and sent them over into England.

Thus D' Aquila arrived at Kinsale in Mounster with two thousand Spaniards, old souldiers, and certaine Irish fugitives, the last day of October: and straightwaies having published a writing, wherein hee gloriously stileth himselfe with this title, [MASTER Generall and Captaine of the Catholick King in the warre of God, for holding and keeping the Faith in Ireland] endeavoureth to make the world beleeve, That Queene Elizabeth by the definitive sentences of the Popes was deprived of her kingdomes, and her subjects absolved and freed from their oath of allegiance, and that hee and his men were come to deliver them out of the devils clawes, and the English tyrannie. And verily with this goodly pretence, he drew a number of lewd and wicked persons to band and side with him.

The Lord Deputie, having gathered together all the Companies of souldiers that he could, prepareth himselfe to the siege: and Sir Richard Levison the Vice-Admirall, sent out of England with one or two of the Queenes ships to impeach all access, fore-closeth the haven. The English, when they had now encamped themselves, began from land and sea to thunder with their ordnance upon the town, and more straightly to beleaguer it round about: which siege notwithstanding was by and by not so forcibly urged; for that, on the one side, Levison with the sea souldiers was sent before against two thousand Spaniards newly landed, at Bere-haven, Baltimor, and Castle Haven, of whose ships hee funke five: on the other side the President of Mounster, at the same time was dispatched with certaine troupes to get the start of O-Donell, who was now approaching, that hee should not joyne with that new supplie of the Spaniards. But hee, when as now all the Country was over frozen, had by speedie journeyes in the night, through blind by-waies, gotten to those Spaniards newly arrived, and was not so much as once seene.

F Some few daies after, the Earle of Tir-Oen also himselfe came with O-Rork, Raimund Burk, Mac-Mahon, Randall Mac-Surley, Tirell, the Baron of Lixnaw, and the most select and choice of all the Rebels, unto whom when Alphonso O Campo, the leader of the new-come Spaniards, had joynted his forces, they mustered themselves fixe thousand footmen, and five hundred horse strong, in a confident hope of victory, because they were more in number, fresh and better furnished with all kinde of meanes:

M m m m

meanes : whereas contrariwise the English were out-wearied with the inconvenient that follow a winter-siege, excluded from victuals ; and their horses besides, with travell and hunger together, altogether unserviceable.

In these difficulties and distresses, the Deputy consulteth with the Captaine what was to be done : Some thought the best way was to break up the siege, to retire into Corke, and not to hazard the whole Realme upon the fortune of one battell. Contrariwise, the Deputy adviseth and perswadeth to persist, and not to degenerate from the approved vertue of their ancestors : adding, that valiant men could not have a more wished opportunity presented unto them, than that which was now fallen into their laps; namely, either to spend their lives with glory, or to vanquish their enemies with honour. He urgeth therefore and plith the siege with all the power he had, with raising platformes, and continuall battering he plaied upon the towne, and withall, fortifieth his Campe with new trenches.

Upon the one and twentieth day of December, the Earle of Tir-Oen sheweth himselfe with his horse upon an hill about a mile from the campe : and there encamping himselfe, maketh a bravado likewise the next day in the same place : the night following, both the Spaniards sallied forth of the towne, and the Irish also assayed to steale into the towne, but both were forced to retire. On the three and twentieth day, the Englishmen discharge their greater peeces upon the towne, as if they had not cared for the Earle now so neere at hand, and the very same day were the letters of D' Aquila unto the Earle intercepted : wherein he importuned Tir-Oen, that the Spaniards newly arrived might bee put into the towne, and that they might assaile the campe on both sides. When the Moore was ready to rise over the horizon, the Deputy commanded Sir Henry Poor to leade forth into the field eight ensignes of old souldiers, and to make a stand on the West side of the campe. Sir Henry Greame, who that night had the charge of the horsemen that watched, very carely in the morning advertised the Deputy, that the enemies for certaine would advance forward, for that a great number of their matches were lighted. Hereupon the alarme was given throughout the campe, and companies placed wheresoever there was any way to the towne.

The Lord Deputy himselfe, with the President of Mounster, and Sir Richard Wingfeld Marshall, marched toward the watch, and withall by the advise of Sir Olivar Lambart, chooseth out a plot, wherein he might give battell to the enemies : Thither were brought the Ensignes and Regiments of Sir Henry Follin, and Sir Olivar Saint John, with sixe hundred sea souldiers under the conduct of Sir Richard Levison. But the Earle of Tir-Oen, who resolved (as afterwards it was knowne) to have brought into Kinsale by darke night the new supplie of Spaniards, and eight hundred Irishmen, when hee saw now the day to breake, and beheld withall the Marshall and Sir Henrie Danvers with the power of horsemen, and Poor with the Companies of old souldiers at the foot of the hill, being disappointed of his hope, stood still, and soone after by his bag-pipers sounded the retreat. No sooner was the Deputy certified of this retreat of his, so confused and disordered, but hee commanded the pursuitt, and himselfe advanced before the vanguard, to marke the manner of their retreat, and according to the present occasion to resolve what to doe : but so thicke a mist with a storme beside fell upon the earth, that for a time they could not see before them.

Within a while after, the weather cleering up againe, hee observed that they retired hastily for feare in three great battalions, and with the horsemen placed behind at their backs : hee fully determined therefore to charge upon them, having sent backe the President of Mounster with three companies of horsemen into the campe, to restraine the Spaniards, if haply out of the towne they should sallie and breake out upon them. And the Lord Deputy himselfe followed after the Rebels, with such speed in their retreat, that hee forced them to stand in the brinke of a bogge, whereunto there was no acceffe but at a foord : but when those horsemen that kept the foord were by the valour of the Marshall and

and the Earle of Clan-Ricard discomfited, and put to rout the other, and courageously gave the onset upon the maine troupes of the enemies horsemen, which charge when Sir William Godolphin, who had the leading of the Deputies horse, Sir Henry Danvers, Minslow, Taff, Fleming, and Sir John Barkly Sergeant Major of the Camp, who joyned with them, redoubled with so great alacrity, that the Rebels presently brake, and fell in disorder. But it was not thought good to follow the chase, but gathering their forces and power together, they charged upon the maine battell now in feare and waverings, which they also brake. Tirell with his company and the Spaniards all this while kept their standing, and made their ground good : against whom the Deputy putteth forward his rereward ; and that he might accomplish not onely the part of a leader in commanding, but also of a souldier in fighting, with three companies of Oliver S. Johns, whereof Captaine Roe had the conduct, chargeth violently upon them, and so brake their arraies, that in great disorder and confusion they retreated backe and betooke themselves to the Irish, by whom they were presently left unto the edge of the sword, and routed by the troupe of the Deputies horsemen, whereof Sir William Godolphin had the leading. Then Tir-Oen, O-Donell and the rest on all sides put to flight, slung away their weapons, and made what shift they could to save themselves. Alphonso O Campo was taken prisoner with three other Captaines of the Spaniards, and six ensigne bearers ; slaine there were one thousand and two hundred, nine ensignes taken, whereof six were Spanish. Of the English part scarce two men lost their lives, many were wounded, and among them Sir Henry Danvers, Sir William Godolphin, and Croft : so little cost this so great a victory. The Lord Deputy after he had founded the retreat, and rendred thanks unto almighty God for this victory among the dead bodies of the enemies lying thicke in heapes, gave the order of Knight-hood to the Earle of Clan-Ricard for his right valiant service in this battell : and thus with lucky acclamations returned victor into his Campe, which he found safe and sound from all dangers. For the Spaniards within the towne, seeing all places every way made sure with guardes, and having experience before time, that all sallies were to their losse, kept themselves at home in carefull expectation of the event.

A noble victory this was, and in many regards important, whereby Ireland most miserably distressed and ready to revolt, was retained, the Spaniards ejected, the Arch-rebell Tir-Oen repulst into his starting holes in Ulster, O Donell driven into Spaine, the rest of the rebellious rable scattered into sundry parts, the Princes regall authority by daunting the lawlesse insolency recovered, and within a while after a secure peace throughout the land firmly established.

The morrow after, the Lord Deputy commanded Captaine Bodley the Trench-master, who both in the fortifications and also in the battell had manfully borne himselfe, to finish the Mount begun, and to raise bankes and rampires neerer unto the enemy : about which when there had bene six dayes spent, D' Aquila in his letters sent by his Drum Major to the Deputy, craved that some Gentleman of credit might be sent into the towne, with whom he might parly.

For this purpose was Sir William Godolphin chosen : Unto whom D' Aquila signifieth, that he had found the Lord Deputy, although he were his most eager enemy, yet an honourable person, the Irish of no valour, rude and uncivil, yea and (that which hee feared) perfidious and false : That he was sent from the King of Spaine his Master, to aide two Earles, and now he doubted whether there were any such in Retum Nanya, considering that one tempestuous puffe of warre had blown the one of them into Spaine, the other into the North, so as they were no more to be seene. Willing therefore he was to treat about a peace, that might be good for English, and not hurtfull to Spaniards : albeit he wanted nothing requisite to the holding out of a siege, and expected every day out of Spaine fresh supplies to finde the English worke and trouble enough. To bee briefe, being as they were on both sides distressed, and weary of siege, they grew to this agreement upon the second day of January, That the Spaniards should yeeld up Kinsale, the Forts, and Castle at Bahinmore, Berehaven, and and Castle Haven, unto the Lord Deputy, and so depart with life, with goods, and their Banners displayed; that the Englishmen should allow them shipping, paying the full price therefore, wherein they might at two severall passages saile over into Spaine: Also if they hapned in their returne homeward to arrive at any Port in England, that they might be kindly entertained: and in the meane time whiles they remained in Ireland waiting for windes, have all necessaries for sustenance ministred unto them, for their ready mony.

These things thus concluded, the Spaniards after certaine daies fitted with a good gale of winde set saile from the coast of Ireland with dishonour, as having their companies much impaired, and weake. Meane while the Earle of Tir-Oen in fearefull flight got him away, making as great journeyes as possibly he could, through unknown by-waies, and recovered his lurking holes in Ulster, after he had lost most of his men, whom the rivers risen and running violently by reason of Winter floods had swallowed up. And afterwards hee could not take his rest without care, no nor so much as breath without feare; whiles carrying an evill and burthened conscience he dreaded the due reward of his deserts, and distrusted every one; insomuch as hee fought from day to day new blind corners, and the same straightwaies he abandoned. The Deputy to refresh his wearied souldiers, bestowed them abroad in garrisons, and after he had settled the State in Mounster, returneth to Dublin. And when the winter season was past, hee by a gentle and easie march (thereby to spread a greater terrour all abroad) returneth into Ulster with an army well appointed, that he might with Forts and garrisons planted round about, belay the Rebels on every side, as it were, within net and toile. When he was come as far as to Black-water, hee transported his army upon floats; and having found a Foord unknowne before, beneath the old Fort, he erected a Fort upon the very banke, which after his owne Christian name he called Charle-mont. At which time the Earle of Tir-Oen being affrighted, set fire on his owne house at Dunganon. Then marcheth the Deputy forward from thence to Dunganon: and after hee had encamped himselfe, so soone as Sir Henry Docwra was come unto him from Lagh-foile with his company, he sent out his souldiers every way. Then might you have scene the corn-fields spoiled, the villages on every side and houses, so many as they could descry, set on fire and burned, and booties out of all parts harried. The Forts in Lagh-Crew, Lagh-Reogh, and Mogher-Le-cowe (where Sir John Barkley, a most valiant martiall man was shot through with a bullet) were yeilded up, hee planted a garrison at Lagh-Eaugh, or Lagh-Sidney, which after the title of his owne honour he named Mont-joy, and gave unto Sir Arthur Chichester (who by the demerit of his vertue is now Lord Deputy of Ireland) the charge and command thereof; another likewise at Monaghan, which hee committed unto Sir Christopher St. Laurence: who being leaders of great experience, and greater courage, what with often sallies, and what with traverse journeyes made too and fro, so coursed and crossed the rebels, that they seeing themselves environed with E garrisons planted round about them, and every day hemmed in and penned in more streightly, that now like wilde beasts of a rascall kinde they must seeke holes and lurk among the thickets, in forrests and woods; most of them changed their copie, and as their fortune, so their fidelity altered, and every one of them began secretly to submit themselves to the Deputy, striving a vic who should be first; muttering and complaining closely of Tir-Oen, that he had engaged the ruine of the whole nation for his own private discontentments; that this war was only necessary to him, but most pernicious to them: neither was the Earle ignorant that both the force and fidelity also of his people and followers was now sore shaken: he determined therefore to prevent the worst, as being weary of misery and calamity, and yet in some hope also of life, F which sometimes overmatch the stoutest. By most submissive letters therefore sent now and then to the Queen, wherein with earnest praier and teares he besought pardon for his fault, casting himselfe downe in humble and lowly wise; and she observed in him such tokens of true repentance, that (as she was a most milde and mercifull Prince) shee gave authority unto the L. Deputy to take him to mercy and favour, in case

A case he earnestly craved it. And craved it he did (when hee had heard so much from those that affected and loved him) continually by the most earnest mediation of Arish Mac Baron his brother, and others: and being often rejected, at length in the moneth of February, after he had promised absolutely, and without any condition, to submit his life and all that he had unto the Queene, the Deputy, who had some intelligence out of the Court in England from his inward friends, that the Queene, now farre steep in yeeres, was dangerously sicke, condescended that the Earle might repaire unto Mellifont: and thither forthwith came he out of his lurking holes in all speed, accompanied with one or two, and no more. Being admitted into the chamber of B presence (where the L. Deputy with a number of martiall men about him was set in a chaire of estate, in the very entry of the place) he in poore and foule array, with a dejected countenance, bewraying his forlorne estate, falleth downe upon his knees, and when hee had so kneeled a while, the Lord Deputy signified unto him that hee should approach neerer: whereupon he rose up, and after he had stepped in lowly manner some few paces forward, he kneeled downe againe, and cast himselfe prostrate like a most humble suppliant. He acknowledgeth his sinne to God, and fault unto his most gracious Prince and soveraigne Lady Queene Elizabeth, in whose royall clemency and mercy lay the onely hope that he had now remaining, to whose pleasure he submitte wholly and absolutely his life and whole estate. He most demisely beseecheth, that whose bound C isfull favour in times past, and mighty power now of late he had felt and found, he might now have experience of her mercifull lenity, and that he might be for ever the example of her Princely clemency. For neither was his age as yet so unserviceable, nor his body so much disabled, ne yet his courage so daunted, but that by his valiant and faithfull service in her behalf, he could expiate and make satisfaction for this most disloyall rebellion. And yet, to extenuate his crime, he began to say, that through the malicious envy of some, he had bin very hardly and unreasonably dealt with. As he was enforcing this point further, the Deputy interrupted him, and cut off his speech; and after a few words, delivered with great authority (which in a martiall man doth stand in stead of eloquence) to this effect, that there was no excuse to be made for so grievous and hainous a crime, with D few other words, he commanded him to withdraw himselfe: and the next day carried him away with him toward Dublin, purposing to bring him from thence into England before Queene Elizabeth, that shee might determine at her pleasure what to doe with him. But in this meane time, that most excellent Princeesse, a little after that she had intelligence (that nothing might be wanting to the accomplishment of her glory) how this rebellion was extinguished, which had not a little disquieted her, departed godly and peaceably out of this transitory life into the eternall.

Thus the warre of Ireland, or the rebellion rather of the Earle of Tir-Oen, begun upon private grudges and quarrels intermeddled with ambition, cherished at first by contempt, and sparing of charges out of England, spread over all Ireland (under E the colourable pretence of restoring libertie and Romish Religion) continued by untoward emulation of the English, and covetousnesse of the old souldiers, protracted by the subtil wiles and fained submissions of the Earle, by the most cumbrous and disadvantageous difficulty of the countrey, and by a desperate kinde of people, saving themselves more by good footmanship than their valour, confirmed through the light credulity of some, and the secret favour of others that were in place of authority, heartened with one or two fortunate encounters, fed and fomented with Spanish money and Spanish supplies, in the eighth yeere after it first brake out, under the happy direction of Queene Elizabeth of sacred memorie, and the fortunate conduct of the Lord Deputy Sir Charles Blunt Baron of Mont-joy (whom afterwards in regard F hereof King James created Earle of Devonshire) was most happily dispatched, and firme peace, as we hope, for ever established.

THE MANERS OF THE IRISHRY, BOTH OF OLD AND OF LATER TIMES.

The manners of the Irishry, or wild Irish.

He place requireth now, that I should adde somewhat of the maners of this people: and that verily will I doe, as touching their ancient behaviour, out of ancient Historiographers: and concerning the latter, out of a moderne writer both learned and diligent, who hath set downe these matters most exactly.

As concerning the Irish of ancient times, when as they were, as all other nations beside in this tract, barbarous and savage, thus much have old authors recorded.

Strabo in his fourth booke of Ireland, saith, I can deliver nothing for certaine, but that the inhabitants thereof are more rude than the Britains, as who both feed upon mans flesh, and also devoure exceeding much meat; yea and they thinke it a point of honesty to eat the bodies of their dead parents, and wantonly to have company not onely with other mens wives, but even with their owne mothers and sisters. Which things verily we relate so, as having no witnesses hereof that be of sufficient credit. Certes the report goes, that the manner of the Scythians is to eat mans flesh; and it is recorded of the Gauls, Spaniards, and many more besides, that by occasion of urgent necessity and extremities of siege, that they have done the same.

Pomponius Mela in his third book writeth thus: The inhabitants are uncivil, ignorant of all virtues, and utterly void of religion.

Solinus in the 24. chapter, when they have achieved any victory, the blood of those that are slaine they first drinke, and then besmeare their faces with it. Right and wrong is allone with them. A woman lying in childbed, if she have at any time brought forth a man childe, laicth the first meat she gives it upon her husbands sword, and with the very point thereof putteth it softly into the infants mouth, in as much as it were of the nourishment it shall have hereafter; and with certaine heathensh vowes wisheih, That it may dye no otherwise than in warre and by the sword. They that endeavour to be more handsome and civill than the rest, make their sword handles gay with the teeth of great whales, and such sea monsters, for they be as white as Ivory. And why? the men take a principall pride and glory in the keeping of their weapons faire and bright.

But these fashions favour of greater antiquity. Their conditions of the middle time Giraldus Cambrensis hath here and there treated of, and out of him others. But now for their later demeanour, take them here with you out of that foresaid Moderne writer, a studious and painefull man, and that in his owne words: who, as I collect, was named I. Good, brought up in Oxford, by profession and calling a Priest, and who about the yeere of our Lord 1566. taught the Schoole at Limrick. But first I will briefly premise, according to my promise made even now, somewhat as touching the manner of the jurisdiction that is used among the meere Irish, out of others.

Their great men and Potentates, whose names have the fourth vowel (O) put before them, as a mark of prehemincence & excellency, as O-Neal, O-Rork, O-Donel, &c. and many of the rest, to whose name (Mac) is prefixed, have peculiar rights and privileges of their owne, whereby they domineere and Lord it most proudly, and what with tributes, exactions, payments, and impositions upon their subjects, for their souldiers, Gallglasse, Kernes, and horsemen, whom they are to finde and maintaine, they so prey upon their goods and estates, and oppresse them at their owne pleasure, that the condition of all those which live under them is most miserable: and so often as there be any civill wars risen among them, they sucke out of them their very marrow and heart blood.

These Nobles or Potentates aforesaid have their Lawyers belonging unto them, whom they terme Brehons, like as the Gothes named theirs Belagines: who being

O prefixed to the names of the Noblest men in Ireland, by way of excellency.

Brehons.

ing a sort of most unlearned men, upon certaine set daies, on the top of some exceeding high hill, sit to minister justice unto the neighbour inhabitants, betweene such as are at variance and goe to law. Before which Judges, the Plaintiffs with a pitifull voice make moane, and complaine of the wrongs offered unto them: the defendants stand firmly upon their deniall. If any bee convict evidently of theft, they give sentence either to make restitution of the same, or recompence by a fine imposed upon them. These Potentates also have their Historians about them, who write downe their acts and deeds; they have their Physitians also, and Rimers, whom they call Bards; yea and their Harpers, who have every one of them their severall livelods and lands set out for them: and of these, there be in each territorie, severall professours and those liable to some certaine and severall families: that is to say, the Brehons bee of one stocke and name, the Historians of another, and so of the rest, who instruct their owne children or kinsmen every one in their owne art, and have some of them alwaies to be their succellors. Now, among these great Lords and Nobles, there is no hereditarie right of succession observed, but whosoever of any principall house is of greater puissance in regard of strength, retinewes of followers, and boldnesse, he by a certaine faction or election of the people in that province, usurpeth the Lordship and soveraigntie over the rest, quite excluding the sonnes, nephewes, and next in blood of the party deceased: and so with certaine complements of barbarous ceremonies is enthronized in the open aire, upon a little hill for that purpose appointed, upon a Stone for a chaire of estate. At which time also, by a certaine law called Tanistry, there is sometime nominated and declared a succellour, who is termed Tanist, I wote not whether by a word borrowed from the Danes, among whom, as among the Northren inhabitants of Britaine, Thane was a long time used for a noble man, and the Kings especial officer.

Professions hereditary.

Tanistry.

But whereas I have incidently hapned of better observations concerning this Brehon law and Tanistry, diligently collected by Sir John Davis, his Majesties Attorney generall in Ireland, I hope I may, with his good leave, impart some of them to publicke knowledge in his owne words.

The severall countries or territories possessed by the Irishrie were in number 60. and upwards, and some being greater and some lesse, did in extent and scope of land contain two parts of the Kingdome at least: in every one of these countries there was a chiefe Lord or Captaine, and under him a Tanist, which was his successor apparent: both these were elected of the country, who commonly made choice of such as were most active, and had most swordmen and followers depending upon him. The chiefe Lord had certaine lands in Demesne, which were called his Loghtii, or menfall lands in Demesne, where he placed his principall officers, namely, his Brehon, his Marshall, his Cupbearer, his Physitian, his Surgeon, his Chronicler, his Rimer, and others: which offices and professions were hereditarie and peculiar to certaine septs and families.

Hee had also small rents of money, and Cowes, and customarie duties of Oate-meale, Butter, and the like, out of the lands in the Countrey, except the lands of the Church, and such of his kinsmen and followers to whom he granted a speciall discharge or freedome. Besides he had a generall tallage or cutting high or low, at his pleasure upon all the inheritance, which hee tooke commonly when he made warre either with his neighbours, or against the Crowne of England, or made a journey to the State, or gave any entertainment; so as the whole profits of the countrey were at his disposition when hee listed: and so made the inhabitants like the viliaines of England, upon whom their Lords had power Tallier Haut and Bas, as the phrase of our law is, whereupon the English call this kind of exaction by the name of cutting. This chiefe Lord had his Cosharies upon his tenants, that is, he and his would lie upon them untill they had eate up all their provisions; he would likewise employ upon them his horsemen, his kernes, his horse boyes, his dogges boyes, and the like, to be fed and maintained by them, which kept the poore people in continuall slavery and beggerie.

The

" The Tanist had also a speciall portion of land, and certaine Chiefrie proper to the A
 " Tanist, and within the limits of his portion he had also his cuttings and his Colburies.
 " the rest of the land being distributed among severall septs, every sept had a Chiefe
 " or Caninie, as they called him, with a Tanist of that sept, both which were chosen by " the chiefe Lord or Capitaine of the countrie, and had likewise their severall portions " and Chiefries. These Captainships or Chiefries were not partable, but were entire" ly enjoyed by such as were elected thereunto.

" All the rest of the lands, except the portions of the Cheifes and Tanists, descended
 " in course of Gavelkind, and were partable among the Males onely; in which division
 " the Bastards had their portions as well as the Legitimate.

" For offences and matters criminall, none was so hainous or of so high a nature as
 " that it was capitall, for treason against the chiefe Lord, and murder were fineable,
 " the fine they called an Erick, which was assessed by the Lord and his Brehons.

" In case of treason the Lord had all the fine, in case of murder the Lord had one
 " moitie, and the kindred of the partie slaine the other moitie: so as they never for" feited their possessions or their lands for any offence. Howbeit their lands were sei" zed by the Lord for their fines, untill the same were levied thereupon, and then resto" red. Rape was finable in like sort, but theft deserved praise and reward, if the stealth
 " were brought into the countrie; because the Lord had a share, and the countrie there-
 " by became the richer.

" But the theft committed in the countrie and carried out, if the thiefe were appre" hended before his friend made offer of his fine, hee was commonly punished with " death. But the Lord in that case might take an Erick if he would.

" Upon the stealth of any cattell, if the owner followed the tract (wherein the Irish
 " are incredible cunning, insomuch as they will find the same by the bruising of a
 " grasse in the summer time) if the party unto whose land the tract is brought cannot " make it off to some other land, he is to answer the stealth to the owner. And this be" ing an Irish law or custome, is at this day observed both by the English and Irish, the " same being ratified by an act of Counsell in the Earle of Suffex his government, as " fit and necessarie for that Kingdome.

" The Brehons, assisted by certaine Scholars, who had learned many rules of the ci-
 " vill and Canon law, rather by tradition then by reading, gave judgement in all cau" ses, and had the eleventh part of the thing adjudged for their fee, and the chiefe
 " Lords Marshall did execution.

" These are the principall rules and grounds of the Brehon law, which the makers of
 " the Statutes of Kilkenny did not without cause call a lewd custome; for it was the " cause of much lewdnesse and barbarisme. It gave countenance and encourage" ment to theft, rape, and murther, it made all possessions uncertaine, whereby it came " to passe that there was no building of houses, and townes, nor education of children
 " in learning or civility, no exercise of trades, or handicrafts, no improvement or ma-
 " nuring of lands, no industry or vertue in use among them, but the people were bred
 " in loosenesse and idlenesse, which hath beene the true cause of all the mischeifes and " miseries in that Kingdome.

" Now forward, take with you the observations of the said Good: and thus much " will I speake before hand for the man, that in nothing he shooeth at reproach, but
 " aimeth all at truth, and speaketh onely of those uncivill and meere Irish, that lie
 " shrowded in the utmost coasts, and have not as yet suited themselves with civill
 " qualities and conditions.

" And to speake in generall of them all, this Nation is strong of bodie, and pas" sing nimble, stout and haughty in heart, for wit quicke, martiall, prodigall, and care-
 " lesse of their lives, enduring travell, cold and hunger, given to fleshly lust, kind and " courteous to strangers, constant in love, in enmitie implacable, light of believe, gree-
 " die of glorie, impatient of abuse and injurie, and as hee said in old time, in all affecti-
 " ons most vehement and passionate? If they be bad, you shall no where meet with worse:
 " if they be good, you can hardly find better.

Generally

Girald, Cambren.

" Generally, they give unto their children when they come to holy baptisme profane
 " names, adding alwayes somewhat to the name, taken either from some event, or an old wife,
 " or else some colour, as red, white, blacke: or else from a disease, scab, and peeldnesse, or
 " from one vice or other, as these, proud, &c. and albeit they be of all men most impatient
 " of reproach, yet these noble men of theirs, even they that have the letter [O] prefixed to " their names, disdaine not those additions. The name of the Parent, or any of the same
 " kinred then living, it is not lawfull to give unto children: for they are perswaded that " their death is hastened thereby. But when the father is dead, then the sonne assumeth his " name, lest the name should be lost: and if any Ancestour of that name were a redoubted
 " B warrior, the like prowesse and valour is expected from him. This opinion is increased
 " by their Poets, Bardes, or Rimers, who keepe the exploits of those ancient Progeniours " recorded in writing, which they peece out with many high praises and fables devised of " their owne braines; whereby these Rimers or Bardes grow rich. For newwedded brides,
 " and women in childbed thinke themselves discredited, if they bestow not upon one of these
 " Praise-prayers, the best garments they have. Mothers, after six daies that they be brought
 " a bed, companie with their husbands afresh, and put forth their young babes to nurse.

" They that be of the more noble parentage shall have a number of nourses repaire unto " them streight waies from far, which make suit for the nourcing of the infant; and of these
 " foster children they make more account than of their own which they beare. And although
 " C they are most intemperate, by reason of the distemperature of the aire, and the moisture
 " both of the ground, and of their meates; in regard also that all law is exiled; and albeit
 " they thinke it is a shame for themselves to give their owne children the breast, yet for this " their nurcelings sake, both man and wife abstaine from carnall company together. And if " they doe otherwise, they entertaine another nourse under them at their owne charges. And " nourses there be among them as many well neere as there are young wenches for their ser" vants: and to have the suckling of the little child, they count a sufficient reward for being " naught of their bodies. Now if this infant fortune to bee sicke, they all to besprinkle it " with the stalest urine they can get; and for a preservative against all misfortunes, they " hang about the childrens neckes, not onely the beginning of Saint Johns Gospell, but also a " D crooked naile taken out of an horses shooe, or else a piece of a wolves skin. And for that " purpose, as well nourses as infants, wear girdles platted of womens haire. To their lovers
 " also, it is knowne, they send bracclets finely wrought of these haire: whether their minde
 " is herein of Venus girdle called Cestus, I wote not: The Foster-fathers take much more
 " paines, bestow more goods by farre, and shew greater love unto their foster children than " they doo to their owne children: From them, these children not so much by due claime of " right receive, as by force wrest, even with taking stresses, and driving away booties, appa-
 " rell, maintenance for their pleasures, money wherewith to buy them armour, yea and to spend
 " in all kind of their lewdnesse; their dowries also and stockes of cattell. All those that have " been nourced by the same woman, love one another more deerely, repose greater trust in
 " E them, than if they were their naturall whole brethren and sisters; insomuch as in compari" son of these and for their sakes, they even hate their naturall brethren and sisters.

" Be they reproved at any time by their own parents, they flie to these their foster-fathers,
 " and being heartened by them, breake out oftentimes even unto open war against their said
 " parents; taking instructions from them to all lewd and villanous pranks, they become most " ungracious and desperate. Semblably, the nourses traine up those maidens which they " reare, to all obscenity and filthinesse. If any of these foster children chance to fall sicke, a " man would not beleve how quickly their nourses heare of it, yea though they dwell many a " mile off, how pensively they attend and watch by the sicke body night and day. To conclude,
 " the greatest corruptions of Ireland, are thought to spring from these foster-fathers and
 " F nourses, and from nought else.

" That these Irish people are both of an hotter and moisture nature than other nations, we " may well conjecture. And thus we gather by their wonderfull soft skin: which doubtlesse
 " cometh as well by the nature of the soile, as by certaine artificiall bathings and exercise
 " that they use. By reason also of the same tendernesse of their muscles, they so excell in nim-
 " blesse and flexibility of all parts of the body, as it is incredible. Given they are to idleness above all things : they reckon it the greatest riches to take no paine, and count it the most A pleasure to enjoy liberty. Delighted they are above measure in musick, but especially in the harpe with wire-strings, which they warble upon with their nimble fingers most melodiously. Doe any of them betake themselves to religion, a wonder it is to see how they mortifie and keepe their bodies under, with a devout kind of austerity, watching, praying, and making themselves leane with much fasting : so that it is no marvell which is written of their monkes in the age afore going. Yea the very women and young maidens fast duely upon every Wednesday and Saturday throughout the whole yeere. Some of them also fast upon Saint Katharines festivall day : and thus they faile not to doe upon Christmas day, if so fall out, even when they be most grievously sicke. Some make this to bee the cause for B maidens, that they may be sped with good husbands; for wives, that they may change for a better marriage, either by the death of their husbands, or by forsaking them, or at leastwise by alteration of their conditions. But they that have once given themselves over to lewdnesse, are more lewd than lewdnesse it selfe. Their garments they die with the barkes of trees, that English men name Alders : they use also Elder-berries to colour their wooll yellow. With the boughes, barke and leaves of the poplar tree bruised and stamped, they staine their large wide shirts with a saffran colour, which now are almost out of use, and adding therunto the rine of the wild Arbut tree, salt together with saffran. And whate- ever they die, they doe not so much boile it long over the fire, as drench and keepe the same for certaine daies together among other things in cold urine of man or woman, that the C yellow colour may be more durable.
 " above

They account it no shame or infamie to commit robberies, which they practise every where with exceeding cruelty. When they goe to rob, they poure out their prayers to God. That they may meet with a booty : and they suppose, that a cheat or booty is sent unto them from God as his gift : neither are they perswaded, that either violence, or rapine, or manslaughter displeaseth God : for in no wise would be present unto them this opportu- nity, if it were a sinne; nay a sin it were if they did not lay hold upon the said opportunity. You shall heare these Cut-throats and Incendiaries come out with these words, Gods mercifull, and will not suffer the price of his blood to be of no eff. A in me. More- over, they say, that they walke in their fathers steps; that this manner of life was left unto D them : also, that it were a disparagement of their nobility, if they would get their living by handie labour, and forbear committing such faults. As they are setting forth to a bur- haling, or to doe any other businesse, they marke whom they meet first in the morning : if they speed well, they lay for to meet with him oft : if otherwise, they heedfully avoid him. To sleepe and snore in a most stormie night, and not to dispatch a very long way by night on foot, nor to adventure upon any danger whatsoever in spoiling and robbing, they take to be tokens of a base and abject minde.

Of late daies, they spare neither Churches nor hallowed places, but thence also they fill their hands with spoile : yea and sometimes they set them on fire, and kill the men that there lie hidden : And the cause hereof, is the most filthy life of their Priests, who of E Churches make profane houses, and keepe harlots, who follow them whithersoever they goe; but when they are cast off, seeke cunning devices to doe mischief by poisons. The Priests Lemans and their bastards abide within the circuit of a Church, drunke untill they be drunke, lie together, shed blood, and keepe up their cattell there.

Among those wild Irish, there is neither divine service, nor any forme of Chappell but outwardly : no Altars at all, or else they be filthy polluted : the image of the Rood or Crosse defaced, if there be any at all. The sacred vestiments are so foule and nasty that they would make one to cast up his stomacke : The altar portable, without any crosses emprinted upon it, and by some abuse or other polluted : The Massal or Masse booke all torne, and bereft of the Canon; yet the same is sendred to all oaths and perjuries; the Chalice of lead, with- out a cover to it, the samll vessels for wine made of a borne. The Priests mind nothing but gathering of goods and getting of children.

The Parsons play the Vicars, and that of many Parishes together : they make a great shew of the Canon Law, but have never a jot of learning.

They have their children to succeed them in their Churches, for whose illegitimation they are are dispenced with. These will not take the order of Priest-hood, but commit the charge to the Curates without any stipend, that they may live by the booke, that is, upon some small gift or oblation at the baptisme, inunction, and buriall, wherewith God wor, they live most bare and miserable.

These Priests sonnes that follow not their studies, prove for the most part notorious thieves. For they that carry the name of Mac-Decan, Mac-Pherfon, Mac-Ospac, that is, the Deanes or Dracons son, the Parsons son, and the Bishops sonne, are the strong- est thieves that be, and the more able by their Parents liberality to raise a power of unruly rebels; and the rather, because following their fathers steps, they maintaine hospitality. B As for the daughters of these Priests, if their fathers be living, they are set forth with good portions; in case they wed : but if their fathers be dead, either they bregge or prostitute their bodies.

At every third word is ordinary with them to lash out an oath, namely, by the Trinity, by God, by S. Patrick, by S. Brigid, by their Baptism, by Faith, by the Church, by my God-fathers hand, and by thy hand. And albeit by these they sweare, with the sacred Bible or Missal laid most religiously upon their bare heads, yea and be forsworne, yet if one say they stand in danger of damnation for perjury, you shall heare them straightwaies cry aloud, The Lord is mercifull, and will not suffer the price of his blood shed for me, to be of no effect in me. Never shall I goe to hell, repent I or repent I not. But for the C performance of promise, and that a man may beleve them, these three points with them be of greatest weight to bind them. First, if one sweare at the altar, touching the booke lying open, and the same laid on the crown of his head. Secondly, if he take to record some Saint, whose crooked staffe or bell he touche and kisseth. Thirdly, if he sweare by the band of an Earle, or of his owne Lord, or some mighty person : for then, if he be convicted of perjury by the two former, he incurres infamy; but in case hee be forsworne by the third, the said mighty man will wring from him perforce a great summe of mony, and a number of Cowes; as if by that perjury the greatest abuse and injury that might be were offered unto his name. For cowes are their only wealth, and of greatest esteeme. Touching which cattell, this seemeth not unworthy the observation.

D Most certain it is (as hee writeth) that cowes in Ireland give no milke, unlesse their own calfe be set by their side alive, or else the skin of the dead calfe staffed with straw, so as it may carry the resemblance of a live one, for in that skin they acknowledge the sent, as it were, of their owne wombe. If a cow goe dry or hold up their milke, they send for a witch, who by herbes may cause her to cast her love upon another cowes calfe, that so she may give downe her milke.

Town-dwellers seldome make any contract of marriage with them of the country, and these passe their promise not for present, but for the future time; or else give assent without any deliberation. Whence it is, that for every light falling out they part asunder, the hus- band to another woman, the wife to another husband; neither is it ever knowne for cer- E tainty whether their contracts have been true or false, before they give up their last gaspe. Hence rise contentions about the possession of lands, hence grow robberies, depredations, slaughters, and deadly hatred. The women that are cast off goe to witches for counsell, who are thought verily to bring upon the former husband, or his new married wife, either barrennesse or impotency in the act of generation, or else most dangerous diseases. For all of them are marvellously prone to incest, and nothing is there so common as divorces under pretence of conscience. The women as well as the men make great account of the haire or gibbes of their heads, especially if they be of a golden colour, and long withall : for they shew and lay them out platted to the full length in a bravery, and suffer them when they are finely and trimly curled to hang downe : when in the meane time they wrap in foldes and F rolls about their head many ells of the finest linnen or sendall. This kinde of coronet or head-tire they all weare that are able to get it, after their child-birth, wheiber it bee in wedlocke, or by playing the whores.

To these may be added a number of superstitions. I cannot tell wheiber the wilder sort of the Irishry yeeld divine honour unto the Moone; for when they see her first after the change, change, commonly they bow the knee, and say over the Lords prayer, and so soone as they have made an end, they speake unto the Moone with a loud voice in this manner: Leave us as whole and sound as thou hast found us. They take unto them themselves to be their Gods, whom they tearme Chari Christi, praying for them and wishing them well, and so they are not afraid to be hurt by them. The shoulder blade bone of a sheep, when the flesh is cleane taken from it, they use to looke through, and thereby foretell of some course shortly to be carried out of that house, if they see any darke or dusky spot in it. They take heed for a wicked woman and a witch, what ever she be, that commeth to fetch fire from them on May day (neither will they give any fire then, but unto a sick body, and that with a curse): for because they thinke the same woman will the next Summer steale away all their butter. If they finde an hare amongst their beads of cattell on the said May day, they kill her, for they suppose shee is some old trot that would filch away their butter. They are of opinion, that their butter if it be stolen will soone after bee restored againe, in case they take away some of the batch that hangeth over the doore of the house, and cast it into the fire. And upon these Calends, or first day of May, they fully beleve that to set a greene bough of a tree before their houses, will cause them to have great abundance of milke all summer long.

In their townes, when any Magistrate entreth first upon his office, the wives along the streets, and the Maidens out of windowes, bestrew them and their followers with wheat and salt. And before they sow their seed in the corne field, the Goodwife or Maistresse of the house sendeth salt to the said field. That the Kites may not swoope away their chickens, they hang up in some place of the house-roofe the egge-shells out of which the said chickens were hatched. To rubbe their horse beeles, or to curry their bodies with a curry-combe, or to gather grasse to meat them with, it is not lawfull upon a Sunday; whereas they will not sicke to doe all this upon other dayes, be they never so high and festivall.

If they never give fire out of the house unto their neighbours, they are perswaded their horses shall live the longer, and continue sound.

If the owners of horses eat egges, they must looke unto it that they be even in number, otherwise their horses will be in danger. Horse-breakers and horse-keepers are forbidden to eat egges. A custome there is also among them, that horsemen after they have eaten egges doe wash their hands. When an horse is dead, they hang up his feet and legges in the house, yea their very hoofes are esteemed as an hallowed and sacred relique.

In no case must you praise an horse or any other beast, untill you say, God save him, or unlesse you spit upon him. If any harme befall the horse within three dayes after, they seeke him out that praised him, that he may mumble the Lords Prayer in his right care. They thinke there bee some that bewitch their horses with looking upon them: and then they use the helpe of some old haggis, who saying a few Prayers with a loud voice, make them well againe. There is a certaine small worme breeding in their horses feet, which creeping on still by little and little, breedeth a great many of the same kinde, and corrupteth the body: Against this worme they send for a wise woman, who is brought to the horse on two severall Mondais, and one Thursday. She breatheth upon the place where the worme lieth; and after shee hath rehearsed a charme, the horse recovereth. This charme they teach many for a piece of money, making them to sweare that they will not reveale it to any body.

Against all maladies and mischiefs whatsoever, the women have effectuall enchantments or charmes, as they suppose, divided and parted amongst them, each one her severall enchantment, and the same of divers forces; unto whom every man, according as his mischance requirith, speedeth himselfe for helpe. They say alwaies both before and after their charmes, a Pater Noster and an Ave Maria.

When any man hath caught a fall upon the ground, forthwith hee starteth up againe on his feet, and turneth himselfe round three times toward his right hand, with his sword, skeine, or knife hee diggeth into the earth, and fetcheth up a turf, for that, they say, the earth doth yeeld a spirit: and if within some two or three daies

A diuer he of this kinde, there is found a woman skilfull in this kind unto the said place, and there shee saith unto his wife, I call thee Ra. From thence Eastward unto South and North, from the forests, woodes, rivers, meeres, the wilde wood fayries, white, red, black, &c. and with all, holdest out certaine flouds of waters: then returneth shee home unto the sicke party, and whistereib shee this disease called Efaues, which they are of opinion is sent by the Fairies; and whistereib a certaine odde prater with a Pater Noster in his ear, puerib some cauls into a pus stufte paine murther, and so giveth more certain judgement of the disease, than many of our Physicians can.

There were not fewe confidant of horsemen, of souldiours set in the rene-guard, whom they terme Gallloghassies, who fight with most keene hachets, and of light armed footmen called Kernes, whose service is to combat and skaners. To give an acclamation, and shout unto a party footmen or horsemen as they goeth out of the gate, is counted lucky and fortunate: he who hath no such apparitions thought to have some mischance portended unto him. In war they use the bagpipe in stead of a trumpet, they carry about them Amulets, they recite certaint prayers, or maintaining their cry as loud as possible they can, Pharroh (I suppose this to be the military Barritus which Ammianus speaketh of) with this perswasion, that he who crieth not as loud as the rest, shall have this accident befall unto him, suddenly to be taken up from the ground, and carried, as it were, flying in the aire, avoiding ever after the sight of men into a certaine vale in Kerry, as I have said before.

Such as refuse and sit by one that lieth sicke in bed, never speake word of God, nor of his salvation, or his soules, nor yes of making his will, but al to put him in hope of his recovering: If any one call for the sacraments, him they count past hope and recovery. The women passe not for any milk-making, because it is growne now to be a common custome that a third part of the goods shall be given unto them, and the rest to be divided by even portions among the children, saving that when they come to enter upon the inheritance, be that it might itselfe be a third part of the best share. For he that is strongest, he he uncle or nephew, most times searceh upon the inheritance, and thrusteth the children out of all, when one lieth ready to die, before he is quite gone, certaine women, hired of purpose to lament, standing in the meeing of crosse high-wayes, and holding their hands all abroad, call unto him with certain out-cries fitted for the moene, and goe about to stay his soule, as it laboureth to get forth of the bodie, by reckoning up the commodities that be enjoyers of worldly goods, of wives, of beauty, fame, kinsfolke, friends, and horses; and demanding of him why he will depart? and whither? and to whom? yea they expostulate with his soule, objecting that he is unthankfull. At length they piteously make moane, and say, that the soule now ready to leave the body is going away to these kinde of haggish women that appeare by night and in darknesse: but after it is departed once out of the body, they keepe a mourning and wailing for it, with loud howling and clapping of their hands together. Now they follow the corps when it goes to buriall with such a peale of out-cries, that a man would thinke the quicke as well as the dead past all recoverie. In these wailings and lamentations the nurses, daughters and concubines make the greatest adoe, and are most vehement. Neither doe they mourne with lesse sorrow and heavinesse for those that are slaine in battaile, than such as die of sicknesse: although they affirme, that they have an easier death who lose their lives in fighting in the field, or in robbing. Yet notwithstanding they raile upon their enemies with most spitefull words, and continue for a long time deadly hatred against all of that sect and kindred.

They suppose that the soules of such as are deceased goe into the company of certaine men, famous in those places, touching whom they retaine still fables and songs, as of Giants, Fin-Mac-Huyle, Osker Mac-Othin, and they say that by illusion they often times doe see such.

As for their meats, they feed willingly upon herbs, and watercreffes especially, upon mushromes, shamroots, and roots: so that Strabo not without good cause said they were mushromi, i. Eaters of herbes, for which in some copies is falsly read mushromi. Great Eaters. They delight also in butter tempered with oate-meale, in milke, whey, beefe-broth, and flesh oftentimes without any bread at all. As for the corne that Gallloghassies, Kernes.

Barritus.

Water-creffes.
Shamroots.

Nann

that

that they have, they lay it up for their horses provender, for whom verily they are especially carefull. When they be hunger bitten in time of dearth, they disdain not to devour raw flesh, after they have pressed out the blood thereof: and for to concoct and digest it, they swill in and poure down the throat Uskebah draught after draught. They let their kine blood also, which when it is growne to a gelly, and strewed over with butter, they eat with good appetite.

They goe for the most part bare headed, unlesse it bee when they put on an head-piece. The haire of their head they weare long, and nothing set they greater store by than the glibbes or tresses of their haires; and to have the same plucked or twitched, they take it for a contumelious indignitie. They use linnen shirts, and those verily exceeding large, with wide sleeves, and hanging side downe to their very knees, which they were wont to staine with saffron. Little Jackets they have of woollen, and those very short: breeches most plaine and close to their thighes. But they cast over these their mantles or shagge rugges, which Isidore seemeth to call Heteromalle, with a deepe fringed purple, and the same daintily set out with sundrie colours; within which they lappe themselves in the night, and sweetly sleepe on the very ground. Such also doe the women cast over the side garment that they weare downe to the foot, and with elnes (as I said) of Sendall rolled up in wreathes, they rather load than adorne their heads; like as they doe their neckes with chaines and carkaneth, their armes also with bracelets. These are the manners of the wild Irish, out of our Author: In the rest, for the most part all that inhabite the English Pale (as they tearme it) there is no point of curtesie and civilitie wanting: for which they are beholden to the English conquest: and for much more might the whole Island bee beholden unto it, in case upon a certaine peevish and obstinate love they beare unto their owne country fashions, they had not stopped up their eares and shut up their hearts against better governance. For the Irishry are so stiffly settled in observing of the old rites of their country, that not onely they cannot be withdrawn from them, but also are able easily to draw the English unto the same (so prone is mans nature to entertain the worst) that one would not beleeve in how short a time some English among them degenerate and grow out of kinde.

THE

A PRAEFACE TO THE ANNALES OF IRELAND.

Hus far forward was the Printers presse a going when the Honourable Lord William Howard of Naworth, for the love that he beareth unto the studies of Antiquity, willingly imparted unto me the Manuscript Annales of Ireland, from the yeere of our Salvation MCLII. unto the yeere MCCCLXX. Which I thought good to publish; considering that after Giraldus Cambrensis, there is nothing to my knowledge, extant better in this kind; and because so noble and worthy a person, whose they were by right in private before, permitted so much. Unto whom, the very same thanks in manner are duly to be yeilded for bringing them to light, that were to be given unto the authour himselfe, who first recorded them in writing. And albeit they are penned in a stile somewhat rude and barrain (as those times required) yet much matter is therein contained, that may illustrate the Irish Historie, and would have given good light unto mee, if they had not come to my hands so late. Take them here therefore truly and faithfully exemplified, even as I found them, with all their imperfections and faults; and if you have any better, impart them with semblable courtesie unto us; if not, make use of these with us, untill some one come forth and shew himselfe, that will helpe us to a fuller Chronicle, and happilie continue the same in length even unto our daies with more elegancie of phrase, which verily would be no painfull work to be performed.

Nnnn 2

THE

THE ANNALES OF IRELAND.

- A Nno Domini MCLXII. Gregorie the first Archbishop of Dublin, a man praise worthy every way, slept in the Lord: after whom succeeded holy Laurence O-Thobis, who was Abbat of St. Kemnus de Glindelagh. Thomas is made Archbishop of Canterbury.
- MCLXVI. Rothericke O-Conghir, Prince of Connaght was made King and Monarch of Ireland.
- MCLXVII. Died Maud the Empreffe. The same yeere Almaricke King of Jerusalem tooke Babylon. And in the same yeere Dermoc Mac-Murrough Prince of Leinster, whiles O-Rorke King of Meth was in a certaine expedition, carried away his wife, who was willing enough to be ravished. For her selfe made meanes to be taken as a prey, as we find in Cambrensis.
- MCLXVIII. Donate King of Uriel, founder of Mellifont Monasterie, departed in Christ. In the same yeere Robert Fitz-Stephen, neither unmindefull of his promise, nor a breaker of his faith, came into Ireland with thirtie Knights.
- MCLXIX. Earle Richard of Strogul sent before him into Ireland a certaine young Gentleman of his owne family, named Remund, with ten Knights about the Calends of May. The same yeere the said Earle Richard, accompanied with two hundred Knights or thereabout, and others to the number as one would say of a thousand, arrived on the even of S. Bartholmew the Apostle. Which Richard verily, was the sonne of Gilbert Earle of Strogul, that is, Chippestow, sometime Strogul. This Richard also was the sonne of Isabell, Aunt by the mothers side of K. Malcome, and William King of Scotland, and of David the Earle, a Gentleman of good hope: and the morrow after the same Apostles day they tooke the said Citie; and there D Eva, Dermots daughter, was lawfully joined in marriage unto Earle Richard, and her father gave her.
- MCLXXI. S. Thomas Becket Archbishop of Canterbury was slaine. In the same yeere the Citie of Dublin was by the Earle and his companie taken. And the same yeere was founded the Abbey de Castro Dei, that is, of Gods Castle.
- MCLXXI. Dermot Mac-Murrough full of dayes was taken out of this world at Fernys, about the Calends of May.
- MCLXXII. The courageous King Henrie with 500. Knights arrived at Waterford, and among other things gave Meth unto Sir Hugh Lacie. The same yeere was founded the Abbey de Fonte vivo.
- MCLXXIV. Gelasius Archbishop of Armagh, the first Primate of Ireland, an holy man, aged and full of daies, rested in Christ. This Gelasius is said to bee the first Archbishop that wore the first pale; but others before him were in name onely called Archbishops and Primates, for the reverend regard and honour of St. Patricke, as being the Apostle of that nation: whose See was from the beginning had of all men in so great reverence, that not onely Bishops and Priests and those of the Cleargie, but Kings and Princes univerally were subject to the Bishop thereof in all obedience. After whom succeeded in the Archbishopsricke Gilbert a Prelate of good memorie.
- MCLXXV. William King of Scotland was taken prisoner at Alnewicke.
- MCLXXVI. Bertram Verdon founded the Abbey of Crokifenne.
- MCLXXVII. Earle Richard about the Calends of May died at Dublin, and was buried in the Church of the holy Trinitie at Dublin. The same yeere Vivian a Priest, Cardinall entituled of S. Stephan in Mount Caelius, came as Legat of the Apostolicall See into Ireland, sent from Pope Alexander.

MCLXXVIII.

- A MCLXXVIII. The ninth day before the Calends of December, the Abbey de S. maria was founded. The same yeere was founded Rose Vale, that is, Roseglass.
- MCLXXIX. Miles Cogan, and Ralph the sonne of Fitz-Stephen, his daughters husband, were slaine betwene Waterford and Lismore, &c. as we read in Cambrensis. The same yeere Hervie Mont-Marish entred the Monasterie of Saint Trinitie in Canterbury, who founded the Monasterie of Saint Marie de Porta, that is, Of Donbrois.
- MCLXXX. The Abbey of the Quire of Benet was founded. The same yeere was founded the Abbey of Geripount. The same yeere Laurence Archbishop of Dublin, upon the 18. day before the Calends of December happily slept in the Lord B within the Church of Saint Marie of Aux. After whom succeeded John Cumin, an Englishman borne in England at Evesham, chosen with good agreement and accord by the Cleargie of Dublin (the King by his industry procuring the same) and confirmed by the Pope: which John afterwards founded the Church of Saint Patricke in Dublin.
- MCLXXXIII. The order of the Templars and Hospitallers is confirmed. The same yeere is founded the Abbey de Lege Dei, that is, Gods Law.
- MCLXXXV. John the Kings sonne, Lord of Ireland by his fathers gift, came into Ireland in the 12. yeere of his age, in the thirteenth yeere after his fathers comming, C after the comming of Fitz-Stephen the fifteenth, in the 14. yeere from the comming of Earle Richard, and in the same fifteenth yeere returned.
- MCLXXXVI. The order of the Cartusians and of the Grandians is confirmed. In the same yeere Hugh Lacie was killed at Dervath treacherously by an Irishman; because the foresaid Hugh would build a castle there: and as he was teaching of an Irishman how to labour with an iron toole, to wit, a Pykax; when Hugh bowed himselfe forward, he stroke him to the ground with both hands, and as he held down his head, the said Irishman with an axe chopt off Hugh Lacie his head, and there was an end of the conquest. In the same yeere Christian Bishop of Lismore, sometime Legate of Ireland, an earnest follower of the vertues which he had seen and heard of his devout father Saint Bernard, and Pope Eugenius, a venerable man, with whom hee was in the Probatorie at Clarevall, who also ordained him to be the Legate in Ireland, after his obedience performed, within the monasterie of Kyrieleson, happily departed to Christ. Jerusalem was taken with the Lords Crosse, by the Soldan and the Saracens, after many Christians slaine.
- MCLXXXVII. Upon the Calends, or first day of July, was the Abbey of Ynes in D Ulster founded.
- MCLXXXIX. Henry Fitz-Empresse departed this life, after whom succeeded his sonne Richard, and is buried in Font-Ebrard. In the same yeere was founded the Abbey de Colle victorie, that is, of Cnokmoy.
- E MCXC. King Richard and King Philip make a voiage into the holy land.
- MCXCI. In the Monasterie of Clarevall, the translation of Malachie Bishop of Armagh was honourably celebrated.
- MCXCII. The Citie of Dublin was burnt.
- MCXCIII. Richard King of England in his return from the holy land, was taken prisoner by the Duke of Austrich, and he made an end by composition with the Emperor, to pay for his ranfome one hundred thousand markes, and with the Empreffe, to pay thirtie thousand: also with the foresaid Duke 20. thousand markes, in regard of an obligation which he had made unto them for Henrie Duke of Saxonie. Now hee remained in the Emperours prison a yeere, sixe moneths, and three daies: For F whose ranfome all the Chalcies in manner throughout England, were sold. In the same yeere was founded the Abbey de Jugo Dei, that is, of Gods yoke.
- MCXCIII. The reliques of S. Malachie Bishop of Clareval, were brought into Ireland, and with all honour that might be, received in the Monasterie of Mellifont, and the rest of the Monasteries of the Cistercian order.
- MCXCV. Matthew Archbishop of Casfile Legate of Ireland, & John Archbishop of Dublin

Nnn 3

« Dublin carried away the corps of Hugh Lacie, the conquerour of Meth, from the I-A « rish, and solemnely entered it in the Monasterie of Blessednesse, that is, Beby. But « the head of the said Hugh was bestowed in the Monastery of Saint Thomas in Dub« lin.

« MCCCXVIII. The order of Friars Preachers began in the parts about Tolouse, by « Dominicke the second.

« MCCCXIX. Richard King of England died: after whom succeeded John his brother, « who was Lord of Ireland and Earle of Mortaigne: which John slew Arthur the law-« full heire, sonne of Geoffrey his whole brother.

« And in this manner died Richard. When K. Richard besieged the Castle of Cha-B « luz in little Britaine, wounded he was to death with an arrow by one of those in the « said Castle, named Bertram Gurdon. And when he dispaired of his life, hee demi« sed the Kingdome of England, and all his other lands unto his brother to keep. All « his Jewels, and one fourth part of his Treasure he gave unto his Nephew Orho, and « another fourth part of his Treasure he gave, and commanded to be dealt among his « servants and the poore. Now when the said Bertram was apprehended and brought « before the King, the K. demanded of him in these termes: what harme have I done « thee that thou hast slaine me? Unto whom without any manner of feare he answered « thus. Thou killedst my father, and two of my brethren with thine owne hand,
« and me also thou wouldest now have killed: Take therefore what revenge so ever « thou wilt of me, for I passe not, so thou maist be slaine, that hath wrought so many « mischiefes to the world. Then the King forgave him his death, and commanded « that hee should be let goe at libertie, and to give him besides one hundred shillings
« sterling. But after the King was dead, some of the Kings ministers slayed the said « Bertram, and hung him up. And this King yeelded up his vitall breath the eighth « day before the Ides of April, which fell out to be the fourth day of the weeke before « Palme-Sunday, and the eleventh day after he was wounded: and buried hee was at « Font Ebrard, at the feet of his father. Touching whose death a certaine versifier saith « thus.

Isim in morte perimit formica leonem,

Prob dolor! in tanto funere mundus obit.

In this mans death, as is well scene, the Ant a Lion slaies,
And in so great a death (alas) the world doth end her daies.

« The Corps of which King Richard is divided into three parts. Whence was this « verse made.

Viscera Carceolum, Corpus Fons servat Ebrardi,

Et Cor Rhoibomagus magne Richardis tum.

Thy bowels onely Carceol keeps, thy Corps Font-Everard, E
And Roan hath keeping of thy heart O puissant Richard.

« When King Richard was departed this life, his brother John was girt with the « sword of the Duchy of Normandie by the Archbishop of Rhoan, the seventh day « before the Calends of May next ensuing after the death of the aforesaid King: which « Archbishop did set upon the head of the said Duke a Circle flower with golden ro« ses in the top round about. Also upon the sixth day before the Calends of June hee
« was anointed and crowned King of England, all the Lords and Nobles of England « being present, within the Church of Saint Peter in Westminster upon the day of the « Lords Ascension: and afterwards was John King of England called to a Parliament F
« in France by the King of France, to answer as touching the death of his Nephew « Arthur, and because he came not, he deprived him of Normandy. The same yeere « was the Abbey of Commercy founded.

« MCC. Cathol Cronerg King of Conaght founder of the Monastery de Colle
« Victoria, that is, of the Hill of Victorie, is expelled out of the Conaght. The same yeere
« was

A was founded, the Monasterie de Voto, that is, Tynterne, by William Marshall, Earle
Marshall and of Pembroke, who was Lord of Leinster, to wit, of Weisford, Osfory, Caterlagh, and Kildare, in regard and right of his wife: who espoused the daughter of Richard Earle of Strogghul, and of Eve the daughter of Dermot-Mac-Murogh. But because the foresaid William Earle Marshall was in exceeding great jeopardy both day and night in the sea, he vowed a vow unto our Lord Jesus Christ, that if he might be delivered from the tempest, and come to land, hee would make a Monasterie unto Christ and Marie his mother: and so it came to passe when hee was come safe to Weisford, he made I say the Monasterie of Tynterne, according to his vow, and called B it the Monasterie De voto, that is, Of the vow. In the same yeere was founded the Monasterie de Flumine Dei, that is, Of Gods river.

« MCCII. Cathol Cronerg or Corrobayr, King of Conaght, was set againe in his kingdome. The same yeere is founded the house of Canons or Regular Priests of St.
Marie, by Sir Meiler Fitz-Henrie.

« MCCIII. The Abbey of S. Saviour, that is, Dowisly, being founded, was in this yeere and the next following built.

« MCCIV. There was a field fought betweene John Curcie Earle of Ulster, and Hugh Lacie at Doune: in which battell many on both sides lost their lives. But John Curcie had the upper hand in fight. Afterwards, upon the sixth day of the weeke, C being Good-friday, when the foresaid John was unarmed, and went by way of pilgrimage bare foot and in his linnen vesture a visiting the Churches, as the manner is, treacherously he was taken prisoner by his owne people for a piece of money given in hand, and for a greater reward to be given afterward for a recompence; and so was delivered unto Hugh Lacie. But hee bringeth him unto the King of England, who gave unto Hugh Lacie the Earldom of Ulster, and the Seigniorie of Conaght, which belonged unto John Curcie. Then Hugh Lacie being Earle, rewarded all the foresaid Traitors that had betrayed John Curcie, and gave unto them gold and silver, more or lesse: but straightwayes hung up all the Traitors aforesaid, and tooke away all their goods: and so Hugh Lacie ruleth over all Ulster, and John Curcie is condem-D ned to perpetuall prison, because he had before time beene a Rebelle to John King of England, and would not doe him homage, and besides, blamed him about the death of Arthur the rightfull heire unto the Crowne. But whiles hee was in prison and in extreme povertie, having but little allowance, and the same course and simple, for to eat and drinke, he said, O God, wherefore dealest thou thus by me, who have built and re-edified so many Monasteries for thee and thy Saints? Now when he had many times wailed and made loud moane in this wise, and therewith fell asleep, the holy Trinitie appeared unto him, saying: Why hast thou cast me out of mine owne fear, and out of the Church of Doune, and placed there my S. Patrick the Patron of Ireland?
E (Because indeed John Curcie had expelled the Secular Canons or Priests out of the Cathedrall Church of Doune, and brought the blacke Monks of Chester, and placed them in the said Church: And the holy Trinitie stood there in a stately shrine or seat, and John him selfe tooke it downe out of the Church, and ordained a Chappell for that Image, and in the great Church set up the image of S. Patrick, which displeased the most High God:) therefore thus said God, Know thou well that thou shalt never enter into thy Seigniorie in Ireland.

Howbeit, in regard of other good deeds that thou hast done, thou shalt with honour be delivered forth of prison: which also came to passe. And now by this time there arose a contention betweene John King of England, and the King of France, about a Seigniorie and certain Castles: and this suit or controversie still depending,
F the King of France offered unto him a Giant or Champion to fight for his right.
Then the King of England called to remembrance his most valiant Knight John Curcie, whom upon the information of others he had before cast into prison. The King therefore sent for John Curcie, and asked him if he were able to help and stand him in stead in a combat: then John answered and said, I will not fight for thee, but for the right of the Kingdome: for which afterward hee undertooke to doe his endevour

deavour in single fight: and so refreshed himselfe with meat, drink, and bathing, and A tooke the vertue of his owne fortitude and strength: and a day was appointed betweene these Giants or Champions, namely, betweene John Curcie and the other.
 But when the Champion of France heard of his exceeding great feeding, and of his strength, he refused the combat, and then was the said Seigniorie given unto the King of England. Then the King of France requested to see a stroke given by the hand of John Curcie: and he set a strong and doughtie good morion full of maile upon a great blocke or log of wood: and the foresaid John taking his skene or sword, and looking back round about him with a stern and grim countenance, smote the mo-rion through, from the very crest downward into the blocke, and the sword stucke B in the wood so fast, that no other man but himselfe was able to plucke out the sword: then John at the request of the Kings easily plucked it forth. And the Kings demanded of the foresaid John, wherefore he looked behind him with so grim a countenance before he gave the stroke; who answered, that if he had failed in giving that stroke, he would have slaine them all, as well Kings as others. And the Kings gave unto him great gifts, yea and the King of England rendred unto him also his Seigniorie of Ulster. But John Curcie attempted 15. times to saile over sea into Ireland, but was alwaies in danger, and the wind evermore against him: wherefore hee waited a while among the Monkes of Chester. At length he returned into France, and there rested in the Lord.

MCCV. The Abbey of Wertheny in the countie of Limericke was founded by C Theobald the sonne of Walter Butler, Lord of Karryke.

MCCVI. The order of Friars Minors was begun neere the citie Affisa, by Saint Francis.

MCCVII. William Breos is expelled out of England, and commeth into Ireland.
 England is interdicted for the tyrannie of King John of England. Likewise a great overthrow and slaughter hapned at Thurles in Mounster, committed upon the Lord Justice of Irelands men, by Sir Geffery Mareys.

MCCX. John King of England came into Ireland, with a great fleet and a puissant armie: and for that the sons of Hugh Lacie, to wit, the Lord Walter Lord of Meth, D and Hugh his brother, exercised tyrannie upon the Commons, and especially because they slew Sir John Curson, Lord of Rathenny and Kilbarrocke (for they heard that the foresaid John accused them unto the King) therefore I say the King drave the foresaid sonnes of Hugh Lacie out of the land: and they fled into France, and served in the Monasterie of Saint Taurin as unknowne, working about clay and bricke, and sometime in gardens as Gardiners: but at length they were knowne by the Abbat of the said Monasterie: and the said Abbat entreated the King for them, because he had baptized his sonnes, and was Godfith unto him as a Godfather many times: and Walter Lacie paid two thousand and five hundred markes: and Hugh Lacie payed a great summe of money unto the King for his ransome: and at the re- E quest of the said Abbat restored they were againe unto their former degree and Seigniorie. And Walter Lacie brought with him John the sonne of Alured, that is, Fitz-Acory, sonne to the foresaid Abbats whole brother, and he made him Knight, and gave unto him the Seigniorie of Dingle, and many other Lordships. Item, hee brought Monkes with him out of the same Monasterie, and gave unto them many fermes, and the Cell called Fourie, in regard of charitie, thankfulness, and counsell:
 and Hugh Lacie Earle of Ulster made a Cell for Monkes, and endowed them in Ulster in a place called But John King of England having taken many pledges and hostages as well of English as of Irish, and hanged a number of malefactours upon Jebbits, and felled the State of the land, returned into England the same yeere that he F came thither.

MCCXI. Sir Richard Tuit by the fall of a towre at Alone was crushed and whindred to death. This Richard was founder of the Monasterie de Grenard.

MCCXII. The Abbey of Grenard was founded. In the same yeere died John Co-myn Archbishop of Dublin, and was buried within the quire of the Church of the Holy

A Holy Trinitie, who was founder of Saint Patricks Church of Dublin: after whom succeeded Henrie Londres, who is called Scorch Villeyn, by occasion of a certaine act of his: for that one day he called his tenants before him, to answer by what tenure they held of him. And those tenants shewed their deeds and charters: but he commanded the charters or deeds of these husbandmen his tenants to be burned: and then the Freeholders evermore called him Henrie Scorch-Villein: which Henrie Archbishop of Dublin was Justice of Ireland, and built Dublin castle.

MCCXIII. William Petit and Petre Messet departed this life. This Petre Messet was Baron of Luyn hard by Trym; but because he died without heire male, the inheritance passed unto three daughters: the eldest of whom the Lord Vernail married, the second Talbot wedded, and the other Lounders espoused, and so they parted the inheritance betwene themselves.

MCCXIX. The Citie of Damietta, in the Nones of September was about the still time of midnight miraculously wonne, so that in the forcing and taking thereof there was not one Christian lost his life. In the same yeere died William Marechal the elder, Earle Marehall and of Pembroke, who began on the daughter of Richard Strongbow Earle of Strohul five sonnes; the name of the first sonne was William, the named of the second Walter, the name of the third Gilbert, the name of the fourth Anselme, the name of the fifth Richard, who was slaine in the warre of C Kildare: and everie one of these five sonnes was Earle after their father by succession in their fathers inheritance, and none of these had issue: wherefore the inheritance went away unto the sisters, namely, the daughters of their father: the first was named Maud Marechal, the second Isabel Clare, the third Eva Breos, the fourth Johan Mount Chensley, the fifth Sibill Countesse Ferrers. Hugh Bigod Earle of Norfolk espoused Maud Marechal, & he in the right of his wife was Earle Marechal of England: which Hugh begat Ranfe Bigod, father of John Bigod, who was the sonne of the Ladie Bertha Furnival: also Isabel Lacie, wife to Lord John Fitz-Gefferey: and when Hugh Bigod Earle of Norfolk was dead, she bare John de Guaren Earle of Surrey, and his sister Isabel Albeney Countesse of Arundell. Gilbert Clare Earle D of Gloucester espoused Isabel the second sister, who between them had issue Richard de Clare Earle of Gloucester; and she was mother to the Ladie Anise Countesse of Deneshire, who was mother to Isabel wife of the Lord Robert Brus Earle of Carricke in Scotland, and was afterwards King of the same Scotland. Of Eva Brus the third sister was begotten Maud, who was the mother of the Lord Edmund Morti-mer, and mother to the Ladie Eve Cauntelow, mother of the Ladie Milford Mohun, who was mother of Dame Eleanor, mother to the Earle of Hereford.

The Lord Guarin Mont Chensley espoused Johan Marechal the fourth sister, of whom came Johan Valens. Sibyll the Countesse of Ferrers, to wit the fourth, had issue five daughters: the first Agnes Vescie, mother to the Lord John, and the Lord
 E William Vescie: the second Isabel Basset: the third Joan Mohun, wife to the Lord
 John Mohun, son of the Lord Reginald: the fourth Sibyll Mohun, wife to Lord Francis Bohun Lord of Midhurst: the fifth Eleanor Vaus, who was wife unto the Earle of Winchester: the sixth Agatha Mortimer, wife to the Lord Hugh Mortimer:
 the seventh Maud Kyme Lady of Carbury. All these above said, as well males as females, are of the genealogie of the said William Earle Marechal.

MCCXX. The translation of St. Thomas of Canterburie. In the same yeere died the Lord Meiler Fitz Henrie, founder of the house of Connall, who is buried in the Chapter house of the same house.

MCCXXIV. The Castle of Bedford was besieged, and the Castle of Trim in F Ireland.

MCCXXV. Roger Pippard died. And Anno MCCXXVIII. died William Pippard, sometime Lord of the Salmons-leap. There departed likewise Henrie Londres, alias Scorch villeyn Archbishop of Dublin, and is interred in the Church of the Holy Trinitie at Dublin.

MCCXXX. Henrie King of England gave unto Hubert Burk the Justiceship of Ireland

This place is corrupted in the copie.

land, and a third pennie of rent, and made him Earle of Kent. And afterward the same
 " Hubert was imprisoned; and great trouble arose between the King and his subjects,
 " because he adhered to strangers more than to his owne naturall people.
 " MCCXXXI. William Mareſchall the younger, Earle Mareſhall and of Pem-
 " broke died, who is buried within the Quire of the Friars Preachers in Kilkenny.
 " MCCXXXIV. Richard Earle Mareſhall and of Pembroke or Strogull, on the first " day before the Ides of April was wounded in battell, upon the plaine of Kildare;
 " and some few dayes after died in Kilkenny, and there, hard by his naturall whole
 " brother, to wit, William, lieth buried within the Quire of Friars Preachers, of whom
 " it is thus written:

Cujus sub fossa Kilkenia continet ossa.

Whose bones bestow'd in grave so deep,
 Kilkenny towne doth safely keepe.

" MCCXLI. Walter Lacie Lord of Meth departed this life in England, leaving be" hind him two daughters his heires: whereof Sir Theobald Verdon married the first,
 " and Geffery Genevile espoused the second.

" MCCXLII. The Castle of Slegah was built by Morice Fitz-Gerald Justice of " Ireland. King Edward the first marched into Wales with a great army, and sent to " the said Justice that he would come to him with some forces out of Ireland, who ac" cordingly came with the flower of the English in Ireland, and Phelin O-Conor, who " was then King of Conacht in his company, and shortly returned with victorie & ho" nour. Afterward the said Justice preied the countrey Tirconnell, and gave a moitie " thereof to Cormac Mac-Dermot Mac-Rory, and carried with him pledges for the " other moitie, and left them in the castle of Slegah. Another expedition was made " by the said Justice and the English; first he came to Sleigagh, thence to Hohossro-
 " vie Mac Morin the Tuesday after the feast of Peter and Paul, and Cormac-Mac-
 " Dermot Mac-Rorie accompanied them. At that time O-Donnell assembled all Ki-
 " neoil Conail against them at the ford of Ath-Shany, so that hee permitted neither " English nor Irish to passe over the ford: whereupon the English resolved to send " Cormac Mac-Rory O-Conor with a company of horse into the champion West" ward, and they returned by an higher plaine over the moores Eastward to the ford
 " of Quilvain upon the water Earne, so that O-Donnell knew nothing of those com" panies of horse, untill he saw them on that side of the river that he himselfe encamped:
 " and when he saw the English at his backe, hee encountred them; but his army was " put to rout, & Moyle Haghlin O-Donnell, commonly called King of Kineoil Conail,
 " was slain, with Gylly Cavinelagh Obugill, and Mac-Derley King of Oresgael, with
 " the principall men of Kineoil Conail. And many of the army of the said Justice were " drowned as they passed over the water of Fin Northward, and among them in the " rescuing of a prey there were slaine Atarmanudaboge, Sir W. Brit Sheriff of Conacht
 " and the young knight his brother. And afterward the said army spoiled the coun" try, and left the Seigniorie of Kineoil Conail to Rory O-Conor for that time.

" There was another expedition also by the said Justice into Tirconnell, and great
 " spoiles made, and O-Canamayn was expelled out of Keneilgain, & he left the territo" ry of Kenail Conail with Gorry Mac-Donald O-Donnell.

" There was another expedition also by the said Justice into Tireogaine against O-
 " Neale, but he gave pledges for the preservation of his countrey.

" There was another expedition by the said Justice in Leinster against the Irishry,
 " whom he pitifully outraged, and spoiled their land.

" In another expedition also the said Justice destroyed Keneilgain, and all Ulster in de" spite of O-Neale, tarrying three nights at Tullaghoge.

" MCCXLIII. Hugh Lacy Earle of Ulster died, and is buried at Crag-fergoun in the " covent of the Friars Minours, leaving a daughter his heire, whom Walter Burk, who " was Earle of Ulster, espoused. In the same yeere died Lord Girald Fitz-Morris, and " Richard Burk.

MCCXLVI.

The whole yeere out of an old fragment.

A MCCXLV. An earthquake over all the West about 21 of the clocke.

" MCCXLVI. Sir John Fitz-Geffery knight came Lord Justice into Ireland.

" MCCXLVII. Lewis King of France and William Long Espée, with many other, are taken " prisoners by the Saracens. In Ireland Maccanewey, a sonne of Beliol, was slaine in
 " Leys, as he well deserved.

" MCCXLVIII. The Lord Henry Lacie was borne. Likewise upon Christmas day, Alex" ander King of Scotland, a childe eleven yeeres old, espoused at Yorke Margaret the " King of England's daughter.

" MCCXLIX. Alandela Zouch is made Lord Justice, and commeth into Ireland.

B MCCLVII. The Lord Morris, or Maurice Fitz-Gerald deceaseth.

" MCCLVIII. Stephen Long Espée commeth Lord Justice of Ireland. The Greene
 " castle in Ulster is throwne downe: Likewise William Dene is made Lord Justice of
 " Ireland.

" MCCLXI. The Lord John Fitz-Thomas, and the Lord Maurice his son are slaine in
 " Desmond by Mao-Karibh: likewise William Dene Lord Justice of Ireland dejected,
 " after whom succeeded in the same yeere Sir Richard Capell.

" MCCXLII. Richard Clare Earle of Gloucester died: Item, Martin Maundevile left
 " this life the morrow after Saint Bennets day.

" MCCXLIII. Maurice Fitz-Gerald, and Maurice Fitz-Maurice took prisoners *Rish-
 " Capell*, the Lord Theobald Boniller, and the Lord John Cogam at Tristel-Dermot.

" MCCXLVII. David Barrie is made Lord Justice of Ireland.

" MCCXLVIII. Comin Maurice Fitz-Maurice is drowned. Item, Lord Robert Ufford
 " is made Lord Justice of Ireland.

" MCCXLIX. The castle of Roscomon is founded. Richard of Excester is made Lord " Justice.

" MCCCLXX. The Lord James Audeley came Lord Justice into Ireland.

" MCCCLXXI. Henry the Kings sonne of Almain is slaine in the Court of Rome. The " same yeere reigned the plague, famine, and the sword, and most in Meth. Item, " Nicholas de Verdon and his brother John are slain. Walter Burk or de Burgo Earle " of Ulster died.

D MCCCLXXII. The Lord James Audeley Justice of Ireland was killed with a fall
 " from his horse in Twomond: after whom succeeded Lord Maurice Fitz-Maurice in " the office of chiefe Justice.

" MCCCLXXIII. The Lord Geffery Genevile returned out of the holy land, and is " made Justice of Ireland.

" MCCCLXXIV. Edward the sonne of King Henrie, by the hands of Robert Kelwayby a " Frier of the order of Preaching Friars, and Archbishop of Canterburie, upon S. Mag" nus the Martyrs day, in the Church of Westminster was anointed K. of England, and " crowned in the presence of the Lords and Nobles of all England; whose protestation

E and oath was in this forme: I Edward son and heire to King Henrie, professe, protest,
 " and promise before God and his Angels, from this time forward to keep without re" spect the law, justice, and peace unto the holy Church of God, and the people subject
 " unto me, so far forth as we can devise, by the counsell of our liege and loiall ministers:
 " also to exhibite condigne and canonically honour unto the Bishops of Gods Church,
 " to preserve inviolably whatsoever hath bin bestowed by Emperors and Kings upon
 " the Church committed unto them, and to yeeld due honour unto Abbats & the Lords " vessels, according to the advice of our lieges, &c. So help me God, and the holy Gos" pels of the Lord. In the same yeere died the Lord John Verdon, likewise the Lord Tho" mas Clare came into Ireland. Item, William Fitz-Roger, Prior of the Hospitalers, with " many others, are taken prisoners at Glyndelory: and more there slaine.

" MCCCLXXV. The castle of Roscomon is erected againe. In the same yeere Moydagb
 " was taken prisoner at Norragh by Sir Walter Faunte.

" MCCCLXXVI. Robert Ufford is made Lord Justice of Ireland the second time: Gef-
 " frey Genevile gave place, and departed.

" MCCCLXXVII. O-Brene is slaine.

MCCCLXXVIII.

M C C L X V I I I . The Lord David Barry died. Likewise the Lord John Cogan.
 M C C L X X I . The Lord Robert Ufford entered into England, and appointed in his roome Frier Robert Fulborne Bishop of Waterford, in whose time the money was changed, likewise the Round table was holden at Kenilworth by the Lord Roger Mortimer.
 M C C L X X X . Robert Ufford returned out of England, Lord Justice as before. Also the wife of Robert Ufford deceased.
 M C C L X X X I . Adam Cusack the younger slew William Barret, and many others in Connaght. Item, Frier Stephen Fulborne is made Justice of Ireland. Item, the Lord
 Robert Ufford returned into England.
 M C C L X X X I I . Moriagh and Arse Mac-Murgh his brother are slaine at Arslowe, on the Even of Saint Marie Maudlen. Likewise the Lord Roger Mortimer died.
 M C C L X X X I I I . The citie of Dublin was in part burnt, and the Belfray of Saint Trinity Church in Dublin, the third day before the Nones of Januarie.
 M C C L X X X I I I I . The castle of Ley was taken and burnt by the Potentates or Lords of Offaly, the morrow after Saint Barnabe the Apostle his day. Alphonsus the Kings sonne twelve yeeres old; changed his life.
 M C C L X X X V . The Lord Theobald Botiller died the sixth day before the Kalends of October in the castle of Arslowe, and was buried there in the convent of the Friers preachers. Item, Girald Fitz-Maurice was taken prisoner by his own Irish in Offalie, and Richard Pettis and Saint-Doges, with many other: and a great overthrow was given at Rathode with much slaughter.
 M C C L X X X V I . Norragh and Arstoll, with other townes, were one after another continually burnt by Philip Siantha, the 16. day before the Calends of December. In these daies Alianor Queen of England, mother of King Edward, tooke the mantle and the ring at Ambresburie, upon the day of Saint Thomas his translation, having her dower in the kingdome of England confirmed by the Pope to be possessed for ever.
 Likewise Calmagh is taken prisoner at Kildare. The Lord Thomas Clare departed this life.
 M C C L X X X V I I . Stephen Fulborn, Archbishop of Tuam died: after whom there succeeded in the office of Lord chiefe Justice for a time, John Sampford archbishop of Dublin. In the same yeet the King of Hungary forsaking the Christian faith, became an Apostata: and when hee had called fraudulently, as it were, to a Parliament, the mightier potentates of his land, Miramomelius a pusillat Saracene came upon them with 20000. souldiers, carrying away with him the King, with all the Christians there assembled on the even of Saint John Baptists day: as the Christians therefore journied, the weather that was cleere and faire turned to be cloudie, and suddenly a tempest of haile killed many thousands of the Infidels together: The Christians returned to their owne homes, and the Apostata King alone went with the Saracenes.
 The Hungarians therefore crowning his sonne King, continued in the Catholike faith.
 M C C L X X X I X . Tripolis a famous citie was laied even with the ground, not without much effusion of Christian blood, and that by the Soldan of Babylon who commanded the images of the Saints to bee drawne and dragged at horses tailes, in contempt of the name of Christ, through the citie newly destroyed.
 M C C X C . Inlyta Stirps Regis Sponsis datur ordine legi.
 In lawfull guise (by hand and ring)
 Espoused is the Kings off-spring.
 The Lord Gilbert Clare tooke to wife the Ladie Joan, a daughter of the Lord King Edward, in the Abbey or Covent Church of Westminster; and the marriage was solemnely celebrated in the Moneth of May: and John, the Duke of Brabant his sonne, married Margaret the said Kings daughter also in the Church aforesaid, in the moneth of July. The same yeere the Lord William Vescie was made Justice of Ireland, entering upon the office on Saint Martins day. Item, O Molaghelin King of Meth is slaine.

M C C X C I .

A M C C X C I . Gilbert Clare, the sonne of Gilbert and of the Ladie Joan of Acres, was borne the 11. day of May, in the morning betimes. Item, there was an armie led into Ulster, against O-Hanlon and other Princes hindering the peace, by Richard Earle of Ulster, and William Vescie Justice of Ireland. Item, the Ladie Eleanor, sometime Queene of England and mother of King Edward, died in the feast of St. John Baptist, who, in the religious habite which she desired, led a laudable life for the space of foure yeeres, eleven moneths, and fixe dayes, within the Abbey of Ambresby, where she was a professed Nun. Item, there refounded certaine rumours in the eares of the Lord Pope Martin, on the even of St. Mary Maudlen, as touching the Citie Acon in the holy land, which was the only refuge of the Christians; namely, that it was besieged by Milkador the Soldan of Babylon, & an infinite number of his souldiers; and that it had been most fiercely assaulted about fortie daies, to wit, from the eighth day before the Ides of April unto the fifteene Calends of July. At length the wall was plucked down by the Saracens that assaulted it, and an infinite number of them entred the Citie, many Christians being slaine, and some for feare drowned in the sea. The Patriarch also with his traine perished in the sea. The King of Cyprus and Oies Grandison, with their companies, pitifully escaped by a ship. Item, granted there was unto the Lord Edward King of England by the Lord Pope Martin, the tenth part of all the profits of Ecclesiasticall benefices for seven yeeres in Ireland, toward the reliefe of the holy land. Item, the eldest sonne of the Earle of Clare was borne.
 M C C X C I I . Edward King of England estfoones entred Scotland, and was elected King of Scotland. Lord John Balliol of Galwey obtained the whole kingdome of Scotland in right of inheritance, and did homage unto the Lord Edward King of England at New-castle upon Tine on S. Stephens day. Florentius Earle of Holland, Robert Brus Earle of Carrick, John Hastings, John Comyn, Patrick Dunbar, John Vescie, Nicolas Soules, and William Roos, who all of them in that kingdome submitted themselves to the judgement of the Lord King Edward.
 Item, a fifteene of all secular mens goods in Ireland was granted unto the sovereign
 Lord King of England, the same to be collected at the feast of S. Michael. Item, Sir Peter Genevile Knight died. Item, Rice ap Meredyke was brought to York, and there at horses tailes drawne, &c.
 M C C X C I I I . A generall and open war there was at sea against the Normans. Item, no small number of the Normans by fight at sea was slain by the Barons of the Ports of England, and other their co-adjutors, between Easter and Whitson-tide. For which cause there arose war between England and France: whereupon Philip King of France directed his letters of credence unto the King of England, that he should make personall appearance at his Parliament, to answer unto Questions which the same King would propose unto him: whose mandate in this behalf being not fulfilled, straightwaies the King of France declaring by the counsell of the French the King of England to be outlawed, condemned him. Item, Gilbert Clare Earle of Glocester entred with his wife into Ireland about the feast of S. Luke.
 M C C X C I V . William Montefort in the Kings counsell holden at Westminster before the King, died suddenly: which William was the Dean of S. Pauls in London, in whose mouth the Prelates, Bishops, and Cleargy putting their words which he was to utter, and doubting how much the King affected and desired to have of every one of them, and willing by him to be certified, in whom also the King reposed most trust, being returned to the King, and making hast before the King to deliver expressly a speech that he had conceived, became speechlesse on a sodain, and fell downe to the ground, and was carried forth by the Kings servants in their armes in piteous manner. In regard of which sight that thus happened, men stricken with feare gave out these speeches: Surely this man hath bene the Agent and Procurator, that the Temples of Ecclesiasticall benefices should bee paid to the King, and another author and procurer of a scrutinie made into the fold and flocke of Christ, as also of a contribution granted afterward to the King crying against William. Item, the Citie of Burdeaux with the land of Gascoigne adjoining, was occupied or held by the ministers of
 the

O o o o

the King of France conditionally; but unjustly and perfidiously detained by the King of France: for which cause John Archbishop of Dublin and certaine other Lords of the Nobilitie were sent into Almaine to the King thereof: and after they had their dispatch and answer in Tordran, the Lord Archbishop being returned into England, ended his life upon S. Leodegaries day. The bones of which John Sampford were entered in the Church of Saint Patrick in Dublin, the tenth day before the Calends of March.

The same yeere there arose debate betweene Lord William Vesey, Lord Justice of Ireland for the time being, and the Lord John Fitz-Thomas; and the said Lord William Vesey crossed the seas into England, & left Sir William Hay in his stead Justice of Ireland: but when both of them were come before the King to fight a combat, under an Appeal for treason, the foresaid William Vesey fled into France, and would not fight. Then the King of England gave all the Seigniories and Lordships which were the Lord William Vesey's unto Sir John Fitz-Thomas, to wit, Kildare, Rathemagan, and many others.

The same yeere Gilbert Clare Earle of Gloucester returned out of Ireland into England: likewise Richard Earle of Ulster soon after the feast of S. Nicholas was taken prisoner by Sir John Fitz-Thomas, and kept in ward within the Castle of Ley, unto the feast of Saint Gregorie the Pope: whose enlargement was then made by the counsell of the Lord the King in a Parliament at Kilkenny: for the taking of whom, the foresaid Sir John Fitz-Thomas gave all his lands, to wit, Slygh with the pette-nances, which he had in Connaght.

Item, the Castle of Kildare was won. Kildare and the country round about it is spoiled by the English and Irish. Caluagh burnt all the Rolls and Tallies of the said Earle. Great dearth and pestilence there was throughout Ireland this yeere, and the two next ensuing. Item, Lord William Odyngzele is made Justice of Ireland.

MCCXCV. Edward King of England built the Castle de Bello-Marisco, that is, Beaumaris in Venedocia, which is called mother of Cambria, and of the common fort Anglesey: entering unto the said Anglesey straight after Easter, and subduing the Venodotes, that is, the able men of Anglesey under his dominion: and soone after this time, namely, after the feast of S. Margaret, Madock at that time the elect Prince of Wales, submitting himselfe to the Kings grace and favour, was brought by John Haverings to London, and there shut up prisoner in the towre, expecting the Kings grace and benevolence. This yeere died Lord William Odyngzele Justice of Ireland, the morrow after S. Mary of Egypt: whom succeeded Sir Thomas Fitz-Maurice in the Justiceship.

Item, about the same time the Irish of Leinster wasted Leinster, burning New-castle with other townes. Item, Thomas Torbeville a traitor of the King and the realm being convicted, was drawne through the middest of London lying along prostrate, guarded with foure tormentors disguised under vizzards, taunting and reviling him, and thus in the end was hanged upon a gibbet in chaines, so as his carcase might not be committed to sepulture, but kites, carrion crows and ravens celebrated his funerals. This Thomas was one of them which at the siege of the Castle of Rions were taken prisoners and brought to Paris. Who spake unto the Peeres of France, and said, that he would betray the King of England into their hands: and leaving there his two sonnes for hostages, returned from the parts beyond-sea, joining himself unto the King of England and his counsell, relating unto them all how craftily he escaped out of prison: and when hee had gotten intelligence of the Kings designement, and the ordering of the kingdome, hee put all in writing, and directed the same unto the Provost of Paris. For which being in the end convicted, he received the sentence of judgement aforesaid.

Item, about the same time the Scots having broken the bond of peace, which they had covenanted with the Lord Edward King of England, made a new league with the King of France: and conspiring together, rose up in armes against their owne soveraigne Lord and King John Balliol, and enclosed him within the in-land

A inland parts of Scotland; in a castle environed and fenced round about with mountaines. They elected unto themselves, after the manner of France, twelve Peeres, to wit, foure Bishops, foure Earles, and foure Lords of the Nobilitie, by whose will and direction all the affaires of the kingdome should be managed. And this was done in despite, and to disgrace the King of England, for that against the will and consent of the Scots, the said John was by the King of England set over them to be their Sovereigne. Item, the King of England brought an armie againe toward Scotland in Lent following, to repress the rash arrogancie and presumption of the Scots against their owne father and King. Item, Sir John Wogan was made Justice of Ireland, and the Lord Thomas Fitz-Maurice gave place unto him. Item, the said John Wogan Justice of Ireland made peace and truce to last for two yeeres betweene the Earle of Ulster, and John Fitz-Thomas, and the Geraldines. Item, in these dayes about the feast of Christ his Nativitie, Gilbert Clare Earle of Gloucester finished this life. Item, the King of England sendeth his brother Edmund with an armie into Gascoigne.

MCCXCVI. The Lord Edward King of England the third day before the Calends of April, to wit, upon Friday, that fell out then to be in Easter weeke, wonne Berwicke, wherein were slaine about 7000. Scots, and of the English one onely Knight, to wit, Sir Richard Cornwall, with seven footmen and no more. Item, shortly after, namely, upon the fourth of May, he entred the Castle of Dunbar, and tooke prisoners of the enemies about fortie men alive, who all submitted themselves to the Kings grace and mercie, having before defeated the whole armie of the Scots, that is to say, slaine seven hundred men of armes: neither were there slaine of the English men in that service, as well of horsemen as of footmen, but ... footmen onely.

Item, upon the day of Saint John before Port-Latin, no small number of Welshmen, even about fiftene thousand, by commandement of the King went into Scotland to invade and conquer it. And the same time the great Lords of Ireland, to wit, John Wogan Justice of Ireland, Richard Bourk Earle of Ulster, Theobald Butler, and John Fitz-Thomas, with others, came to aide, and sailed over sea into Scotland. The King of England also entertaining them upon the third day before the Ides of May, to wit, on Whitunday, made a great and solemne feast in the Castle of Rokeburgh to them and other Knights of England. Item, upon the next Wednesday before the feast of Saint Barnabe the Apostle hee entred the towne of Edenburgh, and wonne the Castle before the feast of Saint John Baptist: and shortly after, even in the same summer, were all the Castles within the compasse of Scotland rendred up into his hands. Item, the same Lord John Balliol King of Scotland came, though unwilling, upon the Sunday next after the feast of the translation of Saint Thomas the Archbishop, to the King of England, with Earles, Bishops, and a great number of Knights beside, and submitted themselves unto the Kings grace and will, saving life and limbe: and the Lord John Balliol resigned up all his right of Scotland into the King of England his hand, whom the Lord the King sent toward the parts about London under safe conduct.

Item, Edmund the King of Englands brother died in Gascoigne.

MCCXCVII. Lord Edward King of England sailed over into Flanders with a power of armed men, against the King of France for the warre that was raised betweene them: where after great expences and much altercation, a certaine forme of peace was concluded betweene them, with this condition, that they should submit themselves unto the ordinance of the Lord the Pope.

From the one side and the other were sent certaine messengers to the Court of Rome, but whiles King Edward abode in Flanders, William Wallais by the common counsell of the Scots came with a great armie to the bridge of Strivelin, and gave battle unto John Earle Warren: in which battell on both sides many were slaine; and many drowned. But the Englishmen were discomfited and defeated. Upon which exploit all the Scots at once arose and made an insurrection, as well Earls

* as Barons against the King of England. And there fell discord betweene the King of A
 * England, and Roger Bigod Earle Mareſchall; but ſoone after they were agreed.
 * And Saint Lewis a Frier minor ſonne of the King of Sicily, and Archbiſhop of Co-
 * lein died. Alſo the ſonne and heire of the King de Maliagro, that is, of the Majoricke * Ilands, intituled the order of the Friers minors, at the information of Saint Lewis, * who ſaid, Goe and doe ſo. Item, in Ireland, Leghlin, with other townes, was burnt by
 * the Irith of Slemergi.

* Item, Calwagh O-Hanlan, and Tneg Mac-Mahon are ſlaine in Urgale.
 * MCCXCVIII. Pope Boniface the fourth, the morrow after the Feaſt of the Apo-
 * ſtles Peter and Paul, after all tumults were appeaſed, ordained and confirmed a B
 * peace betweene the King of England and the King of France, with certaine condi* tions that after followed. Item, Edward King of England ſet forth with an armie
 * againe into Scotland, for to ſubdue the Scots under his dominion. Item, there were
 * ſlaine in the ſame expedition, about the feaſt of Saint Marie Maudlen, many thou-* ſands of the Scots at Fawkirke. The ſunne the ſame day appeared as red as bloud over * all Ireland, ſo long as the battell continued at Fawkirke aforeſaid. Item, about the
 * ſame time the Lord King of England feoffed his Knights in the Earldomes and Baro-
 * nies of the Scots that were ſlaine. More, in Ireland peace and concord was concluded
 * between the Earle of Ulſter, and Lord John Fitz-Thomas, about the feaſt of the A-
 * poſtles Simon and Jude. Alſo on the morrow after the feaſt of the 7. Saints ſleepers,
 * the ſun-beames were changed almoſt into the colour of bloud even from the morn-
 * ning, ſo that all men that ſaw it wondred thereat. Moreover, there died Sir Thomas
 * Fitz-Maurice Knight, and Sir Robert Bigod, ſometime Lord chiefe Juſtice of the * Bench. Item, in the Citie Ariha, as alſo in Reasbe in the parts of Italie, whiles Pope
 * Boniface abode there at the ſame time there happened ſo great an Earthquake, that
 * towres and palaces fell downe to the ground. The Pope alſo with his Cardinals * fled from the Citie much affrighted.

* Item, upon the feaſt of the Epiphany, that is, Twelve day, there was an earthquake,
 * though not ſo violent, in England from Canterburie as farre as to Hampton.

* MCCXCIX. Lord Theobald Botiller the younger departed this life in the Manour de D
 * Turby the ſecond day before the Ides of May: whole corps was conveyed toward
 * Weydeney, that is, Weney in the countie of Limeric the ſixth day before the Calends of * June.

* Item, Edward King of England tooke to wife the Ladie Margaret, ſiſter to the
 * noble King of France, in the Church of the holy Trinitie in Canterburie, about the
 * feaſt of the holy Trinitie. Item, the Soldan of Babylon was defeated with a great ar-
 * mie of Saracens, by Caffian King of the Tartars.

* MCCXCIX. The day after the feaſt of the Purification of the bleſſed Virgin Marie,
 * there was an infinite number of the Saracens horſemen ſlaine, beſides the footmen,
 * who were likewiſe innumerable. Item, in the ſame yeere there was a battell or fight E
 * of dogges, in Burgundie at Genelon caſtle: and the number of the dogges was 3000.
 * and everie one killed another, ſo that no dogge eſcaped alive but one alone. Item,
 * the ſame yeere many Irithmen came to trouble and moleſt the Lord Theobald Ver-
 * don, to the Caſtle of Roch, before the feaſt of the Annuntiation.

* MCCC. The Pollard money is forbidden in England and Ireland. Alſo in the Au-
 * tumne Edward King of England entred Scotland with a power of armed men: but at
 * the commandement of Pope Boniface hee was ſtayed, and he ſent ſolemne meſſen-
 * gers unto the Court (of Rome) excuſing himſelf of doing any injurie. Item, Thomas
 * the Kings ſonne of England was the laſt day of May born at Brotherton, of Margaret
 * ſiſter to the King of France. Item, Edward Earle of Cornwall died without leaving F
 * behind an heire of his owne bodie, and was entered in the Abbey of Hales.

* MCCC. Edward King of England entred into Scotland with an armie: unto
 * whom failed over ſea Sir John Wogan Juſtice of Ireland, and Sir John Fitz-Tho- * mas, Peter Bermingham, and many others, to aide the King of England. Alſo a great * part of the Citie Dublin was burnt, together with the Church of Saint Warburga, on
 * S. Colombs

A S. Colombs day at night. More, Sir Geffrey Genevil eſpouſed the daughter of Sir John
 * Montefort: and Sir John Mortimer eſpouſed the daughter and heire of Sir Peter Ge-
 * nevil. And the Lord Theobald Verdon eſpouſed the daughter of the Lord Roger * Mortimer. At the ſame time the men of Leinſter made warre in winter, burning
 * the towne of wykynlo and Rathdon, with others: but they eſcaped not unpuniſhed:
 * becauſe the more part of their ſuſtenance was burnt up, and their cattell loſt by de-
 * predation: and the ſame Irith had bene utterly almoſt conſumed, but that the ſedi-
 * tious diſſention of certaine Engliſhmen was an hinderance thereto. Item, a defea-
 * ture and ſlaughter was made by the Toolans, upon a ſmall companie aſſembled of the
 * B Brenies, in which were ſlaine almoſt three hundred robbers. Item, Walter Power
 * waſted a great part of Mounſter, burning many ferme houſes.

* MCCCII. There died the ladie Margaret, wife to Sir John Wogan Juſtice of Ireland,
 * the third day before the Ides of April: and in the week following Maud Lacy, wife to
 * Sir Geffrey Genevil died: alſo Edward Botiller recovered the manour de * S. Eſco, with
 * the pertenanances, from Sir Richard Ferenges Archbiſhop of Dublin, by a concord
 * made between them in the Kings bench, after the feaſt of S. Hilarie.

* Item, the Flemings gave an overthrow at Courteray in Flanders unto the army of
 * the French, the Wedneſday after the feaſt of the Tranſlation of S. Thomas, wherein
 * were ſlaine the Earle of Arthois, the Earle of Aumarle, the Earle of Hue, Ralph
 * C Neel Conſtable of France, Guy Nevil Mareſchal of France, the ſonne of the Earle of * Hennauud, Godfrey Brabant with his ſonne, William Fenys and his ſon, James S. Paul
 * loſt his hand, and fortie Baronets loſt their lives that day, with Knights, Eſquires, and
 * others ſans number.

* Item, the tenths of all Eccleſiaſticall benefices in England and Ireland were exacted
 * by Boniface the Pope for 3. yeeres, as a Subſidie to the Church of Rome againſt the * King of Aragon. Alſo upon the day of the Circumciſion Sir Hugh Lacie raiſed boot-
 * ies from Hugh Vernail. In the ſame yeere Robert Bru, then Earle of Carrick, eſpou-
 * ſed the daughter of Sir Richard Bourk Earle of Ulſter. Item, Edward Botiller eſpouſed
 * the daughter of Sir John Fitz-Thomas: alſo the Citie of Burdeaux, with other Ci* ties lying round about it, which by the ſedition of the Frenchmen had been at any
 * D time alienated from Edward King of England, were reſtored unto him againe upon
 * St. Andrewes even, by the induſtrie of the L. Hastings.

* MCCCIII. The Earle of Ulſter, to wit, Richard Bourk, and Sir Euface Power, entred
 * Scotland with a puiſſant armie: but after that the Earle himſelfe had firſt made thir-
 * tie three Knights in the Caſtle of Dublin, hee paſſed over into Scotland to aide the * King of England.

* Item, Gerald the ſonne and heire of Sir John Fitz-Thomas departed out of this * world. In the ſame yeere Pope Boniface excommunicated the King and Queene of * France and their children. Hee renewed alſo all the priviledges granted at any time
 * E unto the Univerſitie of Paris: and ſtraight after the Pope was taken priſoner, and kept
 * (as it were) in priſon three whole daies. And ſoone after the Pope died: likewiſe the * Counteſſe of Ulſter deceaſed. Alſo wulfrane welleyſy and Sir Robert Percivell were
 * ſlaine the 11. day before the Calends of November.

* MCCCIII. A great part of Dublin was burnt, to wit, the Bridge ſtreet, with a * good part of the Key, and the Church of the Friers Preachers, and the Church of the
 * Monks, with no ſmall part of the Monaſterie, about the Ides of June, to wit, on the
 * Feaſt day of S. Medard. Alſo the firſt ſtone of the Friers Preachers Quire in Dub- * lin was laid by Euface Lord Power on the Feaſt of S. Agatha Virgin.

* Likewiſe after the Feaſt of the Purification of the bleſſed Virgin Marie, the King
 * F of France invaded Flanders againe in proper perſon, with a puiſſant armie. Then
 * bare he himſelfe bravely in the war, and fought manfully ſo long, untill two or three
 * horſes of ſervice were ſlaine under him: but at laſt he loſt his cap that under his hel* met was put upon his head; which the Flemings taking up carried by way of ſcorn-
 * full deriſion upon a lance as a banner, and in all the famous Faires of Flanders, put it out at the high window of some place or stately house, like the figure of an Inne or a Taverner, and shewed it in token of victorie.
 * out

MCCV. Jordan Comyn with his complices slew Morinagh O-Conghir King of Offalie, and Calwagh his whole brother, and certain others in the Court of Sir Piers Brynneham at Carrick in Carbery: likewise Sir Gilbert Sutton Seneschal of Weisford was slaine by the Irish neere unto a village (or House) of Haymund Grace, which Haymund verily in the said skirmish manfully carried himselfe, but stoutly escaped.

Item, in Scotland the Lord Robert Brus Earle of Carricke, forgetting his oath made to the King of England, slew Sir John Rede Comyn within the cloisture of the Friers Minors of Dunfrese, and soone after caused himselfe to be crowned King of Scotland by the hands of two Bishops, to wit, of S. Andrewes and of Glaseo, in the towne of Scone, to the confusion of himselfe and of many others.

MCCVI. A great discomfiture was made in Offaly, neere unto the Castle of Geffill, on the Ides of Aprill, upon O-Conghorby O-Dympcies, in which was slaine O-Dympey Leader of the Regans, with a great traine accompanying him. Also O-Brene King of Towmond died. Item, Donald Oge Mac Carthy slew Donald Ruff, that is, the Red King of Desmund. Item, a lamentable defeature fell upon the part of Piers Brynneham the fourth day before the Calends of May, in the Marches of Meth. Item, Balymore in Leinster was burnt by the Irish, where at the same time Henry Calfe was slaine: and there arose war betweene the English and the Irish in Leinster: for which cause there was assembled a great armie from divers parts of Ireland to bridle the malice of the Irish in Leinster: in which expedition Sir Tho. Mandeuil Knight, and a brave warriour, had a great conflict with the Irish, neere to Clenfell; in which conflict he behaved himselfe valiantly, untill his horse of service was slaine, and won much praise and honour by saving many a man, and himselfe also. Item, M. Thomas Cantock Chancelour of Ireland was consecrated Bishop of Emelafen, in the Church of the holy Trinitie at Dublin with great honour: at whose consecration were present the Elders of all Ireland, where there was so sumptuous and so great a feast made, first unto the rich, and afterwards to the poore, as the like had never been heard of before in Ireland. Item, Richard Feringes Archbishop of Dublin died in the Vigile of Saint Luke, after whom succeeded Master Richard Haverings, who occupied the Archbishopricke almost five yeeres by Apostolicall dispensation. Who also resigned up his Archbishopricke: after whom succeeded John Leib.

The occasion and cause of his giving over (as the Arch-deacon of Dublin of good memorie, his Nephew hath reported) was this, for that one night he dreamed, that a certaine Monster heavier than the whole world stood eminently aloft upon his brest: from the weight whereof he chose rather to be delivered, than alone to have all the goods of the world: but when he wakened hee thought with himselfe, this was nothing else but the Church of Dublin, the fruits whereof hee received, and tooke no paines for the same. As soone as hee could therefore he came unto the Lord the Pope, of whom hee was much beloved, and there renounced and gave over the Archbishopricke. For hee had, as the same Arch-deacon avouched, fatter benefices and livings than the Archbishopricke came unto.

Item, Edward King of England in the feast of Pentecost, that is, Whitsontide, made Edward his son Knight in London; at which feast were dubbed about 400. Knights, and the said Edward of Caernarvan newly knighted, made threecore Knights of those abovesaid, and kept his feast in London at the New Temple, and his father gave unto him the Dutchy of Aquitaine.

Item, the same yeere in the feast of Saint Potenziana, the Bishop of Winchester, and the Bishop of Worcester, by commandement from the Lord the Pope, excommunicated Robert Brus the pretended King of Scotland, and his confederates, for the death of John Rede Comyn. In the same yeere, upon S. Boniface his day, Aumarde Valence Earle of Pembroch, and Lord Guy Earle..... slew many Scots, and the Lord

A Lord Robert Brus was defeated without the town of S. Johns. And the same yeere about the feast of the Nativitie of St. John Baptist, King Edward went toward Scotland by water from Newarke to Lincolne.

Item, the same yeere the Earle of Afcele, and the Lord Simon Freysell, and the Countesse of Carricke, the pretended Queene of Scotland, daughter of the Earle of Ulster, were taken prisoners. The Earle of Afcele and the Lord Simon Freysell were first torne and mangled. As for the Countesse, she remained with the King in great honour, but the rest died miserably in Scotland.

Item, about the feast of the Purification of the blessed Virgin Marie, two brethren of Robert Brus professing pyracie, went out of their gallies a land to prey, and were taken with sixteen Scots besides: and those two themselves were torne and tormented at Carlele, the rest hanged upon jebbits.

Item, upon St. Patricks day there was taken prisoner in Ireland Mac-Nochi with his two sonnes, neere unto New castle, by Thomas Sueterby: and there Lorran O-bon a most strong thiefe was beheaded.

MCCVII. The third day preceding the Calends of Aprill, was Murcora Ballagh beheaded neere unto Marton by Sir David Cauntton a doughtie Knight: and soon after was Adam Dan slaine.

Also a defeature and bloodie slaughter fell upon the English in Connaght by Offcheles, on Philip and Jacob the Apostles day.

Item, the preading Brigants of Offaly pulled down the Castle of Cashill, and upon the Vigill of the translation of Saint Thomas they burnt the towne of Ly, and besieged the Castle: but soone after they were removed by John Fitz-Thomas, and Edward Botiller.

Item, Edward King of England departed this life: after whom succeeded in the kingdome his sonne Edward, who most solemnly buried his father at Westminster, with great reverence and honour.

Item, the Lord Edward the younger took to wife the Ladie Isabel, daughter of the French King, in St. Maries Church at Bologne: and shortly after they were both crowned in the Church of Westminster.

Item, the Templars in the parts beyond sea, being condemned (as it was said) of a certaine heresie, were apprehended and imprisned by the Popes Mandat. In England likewise they were all taken the morrow after the feast of the Epiphany. Also in Ireland they were arrested the morrow after the feast of the Purification and laid up in prison.

MCCVIII. The second day before the Ides of April died Sir Peter or Piers Bermingham, a noble vanquisher of the Irish.

Item, on the fourth day before the Ides of May was burnt the Castle of Kenir, and certaine warders in it slaine, by William Mac-Balthor, and Cnygnismi Oisothiles, and his abettors.

More, on the sixth day preceding the Ides of June, Lord John Wogan Justice of Ireland was defeated with his armie neere Glyndelory; where were slaine John called Hogelyn, John Northon, John Breton, with many other. Also, the sixteenth day going before the Calends of July, were burnt Dolovan, Tobyr, and other townes and villages bordering upon them, by the foresaid malefactors.

Item, in England shortly after was holden a great Parliament at London; where in arose a dissension, and in manner a mortall conflict betweene the King and the Barons, occasioned by Piers Gaveston, who was banished out of the kingdome of England the morrow after the feast of Saint John Baptist his Nativitie: and he passed over sea into Ireland about the feast of the Saints Quirita and Julita, together with his wife and sister, the Countesse of Glocester, and came to Dublin with great pomp, and there made his abode.

Moreover, William Mac-Baltor, a strong thiefe and an Incendiarie, was condemned, and had judgement in the Court of the Lord the King in Dublin before the chiefe Justice Lord John Wogan, upon the twelfth day preceding the Calends of

Septem-

September : and was drawne at horses tailes unto the gallows, and there hanged according to his deserts.

Item, in the same yeere there was erected a certaine cisterne of marble, to receive water from the conduit head, in the Citie of Dublin, such an one as never was there before, by the dispose and providence of Master John Decer then Maior of the Citie of Dublin, who of his owne money defraied the charges for the building thereof : and the same John a little before the time caused a certaine bridge to be made beyond the river Aven-Liffy, neere unto the Priorie of St. Wolstan : also the Chappell of Saint Marie to the Friers Minours, and therelieth he buried : the Chappell like wife of Saint Marie, to the Hospitall of Saint Johns in Dublin, &c.

Item, the same John Decer was very beneficiall to the Covent of the Friers Preachers in Dublin : to wit, in making one Colunne of stone in the Church, and giving one great broad altar-stone, with the ornaments thereto belonging.

More, upon the sixth day of the weeke hee entertained the Friers, and tabled them at his owne charges (thus say Elders to the younger) in regard of charitie.

More, in the Autumne, Lord John Wogan sailed over the sea unto the Parliament of England : in whose place the Lord William Burke was made Custos of Ireland.

Item, the same yeere, in the Vigill of Simon and Jude the Apostles day, the Lord Roger Mortimer arrived in Ireland with his wedded wife, the right heire of Meib, the daughter of the Lord Peter, sonne of Sir Gefferie Genevil : they entred I say into Ireland, and took seisin of Meib, Sir Gefferie Genevil yeelding unto them, and entering into the order of the Friers Preachers at Trym, the morrow after the day of St. Edward the Archbishop.

Also, Dermot Oadymoy was slaine at Tully by the servants of Sir Peter or Piers Gaveston.

More, Richard Burgo or Burk Earle of Ulster kept a great feast at Whitfontide in Trym, and dubbed Walter Lacie and Hugh Lacie Knights. And on the even of the Assumption, the Earle of Ulster came against Piers Gaveston Earle of Cornwall, at Tradag. And at the same time he went backe againe, and tooke his passage into Scotland.

Item, in the same yeere Maud the Earle of Ulsters daughter sailed over into England, to contract marriage with the Earle of Gloucester : and soone after within one moneth the Earle and she espoused one the other.

Also, Maurice Caunton slew Richard Talon : and the Roches killed the foresaid Maurice.

Item, Sir David Caunton is hanged at Dublin.

Item, Odo the sonne of Catholl O-Conghir slew Odo O-Conghir King of Connaght.

Item, Athi is burnt by the Irish.

Item, Piers Gaveston subdued the O-Brynnies, Irishmen, and re-edified the new Castle of Mackingham, and the Castle of Kemny : he cut downe and cleasfed the Pas betweene Kemny Castle and Glyndelaugh, mawgre the Irish, and so departed and offered in the Church of Saint Kimny.

The same yeere Lord Piers Gaveston passed the seas over into England on the Vigill of S. John Baptists Nativite.

Item, the wife of the Earle of Ulsters sonne, daughter unto the Earle of Gloucester, upon the 15. day of October arrived in Ireland.

Also on Christmas even the Earle of Ulster returned out of England, and landed at the Port of Tradag.

More, on the feast of the purification of the blessed Virgin Mary, Sir John Boneville neere unto the towne of Arfoll was slain by Sir Arnold Pover and his complices, and buried at Athy in the Church of the Friers Preachers.

Item, a Parliament was held at Kilkenny, in the Outas of the purification of the blessed Virgin Mary, by the Earle of Ulster, and John Wogan Lord Justice of Ireland, and other Lords : wherein was appeased grear discord risen betweene certaine Lords of Ireland :

A Ireland : and many Provisoies in maner of Statutes were ordained, commodious and profitable to the land of Ireland if they had been observed.

Item, shortly after that time returned Sir Edmund Borellor out of England, who there at London was before Knighted.

Item, there crossed the seas into England out of Ireland, the Earle of Ulster, Roger Mortimer, and Sir John Fitz-Thomas.

Item, Sir Thiobald Merdon died.

MCCCX. King Edward and Sir Piers Gaveston tooke their journey toward Scotland, to fight against Robert Bru.

Item, in the said yeere great dearth there was of corn in Ireland : aneranc of wheat was sold for 10. shillings and above.

Also the Bakers of Dublin for their false waight of bread, suffered a new kinde of torment, which was never seen there before : for that on S. Sampson the Bishops day they were drawne upon hurdles through the streets of the Citie at horse-tailes.

More, in the Abbey of S. Thomas Martyr at Dublin died Sir Neile Bruin Knight, Echeator to the Lord the King in Ireland : whose bodie was committed to the earth at the Friers minors, with so great a pompe of tapers and waxe lights, as the like was never seene before in Ireland.

The same yeere a Parliament was holden at Kildare, where Sir Arnold Pover was acquit for the death of the Lord Boneville, because he had done this deed in his owne defence.

Likewise, on S. Patricks day, by assent of the Chapter, M. Alexander Bickenore was elected Archbishop of Dublin.

Item, the Lord Roger Mortimer returned into Ireland within the Octaves of the Nativite of the blessed Virgin Marie.

Also the same yeere the Lord Hermie Lacie Earle of Lincoln died.

MCCCXI. In Thomond at Bonnorathie there was a wonderfull and miraculous discomfytur given by the Lord Richard Clare unto the side of the Earle of Ulster : Which Lord Richard aforesaid tooke prisoner in the field the Lord William Burke and John the sonne of the Lord Walter Lacie, and many others : In which battaile verily there were slaine a great number as well of the English as the Irish, the 13. day before the Calends of June.

Item, Tassagard and Kathcance were invaded by the robbers, to wit, the O-Brynes and O-Torbiles the morrow after the Nativite of S. John Baptiste. Whereupon soon after in Autumne, there was a great armie assembled in Leinster, to make head and fight against the said robbers, lurking in Glindelory and in other places full of woods.

Also, a Parliament was holden at London in August, betweene the King and the Barons, to treat about the State of the kingdome, and of the Kings household, according to the ordinance of fixe Bishops, fixe Earles, and fixe Barons, as they might best provide for the good of the Realme.

Item, on the second day before the Ides of November, the Lord Richard Clare slew fixe hundred of Galegalaghes.

More, on All-Saints day next going before, Piers Gaveston was banished the Realme of England by the Earles and Barons : and many good Statutes necessarie for the commonwealth were by the same Lords made. Which Piers abjured the Realme of England about the Feast of All-Saints ; and entred into Flanders : foure moneths after the said Piers returned presently upon the Epiphanie, and by stealth entred into England, keeping close unto the Kings side, so that the Barons could not easily come neere unto him. And hee went with the King to Yorke, making his abode therein in the Lent : whereupon the Bishops, Earles, and Barons of England came to London for to treat about the State of the kingdome : for feare lest by occasion of Piers his returne, the Common wealth should bee troubled with commotions.

Item,

Item, Sir John Cogan, Sir Walter Faunt, and Sir John Fitz-Rerie Knights died, A and were buried in the Church of the Friars Preachers at Dublin.

Item, John Mac. Goghedan is slaine by O-molmoy.

Item, William Roch died at Dublin with the shot of an arrow by an Irish mountaineer.

Item, Sir Eustace Power Knight died.

Item, in the Vigill of Saint Peters Chaire began a riot in Urgaly by Robert Verdon.

Item, Donat O-Brene is traiterously slaine by his owne men in Tothomon:

MCCXXII. Sir Peter or Piers Gaveston entred the castle of Scardeburgh, re- B sisting the Barons. But soone after the Calends of June hee yeelded himselfe unto Sir Anmare Valence, who had besieged him, yet upon certaine conditions named before hand: who brought him toward London. But by the way he was taken prisoner at Dedington by the Earle of Warwicke, and brought to Warwicke: whereupon, after counsell taken by the Earles and Barons, he lost his head the thirteenth day before the Calends of July: whose bodie lieth buried in the conventuall Church of the Friars Preachers at Langley.

Item, John Wogan Lord Justice of Ireland led forth an armie, to bridle the malice of Robert Verdon and his abettors: which was miserably defeated the sixth day before the Ides of July: in which fight were slain Nicolas Avenel, Patrick Roch, and many others. For this fact the said Robert Verdon, and many of his complices yeelded themselves unto the Kings prison at Dublin, in expectance of favour and pardon.

Also, on Thursday, the morrow after Saint Lucie Virgin, in the sixth yeere of King Edward, the Moone was wonderfully seene of divers colours: on which day determined it was, that the order of Templars should be abolished for ever.

More, in Ireland Lord Edmund Botiller was made the Lievtenant of Lord John Wogan Justice of Ireland: which Edmund in the Lent following besieged the O-Brynges in Glindelorie, and compelled them to yeeld, yea and brought them almost to confusion, unless they had returned the sooner unto the peace of the Lord the D King.

Item, the same yeere, on the morrow after Saint Dominickes day, Lord Maurice Fitz-Thomas espoused Katherine daughter of the Earle of Ulster, at Green-castle. And Thomas Fitz-John espoused another daughter of the same Earle, the morrow after the Assumption, in the same place.

Also, the Sunday after the feast of the exaltation of the holy Crosse, the daughter of the Earle of Gloucester, wife to the Lord John Burke, was delivered of a sonne.

MCCXXIII. Frier Roland Joice Primate of Ardmach arrived at the Iland of Houth the morrow after the annuntiation of the blessed Virgin Marie: and rising in the night by stealth, tooke up his Crosier, and advanced it as farre as to the Priorie of E Grace Dieu: whom there encountred certaine of the Archbishop of Dublins servants, debasing and putting downe that Crosier, and the Primate himselfe of Ardmagh they chased with disgrace and confusion out of Leinster.

Item, a Parliament was holden at London, wherein little or nothing was done as touching Peace: from which Parliament the King departed, and tooke his journey into France, at the mandate of the King of France: and the King of England with many of his Nobles tooke the badge of the Crosse.

Also the Lord John Fitz-Thomas knighted Nicolas Fitz-Maurice, and Robert Clonhull at Adare in Mounster.

More, on the last day of May Robert Brus sent certaine Gallies to the parts of Ul- F ster with his rovers to make spoile: whom the men of Ulster resisted and manfully chased away. It is said that the same Robert arrived with the licence of the Earle to take truce.

Item, in the same summer Master John Decer, a Citizen of Dublin, caused a need-
of
farie bridge to bee made from without the towne of Batiboght, unto the Causey

A of the Mal-poule of Clontarf, whereas before time the passengers that way were much endangered. But after he had defraied great charges thereabout, by reason of a mightie inundation and flood the bridge with the arches fell downe.

Also, Master John Leeks Achbishop of Dublin in the feast of St. Laurence ended this mortall life. Then in a schisme and division of sides were elected for to bee Archbishop of Dublin, Master Walter Thornbury the Kings Chancellor in Ireland, and Master Alexander Bicknore Treasurer of Ireland: but Walter Thornbury was drowned, and many others, to wit, about one hundred fiftie and fixe took the sea, and the night following were all drowned. At the time of the foresaid Walters death, B Alexander Bicknore expected at home the Popes favour. The same Alexander was made Archbishop of Dublin. Item, the Lord Miles Verdon espoused the daughter of the Lord Richard Excester. Item, the same yeere the Lord Robert Bryu overthrew the Castle of Man, and vanquished the Lord Donegan, O. Dowill on S. Barnabes day. And the Lord John Burck, heire unto Richard Earle of Ulster, died at Galwey on the feast of St. Marcellus and Marcellianus.

Also, the Lord Edmund Botiller dubbed thirtie Knights in Dublin Castle on Sunday and St. Michaels day.

MCCXXIV. The Knights Hospitallers had the lands given unto them of the Templars in Ireland.

C Item, Sir John Parice is slaine at Pount. Also, Lord Theobald Verdon came Lord Justice of Ireland on Saint Sylvesters day.

Item, Sir Gefferey Genevile a Frier died the twelfth day before the Calends of November, and was buried in his owne order of the Friars Preachers of Trym: who was Lord also of the libertie of Meth.

More, in the same yeere, and upon S. Matthew the Apostles day, Loughfeudy was burnt: and on the friday following the Lord Edmund Botiller received his Commission to be Lord Justice of Ireland.

MCCXXV. On St. John Baptists day the Earle of Gloucester had his death wound given him, and died, when many others, as it were, without number, were slaine in D Scortland, and more taken prisoners by the Scots. For which cause the Scots became bold, and carried their heads aloft, and gat good land and tributes out of Northumberland.

Item, shortly after this came the Scots and besieged the towne of Carlyle, where James Douglas was squized to death by misfortune of a certaine wall falling upon him.

The same yeere the Scots not contented with their owne land, arrived in the North part of Ireland at Clondonne, with fixe thousand fighting men and expert warriours: to wit, Edward Bru whole brother to Robert King of Scots, and with him the Earle of Morreff, John Meneteth, John Steward, the Lord John Cambel, Thomas Randolfe, Fergus Andressan, John Bosco, and John Biffer, who seized Ulster into their hands, and drave the Lord Thomas Mandevile and other liege men out of their owne possessions.

The Scots entred Ireland first on St. Augustines day, that was the Englishmens Apostle, in the moneth of May, neere unto Crag-fergu in Ulster: betweene whom and the English the first conflict was neere unto Binne, in which the Earle of Ulster was put to flight: there were taken prisoners William Bark, John Stanton, and many others, and the Scots having slaine a number of the English, prevailed and had the day.

The second conflict was at Kinrys in Meth, wherein Roger Mortimer with his followers was put to flight.

The third conflict was at Sketheris hard by Arstoll, the morrow after the conversion of S. Paul, wherein the Englishmen were chased, and the Scots had the better hand. And the foresaid Edward Bru soone after the feast of Philip and Jacob caused himselfe to be crowned King of Ireland: and they tooke Greene Castle, and left their men there, whom the Dublinians quickly after expelled, and recovered the said saïd Castle to the Kings behoof, and finding Sir Robert Couraghe the Keeper of the Castle there, brought him with them to Dublin: who being imprifoned and put to short diet, ended his dayes.

Item, upon Peter and Paul the Apostles day came the Scots before Dundalk, and won the towne, spoiled and burnt it, killing as many as made resistance: and a great part of Urgale was burnt by the Scots. The Church of the blessed Virgin Mary in Atterish, being full of men, women, and little children, was burnt by the Scots and Irish.

In the same yeere the Lord Edmund Botiller, Justice of Ireland, about the feast of S. Mary Maudlen, assembled together a mightie power out of Mounster, Leinster, and other parts: and the Earle of Ulster on the contrarie side, as it were, comming from the parts of Connaght with an infinite army, met all together about Dundalk, and consulted among themselves to kill the Scots; but how it is not knowne: the Scots fled, otherwise, as hope was, they had been taken prisoners.

Which done, the Earle of Ulster, with the foresaid Justice and other great Lords, tooke in hand, after they had slaine the Scots, to bring the Lord Edward le Brus quicke or dead to Dublin: which Earle followed them in chase as far as to the water of Branne, and afterwards the said Earle retired backe toward Coyners: which the said Brus perceiving, warily passed over the said water, and followed him: whom with some other of the Earles side hee put to flight, having wounded George Roth, and slaine others, namely, Sir John Stanton, and Roger de sancho Bosco, that is, Holly-wood: likewise on the part of Brus many were slaine, and the Lord William Burk was taken prisoner the tenth day of the moneth of September: and the Earle was defeated neere unto Coyners: and then the Irish of Connaght and Meth, rose up in armes against the King, and against the Earle of Ulster, and burnt the Castle of Artholon and of Raudon, and many other Castles in the said war of Coyners. The Baron of Donell bare himselfe there right valiantly: but he lost much goods there, and the said Scots manfully chased them as far as to Cragfergus: and there on the Earls side they fled, and some entred the Castle and valiantly kept it: and afterwards came mariners from the havens and Port townes of England, and on a night surprised the Scots, and slew fortie of them, and had away their tents, and many things else. And the morrow after the exaltation of the holy Crosse, the Earle of Morreff passed the seas into Scotland, and took the Lord William Brus with him, seeking for more warlike and armed men, with foure Pirats ships full of the goods of Ireland: whereof one was sunke; all which time the said Brus laid siege to the Castle of Cragfergus. At the same time, Carhil Roge razed three Castles of the Earles of Ulster in Connaught, and many townes in the same Connaught: he burnt and sacked. And at the same time the said mariners went to the said Castle, and the Lords there skirmished, and in the meane time slew many Scots; at which time Richard Lande O-ferivill was by a certaine Irishman slaine.

Item, afterwards upon St. Nicolas day the said Brus departed out of Cragfergus, unto whom the Earle of Morreff presented himselfe with 500. men unto the parts about Dundalk: they came together: and to them many fled, and some gave unto them their right hands: and from thence they passe on to Nobee, where they left many of their men about the feast of S. Andrew the Apostle: and Brus himselfe burnt Kenlys, in Meth, and Grenard Abbey: and the said Monastery he rifled and spoiled of all the goods in it: Also Finnagh and New-castle he burnt, and all that country: and they kept their Christmas at Loughfudy, and then burnt it. And after this they marched forward by Tormoy unto Rathymegan and Kildare, and the parts about Tristeldermor, and Athy and Reban, not without losse of their men. And then came Brus to Skeshby, neere Arscoll in Leinster: where there encountered him in fight the Lord Edmund Botiller Justice of Ireland, and Sir John Fitz-Thomas, and Thomas Arnald Power, and other Noble-men of Leinster and of Mounster: inso much as one of those Lords, with his army, was sufficient to vanquish the said Edw. and his forces. But there arose a discord among them, and so being disordered and in confusion, they leave the field unto the

A the said Edward, according to that which is written, Every kingdome divided in it selfe shalbe made desolate. There also was slaine a noble esquire, and faithfull to the King and the Realme, Haymund Grace, and with him Sir William Prendregest, Knight. On the Scots part were slaine Sir Fergus Andressan, Sir Walter Morrey, and many others, whose bodies were buried at Athy, in the Covent of the Friars Preachers.

Afterwards, the said Brus in his returne toward Meth burnt the castle of Loy: and then the said Scots depart away from Kenlis in Meth, against whom the Lord Roger Mortimer came with a great armie, well neere 15000. but, as it is thought, not true; and faithfull among themselves, but now confederate with the Lord Roger, who about three of the clock began to fle, and turned their backs: and principally the Lacies, leaving the Lord Roger alone with a few: whom it behoved then to fle toward Dublin, and to Sir Walter Cusake at the Castle of Trim, leaving with the Scots that country, and the towne of Kenlis.

Also, at the same time the Irish of the South, to wit, the O-Tothiles and the O-brynnes, burnt all the South-country, namely, Arche, Newcastle, Bree, and all the villages adjoining. And the O-Morghes fired and wasted part of the Leys in Leinster, whom for the most part the Lord Edmund Botiller Justice of Ireland slew, whose heads to the number of fourescore were brought to the castle of Dublin.

Item, in the same yeere about the feast of the purification of the blessed Virgin Marie, certain Lords of Ireland, and the Lord Fitz-Thomas, the Lord Richard Clare, Lord John Pover, and the Lord Arnald Pover, for to establish peace & greater securitie with the King of England, came to Sir John Hothom, assigned there by the said King of England, which said Lords and Nobles sware to hold with the King of England come life come death, and to their power to quiet the country and make peace, and to kill the Scots. For the performance whereof by the leave and helpe of God, they gave hostages and so returned: which forme if other Nobles of the land of Ireland would not keepe, they were generally held for the Kings enemies.

Item, there died Sir John Biffer. And the Church of the new towne of Leys with the steeple and bellfray was by the Scots burnt. The Scots won the Castle of Northburgh in Ulster.

Also Fidelmic O-Conghir King of Connaght slew Rorke the sonne of Cathol O-Conghir.

More, Sir William Maundeve died: and the Bishop of Conere fled to the Castle of Crag-fergus, and his Bishoprick was liable to an interdiction: and Sir Hugh Antonie is killed in Connaght.

Item, in the same yeere, on Saint Valentines day, the Scots abode neere Geshil and Offaly: and the armie of the English about the parts of Kildare: and the Scots endured so great famine, that many of them were starved to death: and for the same cause they tooke their way closely toward Fowier in Meth. The Sunday following so feeble they were, what with hunger, and what with travaile, that most of them died.

And afterwards the Nobles came unto the Parliament, and did nothing there; but as they returned, spoiled all the country: and the Lord Walter Lacie came to Dublin, for to cleere himselfe of an imputation (touching his credit) laied upon him, and to tender hostages unto the Lord the King, as other Nobles had done: and the same time Edward Brus peaceably abode in Ulster.

Item, the O-Tothiles and O-Brynnes, the Archibaulds and Harolds conspired and banded together: the towne of Wicklo, and the whole country they laied waste.

And in the first weeke of Lent the Earle of Morreff sailed over into Scotland, and Brus held plects in Ulster, and caused many to be hanged.

Also in the midst of Lent Brus held Plects, and slew the Logans, and took Sir Alan Fitz-warin, and carried him into Scotland.

* Also in the same yeere Fennyngber O-Conghir slew Cale-Rothe, and with him of A
 * Galloglaghes and others about three hundred. The same yeere in Mid-Lent wheat * was sold for 18. shillings, and at Easter following for 11. shillings.

* MCCCXVI. Lord Thomas Mandevile, with many others, came from Tredagh to
 * Crag-fergus upon Maunday Thursday, and joynd battaile with the Scots, put them
 * to flight, and slew thirtie of the Scots: and afterward on Easter even the said Lord
 * Thomas with his men charged upon the Scots, and slew many of them about the
 * Calends: and there was slain the said Lord Thomas Maundevile in his own country,
 * in defence of his right.

* Item, in the parts of Connaght many Irish were slaine by Lord Richard Clare, and B
 * Lord Richard Bermingham.

* Item, on Saturday after the Lords Ascension, Donnyger O-Bryne a strong thiefe,
 * with twelve of his confederates, was slain by Sir William Comyn and his followers,
 * keepers of the peace, whose heads were carried to Dublin.

* Item, the Dundalkers made a rode against O-Hanlan, and slew of the Irish about
 * two hundred: and Robert Verdon a warlike esquire there lost his life.

* Item, at Whitsonde the same yeere Richard Bermingham slew of the Irish in
 * Mounster about three hundred or more: and afterwards at the feast of the Nativite
 * of S. John Baptist came Brus to the Castle of Crag-fergus, and commanded the kee* pers to render up the Castle unto him, according to the covenant between them made, C
 * as he said: who answered, that they ought indeed so to doe, and willed him to send
 * thirtie of his men about him, and required that he would grant them within life and
 * limbe; who did so: but after they had received thirtie Scots into the Castle, they
 * shut them up and kept them in prison.

* At the same time the Irish of O-mayl went toward the parts of Tullogh, & fought
 * a battell: whereupon of the Irish were slaine about foure hundred, whose heads were * sent to Dublin: and wonders were afterwards seene there. The dead, as it were, arose * and fought one with another, and cried out Fennokabo, which was their signal. And
 * afterward, about the feast of the translation of S. Thomas, there were rigged and made * ready eight ships, and set out from Tredagh to Crag-fergus with victuals. Which D
 * were by the Earle of Ulster much troubled for the delivery of William Burk, who * had been taken with the Scots: and the Saturday following there were made friends * and united at Dublin the Earle of Ulster and the Lord John Fitz-Thomas, and many * of the Nobles sworne and confederate to live and die for the maintenance of the * peace of Ireland.

* The same yeere newes came out of Connaght, that O-Conghir slew many of the * English, to wit, Lord Stephen of Excester, Miles Cogan, and many of the Barries and
 * of the Lawlies, about fourescore.

* Item, the weeke after Saint Laurence feast, there arose in Connaght foure Irish Prin-
 * ces to make warre against the English: against whom came the Lord William Burk, E
 * the Lord Richard Bermingham, the Lord of Anry with his retinue of the country, and
 * of the same Irish about eleven thousand fell upon the edge of the sword neere unto
 * Anry; which town was walled afterwards with the mony raised of armor and spoile
 * gotten from the Irish: because every one of the English that had double armours of
 * the Irish, gave the one halfe deale toward the walls of the towne Anry. Slaine were
 * there Fidelmic O-Conghir, a petty King or Prince of Connaght, & O-Kelley, and ma* ny other Princes or Potentates. John Husee a butcher of Anry fought there, who the * same night at the request of his Lord of Anry stood among the dead to seek out and
 * discover O-Kelley: which O-Kelley with his Cofreil or esquire rose out of their lur-
 * king holes, and cried unto the foresaid man, to wit Husee, come with mee and I will * make thee a great Lord in my country. And Husee answered, I will not goe with * thee, but thou shalt goe to my Lord Richard Bermingham. Then said O-Kelley, * Thou hast but one servant with thee, and I have a doughtie esquire, therefore
 * come with mee that thou maist bee safe: unto whom his owne man also said,
 * Agree and goe away with O-Kelley, that wee may be saved and enriched, because
 * they

* they are stronger than we. But the said John Husee first killed his owne servant, and
 * O-Kelley and his Esquire: and cut off all their three heads, and carried them to his
 * Lord Richard Bermingham: and that Bermingham gave unto the said John Husee
 * faire lands, and dubbed him Knight, as he well deserved.

The same yeere about the feast of S. Laurence came O-Hanlan to Dundalk, for to
 * destitine, and the Dundalkers with their men killed a number.

* Item, on Monday next before the feast of the nativite of Saint Mary, came David
 * O-Tohill with foure more, and hid himselfe secretly all night long in Coleyn wood:
 * which the Dublinians and Sir William Comyn perceiving, went forth and manfully
 * B pursued them for fixe leagues, and slew of them about seventeen, and wounded many
 * to death.

Also, there ran rumors to Dublin that the Lord Robert Brus King of Scotland en-
 * tred Ireland to aid Edward Brus his brother, and the Castle of Crag-fergus in Ulster * was besieged by the foresaid Scots. The Monasteries of St. Patrick of Dune, and of * Seball, and many other houses as well of Monkes as of regular preaching Friars and
 * Minors, were spoiled in Ulster by the Scots.

* Item, the Lord William Burk, leaving his son for an hostage in Scotland, is set free.
 * The Church of Brought in Ulster being in manner full of folke of both sexes, is burnt
 * by the Scots and Irish of Ulster.

* At the same time newes came from Crag-fergus, that those which kept the Castle,
 * for default of victuals, did eat hides and leather, yea and eight Scots who before were
 * taken prisoners: great pity and griefe that no man relieved such.

And the Friday following newes were brought that Thomas the sonne of the Earle
 * of Ulster was dead.

Also the Sunday following the feast of the nativite of the blessed Virgin, died Lord
 * John Fitz-Thomas at Laraghbrine neere unto Mayneib, and he was buried at Kildare
 * among the Friars Minors. Of which Lord John Fitz-Thomas, it is said, that a little
 * before his death he was created Earle of Kildare: after whom succeeded his sonne and
 * heire the Lord Thomas Fitz-John, a prudent and wise personage.

* And afterwards newes came that the Castle of Crag-fergus was rendred to the
 * Scots, and granted there was to the keepers of it life and limbe.

Also upon the day of the exaltation of the holy Crosse, Conghar and Mac-keley
 * were slaine, with five hundred of the Irish, by the Lord William Burke and Richard * Bermingham in Connaght.

* Item, on Monday before Holloughmas happened a great slaughter of the Scots in
 * Ulster, by John Loggan, and Hugh Bisset; to wit, one hundred with double armour,
 * and two hundred with single armour.

The number of those men of armes that were slaine in all, was three hundred be-
 * side footmen.

* And afterward, in the Vigill of Saint Edmund King there fell a great tempest of
 * winde and raine, which overthrew many houses, and the Steeple of Saint Trinitie
 * Church in Dublin, and did much harme on land and sea. Also in the Vigill of S. Ni- * cholas, Sir Alan Stewart, taken prisoner in Ulster by John Loggan and Sir John San-
 * dale, was brought unto the Castle of Dublin.

In the same yeere newes arrived out of England, that the Lord King of England * and the Earle of Lancaster were at variance, and that they were desirous one to sur-
 * prize the other: for which cause the whole land was in great trouble.

* Item, in the same yeere, about the feast of St. Andrew the Apostle, sent there were
 * to the Court of Rome the Lord Hugh Despencer, & the Lord Bartholomew Baldesmere, * F the Bishop of Worcester, and the Bishop of Ely about important affaires of the Lord
 * King of England, for Scotland: who returned into England about the feast of the pu* rification of the blessed Virgin Mary.

Also, after the said feast the Lacies came to Dublin, and procured an inquisi* tion to prove that the Scots by their meanes came not into Ireland: which inquisi* tion acquitted them. Whereupon they had a charter of the Lord the King, of peace and upon the Sacrament given unto them, they tooke an oath to keepe the peace of A the Lord King of England, and to their power to destroy the Scots.

And afterwards, even in the same yere after the feast of Shrovetide, the Scots came secretly as farre as to Slane, with twenty thousand armed men; and the armie of Ulster joynd with them, who spoiled the whole countrey before them.

And after this, on munday next before the feast of S. Mathias the Apostle, the Earle of Ulster was taken in the Abbey of St. Mary, by the Maior of the Citie of Dublin, to wit, Robert Notingham, and brought to the castle of Dublin, where he was kept in hold a long time, and the chamber wherein hee lay was burned, and seven of the said Earles men were there killed.

In the same weeke, and upon the Vigill of St. Mathias, came Brus with his armie B toward Dublin: and because he had quickly intelligence of the said Earles apprehension, he tooke his journey toward the castle of Knocke, and entred the said castle, and tooke the Lord Baron of the same, namely, the Lord Hugh Tirell and his wife, who for a peece of money were delivered.

And the same night, by common consent, the men of Dublin for feare of the Scots burnt St. Thomas street; and with the said fire the Church of St. John, with the chappell of S. Marie Maudlen was by casualtie burnt: yea and all the suburbs of Dublin were set on fire, together with the Monasterie of S. Mary, and the Church of St. Patricke in Dublin was by the said villaines spoiled.

Item, the said Maior with the Communalitie destroyed the Church of St. Saviour, C which is the place of the Friers Preachers: and carried away the stones of the same place toward the building of the Citie wall, which hee then enlarged on the North side above the Key: because the wall at first went along by the Church of St. Owen, where a tower is to be seene beyond the gate; and in the Vintners street appeareth another gate. But afterwards the King of England commanded the Maior and Communality to make a covent Church of Friers as before. And after the feast of Saint Matthias, Brus understanding that the Citie was strongly walled and fortified, took his journey toward the Salmon leape, and there they pitched their tents, namely, Robert Brus King of the Scots, Edward Brus, the Earle of Morrey, John de Menteith, the Lord John Steward, the Lord Philip Mountbray, and abode there foure daies, and burnt part of the towne, brake downe the Church and spoiled it, and afterwards marched on toward the Naas, and the Lacies against their oath conducted them and gave them counsell: and Sir Hugh Canon appointed Wadin White his wives brother to be their guide through the countrey, and they came to the Naas, and sacked the towne, brake into the Churches, opened the tombes in the Churchyard to seeke for treasure, and did much mischief while they remained there for two daies together. And afterwards they went on toward Tristeldermot, in the second week of Lent, and destroyed the Friers minors, the books, vestiments, and other ornaments they had away, and then departed from thence to Baligaveran: and from E Baligaveran leaving the towne of Kilkenny, they came as far as to Kallan, about the feast of St. Gregorie the Pope.

At the same time there came letters from the Lord Edmund Botiller Justice of Ireland, the Lord Thomas Fitz-John then Earle of Kildare, the Lord Richard Clare, the Lord Arnald Pover, and the Lord Maurice Fitz-Thomas, for the delivery of the Earle of Ulster by mainprise, and by a writ of the Kings: about which nothing was then done.

And afterward the Ulster men came with an armie, about two thousand, and craved the Kings aide for to destroy the Scots, as they said: for which cause the Kings standard was delivered unto them: and when they had it, they did more harme than the F Scots, and fell to eating of flesh all Lent long, and wasted in manner the whole coun-trei, whereby they purchased the curse of God and man.

Item, a great overthrow was given unto the Irish, neere unto the desert of Dermot, that is, Trofil-Dermot, by Edmund Botiller.

Also the same Edmund Botiller Lord Justice of Ireland for the time being, gave a great

A great overthrow to O-Morgh at Balilethan. Then Brus with the Scots marched forward as farre as Limericke. But after that the bravest forces of the English in Ireland were assembled together at Ledyng, they retired privily by night from the castle of Conniger.

And about Palme-sunday there came newes to Dublin, that the Scots were at Kenlys in Offory, and the Nobles of Ireland at Kilkenny, and there levied a power to set forward against Brus: and the munday following the King gave commandment to the men of Ulster to speed them against the Scots, whose leader and head the Earle of Kildare, to wit Thomas Fitz-John was appointed to bee: and so they put B themselves on their journey: and then was Brus at Cahill, and hee marched from thence to Nanath, and there abode, and all the lands of the Lord Butler hee burnt and destroyed quite.

MCCCXVII. Upon Mandie thursday the Lord Edm. Botiller the Lord Justice of Ireland, and Sir Thomas Fitz-John Earle of Kildare, because the King gave unto them the jurisdiction and liberty of the countie of Kildare, also Richard Clare with the army of Ulster, Sir Arnold Pover Baron of Donnoyll, Maurice Roch-fort, Thomas Fitz-Moris, and the Caunions with their retinue assembled themselves together about the Scots: and for one whole weeke abode about them, and did nothing: whose forces were reckoned to be about 30000. strong. And afterwards upon thursday in Easter C weeke, arrived Roger Mortimer at Togball with the Kings power, because hee was Lord Justice, and the munday following speedily took his journey toward the army, and sent his letters unto Edmund Botiller late (as it hath beene said) Justice, that hee should attempt nothing against the Scots before his comming. But before that Mortimer came, Brus was forewarned by some to depart from thence: who the night following tooke his journey toward Kildare, and afterwards in the weeke following every one of the English returned hence into their countrey: and the army of Ulster came to the Naas.

And at the same time two messengers were dispatched from the city of Dublin, who passed the seas toward the King of England to aske advice, and to advertise as D touching the State of Ireland, and about the deliverance of the Earle of Ulster.

Also at the same time the Lord Roger Mortimer Justice of Ireland, and the Nobles of Ireland were at Kilkenny to dispose of Brus, but nothing effected they there at that time.

And about a moneth after Easter Brus advanced with his army about 4. leagues neere unto Trim in a certain wood, and there staid a weeke and more to refresh his men, who with hunger and travaile were almost perished, and for that many of them died there.

And afterwards on Philip and Jacob the Apostles day the said Brus entred on his journey toward Ulster: and after the said feast came the Lord Roger Mortimer Justice E of Ireland to Dublin, accompanied with the Lord John Wogan, and Sir Fulk Warin, with thirtie Knights and their traines: and they held a Parliament with all the Lords and Potentates of the land at Kylmainan; but did nothing there save onely treat about the deliverance of the Earle of Ulster.

And on the sunday before the feast of our Lords ascension, there repaired again unto the Parliament at Dublin the said Nobles of the land, and there they delivered the Earle of Ulster by mainprise and hostages, and upon an oath. And the said Earle having an oath tendered unto him, swore upon the Sacrament that hee would never worke or procure by himselfe or by any of his friends and followers, harme or grievance upon the occasion of his apprehension unto the Citizens of Dublin, but that F which himselfe might by order of law obtaine or get against the offenders or trans-gressours in that behalf, and thereupon hee had time and day untill the feast of the Nativitie of S. John Baptist: at which day he came not.

Also in the same yere Corne and other victuals were exceeding deere. A Cra-nok of wheat was sold for three and twenty shillings, and wine for eight denires: and the whole land in maner was wasted by the Scots and Ulster-men: yea many householders

holders, and such as had sustained and relieved a number of folk were driven to begge: A and a number were famished. So great also was the death and dearth together, that the poore were pined with famine, and many died.

At the same time came messengers to Dublin out of England, with grants of pardon which they had at their will and pleasure: but before their coming, the foresaid Earle was delivered. And at the feast of Pentecost, Mortimer the Lord chiefe Justice took his journey towards Tredagh, and from thence to Trim, and sent his letters for the Lacies to repaire unto him, who contemptuously refused to come.

And afterwards Sir Hugh Crofts Knight was sent unto the Lacies to treat about a peace, who by them was slain, the more the pity. And after that Mortimer L. Justice B assembled his army against the Lacies, who seized upon their goods, cattell, and treasure, and brought them to finall destruction, slew many of their men, and chased them into the parts of Connaght.

And it was said, that Sir Walter Lacie went forth as farre as to Ulster to seeke Brum.

Item, in the towne of St. Cinere in Flanders, about the feast of Pentecost, the Lord Aumar Valence and his sonne were taken prisoners, and conveyed into Almaini.
And the same yeere, on Munday after the feast of the nativite of S. John Baptiste, the Potentates of Ireland assembled themselves to the Parliament at Dublin: and there was the Earle of Ulster enlarged, who tooke his oath, and found mainprisers or sureties to answer the writs of law, and to pursue the Kings enemies, both Irish and C Scots.

Item, upon the day of the Saints Processe and Martinian, Sir John Ash encountered at sea Thomas Dover a right strong thiefe, and took him, and about forty of his men well armed he slew, and his head he brought with him to Dublin.

Also upon the day of the translation of S. Thomas, Sir Nicholas Bole came out of England with newes, that two Cardinals were come from the Court of Rome into England, to treat concerning a peace, and they brought a Bull to excommunicate all the troublers of the peace of the Lord the King of England.

Likewise, the Thursday next before the feast of S. Margaret, Hugh and Walter D Lacie were proclaimed seducers and felons to the King, because they had advanced their banner against the peace of the Lord King of England.

More, on the Sunday following, the Lord Roger Mortimer Justice of Ireland, took his journey to Tredagh with all his souldiers.

At the same time the Ulster-men raised a bootie neere unto Tredagh: and the men of Tredagh went out and fetched the bootie backe againe: where was slaine Miles Cogan with his brother, and sixe other great Lords of Ulster were taken prisoners, and brought to the castle of Dublin.

And afterwards Mortimer the Lord Justice assembled his army against O-Fervill, and commanded the Mal-passe to be cut downe, and destroyed all his houses: and afterwards the said O-Fervill rendred himselfe to the peace, and put in hostages.

Also the Lord Roger Mortimer Justice tooke his journey toward Clony, and made an inquisition or inquest, as touching Sir John Blount (to wit, White) of Rathregan:
which inquest accused the said John; whereupon he was of necessity to fine for two hundred marks: and afterward on Sunday after the feast of the nativite of blessed Mary, the said Mortimer with a great power marched against the Irish of O-Mayl, and came to Glinfely, where many were slaine both of Irish and English, but the Irish went away with the worst: and soone after came O-brynn, and rendred himselfe to the peace of the King. And Roger Mortimer with his company came to the castle of Dublin.

And upon the day of Simon and Jude the Apostles, the Archbales had peace by mainprife of the Earle of Kildare.

And at the feast of Saint Hilary following there was a Parliament holden at Lin- colne, about a treaty of peace betweene the Lord King of England, and the Earle of Lancaster, and between the Scots: and the Scots continued in peace, and by reason
of

A of that Parliament, the Archbishop of Dublin, and the Earle of Ulster staid in England by the Kings commandement. And about the feast of the Epiphany there came newes to Dublin, that Sir Hugh Canon the Kings Justice in his bench, was slaine by Andrew Bermingham, between Naas and Castle-Martin.

Item, at the feast of the purification of the blessed Virgin Mary, there came the Popes Bulls, so that Alexander de Bicknor was confirmed and consecrated Archbishop of Dublin: and those Bulls were read and published in the Church of the holy Trini- ty. And at the same time was read another Bull, that the Lord Pope ordained peace between the Lord King of England, and the Lord Robert Bru King of Scotland for two yeeres: to which time the said Bru refused to condescend and agree. These things passed about the feast of St. Valentine.

Item, the Sunday following came the Lord Roger Mortimer to Dublin, and dubbed John Mortimer Knight, with foure of his fellowes: and the same day Mortimer kept a great feast in the castle of Dublin.

Item, at the same time a great slaughter was made of Irishmen in Conaght, through a quarrell betweene two Lords or Princes there: and slaine there were of both sides about foure thousand men: and afterwards there was taken great revenge upon the men of Ulster, who in the time that the Scots spoiled and preaded in Ireland, had done much harme, and eate flesh in Lent not of necessity: therefore much tribulation came upon them, inso much that they did eat one another; so that often thousand there remained about 300. and no more, who escaped in maner all for to be punished.
And here appeared the vengeance of God.

Item, it was reported of a truth, that some of the foresaid evill doers were so hunger-starved, that in Church-yards they tooke the bodies out of their graves, and in their skuls boiled the flesh and fed thereupon; yea and women did eat their owne children for starke hunger.

MCCCLXVIII. In the Quinden of Easter newes out of England arrived in Ireland, that the towne of Berwicke was betrayed and taken by the Scots: and afterwards in the same yeere Master Walter Islep, the Kings Treasurer in Ireland, landed, and brought letters to the Lord Roger Mortimer, that he should adresse himselfe to re-D paire unto the King; who did so, and substituted the Lord William Archbishop of Cashil Custos of Ireland, who at one and the same time was Lord Justice of Ireland, Lord Chancellor, and Archbishop.

And afterward, at the three weekes end after Easter, there came newes to Dublin that the Lord Richard Clare was slaine, and with him foure Knights, namely, Sir Henry Capell, Sir Thomas Naas, Sir James Cannon, and Sir John Cauntton: also A- dam Apilgard, with 80. other men, by O-Brene and Mac-Carthy, on the feast of Saint Gordian and Epimachus. And it was reported that the said Lord Richard his body was in despightfull malice cut into small peeces; but his reliques were entered in E Limerick among the Friars Minors.

Item, on Sunday in Mense Pasche, that is, a moneth after Easter, John Lacy was led forth of the castle of Dublin, and brought to Trim, for to be arraigned and to heare and receive his judgment there: who was adjudged to be strait dieted, and so he died in prison.

Item, the Sunday before the Lords Ascension, Lord Roger Mortimer sailed over into England: but paid nothing for his victuals that he had taken up in Dublin and elsewhere, which amounted to the value of one thousand pounds.

Also, the same yeere about the feast of S. John Baptiste the great grace and mercy of God was shewed, in that wheat which before was sold for 15. shillings, was now not F worth above seven shillings, and oates were bought for five shillings: great plentie there was of wine, salt, and fish: and that in such sort, that about St. James day there was new bread to be had of new corne, a thing that never or seldome had been seen afore in Ireland: and this was a signe of Gods tender mercy, and all through the praier of the poore, and other faithfull folke.

Item, the Sunday after the feast of Saint Michael, newes came to Dublin, that Lord

Lord Alexander Bykenore then the Kings Justice in Ireland and Archbishop of Dublin was arrived at Yoghall. On S. Denis day he came to Dublin, and with great procession and honourable pompe of the religious persons and of others, as well of the Clergy as the Laity, he was received.
Item, on Saturday falling out to be the feast of Pope Calixtus, a field was fought betwene the Scots and English of Ireland, two leagues from the towne of Dundalk: to which battell came of the Scots part, the Lord Edward Brus (who named himselfe King of Ireland) the Lord Philip Mowbray, the Lord Walter Soules, the Lord Alan Stewart, with his three brethren: also Sir Walter Lacy, Sir Robert and Sir Aumar Lacy, John Kermerdyne, and Walter White, and about 3000. others. Against whom came into the field of the English side, the Lord John Bermingham, Sir Richard Tuit, Sir Miles Verdon, Sir Hugh Tripton, Sir Herbert Sutton, Sir John Cusack, Sir Edward and Sir William Bermingham, and the Primate of Armagh, who af-foiled them all: Sir Walter Larpulk: and certain came from Tredagh, to the number of twenty, well appointed and choice souldiers, whom John Maupas accompanied:
and so they joined the said battell. The English were the first that entred with great vigour upon the front and vaward, where the said John Maupas manfully and with much honour in this conflict slew the Lord Edward Brus: which John also was found slaine upon the body of the said Edward: and all the Scots in manner were killed up, even to the number of two thousand or thereabout: whereby few of the Scots escaped, beside the Lord Philip Mowbray, who also was wounded to death: and Sir Hugh Lacy, Sir Walter Lacy, with some few others that were with them, made shift hardly to save themselves. This fortuned between Dundalk and Faghird. Now the head of the foresaid Edward, the said Lord John Bermingham brought unto the said Lord King of England: upon whom the King bestowed at the same time, the Earle-dome of Louth to him and to his heires males, and the Barony of Ateribh. And one quarter, with the hands and heart of the foresaid Edward, were carried to Dublin, and the other quarters divided and sent to other places.
MCCCXIX. The Lord Roger Mortimer returned out of England, and is eftsoones made Lord Justice of Ireland. The same yeere at the feast of All-Saints came a Bull from the Pope to excommunicate Robert Brus King of Scotland at every Masse. Also the towne of Athifell, and a great part of the country, was burnt by the Lord John Fitz-Thomas, whole brother of the Lord Moris Fitz-Thomas. In this yeere the fore-said John Bermingham was created Earle of Louth. Also the Stone bridge of Kildare. Coleyn was built by Master Moris Jacke, Canon of the Cathedrall Church of Kildare.
MCCCXX. In the time of Pope John the 22. and of the Lord Edward sonne to King Edward, which Edward after the comming of Saint Austen into England was the 25. King; also under Alexander Bickmore then Archbishop of Dublin beganne the Univerfite of the said Citie of Dublin. The first that proceeded Master in the same Univerfite, was Frier William Hardite, of the order of preaching Friars: which William under the said Archbishop solemnly commenced Doctor in Divinity. The second Master that proceeded in the same faculty, was Frier Henry Cogry, of the order of the Friars Minors: the third Master that went forth was William Rodyard Dean of the Cathedrall Church of Saint Patrick in Dublin, who solemnly commenced Doctor in the Canon law. And this William was made the first Chancel-lour of the said Univerfity. The fourth Master in sacred Theologie or Divinity, that went out, was Frier Edmund Kermerdin. Item, Roger Mortimer Lord Justice of Ireland returned into England, leaving in his place the Lord Thomas Fitz-John then Earle of Kildare.
Item, the Lord Edmund Botiller entred into England, and so came to Saint James.
Also the bridge of the towne of Leghelyn was built by Master Moris Jack Canon of the Cathedrall Church of Kildare.
MCCCXXI. A very great overthrow, with much slaughter of the O-Connors, was given

A given at Balibogan the ninth day of May, by the men of Leinster and of Meth.
Item, the Lord Edmund Botiller died in London, and lieth buried at Balygaveran in Ireland. Also John Bermingham Earle of Louth, is made Lord Justice in Ireland.
Likewise John Wogan departed this life.
MCCCXXII. Andrew Bermingham, and Nicolas de La-Lond Knight, and many others are slaine by O-Nalan on St. Michaels day.
MCCCXXIII. A truce is taken betwene the King of England, and Robert Brus
King of Scotland for 14. yeeres. Also John Darcie came chiefe Justice of Ireland.
Item, John the first begotten sonne of the Lord Thomas Fitz-John Earle of Kildare, in the ninth yeere of his age ended this life.
MCCCXXIV. Nicolas Genevile, sonne and heire to the Lord Simon Genevile, departed out of this world, and was buried in the Church of the Friars Preachers of Trym.
Item, there hapned a great wind on twelfe day at night.
Item, a generall murrain there was of oxen and kine in Ireland.
MCCCXXV. Richard Lederede Bishop of Ossorie cited Dame Alice Keryll upon her perverse hereticall opinion, and caused her to make personall appearance before him:
and being examined as touching sorceries, he found by an enquest that she had practised sorceries: among which this was one foule fact of hers, that a certaine spirit named Robyn Artysson lay with her: and that she offered unto him nine red cockes at a stone bridge, in a certaine foure crosse high way.
Item, that she swept the streets of Kilkenny with beesomes, between Complin and Courtesew, and in sweeping the filth toward the house of William Ullaw her sonne, by way of conjuring mumbled these words:
Unto the house of William my sonne,
Hie all the wealth of Kilkenny towne.
Now the complices of the said Alice, and those that agreed unto this divellish and wretched practise of hers, were one Pernill of Meth; and Basilia the daughter of the same Pernill. When the above named Alice was by inquisition attainted of these fore-said imputations, the Bishop punished her by the purse, and caused her utterly to abjure all forcerie and witch-craft. But when afterwards shee stood convict eftsoones of the same crime, herselfe with the foresaid Basilia fled, but was never after found.
As for the said Pernill, she was burnt at Kilkenny: but at the houre of death shee avouched that the foresaid William deserved death as well as her selfe, affirming that he for a yeere and a day wore the divels girdle upon his bare bodie. Whereupon the Bishop caused the said William to bee apprehended and laid in prison for eight or nine weekes within the Castle of Kilkenny: and by the Bishops decree and appointment hee had two men to give attendance and to minister unto him, with expresse commandement, not to speake unto him but once a day, nor to eat or drinke with him: At length the said William, by the helpe of the Lord Arnald Esq. Seneschall of the Countie of Kilkenny, was delivered forth of prison: and the foresaid William gave a great summe of money unto the abovenamed Arnald, to imprison the Bishop afore said. The Lord Arnald before named caused the Bishop afore said to lye in prison about three moneths.
Now among the goods and implements of the said Alice, there was a certaine holy Wafer-cake found, having the name of the Divell imprinted upon it: there was found also a boxe, and within it an ointment, wherewith she used to besmeare or grease a certaine piece of wood called a Coultree: which being thus anointed, the said Alice with her complices could ride and gallop upon the said Coultree whether soever they would, all the world over through thick & thin, without either hurt or hindrance. And because the foresaid things were so notorious, Alice was cited againe to appeare at Dublin, before M. Deane of the Church of St. Patrick, there to finde greater favour. Who there made her appearance, and craved a day of answer, under a sufficient mainprife and suretiship, as it was thought. But shee was no more to be seene: for by the counsell of her sonne, and others that were not knowne, was she kept hidden in a farme house or village, untill the winde served for England, and so she passed

passed over: and never was it knowne whither she went. Now because it was found by the inquisition and recognizance of the said Parnell condemned to be burnt, that William Uslaw was consenting to his mother in her forcerie and with-craft: the Bishop caused him to be arrested and taken by the Kings writ, and to be kept in prison: who in the end through the supplication of great Lords was set free: yet with this condition, that he should cause the Church of S. Maries in Kilkenny to be covered all over with lead, and to doe other almef-deeds by a certaine time; which almef-deeds if he performed not within the said terme, then he should be in the same state where in he stood when he was taken by vertue of the Kings Proceffe.

MCCCXXVI. A Parliament was holden at Whitlontide in Kilkenny: unto which Parliament came the Lord Richard Burk the Earle of Ulster, although he was somewhat weake and crazie: thither repaired also all the Lords and Porentates of Ireland: and there the said Earle made a great and noble feast unto the Lords and the people. Afterwards the Lord Earle taking his leave of those Nobles and Lords, went to Atchisell, where he ended his life. And a little before the feast of S. John Baptist he was there entered. The Lord William Burk became his heire.

MCCCXXVII. There arose a quarrell and a fray betweene the Lord Moris Fitz-Thomas and the Lord Arnald Pover: and the Lord Moris had in his traine and company, the Lord Botiller, and the Lord William Bermingham: and the Lord Arnald had in his retinew the Bourkeins: of whom the said Lord Morris Fitz-Thomas slew many, and some he chased into Connaght.

In the same yeere after Michaelmas the Lord Arnald came to aide the Bourkeins: and by occasion of certaine rude and uncivill tearmes which the Lord Arnald had given out, in calling him Rymour, the said Moris raised an armie againe, and together with Botiller and the said William Bermingham with a puissant hoast burnt the lands and possessions of the said Lord Arnald in Ofash. Also the said William Bermingham fired the lands and manoir houses of the Lord Arnald Pover in Mounster; and Kenlys in Offerie he burnt: so that the Lord Arnald was forced to fly with the Baron of Donnyl to Waterford, and there they remained a moneth, untill that the Earle of Kildare, then Lord Justice of Ireland, and others of the Kings Counsell took a day betweene them: which day the Lord Arnald kept not, but came to Dublin, and passed the seas into England about the feast of the Purification: and after that Arnald had failed over, the said Moris Botiller and the Lord William Bermingham with a great armie came, spoiled, harried, and burnt the lands of the said Arnald: and by reason of those puissant forces that they had led, and the many mischiefs which they had done, the Kings ministers of his Counsell feared lest he would besiege Cities: and therefore the Cities made provision with more warding and watching the while betweene. And when the said Lord Moris Botiller, and William heard that the Cities made such provision and preparation before hand, they gave intelligence unto the Kings Counsell that they would come to Kilkenny and there cleere themselves, that they never thought to doe any noisance to the lands of their soveraigne Lord the King, but onely to be revenged of their enemies. Unto which Parliament came the Earle of Kildare then Justice of Ireland, the Prior of Kilmaynon, to wit, Roger Outlaw Chancellour of Ireland, Nicholas Fastoll Justice in the Bench, and others of the Kings Counsell: and the foresaid (Moris and William) demanded the Kings Charter of peace, but they of the Kings Counsell warily making answer,ooke day unto the month after Easter, that they might with their fellowes of the Counsell, treat upon this point.

In the same yeere before Lent the Irish of Leinster gathered themselves together, and set up a certain King, namely Donald the sonne of Arte Mac-Murgh. Who being made King, determined to set up his banner two miles from Dublin: and afterwards to passe through all the lands of Ireland. Whose pride and malice God seeing, suffered him to fall into the hands of the Lord Henry Trarburn; who brought him to the Salmons leaps, & had of him 200. pound for his lives ransome, & then led him to Dublin, to wait there untill the Kings Counsell could provide and take order what

to

A to doe with him: and after his taking many infortunities lighted upon the Irish of Leinster, to wit, the Lord John Wellesley took David O-Thothiel prisoner, and many of the Irish were slaine.

The same yeere Adam Duff the sonne of Walier Duff of Leinster, and of the kindred of the O-Tohiles, was convicted; for that against the Catholike faith, hee denied the Incarnation of Jesus Christ, and held that there could not bee three persons and one God: and hee affirmed that the most blessed Virgin Mary, mother of our Lord, was an harlot: hee denied also the resurrection of the dead, and avouched that the sacred Scriptures were fables; and nothing else: and he imputed falsitie upon the sacred Apostolicall See. For which and for every of these articles the same Adam Duff was pronounced an hereticke and blasphemor: whereupon the same Adam by a decree of the Church was on the Munday after the Outas of Easter the yeere 1328. burnt at Hoggis (Greene) by Dublin.

MCCCXXXII. On Tuesday in Easter week Thomas Fitz-John Earle of Kildare and Justice of Ireland died: after whom succeeded in the office of Justice, Frier Roger Outlaw Prior of Kilmaynok. The same yeere David O-Tophil, a strong thiefe and enemy to the King, a burner of Churches and destroyer of people, was brought forth of the Castle of Dublin to the Tolstale of the Citie, before Nicholas Fastoll and Elias Ashbourne Justices in the (Kings) bench: which Justices gave him his judgement, that he should first be drawne at horses tailes through the midst of the Citie unto the gallows, and afterward be hanged upon a jebbit, which was done accordingly. Item, in the same yeere the Lord Moris Fitz-Thomas raised a great army to destroy the Bourkeins and the Poers. The same yeere also the Lord William Bourk was knighted at London on Whitfunday, and the King gave unto him his Seignory. Also in the same yeere James Botiller in England espoused the daughter of the Earle of Hereford, and was created Earle of Ormund, who before was called Earle of Tipery.

The same yeere a Parliament was holden at Northampton, where many of the Lords and Nobles of England assembled: and a peace was renewed betweene Scotland, England and Ireland by marriages betweene them: and it was ordained that the Earle of Ulster, with many Nobles of England, should goe to Barwick upon Tweed, to the espousals and assurance making.

The same yeere after the said espousals and contract made at Barwicke, the Lord Robert Brus King of Scotland, and the Lord William Burk Earle of Ulster, the Earle of Meneteth, and many of the Scottish nobility arrived at Cragfergus peaceably, and sent unto the Justices of Ireland and to the Counsell, that they would come to Green Castle, to treat about a peace of Scotland and Ireland. Now because the said Justices of Counsell failed to come as the said King desired, he took his leave of the Earle of Ulster, and returned into his owne country after the feast of the assumption of the blessed Virgin Mary. And the Earle of Ulster came to Dublin unto the Parliament, and there stayed fixe dayes, and made a great feast, and after this went into Connaght.

The same yeere, about the feast of Saint Katherin Virgin, the Bishop of Offerie certified the Kings Counsell there, that Sir Arnald Pover was convicted before him upon divers articles of perverse heresie. Whereupon, at the suit of the said Bishop, the said Sir Arnald by vertue of the Kings writ was arrested and layed up in the Castle of Dublin: and a day was given unto the Bishop for to come unto Dublin, to follow the foresaid suit and action against the foresaid Lord Arnald: who made his excuse, that hee could not then come, because his enemies lay in wait for his life in the way: whereupon the Kings Counsell knew not how to make an end of this businesse, and so the Lord Arnald was kept in duresse within the Castle of Dublin untill the Parliament following, which was in Mid-lent, where all the Nobles of Ireland were present.

In the same yeere Frier Roger Uslaw, Prior of the Hospitall of St. John of Jerusalem in Ireland, Lord Justice and Chancellour of Ireland, was disamed by the said Bishop, and slandered to bee a favourer of heresie, a Counsellour also and abetter of the

the

* the said Lord Arnold in his hereticall naughtinesse. And because his person was thus A
 * villanously defamed, the said Prior went to the Counsell of the King, and put up a * petition that hee might purge himselfe. Whereupon they of the Kings Counsell
 * tooke advice, and upon consultation had, granted unto him that he might make his
 * purgation: And they caused it to be proclaimed for three dayes, That if there were * any person, who would follow suit and give information against the said Frier Roger,
 * he might come in and put in his pursuitt: But no man was found to follow the mar-
 * ter. Whereupon at the procurement of Sir Roger the Frier, there went out the * Kings writ to summon the Elders of Ireland, to wit, Bishops, Abbots, Priors, and
 * foure Maiors of foure Cities, namely, Dublin, Corke, Limerick and Waterford, and B
 * of Tredagh: also the Sheriffes and Seneschals, yea and the Knights of the shire, with
 * the Free-holders of the countie that were of the better sort, for to reparaire unto Dub* lin. And there were chosen fixe examiners in the said cause, to wit, M. William Rod-* yard, Deane of the Cathedrall Church of St. Patrick in Dublin, the Abbat of Saint
 * Thomas, the Abbat of St. Maries, the Prior of holy Trinitie Church in Dublin, M.
 * Elias Lawles, and M. Peter Willebey: These Inquisitours convented those that were * cited, and they examined every one severally by himselfe: which examiners all up* on their oathes depofed, that he was honest and faithfull, a zealous embracer of the * faith, and readie to die for the faith: and in regard of this great solemnity of his pur-
 * gation, the said Frier Roger made a royall feast to all that would come.

* Also the same yeere in Lent died the said L. Arnold Pover in the Castle of Dublin, C
 * and lay a long time unburied in the house of the preaching Friars.

* MCCCXXIX. After the feast of the Annuntiation of the blessed Virgin Mary, the * Nobles of Ireland came unto the Parliament at Dublin, to wit, the Earle of Ulster,
 * the Lord Thomas Fitz-Morris, the Earle of Louth, William Bermingham, and the rest * of the Lords: and a peace was renewed there betwene the Earle of Ulster, and the * Lord Morris Fitz-Thomas: & the said Lords with the Kings Counsell ordained there * that the Kings peace should be fully kept: so that every Nobleman and Chieftaine
 * should keep in his owne sept, retinew, and servants, and the said Earle of Ulster made
 * a great feast in the Castle of Dublin: and the Lord Morris Fitz-Thomas the morrow D
 * after kept a great feast within the Church of St. Patrick in Dublin: and Frier Roger
 * Outlaw Justice of Ireland feasted likewise upon the third day at Kilmaynon, and so
 * they departed.

* The same yeere on the Vigill of St. Barnabee the Apostle, Sir John Bermingham
 * Earle of Louth was slaine at Balybragan in Uragal, by those of Uragal: and with him
 * Peter Bermingham the said Earles legitimate and whole brother, also Robert Ber-
 * mingham the same Earles putative brother, Sir John Bermingham the son of his brother
 * Richard Lord of Anry, William Finne Bermingham, the Unkles sonne by the * mothers side of the foresaid Lord of Anry, Simon Bermingham the same Williams
 * sonne, Thomas Bermingham the son of Robert of Conaght, Peter Bermingham the E
 * sonne of James of Conaght, Henry Bermingham of Conaght, and Richard Talbot of
 * Malaghide a valiant man at armes, and two hundred with them whose names are not
 * knowne.

* Item, after the foresaid slaughter the Lord Simon Genevile his men invaded the * country of Carbury, for to spoile and harry them, in regard of their robberies and man-
 * slaughters committed many times in Meib: but before the said invasion, they of Car-
 * bury arose, and slew of the said Simons men threescore and sixteen.

* Also the same yeere on the morrow after holy Trinitie Sunday there came to Dub* lin, John Gernon and Roger Gernon his brother in the behalfe of those of Uragal, and * made humble request, that they might stand to be tried at the Common Law. And F * on Tuesday, which was the morrow after the feast of St. John Baptist, John and Ro* ger hearing that the Lord William Bermingham was coming, departed out of Dub* lin. The same yeere on the Vigill of St. Laurence, the Lord Thomas Botiller went * with a great power into the parts of Ardnorwith, and there encountered the said Lord
 * Thomas Williams Mac-Goghgan with his forces: and there was the said L. Thomas
 * slaine

A so the great losse of the land of Ireland, & with him were killed the Lord John Lede-
 * wich, Roger Ledewich, Thomas Ledewich, John Nangle, Meiler Petit, Simon Petit,
 * David Nangle, Sir John Waringer, James Terel, Nicholas White, William Freines, * Peter Kent, John White, and together with them one hundred and forty men whose * names are unknowne. And on the tuesday next before the feast of St. Bartholomew,
 * the body of the said Lord Thomas Botiller was conveyed to Dublin, and bestowed
 * in the house of the preaching Friars, but as yet not buried: and the funday next ensu* ing the feast of the beheading of St. John Baptist, the said Lord Thomas his corps
 * was very honourably carried through the city, and entered in the Church of the
 * B preaching Friars, and the wife of the said Lord John that day made a feast.

In the same yeere John Lord Dracy came Justice of Ireland the second time: and
 * the said Lord John espoused the Lady Joande Burk Countesse of Kildare, the third * day of July, at Maynoth.

* Item, Philip Stanton is slaine. Also Henry Lord Trahern is treacherously taken in * his owne house at Kilbego by Richard the sonne of Philip Onolan.

* More, the Lord James Botiller Earle of Ormond burnt Foghird against Onolan, for
 * the foresaid Henries fake brother of Botiller.

* The same yeere, on wednesday next after the feast of the Ascension of the blessed * Virgin Mary, John Lord Dracy Justice of Ireland went toward the parts of New* castle, of Mac-Kingham and Wickelaw, against the O-Brynnys: and the monday follow-
 * C ing certain of Lawles were slaine, and many wounded, and namely, Robert Locam was * hurt, and of the Irish the better sort were slaine, many likewise wounded, and the rest * fled. But Markad O-Brynnie yeelded himselfe an hostage together with his son, un-
 * kle, and unkles sonne, and they were brought to the castle of Dublin. But afterwards
 * delivered for other hostages the better sort of their sept and kin.

The same yeere the Lord Justice, namely, the Lord John Dracy and those of the * Kings Counsell in Ireland, about the feast of the Circumcision of our Lord, charged
 * the Lord Morris Fitz-Thomas of Desmond, that himselfe should come into the field
 * with his forces for to vanquish the Kings enemies: giving him to understand, that
 * D their soveraigne Lord the King would provide for to defray the charges of him and
 * of his army: and the said Morris came with his power, and Briene O-Brene was in his * company: and their army consisted of ten thousand men: and the said Lord Morris
 * advanced with his army first against the O-Nolanes, vanquished them, gat a great
 * bootie, and wasted their lands with fire: and the O-Nolanes fled, and afterwards de* livered hostages, who were sent unto the castle of Dublin. And afterwards the said
 * Lord Morris made a journey against the O-Morches, who did put in their hostages for
 * to keepe the Kings peace. The same time the castle of Ley which O-dympey had * won and kept, was rendred up to the said Morris. The same yeere after the Epiphany
 * of our Lord, Donald Arts Mac-Murgh made an escape out of the castle of Dublin by * E a cord, which one Adam Nangle had bought for him: which Adam afterwards was
 * drawne and hanged.

* MCCCXXX. Mighty winds were up in divers places, about the feast daies of St. Ka* therine, S. Nicolas, and of the Nativitie of our Lord: by which wind part of the wall * of a certain house fell downe, and killed the wife of Sir Miles Verdon with his daugh* ter, on S. Nicolas even, such winds as the like were never seene in Ireland.

* Item, there was such an inundation of the water of Boyn, as never had been known
 * before: by which flood all the bridges, as well of stone as of timber, standing over
 * the said water, were utterly cast downe, unlesse it were Babe bridge. The water also * carried away divers mills, and did much hurt to the Friars Minors of Trym, and Tre-
 * F dagh, in breaking down their houses. The same yeere, about the feast of S. John Bap* tist, there began a great dearth of corne in Ireland, and continued untill Michaelmas.

* Item, a cranoc of wheat was sold for 20. shillings: also a cranoc of oats for eight shil* lings, and one cranoc of peason, beanes, and of barley for 8. shillings. And this dearth
 * hapned by occasion of abundance of raine, so that much of the standing corne could * not be reaped before the feast of St. Michael.

« The same yeere, the English of Meth made a slaughter of the Irish (to wit, of Mac-A-Goghig and people) about Lent, neere unto Loughnerthy, whereupon the said Mac-Goghig in anger burnt in those parts 15. small villages, and sacked them: which the English seeing, gathered themselves together against him, and of his men slew one hundred, and among whom were slaine three Lords sons of the Irish.

« Item, the Lord William Burgh Earle of Ulster led forth an army out of Ulster into Mounster against Briene O-Brene.

« Also the Lady Joan Countesse of Kildare, was at Maynoth delivered of William her first sonne, that the Lord John Darcy had by her, whiles the Lord John abode in England.

« Item, Reymund Lawles is slaine treacherously at Wickelow.

« More, a Parliament was holden at Kilkenny, by Frier Roger Utlaw the Prior of Kylmainon, then Lieutenent under the Lord Justice, at which were present Alexander Archbishop of Dublin, the Lord William Earle of Ulster, the Lord James Earle of Ormond, the Lord William Bermingham, and Walter Burk of Conaght: and every of them with a great power set forward to expell Briene O-Brene out of Urkiff neere Cashill.

« Also, Walter Burk, with his army of Connaght, harried the lands of the Lord Moris Fitz-Thomas, bringing back with him the booty to Urkiff.

« Item, the Lord Earle of Ulster, and the Earle of Desmund, namely, the Lord Moris Fitz-Thomas (for this is the first time that I call him Earle) are appointed to the safe keeping of the Marshall at Lymeric, by Frier Roger Utlaw Justice of Ireland. But the Earle of Desmund by a wile escaped out of the custody of the said Marshall, and went his way.

« MCCCXXI. The Lord Hugh Lacy with the Kings pardon and peace entred Ireland. Also the Earle of Ulster entred England.

« Also there was given an overthrow to the Irish in Okenfeley by the English the one and twenty day of April.

« Item, the same day on the Vigill of Saint Marke the Evangelist, the O-Tothely came to Tanelagh, and robbed Alexander Archbishop of Dublin, tooke away three hundred sheepe, and slew Richard White and other honest men of his company.

« Then ran rumours to Dublin of that depredation and slaughter: and Sir Philip Brye knight, and Frier Moris Fitz-Gerald Knight of the order of Knights Hospitalers, Hamud Archdeken, John Chamberlane, Robert Tyrell, and the two sons of Reginald Bernewall, and many others, but especially of the retinew of the Lord Archbishop of Dublin, were by a traine or ambush slaine by David O-Tothill in Culiagh.

« Also the Lord William Bermingham led forth a great army against the foresaid Irish, and did much harme unto them, but more would have done, had he not bene empached by the false promises of the Irish.

« Item, those of the English pale at Thurles gave a great overthrow unto Briene O-Brene, and slew many of the Irish in the moneth of May.

« Item, at Finnagh in Meth the English of the said pale defeated the Irish upon the eleventh day of June.

« Also, when famine encreased much in Ireland, the mercy of God so disposed, that upon the seven and twenty day of June there came to land a mighty multitude of great sea fishes, to wit, Thurlhedis, such as in many ages past had never bene seene, which by the estimation of many men amounted to the number of five hundred: and this hapned neere unto Connyng, and the water called Dooyz in the haven of Dublin, about evening: and Anthony Lord Lacy then Justice of Ireland, with his owne people and certain citizens of Dublin, amongst whom was Philip Cradock, killed of the foresaid fishes above 200. and no man was forbidden to carry away, the same Justice giving order therefore.

« Item, Anthony Lord Lacy Justice of Ireland ordained a common Parliament at Dublin, in the Utas of Saint John Baptist: unto which certaine of the Ancients of the land came not. Then the said Justice removed to Kilkenny, proroging the said

A said Parliament, from the foresaid Octaves unto the feast of Saint Peter ad Vincula. Unto which place there repaired the Lord Thomas Fitz-Thomas, and many other Nobles of the land, who came not in before, submitting themselves to the Kings grace and mercy. And the King for his part as much as concerned himselfe under a certaine forme of pardon graciously forgave all the mischiefs committed by the foresaid persons in the land.

« Also the castle of Fernis is taken by the Irish perfidiously, and burned in the month of August.

« Item, the said Lord Moris Fitz-Thomas of Desmund is taken by order from the counsell at Lymeric by the said Lord Justice, the morrow after the assumption of the blessed Virgin Mary, and with the Justice brought to the castle of Dublin, the seventh day of October.

« Item, Henry Mandevile is apprehended in the month of September, and led to the castle of Dublin, by vertue of a warrant from Simon Fitz-Richard Justice in the Kings Bench.

« Item, Walter Burck, who with his two brethren of whole blood are taken in Connaght, by the Earle of Ulster in November, and conveyed by the same Earle unto the castle of North-burg, in the month of Februarie.

« Also, the Lord William Bermingham, with his son Walter Bermingham, are attached at Clomell, by the said Justice in the month of February, notwithstanding the Kings charter or pardon given unto them before by the Justice above named, and are brought unto the Castle of Dublin the nineteenth day of April.

« Item, the Irish of Leinster made spoile of the English, and burnt Churches: and in the Church of Freineston they burnt about fourescore men and women, and a certain Chaplain of the said Church, arraied in his sacred vestiments and with the body of our Lord, they repelled backe with their javelins when he would have gone forth, and burnt him with the rest in the Church. These newes came unto the eares of the Lord Pope, who sent his Bull or briefe unto the Archbishop of Dublin, commanding him to excommunicate the said Irish, and all their adherents, together with their retinue and followers, and to interdict their lands. Now the Archbishop fulfilled the commandment of the Lord Pope: but the said Irish, contemning the said Bull, excommunication, interdiction, and chastisement of the Church, and continuing still in their wickednesse, drew themselves againe together, and invaded all the county of Weisford, as farre as to Carcarne, and spoiled the whole country. Whom the English made head against, to wit, Richard White and Richard Fitz-Henry, with the Burgessees of Weisford and other English, slew of the Irish about 400. and many others of them as they fled were drowned in the river which is called Slane.

« MCCCXXII. William Bermingham is put to death and hanged at Dublin by the said Lord Justice, the eleventh day of July, and Walter his sonne is set free. The foresaid Sir William was a noble Knight, and among many thousand knights most renowned and excellent for feats of armes: Alas the day! great pity it was of him; for who relating his death can forbear teares? But at length entered hee was in Dublin among the preaching Friars. Also the castle of Bonraty was forced and rased to the very ground by the Irish of Totomon in July. Also the castle of Arco by the said Justice, with the citizens of Dublin and the help of the English within the pale, was won from the Irish, and in the Kings hand, on the eighth day of August, & in part is newly erected. Also the Lord Antony Lucy Justice of Ireland is put out of his office, and returneth into England with his wife and children in the month of November. In whose place also is set John Lord Darcy Justice of Ireland: and he entred Ireland the thirteenth day of February. Item, the English of the pale gave a great overthrow to Briene O-Brene and Mac-Karthy, and slew many Irish in the parts of Munster. Item, there deceased John Decer a citizen of Dublin, and lieth buried in the Church of the Friars Minors: a man that did many good deeds. Also, a certain Maister named Manfes reigned all over Ireland, as well in old men and women, as in young and little ones.

Item, the hostages abiding in the castle of Lymericke slew the Constable of the same castle, and seized the castle into their owne hands: but after that the castle was recovered by the citizens, the same hostages were put to the sword and killed. Likewise the hostages tooke the castle of Nenagh, and when part of it was burnt, recovered it was againe, and the hostages were reserved.

Also one P... of wheat about Christmas was commonly sold for 22. shillings: and straight after Easter, and so forward, for twelve pence.

Item, the towne of New-castle of Lions was burnt and sacked by the O-Toshiles. MCCCCXXIII. The L. John Darcy arrived Lord Justice of Ireland at Dublin. Item, O-Conghirs lost a great bootie, two thousand cowes and above, by the Berminghams B of Carbery.

Item, the Lord John Darcy Justice of Ireland caused the Pas at Ethergovil in Offaly to be cut downe, against O-Conghir.

Item, the Lord Moris Fitz-Thomas Earle of Desmond is taken forth of the prison of Dublin, after he had bene imprisoned one yeere and a halfe, having gotten many mainprisers first, even the greatest and noblest personages of the land to be bound for him, in the forfeiture of life, losse of all their goods, if then the said Lord Moris attempted ought against the King, and if those Nobles above said presented not his person unto the King for his demerits.

Also William Burk Earle of Ulster, betweene the New-towne and Cragfergum in C Ulster, was traiterously (the more pittie) slaine by his owne company, in the twentieth yeere of his age, and the sixth day of the month June: Robert the sonne of Maurison Maundevel was hee that gave him his first wound. Upon the hearing of which rumours, the Earles wife being then in the parts of Ulster with her daughter and heire, presently embarked and went over into England. After whose murdering, John L. Darcy Lord chiefe Justice of Ireland, to revenge the Earles death, by advice of all the States of the land assembled in the said Parliament, forthwith with his army took his journey, and by ship arrived at Cragfergum upon the first day of July. Now the people of the country rejoicing at the Lord Justice his coming, and thereby taking heart unto them against the murderers of the said Earle of Ulster, with one assent rose up to D revenge the killing of him, and in a pitched field obtained victory: some they tooke prisoners, others they put to the sword. The things thus dispatched, the said Justice with his said army went into Scotland, leaving in his place M. Thomas Burgh Treasurer at that time of Ireland.

Item, many Nobles of the land and the Earle of Ormond with their retinue and followers assembled together at the house of the Carmelite Friers in Dublin, the 11. day of June: and during this said Parliament, whereas they were going out of the Court-yard of the said Friers, sodainly within the presse of the people Murchard or Moris the sonne of Nicolas O-Toibil was there murdered. At whose sodaine killing E all the Elders of the land fearing and supposing there was some treason, were stricken with an extraordinary and strange affright, and much troubled. And he that killed the same Murchard stoutly escaped all their hands: but neither the party himselfe nor his name they ever knew.

Also John Lord Darcy returned Justice of Ireland.

Item, Sir Walter Bermingham, sonne to the Lord William Bermingham is delivered out of the castle of Dublin, in the month of February.

More, the Lord Moris Fitz-Thomas Earle of Desmond by a fall off his Palfrey brake his legge.

Item, it fell out to be a faire and dry summer, in so much as at the feast of St. Peter ad vincula bread made of new wheat was eaten, and a peck of wheat was sold for six- pence in Dublin.

Also Sir Reimund Archdekon Knight, and many others of the same kinred, were flaine in Leinster.

MCCCCXXVII. In the Vigill of S. Kalixt Pope, seven partridges (and unknown it is what spirit moved them) leaving the plaine field, made way directly unto the City of

A of Dublin, and flying most swiftly over the mercate places, settled on the top of the Brew-houses, belonging to the Capons of holy Trinity in Dublin. To which sight some Citizens came running, and wondered much at so strange a prodigie. But the boyes of the city caught two of them alive; a third they killed: and the rest scared therewith mounting up higher took their swift flight and escaped into the fields over against them. Now what this accident (not heard of in the ages before) did portend, I leave to the judgement of those that are cunning and skilfull.

Also Sir John Charleton Knight and a Baron, with his wife, sonnes, and daughters, and his whole family, came at the feast of S. Calixtus Pope, as chiefe Justice of Ireland: and of his sonnes and household somedied.

Also Lord Thomas Charleton, Bishop of Hereford, & brother in the whole blood unto the said Justice, came the same day with his brother as Chancellour of Ireland; together with Master John Rees Treasurer of Ireland; and Doctor in the Decretals, bringing with them many Welshmen, to the number of two hundred, and arrived in the haven of Dublin.

Also whiles John Charleton was Lord Justice and held a Parliament at Dublin, Doctor David O-Hirraghey Archbishop of Ardmagh being called to the Parliament made his provision for housekeeping in the Monastery of S. Mary neere unto Dublin: but because hee would have had his Crozier before him, hee was impeached by the C Archbishop and his Clerkes, and permit him they would not.

Item, the same yeere died the same David Archbishop of Ardmagh: after whom succeeded Doctor Richard Fitz-Ralfe Deane of Lichfield, a notable Clerke; who was borne in the towne of Dundalke.

Item, James Botiller the first Earle of Ormond departed this life the sixth day of January, and lieth buried at Ballygaveran.

MCCCCXXVIII. Lord John Charleton at the instigation of his whole brother, to wit, Thomas Bishop of Hereford, is by the King discharged of his office, and returneth with his whole household into England, and Thomas Bishop of Hereford is by the King ordained Custos and Justice of Ireland.

D Item, Sir Eustace Pover, and Sir John Pover his Uncle, are by the said Justice brought out of Mounster to Dublin, and committed to prison in the castle the third day of February.

Also, in the parts of Ireland the frost was so vehement, that Aven-Liffie, the river of Dublin, was so frozen that very many danced and leaped upon the Ice of the said river, they played at foot-ball, and ran courses there: yea and they made fires of wood and of turfe upon the same Ice, and broyled herrings thereupon. This Ice lasted very many dayes. And as for the snow also in the parts of Ireland that accompanied the same frost, a man need not speake any more, seeing it was knowne to lye on such a wonderfull depth. This hard time of weather continued from the second E day of December unto the tenth day of February: the like season was never heard of before, especially in Ireland.

MCCCCXXIX. All Ireland was generally up in armes. Item, an exceeding great slaughter there was of the Irish, and a number of them drowned, even 1200. at the least, by the meanes of the Lord Moris Fitz-Thomas Earle of Desmond, and the rest of the Geraldines in the parts of Kernige.

Item, the Lord Moris Fitz-Nicolas, Lord of Kernige, was apprehended and imprisoned by the Lord Moris Fitz-Thomas Earle of Desmond, and died in prison, being put to strait diet, for that he openly went out and rebelled with the said Irish against the Lord King of England, and against the Lord Earle.

F Item, a number of the O-Dyncies and other Irish were killed and drowned in the water of Barrow by the English, and the hot pursuit of the Earle of Kildare.

Also a great booty of cattell of sundry sorts, and such a booty as had not been seen in the parts of Leinster, by the said Lord Thomas Bishop of Hereford and Justice of Ireland, and with the helpe of the English of that country, was taken from the Irish in the parts of Odrone in the end of February.

“ MCCCXL. The said Bishop of Hereford and Justice of Ireland, being sent for by A
“ the King, returned into England the tenth day of April, leaving in his place “ Frier Roger Outlaw Priour of Kylmaynon. Also this Sir Roger Lord Priour of “ Kylmainon, Justice and Chancellour of the said land, died the thirteenth day of Fe“ bruary.

“ Item, the King of England granted by his letters patents unto John Darcy the office “ of Lord Justice of Ireland for terme of life.

“ MCCCXLI. Sir John Moris Knight came Lord Justice of Ireland in the moneth of “ May, as Lievtenant unto John Darcy in the foresaid land.

“ Item, this wondrous prodigie following, and such as in our age had not been heard B
“ of before, hapned in the country of Leinster: where a certain waifaring man as he tra“ velled in the Kings high way, found a paire of gloves, fit, as he thought, for his owne “ turne: which as he drew upon his hands, forthwith in stead of a mans voice and speech,
“ he kept a strange and marvellous barking like unto a dogge: and from that present,
“ the elder folke and full growne, yea and women too throughout the same country, “ barked like bigge dogges; but the children and little ones waughed as small whelpes.
“ This plague continued with some 18. daies, with others a whole moneth, and with “ some for two yeeres. Yea this foresaid contagious malady entred also into the neigh“ bour shires, and forced the people in like manner to barke.

“ Also, the King of England revoked all those gifts and grants that by him or his fa- C “ ther had bin conferred by any meanes upon any persons whatsoever in Ireland, were “ they liberties, lands, or other goods: for which revocation great displeasure and dis“ content arose in the land: and so the land of Ireland was at the point to have bene “ lost for ever out of the King of Englands hand.

“ Item, by the Kings Councell there was ordained a generall Parliament of Ireland “ in the moneth of October. To the same Parliament Moris Fitz-Thomas Earle of “ Desmond came not. Before which time there was never knowne so notable and “ manifest a division in Ireland, between those that were English by birth, and English “ in blood. The Maiors besides of the Kings cities in the same land, together with all “ the better sort of the Nobility and Gentry of the said land, with one consent upon D “ mature deliberation and counsell had, among other their conclusions, decreed and ap“ pointed a common Parliament at Kilkenny in November, to the utility and profit “ both of the King and the land before named: without asking any counsell at all of the “ Lord Justice and the Kings officers afore said in this behalfe.

“ Now the Lord Justice, and the rest of the Kings Ministers, in no wise presumed to “ come unto the same Parliament at Kilkenny. The Elders therefore of the land a“ foresaid, together with the Ancients and Maiors of the cities, agreed and ordained as “ touching solemne Embassadors to be sent with all speed unto the King of England, “ about relieving the State of the land, and to complaine of his Ministers in Ireland, as “ touching their unequall and unjust regiment of the same, and that from thenceforth E
“ they neither could nor would endure the realme of Ireland to be ruled by his Mini“ sters, as it had wont to be. And particularly they make complaint of the foresaid Mi“ nisters, by way of these Questions.

“ Imprimis, How a land full of warres could be governed by him that was unskillfull “ in warre?

“ Secondly, how a Minister or Officer of the Kings should in a short time grow to so “ great wealth?

“ Thirdly, how it came to passe that the King was never the richer for Ireland?

“ MCCCXLII. The eleventh day of October, when the moone was eleven dayes old,
“ there were seen by many men at Dublin 2. moones in the firmament well and early F
“ before day. The one was according to the course of nature in the West, and appea“ red bright: the other to the quantity of a round loose appeared in the East, casting “ but a meane and slender light.

“ MCCCXLIII. St. Thomas street in Dublin was casually burnt with fire upon the “ feast of S. Valentine Martyr.

Item,

A Item, the 13. day of July, the Lord Ralph Ufford, with his wife the Countesse of “ Ulster, came Lord chiefe Justice of Ireland: Upon whose entring, the faire weather “ changed sodainly into a distemperature of the aire, and from that time there ensued “ great store of raine, with such abundance of tempestuous stormes, untill his dying “ day. None of his predecessours in the times past, was (with griefe be it spoken) com“ parable unto him. For this Justicer bearing the office of Justice-ship, became an op“ pressor of the people of Ireland, a robber of the goods both of Clergy and Laity, of “ rich and poore alike: a defrauder of many under the colour of doing good: not ob“ serving the rights of the Church, nor keeping the lawes of the kingdome, offering
“ B wrongs to the naturall inhabitants, ministring justice to few or none, and altogether “ distrusting (some few onely excepted) the inborne dwellers in the land. These things “ did hee still, and attempted the like, misled by the counsell and perswasion of his “ wife.

“ Item, the said Justice entring into Ulster in the moneth of March through a Pas, “ called Emerdullan, was fiercely set upon by Mac-Carion, the which Mac-Carion veri“ ly having encountered with the said Justice, spoiled him of his clothes, mony, utensils, “ silver, plate, and horses, yea and slew some of his men. But in the end, the foresaid “ Justice with the helpe of the men of Ergale got the victory, and entred into the parts “ of Ulster.

C MCCCXLV. The seventh of June a common Parliament was holden at Dublin, un“ to which the Lord Moris Fitz-Thomas came not.

“ Item, the Lord Ralph Ufford Justice of Ireland, after the feast of S. John Baptist,
“ with the Kings standard railed (yet without the assent of the Elders of the land) a“ gainst the Lord Moris Fitz-Thomas Earle of Desmond, marcheth forthwith into “ Mounster, and there seized into the Kings hands the Earles lands: and these lands so “ seized letteth out to farme unto others for a certain yeerly rent, to be carried unto the “ King.

“ Item, the said Justice being in the parts of Mounster, delivered unto Sir William “ Burton Knight, two writs: the one whereof the said William should deliver unto the “ D Lord Moris Fitz-Thomas Earle of Kildare: the contents of which was this; That “ upon paine of forfeiting all his lands, he should with all speed repaire unto him, to aid
“ the King and him with a strong power. Now in the other writ contained it was, that “ the said Sir William should apprehend the said Earle of Kildare, and so apprehended “ commit him to prison. But Sir William seeing that this could not possibly be brought “ about and effected accordingly by himselfe, with colourable words framed for the “ nonce, perswaded the said Earle, whiles he was preparing himselfe with his army,
“ and levying a power unto the foresaid Justice, that before his departure out of the “ countrey, hee should repaire unto the Kings Counsell at Dublin, and that by the una“ nimity and joint counsell of the same to deale, as to provide for the safe keeping of “ E his owne lands in his absence: and if after that any hurt should befall unto his lands “ whiles he was absent, it should be imputed unto the Kings counsell, and not to him.
“ The Earle therefore giving credit unto the Knights words, and thinking of no trea“ cherous practice in this behalfe, disposed and addressed himself to come unto Dublin.
“ When he was come, altogether ignorant of any treachery toward, whiles himselfe sat
“ in consultation with others of the King Councell in the Exchequer-court, sodainly he “ was by the said Sir William betrayed, attached or arrested and apprehended, and “ brought to the castle of the said city, and there clapt up in prison.

“ Item, the said Justice entred with his army the parts of O-Comill in Mounster, and
“ by a treacherous device taked two castles of the Earle of Desmonds, to wit, the ca-“ F stle of Tunkilly, and the castle of the Iland: in which castle of the Iland thus taken, the “ Knights being within the said castle, namely, Sir Eustace le Pore, Sir William Graunt,
“ and Sir John Coverell, were first drawne, and afterward in October openly hanged “ untill they were dead.

“ Also the said Earle of Desmond, with some other of his Knights, were by the said “ Justice banished. The foresaid Justice having atchieved these exploits in Mounster, “ returned

returned in the moneth of November with his company unto his wife then great A with child, remaining at Kilmaynon, which is neere to Dublin: over and beside those things which had beene done against the Laity, by inditing and imprisoning some of them, and turning them out of their goods, he also caused the Ecclesiasticall persons, as well Priests as Clerkes, to be endited; and standing endited, attached and imprisoned them, and fetched no small summes of money out of their purses.

Item, as touching the grants and demises of their lands, to wit, whom before hee had deprived of their lands, he bestowed the same upon divers tenants (as hath beene said) as also the very writings concerning those grants, so sealed as they were by him and with the Kings seale, he revoked, tooke the same from them, cancelled, defaced, B and wholly annulled them.

Item, all the mainpernours of the said Earle of Desmond, in number twenty fixe, as well Earles as Barons, Knights and others of the countrey, whose names be these, to wit, Lord William Burke Earle of Ulster, Lord James Botiller Earle of Ormond, Sir Richard Tuit Knight, Sir Eustace Le Poer Knight, Sir Gerald De Rochfort Knight, Sir John Fitz-Robert Poer Knight, Sir Robert Barry Knight, Sir Morus Fitz-Gerald Knight, Sir John Wellesley Knight, Sir Walier Lenfaunt Knight, Sir Roger de la Rokell Knight, Sir Henry Traharn Knight, Sir Roger Pover Knight, Sir John Lenfaunt Knight, Sir Roger Pover Knight, Sir Matthew Fitz-Henry Knight, Sir Richard Wallis Knight, Sir Edward Burk Knight, the sonne of the Earle of Ulster, David Barry, William Fitz-Gerald, Fulke Ash, Robert Fitz-Morus, Henry Barkley, John Fitz-George Roch, and C Thomas de Lees de Burgh, their own travels and proper expences, which some of them with the said Justice in his warre had beene at, and in pursuing the said Earle of Desmond notwithstanding, he by definitive sentence deprived of their lands, and disinherited, and awarded their bodies to the Kings pleasure, excepting foure persons only of all the foresaid sureties, whose names be these, William Burk Earle of Ulster, James Botiller Earle of Ormond, &c.

MCCCXLVI. Upon Palme-Sunday, which fell out to be the ninth day of Aprill, the above named Lord Ralph Ufford Justice of Ireland went the way of all flesh: for whose death his owne dependants, together with his wife, sorrowed not a little: for whose death also the loiall subjects of Ireland rejoyce no lesse. The Clergy and people both of the land, for joy of his departure out of this life, with merry hearts doe leap, and celebrate a solemne feast of Easter. At whose death the floods ceased, and the distemperature of the aire had an end, and in one word, the common sort truly and heartily praise the onely Son of God. Well, when this Justice now dead was once fast folded within a sheet and a coffin of lead, the foresaid Countesse (with his treasure not worthy to be bestowed among such holy reliques) in horrible grieve of heart conveyed his bowels over into England, there to be entered.

And againe, in the month of May, and on the second day of the same month, behold a prodigious wonder, sent, no doubt, miraculously from God above. For lo, she that E before at her comming entred the city of Dublin so gloriously, with the Kings armes and ensignes, attended upon with a number of souldiers in her guard and traine along the streets of the said city, and so from that time forward (a small while though it were) living royally with her friends about her, like a Queen in the Iland of Ireland, now at her going forth of the same city privily by a posternegate of the castle, to avoid the clamour of the common people calling upon her for debts, in her retire homeward to her owne countrey departed in disgrace, sad and mournfull with the dolefull badges of death, sorrow and heavinesse.

Item, after the death of the said Justice of Ireland, the Lord Roger Darcy, with the assent of the Kings Ministers and others of the same land, is placed in the office of Justice for the time.

Also the castles of Ley and Kylmebede are taken by the Irish and burnt, in the month of Aprill.

Item, Lord John Moris commeth chiefe Justice of Ireland the fifteenth day of May.

Also

A Also the Irish of Ulster gave a great overthrow unto the English of Urgale, wherein were slaine three hundred at the least, in the moneth of June. Also, the said Lord John Moris, Justice of Ireland, is discharged by the King of England from that office of Justiceship, and the Lord Walter Bermingham set in the same office by the foresaid King: and a little after the foresaid slaughter committed, entrench with Commis- sion into Ireland in the month of June.

Item, unto the Lord Morus Fitz-Thomas Earle of Desmond the maintenance of peace for a certain time is granted by the King of England. Which being granted upon the Vigill of the exaltation of the holy Crosse, hee together with his wife and B two sonnes take sea at the haven of Yoghal, and crosseth over into England; where he followeth the law hard, and requireth instantly to have justice for the wrongs done unto him by Raulph Ufford, late Lord Justice of Ireland above named.

Item, unto the said Earle, by commandement and order from the Lord King of England, there are granted from his entrance into England twenty shillings a day, and so day by day still is allowed for his expences.

Also, the Lord Walter Bermingham Justice of Ireland, and the Lord Morus Fitz-Thomas, Earle of Kildare, rose up in armes against O-Morda and his complices, who burnt the Castle of Ley and Kilmebed: and they with their forces valiantly set upon and invade him and his complices, spoiling, killing and burning, in so much as the said C O-Morda and his complices (although at the first they had manfully and resolutely made resistance there with many thousands of the Irish) after many wounds and a great slaughter committed, were constrained in the end to yeeld; and so they submitted to the Kings grace and mercy, and betake themselves full and whole unto the said Earles devotion.

MCCCXLVII. The Earle of Kildare with his Barons and Knights goeth unto the King of England in the moneth of May, to aide him lying then at the siege of Caleys.

Also the towne of Caleys was by the inhabitants upon the fourth day of June rendered up into the King of Englands hands.

D Item, Walter Boneville, William Calfe, William Welesley, and many other noble Gentlemen and valiant Knights as well of England as of Ireland, died of the sicknesse in Caleys.

Also, Mac-Murgh, to wit, Donald Mac-Murgh the sonne of Donald Art Mac-Murgh King of Leinster, upon the fifth day of June is treacherously slain by his own people.

More, Morus Fitz-Thomas Earle of Kildare is by the King of England made Knight.

Also the towne called Monaghan, with all the territorie adjoining, is by the Irish burnt on the feast day of S. Stephen Martyr.

E Item, Dame Joane Fitz-Leoues, sometime wife to the Lord Simon Geneville departed this life, and is buried in the Covent Church of the Friars Preachers of Trim, the second day of Aprill.

MCCCXLVIII. And in the 22. yeere of King Edward the third, reigned the first pestilence, and most of all in Ireland, which had begunne afore in other Count- ries.

Item, in this yeere Walter Lord Bermingham, Lord Justice of Ireland came into England, and left John Archer Prior of Kylmainon his Lieutenent in his roome. And he returneth againe in the same yeere Justice as before: and the King conferred upon the same Walter, the Barony of Kenlys which is in Offerie, because he led a great ar- F my against the Earle of Desmond, with Raulfe Ufford, as before is said: which Barony belonged in times past unto the Lord Eustace Pover, who was attainted and hanged at the castle of the Isle.

MCCCXLIX. Lord Walter Bermingham, the best Justice of Ireland that ever was, gave up his office of Justiceship; after whom succeeded the Lord Carew Knight and Baron both.

MCCCL.

mcccc. And in the 25. yeere of the foresaid King Edward, Sir Thomas Rokesby A Knight was made Lord Justice of Ireland.
 Item, Sir Walter Bermingham Knight Lord Bermingham, that right good Justice sometime of Ireland, died in the Even of S. Margaret Virgin in England.
 mcccci. Kenrick Sherman sometime Maior of the Citie of Dublin died, and was buried under the Belfray of the preaching Friers of the same City: which Belfray and Steeple himsele erected, and glazed a window at the head of the Quire, and caused the roofof the Church to be made, with many more good deeds. In the same Coventhe departed I say the sixth day of March: and at his end he made his Will or Testament, amounting to the value of three thousand Marks: and bequeathed many B good Legacies unto the Priests of the Church, both religious and secular, that were within twenty miles about the City.
 mccccii. Sir Robert Savage Knight began in Ulster to build new castles in divers places, and upon his owne Manours: who while he was a building said unto his sonne and heire Sir Henry Savage, let us make strong walls about us, lest happily the Irish come and take away our place, destroy our kinned and people, and so we shall be reproached of all Nations. Then answered his sonne, where ever there shall be valiant men, there is a Castle and Fortresse too, according to that saying, The sonnes encam- ped, that is to say, valiant men are ordained for warre, and therefore will I be among such hardy men, and so shall I be in a castle: and therewith said in his vulgar speech, C A castle of Bones is better than a castle of Stones. Then his father in a fume and chafe gave over his worke, and swore an oath that he would never build with stone and mortar; but keepe a good house, and a very great family and retinue of servants about him: but he prophesied withall, that hereafter his sonnes and posterity should grieve and waile for it: which indeed came to passe; for the Irish destroyed all that country for default of castles.
 mcccciv. And in the thirty yeere of the same King, Sir Thomas Rokesby Knight went out of his office of Justice the fixe and twenty day of July: after whom succeded Moris Fitz-Thomas Earle of Desmund, and continued in the office untill his death.
 Item, on the day of Saint Pauls conversion, the same Lord Moris Fitz-Thomas D died Justice of Ireland in the castle of Dublin, not without great sorrow of his friends and kinsfolke, and no lesse feare and trembling of all other Irish that loved peace.
 First, he was buried in the quire of the preaching Friers of Dublin: and at last entred in the Covent Church of the Friers Preachers of Traly. This man was a righteous Justicer, in that hee stucke not to hang up those of his owne blood for theft and rapine, and misdemeanours, even as soone as strangers: and chastised the Irish very well.
 mccccvi. And in the one and thirty yeere of the foresaid King, Sir Thomas Rokesby was made the second time Justice of Ireland, who tamed the Irish very well, E and paid as well for the victuals he tooke, saying, I will eat and drinke out of Treen vessels, and yet pay both gold and silver for my food and apparel, yea and for my pensioners about me.
 The same yeere died that Sir Thomas Justice of Ireland, within the Castle of Kilka.
 mccccvii. Also in the two and thirty yeere of the same Kings raigne, Sir Alma-rick de Saint Aimund was made chiefe Justice of Ireland, and entred into it.
 At this very time began a great controversie between Master Richard Fitz-Ralfe
 Archbishop of Armagh, and the foure Orders of the begging Friers: but in the end the Friers got the mastery, and by the Popes meanes caused the Archbishop of Ar- F magh to hold his peace.
 mccccviii. In the 33. yeere of the same King Sir Almarick Sir Amund chiefe Justice of Ireland passed over into England.
 mcccclix. In the 34. yeere of the same King, James Boillier Earle of Ormond was made chiefe Justice of Ireland.

Item;

A Item, the Lady Joan Burke Countesse of Kildare departed this life on St. Georges day: and was buried in the Church of the Friers Minors of Kildare, neere unto her husband the Lord Thomas Fitz-John Earle of Kildare.
 mcccclx. And in the 35. of the foresaid King, died Master Richard Fitz-Ralfe Archbishop of Armagh in Hanault, the sixteenth day of December: whose bones were conveyed into Ireland by the reverend father Stephen Bishop of Meib, to be bestowed in S. Nicolas Church at Dundalk, where he was born: But doubted it is whether they were his bones or some other mans.
 Item, Sir Robert Savage, a doughty knight dwelling in Ulster, departed this life:
 B who with a few Englishmen slew of the Irish three thousand neere unto Antrim: but before that he went forth to that battell, he tooke order that there should be given unto every Englishman one good draught or pot of wine or ale, whereof hee had a number of hogheads and barrels full: and the rest he saved against the coming of his friends: he caused also to be killed sheepe, oxen, tame foule crammed fat, wilde foule, and for venison red Deere: that they might bee dressed and made ready for such as returned winners out of the field, whosoever they were. And he was wont to say, a shame it were if guests should come and not finde what to eate and drinke. But when it pleased God to give the English victorie, he invited them all to supper, and they rejoiced with thanksgiving: and himsele said, I give God thanks: For better it
 C is thus to keep it, than to let it run forth upon the ground, as some gave me counsell.
 Buried he was in the covent Church of the preaching Friers of Coulrath, neere to the river of Banne.
 Also, the Earle of Ormond, Lord Justice of Ireland entred England: in whose place Moris Fitz-Thomas Earle of Kildare was made Lord Justice of Ireland, by this Charter and Commission as appeareth: Omnibus ad quos, &c. that is, To all whom these letters shall come unto Greeting: Know ye that we have committed to our sweet and faithfull subiect, Moris Earle of Kildare, the office of our L. Justice of our land of Ireland: and our land of Ireland, with the Castle and all pertences thereto, to keep and governe so long as it shall please us: and to receive at our Exchequer in Dublin D yeerely, so long as hee shall remaine in that office, five hundred pounds: for which he shall keep that office and land, and he shall be himsele one of the twenty men in armes (whom he shall finde) with as many horses armed continually, during our fore-said commission. In witnesse whereof, &c. Given by the hands of our beloved in Christ Frier Thomas Burgey, Prior of the Hospitall of S. John of Jerusalem in Ire- land, our Chancellour of Ireland, at Dublin the thirtieth day of March, and of our reigne the thirty five yeere. Also James Boillier Earle of Ormond came again out of England Lord Justice of Ireland, as before, unto whom the Earle of Kildare resigned up the office of Justiceship.
 mccccxli. Leonell Earle of Ulster in right of his wives inheritance, and being the E Kings sonne of England, came into Ireland as the Kings Lievtenant, and arrived at Dublin the eighth day of September being the feast of the blessed Virgins nativity, bringing his second wife Elizabeth, daughter and heire of the Lord William Burke Earle of Ulster.
 In the same yeere was the second pestilence. There died in England Henry Duke of Lancaster, the Earle of March, the Earle of Northampton.
 Also on the sixth day of January, Mons Doncref a Citizen of Dublin was buried in the Churchyard of the Friers Preachers of the same City: unto which covent or brotherhood he gave forty pounds, toward the glazing of their Church.
 Item, there departed out of this life the Lady Joan Fleming, wife to the Lord Gef- F fery Trevers, and the Lady Margaret Bermingham, wife to the Lord Robert Preston, on the Vigill of St. Margaret, and were buried in the Covent Church of the preaching Friers of Tredagh.
 Also, the Lord Walter Bermingham the younger, died on S. Laurence day, who divided his inheritance between his sisters, the one part thereof the foresaid Preston had for his share.

Item,

" Item, the foresaid Lord Leonell, after hee was entred into Ireland and had rested A
 " some few daies, made warre upon O-Bryne, and proclaimed throughout his army,
 " that no man borne in Ireland should come neere unto his campe : and an hundred of " his owne Pensioners were slaine. Leonell seeing this, forthwith reduced the whole " people as well of England as of Ireland into one, and so hee prospered, and stricke
 " many battailes round about in all places with the Irish, by the helpe of God, and the " people of Ireland. Hee made also many Knights of English and Irish : and among " them Robert Preston, Robert Holmwood, Thomas Talbot, Walter Cusacke, James de La
 " Hyde, John Ash, or de Fraxim, Patricke and Robert Ash, or de Fraxim, and many
 " besides.

" Also, he removed the Exchequer from Dublin to Carlagh, and gave five hundred B " pounds to the walling of that towne.

" Item, on the feast of Saint Maury Abbat, there rose a mighty wind, that shooke and
 " overthrew pinnacles, battlements, chimneys, and other things higher than the rest,
 " trees without number, divers Steeples, and namely, the Steeple of the Preaching " Friars.

" MCCCXLII. Also in the 36. yeere of the same King, the Church of St. Patricke in " Dublin through negligence was set on fire and burnt, the eighth of Aprill.

" MCCCXLIV. And in the 38. yeere of the foresaid King, the Lord Leonel Earle of " Ulster entred England the 22. of Aprill, and left his Deputy-Justice of Ireland, the " Earle of Ormond : and the same Leonell Duke of Clarence returned the eighth of C
 " December.

" MCCCXLV. Also in the 39. yeere of the said King, the same Leonell Duke of Cla" rence passed over into England, leaving behind him Sir Thomas Dale Knight his De" puty-Custos, and Justice of Ireland.

" MCCCXLVII. Great warre began between the Berminghams of Carbury and the men " of Meth, because many robberies by the foresaid were committed in Meth. Then Sir
 " Robert Preston Knight, and Lord chiefe Baron of the Exchequer, set a strong guard in
 " the castle of Carbury, and laid forth a great deale of money against the Kings enemies,
 " to defend his owne right, in regard of his wife.

" Item, Gerald Fitz-Moris Earle of Desmond was made Lord Justice of Ireland. D

" MCCCXLVIII. And in the 42. yeere of the same King, in Carbury, after a certaine
 " Parliament ended betweene the Irish and English, there were taken prisoners Frier
 " Thomas Burley Prior of Kylmaynon, the Kings Chancellour in Ireland, John Fitz-
 " Reicher Sheriffe of Meth, Sir Robert Tirell Baron of Castle-knoke, with many besides,
 " by the Berminghams and others of Carbury. Then James Bermingham, who had been " kept in the castle of Trim in yron manacles and fetters as a traytour, was delivered
 " out of prison, in exchange for the foresaid Chancellour, the other were put to their
 " ranfomes.

" Item, the Church of Saint Maries in Trim was burnt with the fire of the same Mo- E
 " nastery.

" Also in the Vigill of St. Luke the Evangelist, the Lord Leonell Duke of Clarence
 " died at Albe in Pyemont. First he was buried in the City of Papie, hard by St. Au" gustin the Doctor ; and afterward entred at Clare in the covert Church of Austen " Friars in England.

" MCCCXLIX. And in the 43. yeere of the foresaid King, Sir William Windefore
 " Knight, a doughty man in armes and courageous, came as the Kings Lievttenant into " Ireland the twelfth day of July : unto whom gave place in the office of Justice-ship
 " Gerald Fitz-Moris Earle of Desmond.

" MCCCCLXX. And in the 44. yeere of the same King, began the third pestilence, and F
 " the greatest in Ireland, in which died many Noblemen and Gentlemen, Citizens also
 " and children innumerable.

" The same yeere Gerald Fitz-Moris Earle of Desmond, the Lord John Nicolson and
 " the Lord Thomas Fitz-John and many other noble persons were taken prisoners up" on the sixth of July, neere unto the Monastery of Maio, in the county of Limerick by
 " O-Breen

A O-Breen and Mac-Comar of Thomond ; and many were slaine : in regard of which
 " occurrent, the said Lievttenant went over to Limericke to the defence of Mounster,
 " leaving the warres against the O-Tothiles, and the rest in Leinster.

" In this yeere died Lord Robert Terel Baron of castle Knock, the Lady Scolastica
 " his wife, and their sonne and heire : by reason whereof Joan Terel and Maud Terel,
 " sisters of the said Robert, parted the inheritance between themselves.

" Item, there departed this life Lord Simon Fleming Baron of Slane, Lord John Cu-
 " sake Baron of Colmlyn ; and John Tailour sometime Maior of Dublin, a rich and migh" ty monied man.

B That which followeth was copied out of the Manuscript Chronicles of " Henry Marleburgh.

" MCCCXLXII. Sir Robert Asheton came Lord Justice of Ireland.

" MCCCXLXIII. Great warring there was between the English of Meth, and O-Fer-
 " dle, in which warre many of both sides were slaine.

" Item, in May Lord John Huse Baron of Galtrim, John Fitz-Richard Sheriffe of " Meth, and William Dalton, in Kynaleagh were killed by the Irish.

" MCCCXLXV. Thomas Archbishop of Dublin died : and in the same yeere was Ro" bert of Wickford consecrated Archbishop of Dublin.

C MCCCXLXXI. There departed this life Edmund Mortimer the Kings Lievttenant in " Ireland, Earle of March and Ulster, at Cork.

" MCCCXLXXIII. There was a great pestilence in Ireland.

" MCCCXLXXV. The bridge of the city of Dublin fell downe:

" MCCCXCV. Robert Wickford Archbishop of Dublin died.

" The same yeere Robert Waldeby Archbishop of Dublin, of the order of Austen " Friars, was translated.

" MCCCXCVII. There hapned the translation and death of Frier Richard Northale
 " Archbishop of Dublin, one of the Carmelites order.

" Also in the same yeere Thomas Crauley was consecrated Archbishop of Dublin.

D The same yeere the Lord Thomas Burgh, and the Lord Walter Bermingham slew
 " fixe hundred of the Irish, and their captain Mac-Con.

" Item, Roger Earle of March, Lievttenant of Ireland wasted the country of O-Bryn,
 " with the help of the Earle of Ormond, and dubbed there seven Knights, to wit, Chri" stopher Preston, John Bedeleu, Edmund Loundris, John Loundris, William Nugent,
 " Walter dela Hyde, and Robert Cadell, at the forcing and winning of a most strong
 " Manor house of the said O-Bryn.

" MCCCXCVIII. Upon the Ascension day of our Lord, the Tothils slew forty English,
 " among whom John Fitz-William, Thomas Talbot, and Thomas Comyn were kil" led, which was a pitifull mishap.

E In the same yeere on St. Margarets day, Roger Earle of March the Kings Lieve-
 " nant was with many others slaine at Kenlys in Leinster, O-Bryn and other Irish of " Leinster, in whose place and office Roger Grey is chosen Justice.

" In the same yeere upon the feast of S. Marke Pope and Confessor, came to Dublin
 " the noble Duke of Sutherey, as the Kings Lievttenant in Ireland : with whom at the " same time arrived Master Thomas Crauley, Archbishop of Dublin.

" MCCCXCIX. And in the 23. yeere of King Richard, upon Sunday which fell out to " be the morrow after S. Petronill or Pernill the Virgins day, the same glorious King
 " Richard arrived at Waterford with two hundred saile.

F Item, the sixth day of the same weeke, at Ford in Kenlys within the county of Kil-
 " dare, were slaine of the Irish 200. by Jenicho and other English : and the morrow af" ter the Dublinians made a rode in the country of O-Bryn, and slew of the Irish 33.
 " and fourescore men and women with their little children they took prisoners.

" The same yeere, the said King came to Dublin the fourth day before the
 " Calends of July : where hee heard rumours of Henrie the Duke of Lancaster.

R r r

his

his coming into England, whereupon himself passed over with speed into England. A mcccc. In the first yeere of King Henry the fourth, at Whirfontide the Constable of Dublin castle and many others encountred the Scots at sea before Stranford in Ulster: whereupon fell out a lamentable accident, for that many of the English were slaine and drowned there.

mcccci. In the second yeere of King Henry the fourth, Sir John Stanley the K.
 Lievtenant passed over into England in the month of May, leaving in his roome Sir William Stanley.

In the same yeere, upon the Vigill of Saint Bartholomew, there entred into Ireland Stephen Scroop, as deputy to the Lord Thomas of Lancaster, the Kings Lievtenant B in Ireland.

The same yeere, on the day of S. Brice Bishop and Confessor, the Lord Thomas of Lancaster the Kings sonne, arrived at Dublin, Lievtenant of Ireland.

mccccii. On the fifth of July was the Church of the Friers Preachers at Dublin dedicated by the Archbishop of Dublin: and the same day John Drake the Maier of Dublin, with the citizens and men of the countrey, slew in battell of the Irish neere unto Bree 493. and were victorious over the Irish.

The same yeere in the moneth of September, a Parliament was holden at Dublin:
 at which time in Uriel Sir Bartholomew Verdon, James White, Stephen Gernon, and their complices, slew John Dowdal Sheriffe of Louth.

mcccciii. In the fourth yeere of King Henry the fourth, and in the moneth of C May, was killed Sir Walter Beterley a valiant Knight then Sheriffe there, and with him thirty men.

In the same yeere about the feast of S. Martin, there passed over into England Thomas the Kings sonne, leaving Stephen Scroop his Deputy, who also himself upon the first day of Lent returned into England: and then the Lords of the land chose the Earle of Ormond Lord Justice of Ireland.

mcccciv. In the fifth yeere of King Henry died John Cowlton Archbishop of Armagh the fifth of May, whom Nicholas Fleming succeeded. The same yeere on
 S. Vitalis day began a Parliament at Dublin, before the Earle of Ormond then Lord D
 Justice of Ireland: wherein were confirmed the Statutes of Kilkenny and of Dublin: also the charter of Ireland.

In the same yeere Patrick Savage in Ulster was treacherously slaine by Mac-Kilmori, and Richard his brother given for an hostage, who likewise was murdered in prison, after he had payed two hundred Marks.

mccccv. In the sixth yeere of King Henry, and in the month of May, were taken three Scottish Galions or Barkes, two at Green-castle, and one at Dalkey, with the captaine Thomas Mac-Golagh.

The same yeere the merchants of Tredaght entred Scotland, tooke pledges and preies.

The same yeere Stephen Scroope crossed the seas into England, leaving the Earle of Ormond Lord Justice of Ireland.

And the same yeere, in the month of June the Dublinians entred Scotland at Saint Ninians, and there behaved themselves manfully: then landed they in Wales, and did much hurt to the Welshmen there; yea and carried away the Shrine of S. Cubie unto the Church of the holy Trinitie in Dublin.

Also, the same yeere on the Vigill of the blessed Virgin, died James Botiller Earle of Ormond, whiles he was Lord Justice (to the griefe of many) at Baligauran; unto whom there succeeded in the office of Lord Justice, Gerald Earle of Kildare.

mccccvi. And in the seventh yeere of King Henry, on Corpus Christi day the Dub- F linians with the people of the Countrey about them, manfully overcame the Irish, and killed some of them: they tooke three ensignes, and carried away divers of their heads to Dublin.

The same yeere, the Prior of Conall fought valiantly in the plaine of Kildare, and vanquished two hundred Irish well armed, killing some, and putting others to

A to flight: there were in the Priors company not above twenty English: and thus God regardeth those that repose trust in him.

In the same yeere, after the feast of S. Michael, Sir Stephen Scroop Deputy Justice under the Lord Thomas the Kings sonne Lievtenant of Ireland, entred into Ireland.

The same yeere died Pope Innocentius the seventh, after whom succeeded Pope Gregory.

The same yeere beganne a Parliament at Dublin on Saint Hilaries day, which ended at Trym in Lent: and Meiler Bermingham slew Cathol O-Conghir in the end of February, and Sir Gesserey Vaulx a noble Knight in the countie of Carlagh B died.

mccccvii. A certaine Irishman, a most false villaine, named Mac-Adam Mac-Gilmori (who caused fortie Churches to be destroyed) one that was never christened, and therefore termed Corbi, tooke Patrick Savage prisoner, and received of him for his ranfome two thousand Marks, and yet killed him afterwards with his brother Richard.

The same yeere, in the feast of the exaltation of the Holy Crosse, Stephen Scroop, Deputy under Thomas the Kings sonne Lievtenant of Ireland, accompanied with the Earles of Ormond and Desmond, and the Prior of Kylmaynon, with many out of Meth, set forth from Dublin: and in hostile manner invaded the land of Mac-Murgh: where the Irish had the better of the field in the forepart of the day; but af-C terwards they were manfully by the said Captaines repulsed: where O-Nolam with his sonne and others were taken prisoners. But hearing then and there, that the Burkeins and O-Keroll in the countie of Kilkenny had for two daies together done much mischief, sodainly the said Captaines rode in all haste with bridle on horse necke unto the towne of Callan, and there meeting with the said enemies, manfully put them to flight. O-Keroll, and to the number of eight hundred they killed in the place.

The same yeere Stephen Scroop sailed over into England, and James Butler Earle of Ormond was by the country chosen Lord Justice of Ireland.

D mccccviii. The said L. Justice held a Parliament at Dublin, in which Parliament were confirmed the Statutes of Kilkenny and of Dublin: and a Charter granted under the great seale of England against Purveyours.

The same yeere, the morrow after S. Peters day ad Vincula, the Lord Thomas of Lancaster the Kings sonne arrived as Lievtenant of Ireland at Carrington, and in the weeke following came to Dublin: and arrested the Earle of Kildare as he came unto him, with three of his house and all his goods he lost by the servants of the said Lievtenant: and in the castle of Dublin he imprisoned him, untill he made payment of 300.
 Marks for a fine.

The same yeere on Saint Marcellus day died the Lord Stephen Scroop at Tristel-E Dermot.

The same yeere the said Thomas of Lancaster was wounded at Kylmainon, and hardly escaped death: and afterwards caused Proclamation to be made, that whofo-ever by his renures owed service to the King should appeare at Rosse: And after Saint Hilaries feast he held a Parliament at Kilkenny, for to have a tallage granted. And afterwards upon the third day before the Ides of March, he passed over into England, leaving the Prior of Kylmainon his Deputy in Ireland.

In this yeere Hugh Mac-Gilmory was slaine at Cragfergus, within the Oratory or Church of the Friers Minors: which Church he before had destroyed, and broken the glasse windowes thereof, for to have the iron-barres therein: at which his ene-F mies, to wit, the Savages, entred.

mccccix. In the tenth yeere of King Henry, and in the month of June, Janico of Artoys with the English slew fourescore of the Irish in Ulster.

mccccx. On the thirteenth day of June began a Parliament at Dublin, and continued three weeks, the Prior of Kylmainon sitting as Lord Justice.

The same yeere, on the tenth day of July, the same Justice beganne the castle of Rrrr z Mibracly

* Mibracly in O-Feroll, and built De la Mare: and a great dearth there was of corne. A
 * In the same yeere the Justice entred the land of O-brin with a thousand and five * hundred kernes, of whom eight hundred departed unto the Irish: and had not the
 * Dublinians beene there, there would have beene wailing and many a woe; and yet,
 * John Derparrick lost his life there.
 * MCCCCXII. About the feast of Tiburce and Valerian, O-Conghir did much harm * to the Irish in Meth, and tooke prisoner 160. men.
 * The same yeere O-Doles a knight, and Thomas Fitz-Moris Sheriffe of Limerik,
 * killed one another.
 * In the same yeere, the ninth of June, died Robert Moneyn Bishop of Meth, after B
 * whom succeeded Edward Dandisey sometime Archdeacon of Cornwall.
 * MCCCCXIII. The seventh of October there landed in Ireland at Cloncarfe, John
 * Stanley the Kings Lievtenant in Ireland, who died the sixth of January in Aterub.
 * The same yeere, after the death of John Stanley Lord Lievtenant, Thomas Cranley
 * Archbishop of Dublin was chosen on the eleventh day of February Lord Justice of * Ireland. A Parliament effoons began at Dublin the morrow after Saint Matthias the * Apostles day, and lasted fiftene daies: during which time the Irish fell to burning in * divers places, as they had done often in Parliament times; wherefore a tallage was
 * demanded, but not granted.
 * MCCCCXIII. The English slew of the Irish the O-Mordries and O-Dempfies C
 * neer to Kilka, even whiles the Justice of Ireland Thomas Cranley Archbishop of Dub* lin went in Procession at Trisfeldermot, praying with his Clerks: and his servants with * their countreine overthrew of the Irish an hundred.
 * Upon the feast day of Saint Gordian and Saint Epimachus a foile or discomfiture
 * was given to the English of Meth, and there was slaine Thomas Maureward Baron of
 * Scrin: and taken prisoners there were Christopher Fleming, John Dardis, and many o* thers slaine by O-Conghir and the Irish.
 * In the vigill of Saint Martin arrived the Lord John Talbot Lord Furnivall, as
 * Lievtenant of Ireland, at Dalkay.
 * MCCCCXV. In the moneth of November died Robert Talbot a Nobleman, who D
 * walled the Suburbs of Kilkenny.
 * Item, after the feast of All-Saints died Frier Patricke Baret Bishop of Fernae, and a
 * Canon of Kenlis, where he was buried.
 * MCCCCXVI. On the feast day of Gervasse and Prothasius the Lord Furnivall had
 * a sonne borne at Finglas. About this time the reverend Lord Stephen Fleming * Archbishop of Armagh departed this life: unto whom succeeded John Swanig. And
 * at the same time the Lord Bishop of Ardachard, Frier Adam Lyns of the order of
 * preaching Friars.
 * Item, on Saint Laurence day died Thomas Talbot Lord of Furnivall, lately borne
 * at Finglas, &c. is interred in the quire of the preaching Friars Church of Dublin, with* in the Covent of the said Preachers. A Parliament was holden at Dublin, in the time E
 * whereof the Irish fell upon the English and slew many of them, among whom Tho* mas Balimore of Baliquelan was slaine.
 * This Parliament lasted in that place fixe weekes, and then was removed to Trym
 * the eleventh day of May, and there it continued eleven daies: and granted there was
 * unto the Lievtenant a subsidy of foure hundred Markes.
 * MCCCCXVII. On the Eve of Philip and Jacob Apostles, Thomas Cranley Arch* bishop of Dublin passed over into England, and died at Farindon: he was buried * in the New Colledge at Oxford: a liberall man he had beene, and an almes-giver,
 * a great Clerke, a Doctor in Divinity, and excellent Preacher, a builder of the places F
 * whereto he dwelt, beautifull, sumptuous, of sanguine complexion, and tall of stature:
 * so that in his time it might well be said unto him, Faire art thou, and of a goodly pre* sence above the sons of men, grace is seated all over thy lips for the eloquence of thy * tongue. Fourescore yeeres old he was, and for the space almost of twenty yeeres he * governed the Church of Dublin peaceably.

MCCCCXVIII.

A MCCCCXVIII. The feast of the Annuntiation of our Lady fell out to be on good Friday, and straight after Easter the Lord Deputy spoiled the tenants of Henry Crus and Henry Bethar.
 Item, at Slane on the day of S. John and S. Paul, were arrested the Earle of Kildare, Sir Christopher Preston, and Sir John Bedleu, and committed to ward within the castle of Trym, because they were desirous to common with the Prior of Kilmalmon.
 The fourth of August died Sir Matthew Hufee Baron of Galtrim, who lieth buried at the Preaching Friars in Trim.
 MCCCCXIX. The eleventh of May, Edmund Brel sometime Maior of Dublin departed this life, and was buried at the Friars preachers of the same Citie. A Counsell B royall was holden at Naas: and there a subsidy of 300. Markes was granted to the Lord Lievtenant.
 At the same time died Sir John Loundres. On the fifth day of the week, falling out to be Maunday Thursday, O-Thoill tooke 400. kine that belonged to Balimore, so breaking the peace against his oath.
 The fourth of May Mac-Morthe chiefe Captaine of his owne Sept, and of all the Irish in Leinster, was taken prisoner. And the same day Hugh Cokesey was made knight.
 The last day of May, the Lievtenant, the Archbishop of Dublin, and the Maior to-
 C gether rased the castle of Kenini.
 The morrow after the feast of Processus and Martinian, the Lord William Burgh, and other of the English slew 500. of the Irish, and tooke O-Kelly prisoner.
 On the feast of Mary Magdalen, the Lievtenant John Talbot passed over into England, leaving for his Deputy the Archbishop of Dublin: carrying with him the curies of divers, for that he paid a little or nothing for his victuals, and was indebted unto many.
 About the feast of Saint Laurence, divers there were that died in Normandy, and by name, Frier Thomas Botiller Prior of Kilmalmon, with many others.
 D After whom succeeded in the Priory Frier John Fitz-Henry. The Archbishop being Deputy fell upon the Scohties, and slew of the Irish thirty neere unto Rodi-fton.
 Item, upon the Ides of February died Frier John Fitz-Henry Prior of Kilmalmon: whom succeeded Frier William Fitz-Thomas, elected and confirmed the morrow after S. Valentines day.
 Also the morrow after the feast of Saint Peter in Cathedra, the Lord John Talbot Lord of Furnivall yeilded the place into the hands of the Lord Richard Talbot Archbishop of Dublin, who afterward was chosen Lord Justice of Ireland.
 MCCCCXX. Upon the fourth day of April, the Lord James Butler Earle of Ormond
 E arrived at Waterford, Lievtenant of Ireland, and quickly caused a combat to bee fought between two of his cousins: of whom the one died in the field, and the other was carried forth of the place sore hurt and lamed unto Kilkenny. On St. Georges feast day, the same Lievtenant held a Counsell at Dublin, and summoned a Parliament there. And in the meane while he raised great booties from O-Raly, Mac-Mahon, and Mac-Guyr: And the eighth day of June began a Parliament at Dublin, and there were granted unto the Lievtenant 700. Markes: and that Parliament continued for 16. dayes: and the same was prorogued unto the munday after St. Andrewes day:
 also in the foresaid Parliament were cast up the debts of the Lord John Talbot late Lievtenant, which arose to a great summe.
 F Also the morrow after St. Michaels day died Michael Bodley.
 On the Vigill of Saint Francis, there departed this life Frier Nicholas Talbot, Abbot of St. Thomas the Martyr in Dublin. After whom succeeded Frier John Whiting.
 The morrow after the Apostles Simon and Jude day, was the castle of Colnolintaken by Thomas Fitz-Geffery.

Rrrr 3

Also

* Also in the Vigill of S. Katherine Virgin, Botiller the sonne and heire of the Earle A of Ormund was borne.

* Item, on munday after the feast of S. Andrew the Apostle, the said Parliament began at Dublin, and continued 13. daies: and granted there was to the Lievtenant there 300. markes: and the Parliament was adjourned effoones unto the munday after St. Ambrose day.

* Then rumours refounded, that the Lord Thomas Fitz-John Earle of Desmond died at Paris on St. Laurence feast day, and was buried there at the Friers Preachers convent, the King of England being present at his funerals. After whom succeeded in that Seigniorie James Fitz-Gerald his Unkle by the fathers side, who had three B times thrust him out of his patrimonie: and laid an imputation upon him that he was a prodigall spend-thrift, and had wasted his patrimony both in Ireland and England, and that he gave or would givelands to the Abbey of St. James at Kernisham. 1421.

* The Parliament began upon prorogation the third time at Dublin the munday after the feast of S. Ambrose: and there certain persons were ordained to be sent in message to the King, as touching the redresse of the land, namely, the Archbishop of Armagh, and Sir Christopher Preston Knight.

* At the same time Richard O-Hedian Bishop of Caffell was accused by John Gefe Bishop of Lismore and Waterford, upon thirtie Articles laid to his charge. After all that, hee charged him that hee made very much of the Irish, and loved none of the English: that hee bestowed no benefice upon any Englishman, and gave order like- C wise unto other Bishops, that they should not conferre the least living that was upon them.

* Item, that hee counterfeited the King of Englands seale, and the Kings letters patents, that he went about to make himselfe King of Mounster: also that he tooke a ring away from the image of S. Patrick, which the Earle of Desmond had offered, and bestowed it upon an harlot of his: beside many other enormities, which he exhibited in writing. And the Lords and Commons were much troubled betwene these twaine.

* Now in the same Parliament, there was debate between Adam Pay Bishop of Clon D and another Prelate: for that the said Adam went about to unite the others Church unto his, but the other would not: and so they were sent and referred unto the Court of Rome, and this Parliament lasted 18. daies.

* In the Nones of May there was a slaughter committed by O-Mordris upon the family or retinue of the Earle of Ormund, Lievtenant, neere unto the Monastery of Leys, where were slaine of the English 27. The principall parties were Purcell and Grant. Then Gentlemen of good birth were taken prisoners, and 200. fled unto the foresaid Monastery, and so were saved.

* In the Ides of May died Sir John Bodley Knight, and Geffery Galon sometime Maier of Dublin, and was buried in the house of the preaching Friers of the same E City.

* About this time Mac-Mahon an Irishman played the divell in Urgal, wasting and burning where ever he went.

* The seventh of June the Lievtenant entred into the country, to wit, of Leys against O-Mordris, and led thither a most puissant army, having the killing of his enemies for four daies together, and untill the Irish promised all peace and quietnesse.

* Upon the feast of Michael the Archangel, Thomas Stanley, accompanied with all the Knights and Squires of Meth and Iriel, took Moyle O-Downyll prisoner, and slew others, in the 14. yeere of King Henry the sixth his reigne.

Thus far forth were continued the Annales of Ireland which came to my hands, and upon which I have bestowed these few pages,

A pages, to gratifie them that may delight therein. As for the nice and dainty readers, who would have all writings tried to the touch of Augustus his daies, I know they can yeeld no pleasing relish to them, in regard of the harsh words, and the saplesse dry stile, familiar unto that age wherein they were penned. Nevertheless, I would have those to remember, That HISTORIE B both beareth, brooketh, and requireth the Authors of all ages: Also, That they are to look as well for reall and substantiall knowledge from some, as for the verball and literal learning from others.

THE SMALLER ISLANDS IN THE BRITISH OCEAN.

Now will I at length waigh anchor and set saile out of Ireland, and lanching forth take survey of the Islands scattered here and there along the coasts of Britaine. If I durst repose any trust in my selfe, or if I were of any sufficiencie, I would shape my course to every one. But sith it is my purpose to discover and lighten Antiquity, such as are obscure and of lesse account I will lightly coast by: and those that carry any ancient name and reckoning above the rest, I will enter and visite, yea and make some short stay in them, that now at last in a good and happy houre they may recover their ancient againe.

E And that in this voiage I may at first set out orderly, and take a straight and direct course, I will, to begin, saile out of Ireland into the Severn sea, and by the Irish sea (after I have doubled the utmost point of Scotland) follow my course down into the German Ocean, and so from thence through the British sea (which extendeth as far as to Spaine) hold on my race as prosperously as I can. But I am afraid lest this my ship of Antiquity, steered by me so unskilfull a Pilot, either run and be split upon the rockes of errors, or else be overwhelmed with the waves of ignorance, yet venter I must. To wit, saith Antiphilus, νῆς ἀπὸρῶς, that is, Adventure is a good sea Caprain: and he that sailerh the same voiage a second time, may haply speed much better, and finish his desired course.

First and formost, because it seemeth not impertinent to my matter, I will set down what Plutarch, out of a fabulous narration of Demetrius (who seemeth to have lived in Hadrians time) reporteth generally as touching the Islands lying neer to Britain. Demetrius made report, that most of those Islands which coast upon Britain, lie desert, desolate and scattering here and there; whereof some were dedicated to the Dæmones, and Heroes: also that himself by commission from the Emperour, sailed toward one that was neere of those desert Isles, for to know and discover somewhat: the which he found to have in it few inhabitants, and those he understood were reputed by the Britans sacred and inviolable. Within a while after he was landed there, the aire and weather (as he said) be- came came foully troubled, many portentous signes were given by terrible tempests, with extraordinary stormes, flashing and violent lightnings and fiery impressions: which after they were appeased, the Islanders certified him that some one of great eminency was dead. And a little after: Now he said moreover, that there was a certain Island there, wherein Saturn was by Briareus closed up and kept in prison sound asleep (for sleep was the means to hold him captive) about whose person there were many Damones at his feet, that stood attending as servants. Thus they took pleasure in old time, as now also at this day, boldly to devise strange wonders and tales of places far remote, in a certain secure vein of lying, as it were by authority.

In the narrow sea of Severn there peep up first of all two small Islands, whereof the one, because it lieth flat and with an even ground, is by us called Flatholme, in the same sense that Planarie is named Italy: the other Steep-holme, because it riseth steep, in the British tongue Reoric: both of them, when the Britans bare rule, were tearmed Echni, like as in our age Holmes, for so the Anglo-Saxons called greene plaines enclosed within water: neither were they in ancient times famous for any thing else, but for that the Danes lay there at road: and for the tomb of one Gualchus, a Britan of singular devoutnesse, whose Disciple Barruch left his name to the Island Barry in Wales (as an ancient monument of the Church of Landaff witnesseth) which Island in like manner hath given name to a noble house of the Barraies in Ireland.

This hath lying hard to it the little Island Silly, upon the coast of the ancient Silures, of whose name it seemeth to retaine still more than a shadow, like as a small town over against it in Glanorganshire: yet dare I not avouch it to be Silura, or Insula Silurum, the Island that Solinus mentioneth, seeing there be other Islands bearing the same name; yet farre distant from the Silures.

From thence we come to Caldey, in the British Imis-Pix, lying neer unto the shore; and to Londoy farther within the sea, over against Caldey, &c. belonging unto Devonshire, from the promontory or cape whereof, named Hert-nesse, it lieth 14. miles. Larger this is counted of the twaine, howbeit reported to be not much more than two miles long, and one mile broad, so encircled with rocks and cliffes round about, that there is no avenue unto it but in one or two places. A fort or fonce it had: the ruins whereof, like as of S. Helens Chappell, are yet to be scene. That it had beene in time past cared with the plough, the ridges and furrowes in it doe evidently shew: now all the commodity and profit that it yeeldeth doth arise from sea-fowle, whereof it hath great store. Trees it hath none but stinking Elders, which the Stares haunt in such multitudes, that uneth for their dung there is any coming unto them. But what meane I to stand hereupon? considering that Sir Thomas Delamere Knight (in reporting how that silly king Edward the second, when his froward and unreasonable wife, together with the unruly Barons thundred out threats, and denounced terrible menaces, was minded to withdraw himselfe hither, as to a place of refuge) hath in old time described it in this wise. Londoy (saith he) is an Island lying in the mouth of Severn two miles long over way, full of pleasant pastures: it affoordeth Connies in great store: doves and stares (which Alexander Necham tearmeth Ganimedes birds) it hath continually from time to time ready to lay: it serveth the inhabitants besides, with fresh water, warming abundantly out of springs, though it selfe be on all sides compassed with the sea. One way of entrance it hath into it, wherein two men can hardly goe afront together on foot: on every part besides the dreadfull rocks bearing out a mighty beight, hinder all ingresse. But scarcely doe our Historians make any mention of it, save only how William de Marisco, a most lewd and mischievous rover in the reign of king Henry the third, from hence fore infested these coasts in times past: and that in King Edward the third his daies it was part of the Lutterels inheritance.

From thence in the very bent and turning of Pembrochshire, we meet with Gresholme, Stockholme, and Scalmey, in which is plentie of grasse, and wild thyme groweth very fresh and pleasant. The day was when I thought Scalmey to have been that SILIMNUS, which Plinie in old time wrote of: but the truth hath now made me change my opinion. For that SILIMNUS of Plinie (as the affinity of the word implieth)

Gresholme, Stockholme,
and Scalmey.
Silimnus.

A implieth, seemes to be Ptolomee his LIMNI. That this here is the Britans Lymen, the word it selfe (if I should say nothing) sheweth evidently, which the Englishmen by a new name have now a daies termed Ramsey. This lieth full against the Episcopall Sea of Saint David, whereunto it belongeth, and was in the foregoing ages very famous for the death of one Justinian a most holy man; who after he had withdrawn himselfe hither out of little Britaine in France, in that age that brought forth so many Saints, and led a long time an *Eremit*s life, wholly devoted to the service of God, being in the end slaine by a pike, was registred in the roll of Martyrs. In whose life we finde it oftentimes written, Lemencia Insula. Which denomination B verily, together with the British name Limen, by which name it is knowne unto the Britans themselves, checketh and taxeth his drowinesse who maketh this Island lying next above it to be Ptolomees Limnon: which the Britans now name Enhly, and English Berdsey, as one would say the Isle of Birds. But that this should be it that Ptolomee calleth EDRI, and Plinie ANDROS or ADROS (as it is in some place read) I durst more boldly ghesse by the signification of the word: for Ader in the British tongue signifieth a Bird, and in the very same sense the Englishmen afterward called it Berdsey. As for Enhly, it is a name of a later stampe, and came by occasion of a certain holy and devout man, who here lived as an Eremit.

For this Island, which toward the East mounteth aloft with an high promontory, C but Westward lieth plaine, and is of a fertile mould, harboured in old time so many holy men, that beside Dubriuh and Merlin the Caledonian, ancient histories record there were twenty thousand Saints buried here. Next unto this lieth MONA, that is, Anglesey, which the Britans also name Mon, Tir-Mon, and Tnu Donyll, that is, A darke or shady Island, the Saxons Donegey, whereof I have treated already in the page 671.

To Mone or Anglesey there adjoine three smaller Islands, Moyl-Rhoniad, that is, The Isle of Seales, upon the North-west; which after it had beene withheld by certain that unjustly seized upon it, from the Bishops of Bangor, unto whom it belonged, Henry Deney Bishop of Bangor (as we read in the history of Canterbury) with a fleet manned with souldiers in King Henry the seventh his time, recovered. Eastward lieth Tnu Ligod, that is, The Isle of mice: and more beneath, Prest-home, that is, The Isle of Priests: and nothing saw we in it but the tower steeple of Saint Cyriades chappell, which sheweth it selfe to the beholders afarre off. Incredible it is what the neighbours report of the infinite multitude of sea fowle that here doe breed: as also what they tell of a causy or banke which went from hence through the sea to the foot of that huge mountaine Pen-Maen-Maur, for their use who of devotion went on pilgrimage to visit this place, held in times past so holy and religious. I passe over Lambey a little Island opposite unto this toward the coast of Ireland, although our Metall-men have to their great charges fought there of late for Alum.

E More Northward lieth that Mona whereof Cesar maketh mention, in the mids of the cur, as he saith, betweene Britaine and Ireland.

Ptolomee termeth it MONEDA, as one would say Mon-eiha, that is, if I may be allowed to conjecture, The more remote Mona, to put a difference betwene it and the other Mona, that is, Anglesey: Plinie MONABIA, Orosius MENAVIA, and Bede Menavia secunda, that is, the second Menavia, where he termeth Mona or Anglesey, Menavia prior, that is, the former Menavia, and calleth them both, Islands of the Britans: in which writers notwithstanding it is read amisse Mevania: Ninius who also goeth abroad under the name of Gildas, nameth it Eubonia and Manaw; the Britans Menow, the inhabitants Maning, and we Englishmen, The Isle of Man: stretched out just in the mid levell (as saith Girald Cambrensis) betweene the Northren coasts of Ireland and Britaine; about which Isle, and namely to whether of the two countries it ought of right to appertaine, there arose no small doubt among those in ancient times. At length the controversie was taken up in this manner. For as much as this land fostered venomous wormes brought over hither for triall, adjudged it was was by a common censure and doome to lye unto Britain. Howbeit the inhabitants A both in language and manners come nighest unto the Irish, yet so as they therewith favour somewhat of the qualities of the Norwegians.

It lieth out in length from North to South much about thirty Italian miles: but reacheth in bredth where it is widest, scarce above fifteen miles, and where it is narrowest eight. In Bedes dayes it contained in it three hundred families, like as Anglesey 96. but now it numbeth seventeen Parish Churches. Flaxe and hempe it beareth abundantly: it hath fresh pastures, and fields by good manuring plenteous of Barley, and Wheat, but of Oates especially: whence it is that the people there eat most of all Oaten bread. Store of cattell every where, and mighty flockes of B sheepe: but both their sheepe and other cattell also bee smaller of body there, like as in Ireland neighbouring upon it, than in England, and nothing so faire headed. And considering it hath few or no woods at all, they use for fewell a kind of clammy turfe, which as they are digging out of the earth, they light many times upon trees buried under the ground.

In the middest it riseth up with hills standing thick, the highest whereof is Scaefull, from whence a man may see on a cleere and faire day, Scotland, England and Ireland. Their chiefe towne they count Rusfin, situate on the South-side, which of a castle wherein lieth a Garison, is commonly called Castle-Towne: where, within a little C land Pope Gregory the fourteenth instituted an Episcopall See: the Bishop where of named Sodorenfis (of this very Iland as it is thought) had jurisdiction in times past over all the Ilands, West Irish Iles or Hebrides, but exerciseth it now onely upon that Iland, and is himselfe under the Archbishop of Torke. Howbeit, he hath no place nor voice in the assembly of the States of England in Court of Parliament. Daglasfe is the best peopled towne, and of greatest resort; because the haven is commodious, and hath a most easie entrance: unto which the Frenchmen and other forrainers use to repaire with their bay-salt, having trafficke with the Ilanders, and buying of them againe, leather, course wooll, and poudred beefe.

But on the South side of the Ile stand Bala-Curi (where the Bishop for the most part is resident) and the Pyle, a Block-house standing in a little Iland; where also there D are fouldiers in garison. Also before the very South point there lyeth a pretty Iland, called the Calfe of Man, wherein are exceeding great store of sea-foule called Puffins, and of those ducks and drakes which (breeding of rotten-wood, as they say) the Englishmen call Bernacles, the Scots Clakes and Soland geese.

That which here followeth I will set downe out of a letter, which that learned and reverend father in God John Meryk Bishop of this Ile wrote unto me. This Iland, for castell, for fish, yea and for corne, rather through mens industry than by any goodnesse of the ground, hath not only sufficient for it selfe, but also good store to send into other countries. Yet happier it was for the government thereof, as being defended from neighbour enemies by souldiers prest and ready, at the expences of the Earle of Darby, upon which E he employed the greatest part of his yeerely revenue in this Isle. All controversies are decided without writings or any charges, by certaine Judges, whom they chuse from among themselves, and call Deemsters. For the Magistrate taketh up a stone, and when he hath given it his mark, delivereth it unto the plainiffe, who by vertue thereof cueth his adversary and winnesse: if there fall out any doubifull case & of greater importance, it is referred to twelve men, whom they terme, The Keyes of the Iland. It hath certaine Coroners, and those they call Annos, who stand in stead of Sheriffes, and execute their office. The Ecclesiasticall Judge doth cite persons and determine causes, within eight dayes they stand to his award, or they are clapt up in prison.

They had, as I have heard say, as a peculiar language of their own, so also their peculiar lawes, which are signes of a peculiar seigniory. Their Ecclesiasticall lawes, next after this Canon Law, come neereft unto the Civill. Upon any Judge or Clerks of the Court for making of Proceffe or drawing Instruments, the people never bestow so much as one penny. As for that which English Writers report of mischiefs done by witchcraft and sorcery, it is meer false. They that are of the wealthier sort and hold faire possessions, and for their good

A good housekeeping, and honest carriage, are conformable to imitate the people of Lancaster. The women whithersoever they go out of their doores, gird themselves about (as mindfull of their mortality) with the winding sheet that they purpose to be buried in. Such of them as are by law condemned to die, are sewed within a sack, & slung from a rock into the sea. They are all of them in this Isle as far from the customary practice of theiving or begging from doore to doore, as may be: wonderfull religious, and most ready every one to entertain the forme of the English Church. The disorders, as well Civill as Ecclesiasticall, of their neighbour nations they desest: and whereas the whole Isle is divided into two parts, South and North; this in common speech resembleth the Scottish, the other the Irish.

B Haply it were worth my labour, if I should here insert a little History of this Iland, which truth of due demandeth at my hands, that so I may keepe alive and in remembrance still, the Acts heretofore achieved: which if they bee not buried, yet are waxen old, and have as it were one foot in the grave of oblivion. That the Britans held this Iland, as they did all Britaine, it is confessed by all. But when the Nations from the North, like violent tempests, overflowed these South parts, it became subiect to the Scots. For under the Emperours Honorius and Arcadius (as wee read in Orosius) it was inhabited as well as Ireland by the Scottish Nations: and Ninnius hath written that one Biule a Scot was Lord of it. But (as the same writer recordeth) the Scots were driven out of all the British countries and Ilands by Cunedu, Grandfather of Maglocunus, whom Gildas (for the foule work that he made in these Ilands) termed the Dragon of the Iles. After this, Edwin King of Northumberland brought this Iland, like as the foresaid Anglesey, under the subjection of the English, if we understand them both by the name of Menavia, as writers perswade us: at which time it was reckoned an Iland of the Britans. But when the North had sent abroad his brood the second time, I meane the Normans, Danes, and Norwegians: these Norwegians, who with their manifold robberies and roveries did most hurt from the Northren sea, tooke up their haunt into this Iland and the Hebrides, and therein created Lords and Petty Kings, whose briefe history I will here put downe word for word out of an old Manuscript, lest it should be utterly lost, which is intituled, The Chronicle of Man, seeming to have been written by the Monks of the Abbey of Rusfin, which was the principall place of religion in this Isle.

A CHRONICLE OF THE KINGS OF MAN.

E

Nno Domini M.LXV. Edward of blessed memory King of England departed this life: after whom succeeded in the kingdome Harald the son of Godwin; against whom Harald Harfager King of Norway came into the field, and fought a battell at Stainford-bridge; and the English obtaining the victory, put them all to flight: out of which chace Godred surnamed Crovan, the son of Harald the black of Iseland, came unto Godred the sonne of Syrrie, who then reigned in Man, and by him was honourably received.

The same yeere, William the BASTARD conquered England: and Godred the F sonne of Syrrie died, after whom succeeded his sonne Fingal.

M.LXVI. Godred Crovan assembled a great fleet and came to Man, fought with the people of the land, but was overcome and put to rout. A second time hee rallied his forces and his fleet, failed into Man, joined battell with the Manksmen, was vanquished and driven out of the field. A third time he gathered a great multitude together, and by night arrived in the haven called Ramsa, and hid three hundred men within

" within a wood, which stood upon the hanging hollow brow of an hill called Seacafel. A
 " Now when the funne was risen, the Mankmen put their people in order of battell,
 " and with a violent charge encountred with Godred. And when the fight was hot,
 " those three hundred men starting out of the ambush behind their backs, began to
 " foile the Mankmen and put them to the worst, yea and forced them to flye. Now
 " when they saw themselves discomfited, and no place for them of refuge to escape,
 " (for the sea water comming in with the tide had filled the channell of Ramsa river,
 " and the enemies on the other side followed the chace hard) they that then remained
 " alive tooke up a pitifull cry, and besought Godred to save their lives. And he moved " with compassion, pitying their wofull calamity (as who for a certain time had bene " nursed and brought up among them) founded the retrain, and forbad his host to " pursue them any longer.

" Godred the morrow after proposed this choice unto his owne army, whether they " would rather divide Man among themselves, and therein dwell, or only take the sub" stance and pillage of the countrey, and so returne unto their owne homes? But they " chose rather to waite and spoile the whole Iland, and with the goods thereof to enrich " themselves, and so returne home. But Godred himselfe, with those few Ilanders that " remained with him, inhabited the South part of the Iland, and granted to the re-
 " maines of the Mankmen the North part, with this covenant and condition, That " none of them should at any time venture and presume to challenge any part of the " land by right of inheritance. Whereby it came to passe that even unto this day the " whole Ile is the Kings domain alone, and all the revenues thereof belonging unto the " crown. Godred then reduced Dublin, and a great part of Leymishir under his subjection.
 " As for the Western Scottish, he so over-awed them, as that no man who built ship or " cog-boat durst drive into it above three nailes. Now he reigned 16. yeeres, and died " in the Iland that is called Re. He left behind him verily three sons, Lagman, Harald, " and Olave.

" Lagman the eldest taking upon him the kingdome, reigned seven yeeres. And Har-
 " ald his brother a great while rebelled against him; but at length being taken priso" ner by Lagman, he had his members of generation cut off, and his eyes plucked out " of his head. After this Lagman repenting himselfe that he had pulled out his brothers " eyes, gave over the kingdome of his owne accord, and wearing the badge of the " Lords Croffe, took a journey to Jerusalem, in which he died.

" MLXXV. All the Nobles and Lords of the Islands, hearing of the death of Lagman, " dispatched their Embassadors to Murecard O'Brien King of Ireland, requesting that " hee would send some industrious and worthy man of the blood royall to be their " King, untill Olave, Godreds sonne, came to full age. The King very willingly yeelded " to their requests, and sent unto them one Dopnald the sonne of Tade, warning and " charging him to govern the kingdome (which by right belonged unto another) with " all gentleness and modesty. But he after he was come to the Crowne, not weighing " of the charge that his Lord and M. gave him, abused his place, and lorded with great
 " tyranny, and so committing many outrages and villanies, reigned cruelly three yeeres.
 " Then all the Princes of the Islands agreed together in one conspiracy, rose up against " him, and expelled him out of their coasts. Who fled into Ireland, and never looked " them in the face after.

" MLXXVII. One Ingemund was sent from the King of Norway, to take upon him the " dominion of the Islands: and when he was come to the Isle Leodun, he sent messengers
 " to all the Nobles of the Islands, with a commandement that they should meet toge" ther and ordain him their King: Mean while, himselfe with his companions did no" thing else but rob, spoile, make good cheere and banquet, dishonour and abuse marri" ed wives, deflowre young maidens, yea and give himselfe over to filthy pleasures and " fleshly lusts. But when tidings hereof came to the Nobles of the Islands, now assem" bled to make him King, they were set on fire with furious wrath, and sped themselves
 " in all hast toward him: and surprising him in the night, burnt the house wherein hee
 " was, and with fire and sword made a quick dispatch of him and his company.

MXXVIII.

" ANOTHER. The Abbey of S. Mary at Cisterium or Cisteaux was founded. Anti" och was won by the Christians: and a Comet or blazing star appeared. The same
 " yeeere there was a field fought between those of the Isle of Man, and Sienswa: and the " Northern men got the victorie. In which battell were slaine Earle Oliver and Adic-
 " Mann, Generals of both the sides. In the same yeeere Magnus King of Norway, the " son of Olave, (son of Harald Harfager), desirous to try whether the corps of S. Olave
 " King and Martyr remained incorrupt, commanded that his tombe should be ope" ned: and notwithstanding the Bishop and Clergy withstood it, the King himselfe
 " came boldly thither; and by force that he brought with him caused the coffin to be " opened. Now when he had both seene and handled the body incorrupt and nothing
 " perished, suddenly there was a great feare fell upon him; and in all haste he departed " thence. The next night following Olave King and Martyr appeared unto him in a
 " dreame, saying thus: Chuse thou one of these two things, either to lose thy life and
 " kingdome both within thirty daies; or to depart from Norway and never see it againe.
 " When the King awakened, he called unto him his Princes and Elders; and declared " unto them his dreame and vision: and they being fore-affraid gave him this counsell,
 " to depart with all speed out of Norway. He without delay caused a fleet to be rigged
 " and put in readinesse, of an hundred and threescore sailes, and cutteth over to the Isles
 " of Orkney, which he forthwith subdued; semaking way by dint of sword thoroughout
 " all the Isles, and bringing them to his subjection; went forward still as far as to Man,
 " and when he was arrived and landed he came unto St. Patrickes Isle, to see the place
 " wherein the field had bene fought a little before between the Mankmen; because
 " as yet many of their bodies that were slaine lay there buried. Now when he saw
 " this most goodly and beautifull Iland, he pleased his eye; and he chose it to see him-
 " selfe therein, built fortresses in it, which unto this day carry his name: And those of " Galway he hold in so great awe, that he compelled them to cut downe wood for tim" ber, and to bring it unto the shore, that therewith he might build his Forts and Bul" warks. To Anglesey, then called Manu (an Iland in Wales) hee sailed, and found " in it two Earles by the name of Hughes: the one he slew, the other he put to flight, " and subdued the Iland. But the Welshmen presented him with many gifts, and so he " bad them farewell, and returned unto Man. Unto Murchad King of Ireland he sent his " shoes, and commanded him to carry them on his shoulders through the middlest of " his house on Christmas day, that he might thereby understand he was subject unto " King Magnus. Which the Irishmen as soone as they heard of it took grievously, and " disdained exceeding much. But the King following a wiser course, I had rather, saith
 " he, not only carry his shoes, but also eat them, than King Magnus should destroy
 " one Province in Ireland. Hee fulfilled therefore his commandement, and honoura" bly entertained his messengers. Many presents also hee sent over by them unto King " Magnus, and entered into league with him. These messengers being returned unto
 " E their Lord, related unto him many things touching the situation of Ireland, the plea-
 " santnesse thereof, the abundance of corne and wholsomnesse of aire. When Magnus
 " heard this, straightwaies he thought of nothing else but to conquer Ireland, and " bring it wholly under his dominion. He commanded therefore his men to prepare a
 " navie; and himselfe in person setting forward with sixteene ships, desirous to take a " view of the countrey, as he unwarily departed aside from his shipping, was suddenly
 " compassed about by the Irish, and so lost his life, together with all those in manner " that were with him. And he was buried hard by S. Patrickes Church in Down. Hee
 " reigned sixe yeeres: after whose death the Princes of the Islands sent for Olave the son " of Godred surnamed Crovan, who lived in the Court of Henry King of England, son
 " F of King William.

" ANOTHER. Olave, the sonne of Godred Crovan aforesaid, beganne his reign, and " reigned forty yeeres: a peaceable Prince, having all the Kings of Ireland and Scotland
 " to be his confederates. Hee tooke to wife Africa the daughter of Fergus of Gall-
 " way: of whom he begat Godred. By his concubines he had Regnald, Lagman and " Harald, beside many daughters, whereof one was wedded to Summerled Prince
 " of

Sfff

of

of Herergaidel, who was the cause of the ruine of the whole Kings of the Ilands. On A her he begat foure sonnes, Dulgall, Raignald, Engu, and Olave.

MCCXXXIII. There hapned so great an Eclipse of the Sun, upon the fourth Nones of August, that the day was turned into night.

MCCXXXIV. Olave gave unto Tuo Abbat of Furnes a plot of his land in Man, to build an Abbey, in a place called Ruffin: and both enriched with revenues, and endowed with privileged the estate of the Church in the Ilands.

MCCXLIII. Godred, Olaves son, saileth over sea to the King of Norway, whose name was Hinge, and did his homage unto him, and staid there being honourably entertained of him. The same yeere three sonnes of Harald, Olaves brother (who had been B brought up in Dublin) raising a great number of men together, and all those who were fled from the King, came to Man, demanding of the same King to have the one moity of the whole kingdome of the Ilands to bee given unto them. But the King, when he had heard their demand, being willing to pacifie them, answered, That hee would take counsell of the matter. Now when they had appointed the time and place where the counsell should bee held, in the meane while those most leud and wicked villaines complotted among themselves the Kings death. At the day appointed both parts met at the haven which is called Ramsa, and sat in order by rowes, the King with his counsell on the one side, and they together with their company on the other, and Reginald (who was to dispatch him) was in the midst between, and stood C talking apart with one of the Peeres of the land. But when the King had called him and he was come unto him, he turned toward the King as though hee would salute him, and therewith lifting up a glittering axe a great height, at one blow cut off the Kings head. And forthwith as soone as they had committed such a bloody murder, they divided the land among themselves: and after some few daies, having garhe-red a navie together, sailed over to Galway, desirous to bring it also under their subjection: But those of Galway sticking close and round together, gave a faire onset, and joined battell with them. They by and by turning their backs fled in great disorder to Man: And as for all the Galwaymen that dwelt therein, some of them they slew, others they expelled.

MCCXLIII. Godred, Olaves son, returning out of Norway was created King of Man, D and to avenge his fathers death, he caused two of Haralds sons to have their cies pulled out, and slew the third.

MCCXLIV. Godred begun his reigne, and reigned thirty yeeres. In the third yeere of his reigne, the people of Dublin sent for him and created him King of Dublin, against whom Mure-card King of Ireland raised war, and encamping himselfe before the Citie which is called Coridelis, sent his halfe brother (by the mothers side) Osibe-ley, with three thousand men of armes to Dublin, who was by Godred and the Dublinians slaine, and all the rest put to flight. These exploits atchieved, Godred returned to Man, began to use tyranny, and turned Noblemen out of their inheritances, whereof E one called Thorfin, Oiers Son, mightier than the rest, came to Sumerled and made Dubgall, Sumerleds son, King of the Ilands, subduing unto him many Ilands. When Godred had intelligence of these things by one Paul, he prepared a navie, and setteth forward to meet with Sumerled, who was coming with a fleet of 80. saile. And in the yeere 1156. there was a battell fought at sea on Twelke day at night, and after many a man slaine on both sides, the next day after they grew to a pacification, and divided among themselves the kingdome of the Ilands: and so it became two seve-rall kingdomes from that very day unto this present time. And this was the cause of the overthrow of the kingdome of the Isles, since time that Sumerleds son seized upon it.

MCLVIII. Sumerled came to Man with a fleet of 53. saile, put Godred to flight, & wasted the Iland. Godred then crossed over to Norway, to seek for aid against Sumerled.

MCLXIV. Sumerled gathered together a fleet of 1060. ships, and arrived at Rhinfrin, covering to subdue all Scotland. But by the just judgement of God hee was vanquished by a few, together with his sonne and an infinite number of people there slain.

The

A The same yeere there was a field fought at Ramsa betweene Reginald brother of Godred, and them of Man: and by the deceitfull practice of a certaine Earle, those of Man were put to flight.

Then Reginald began to reigne, and on the fourth day after came Godred upon him out of Norway with a great multitude of armed men, and tooke his brother Reginald, whom he bereft both of his eyes, and of his genitall members. The same yeere died Malcolm King of Scotland, and his brother William succeeded him in the kingdome.

MCLXVI. Two Comets or blazing stars appeared before Sun-rising in the Mo-neth of August, the one in the South, the other in the North.

MCLXXI. Richard Earle of Penbrock sailed over into Ireland, and subdued Develin with a great part of Ireland.

MCLXXVI. John Curcy conquered Ulster, and Vivian Legate of the Apostolicke Sea came into Man, and caused King Godred to bee lawfully espoused unto his wife Phingola, daughter of Mac-Lotlen, son to Murkariac King of Ireland, to wit, the mother of Olave then three yeeres old. Sylvan the Abbat married them: unto whom the very same day Godred gave a piece of land at Miriscege, where he built a Monastery:
but at length the ground was together with the Monkes granted to the Abbey of Ruffin.

C Reginald sonne to Enc-Marcat, one of the royall blood, comming into Man with a great band of men in the Kings absence, at the first conflict put to flight certain warders that kept the shore, and killed about 30. men. Afterwards the Mankmen gathering their forces together, the same day slew him and almost all his company.

MCLXXXIII. O-Fogolt was Sheriffe of Man.

MCLXXXV. There fell out to be an Eclipse of the Sun on Saint Philip and Jacobs day.

MCLXXXVII. On the fourth Ides of November died Godred King of the Ilands: and the next Summer was his body translated to the Isle of Hy. He left behind him three sonnes, Reginald, Olave, and Tuar. In his life he ordained his sonne Olave to be D his heire, because hee onely was borne in lawfull wedlock. But the people of Man, seeing that Olave was now scarce ten yeeres old, sent for Reginald out of the Isles, and set him up for their King.

MCLXXXVIII. Reginald Godreds son began to raigne over the Ilands: and Mur-chard, a man of great power throughout all the kingdome of the Isles, was slaine.

MCCXII. A battell was fought betweene Reginald and Engu the sonnes of Su-merled, but Engu won the victory. The same yeere was the Abbey of Ruffin translated to Duffglas: but after foure yeeres the Monks returned to Ruffin.

MCCIII. Michael Bishop of the Isles died at Fontans, after whom succeeded Nicolas.

E MCCIV. Hugh Lacy came with an army into Ulster, and gave John Curcy battell, tooke him prisoner, and conquered Ulster. Afterward hee set John at liberty, who came to King Reginald: and he honourably entertained him, because he was his brother in law: for John Curcy had taken to wife Africa Godreds daughter, who founded the Abbey of S. Mary de Jugo Domini, and was there buried.

MCCV. John Curcy and Reginald King of the Isles having entred into Ulster with one hundred ships, in the haven which is called Stranford, slackly besieged the fortresse of Rath: but Walter Lacy comming upon them with an army, purthem to flight: after this Curcy never recovered his land.

MCCX. Engu, Sumerleds son, was with three of his sonnes slaine.

F John King of England at the same time brought a navie of 500. saile to Ireland, & subdued it: who sending a certaine Earle named Fulk unto Man, in one fortnight and a day wholly in a manner wasted it: and taking hostages, returned thence into their country. King Reginald and his Nobles were not in Man.

MCCXVII. Nicolas Bishop of the Isles departed this life and was buried in Ulster within the house of Benchor, after whom succeeded Reginald.

SSff 2

Here

Here I thinke good to write somewhat againe of Olave and Reginald, Brethren.

Reginald gave unto his brother Olave the Ile called Lodhus, which is said to be larger than the rest of the Ilands, but slenderly inhabited, because it stands much upon mountaines, is stony besides, and almost all unfit for tillage. The inhabitants thereof live for the most part by hunting and fishing. Olave therefore went to possesse himselfe of this Iland, and dwelt in it, leading a poore life. And when he saw it would not suffice to maintaine himselfe and his army, he came boldly unto his brother Reginald, who then made his abode in the Ilands, and spake unto him in this maner. Brother, faith hee, my Sovereigne Lord the King, thou knowest that the kingdome of the Ilands belonged unto me by inheritance; but since the Lord hath elected thee to sway the Scepter thereof, I envie thee not, nor take it grievously that thou art exalted to that royall dignity. Now thus much I heartily beseech thee, that thou wouldest provide me some portion of land in the Iles, wherein I may live honestly according to mine estate: for the Iland Lodhus which thou gavest unto me is not sufficient to sustaine me. Reginald his brother after he had given him the hearing, said he would take counsell upon the point: and the morrow after, when Olave was sent for, and came in place to parley of the matter, Reginald commandeth that hee should be apprehended and brought unto William King of Scotland, that with him he might be kept in prison. And Olave lay prisoner in irons and chaines almost seven yeeres. In the seventh yeere died William King of Scotland, after whom succeeded his sonne Alexander. Now before his death he gave commandement that all prisoners should be set free. Olave therefore being enlarged and at liberty came to Man: and soone after, accompanied with no small traine of Noblemen, he went to S. James: and after he was thus returned Reginald his brother caused him to marry a Noble mans daughter of Kentyre, even his owne wives whole sister, named Lavon, and gave him Lodhus in possession to enjoy. Some few daies after Reginald Bishop of the Ilands having called a Synod, canonically divorced Olave the sonne of Godred, and Lavon his wife, as being the cousin german of his former wife. After this Olave wedded Scristine daughter of Ferhar Earle of Rosse. For this cause Reginalds wife Queene of the Ilands was wroth, and directed her letters in the name of Reginald the King, into the Ile Sky, unto Godred her sonne that he should kill Olave. As Godred was devising meanes to worke this feat, and now entering into Lodhus, Olave fled in a little cog-boat unto his father in law, the Earle of Rosse aforesaid. Then Godred wasterh and spoileth Lodhus. At the same time Pol the son of Boke Sheriffe of Sky, a man of great authority in all the Ilands, because he would not give his consent unto Godred, fled, and together with Olave lived in the Earle of Rosse house: and entering into a league with Olave they came both in one ship to Sky. At length having sent forth their spies and discoverers, they learned that Godred lay in a certain Iland called St. Columbs Ile, having very few men with him, misdoubting nothing. Gathering therefore about them all their friends and acquaintance, with such voluntaries as were ready to joine with them, at midnight with five shippes which they drew from the next sea-shore, distant from the Iland aforesaid some two furlongs, they beset the Isle round about. Godred then, and they that were with him, rising by the dawning of the day, and seeing themselves environed on every side with enemies, were astonied: but putting themselves in warlike armes, assailed right manfully to make resistance, but all in vaine. For about nine a clocke of the day Olave and Pol the foresaid Sheriffe set foot in the Iland, with their whole army, & having slain all those whom they found without the enclosure of the Church, they tooke Godred, put out his eyes, and gelded him. Howbeit to this deed Olave did not yeeld his consent, neither could he withstand it, for Boke sonne, the Sheriffe aforesaid. For this was done in the yeere 1223.

The

A The Summer next following Olave, after he had taken hostages of all the Lords and potentates of the Isles, came with a fleet of 32. saile toward Man, and arrived at Regnolswath. At this very time Reginald and Olave divided the kingdome of the Ilands between themselves, and Man was given to Reginald over and beside his owne portion, together with the title of King.

Olave the second time, having furnished himselfe with victuals from the people of Man, returned with his company to his portion of the Iland. The yeere following, Reginald taking with him Alane Lord of Galway, went with his souldiers of Man to the Iland parts, that hee might disseize his brother Olave of that portion of land which hee had given unto him, and bring it under his owne dominion. But because the Mankmen were not willing to fight against Olave and the Ilanders, for the love they had to them, Reginald and Alan Lord of Galway returned home without achieving their purpose. After a little while, Reginald under pretence of going to the Court of his Sovereigne the Lord King of England, tooke up of the people of Man an hundred Markes, but went in very deed to the Court of Alan Lord of Galway. At the same time he affianced his daughter unto the son of Alan in marriage. Which the Mankmen hearing, tooke such snuffe and indignation thereat, that they sent for Olave, and made him their King.

C mcxxxvi. Olave recovered his inheritance, to wit, the kingdome of Man and of the Ilands, which his brother Reginald had governed 38. yeeres, and reigned quietly two yeeres.

mcxxxviii. Olave accompanied with all the Nobles of Man, and a band of the strongest men of the country, failed over into the Ilands. A little after Alan Lord of Galway, and Thomas Earle of Athol, and King Reginald, came unto Man with a puissant army: all the South part of Man they wasted, spoiled the Churches, and slew all the men they could lay hold of, so that the South part of Man was laid in manner all desolate. After this returned Alan with his army into his owne country, and left his bailiffes in Man, to gather up for him the tributes of the country. But King Olave came upon them at unwares, put them to flight and recovered his owne kingdome.

D Then the people of Man, which before time had been disperfed every way, began to gather themselves together, and to dwell with confidence and security.

In the same yeere came King Reginald out of Galway unlooked for, at the dead time of night in winter, with five ships, and burnt all the shipping of his brother Olave, and of the Lords of Man at Saint Patrickes Iland: and suing to his brother for peace, stayed forty daies at the haven of Ragnolswath. Meane while he won and drew unto him all the Ilanders in the South part of Man, who sware they would venture their lives in his quarrell, untill hee were invested in the one halfe of the kingdome. On the contrarie part, Olave had the Northren men of the Isle to side with him: and upon the 14. day of February, at a place called Tingualla, there was a battell stricke

E betweene the two brethren, wherein Olave had the victorie: and King Reginald was by some killed there without his brothers knowledge. And certaine rovers comming to the South part of Man wasted and harried it. The Monks of Ruslin translated the body of King Reginald unto the Abbey of S. Mary de Fournes, and there entered it was in a place which himselfe had chosen for that purpose. After this went Olave to the King of Norway; but before that hee was come thither, Haco King of Norway ordained a certaine Noble man named Hubac, the sonne of Ommand for to bee King of the Sodorian Ilands, and called his name Haco. Now the same Haco, together with Olave, and Godred Don Reginalds son, and many Norwegians came unto the Ilands: and at the winning of a fort in the Iland Both, Haco chanced to be smit with a stone, whereof he died, and lieth buried in Iona.

F mcxxx. Olave came with Godred Don and the Norwegians to Man: and they divided the kingdome among themselves: Olave held Man, and Godred being gone unto the Ilands, was slaine in the Isle Lodhus. So obtained Olave the kingdome of the Isles.

mcxxxvii. On the twelfth Calends of June died Olave the sonne of Godred King

Stff 3

- King of Man, in S. Patricks Iland, and was buried in the Abbey of Rusfin. He reigned A eleven yeeres, two by his brothers life, and nine after his death.
- Harold his sonne succeeded him being 14. yeeres of age, and reigned 12. yeeres. In the first yeere of his reigne he made a journey to the Ilands, and appointed Loglen his cousin, Custos of Man. In the Autumne following Harald sent three sonnes of Nell, namely, Dufgald, Thorquill Mormore, and his friend Joseph to Man, for to consult about affaires. On the 25. day therefore they meet at Tingull: and by occasion of a certaine envious quarrell that arose between the sonnes of Nell and Loglen, there was a fore fight on both sides, wherein were slaine Dufgald, Mormore, and the fore-said Joseph. In the spring ensuing King Harald came to the Ile of Man, and Loglen, B as he fled toward Wales, perished by Shipwracke, with Godred Olaves sonne his foster child and pupill, with 40. others.
- MCCXXXVIII. Gospatricke and Gillefcrist the sonne of Mac-Keribac came from the King of Norway into Man, who by force kept Harald out of Man, and tooke tributes to the Kings behoofe of Norway, because he refused to come unto the King of Norwaies Court.
- MCCXL. Gospatric died, and is buried in the Abbey of Rusfin.
- MCCXXXIX. Harald went unto the King of Norway, who after two yeeres confirmed unto him, his heires and successeurs under his seale, all the Ilands which his predecessors had possessed.
- MCCXLII. Harald returned out of Norway to Man, and being by the inhabitants C honourably received, had peace with the Kings of England and of Scotland. Harald, like as his father before him, was by the King of England dubbed Knight, and after he had been rewarded with many gifts returned home. The same yeere he was sent for by the King of Norway, and married his daughter.
- And in the yeere 1249. as he returned homeward with his wife, and Laurence King elect of Man, and many other Nobles and Gentlemen, he was drowned in a tempest neere unto the coasts of Radland.
- MCCXLIX. Reginald the sonne of Olave and brother to Harald, began his reigne the day before the Nones of May, and on the thirtieth day thereof was slaine by one D Yvar a Knight and his company, in a meadow neere unto the Holy Trinity Church, on the South side, and lieth buried in the Church of Saint Mary of Rusfin.
- At that time Alexander King of Scots rigged and brought together many ships, meaning to subdue the Iland: and in the Ile Kerwaray he died of an ague.
- Harald the sonne of Godred Don usurped the name of King in the Ilands: all the Nobles of Harald King Olaves sonne hee banished, and placed in their stead all the Princes and Peeres that were fled from the said Harald.
- MCCCL. Harald the sonne of Godred Don, being by missives sent for, went unto the King of Norway, who kept him in prison, because he had unjustly intruded himselfe into the kingdome.
- E The same yeere there arrived at Roghalwath Magnus the son of Olave, and John the sonne of Dugald, who named himselfe King: but the people of Man taking it to the heart that Magnus was not nominated, would not suffer them to land there: many of them therefore were cast away and perished by shipwracke.
- MCCCLII. Magnus the sonne of Olave came to Man, and was made King: The next yeere he went to the King of Norway, and stayed there a yeere.
- MCCCLIV. Haco King of Norway ordained Magnus, Olaves sonne, King of the Isles, and confirmed the same unto him and his heires, and by name unto his brother Harald.
- MCCCLVI. Magnus King of Man went into England, and was knighted by the King F of England.
- MCCCLVII. The church of S. Maries of Rusfin was dedicated by Richard of Sodore.
- MCCCLX. Haco King of Norway came unto the parts of Scotland, and without any exploit done turned to the Orkneys: where at Kirwas he ended his daies, and lyeth entered at Bergh.

MCCCLXV.

- A MCCCLXV. Magnus, Olaves sonne King of Man and of the Ilands, departed this life at the Castle of Rusfin, and was buried in the Church of S. Mary de Rusfin.
- MCCCLXVI. The kingdome of the Ilands was translated, by reason of Alexander King of Scots.

That which followeth was written in another hand, and of a later charaſter.

- MCCCLXX. The seventh day of October, a navy set out by Alexander King of Scots, arrived at Roghalwath: and the next morrow before sun rising a battaile was fought between the people of Man and the Scots, in which were slain of the Manckmen 537. whereupon a certaine versifier played thus upon the number.

L. decies, X. ter, & penia duo cecidere, Mannica gens de te, damna futura cave.
L. Ten times told, X. thrice, with five beside and twaine, Ware future harmes, I reed, of thy folke Man were slaine.

- MCCCLXIII. Robert King of Scots besieged the Castle of Rusfin, which Dingawyl C Dowyll held against him: but in the end the King won the castle.
- MCCCLXVI. On the Ascension day, Richard le Mandevice and his brethren with other Potentates of Ireland, arrived at Ramaldwath, requesting to be furnished with victuals and silver, for that they had been robbed by the enemies warring upon them continually. Now when the commonalty of the country had made answer, that they would not give them any: they advanced forward against those of Man with two troops or squadrons, untill they were come as far as to the side of Warthfell hill, in a field wherein John Mandevice remained, and therein a fought: himselfe the Irish vanquished the Manckmen, spoiled the Iland, and rifled the Abbey of Rusfin: and after they had continued in the Iland one whole moneth, they returned home with their ships fraught with pillage.

- D Thus endeth the Chronicle of the K.K. of Man.

The Proceſſe or course of the Historie following, I will now continue ſummarily out of other Writers.

- E W Hen Alexander the third King of Scots had gotten into his hands the Western Ilands, partly by way of conquest, and in part for ready money paid unto the King of Norway, hee attempted the Ile of Man also, as one of that number, and through the valiant prowesse of Alexander Stewart brought it under his dominion: yea and placed there a petty King or Prince, with this condition, that hee should be ready alwaies at his command; to serve with ten ships in his warres at sea. Howbeit Mary, the daughter of Reginald King of Man (who was become the Liege-man of John King of England) entred her suit for the Iland before the King of England: but answer was made unto her; that shee should demand it of the King of Scots, for that he then held it in possession. And yet her grand-child John Waldeboef (for the said Mary married into the house of Waldeboef) sued for his ancient right in Parliament, holden in the 33. yeere of King Edward the first, before the K. of England, as the superiour Lord of the kingdome of Scotland. But none other answer could he have than this (if I may speake the words out of the very authentical Records) Sequatur coram Justitiariis de Banco Regis, &c. that is, Let him sue before the Justices of the K. Bench, let him be heard, and let justice be done. But that which he could not obtaine, tain by right, Sir William Montacute, his kinsman (for come he was of the race of A the Kings of Man) wonne by his sword. For with a band of English mustered up in hast, he drave all the Scots out of the Iland. But being by this warre plunged deeply in debt, and not having wherewith to make some paiement thereof, he mortgaged it for seven yeeres to Antonie Bee Bishop of Durham, and Patriarch of Jerusalem, and made over the profits and revenues thereof unto him: yea and soone after the King granted it unto the said Antonie for tearme of life. Afterwards, King Edward the second passed a grant thereof unto his minion Piers Gaveston, what time as he created him Earle of Cornwall: and when the said Piers was rid out of the way, hee gave it unto Henry Beaumont, with all the domaine and regall jurisdiction thereto belonging. But shortly after the Scots under Robert Bru recovered it; and Robert Randolph that right warlike Scot, like as a long time after Alexander Duke of Albany, used to stile themselves Lords of Man, and bare the same coat of Armes, as did the later Kings of Man; namely, three armed legges of a man linked together, and bending in the hannes: such for all the world as the Isle Sicilia gave, the three legges naked, in like forme in her coines of money in old time, to signifie three Promontories. Notwithstanding, before time the Kings of Man used for their armes, as we have seene in their Seales, a ship with the saile hoisted up, with this title in the circumference, Rex Mannie & insularum, that is, King of Man and of the Islands. Afterward, about the yeere 1340. William Montacute the younger, Earle of Salisbury wrested it by strong hand C into the hands of Henry the fourth King of England: who granted this Iland unto Henry Percy Earle of Northumberland (as a conqueror triumphing over William Scrope, whom he as yet a private person had intercepted and beheaded, when he aspired to the crowne) with this condition: that himselfe and his heires should when the Kings of England were enstalled and crowned, carry before them that sword, which the said Henry wore by his side, what time he came backe againe out of exile into England, commonly called Lancaster sword. But I think it good to set this down D out of the Record, in the very words of the K. himselfe: De nostra gratia speciali dedimus, that is: Of our speciall grace we have given and granted unto Henry Earle of Northumberland, the Isle, Castele, Pile, and Seigniorie of Man, and all the Ilands and Lordships to the said Isle belonging, which were Sir William le Scropes, Knights, now deceased, (whom in his life time we conquered, and have decreed him so to be conquered) and which by reason of our conquest of him we tooke into our hand as conquered: which conquest verily and decree in our present Parliament, with the assent of the Lords Temporal in the same Parliament being, as touching the person of the foresaid William, and all the lands, tenements, goods, and chattells of his, as well within our kingdome as without, at the petition of the Communalty of our kingdome, stand confirmed, &c. To have and to hold unto E the said Earle, and his heires, &c. by service of carrying at the daies of our coronation, and of our heires, at the left shoulder, and the left shoulder of our heires, either by himselfe or a sufficient and honourable Deputy of his, that sword naked which we ware, and were girt with, when we arrived in the parts of Holderness, called Lancaster sword, &c.

But in the fifth yeere following the said Henry Percy entred into open rebellion, and the King sent Sir John Stanley and William Stanley to seize the Isle and castle of Man, the inheritance whereof he granted afterward to Sir John Stanley and his heires by letters Patents, with the patronage of the Bishopricke, &c. And so his heires and successours, who were honoured with the title of Earles of Derby, were commonly called Kings of Man.

From Man, untill we come to the Mull of Gallaway, we meet with none but very small Ilands. But after we be once past it, in the salt water of GLOTTA, or Dunbrison Frith appeareth the Iland GLOTTA, whereof Antoninus maketh mention, which the Scots now call Arran, whereof the Earles of Arran in Scotland were stiled: and neighbouring unto it is that which was in times past named Rathesia, now Buibe of

A of a sacred Cell which Brendan erected (for so they terme a little Cell in Scottish) thence come we to Hellan, in times past called Hellan Leneaw, that is, as John Fordon interpreteth it, The Isle of Saints, and to Hellan Tinoc, that is, The Isle of Swine: and these Ilands are seene in the same Frith or Forth. But of these I have spoken before.

Without this Bay or Frith lye a number of Ilands very thicke together, which the Scots themselves that inhabite them call Inch-Gall, that is haply, The Isles of the Galicians: the English and the rest of the Scots, The Western Isles: the writers of the former age HEBRIDES; but the ancient Ethnickes Bettorice, and Giraldus other where Inchades and Leucades: Pliny, Solinus, and Ptolomee name them EBUDAS, B HEBUDAS, and EBUDAS, which names have some consonant affinity with Epidium the promontory of Britain opposite unto them, and an Isle among these so named. The reason of the name I cannot picke out, unlesse I should thinke they were so called, because there groweth here no corne or graine.

For Solinus writeth, that the inhabitants of these Ilands are not acquainted with corne, and live onely upon fish and milke: and Ebeid in British foundeth as much as without corne. The inhabitants, as saith the same Solinus, have no skill or knowledge of corne, they live of fish and milke onely. They all have but one King: For how many soever they be, they are severed one from another by a narrow enterflow of the Sea betweene.

Scottish orwesterne Isles.

C The King hath nothing that hee may say is his owne, all things are common to them all: and held hee is to equity by certaine lawes: and left hee should for covetousnesse swarve aside from the truth, by his poore estate he leareth justice, as who hath no house, furniture, and provision of his owne, but all his maintenance is from the common coffe.

No woman is he allowed to have in propriety; but by turnes hee taketh for to use whomsoever hee fancieth, whereby hee neither can have his wish, nor hope of children.

Of these Islands, the common people affirmeth there bee 44. whereas in truth there are many more. Pliny wrote that there were 30. of them. But Ptolomee D reckoneth up but five. The first is RICINA, Pliny calleth it RICNEA, Antoninus RIDUNA, now termed Racine: and I think it should be read in Antonine Riclina: for (c) easily maketh a (d) by joining a (c) at the backe unto it. A small Iland this is, butting full upon Ireland, knowne unto the ancient writers, for that it lieth in the very narrow sea betweene Ireland and Scotland: famous at this day for no cause else, but for the overthrow and slaughter of the Scottish Irish, who otherwhiles possessed themselves of it, and were thrust out by the English, under the conduct of Sir William Norris in the yeere 1575. The next is EPIDIUM, which by the name I would ghesse, with that excellent Geographer Gerard Mercator, lay neere unto the promontorie of the Epidis, and to the shore. And seeing there standeth apparently in E the same situation an Iland called Ila, of good largenesse, and of a fruitfull, plaine, and champion soile, I dare avouch that this was Epidium, or the Isle of the Epidis; for in some places it is read Emdlov. This carrieth in length 24. miles, and is 16. miles broad, so plentifull of cattell, wheat, and heards of red deere, that it was the second feat next unto Man, for the King of the Islands, as it is at this day of the Mac-Connells, who herein have their Castle at Dunyweg. Betwixt Ila and Scotland lieth Tona, which Bede tearmeth Hy and Hu, given by the Picts unto the Scottish Monkes, for propagating and preaching of the Gospell among them: where stood a Monasterie, famous by reason of the Scottish Kings tombes and the frequent conversing of holy men therein: among whom Columba, the Apostle of the Picts, was the principall: of F whose Cell the Iland also is called Columb-Kill, like as the man also himselfe, by a compound name was termed Columbkill, as Bede witnesseth. And here at length, as some will have it, a Bishops seat was ordained in Sodore, a little towne, whence all the Isles were also called Sodorensis, for that it is reckoned to be in his Diocesse. Then have you MALBO, that Ptolomee writeth of, now called Mula, whereof Plinie seemeth to make mention, when hee saith, Mella is reported to bee 25. miles larger than

than the rest. For so we read in the most ancient edition of Plinie, printed at Venice, A whereas in the Vulgar copies, in steed of Reliquarum Mella, is read Reliquarum nall, that is, None of the rest, &c. The Eastern H B A U D A, now called Ske, from hence lieth out in a great length over against the shore or coast of Scotland: the Western H B A U D A bending more Westward, is now called Lewis (the Lord whereof is Mac-Cloyd) and in the ancient history of Man is named Lodhu, full of steep and craggie little hills, stony and very slenderly inhabited: howbeit the largest of them all; from which Eust is dis-joined with a very narrow wash. All the rest, save onely Hyriha, are of small account, being either very stony, or else inaccessible by reason of craggie clifffes, & scarce clad with any green-ford. Yet the Scots purchased all these with their ready money of the Norwegians (as I have said before) as if they had bene the very buttresses or pillars of the kingdome, although they reape very small commodity thereby: considering that the inhabitants, the ancient true Scots or Irish, being men of stout stomackes and desperate boldnesse, will by no meanes be subject to the severity of lawes, or awed by justice. As touching their manners, apparell, and language they differ nothing at all from the wild Irishry, of whom we have spoken before: so that wee may easily know thereby that they be one and the selfe same nation originally. They that beare the sway and doe rule in these Ilands are the families of Mac-Conel, Mac-Alen, whom others terme Mac-len, Mac-Cloyd of Lewis, and Mac-Cloyd of Harich. But the mightiest house of them all is that of the Mac-Conels, who glory in their pedigree, as derived from Donald, who in the reigne of James the third stiled himselfe King of the Ilands, and with all kinde of cruelty in most savage and barbarous manner plagued Scotland: which notwithstanding, his sonne being outlawed paid deerely, as forced to submit his whole estate absolutely unto the Kings will and pleasure, and had of his gift some possessions assigned to him in Cantire. In the foregoing age, of this stocke there flourished Donel Gormy, Mac-Conell, that is, The blew, haply so surnamed of his apparell. He had issue two sonnes, Agnum Mac-Conell, and Alexander, he who leaving this barren and hungry Cantire, invaded the Glinnes in Ireland. Agnum Mac-Conell afore said, was father of James Mac-Conell slaine by Shan O-Neale, and of Surley Boy, upon whom Queene Elizabeth of her bounty bestowed lands in Rout within Ireland. James Mac-Conell had issue Agnum Mac-Conell, of whom I have spoken before, between whom and Mac-Clen there was such a deepe and inveterate hatred, that the force of consanguinity was never able to quench the feud, but that they polluted themselves most wickedly with one anothers blood. From the Habudes, if you hold failes along by the shore toward the North-east, you may at length discover the ORCADES, now called ORKNEY, being thirty Ilands or thereabout, sundred by the Ocean which hath his walke and current betwene them. A certain ancient fragment so calleth them, as one would say, Argat, that is, as the same interpreteth it, Above the Geies: but I would rather expound it, Above Cath: for it lyeth over against Cath, a countrey of Scotland, which of the Promontory they use to call Cathness: the inhabitants whereof seeme to be named amisse by Ptolomee, CARINI for CATINI. In Solinus his time no man dwelled in them, but overgrowne they were Vincetis, or Junceus herbus, that is, with binding or rusty weeds: but now inhabited indeed they are, yet destitute of woods, bearing barley good store, and altogether without wheat. Among these Pomonia, famous for an Episcopall See, is the principall, called by Solinus POMONA DIUTINA, for the length of the daies there: now the inhabitants tearme it Mainland, as if it were the continent or maine, adorned with the Bishops seat in Kirkwale a little towne, and with two castles: it yeeldeth plenty of tinne and of lead. OCEtis also is reckoned by Ptolomee in number of these, which now we ghesse to be named Heibhy.

But whether Hey, which is counted one of these, be Plinies DUMNA or no, I could never yet resolve. Surely if it be not, I would thinke that Faire Isle, the onely towne whereof (for it hath but one) they call Dumo, is that Dumna rather than with Becannus judge wardhuys in Lapland to be it. Julius Agricola, who first of all sailed round about Britaine with his fleet, discovered out of these Isles of Orkney, which till that time

A time were unknowne and subdued them, if we may beleeve Tacitus: but questionlesse they were knowne in the time of Claudius the Emperour; for Pomponius Mela who then lived mentioneth them. Yet doubtlesse Orosius is untrue, in that he writeth that Claudius conquered them: and so farre is it off that Claudius should conquer them (which is avouched in S. Hieroms Chronicles) that Juvenal in Hadrians time, not long after Agricola, wrote thus of them.

Arma quid ultra
Littora Juverna promovimus, & modò captas
Orcaes, & minima contentos nocte Britannos?

Why warred we past Irish coasts, and Orkneys lately won,
Beyond the Britans, where there is least night and longest Sun?

Afterward when the Romans Empire in Britaine was utterly decayed, now the Saxons, as it seemeth, were seated in them: for Claudian the Poet plaied upon them in these termes.

Maduerunt Saxone fuso Orcaes.

With Saxons blood that there were slaine
The Orkneys was imbrued againe.

Ninnius also writeth, that Obba and Ebissus Saxons, who served for pay under the Britans, failed round about the Picts with 40. Ciules; that is, Flyboats or Roving Pinnaces, and waisted the Iles of Orkney. After this, they came into the hands of the Norwegians (whence it is that the inhabitants speake the Goths language) by the grant of Donald Ban, who after the death of his brother Malcom Can-Mor, King of Scots, by excluding his nephewes, had usurped the kingdome, that by their helpe he might be assisted in that intended ambition: and the Norwegians held the possession of them unto the yeere of salvation 1266. For then Magnus, the fourth of that name, King of Norway, being by the Scots that warred upon him brought to distresse, surrendered them up againe unto Alexander, the third King of the Scots, by covenant and composition, which Haquin King of the Norwegians confirmed unto King Robert Bru, in the yeere 1312. And at length in the yeere 1498. Christian the first, King of Norway and of Denmark, renounced all his right for himselfe and his successours, when he affianced his daughter unto James, the third King of Scots, and made over all his interest to his said sonne in law and his successours: and for the stronger assurance thereof, the Popes confirmation was procured to ratifie the same.

To say nothing of the Earles of Orkney that were of more ancient times, who also in right of inheritance obtained the Earldomes of Cathness and of Sirrahern, at the last the title of Orkney came by an heire female unto Sir William Sent-cler: and William the fourth of this line, called The Prodigall Earl, for waisting his patrimony, was the last Earle of this race. Howbeit, his posterity enjoyed the honour to be Baron Sent-cler, unto these daies. And the title of Cathness remaineth still in the posterity of his brother. But within our remembrance this honourable title of the Earle of Orkney and Lord of Sheland was conferred upon Robert, a base sonne of King James the fifth; and Patrick Steward his sonne enjoyeth the same at this present.

Beyond the Iles of Orkney, and above Britaine, the author of that ancient Commentary upon Horace, placeth the Fortunate Ilands, wherein, as they write, none dwell but devout and just men; and the Grecians in their verses celebrate the pleasantnesse and fertility of the place, calling them the Elysian fields. But as touching these Fortunate Isles, take with you, if you please, another relation of that old fabulous Grecian, Isacius Tzetzes out of his notes upon Lycophron: In the Ocean (saith he) there is a

British

British Island, between west Britain and Thule that looke toward the East. Thither men A say the foules of the dead are translated over : for on the shore of that sea wherein the land of Britaine lieth, there dwell fisher-men, subject unto the French, but paying them no tribute, because (as they say) they ferry over the foules and folk departed when these fisher-men returne home in the evening, within a while after they heare some knocking at the door, and heare a voice calling them unto their work. Then rise they, and to the shore they goe, not knowing what causeth them for to goe; where they see boats prepared, but none of their owne, and no men in them : which when they be entered into, they fall to their oares, and feele the weight of the said boats as if they were laden with men, but see no body. After that, with one push they come to a British Island in a trice, whereas otherwise in ships of B their own they could hardly get thither with a day and nights sailing. Now when they are come to the Island, then again they see no creature, but heare a voice of those that receive them that are a shipboard, and count them by the kindred of father and mother, yea and call them one by one according to their dignity, art, and name. But they, after that the ship is discharged of her load, returne home againe with one yerre of their oares. Hence it is that many men thinke these be the Islands of blessed ghosts.

Of the same stampe also may that Poeticall Geographer seeme to be, of whom Muretus maketh mention in his variety of readings : who hath written that C. Julius Caesar went thither once in a great galley, with an hundred men aboard : and when he was willing to have seated himselfe there (as being wondrously delighted with the incredible pleasantness of the place) he was full against his will, and struggling C what he could to the contrary, throwne out by those invisible inhabitants.

Five daies and nights sailing from the Isles of Orkney, Solinus placeth THULE : An Island, if any other, often celebrated by the Poets, whensoever they would signify any thing very remote and farre off, as if it were the furthest part of the whole world. Hereupon saith Virgil, Tibi serviat ultima Thule, that is, Let Thule most remote thee serve : Seneca, Terrarum ultima Thule, that is, Thule the furthest land that is Juvenal, De conducendo loquitur jam Rhetoze Thule, that is, Now Thule speaks, how Oratours to hire : Claudian, Thulen procul axe remotam, that is, Thule far remote under the Pole, and in another place, Ratisbusq; impervia Thule, And Thule where no ships D can passe : Statius, Ignorant vincere Thulen, that is, To conquer Thule all unknowne : And Ammianus Marcellinus, by way of an Adage or Proverbiall speech, useth in these words, Etiam si apud Thulen moraretur, that is, Although he made his abode even in Thule. To passe over other testimonies, give me leave yet to note thus much more over, that the said Statius used Thule for Britaine, in these his verses.

Ceruleus haud aliter cum dimicat incola Thules, Agmina falcifero circumvenit alta covino.

Even so the blew inhabitants of Thule when they fight,
Environ battels, marching on with fished chariots might.

As also in this place of his Poem entituled Sylva, as it seemeth :

*—reflue circumfusa gurgite Thule.
Thule that doth resound amaine,
With sea that ebbes and flowes againe.*

Suidas writeth, that it tooke the name of Thules a King of Egypt : Isidore, of the Sunne : Reynerus Renecius, of the Saxon word Tell, that is, A limis, as if it were the bound of the North and West.

But yet for all this, Synesius doubteth whether there were any Thule or no; and our Giraldus Cambrensis writeth, that it is no where extant to be scene : and the better sort of learned men are of sundry judgements concerning it. Most of them have affirmed Island, that is subject to extreme sharpe cold and continuall winter, to have beene called in times past Thule.

But

A But Saxo Grammaticus, Crantzium, Milium, Jovius, and Peucerus are of a contrary opinion. Neither am I ignorant, that the vast and huge country of Scandia is described by Præcapium under the name of Thule. But if that be true which the most learned Pencer hath recorded in his book entituled De dimensione terra, that is, Of the measuring of the earth, that failers call Shetland Thulenst (neither dare I impeach his credit) then surely wee have found Thule, and the matter is now at an end and questionlesse. For this Shetland is an Isle under the Scottish dominion, environed with other Illes, and the same is nipped with frost and chilly cold, lying open on every side unto bitter storms; the inhabitants whereof, like as those of Island, use in steed of bread-corne dried fish, and the same braied and beaten, which we call stock-fish. And although it have not the North pole so elevated, that there is continuall day fixe moneths together, as Pithæus of Marsili hath fained of Thule (for which hee is justly taxed by Strabo;) and this hapneth not to Island it selfe, where there is in manner a continuall Winter, and an intolerable settled cold. Yet that a man should thinke this Shetland to have been Thule, first the situation thereof in Ptolomee may induce him, being set 63. degrees from the Equinoctiall, as Thule is in Ptolomee : again, for that it lieth between Norway and Scotland, where Saxo Grammaticus placeth Thule; then, because it is two daies sailing distant from the point of Caledonia or Caithnes, according to which distance Solinus placeth Thule : also, Tacitus saith that the Romans kened C Thule afar off, as they sailed round about Britain by the Orcades : lastly, because it faeth the shore of Bergæ in Norway, against which place Thule lieth according to Pomponius Mela : in which Author the reading is corruptly, Belgarum littori in stead of Bergarum. For Bergæ a citie in Norway lieth over against Shetland : and Pliny nameth in this tract BERGOS, which I doubt not but it is that little country wherein BERGÆ flourisheth, like as no man will deny that Norway is NERIGON specified by Pliny. But enough of this Thule, which snow and winter weather, as one saith, hath hidden from the ancient writers, and from us too I assure you : neither is any of them able to say, which of the Northren Islands they meant, when they spake so much of Thule. As touching the length of daies in that unknowne Island, Festus Avienus, when hee D treated of Britaine, translated out of Dionysius these verses.

*Longa dehinc celeri si quis rate marmora currat,
Inveniet vasto surgentem gurgite Thulen;
Hic cum plaustro Poli tangit Phæbeum ignis,
Nocte sub inlustris rosa solis fomite flagrat
Continuo, clarumque diem nox amula ducit.*

From hence if one with pinnace swift along the sea doth saile,
Thule above the Ocean vast to finde he shall not faile :
Here when about the Northren pole the Suns fire doth sejourne,
The night is light some, and his wheelles continually doe burne,
The night, I say, resembling day faire light makes soone returne.

Which Pomponius Mela likewise hath noted in these words. Opposite unto the coast of Bergæ lieth Thule, an Island much renowned both in Greek Poems, and in ours also. In it, for that the Sun riseth and is to set farre off, the nights verily are short; but in winter time, as elsewhere dark, in summer light : because all that time hee mounteth very high, although his body be not seen, yet with his neere brightness he doth lighten the parts next unto him. But about the solstice there be no nights at all, by reason that hee being then more apparent, not onely casteth bright beames from him, but sheweth also the greatest part of himselfe.

Above these Islands the sea is tearmed, The slow, frozen, and Ice sea; for that it is so rough by occasion of heaps of Ice, and scarce navigable.

T t t t

The frozen sea, or Cronium.

It

Lib. 2. belli Gothici.

Shetland, which some call Hethland.

Bergos.
Nerigon.

Thule.

Thule for Britaine.

Island.

It is also named of ancient writers Cronium, or Cronian sea, of Saturne; because A here in a British Island, as Plutarch recordeth, there goeth a tale, how Saturne is kept sleeping in a deepe cave, or bottom of a golden pumish stone: that he is by Jupiter cast into a most deepe and dead sleepe, which serveth in stead of bonds: that birds bring him Ambrosia the divine meat, with the odoriferous smell wherof all the place is perfumed. Also that he hath many spirits or daemons attending upon him as servants, who reverence him, serve him, and attend upon him. By which pretty fable, (unlesse I be deceived) is covertly couched by a Mythology, that there lye hidden in these Islands, veins or mines of Metals, over which Saturne is president: which notwithstanding are forlet and out of request, for want of wood to maintaine the fornaces.

Now beneath Thule Southward, the German sea spreadeth it selfe wide, wherein, as Pliny affirmeth, there lye disperfed the seven Aemodæ, Mela tearmeth them Hæmodæ: But seeing it is knowne for certaine, that these be Islands belonging to Denmark in the Codan Gulfe, namely, Zeland, Fynen, Lagland, Muen, Falstor, Layland, and Femerem, there is no cause wherefore I should say any more; neither of the Isle Glessaria or Electrida, so called of Amber cast up there out of the Sea: which Sotacus supposed to drop forth of trees in Britain. But seeing that the ancient Germans called Amber Glesse, willing enough I am to thinke with that most learned man, Erasmus Michael Læmus, that the Island Lesse, hard by Scagen, or Promontory of Denmark, was in times past called Glessaria. Now within the German sea on that side where it beareth upon Britaine, appear very few Islands, unlesse they be those that lye in Edenburrrough Frith, namely, May, Basse, Keib, and Inche Colme, that is, Columbs Isle. On the coast of Northumberland, over against the river Lied, one sheweth it selfe, namely Lindisfarn: the Britans call it Inis Medicane, which, that I may use Bede's words, as the sea ebbereth and floweth at his tides, twice a day inundated and compassed about with water in manner of an Island, and twice likewise made conimont to the land, as the shore is laid bare again: whereupon he aptly termed it a Demy Island. The West part of it being the narrower, and left unto conies, joineeth to the East side by a very small sponge of land: and this part which bendeth toward the South is much broader, having a pretty towne in it, with a Church and a castle: where sometimes had bene that Episcopall See, which Aidan the Scot (called thither to preach the Christian faith unto the people of Northumberland) instituted, as being much delighted with the solitary situation, as a most fit place of retire. In this small Island there sat eleven Bishops. But afterwards when the Danes rifled and robbed all the Sea-coasts, the Episcopall See was translated to Durham. Under the towne there is a good commodious haven, defended with a Block-house situate upon an hill toward the South-East.

This, for the habitation therein of holy Monks, is called in English Holy Island. Concerning which Alcuin, in an Epistle unto Egelsed King of Northumberland, writeth thus. A place more venerable than all the places in Britaine, is left to the spoile of Pagans and Miscreants: and where after the departure of S. Paulinus from York, Christian religion in our nation first began, there it hath felt the first beginning of misery and calamity.

Seven miles from hence South-Eastward, Farn Isle sheweth it selfe, distant almost two miles from Banborrow castle, enclosed within the most deep Ocean, and encircled about with craggy cliffs, and this hath also in the middle well neere, a Fort belonging unto it; even in that place, as the report goeth, where Cuthbert Bishop of Lindisfarn, that tutelar St. and Patron of the Northren Englishmen, to the end he might wholly give himselfe to the service of God, built, as Bede saith in his life, a city fitting for his government, and erected houses in this city, foring well thereto. For the whole building stood almost round in compasse, reaching from wall to wall the space of foure or five perches. The wall it selfe on the coast side was more than a mans height: for on the inside with hewing downe into a mighty rocke he had made it far higher, sufficient to with-hold and keep in the mansion lasciviousnesse either of eyes or thoughts, and so elevate the whole invention

Lindisfarn.

Moly Island.

Farn Isle.

Bede in the life of Cuthbert.

intention of the mind up so heavenly desires, in such sort as that the devout inhabitants thereof could out of his mansion place behold nothing but the heaven. Which wall verily he made not of cut squared stone, or of bricke; nor laid the same with strong mortar, but raised altogether of coble and unpolished rough stones, and turfe betweene, which with digging he had taken out of the midst of the place. Of which stones verily some were of that huge bignesse, as foure men were uneth able to lift one of them. Within this mansion hee had two houses, a Chappell, and a dwelling roome for common uses. The walls whereof he brought up of very naturall earth, by digging much of it within and without round about, or else by paring it up. And roofes over them of timber without all forme, and straw thereupon. Moreover, at the haven of this Island there stood a greater house, wherein the brethren that came to visit him might be entertained and lodged, and not far from it a fountain meet for their uses. Upon this there adjoine other smaller Islands toward the North, as Widopens, Staple Island, which lieth two miles off, Bronfman, and two lesser than these, which they call the Wambes.

After these the Island commonly called Coquet lieth right before the mouth of the river Coquet, wherein is a plentifull veine of Sea-coale. Neither are there any more Islands to be seen in this coast: but over against it be the Saxonian Insule, that is, The Saxons Islands, now called Heilich lant, that is, The Holy-Islands, and they lie, as it were, in a continued range along East and West Frilands: Among which that was best knowne unto the Roman Captaines which Strabo called Birchanis, Saxon Islands.

Pliny Birchana, and the Romans Fabaria, of the resemblance of a certain Graine or Pulse comming up there of the owne accord: which that I may restore it againe to the due place (although it be nothing pertinent to my purpose) the very name it selfe witnesseth to beethat Borkun which lieth over against the mouth of Ems. Somewhat lower upon the shore of Holland, where in ancient time was the mouth of Rhene, the foundations of a most ancient Store-house, Magazin or Armory, are covered over with the waves, which being very feldome discovered and laide bare at a low ebbe of the Ocean, sheweth both an admirable spectacle of reverend antiquitie, and also a most noble modell and forme of building; which, Abraham Ortelius, the repaire of ancient Geography, and my entire and inward friend, hath preferred out of the maine Ocean by his exact description thereof. I have mentioned this the more willingly, because the Hollanders call it in their language Huis se Britten, that is, the British house, so that it belongeth at least wise in name to Britain, and therefore not impertinent to my purpose. For as it is evident and confessed of all, that the Emperour C. Caligula, when he intended the conquest of Britaine, in that ridiculous voiage of his, built it for a watch-tower: so an ancient Inscription there digged up doth testifie, that the Emperour Septimius Severus, after it was fallen to decay rebuilt it. But whence it was named Britten, let him tell that best can ghesse. Probable it is that it tooke this name from the Britans: for that Bretta the natall place of Philip Melanchthon tooke name of the Britans, he himselfe was fully perswaded: and that Mounts in Heinault were of the Britans termed Breten, we have read elsewhere. But yet (that I may speake as Plinie doth) seeing he marvelleth why the Herbe that is peculiar unto Holland, as growing no where else, is called Britannica, unlesse perhaps those that bordered upon the Ocean dedicated it unto Britain so neere unto it: so for my part I wonder as much, why this tower should be termed Britannica, or Breten, unlesse the Hollanders consecrated it to our Britaine, lying opposite unto it. Plinie calleth a place in Picardy, Portum Morinorum Britannicum, that is, The British haven or port of the Morines, either for that they took ship there to passe over into Britain, or because it kenneed Britaine over against it on the other side of the sea. Why then should not this tower by the same reason be called Britannica or Breten? for that the Britans often arrived here, and that from hence out of Germany there was a common passage into Britain, it is most certain; considering that Zosimus hath given the just measure of the sea betwixt Britaine and this mouth of Rhene, to be 900. stadia over, as though it had bene an usuall passage: and written beside; that corne was wont to be brought by ships out of Britaine to this place, and from thence with barges and boats haled up the Rhene against the streame to serve the Roman garrisons:
seeing

Lib. 7. Birchanis.

Borkun.

The British Armory or Store-house.

Holland coast. Britten huis.

Portus Morinorum Britannicus.

The Chamavi dwelt thereby, as appeareth out of the Embassages of Eunapius.

seeing that Julian the Emperour built garrisons, as Marcellinus saith, wherein might be A inned and kept the corne that the Britans usually transported thither.

At which time this said Armory may seeme to have beene converted into a Garner or Store-house for corne, and of the said British corne tearmed Britannicum : and so much the rather, because in the old Records of Holland, we finde it written Britanburg : for that age termed castles standing commodiously, and such as were stored with plenty of corne, Burghs, as we read in the history of the Burgun-dians. Moreover, what if the Britans (that in this doubtfull matter I may run out of one conjecture to another) sometimes held it in their owne hands, and so adopted it into their owne name : considering they invested Magnus Maximus, whom some name Clemens Maximus, in the purple robe, and proclaimed him Emperour against B Gratian. For he arrived at this mouth of Rhene. If againe, it had not as yet taken this name Britannicum, what if the Saxons tearmed it Huis se Britten, for that they tooke ship from hence into Brittain, when they annoied our shores with their Cyales : for so they tearmed their pinnaces or Brigantines. Verily Zosimus sheweth that the Saxons, after they had driven out the Frankers called Salii, planted themselves in Bata- via, that is, Holland : and that from thence they put over by multitudes into Britain, it is most cleere and evident. Which also as I said before, Janus Douza, a noble Gentleman indeed, and passing well learned, in his Ode of Leyden seemeth to imply : yet here againe, lest I might seeme too forward and lavish in setting forth the glory of C Britaine; considering that the right learned Hadrian Junius, borne and bred in Holland, hath fetched the originall of the herbe Britannica from Britten a word of his owne country, because it groweth plentifully upon those turfs which they call Bri- ten, and whereof they raise great banks and dikes against the violence of the encroching Ocean; it will be no absurdity if one should reduce this Huis se Britten, unto the same originall: and suppose it to have been so called, because it was fenced with banks of turfe, or of Britten, set opposite against the forcible surges of the waves; which when the surges of the sea had once pierced and overthrowne, it may seeme to have borne downe this house also. But let them see to these matters who have a deeper insight into the nature of the word, and the situation of the place, and pardon me with-all, if here I have thrust my sickle into anothers harvest. D

In that coast there be also Illes of Zeland compassed about with the rivers Scaldi, Maese, and the Ocean : Touching which I will onely adde thus much, that the name of Valachria (for of these this is the chiefe) as Lemnius Levinus conjectureth, came from our Welshmen. Over against Zeland, Tamis the goodliest and noblest river of Britaine dischargeth himself into the sea : in which place Ptolomee setteth TOLIAPIS and CAUNAS, or CONVENNON. Of Toliapis, which I suppose to be Shepey, see in Kent. Of Convennon I have spoken in Essex in the page 441.

More Eastward without Tamis mouth, there lieth along before the Iland Tenet, a place full of shelves and sands, and very dangerous for saylers, which they call Good- E wins Sands, where our Annales doe record that in the yeere 1097. an Iland which was the patrimony of Goodwin Earle of Kent, was quite swallowed up and sunk in the sea : concerning which John Twyn writeth thus. This land was very fruitful, and full of plenteous pastures, lying somewhat lower and more flat than Tenet; out of which there was a passage by boat or barge three or foure miles long. This Iland in an unusuall tempest of windes, and boisterous fury of stormy raines, and uncooth rage of the sea, was drowned, and lieth overwhelmed with sand cast up after an incredible manner, and without all recovery is turned into a middle or doubtfull nature of land and sea. For I wot wel what I say, because one while it wholly floateth, and another while at a low water after an ebbe, it beareth walkers upon it. Haply this is Toliapis, unlesse you had rather read F Thanatos, for Toliapis, and in some copies we read it Tolatis, of which we have treated in Kent. See the 345. page.

In this very place, the huge vastnesse of the sea gathereth into such a straight, that the gullet of the Ocean betweene the firme land of France and Britaine, is not above thirty miles over, which Streights some call the Narrow sea of Britaine, others of France (and the bound it is of the British sea) which by little and little removeth the shores.

Burgus what it is.

Zosimus l. 4.
 Saxons in Holland.
 Janus Douza
 in his Nomenclator.

Britten an herb.

Zeland.
 See pag. 333. &
 441.
 Toliapis.
 Caunus.
 Canvey.
 See in Essex,
 Shepey.

Goodwin
 Sands.

Some call it
 Lomea.

The British narrow sea.

A shores farther asunder, that were in manner meeting together, and by the driving backe of the lands on both sides equally, floweth between Britaine and France from East to West. At this beginneth the British sea : wherein first you meet with the I-land, or byland rather, Selisy, in the English Saxon tongue, Seolp-æa, that is, according to Bede, The Iland of Sea-calves, which in our tongue we call otherwise Seales. But hereof I have spoken already in the page 308.

Somewhat higher lieth the Isle Veſſa, in the British tongue Guisb, in the Saxon, Wirc-lanð, and Wicp-æa, for the Saxons tearmed an Iland Æa, wee The Isle of Wight, and Wight. Whereof also I have written before in the 273. page.

B Of Poriland likewise, which now is no Iland, but annexed to the continent, I have treated heretofore in Dorsetshire in the page 210.

Hence will I cut over to the shore of France just against it; where from Beer-slees in Normandy unto the midst of the Channell, the sea, by the Mariners saying, is paved, as it were, and overspred with rocks and craggies : among which, William sonne to King Henry the first, and heire both of England and of Normandy, whiles he crof-sed the seas out of Normandy into England, in the yeere of salvation 1120. was by woefull shipwracke, together with his sifter, his base brother, and others of the floure of the nobility, drowned. Whereupon a Poet of that age thus verified.

C
Abstulit hunc terræ maris unda noverca,
Proh dolor ! occubuit Sol Anglicus, Anglia plora :
Quæq; prius fueras gemino radiata nitore,
Extincto nato vivas contemna parente.

Him, from the land his mother kind, the Sea a stepdame caught;
 Now Englands Sunne, alas, is set : weepe England, weep for thought:
 And thou that didst enjoy the beames of twofold light before,
 Since Sonne is gone, content thy selfe with father and no more.

D
Funus plangendum, prius lapis æquoris unum,
Et raris una suo principe regna duo.
 O dolefull day, one rocke in Ocean maine,
 One barke of Prince bereaveth kingdoms twain.

And another Poet at the same time hammered out these verses touching that shipwracke.

E
Dum Normannigenæ Gallis clavis superatis,
Anglica regna petunt, obstitit ipse Deus :
Aspera nam fragili dum sulcant æquora cymba,
Intulit excito nubila densa mari.
Dumque vagi cæco rapiuntur tramite nauta,
Ruperunt imas abdita saxa rates.
Sic mare dum superans tabulata per ultima serpsit,
Mersit rege satos, occidit orbis honos.

Whiles Normans after victories of Noble Frenchmen won,
 Make saile for England, God himselfe withstood them all anon.
 For as the rough and surging waves they cut with brittle barke,
 He brought upon the troubled sea thicke fogges and weather darke:
 Whiles sailers then in coasts unknowne were driven and bal'd astray,
 Upon blind rockes their ships were split and quickly cast away.
 Thus when salt water entred in, and upmost hatches caught,
 Drown'd was that royall progeny, worlds honour came to naught.

More Westward, certaine Ilands affront France, yet under the Crowne of England : and first of all upon the coast of Normandy, or the Lexobii (whom our Britans or Welshmen tearme Leuw, as one would say Littorales, that is, Coast-men) lieth Alderney,

Alderney.

Alderney, which in the Records is named Aurney, Aureney, and Aurigny: so that it A may seeme to be that ARICA, which in Antonine, according to the King of Spaines copie, is reckoned among the Isles of the British sea. Others hold it to be that EODIA, or EVODIA, whereof Paulus Diaconus only hath made mention, who had small skill of this coast; which he placeth thirty miles from the shore of Seine, and telleth of a rumbling & roaring noise of waters, falling into a gulf or Charybdis, that is heard a far off. This Alderney lieth in the chiefe trade of all shipping passing from the Easterne parts to the West: three leagues distant from the coast of Normandy, thirty from the nearest part of England, extended from South East to the North West, and containeth about eight miles in circuit, the South shore consisting of high cliffes. The aire is healthfull, the soile sufficiently rich, full of fresh pastures and corn-fields: yet the inhabitants poore, through a custome of parting their lands into small parcells by Gavelkind. The towne is situate well neere in the midst of the Isle, having a parish Church, and about 80. families, with an harbour called Crabbie some mile off. On the East side there is an ancient fort, and a dwelling house built at the charge of the Chamberlans: for the fee farme of the Isle was granted by Queene Elizabeth to G. Chamberlane, son to Sir Leonard Chamberlane of Shirburne in Oxfordshire, when he recovered it from the French. And under this fort, the sand with violent drifts from the Northwest overlaid the land, so that now it serveth thereabout most for conies.

I know not whether I were best to relate of a Giants tooth, one of the grinders, C which was found in this Island, of that bigge size that it equalled a mans fist; seeing Saint Augustine writeth of one that himselfe saw, so bigge, that if it were cut in small peeces to the proportion of our teeth, it seemed it might have made an hundred of them.

Casquettes.

Hence Westward there runneth out a craggy ridge of rockes, which have their severall eddies, and therefore feared of the Mariners, who tearme them Casquettes. Out of one of the which properly named Casquer, there gusheth a most sweet spring of fresh water, to the great comfort of the Island-fishermen beating up and downe hereabout. At these, to remember incidently (that the memorie of a well-deserving Patriot may not perish) the fleet which John Philips D Citizen of London set forth and manned at his owne private charges, had a glorious victorie over a rabble of Pirates, who impeached all trafficke, taking their Capitaine, and fifteene Spanish ships that conformed with them. Which worthy man also maintained 1000. souldiers at his owne pay for defence of the Realme against the French, who fore infested the Southern coast in the beginning of the reigne of King Richard the second, to omit his great loanes to the King, and other good and laudable offices to his country. Under these lieth Southward CÆSAREA, whereof Antonine hath written, scarce twelve miles distant from Alderney, which name the Frenchmen now have clipped so short, as the Spaniards have CÆSARAUGUSTA in Spaine: for they call it Gearzey, like as Cherburgh for Cesarisburgum, and Saragose for Cesar augusta. Gregorius Turonensis calleth it, the Island of the sea that lieth to the City Constantia, where hee reporteth how Prætextatus Bishop of Roan was confined hither: like as Papirius Massonius tearmeth it, the Isle of the coast of Constantia, because it butteth just upon the ancient city Constantia, which may seeme in Ammianus to be named CASTRA CONSTANTIA, and in the foregoing ages Morionium. For Robert Montensis writeth thus: Comes Morionii, id est, Constantiarum, if that be not a glosse of the transcriber. For Morionium, which now is Mortaigne, is farther distant from the sea.

Gerzey.

Castra Constantia.
Moritavum.

This Isle is thirty miles or thereabout in compass, fenced with rockes and shelves, which are shallow places, dangerous for such as saile that way. The ground is fertile enough, bearing plenty of fundry sorts of corne, and breeding cattail of divers kinds, but sheepe especially, and most of them with faire heads, carrying foure hornes a peece. The aire is very wholesome and healthy, not subject to any other diseases but agues in September, which thereupon they tearme Settembers, so that there is no being for Physicians here. And for that it is scarce of fuell, in stead of fire

A fire wood they use a kind of Sea weed which they call Uraic, deemed to be that Fucus marinus, which Plinie mentioneth, and groweth every where about in craggy Islands, and on rockes most plenteously. This being dried at the fire, serveth for to burne; with the ashes whereof (as it were with Marle and the fat of the earth) they dung commonly their fields and fallows, and thereby make them very barle & fruitful. Neither are they permitted to gather it but in the spring and summer season; and then upon certaine daies appointed by the Magistrate. At which time, with a certaine festivall mirth, they repaire in numbers from all parts to the shore with their carres, as also to the rockes neere unto them they speed themselves a vie with their Uraic.

Fucus marinus.

B fisher-boats. But whatsoever of this kind the sea casteth up, the poore may gather for their owne use. The inward parts of the Isle gently rise and swell up with pretty hills: under which lye pleasant vallies watered with riverets, and planted with fruitful trees, but apple trees especially, of which they make a kind of drinke. Well stored it is with farme places and villages, having within it twelve Parishes, and furnished on every side with creeks and commodious rodes: among which the safest is that in the South part of the Isle, betwene the two little townes, Saint Hilaries and Saint Albans: which harbour hath also a little Island belonging to it, fortified with a garison, having no way of access unto it: wherein, by report, Saint Hilarie Bishop of Poitiers, after he had beene banished hither, was entered. For the towne dedicated to his name just over against this Island is accounted the principall towne, both in regard of the mercate and trafficke there, as also of the Court of Justice which is there established. On the East-side, where it faceth the citie Constantia, there is seated upon a steep rocke a most strong castle, with an haughty name called Mont Orgueil, which is much beholden unto King Henry the fifth, who repaired it. The Governour of the Isle is Captain thereof, who in times past was called the Custos of the Isle, and in Henry the third his reigne had a yeerely pension of 200. pound. On the South side, but with longer distance betwene, Saint Malo is to be seene, having taken that new name of Maclou a very devout man, where before time it was called the city Diablinum, and in the ancient Notice, ALBETUM: for in a Manuscript of Isidorus Mercator, we read thus in expresse termes, Civitas Diablinum &c. that is, the city Diablinum, which by another name is called Alatum. As for the inhabitants, they freshly practice the feat of fishing, but give their minds especially to husbandry: and the women make a very gainfull trade by knitting of hofe, which they call Jarsey Stockes or Stockings.

As touching the politicke state thereof, a Governour sent from the King of England is the chiefe Magistrate: hee appointeth a Bailiffe, who together with twelve Jurats or sworn Assistants, and those chosen out of the twelve severall parishes, by the voices of the Parishioners, sitteth to minister justice in Civill causes: in criminall matters he sitteth but with seven of the said sworn assistants, and in causes of conscience to be decided by equity and reason with three.

Twenty miles hence North-west, lieth another Island, which Antonine the Emperour in ancient time named SARNIA, we at this day Garnsey, lying out East and West in fashion of an harpe, neither in greatnesse nor in fruitfulness comparable to Jersey; for it hath in it only ten parishes, yet is this to be preferred before it, because it fostereth no venomous thing therein, like as the other doth. It is also better fortified by naturall fences, as being enclosed round with a set of steepe rockes, among which is found that most hard and sharpe stone Smyris (which we terme Emerill) wherewith Goldsmiths and Lapidaries cleanse, burnish, and cut their precious stones, and glaziers also divide and cleave their glasse. Likewise it is of greater name for the commodiousness of the haven, and the concourse of merchants resorting thither. For in the farthest part well neere Eastward, but on the South side, it admitteth an haven within an hollow Bay bending inward like an halfe Moone, able to receive tall ships; upon which standeth Saint Peters, a little towne built with a long and narrow street, well stored with warlike munition, and ever as any warre is toward mightily replenished with Merchants. For by an ancient priviledge of the Kings of England, here

Sarnia.
Garnsey.
Haply Granonaby, a transposition of letters, which the Norritia placeth in the Tract of Armorica. Smyris.

is

is alwaies a continuall truce, as it were: and lawfull it is for Frenchmen and others, A how hot soever the warre is, to have repaire hither too and fro without danger, and to maintaine entercourse of trafficke in security. The entry of the haven, which is rockie, is fortified on both sides with castles. On the left hand there is an ancient bulwarke or block-houſe, and on the right hand over againſt it ſtandeth another (called Cornet) upon an high rocke, and the ſame at every high water compaſſed about with the ſea. Which in Queene Maries daies, Sir Leonard Chamberlane Governour of the Iland, as alſo under Queene Elizabeth, Sir Thomas Leighion his ſucceſſour, cauſed to bee fortified with new workes. For here lieth for the moſt part the Governour of the Iland, and the Garriſon ſouldiers: who will in no hand ſuffer Frenchmen and women to enter in. On the North ſide there is La-vall, a biland adjoining unto it, which had belonging thereto a covent of religious perſons, or a Priory. On the Weſt part neere unto the ſea, there is a lake, that taketh up a mile and halfe in compaſſe, replenished with fiſh, but Carpes eſpecially, which for bigneſſe and pleaſant taſte are right commendable. The inhabitants are nothing ſo induſtrious in tilling of the ground as thoſe of Jarſey, but in navigation and trafficke of merchandiſe, for a more uncertaine gaine they be very painfull. Every man by himſelfe loveth to huſband his owne land, ſo that the whole Iland lieth in ſeverall, and is divided by enclouſures into ſundry parcels: which they find not onely profitable to themſelves, but alſo a matter of ſtrength againſt the enemye. Both Ilands ſmile right pleaſantly upon you, with much variety of greene gardens and orchards: by meanes whereof, they uſe for the moſt part a kinde of wine made of apples, which ſome call Siferia, and we Sydre. The inhabitants in both places are by their firſt originall either Normans or Britans, and ſpeake French: yet diſdaine they to be either reputed or named French, and can very well be content to be called Engliſh. In both Ilands likewiſe they burne uraic for their fuell, or elſe ſea-coals brought out of England: and in both places they have wonderfull ſtore of fiſh, and the ſame manner of civill government.

Normandy loſt. Theſe Ilands, with others lying about them, belonged in old time to the Dukedom of Normandy, but when as Henry the firſt King of England had vanquiſhed his brother Robert, in the yeere of our Lord 1108. he annexed that Dukedom, and theſe Ilands unto the kingdom of England. Since which time they have continued firme in loialtie unto England, even when John King of England being ended for murdering Arthur his Nephew, was by a definitive ſentence or arreſt of conſiſcation, deprived of his right in Normandy, which he held in chiefe of the French King: yea moreover when the French had ſeized upon theſe Iſles, hee through the faithfull affection of the people twice recovered them. Neither revolted they when Henry the third King of England had, for a ſumme of money, ſurrendered his whole intereſt and right in Normandy. And ever ſince they have, with great commendation of their conſtancy, perſiſted faithfull unto the Crowne of England, and are the onely remains that the Kings of England have of the ancient inheritance of William the Conquerour, and of the Duchy of Normandy: although the French otherwhiles have ſet upon them, who from the neighbour coaſt of France have hardly this long time endured to ſee them appertaine not to France but to England. And verily Evan, a Welch Gentleman, deſcended from the Princes of Wales, and ſerving the French King, ſurprized Garneſey in the time of King Edward the third: but ſoone loſt it. And alſo in the reigne of King Edward the fourth, as appeareth by the records of the Realme, they ſeized upon the ſame: but through the valour of Richard Harleſton, vane of the Crowne (for ſo they termed him in thoſe daies) they were ſhortly diſſeized: and the King, in recompence of his valorous ſervice, gave unto him the Caprainſhip both of the Iland and of the caſtle. And in the yeere 1549. when F England, under King Edward the ſixth a child, was diſtreſſed with domeſtick troubles, Leo Strozzi Captaine of the French Gallies gave the attempt to invade it, but with the loſſe of many of his men had the foile, and deſiſted from his enterpriſe.

As touching the Eccleſiaſtickall juuriſdiction, they were under the Biſhop of Conſtance in Normandy, untill that hee in our remembrance reſuſed to abjure the Popes authority

A authority in England (as our Biſhops doe). Since which time they were by Queene Elizabeth ſevered from the Dioceſſe of Conſtance, and united for ever to the Dioceſſe of Wincheſter, ſo as the Biſhop of Wincheſter and his ſucceſſours execute every thing appertaining to the Episcopall juuriſdiction: yet their Eccleſiaſtickall diſcipline is conformable to the Church of Geneva, which the French Miniſters have brought in. As for the civill cuſtomes of theſe Ilands, I could now note ſome of them out of the Kings records: namely, How King John inſtituted twelve Coroners ſworn to keepe the pleas and rights belonging to the Crowne, and granted for the ſecurity of the Ilanders, that the Bailiffe henceforth by advice of the Coroners, might plead without writ of a new diſſeiſin made within the yeere, of the death of any anceſſours and predeceſſours within a yeere, of dowry likewiſe within a yeere, &c. Moreover, that the ſaid Juries may not delay their judgements beyond the tearme of one yeere: likewiſe that in Cuſtomes and other things they ſhould be dealt withall, as naturall inborn inhabitants, and not as ſtrangers or ſorrainers. But theſe points I think good to leave unto others, who may ſearch more curiouſly into particulars. Generally, the cuſtomes of Normandy take place here in moſt caſes.

Touching Serke, a little Iland that lieth betweene theſe above named, walled about, as it were, with mighty ſteepe rockes, in which I. de S. Owen of Jarſey (whoſe antiquity of deſcent ſome avouch (I know not upon what credit and authority) from before Saint Owens time) by commiſſion from Queene Elizabeth, and for his owne commodity, as the report goeth, made a plantation, whereas before time it lay deſolate. As touching Jethow, which for the uſe of the Governour of Garneſey ſerveth in ſteed of a parke, to feed cattell, to keepe Deere, conies, and pheſants: as alſo touching Arme, which being larger than the other, was firſt a ſolitary place for Regular Chanons, and after for the Franciſcan Friars; ſeeing they are not mentioned by the old writers, I have no reaſon to ſpeake much of them.

After theſe, upon the ſame coaſt, L I O A, whereof Antonine maketh mention, ſhooteth up his head, which retaineth the name ſtill, and is now called Ligon. Then lye there ſpread and ſcattered ſeven Ilands, termed by Antonine S I A D A E, of the number: for Saiib in the Britiſh tongue betokeneth ſeven; which the Frenchmen at this day terme Leſer Iſles. And I ſuppoſe theſe Siades to be corruptly called Hiadate by Sirabo: for from theſe, as hee ſaith, it is not a daies ſailing into the Iland of Britaine. From theſe S I A D A E to B A R S A, whereof Antonine alſo hath made mention, there is the diſtance of ſeven furlongs. The Frenchmen call it the Iſle de Bas, and the Engliſh Baſepole: For the Britans tearme that Bas which is ſhallow, and the Mariners by ſounding finde the ſea in this place to be more ebbe and ſhallow: as which lieth not above ſeven or eight fathomes deepe: whereas along all the ſhore beſide, the ſea carrieth 12. 18. and twenty fathoms of water, as we may ſee in their Hydrographical cards. Howbeit betweene theſe Ilands and Foy in Cornwall this our Britiſh ſea, as Mariners have obſerved, is of a mighty depth, which they meaſure to be in the channell fifty eight fathoms deepe, or thereabout. From hence I will now cut over to the coaſts of our owne Britaine, and keeping along the ſhore, as I paſſe by Ideſton, Moulſhole, and Longſhips (which be rather infamous and dangerous rocks than Ilands) at the very utmoſt point of Cornwall, lieth Antonines L I S I A, now called of them that dwell thereby Leihonſow, but of others The Gulfe, ſcene onely at a low water when the tide is returned. I take this to be that Liſia which ancient writers doe mention; becauſe Lú (as I have heard among our Britans in Wales) ſigniſieth the ſame. For Liſo foundeth as much as to make a noiſe with a great rumbling or roaring, ſuch as commonly we heare in Whirlepiis: and in that place the current or tide of the Ocean ſtriveth againe with a mighty noiſe both Northward and Eaſtward to get out, as being reſtrained and pent in, betweene Cornwall and the Ilands which Antonine calleth S I G D E L E S, Sulpius Severus S I L L I N A E, Solinus S I L U R I S, Engliſhmen Silly, the low country Sea-men Sorlings, and the ancient Greeke writers tearme H E S P E R I D E S and C A S S I T E R I D E S. For Dioniſius Alexandrinus named them Hesperides of their Weſterne ſituation, in theſe verſes.

Serke.

Set-Iles.

Barſa.

Baſepole.

Where the Britiſh ſea is deepeſt.

Liſia by tranſpoſition of letters Silia.

αὐτὸς δὲ ἄλλος
 Ἰσλὸν, ἢ ἐν τῇ μὲν ἑσπέρῳ
 Νῆος δ' ἑσπέρῳ, τῶν ἡγεμονῶν τῶν ἡσπέρων.
 Ἀπὸ τοῦ ἡσπέρων ἀπὸ τοῦ ἡσπέρων Ἰσπέρων.

Which Priscian translated thus:

* Sacrum Promontorium.

Sed summam contra Sacram cognomine dicunt,
 Quam caput Europa, sunt stanni pondere plena Hesperides; populum tenuit quas fortis Iberi.*

Which may be englished thus.

Now just beneath that Isle which Sacred, High,
 And head of Europe men are wont to call,
 The Islands nam'd Hesperides do lie,
 And those well stor'd with Tin, a rich metall.
 But would ye know the people? then note well,
 The glorious wealthy Spaniards therein dwell.

These also Festus Avienus, in his poeme entituled Ora Maritima, that is, The sea coasts, called Ostrymnides: touching which he inserted these verses, as they are found in the Paris edition, and the notes upon the same.

Non usque navibus, ve read in the notes of Paris.

*In quo insula sese exerunt Oestrymnides
 Laxe jacentes, et metallo divites
 Stanni atque plumbi: multa vis hic gentis est,
 Superbus animus, efficax solertia,
 Negotiandi cura iugis omnibus
 Nolusque cumbis turbidum late fretum
 Ex belluosi gurgitem Oceani secans;
 Non hi carinas quippe pinu texere
 Facere morem non abiete, ut usum est,
 Curvant phasello: sed rei ad miraculum
 Navigia junctis semper aptant pellibus,
 Corioque vastum saepe percurrunt salum.*

Wherein the Isles Oestrymnides doe spread,
 And shew themselves broad lying all about,
 In metals rich as well of tin as lead:
 The people strong, their stomachs high and stout,
 Active and quick, fresh merchants all throughout:
 No troublous waves in Frith or Ocean maine,
 Of monsters full, with ships cut they in twaine.
 For why? no skill at all have they to frame,
 Of Pinetree keels for barke or gallion:
 Nor know they how to make oares to the same,
 Of fyrrer or maple wood, where sailes are none,
 As others use: But which is wonder one,
 Of stitched hides they all their vessels make,
 And oft through sea in leather, voiage take.

Like vessels unto which were used in this our sea, in the yeere of salvation 914.
 For we read of certaine devout men, that in a Carab (or carogh) made of two tanned hides onely and an halfe, sailed out of Ireland into Cornwall. Afterwards also of the said Islands the same Avienus wrote thus:

Tartessusque in terminis Oestrymnidum Negotiandi mos erat, Carthagini Etiam colonis.

Those of Tartessus eke, as well
 As they in Carthage towne that dwell,
 Were wont to trade for merchandise,
 To skirts of Isles Oestrymnides.

Other

A Other Greeke writers tearmed these Cassiterides, of Tinne: like as Strabon nameth a certaine place among the Drangi in Asia, Cassiteron, of Tinne: and Stephanus in his booke of Cities, reporteth out of Dionysius, that a certaine Iland in the Indian sea was called Cassiteria, of Tinne. As for that Mictis, which Pliny citeth out of Timaeus, to bee fixe dayes sailing inward from Britaine, and to yeeld Mines of white lead, that it should be one of these, I dare scarcely affirme. Yet am I not ig-rant, that the most learned Hermolam Barbarus read it in manuscript books, Mitteris for Mittis, and doth read for Mitteris, Cartiteris. But that I should avouch these to be those Cassiterides so often fought for, the authority of the ancient writers, their site, and the mines of Tinne, are motives to perswade me. Full opposite unto the Artabri, saith Strabo (over against which the West parts of Britain doe lye) appeare those Islands Northward which they call Cassiterides, placed after a sort in the same clime with Britaine. And in another place: The sea between Spaine and the Cassiterides is broader than that which lieth between the Cassiterides and Britain. The Cassiterides look toward the coast of Celtiberia, saith Solinus: And Diodorus Siculus, in the Islands next unto the Spanish sea, which of Tinne are called Cassiterides. Also Eustathius, There be ten Islands called Cassiterides lying close together Northward. Now, seeing these Isles of Silly are opposite unto the Artabri, that is, Gallitia in Spaine, seeing they bend directly North from them, seeing they are placed in the same clime with Britaine, seeing C they looke toward the coast of Celiberia, seeing they are dis-joined by a faire broad der sea from Spaine than from Britaine, seeing they are next unto the Spanish sea, seeing they lye hard one by another toward the North, and ten onely of them bee of any good account, namely, Saint Maries, Annois, Agnes, Sampson, Silly, Breffer, Russo or Trescam, Saint Helens, Saint Martins, and Aribur, and that which is most materiall, seeing they have veines of Tinne, as no other Iland hath beside them in this tract, and considering that two of the lesse sort, to wit, Minanwulham, and Minuisssand, may seeme to have taken their names of Mines, I would rather think these to be Cassiterides, than either the Azores, which beare too far West, or Cisarga with Olivarius, that lieth in manner close unto Spaine, or even Britain it selfe with Ortelius; D considering there were many Cassiterides; and Dionysius Alexandrinus after he had treated of the Cassiterides, writeth of Britaine apart by it selfe.

If any man by reason of the number deny these to be Cassiterides, for that they be more than ten, let him also number the Hebudes and the Orcades, and if after the account taken, he finde neither more nor fewer with Proton than five Hebudes, and 30. Orcades, let him search in any other place but where they are now extant, and with all his searching by reckoning of the numbers, I know for certaine he shall not easily finde them. But the ancient writers had no certaine knowledge of these most remote parts and Islands of the earth in that age, no more than wee in these daies of the Isles in the Streights of Magellane, and the whole tract of New Guiney.

E And that Herodotus had no knowledge of these, it is no marvell: for himselfe con-fesseth that hee knew nothing for certaine, to make report of the farthest parts of Europe. But lead was brought first from hence into Greece. Lead, saith Pliny, in his eight Booke, and in the Chapter of the first Inventours of things, Midacrus first brought out of the Iland Cassiteris. But as touching these Islands, listen what Strabo saith in his third Booke of Geography, toward the end. The Islands Cassiterides be in number ten, neere one unto another, situate in the deepe sea, Northward from the haven of the Artabri. One of them is desert, the rest are inhabited by men wearing blacke garments, clad in side-coats reaching downe to their ankles, girt about the breast, and going with slaves, like unto the Furies in Tragedies. They live of their castell, F straggling and wandring after a sort, as having no certaine abiding place. Metall mines they have of tinne and of lead, in lieu whereof and of skins and furses they receive by exchange from the Merchants, earthen vessels, salt, and brasen workes. At the beginning the Phoenicians only traded thither from Gades, and concealed from others this their navigation.

But when the Romanes followed a certaine Master of a Shippe (that they themselves might might learne this trafficke of merchandise he, upon a spitefull envie, ran his ship for the A nonce upon the sands; and after hee had brought them that followed after into the same danger of destruction, himselfe escaped the shipwracke, and out of the common Treasury received the worth of the commodities and wares that he lost. Howbeit the Romans, after they had tryed many times, learned at length the voiage thither. Afterwards Publius Crassus when hee had sailed thither, and scene how they digged not very deepe in these Mines, and that the people were lovers of peace and lived quietly, desired also to saile upon the sea, he shewed the feat thereof to as many as were willing to learne: although they were to saile a greater sea than that which reacheth from thence to Brittain.

But to discourse no farther whether these were the ancient Cassiterides or no, and B to returne to Silly. There bee about an hundred forty and five Ilands carrying this name, all clad with grasse, or covered with a greenish mosse, besides many hideous rockes, and great craggy stones raising head above water, situate as it were in a circle round, eight leagues from the lands end, or utmost point of Cornwall West-South-West. Some of them yeeld sufficient store of corne, but all of them have a abundance of conies, cranes, swannes, herons, and other sea-foule. The greatest of them all is that which tooke the name of Saint Marie, having a towne so named, and is about eight miles in compasse, offereth a good harbour to Saylers in a sandie Bay, wherein they may anchor at fixe, seven, and eight fathom; but in the entry lye some rockes on either side. It hath had anciently a castle, which hath yeilded to C the force of time. But for the same Queene Elizabeth in the yeere 1593. when the Spaniards, called in by the Leaguers of France, began to nestle in little Brittain, built a new castle with faire and strong ravelines, and named the same Stella Maria, in respect both of the ravelines, which resemble the raies of a starre, and the name of the Isle; for defence whereof thence there placed a garrison under the command of Sir Francis Godolphin.

Stella Maria.

Doublelesse these are those Ilands, which (as Solinus writeth) a troublous and rough narrow sea separate by the space of two or three houres sailing from the coast of the Dan- mony, and the inhabitants whereof observe the custome of ancient times. They have no faires nor mercates, and refuse mony; they give and take one thing for another, they pro- D vide themselves of necessaries by way of exchange, rather than by prising and giving of money, they serve the gods devoutly: both men and women will be counted wizzards, and skilfull foretelling things to come.

Eustathius out of Sirabo termeth the inhabitants Melanichlanos, because they were clad in blacke garments reaching downe to the ankles: and as Sardus was perswaded, they depart out of this world for the most part so long livers, that they desire to live no longer. For from the top of a rocke (as he saith) they throw themselves into the sea, in hope of a more happy life: which doubtlesse was the perswasion of the Britain Druides.

Hither also the Roman Emperours were wont to send persons condemned to work E in the Mines. For Maximus the Emperour, when he had condemned Priscillianus to death for heresie, commanded his sectaries and disciples, Justianus a Bishop of Spain, and Tiberianus, after their goods were confiscate, to be carried away into the Ilands of Silly: and Marcus the Emperour banished him, that in the commotion of Cassius had prophesied and uttered many things, as it were by a divine instinct of the gods, into this Iland, as some are verily perswaded, who willingly for Syria Insula read Sy- lia Insula, that is, The Isle of Silly, considering the Geographers as yet know no such Iland as Syria. This confining or packing away of offenders into Ilands, was in those daies a kind of exile; and the Governours of Provinces might in that manner banish, if they had any Ilands under them: if not, they wrote unto the Emperour, that him- F selfe would assigne some Iland for the party condemned: neither was it lawfull without the privy of the Prince to translate else whither, or to bury the body of him that was thus banished into an Iland.

In the Writers of the middle time wee finde not so much as the name of these

Stipian lib. 7. de Mathematicis.

A these Ilands of Silly, but onely that King Athelstane subdued them, and after his returne built a Church in honour of S. Beriana or Buriana, in the utmost promontory Westward of Brittain, where he landed.

Full against these on the French coast, lyeth Plinius AXANTOS, an Isle right before the Ossismi, or Brittain Armorica, which keeping still the name whole, is called Uthant: Antonine rearmeth it UXANTISSENA, in which one word two Ilands grew together, to wit, UXANTIS and SENA. For this Iland lieth somewhat lower, now called Sayn, which butting full upon Bress, is named in some copies SIAMBIS, and of Pliny corruptly Sounos: about which from East to West, for seven miles to-B gether or thereabout, there shoore forth a number of rockes rather than Ilands, standing very thick together. Touching this Sain, take with you that which Pomponius Me- la reporteth. SENA, saith he, lying in the British sea opposite unto the shores of the Ossis- mi, is famous by reason of the Oracle of a French God, whose Shee-Priests vowing perpetuall virginity, are said to be nine in number: the Frenchmen call them Zenas or Lenas, (for so read I with Turnebus, rather than Gallitenas) and men are of opinion, that they being endued with especiall endowments of nature, are able by enchantments to trouble the sea, and raise up windes, so turne themselves into what living creatures they list, to heale all those maladies, which with others are incurable, for to know also and to foretell things to come, &c.

Axantos.

Uthant.

Siambis.

Mariners call it the Seame.

C Beneath these there lie other Ilands in length, namely, Isles aux Motions, neere unto Pen-Mac, that is, the horse head: Gleran over against old Blavie (which at this day is Blavet) Grois and Bellisle, all which Pliny calleth VENETICÆ. For they lye opposite unto the Venetis in little Brittain, who I wot not whether they were so named, as one would say, Filhermen: for Venna in the ancient language of the Galls seemeth to signifie so much. These Sirabo supposeth to have been the founders and stockfathers of the Venetians in Italy: who writeth also, that they intended to have given Cesar battell at sea, when he minded the conquest of Brittain. These Ilands VENETICÆ, some out of Dionysius Afer terme NESIDBS, whereas in the Greek book we read Nootadon rip, that is, the Traile of the Ilands. Of which, Priscian out of him writeth D thus;

*Nec spatio distant Nesidum littora longe,
 In quibus uxores * Amnitem Bacchica sacra
 Concelebrant hedera foliis, et laque corymbis.
 Non sic Bisfionides Absynthi ad flumina Thraces, Exeris celebrant clamoribus uicinia.*

* Samnitum.

Nor distant farre from hence the shores doe lye
 Of Ilands, which Nesides many call,
 Wherein the wives of Amnites solemnly
 Concelebrate their high feasts Bacchanall
 E With Ivie leaves and berries covered all.
 The Thracian dames make not so loud a cry,
 At Bacchus feast, the river Absyntis by.

Which Festus Avienus also hath expressed in these verses:

*Hinc spumofum item ponti liquor explicat astum,
 Et brevis è pelago voricex subit: hic choros ingens
 Faminei cœtus pulchri colit Orgia Bacchi,
 Producit noctem ludus sacer: æra pulsant
 Vocibus & crebris laet sola calcibus urgent.
 Non sic Absynthi propè flumina Thraces, & alma Bisfionides, non quâ celeri ruit agmina Ganges, Indorum populi flata curant festa Lyæo.*

F From hence likewise the foaming sea displaies his swelling tide,
 And from the deep short whirl puffs rise. Here by the water side,
 A mighty sort of women meet, the feast of Bacchus faire
 To celebrate: their sacred sports last all night long. The aire

V v v v

Rings

Rings over head with voices shrill : and under foot, the ground
With many a friske and stampe of theirs in dancing doth resound.
Like noises make not Thracian Dames, the Biston wives, I say,
Along Abysinus river, while they use to sport and play :
Nor Indians neere swift Ganges streame farre in such frantick wise.
What time to God Liam they their set feasts solemnize.

Bacchus.

Now that Bellis is one of these foresaid Nesides, the authority of Strabo, from the faithfull report of other, doth prove sufficiently. For it lieth before the mouth of the river Loire : and Ptolomee placed the SAMNITÆ in a coast of France opposite unto it. For thus writeth Strabo. Moreover (they say) there is a little Island in the Ocean, lying not far into the deep sea, full against the mouth of Ligeris : that in it inhabit the wives of the Samnitæ, which are inspired with the infinit or divine power of Bacchus, and by ceremonies and sacrifices procure the favour of Bacchus : that no man cometh thither, but themselves taking their barks saile away and company with their owne husbands, and so returne againe into the Island. Also that a custome it is among them, to take away the rooffe of their temple yearly, and to cover it againe the very same day before the sunne setteth ; every one of the women bringing their burden : and look which of them letteth her burden fall, she is by the others torne in pieces : and that they gathering together the pieces as they goe unto the temple, make not an end before they be out of this furious fit : and that it alwaies usually happeneth, that one of them by falling downe of her burthen is thus torne peccemeale.

Thus old Authors, writing of the utmost parts of the world, took pleasure to insert pretty lies and frivolous fables. But what things are reported of Ceres and Proserpine, they carry with them, saith he, more probability. For the reports goeth of an Island neere unto Britaine, where they sacrifice to these Goddesses after the same manner that they doe in Samothrace.

Then follow the Isles aux Mottouns, Gleran, Grois, Belle-isle, upon the coast of little Britaine, Niermoufrier, and L'isle de Dieu upon the coast of Poitou, and Lisle de Re, Islands full well knowne, and much frequented for the plenty that they yeeld of bay salt : but for as much as they are not once mentioned by the ancient Geographers, it may be sufficient for me that I have named them. Onely the next Island, at this day knowne by the name of Oleron, was knowne to Pliny by the name of ULIARUS, which lieth, as he saith, in the Bay of Aquitaine, at the mouth of the river Charonton, now Charent, and had many immunities granted from the Kings of England, then Dukes of Aquitain. At which time it so flourished for marine discipline and glory, that these seas were governed by the lawes enacted in this Island in the yeere 1266. no lesse than in old time the Mediterranean sea by the lawes of Rhodes.

Hitherto have I extended the British sea, both upon the credit of Pomponius Mela, who stretcheth it to the coast of Spaine ; and upon the authority of the Lord Great Admirall of England, which extendeth so far. For the Kings of England were, and are rightfull Lords of all the North and West sea-coasts of France (to say nothing of the whole kingdome and crowne of France) as who, to follow the tract of the sea-coast, wan the county of Guines, Merk, and Oye by the sword, were true heires to the county of Pontibieu and Monstreuil by Eleanor the wife of King Edward the first, the onely heire thereof. In like manner most certain heires to the Dutchy of Normandy by King William the Conquerour, and thereby superiour Lords of Little Britaine dependant thereof ; undoubted heires of the counties of Anjou, Tourain, and Maine, from King Henry the second, whose patrimony they were : likewise of the county of Poitou, and Dutchy of Aquitaine or Guyenne, by Eleanor the true heire of them, wife to the said Henry the second ; to omit the counties of Tholouse, March, the homage of Auvergne, &c. Of all which the French by their arrefts of pretended forfeitures and confiscations have disseized the crowne of England, and annexed them to the Crowne of France ; taking advantage of our most unhappy civill dissentionis : whereas in former ages the French Kings were so fore-closed by these territories, as they had no access at all to the Ocean.

Nothing

Oleron.
Uliarus.

Lex Rhodia.

Admirall of England.Hereditary territories in France belonging to the Crowne of England.

A Nothing remaineth now, seeing my pen hath with much labour struggled and failed at length out of so many blind shelves and shallows of the Ocean, and craggy rocks of antiquity, save onely this, that as sea-men were wont in old time, to present Neptune with their torn sails, or some saved planks, according to their vow : so I also should consecrate some monument unto the ALMIGHTY and MOST GRACIOUS GOD, and to VENERABLE ANTIQUITY : which now right willingly and of duty I vow, and God willing in convenient time I will performe and make good my vow. Meane while I would have the Reader to remember, that I have in this worke wraisted with that envious and ravenous enemy TIME, of which the Greeke Poet
B Bung very aptly in this note.

Αγαλέως φέρε πολὺς χρόνον, ἀλλὰ παρέργων,
Καὶ φανὰς κλέπτει φθογχομένων μερόπων.
Καὶ μὴ φανομένης τὸς φανομένους ἀφανίζῃ,
Καὶ μὴ φανομένης εἰς φανερὸν ποσοφεί.

Hore-headed TIME full slowly creeps, but as he flye doth walke,
The voices he as flyely steales of people as they talke :
Unscene himselfe, those that be scene he hides farre out of sight,
And such againe as are not scene he bringeth forth to light.

But I for my part am wont ever and anon to comfort my selfe with this Distichon of Mimnermus, which I know to be most true.

Τὴν σ' αὐτὸ φρένα τέρπει, δυσεργίαν δὲ πολίταν,
Ἀλλὸς τις σὲ κραῶς, ἄλλος ἄμεινον ἔρει.

Heart take thine ease,
Men hard to please
Thou haply maist offend:
Though one speake ill
Of thee, some will Say better, there an end.

SOLI DEO GLORIA.

A

B

PHILEMON HOLLAND
THE TRANSLATOUR
TO THE READER.

C

This is now almost thirty yeeres agoe, since I enterprised the translation of this Master Camdens worke, entituled Britannia: and it is full twenty sixe yeeres since it was printed in English. In which former Impression, I being farre absent from the Presse, I know not by what unhappy and disastrous meanes, there passed, beside ordinary and literall Errata, many grosse and absurd mistakings and alterations of my translation, which was done precisely and faithfully according to the Authors Originall. VVhereof to give you but a touch or taste: Page 23. line 11. the Latine is, quàm Cambrica, i. Britannicagens, is printed, Than the British Britain, without all sense, for, E Than the Welch, that is, the British Nation. Page 38. line 15. Purple Tapestry remove, for, Purple Tapistry ridde, as it ought to bee. Page 200. line 14. of Saint Nicholas, for, Saint Michael, as it ought to be according to the Latin. Page 266. line 10. the Latine is, Aerem insalubrem, is crept in, Wholesome aire, for, Unwholesome aire, as it should bee. Besides, whole Verses and Lines left out, and eftsoones other VVords and Sentences foisted in: Substantives used for Adjectives, Adjectives for Substantives; Passive words used for Active, Actives for Passive; and so divers other passages

D

E

F

To the Reader.

passages, against the Law of Priscian, and Rules of Gram. ^A mar. Moreover, that Hiatus and want of number in some Verfes, in other some Hypermeter, all by mee translated with full feet and muscally measure: and in some places, for Sense, ^{use of} or down right nonsense, and such like stufte in above a hundred places. All which now by my means, ^B and command of the higher Powers, care of some of the Partner-Printers of this second Impression, and not without the industry and helpe of my onely Son H. H. a member of the Society of STACIONERS, are rectified, supplied, and amended, to the better illustration of the work, contentment and solace of the future diligent Readers, and perusers of the said VVorke. Vale. 85. Ætat. suæ, Anno C Dom. 1636.

Φ.

D

E

F

THE SHIRES OF ENGLAND.

B Arke-shire,	279	Middlesex,	419
Bedford-shire,	399	Monmouth,	631
Buckingham-shire,	393	Northfolke,	471
Cambridge-shire,	485	Northampton-shire,	505
Ches-shire,	601	Nottingham-shire,	547
Cornwall,	183	Northumberland,	799
Cumberland,	765	Oxford-shire,	373
Darby-shire,	553	Richmond-shire,	727
Devon-shire,	199	Rutland-shire,	525
Dorset-shire,	210	Shrop-shire,	589
Durham,	735	Somerset-shire,	220
Essex,	439	Stafford-shire,	581
Glocester-shire,	357	Suffolk,	459
Hant-shire,	258	Sussex,	306
Hereford-shire,	617	Surrey,	294
Hertford-shire,	405	Warwick-shire,	561
Huntington-shire,	497	Westmorland,	759
Kent,	324	Wilt-shire,	241
Lanca-shire,	745	Worcester-shire,	573
Leicester-shire,	517	Yorke-shire,	689
Lincoln-shire,	529

THE SHIRES OF VVALES.

A nglesey,	671	Flint-shire,	679
Brecknocke,	627	Glamorgan-shire,	641
Cardigan-shire,	657	Merioneth-shire,	665
Carmarden-shire,	649	Montgomery,	661
Carnarvon-shire,	667	Penbroke-shire,	651
Denbigh-shire,	675	Radnor-shire,	623

The first Index or Table, serving from the beginning of BRITAIN to the end of ENGLAND.

A		Edward Meaw, that is to say,	73f. 409f
The first letter, thus sh-		white,	126
ped, A	762c	Eneus Sylvius, that is, Pope	408e
Aaron a martyr,	73f. 636f	Pius Secundus,	410c
Ab-adam a Baron,	364d	Equity courts in England,	412d
Aballaba,	761a	Equivocation of Adam bishop	413c
Abandon or Abington,	279d	of Hereford,	320e
Aber,	21f	Ætica,	126
Aber Avon,	645f	Ætlii,	24b
Aberbury castle,	592f	Æternalis Domus, what it is,	Albinus created Caesar, 68. hee
Aber Conwey,	669e		usurpeth the Empire, 69. is
Aberford,	696b		staine, ibid.
Aberfraw,	672f	Ethelbald the good King of the	Albion, 1, 23. whence it tooke
Abergevenny,	635a	Mercians, 554 a. stabbed	name,
Abergevenny castle defamed for	635b	to death,	594a
treason,	635b	Ethiopians why sommed,	377b
Abergevenny Lords,	ibid.		Alcester,
Abbots, a family,	579b	Ethling, that is, the Prince,	Alwin a learned English Saxon,
Abus, the same that Humber,	710d		137f. 704c
Academia in Attica,	486f	Eton,	Albrow, 701 c. 731 c. 466 a
Accabler,	21f	Eton or Eton Schoole,	Aldelme Abbat, 244. a singular
Ackmancester,	234d		scholar and a devout man, ibid.
Acmunderness,	752e	Agelocum,	Aldersgate in London,
Altons,	364a		423d
Alton Burnel,	591f	Jul. Agricola Lieutenent of the	Algate in London,
Adam de Portu,	269a	twentieth legion in Britaine,	423e
Ad Ansam,	448c	53 c. Propretor in Britain,	Aldingham,
Adeliza a Queene her praises,	309a	54 b. discomfitteth the Ordo-	755d
Aden what it signifieth,	117c	vices, 54 c. d. conquereth	Ale the ancient Englishmens
Aderborne a river,	245d	Anglesey, ibid. his cruill and	drinke,
Adington,	510b	politicke government in Bri-	554f
Ad Lapidem,	262d	tain, 54 f. his martiall skill,	Alen a river,
Adminius,	418c	55. his other vertues and be-	676f. 681f
Admirals court,	180b	haviour, 55. 56. hee vanqui-	Alexander of Hales a great
Ad murum,	819c	sheth the Caledonians, 57. his	Clerke,
Adraste a goddesse among the		patience, 57. his Oration to	365a
Britains,	31c	his souldiers, 59. his victorie,	Alexander the homisfull Bishop
Adrian the Emperor in Britain,	65d	61. his modestie,	of Lincolne, 383 e. 539 d
Ad Rotum, &c.	449c	62	profuse in building, 549 d
Adalph re-edifieth Peterburgh		Agrippina the Empresse her	King Alexander the Great never
Abbey,	512f	haughtie mind,	in Britain,
Eleonor K. Edward the First		Aidon castle,	32d
his wife,	397a	Ailesburies gentlemen,	555e
Eleonor K. Henry the Third		Ailesburie,	379a
his widow liveth in a Nunnerie,		Ailesford,	14d
	254c	Ailwin Healf Koning,	Alford in Lincolnshire,
Eleonor Cobham,	304a	Ainsbury or Ainsulphsbury,	542b
K. Ælfred, a Prince much trou-		Ainulph a religious man, ibid.	Alingtons a familie,
bled, 224 b. c. First Mo-		Airmins a family,	489e
narch of England, 158 c. Se-		Akemanstreet-way,	406d
cond founder of Oxford Uni-		Alabaster stone,	79
versitie,	376b	Alabaster stone about Burton	Alabany,
Ælfstitha K. Edgars wife, 254 c		upon Trent,	126
262 b. a cruell and hatefull		Alan a river,	Alectus his treachery 73. is van-
stepdame,	211d	Alan the son of Flaold, 589 f	quished and slaine, ibid.
		Alaticus King of the Goths, 86 b	Allobroge,
		Alauna a river, 259 c. 813 c	19
		Alban a country,	Almans whence they tooke their
		Albanes whence they tooke their	name,
		name,	26 b. 124
		S. Alban of Verlam our Stephen	Almondbury,
		and Protomartyr of Britaine,	692d
			Alne river,
			566 a. 813 c
			Alnwick or Anwick,
			813 c
			Alon a river,
			801 e
			Alone,
			794 c
			Alpes of Britain,
			667 c
			Alpes why so called,
			24
			Alresford,
			262 e
			All-souls Colledge in Oxford, 38a
			Alsten more,
			799 f
			Alt a river,
			748 e
			X x x
			Althorp,

The Table of England.

Althorp, 508 d
 Altars of the Gentiles and their Religion, 751 d
 Alteryannis, 617 c
 Altmouth a towne, 748 e
 Alvertonshire, 723 e
 Alum made, 217 a
 Alum earth discovered by Sir Th. Chaloner, knight, 711 d Alured, See Elfred.
 Alwena a devout woman, 494 d
 Ambacht, 16
 Amboglana, 760 b
 Ambleside, ibid.
 Ambresbury, 254 b
 Ambro. what it is, 127
 Ambroses, ibid.
 Ambrosius Aurelius, 128
 Ambrosius Aurelianus, 254 b
 Amerham, 394 e
 Amphibalus a martyr, 636 f
 Ampthil, 401 d
 Anas a river, 297 a. why so called, 245 c
 Ancafter, 537 b
 Ancafter heath, ibid. d
 Andate or Andates a goddesse among the Britains, 31. 457 e
 Andradswald, 306 c
 Andragathius a traitour drowned himselfe, 83
 Anderida the weald, 329 d
 Anderneffe, 752 e
 Androgeus, Cynobelimus his sonne, the same that Mandrubatius, why so called, 417 e
 Anesty in Hertfordshire, 405 f
 Angel a Province in Dania, 130
 Angels, 610 c
 Ri. Angervil Philobiblos, 381 f
 Angles or Englishmen whence they came, 130
 Anglesey, 671. why so called, 672 c conquered by king Edward the first. ibid. d. invaded by Suetonius Paulinus, 49 Angotby, 545 a Angre, 440 b
 Ankam a river, 543 a
 Ankyre the river, 569 c
 Anne wife to King Richard the Second, 297 d
 Anne Bullen mother to Queene Elizabeth, 256 f
 Anna a Christian King, 466 a Annius Viterbiensis, 24
 Anselm against Priests marriage, 201 b
 Anty or Antient liberty, 707 a Ant or Anton a river, 260 e
 Antivestium, 187
 Anthony, 193

Antoninus Pius Britannicus, 66
 Philosophus, ibid.
 Anubis Latrans, 17
 Apelby, 761 a Apennini, 18
 Apollinaris an herbe, 98
 Appropriat Churches what they be, and how many, 161
 Aptorp, 514 e
 Aquila his prophesie, 214 e
 Aquileia the city commended, 83
 Aquitania why so called, 27
 Ara, 21
 Arar, ibid.
 Arar, 20
 Araris a river in France, 694 a Arat, 20
 Arbeia, 769 c
 Arches a court, 181
 Archbishop of Canterbury, 136
 Archbishops three in Britaine, 155. in England two, 160
 Arconfield, 618 a Archdeacons, 222 e
 Archdeacons in England how many, 161
 Archigubernius, 66
 Arduwy, 665 e
 Areol, 594 e
 Are a river, 693 f. why so called, 694 a Arians what they were, 81
 Arelate, 21
 Aremorica, 19
 Arfist Bishop of East England, 471 f
 Arden forest, 358 b
 Arden a forest in Warwickshire, 565 c
 Arders a family, 604 b
 Argentons, 406 d. 489 e
 Arians condemned, 77
 Arianisme in Britaine, 78
 Ariconium, 618 d
 Arifobulus mentioned by Saint Paul, in Britaine, 68
 Arlech castle, 665 e
 Armanthwaite, 777 f
 Armatura what they were, 783
 Armes of Ailsburies, 395 d
 Armes of Will. de Albeny, 320 c
 Armes of the Alfretons Barons, 555 e. of the Bainsards, 271. d of the Argentons, 406 d.
 of the Bardolps, 481 e. of the Blewets, 271 d. of the Bowes, 737 b. of the Bohuns, 311 f.
 of Brabant, 820 e. of Charleton Lord of Powis, 663 c. of Colchester, 451 a. of Cusan., 271 d. of Ela Countesse of Salisbury, 249 d. of the Ferrars,

526 a. of Sir Hen. Guildford, 352 b. of Harold, 617 d. of Hollands Knights, 749 d. of Th. Howard Duke of Norfolk, 483 c. Of the first Kings of England of Norman blood, 724. of the Lucies, 768 f. of Lumleys, 742 b. of the Mauleis, 719. of Montfichets, 453 of the Monthauls, 690 e. of the Mortimers de Attilborough, 473 b. of the Musfards, 555 f. of the Muschamps, 815 c. of Saier Quincy and Roger his sonne, 267 Armes of the Percies, 768. of the Percies and Lucies, ibid. of Redvers Earles of Denhire, 207 e. of the Scales, 405 e. of the Segraves, 563 f. of the Sturmes, 254 f. of the Lord Seurton, 245 b. of Vaulx, 786 e. of Vermadors, 304 b. of Vesey, 723 a. 722 f. of Viponts, 763. of Warren Earle, 304 b
 Armie of God and Holy Church, Arduwy, 665 e
 Armorica, 19. 12
 Armoric Britons whence they came, 5
 Arnulph of Montgomery conqueror of Penbrochsh. 655 a Arrow a river, 565 d
 Arrow a towne, 566 a
 Arthur a British Prince, 128
 Arthurs place of Nativitie and death, 194
 Ap. Arthur a writer, 632 f
 Arthurs battell against Moradred, 194
 Arthurs sepulchre, 227 f
 Arthurs Epitaph, 230 a, b
 Arthurs table, 776 d
 King Arthurs Palace, 221 b
 Artisans or Craftsmen, 177
 Arvandus his children killed, 262 d. 276 a Arveragus, 62
 Arundell Earles, 309. 310
 Th. Arundell Baron of Wardour, 245 a. Count of the Empire, ib.
 Arundale, 308 d
 Arundels Knights, 193
 Arwerton, 463 e
 S. Alaph a Bishops See, 679 d
 S. Alaph a goodly and npright man, ibid.
 Alfohes Knights, 543 a Ascor, 396 a
 Ashbie Mares, 507 b
 Ashbie

The Table of England.

Ashbie de la Zouch, 519 a Ashburnham, 317 e
 Ashburne in the Peake, 553 d
 Ashle manour, 481 f
 Ashdown, 442 f
 Ashridge, 395 a Ashford, 335 d
 Ashwell, 406 n
 Ashwell Thorp, 472 d
 Askerton castle, 782 f
 Askes a family, 729 f
 Asserius a learned Monk, 378 c
 Assises what they are, 445 e
 Astbury, 608 f
 Astley castle, 609 b
 Astleies Barons, ibid. b
 Astleies a noble family, 581 d
 Astleis Knights, 217 a
 Astons a family, 584 e
 Th. Aston the first head-schoole-master of Shrewsbury, 596 b
 Astroites a stone, 536 c
 Astwell, 505 e
 Athelney, 224 b
 Athelwold murdered by Edgmr, 262 b
 Atbyrston, 569 d
 Attrebatii, 278
 Attacotti, 79. 127
 Attal-Sarisin, 185
 Attilbridge, 473 d
 Attilburgh, ibid. b
 Attila the scourge of God, 197 a Atton a place and family, 722 b
 Atvallon an Island, 125 e
 Aubrey a family, 628 e
 Audience court, 181
 Audre causey, 459 d
 Audre, 492 e
 S. Audre or Etheldreda, ibid. f
 S. Andries Liberties, 493 c
 Avenon, 258 d
 Aven a river in Hantsire, 258 e
 Avens a family, 485 d
 Averbam or Aram a place, 549
 Aufon river, See Nen.
 Augusta, See London.
 Augusta what they be, 424 d
 Augustus Cesar intended a voyage into Britaine, 39. he neglected Britaine, ibid.
 Augustine Apostle of the English nation, 336 d. 135. where entered, 337 f. S. Augustines crosse, 342 a. Augustines oke, 578 d. e
 Aulus Atticus laine, 61
 Aulus Plantius sent into Britaine, 40. his exploits there, 41
 Mercate Auln, 269 a Awdleys or Aldeleghs, Barons, 583 e

Henry Awdley, 583 f. 584 a
 James Lords Awdley, 584 a Awdley end, 452 a
 Baron Awdley of Walden, 452 d
 Awkenbury, 501 c
 Awkland, 738 d
 Aulaf the Dane adopted, 261 f
 Aulmarie Earles, 715 b
 Auldy, 709 e
 Aulcester, 566 b
 Aulion castle, 587 c
 Avon a river in Somersetshire, 236 c
 Avon what it signifieth, 358 a Avon a river in Wiltshire, 242 a Avon river the lesse, 515 b. 517
 Avon a river in Wales, 665 e
 Avon-well, 515 b
 Aure a yellow or golden colour, 26
 Aurelius Conanus a tyrant, 113
 Aurelius Ambrose, 259 a Auvanches or de Abrincis, 349 b
 Austley castle, 588 e
 Aust-clive, 363 d
 S. Aulins Church in Canterbury, 337 e
 Ax a river, 206 f
 Axan minister, ibid. f
 Axelholme an Isle, 544 b
 B
 Ablac, 373 c
 Babithorp, name of a place and family, 710
 Babithorps father and sonne, ib. b
 Bacons a family, 405 f
 Sir Nicholas Bacon, L. Keeper, 461 f
 John Baconthorpe the resolute Doctor, 479 b Bad, 21
 Baddbury hill, 216 e
 Baddeley, 607 e
 Bartholmew Lord Badilmeere, 331 d
 Badesley, 564 d
 Baggington, 562 e
 Bagots, 586 e
 Bagmere Poole, 609 b
 Baines or Bathes much used, 732
 Bainsards castle in London, 424 b
 Bainsards, 24. f
 Basilth Colledge in Oxford, 381 c
 Baine a river, 727 f
 Bainhams, 359 a Baintbrig, ibid.
 Baskewell a river, 557 b
 Bala a towne, 666 e
 Baldach, 473 f
 Baldoock, 406 c
 Baldwin a Justice, 395 e
 Baldwin le Pertour, 464 b

Balshall a Commander of the Templars, 566 d
 Bamborow, 813 e
 Bampfilds a family, 203 e
 Bampton, 207 b
 Ban a river in Lincolnshire, 541
 Banbury, 376 a
 Banchor or Bangor Monastirie, 603 a Bannavenna, that is, Wedon, 508
 Bannes Downe, 234 b
 Bandogs or Mastives, 434 e
 Banerets, what title of Gentrie, 171 a Baram Down, 345 a Barangi, 154
 Barbacan in London, 433 d
 Bard, 4. 14. 15
 Bard, 19
 Bardolps Lords, their tenures of certaine Lands, 302 d Bardus, 19
 Bardney Abbey, 540 f
 Bardolps Barons, 481 e. 548 f
 Bariden a river, 473 d
 Barkley Barons, 229 a
 William Vicount Barkley Earle of Nottingham, 551 e
 Barklow, 452 e
 Barkshire, 129
 Barkway, 405 f
 Barnard castle, 736 e
 Saint Barnard Colledge in Oxford founded, 382 b. re-edified, 383 b
 Barley a towne and family, 405 f
 Barley the best, 485 b
 Barnwel Abbey, 487 f. Castle, 510 c
 Barnes, 415 e
 Barnes field, 415 d
 Barry an Island, 643 a Barries Vicounts in Ireland, 643
 Baringtons a family, 453 d
 Barington Hall, ibid.
 Bara what it signifieth, 168
 Barons what degree of honor, ib.
 Baronies many in Northumberland, 799 c
 Barons to Count-Palatine, 601
 Barons to the Count Palatine of Chester, 612 a. their office, ib.
 Barow, 521 b
 Barows or Burrows, 255 b
 Barton upon Humber, 542 f
 Baruch a holy man, 643 a Bascaads or Baskets, 491 e
 Baslica, 743 f
 Basile, 473 f
 Basing, 269 b. the honour of the Barons S. John Poinings and Powlets, 464 b

X x x x 2 Basing

The Table of England.

Basing Stoke,	269 b	Beauforts Dukes of Sommerfet,	414 c	Bellafse a family,	723 b
Basing Werk,	680 b	Beaulieu,	260 b	Bellers a noble family sometime,	522 f
Bakervills worthy knights,	620 c	Beaumanour parke,	521 d	Bellotmadrus,	691 d
Bassets a notable familie,	581 f	Beaumarish,	672 d	Benefician, what towne,	478 f
Bassets of Wellesdon,	514 d	Beaumeris,	594 a	Benedictine Monks,	226 d
Bassets of Brailesford,	553 d	John Beaumont the first Vicount		Benington,	407 f
Baston,	21	in England,	521	S. Benno,	680 c
Batable ground,	782 a	Beaumonts of Cole Orton aunci-		S. Bennaventa's Wedon,	508 c d
Batean,	21	ently and highly descended,	519	S. Bennit in the Holme an Ab-	478 c
Batersey,	303 a	Beaumont a family in Yorkeshire,	693 a	Bengley,	815 b
Batherton,	607 e	Rob. Beaumont of Pont Ando-		Ben-Gorion,	125
Bath gate,	557	mar Earle of Mellent and of		Bensford a family,	407 f
Bath Earles,	235 a	Leceister,	523 c	Bensbury for kyebensbury,	302 f
Bath Knights, 172. their dub-	ibid.	his race or progenie,	ibid. e	Benson,	388 d
Bath Citie, 233 b. the hot Wa-	ibid.	Beauvoir or Belvoir castle,	536 b	Bentley,	463 e
ters thereof,	ibid.	Beauvoir or Belvoir vale,	535 d	Bere park or Bean park nere to
Battell Bridge, alias Stanford		Bebba,	813 f	Durham,	741
Bridge,	709 e	Bebham,	ibid. e	Bericus a travour to Britaine,	40
Battell Abbey founded,	317 b	Ant. Bec or Beck Bishop of Dur-		Berengarius le Moigne, that is,
Battell of the Standard,	724 a	ham. nutrusty to his Ward,	328 a. 723 a	Monke,	510 e
Battell field,	596 c	Tho. Becket slaine by Courtiers,	337 b	Berkhamsted,	414 c
Battell at Nevils crosse,	741 b	Becco,	20	Bermingham or Bremicham, a
Battell at Solon Mosse,	782 a	Beda, 6. a learned Englishman,	137	towne and family,	567 b
Battell a towne,	317 c	Beda venerabilis,	744 a	Bermondsey Abbey,	434 b
Bauchade,	19	Bedw.	19	Bernack,	514 e
Baydes a family in Essex,	426 b	Beddington,	392 e	Benners a family,	405 d
Bawdsey haven,	465 d	Bedfordshire,	399	Bernicia,	817 a. 797 b
Beachy point,	313 d	Bedford towne,	ibid. e	Bernwood,	393 a. 395
Beacons,	272 d	Bedford Lords, Earls and Dukes,	402 f	Berabdon or Baradon,	525 f
Beavons of Southampton,	250 c	John Duke of Bedford his style		Berofus confuted,	10
Beamsfleet,	441 b	and monument,	403 a	Berry by Wicomb,	393 c
Beare the badge of the Earles of		Bedford,	408 a	Berfaple,	208 b
Warwicke,	570 b	Bedingfeild a place and family,	468 b	Bertelin an Eremitte,	584 d
Beafield,	695 a	De la Beech Knights,	282 e	Berwick towne,	816 c
Beachamps,	399 d	Beefon a castle and family,	607 b	Berwick what they be,	ibid. f
Henry Beauchamp Earle of War-		Saint Bees,	756 a	Berwic in Elmet,	696 b
wicke his stile. 570 b. Duke,		Saint Bega a devout Irish woman		Bery,	594 d
also of Warwicke,	ibid.	ibid.		Bery Pomerie,	202 a
John Beauchamp Baron of Ked-		Beichiad,	19	Betula or Betulla,	19
dermister,	574 b	Belerium what cape,	1	Betheny, See Stafford.
Richard Beauchamp Earle of		Belge in Gault and Britaine,	219 b. whence so named, ibid. d	Betony,	20
Warwicke, 563 c. his tombe		King Belem his Habergeon,	11	Beverley a towne,	711 d and epitaph,	564 a	Robert de Belesmo rebellte,	599 b	John of Beverley,	ibid.
Beauchamps Barons, Lords		591 d. a cruel man,	599 b	Beverly in Tivy river what crea-
Brooke,	223 f	Bellima a ftuarium, a frith,	752	tures they be,	657 e
William Beauchamp the blind		Bellister castle,	799 e	Beverston castle,	364 d
Baron,	574 b	Belin, Melin & Phelin, all one,	98	Bewfes of Lancashire,	745 c
Beauchamps court,	565 f	Belingsgate in London,	423 c	Bevils a family,	192. 562 a
Beauchamp Baron of Powich,		Belinnutia,	98	Bezants or Bezantines what
Beauchiefte Abbey,	555 e	Belinus a god, ibid. what it signi-		they be,	421 a
Beauchiffte,	313 d	feth,	391 e	Bibroc,	286 d
Beaudley,	573 e	Belleland or Biland,	723 b	Bie what it signifieth,	543 b
Beaufert,	585 a			Beglefwade,	401 c
Sir Thomas Beaufoe of ancient				Bigod, the name of Rollo the descent,	564 e			Norman,	144
John de Beaufort Earle of				Hugh Bigod, Lord chiefe ju-
Sommerfet, 230. refuseth the				stice of England,	482 c
title of Marquess Dorset,	217 d			Hugh Bigod Earle of Norfolk,	482 b
				Bigod, the name of hypocrites	and

The Table of England.

and superstitious persons,	144	Blith,	551 a	Botereux a family,	566 b
Bigods a family,	405 d	Blith a river,	586 d. 466 e	Botherwic,	544 d
Bigots a family,	633 c	Blithborough,	486 e	Botontines,	515 d
Bigrames a family,	501 c	Blithfield,	586 e	Bottlebrig or botolph Bridge,	502
Billesdon,	812 f	Chayles Blount or Blunt. Lord		Boughton,	510 a
Biland or Belleland,	723 b	Montjoy Earle of Devonshire,		Bovium,	643 c
Th. Billing Lord chiefe Justice		of the Kings bench,	505 e	Bourchiers Earls of bath,	598 c
Bindon,	212 b	Blounts or Blunts of Kinlet,	574		207 e
Binchefer,	738 e	why so called,	591 b	Bourchier Baron of Berners,	405 d
Binchefer penie,	ibid.	Blunts Barons Montjoy,	555 e	Bourchiers de Berners Lords,	472 d
Binbrige Isle,	274 a	Gilbert Blund,	461 d	Bourchiers an honorable family	450 d
Birdlip bill,	365 f. 366 c	Boadicia or Bunduica wife to			450 d
Pirinus the Apostle of the West-		King Prasutagus,	49	Bowes or Bough a worshipfull fa-
Saxons,	384 c	Boadicia, or Bunduica a noble		mily, 731 c. 737 a. why so cal-
Birling,	332 d	and warlike Lady,	406 e. 51	led,	732 e
Birthin a river,	636 c	is vanquished and poisoneth		Bowlan forest,	750 b
Birtpore or Buriport,	210 e	herselfe,	52	Bowletors a family,	465 b
Biscaw wonne,	188	Bocking a fat Personage,	446 a	Boxley,	332 c
Bisham,	286 b	Bofton Malherb,	331 b	Brache,	19
Bishops of Durham,	735	Bodine what he conceiveth of the		Bradenham,	393 e
Bishops of Bath and Wells,	232 c	name Britaine,	5	Brace,	19
Bishops castles,	189 e	Sir Th. Bodley a singular bene-		Briti,	ibid.
Bishops Thorps,	707 c	factor to Oxford Librarie,	382 c	Bridburn a place and family,	553
Bishops whether they might hold		Bodman, 191. Bodmarie,	679 c	Bradford,	244 f
castles,	244 c	Boeth what it signifieth,	732 c	Bradwardin a place,	618 c
Bishops gate in London,	423 d	Bobuns Earles of Hereford, &c.	621 e	Bradwardin the profound Doctor,	618 c
Bishops their place and preceden-		Humsfey de Bebum Earle of Ef-
cy in England,	161	sex,	454	Bradstons Ancestors of Vicount
Biffmed,	401 b	Hugh de Bolebec,	396 a	Montacute and Barons Went-
Biffets an honourable familie,	245. 574 a	Bolebec Baronic,	809 c	worth,	364 a
Bittlefen,	396 d	Bolebec Castle,	396 a	Braibroke castle,	1512 e
Bitumen, that is, Sea cole,	735 c	Boleringum,	187	Braibrookes Barons,	ibid. e
Bitwell castle,	808 c	Bollin a river,	610 b	Brackley,	505 d
Biban castle,	537 a	Bollingbrooke,	341 f	Brackbrook,	329 e
Bitbric Lords of Gloucester,	368	Bolfover Castle,	556 c	Brakenbake,	724 e
Bizacium in Africke,	478 e	Bonafus a notorius bibber hang-		Brackenburies a family of good
Blackborne,	752 d	est himselfe,	71	note,	737 e
Blackburne shire,	ibid. e	Boniface, See Winifride.		Brambles,	274 e
Blacklow hill,	564 d	Bonvill Lord, 206 c. 231 b. his		Brampton,	783 a
Blacklead,	767 b	calamities,	ibid. c	Bramton,	815 b
Blackemere a Baronic,	598 d	Bolton castle,	729 a	Bramton Brian castle,	619 c
Blackemore forest,	213 f	Borradale,	767 a	Bramsthariver,	815 b
Blackemore,	717 b	Bone-well,	619 f	Bancaster,	408 a
Blacketaile Point,	213	Bonhommes a religious order,	395 a	Brian de Brampton,	619 c
Blackewater a Creeke,	443 e	Bonhommes Colledge,	244	Brand,	568 e
Rob. Blanchmains,	518 b	Bonium,	602 e	Brandons a family Suffolke,	465 e
Blackney,	479 a	Booth a family,	610 c	Branspeth castle,	739
Mercate Blandford,	215 c	Borfarfe alias Brentwood,	442	Brannonium,	575 a
Blatum Bulgium,	775 c	Borwick,	809 d	Charles Brandon Duke of Suff-
Bleau Leveney castle,	628 d	Borroviens,	ibid.	folke,	470 c
Blatberwicke,	514 b	Bofcastle,	199	Brannodunum,	480 a
Blechindon,	377 a	Bofham,	306 f	Bransford or Bensford-bridge,	517 e
Blencarn a brooke,	763 c	Bofoke a place and family,	609 d	Brafen weapons,	188
Blendenjop a place and family,	800 b	Boston,	532 c	Brafen nose Colledge in Oxford,	383 a
Bleffium,	617 c	burnt and ransacked,	532 d
Blicking,	478 b	Borhal castle,	812 d	Brafmatias, a kinde of Earth-
Blesing,	399 d	Borworth towne,	518 d	quake,	620 e
Blewets,	224 c	Bosworth field,	ibid. d	Bray, 286 d. Lord Bray, 297 b.
Blisworth,	507 a	Botereux castle,	195	Tha

The Table of England.

The breach by Greenwich, 328 a	Earle of Bridgewater, 225 c	Britans of Wales and Cornewale, 112. 113
Nicolas Breakspere, That is, Pope Adrian the forth, 414 f	Bridkirk, 768 b	Britans send Embassadors to the Saxons, 128
Breakspere a place and family, 419 b	Briewer Baron, 222 e	Britans retain their ancient language, 23
Brechanus his 24. daughters all Saints, 627 a	Bristol or Bristow, a Citie, 237 a	Britans long lived, 555 b
Breden forest, 224 a	the reason of the name, ibid.	Britans painted themselves blue with wood, 20
Bredon hills, 577 e	Bret the Primitive of the Britains, 26	Britans maners and customes out of Julius Caesar, 29. out of Strabo, ibid. out of Diodorus Siculus, 29. out of Pomponius Mela, ibid. out of Cernelius Tacitus, 30. out of Dio Nicæus, ibid. out of Herodian, ibid. out of Pliny, 31. out of Solinus, ibid.
Breedon a village, ibid.	Britch, what it signifieth, 26	Britannica the herbe. See Scorby or Scurvigrasse, 428 d
Breertons a family, 608 f. their death foretold, 609 b	Britaine or Britannie whence it tooke name, 27. why late discovered and knowne, 33. mentioned by Lucretius, first of any Latin writer, ib. twice Schoole-Mistres to France, 138	Britanniciani what they were, 111
Breerton a place, 609	Britaine the great, that is, England, 155	Briten hui, 40
Brechnockshire, 627	Britaine the lesse, that is, Scotland, ibid.	Brithin a kind of drinke, 5
Brechnock towne, 638 a	Britaine how divided, 154. 155	British tongue full of Greeke words, 28
Brechnock meere, ibid.	Britaine what names it hath, 1. the site thereof, 1. the forme of it, ibid. why called another world, 24. the division and compasse of it, 24	British States submit to Caesar, 37
Brechnock Lords, ibid.	Britain hath sundry names, 23	British Isles mentioned by Polibi- us, 33
Brechnock made a shire, 677 e	the position thereof in respect of the Heavens, 4. how fruitful and commodious, 3. her first inhabitants, 4. the name, 5	Of British Perle a breastplate, 38
Bremenium, 803	Britain under what signe or Planets, 182	British names import colours, 26
Brember castle, 313 c	Britain portraited in womans habite, 24. the Roman world, 45	British townes what they were, 29
Bremetonacum, 753 c	discovered to be an Island, 61	Britwales or Welshmen, 113
Bremicham or Bermingham a town and familie, 567	a province Presidial, 62. How it was governed under and after Constantine the Great, 62	Briva what it signifieth, 414
Bren what it signifieth, 677	76. how it became subject to the Romans, 62. infected by Barbarians, 79. brought to civilitie, 63. called Romania, and Romaine Ile, 88	Broekers knights, 406 f
Bremen, 677	Britains ruin and downfall, 107	Brocovum, 762 d
Brennus a renowned King, 33	Britaine and France whether ever conjoynd, 346 a	Broge, 19
Bretnham, 463 b	Britains came first out of Gaul, 11. 12	Brokesby a place, 522 f. a family, 523 a
Bretton a river, ibid.	Britans in Religion language and maners agree with the Gauls, 13. 14. 15. 16. 17	Brome, 467 f
Brent a river, 421	Britans employed by Caesar in base services, 38	Bromesgrave, 574 e
Brent, See Falkes de Brent.	Britans generally rebell, 49. their grievances, ibid.	Bromesfield, 677 a
Brentmarsh, 230 e	Britains cast off the Romans yoke, 86	Wolter Bronscorn Bishop of Ex- cester, 190
Brentford, 421	Britains how they may derive their descent from the Tro- ians, 88	Brookes a family of ancient de- scend, 611 a
Brentwood, 442 a	Britains in Armórica, 110	Brooke, L. Cobham, 329 c
Brentwell or Brounswell, 421		Barons Brooke, 244 c
Breos Barons, 113 c. 201 f		Bronholme, 478 e
Breoses a family, 553 d		Brougham, 762 d
Will. de Breos, or Brans, a strong Rebell, 629 b		Brotherton, 695 b
Breoses Lords of Brechnock, 623		Sir Anthonie Browne first Vi- count Montacute, 482 b
Brettons a family, 555 b		Sir Ant. Browne Marquesse Montacute, 222 d
Bretts, 128 f		Broughton, 376 e
Brenfais, 138 f		Broughton in Hantsire, 262 c
Brian, who so called, 117		Brundenels a family, 514 b
Bridlington, 714 d		Bruges Baron Chandos, 365 b
John of Bridlington, ibid.		Brusa a family, 442 b
Brewood, 583 a		Burg-morse
Bricols, 400 e
Bridge Casterton, 534 b
Bridford by Nottingham, 548
Brig for Glauisford, 543 a Brigantes in Britaine rebelled, 43
Brigantes, 685. whereof they took name, ibid.
Brill for Burhill, 395 b
Breint Fitz Conty, 282 a Brients, 202 c. d
Brients Barons, 215 d
Brinlo, 588 f
Briensford, 215 e
Brimsfeld, 365 f
Bridgewater, 225 a

The Table of England.

Burg-morse or Bridg-North, 591 b	Burnels a family, 591 f	Caer Cysteineeth, 668 d
Robert Brus the noble, 591 b	Burrowes what they are, 515 e	Caerdiff, 642 d
Baron Brus of Skelton, 720 c	Burrowe banks, 452 e	Caerfise, 661 e
Brufes a noble family, 526 b	Burrow hill, 522 a	Caer Gai, 666 a
Brutus 5. why so called, 8	Burrowe bridge, 701 a	Caer Gaby, 673 a
Bucken, that is, Beech trees, 393	Burrow a town, 522 b	Caer Guortigern, ibid.
George Buck, 22 d	Baron Burrow or Burgh, 303 f	Caerhean, ibid.
Buchonia and Buckenham, 393 a	Burrough a towne and family, 522	Caer Leon, ibid.
Buckinghamshire, 393	Burrough of Southwarke, 303 d	Caermardenhire, 649
Buers a family, 463 b	Burthred the last King of Mer- cians, 554 a	Caernarvonshire, 667
Walter Buc and his race, 812 b	Burse of London or Roiall Ex- change, 439 b	Caernarvon towne, 668 e
Buckingham town, 396 c. Earles, 397 d	Burgh upon Sands, 775 e	Caer Palladur, 270 a
Buckhurst Baron, 627 e	Burgundians brought into Bri- taine, 71	Caer Phillicastle, 642 a
Buelth, 497 d	Burton Lazars, 522 a	Caer Segonte, 270 a
Bulchobandes, 79	Burton upon Trent, 586 b	Caer Vorrán, 800 e
Buldewas or Bildas, 593 e	Burley castle, 490	Caer wick, 633 d
Bulkley a towne and family, 607	Buriall of men with legs a crosse, 808 a	Caer wisk, 679 d
Anne Bullen or Bollen Marchia- nesse of Penbroch, 655 e	Bury Abbey, 460 e	Caibaignes a family, 395
Bullen or Bollen Earle of Wilt- shire, 256 e	Bustlers a family, 489 e	Caius Caesar ment to invade Bri- taine, 40. his vanity, his voi- age thither, 41. his triumph over Britaine, 42
Bullen or Bollogne in France, the same that Gessoriacum and Bonota, 348 d	Bustles or Busties a family, 535	Cainsham, 236 e
Th. Bullen Earle of Wiltshire di- ed for sorrow, 257	Busy Gap, 800 f	Calaterium nemus, 723 d
Bulleum Silurum, 627 e	Butlers of Wem, 592 c	Caishtoberry, 415 a
Bulley or Busley a noble Norman, 551 a	Butler of Woodhall, ibid. c	Calc. i. lime, Calcaria, 699 a
Bulverith, 316 e	Butler Earle of Wiltshire, 256 d	Calder the river, 691 a
Buly castle, 761 c	Butlers a family, 748 b	Caldwell, 731 c
Bulnesse, 775 c	Butlers or Botelers of Ireland, 752 f	Caledonians make head against the Romans, 56
Bumsted Helion, 452 a	Butterby, 739	Caloughdon, 568 b
Bungey, 468 b	Butjet, 20	Calphurnius Agricola, 66
Burdos or Burdelois, 473 a	Butlington, 662	Calshot or Caldshore, 260 d
Burford in Shropshire, 590 f	Burtonwell, 557 c	Calveley a place and worthy fa- mily, 608 d
Burnt Elly, 463 d	Byliricay, 442 e	Sir Hugh Calveley a valiant knight, 608 d
Burgesses, 177		Callais no ancient towne, 348 b
Burgh under Stanemore, 760		Calthrops a family, 463 e
Burgh castle, 468 e		Cam a river, why so called, 486 a
Burgh Cleve, 72 c		Cam, 21
Burgi what they were, 760 f		Camale, 221 b
Burly a faire place, 526 b		Camale townes, ibid. c
Burons an ancient family, Burrium, 636 c		Camalodunum, 43. lost, 50
S. Buriens in Cornwal, 188. why so called, ibid.		Cambodunum 449. Camb-alan- river, 194
Burnel Baron, 330 c		Camborithum, 486 a
Burcester, 337 b		Camden or Camp den, 364 f
Burdet, 566 c		Camden the Author his opinion of the name of Britania, and the originall of Britans, 9
Bunbury for Boniface burry, 607		Cambridge in Gloucestershire, 362 c
Burghers alias Burgwalsh, 320		Cambridgeshire, 485
Bartholomew Burgwalsh a Baron 320 b		Cambridge defaced and burnt, 488 b
Burghley, 514 e		Cambridge town and Universtie, 486 e
Burgh, 727 f		When it became an Universtie, 489 a
Burghsted, 442 e		Camillus a God, 446 e
Burgh or Burrow Barons, 543 f		Camell
Burne a Barony, ibid.

The Table of England.

Camell ariver,	194	Caries,	202 e	Castor,	542 d
Camelsford,	ibid.	R. Carew,	193	Castadune or waterfalls,	759 f
Candish or Cavendish,	554 b	Carew Baron of Clopton,	565 b	Castellan Denis,	194
Camois Barons,	312 e	Careston,	517 c	Cateby of a towne,	508 b. an ancient family, ib. tainted by Rob. Cateby of Albion Saint Leger, ibid. 431 d
Candocus see Cadocus.		Carlisle, 778 d. Old Carlisle,		Catherin Hereticke,	84
Cambridge Earles,	495 e	773 b. Carlisle had one Earle,		Catlidge,	498 b
Camvills a family,	569 a			Catmose a vale,	525 f
Camus, 21. Candetum,	20	Carnabies a family,	808 f	Caterna,	18
Cangi a people in Britaine,	611 b	Carthimandua wife to Venusius a stout Lady, 48. her loose life and adultery,	53	Caterua,	ibid.
231 a. subdued,	43	Carmelite Friars, 351 e. brought first into England,	813 d	Cattienchiani,	391
Cank-wood,	583 e	Carthmell,	755 a	Caticark,	730 c, d
Canterium, 19. Cantroed,	20	Caribec,	121	Caturactonium,	730 e
Canterlowes an honorable family,		Carisbrook,	275 c	Caturia,	18
		Carewell a castle and family,	587	Cauda river,	778 b
Cantlow,	201 f	Carausius usurper the Empire 72. governeth Britaine well, ib. slain by Allectus,	72	Candebek,	ibid. c
Th. Cantlow a Bishop and Saint,	619 c	Carus and Carinus Emperours,	73	Sir Will. Cavendish or Candish Baron of Hardwick,	556 a
Cantium what cape,	1	Carminow,	199	Caves, a family,	515 b
Canterbury Colledge in Oxford,	381 a	Carrs a family,	815	A Cave wonderfull in Glamorganshire,	643 b
Canterbury, 336 c. Canterbury Archbishops Primates of Britaine,	338 e	Carr a river,	210 c	Cause castle,	592 e
Cantried what it is,	650 b	Carmonth,	210 b	Causeies or highwaies in Britaine,	63. what names they have in divers authors, 64. by whom and how they were made, 64. in Italy and else where,	64
Cantried Bitham,	ibid.	Carram,	815 a	Cawood,	707 d
Cantried Maur,	650 c	Carvills a family,	481 a	Caxon,	485 c
Can a river,	759 c. 445 d	Carvilins,	37	Cecily Nevill, mother to King Edward the fourth,	511 b. an unfortunate Lady, ibid. b. c. her tomb subverted, 510 c. Rob. Cecil Baron of Essendon, Viscount Cranburn, 217 c. Rob. Cecil Earle of Salisbury,	250 e
Cancefields a family,	755 d	Henry Cary Baron of Hunsden,	408	Thomas Cecil Earle of Excester	206 a
Candale or Kendale a Barony,	759 c	his high and noble descent,	409	Sir Wil. Cecil baron Burghley,	514 e
Canel Cole,	735 d	Sir Edmund Cary knight of high descent,	414 e	Cedros, Cesar,	18
Canonium is Chelmsford,	445 d	Casibellinus Generall of the Brittaines armie,	36	Centuries, see Hundreds.
Cantabri and Scythians of like manners,	121	Cassibellinus or Cassiavelanus encountereth Cesar and the Romans, 37. is repulsed, ibid. treateth about peace with Cesar,	37	Celce, whence derived,	20
Canvey Isle,	441 a	Cassibellinus or Cassiavelanus encountereth Cesar and the Romans, 37. is repulsed, ibid. treateth about peace with Cesar,	37	Cerdick a warlike Saxon,	477 d
Cantaber a Spaniard founder of Cambridge Universitie,	487 a	Caster,	473 d	Cerdick land,	ibid.
Canutus his Apophth.	261 e	Caster in Huntingdonshire,	502 a	Cerdick shire,	ibid.
Canvills a family,	515 c	Castigand an high hill,	501 d	Cerafriz,	184
Capgrave his legends,	646	Castle in the Peake,	ib. 502 a	Cerealis vanquished 50. see conquered the Brigantes,	54
Capitatio a Tribute,	100	Castle Acre,	481 c. 557 d	Cerne Abbey,	212 b
Caradauc Urichfas,	590 c	Castle Alby,	509 e	Cerryg Drudion,	675 c
King Caradock, 633 e. f. delivered unto Ostorius,	590 a. taken prisoner by Queen Casticimana, 44. his undaunted courage,	Castle Camps,	488 f. 489 f	Cestef an addition to cities,	517
		Castle Cary,	606 b	Cestef Over,	ibid.
Caranton,	220	Castle Coch,	662 b	Cley-Cester,	518 b
Cardiganshire, 657. Lord thereof,	658 c	Castle Colwen or of Maud in Colewent,	623 b	Chad a famous Bishop of Lichfield,	585 e. 441 a
Cardigan a towne,	657 e	Castle Cress by Lichfield,	582 e	canonized a Saint,	ibid.
Carreg castle,	650	Castle Comb,	243 c	Sir Thomas Chaloner a learned knight,	721 d
Carlston a towne and family,	472 d	Castle Dinas Bran,	677 c	Chamber
Carews of Surry,	302 c	Castle Dinas,	628 d
Carews a family,	652 c	Castleford,	695 a
Carew castle,	ibid.	Castle Gard,	345 a. 201 c
Carew of Anthony,	198 d	Castle Paine,	623 b
Carewes a noble family,	202 e	Castle Reeds, 783 b. 793 d. 808

The Table of England.

Chambers in the forest,	607 a	Chesil a banke or sandrige,	210 b	Civitas or Citie what it signifiesh in Cesar,	417. d
Chamberlaines sometimes Tun-kervils,	389. d	Chesles of the best,	801	Cities by what ceremonies built by Romans,	102
Chamberlainship of England,	489. f	Cheshire,	ibid.	John Clipham a brave warrior,	697. b
Rob. Chamberlain in Ardenbo-bet,	531. c	Conutic Palatine,	601. b	Clare a noble village,	482. a
Champtownes or Camperdowns,	201. c	Chesham bois,	394. f	family of Earles,	ibid. b
John. Chaudas made Baneris,	171. 365. b	Cheshfield 452. c. in Scardale,	556	Clarence, 462. b. Dukes thereof,	ibid.
Chandos Baron,	365. b	Chester Earles,	611. f	Claridon,	240. b
Chariot fight of the Britains,	36	Chester Earle Count Palatine,	612. a. what Barons hee had under him,	Clares Earles of Gloucester,	330
Charing crosse,	432. c	Cheshire made a prin-cipality,	612. f	Richard de Clare his commenda- tion,	416. d
Charles the eight king of France his Apophthegm.	403. a	Chesler, or West-Chester city,	604. e	Earles of Clare whence so stiled,	415. d
Charleston in Worcestershire,	578. b	Chester, and Cheshiremen de- scribed,	602. a	Claudia Rufina, a British Ladie,	62. 68
Charleton Castle,	594. a	Chesters what they are,	793. d	Claudius Cesar honoured as a God in Britaine,	448. b
Charltons Lords of Powis,	ib.	Chester in the wall,	800. f	Claudentum,	261. a
Charlecot a place,	564. f. a family,	Chester upon the street,	742. c	Claudius Cesar first that van- quished the Britains, 45. hee brought the South part of Bri- taine to be a Province,	101
Charwood or Charley forest,	565. a	Little Chester,	554. c	Claudianus Contentus,	341. e
Chavertwood or Charley forest,	521. d	Chesterston under Lime,	583. c	Clavering,	453. b
Charta de Foresta,	293. e	Cheshwoods a family,	399. d	Clavering the name of Fitz Ri- chard,	81. a
Chartet house in London,	433. d	Chevalry court,	190	Claxton,	738. d
Charley castle,	584. f	Chevin,	698. d	Claxtons a family,	ibid.
Chere, a fish,	755. d	Chesviot hills,	812. e	Clay-Hill,	245. d
Chateries or Chetrish,	494. d	Chio, or Chick, the old name of Saint Osth,	451. c	Clemens Maximus an usurper,	341. c
Charmoffe,	747. a	Chidleys,	203. e	Clee Hill,	591. d
Charmsworth,	554. b	Chicheley, Archbishop of Can- terbury,	510. b	Cleres a family,	478. b
Chaucer, our English Homer born at woodstock,	375. f	Chichester, 307. c. Earles of Chi- chester,	ibid. f	Cley brooke,	518. b
Chancombs, a family,	568. e	Chicksand,	401. c	Cliftons a family in Nottingham,	547
Chammonds,	196. b	Chillingham,	815. c	Sir Gervase Clifton, Baron Clif- ton,	502. d
Chancerie,	80	Chilterne 389. c. 393. c. why so called,	ibid.	Cliff a towne,	329. d
Chancellor,	180	Chippenhams,	243. d	Clifford castle,	618. a
Chaworths, a family, 395 e. 555. d descended from Cahors in Quercy,	549. c	Chirke,	677. c	Cliffords Earles of Cumberland,	618. b
Cheapen what it signifiesh,	243. d	Christs Church in Hantsire,	529. c	Cliftons a family, Earles of Lin- colne,	545
Cheardley,	395. f	Christs Church in Oxford,	383. a	Clipsby a town and family,	478. d
Cheasford hundred,	442. c	Christianity flourisheth in Bri- taine,	75. 67. 68.	Clishero castle,	710. a
Cherkley,	587. d	Christs Church in Oxford,	383. a	Clives ad Hoo,	329. d
Cheadle,	587. d	Chrisanthus Bishop of the No- vations,	84	Cleveland,	720. b
Chellington,	581. e	Churne the river,	366. a	Clopton a towne & family,	565
Chelmer river,	444. d	Churnet a river,	587. e	Eloctus Albinus propertor in Britaine,	67
Chelmerford or Chenceford,	445	Cholmondeley a towne and family,	607. d	Cloudesbury,	749. e
Chesley,	421. c	Chopwel a riveret,	735. b	Cluid a river in Wales,	676. c
Cheney Baron of Horsford,	466	Chrif Church in Canterbury,	337. b	Cluid a river,	ibid. d
Chencies or Chienies an house,	394. a	Cirncester,	366. b	Clun castle,	589. e
Sir Henry Cheiney Baron,	401	Cinqe ports, 318. a. which they be,	324	Clun or Colun, a river,	ibid. e
Chepstow, 633. b. Lords thereof ibid. c	ibid. c	Citurnum,	806. b	Clyto, that is, the Prince, 164. an addition given to all the Kings Somes,	ibid.
Cherry trees brought into Bri- taine,	324. b	Cimbric Chersonesus,	129	T y y y y	Chobersburg;
Cheriford,	258. e	Citizens,	177
Cherifey, 294. the monastery whereof founded,	294. d	Cisbury,	312. d
Chornel the river,	373. b. his head,	Chiltern Monkes,	295. a
	507. e	Civilis a deputy in Britaine,	80

The Table of England.

Cnobersburg,	468.e	Calne a towne,	ibid.	Constantine (Chlorus) ridden by	300.c
Cnouts or Canuts delf,	501.b	Coln Engain,	ibid.	Constantine of Usurpers, 73. elected	504
Cobham towne,	329.c	Colepepers a family,	526.b	Emperor, 74. espoused Helena	661.b
Cobham Barons,	ibid.b	Colonies,	703.a	mother of Constantine the	32
Lords Cobham of Sterborow,	303.e	Colonie what it is,	448.a	great, 74. puttest her away,	614.500
Coc, a river,	696.b	Colwils,	537.a	ibid. weddeth Theodora, ib. a	184
Coch or Cocciu,	19	Columbe a river,	203.a	godly Emperour, ibid. died at	787.a
Coch what colour,	26	Columbrton,	ibid.	Torke, ibid. buried there,	467.f
Coccium,	745.f	Saint Columbs,	193		703
Cockar a river,	767.f	Comata,	20	Constantine the Great Emper,	74
Cockington,	202.e	Comati,	ibid.	his warlike exploits, 75. ad-	75
Cockley Chappell,	745.f	Comb what it signifieth,	207.b	vanceth Christian religion, 75	198.c
Cockscies a worshipfull family,	574.a	Comb Marton,	20.a	proclaimed Emperour in Torke,	184
Codanus Sinus, that is, the Oost	141	Comb,	21	703. c. f. his renowned titles,	184
Sea,	555.d	Comb Abbey,	569.a	76. first entisuled Dominus	114
Codenor castle,	603.c	Comb appointed between Hen-	ibid.	Nolter, 76. taxed for subver-	383.a
Canobies what they are,	207.c	rie of Lancaster and Thomas	ibid.	sing the Roman Empire, ibid.	168
Cogans,	446.a	Adowbray duke of Norfolk,	ibid.	altereth the state of the go-	186
Cogeshal a towne,	446.b	428. f. Betweene Roger Bi-	ibid.	vernment, ibid.	188
Cogeshal a family,	446.b	shop of Salisbury, and William	ibid.	Constantine the younger ruler	729
Coine antique of Emilianus &	643.e	Montacute Earle of Salisbu-	ibid.	Britaine, 77. slaine by his bro-	808.b
Marinus &c.	65.a.d	ry, 249. a. Betweene Edmond	ibid.	ther Constant,	777.f
Coined pieces of embased silver,	88.&c.	and Cnute,	ibid.	Corby Castle,	59.c
Coines British and Roman in	186	Comes Britanniorum,	76	Corftopitum,	ibid.
Britain,	737.d	Comes Littoris Saxonici,	ibid.	Corve a river,	ibid.
Coinage of Tinn,	ibid.	Comes Sacrarum Largitionum, 77	ibid.	Corvedale,	296.a
Coigniers a noble family,	643.e	Comes privatarum,	ibid.	Coway stakes,	329.d
Coigniers Barons,	553.d	Comes a title of dignity,	166	Cowling Castle,	243.e
Coitie,	753.c	Comites what they were at first	ibid.	Colham,	565.e
Cokains a family,	767.f	165. See more in Earles,	ibid.	Coughton,	18
Coker a river,	753.c	Comitatus Cesaris,	ibid.	Covinus,	18
Cokerland Abbey,	ibid.	Cominus Atrebas or of Arras,	ibid.	Custrells, See Esguives.	ibid.
Cokermouth,	767.f	Cominus 35.37	ibid.	Coy-fi a convert Bishop of the	711.c
Sir Edward Cooke Knight, 481.c	753.c	Commodus the Emperour,	66	beathen,	364.c
his commendation,	542.c	Common Ples Court,	178	Cotefwold why so called,	206.a
Cokerington,	394.a	Compton in the Hole,	561.c	Henry Courtney Marquesse of	206.a
Cole a river,	414.a	Sir Henry Compton Baron, 561	ibid.	Excefter,	206.b
Cole a river,	394.a	Sir Henry Compton Baron, 561	ibid.	Courtney knights, 206.b. Earls	207.108.
Cole a river neere Saint Albans,	414.a	Compton Murdock,	565.a	of Denfbire, 207.108. Court-	190.f
Colbrook,	394.a	Composition betweene King Ste-	ibid.	neyes,	313.e
Colepits on fire,	581.d	phen and Henrie Duke of	482.b	Cottons knights,	ibid.
Coles give evidence of ancient	515.d	Anjon,	482.b	Coverts knights,	ibid.
mere-markes,	681.d	Composition of names,	27	Cottons of Cambridge-shire	491.a
Coles-Hull or Hill,	567.c	Concani a Nation in Cantabria,	121	knights,	526.c
Coleshal,	567.c	Condade,	608.e	Cottons of Cunnington,	526.c
Cole Overton, or Cole Orton why	519.c	Condercum,	742.c	Sir Robert Cotton of Cunnington	447.b
so called,	267.a	Condever,	592.a	a learned knight, highly de-	500.d
Colbrand the Giant,	514.d	Congar,	231.d	scended,	562.e
Collimewston,	450.e	Congerbury,	231.d	Covetousnesse complained of.	567.c
Colcheffer,	808.c	Congleton,	608.x	Covetousnesse complained of.	567.c
Colecefter,	419.c	Conquefts a family,	401.e	Coventry,	567.c
Colham,	419.c	Wil. Cannings his monuments,	237.f	Coventry Lords,	568.a
Colingwoods a warlike family,	813.c	Coningsbees, 415.d. a family of	ibid.	Councell of the Marches,	500.e
Collerford,	806.b	good name and worth, 620.d	ibid.	Cow a Towne West and East,	274.c
Colne a river,	450.a	Connisborow castle,	689.f	Cowbridge,	643.c
Charles Coln,	ibid.	Constable Burton,	714.b	Cradiden,	493.a
Wakes Coln,	ibid.	Constables a great family,	ibid.	Cranburn,	217.b
Whites Coln,	ibid.	High Constables of England,	622.e	Creacan or Crey a river,	328.f
				Crete Lade,	241.e
				Credendon or Credon,	396

The Table of England.

Corineus and Gogmagog,	300.c	Creplegate in London,	423.d	Cworw,	20
Coritani,	504	Cressy a family,	550.e	Cwurwens knights,	769.a
Cornden hill,	661.b	Crevequeurs,	331.c	Custodes or capitaines in every	159
Cornelius Nepos, for Joseph of	32	Crawdundale,	761.f	shire,	373.f
Exceftre,	32	Crew a place and notable family,	608.c	Cuthred King of the West Sax-	184
Cornavii,	614.500		203.d	ons,	18
Cornovaille in little Britaine,	184	Creden a river,	694.b	Cyprus called Keraftis,	21
Cornage,	787.a	Credeantun or kirtom,	723.e	Cyrb,
Cornwallies a family,	467.f	Craven,	21	Cytharistes,
Cornwales of Burford highly	590.f	Creake in Cliveland,	609.b
descended,	198.c	Le Craux,	532.f
Cornwall a dukedome,	184	Creco or Croke a river,	537.b
why so called,	184	De Croeun or de Credonio a Ba-	302.b
Cornwallians soone subjected to	114	rony,	497.d
the Saxons,	186	Crococalana,	526.b
Corpus Christi Colledge in Ox-	383.a	Croidon,	454.e
ford,	188	Crommells knights,	479.a
Court Barons,	729	Sir Th. Cromwell,	619
Cornishmens manners,	808.b	of Essex,	721.f
Cornish Chough,	777.f	Cromer,	544.c
Corham in Coverdale,	59.c	Croft Castle,	608.d
Corbridge,	ibid.	Crofts knights, an ancient family	126
Corby Castle,	296.a	Leonard D'acre a Traitor and	608.d
Corftopitum,	329.d	Rebel,	721.f
Corve a river,	243.e	Dacor a river,	446.b
Corvedale,	18	D'airells or D' Hairrells,	690.b
Coway stakes,	537.e	Daleale castle,
Cowling Castle,	ibid.	Dalison or D'alanson a family,
Colham,	565.e
Coughton,	18
Covinus,	18
Custrells, See Esguives.	ibid.
Coy-fi a convert Bishop of the	711.c
beathen,	364.c
Cotefwold why so called,	206.a
Henry Courtney Marquesse of	206.a
Excefter,	206.b
Courtney knights, 206.b. Earls	207.108.
of Denfbire, 207.108. Court-	190.f
neyes,	313.e
Cottons knights,	ibid.
Coverts knights,	ibid.
Cottons of Cambridge-shire	491.a
knights,	526.c
Cottons of Cunnington,	447.b
Sir Robert Cotton of Cunnington	500.d
a learned knight, highly de-	562.e
scended,	567.c
Covetousnesse complained of.	567.c
Coventry,	568.a
Coventry Lords,	500.e
Councell of the Marches,	274.c
Cow a Towne West and East,	643.c
Cowbridge,	493.a
Cradiden,	217.b
Cranburn,	328.f
Creacan or Crey a river,	241.e
Crete Lade,	396
Credendon or Credon,

D

D Abernoun,	297.b
D'acre Barons of Gillef-	594.c
land,	776.c
Dacre castle,	ibid.
D'acre Baron,	ibid.
Leonard D'acre a Traitor and	784.f
Rebel,	776.c
Dacor a river,	369.e
D'airells or D' Hairrells,	593
Daleale castle,	544.c
Dalison or D'alanson a family,	126
	608.d
Dalreudini,	721.f
Dan or Davena river,	446.b
Danby,	690.b
Danbury,
Dancastre,
Danewort, See Watwort.
Danes in the coasts of England, 139. why so called, 141
they land in England, &c.	142
Danes massacred by the English,	143
Their detestable sacrifice,	142
Danegelt a tribute,	ibid.
Danmonii, 183. whence their	ibid.
name cometh,	608.e
Daning-ichow a riveret,	243.c
Dantejey a town,	ibid.
Dantejey knights,	508.a
Danrey townes, 508.a. the fort	ibid.
there,	ibid.
Henry Baron Danvers of Dante-	243.c
sey,	553
Darbyshire,	554.c
Darby townes,	558.d
Darby Lords and Earles,	543.e
Darcies de Nolton, &c.	451.c
Darcies Barons de Chich,	328.d
Darent river,	328.e
Darenford or Dartford,	709
Darwent a river and city,	609.a
Davenport or Dampport a place	653.c
and notable family,	653.d
Saint Davids land,	657.b
Saint Davids an Archbishops
See,
David bishop refuseth the Pelagians,
X x x x 2	Davery

The Table of England.

Davery, or de alta rupe, 312 b	Devenbach, 603 c	De Divitis a Monastery, 513 c
Dawnes of Wkinton, forefathers of	Deping, 534 c	Division of Countreies threefold, 154
Delamere, 607 a	Derlington, 737 d	Divils or Devilsburne a river, 808 b
Deben a river, 465 b	Derwen a river, 752 d	Divils or Devils dike, 459, 490 c
Depenham or Dapenham, ibid.	Derwent a river, 553 b	Divils or Devils, 609 c
Dee a river, 594 c. whence so called, 602 c. Dee-mouth, 604 b	Derwent fells, 767 a	Divils or Devils bolts, 701 b
Dee head, 666 b	Deorhirs, 360 a	Divona, 17
Devonshire or Denfshire, 199 a	Deorham or Derham, 364	Divitiacus a mighty Prince, 34
Walter, and Robert Devreux Earles of Essex, 455 a	Dercoma, 20	Dobuni, 354. whence so named, ibid.
John Dee a famous Mathematician, 746 c	Derechel, 21	Dodo or Dudo an English Saxon, 581, 359 c
Decimes, See Tithings.	Dereham, 482 a	Dod of S. Quintins a writer, 142
Decuman a Saint, 220 c. murdered, ibid.	Derchefe, 21	Dodington, 607 e
Decuriones what they were, 771	Dert a river, 201 d	Dogs of Britaine, 263 d. 126. of Scotland, 607 e
Saint Decombs, 220 c	Dertintin, 201 c	S. Dogmacel, or S. Tehwell, 654 d
Deale or Dole, 343 a	Dertmore, 201 d	D'oilies of Hoch Horton Barons, 375 b
Deanries how many in England, 161	Dertmouth, 202 c	Dolofeghle, 665 e
Deanforest, 358 b	Despencer a noble family, 322 b	Dolphins, 164
Deane a place, 514 a	Hugh le Despencer, 267 c	Doomesday booke, 153
Deanes a family, ibid.	Despensers Barons, 636 a	Domitian tormented with envie, 61
Deiffing of Roman Emperours, 70	Devi a river, 258	Don or Dune a river, 689 d
Deiri, that is, Hol-der-Nesse, 136	Devy Bishop of Saint Davids, 226	S. Donats Castle, 643 c
De la-mares, 233 a	Deverril, why so called, 245	Dor a river, 176 d
De la mere forest, 607 a	Dewsborough, 693 a	Dor-macester, 501 e
De-la-prec, a Nunnery, 509 b	Devonshire Earles, 207 c	Dormers knights, 395 f. 396 a
D' eincourts Barons of Blankenay, 535 f	Despote, 164	Dornford, 501 e
Edmund Baron D' eincourts famous to perpetuate his name, 536 a	Dianaes chamber, 426 a	K. Dorne his pence, 212 e
De la cres Abbey, 787 c	Digbys an ancient race, 535 e	Dorchester, 384 b. 212 e
John De la Pole Earle of Lincolnne slaine, 549 a. 388 f	Sir Everard Digby, 535 f	Dorsetshire, 209
De la bere, an ancient family, 620 c	Alane de Dinant Baron of Bur-ton, 510 a	Dorset Marqueses and Earles, 217 c
D'elveseyes, a family, 607 e	Dimeta, 647	Dotterell, a bird, 217 c
Delgovitia, 711 b	Dimocks a worshipfull familie, 535 f. 541 c	Dove or dow a river, 587 b
Delgwe what it signifieth, 711 b	Dimocks the Kings champions, 541 c	Dover, 344 b
De la val Baronic, 811 f	Dilston a town, 808 b	Dover Castle, ibid.
De la ware, 364 c	Dinevor Castle, 649 e	Dovy a river, 665
Dench-worth townes, 281 a	Dinleys or Dingleys a familie, 578 b	Dowbridge upon Watlingstreet, 408 d
Denelage, 153. 159	Dishmarch, 690 e	Dowgate or dourgate in London, 423 c
Dengy, or Dauncing hundred, 443 c	Ditches or fore-fenses in Cam-bridge shire, 490 a	Downes, 313 d
Dengy towne, ibid.	Dinhams a familie, 395 f. 207 b	Downham, 494 c
Dengy Nesse, 352 a	or Dinants, 408 d	Draicot a towne in Staffordshire, and a familie, 587 e
Demington castle, 284 a	Aul. Didius Lieutenant in Bri-tain, 48	Dragons in Barmers, 195
Edward Deny Baron of Wal-tham, 439 b	Dicalidones, or Deucalidones rather why so called, 117	Sir Francis Drake, 200 e. where he born, ibid. his navigation, ibid.
Deniffes, 206 c	Dignities ecclesiasticall how many in England, 161	Draiton, 419 c
Denbigh-shire, 675	Diamonds in Cornwall, 186	Draiton in Shropshire, 594 b
Denbigh towne, 675 d	Diamonds or Diamants neere Bristol, 239 a. b	Draiton Beauchamp, 394 f
Denbigh Baron, 676 b	Didum, 660 f	Draiton Bassett, 581 f
Denbigh made a shire, 677 e	Diganwy, ibid.	Draiton in Northamptonshire, 510 b
Depford, 326 c	Diocesses under every severall Bishop, 160. 161	Drax a village, 707 e
	Disce or Dis a towne, 472 e	Driby a towne and familie, 542 c
	Difentons Gentlemen, 766 f	Driffild, 711 d
	Disart Castle, 680 b	Droit
	Dive a familie, 399 e

The Table of England.

Droit-wich or Durtwich, 574 e	Durosponte, 491 d	disasterous to Shrewsbury, 598 a
Dropping well, 700 a	Durotriges whence derived, 209	Edelfleda or Elfleda, a noble Ladie, 610 d
Druide, 4, 12, 13, 14. the Etymologie of their name, 14	Du, what colour, 26	Eden a river, 776, 760 c
Druida in Britain did service in war, 49. they held one God, 68	Dutton a place and worthy family, 602 f	Edenburgh frith, 56
Druide feated in Anglesey, 671 d	Dux Britannie, 76	Edgecombs, 193
Drumbough castle, 775 e	Dux or Duke what title of honor, 164. under a Count or Comes, ib.	Edge an hill, 561 b
Druries a familie, 461 e	Dux and Comes the same, ibid.	Edgar Earling or Aethling, 146
Dryflocke, 325 c	Dux or Duke a title of charge, ib.	Edinodon, 244 e
Duddenland, 754 f	a title of honour, 165	Edith virgin, a Saint, 582 b
Dudden a river, 581 c	Dukes investiture or creation, ibid.	Edith King Eadgars daughter, 246 d
Ambrose Dudley Earle of Warwick, 571 a	Dukes hereditary, ibid.	Edith a Lady professed, 395 c
John Dudley Earle of Warwick beheaded, ibid.	E	Edmund of Langley his devise and preface, 510
Dudleys, 280 e	Eadburga a Lady professed religious, 395 c	Edmund Crouchbacke King of Sicily deluded by the Pope, 756 b
John Dudley duke of Northumberland his stile and demeanor, 821 e. f	Eadburton a towne, ibid.	K. Edmunds martyrdome, 467
Rob. Dudley Earle of Leicester, 524 b	Eadclinton or Edmunt, 437 d	Saint Edmund a most Christian King and martyr, 460 c
Dulcitus a redoubted captaine, 80	King Eadgar stiled Monarch of whole Albion, his triumph, 605 b	S. Edmunds liberty, 459 c
Dulverton, 220 c	K. Eadgar the peaceable, 130 a	S. Edmunds bury, ibid.
Duina first Bishop of Lichfield, 585 d	Eadred stiled King of Great Britain, 139 a	S. Edmunds dike, 490 f
Duglesse a riveret, 749 c	Ealburg, 701 e	Edmund King of England pi-ously slaine, 364 a
Dun a notorious theefe, 403 d	Ealdermen, 164	K. Edmund Ironside, 143
Dunbryton frith, 56	Ealphege a learned Priest mar-ried, 201 b	Edmund of Woodstocke Earle of Kent, 353 a
Dunham, 610 c	Ealpheg Archbishop of Canter-bury executed, 326 d	Edrick Streona, 595 d
Dunmaw, 444 e	Earle what title of honour, 165	Edrick Sylvaicus, 624 e
Dunnington, 521 f. 567 c	Earles by office, 502 c	K. Edward the Confessor where borne, 377 a
Dunstable, 402 a the crosse there	Earles or Eorles hereditary, 166	Edward Confessor, 143 b
ibid.	Earles how created, 239 e	Edward Earle of Warwick be-headed, 670 e
Dunster castle, 220 d	Earle Apostolicall, 239 e	Edward the First, King of Eng-land his praises, 776 a
Dunstan Abbot, 227 d	Earle Imperiall, ibid.	Edwardston, 463 a
Dunstan putteth downe married Priests, 576 b. 243 d	Earles Coln, 450 d	K. Edward the Second entombed, 361 a. murdered, 363 b
Dunstaburg, 813 e	Earles dikes, 714 d	K. Edward the Third his ver-tues, 297 d. a most renowned Prince, 278
Dunsley, 718 d	Earth, 155	Edwin the Prince made away by his brother Athelstan, 213 e
Dunseavill, 243	Earth turning wood into stone, 401 e	Egbert calleth his kingdom Eng-land, 138. vanquisheth the Danes, 143
Dunum, 212, 247	Earth a rampier in Cornwall, 189	Effingham, 296 f
Dunwich, 466 c. a Bishops See, ibid.	Easton Nesse, 467 a	Egtricke a wealthy Bishop of Durham, 742
Dunus Sinus, 718 d	East-riding, 709	Egerton whence descended, 603
John Duns alias Scotus, 814 b	East-Angles, 456, 458	Egleston, 736 e
Durobriva, 501 e	Eaton in Bedfordshire, 401 a	Egremond an arch-rebell, 724 d
Dur and Dour, beginnings and terminations of places what they signifie, 209 d	Earth by divers occasions altered, 1	Egremont castle, 766 a
Durham citie, 739 e	Eatons what they be, 63	The Eight, 360 b
Durham Colledge in Oxford founded, 381 f. reedified, 383	Eaye, 467 f	Eimot a river, 762 d
Durham Bishopricke a County Palatine, 736 a	Saint Ebba an holy virgin, 743 a	Ela Countesse of Salisbury, 244 a
Dursley, 364 c	Ebbefer, ib.	Quene Elizabeth an excellent Prince, 256 f. her vertues, 297, 113
Durance an house of the Wroths, 437 e	Ebisla, 128
Durocobrivaz, 413 e	Eboracum, or Eburacum, that is, Yorke, why so called, 702 d
Durnovaria, what it signifie, 212 e	Eccles, 478 e
	Eccleshall, 584 c
	Ecclesiasticall livings heredita-rie, 595 f
	Echingham Baron, 320
	Eclipses of the Sunne in Aries, 212 e

The Table of England.

292. 297. 298. her tombe,	Equites Aurati, that is, Knights,	Everingham a Baron,	550.d
430.b	whereupon so called,	Evers Barons whence descended,
Ellandunum,	446.d	Erdburrow,	522
Elen a river,	769.c	Erdesley,	620.e
Elden hole,	557.e	Erdeswick,	583.e
Elenborough,	769.c	Eriry mountaines,	667.d
Elephants bones found in Britaine,		Ernald Bois or de Besco,	396.b
447.c		Erernash river,	555.
Ellen hall,	584.c	Eryngum in Cornwal,	186
Eliot his conceit of the name of Britaine,	5	Esrick,	707.e
Ellesmer a Baronie,	592.a	Eske a river,	765.e. 781.c
Sir Th. Egerton Baron Ellesmer		Estinton,	813.c
ibid.		Espringolds,	400.d
North Elmham a Bishops See,		Eresby,	541.e
456.d		Ermin-streets,	64
Elmeley,	650.e	or Erming-streets, 485.c. 501.f
Elmesley,	722.d	Erminful or Irmunful,	64
Elmer a territory,	694.e	Esquires what degree of Gentry,	176
Elmore,	362.b	Esquires of five sorts,	ibid.
Elseley,	485.d	Steph. de Eschalers a Baron,	485.e
Elsmouth,	769.c	Essex,	439
Eleutherus Pope,	67	Essex Earles,	453
Elrich roads,	532	Essex Cheefes,	443.c
Elsing,	482.a	Essexes Knights,	283.f
Eltham,	327	Henry de Essex became a Monk,	681.d
Elton,	501.e	Essex, a family,	443.a
Elwan,	67	Essendum,	18
Elwy a river,	679.d	Essendon,	526.d
Emildon,	814.b	Efterford or East-Sturford,	446
Emme Mother to King Edward		Efter or Easter celebrated on the Confessor cleareth her selfe of		Lords day onely,	118
incontinency,	211	Efton alias Estannes ad turrim,	444.e
Enderbie,	401	Efton Nelson,	506.e
Hugh Enrmeve of Deping,	533	Eftotovils an honourable family,	714.a
Englishmen converted become		Eftre aliàs Plaisy,	445.a zealous Christians, 137. Stud-		Ethered vanquished and slaine, iums in Liberrall Sciences, ib.		533.b
Enfield,	437	Ethelbert King, Martyr,	618.e
English names what they signifie		Ethelbert an insufficient King, and imply,	139	143
Engelrame de Concy first Earle		Ethelbert King, Martyr,	618.e
of Bedford,	402.f	Ethelburg,	728.d
England,	138	K. Etheldred, a vertuous Prince
English Saxons retorne into Ger-		216.b. his tombe,	ibid.
many, ibid. brought thither		Ethelward a writer,	130
military knowledge, learning		Covefham, Evesham or Eisham,
and religion,	ibid.	577.e
Engins to assault in old time,	400	Endo Sewer to K. Henry the first,
England full of vices,	143	name,	459.e
England divided into Counties		Endo a noble Norman,	541.d
or Shires by Alfred,	158	Evel a towne,	221.b
Little England beyond Wales,	652	Evelmouth,	225.d
English men whence they took		Evenlode a river,	376.b
name,	138	Vale of Eisham or Evesham,	577
Englishmen the guard of the Em-		Ever or Eure a towne,	394.b
perors of Constantinople, 154		Evers Barons,	ibid.c
English tongue of what continuance,	133
English Maior,	681.e
Entweissel name of a place and
Gentlemen,	746.a

F.

OF Faculties the Court, 181
 Faifex a family of gentlemen, 692.b. 723.d
 Falco or Falques Brent a faithlesse men, 400.c. 812.b
 Falcons of the best kind, 644.b
 Falkesley bridge, 582.a. d
 Falemouth, 189
 Fanhop Baron, 401.d
 Farendon, 279.e
 Farnors Knights, 506.e
 Fastineog, 666.a
 Fastidius a Bishop of Britaine, 84
 Faulconbergs Barons, 714.a Faustus a good sonne of a bad father, 642.c
 Fawey, 190
 Fawley, 508
 Faux what it signifieth, 692
 Pekenham Forest, 574.f
 Feldings Knights, 519.f
 Fenwick Hall, 809.d
 Fenwicks a family, ibid.
 Ferrars Barons of Grooby, 520.f Henric Ferrars of Baddisley a gentleman well descended, and as well scene in Antiquities,
 568.d
 Rob. Ferrars how entered, 569
 Lords Ferrars of Chartley, 584.f
 Fernham Roiall, 394.d
 Fernham why so called, 294.e
 Fetherston Haugh, 799.e
 Fetherstons a family, ibid.
 Fetherplaces a family, 220.e. 281.
 Feverfham, 334.d
 Fielden a part of Warwickshire,
 561.b. 223.a
 Feldon

The Table of England.

Feldon,	561.b	Fleming,	202.d. 755.d	stone-fish,	363.e
Fenis or Fienlesse, 223.a. 316.b		Flemingston or Flemston a towne		Framlingham castle,	465.d
Fienes, Barons Dacres,	813.b	646.e		Fraomarius K. of the Almans,
Sir Richard Fienes or Fenis		Flemings planted in Wales,	654.	Frankers in Britaine,	72. de
Baron Say and Sele,	376.f	652.d		stroied,	73
The File,	713.a	Flemish high way in Wales,	652	Fredrick the first Emperour,
File what it signifieth,	715.a	Flintshire,	679	held Pope Adrian the fourth
Files,	ibid.	Flint castle,	680.d	his stirrup,	415.a
Filioll,	217.c	Flint Earles,	681.f	Franks a people of Germany, 122
Finborow,	607.b	Flixton or Flixton,	468.b	where they dwelt,	130
Finchdale,	742.a	Floddon an hill,	816.a	Freedstol,	712.a
Firr trees found in Axelholm,		Floddon field,	ibid.	French or Gantish provinces cast
544.b		Florus a Poet,	ibid.	off the Roman joake,	86
Fisburgings,	819.c	Flores a kind of boates,	597.b	Free wares what it was,	604.d
A Fish poole or Mere by Saint		Felix Bishop of East England,	466.c. 480.c	Frea or Frico a Saxon Goddesse,
Albans dried up,	411.c	135. how powtraied,	ibid.	Fremond vilanously slaine,	561.e
Fishes with one eye a peece,	667	Fluer found in Darbyshire,	557	regifted a Saint,	ibid.
Fishgard,	654.c	Foix a family,	759	Fremantle,	272.e
Fish pond forefheuing the death		Foliams a great family,	556.b	Frechevils or Freshwells a fa-
of Monks,	609.c	Foliams a familie,	575.c	mily,	555.f
Fittons a family,	610	Folkington,	482.a	Freshwater Isle,	274.a
Fitz-Alans Earles of Arundel,		Folkstone,	535.a	Fretherick Abbat of Saint Al-
309. 310. 589.f		A Font of Brasse in Saint Al-	349.b	bans,	414.e
Fits-herberts an ancient family,		bans Church,	412.d	Frevis a family,	582.c.d
553.d		Forcatulus his conceit of the		Friday,	135
Sir Anthony Fitz-herbert, ibid.		name Britaine,	5	Fredeswide a Saint,	378.a
a most famous Lawier,		5		Frisones come into Britaine,
359.b		Fordington,	212.d	131
Fitz-Hugh, Baron,	730.d	Ford castle,	815.e	Frodesham Castle,	610.a
Fitz-Harding Lord of Berkeley,		The Foreland of Kent,	342.d	Frome river, or FRAN,	212.a
362.d		Fornesse,	754.e	Frompton,	ibid.
Robert Fitz-Haimon slaine,	368	Fornesse Fels,	755.a	Jul. Frontinus his exploit against
Fitz-Teke,	406.c	Sir John Fortescue,	396.e	the Silures,	54
Robert Fitz-Stephen the first of		Foxes or waterfalls,	759.f	Freshwel a river,	443.d. 444.d
Norman race that attempted		Forefenses, 780. the first. ibid. the		Fromen Shoale,	347.c
Ireland by way of Conquest,		second. 790. a. the third. ibid.		Fulham,	421.e
657.f		b. the fourth,	16.c	Funarius, a name of Gratianus,
Rob. Fitz-Walter de Clare, 407		Forefwhat it is, and why so called,		77
Fitz-Walters Barons,	446.c	293.c		Furnivalls a noble family,	587.e
Fitz-Walters ensigne-bearers of		ibid.		Furnivall Barons,	394.d
London,	215.d	320.d
Fitz-Lewis a family,	442.e	Fortunie a Tourneament,	407.d
Geffrey Fitz-Peter Earle of Es-		4
sex, 454.b. a worthy Justicer		Fortunate Ilands,
of England,	ibid.c	Forty foot way,	511.f. 515.a. 64
Fitz-Stephen a writer,	427.b	Fosse dike,
Fitz-Paine Baron,	215.d	Fossewad what it is,	537.f
Fitz-Warins,	281.b	Fosse a river,	569.c
Sir Fulque Fitz-Warin,	598.b	Fosse way,	702.b
Fitz-William an ancient family,		The fosse,	366.a. 64
690.a		Foules delicate,	543.b.c
Rich. Fitz-Punt a Norman,	618	Fossards a family,	709.b
Henry Fitz-Roy, Earle of Nor-		Fortheringhay Castle,	510.d
ingham & Duke of Richmond,		File of Fouldrey,	755.e
551.d		Foulness a river,	711.b
Flamborough head,	714.e	Foulness an Isle,	443.c
Flambread,	414.b	A fontaine ebbing and flowing,	643.f. 650.b
Flabury,	578.b	Fountaines Abbey,	700.e
Plavins Sanctus,	341.d	Fow,	190
Flamee dike or Flight dike,	490	Fraccastorius his opinion of
Fleet a riveret in London,	422.f
Flemings a family,	646.c

G

Abbrantovici, why so called,
 Gabrosenum, 714.d
 743.c. 810.a Gael, 121
 Gafata, 18
 Gages, 315.e
 Gaidelach, 121
 Gaideli, that is, Scots, 123
 Gainsborough, 543.e
 Gaiotbel, 121
 Gaiotblac, ibid.
 Gal a sweet smelling shrub, 544
 Gallash why so called, 23
 whence derived, 20
 Galba, ibid.
 Galle, 22
 Galls, ibid.
 Galls

The Table of England.

Gauls commended, 22. their exploits, ibid.	Gerrards Bramley, an house and Barone, 584 b	Glendal, ibid.
Gauls named Gomori and Cimabri, 11. their religion, 12	Gerrard de Rodes, 541 c	Glocester shire, 351 a
Galgacus a valiant Britain, 47 his oration, 58	Gerrard a Baron, 584 c	Glocester Citie, 360 d
Gallans, 802 a	Gessi, 18	Glocester Earle, 368. c. d. & c.
Gallatun, 761 d	Gessum, ibid.	Glocester Dukes, 369 c
Galtres forest, 723 d	Gessoriacum, 348 a. d. it is Bollone or Bullen, ibid.	Glocester Hall in Oxford built and enlarged, 382 a
Galun, 20	Geveny or Gevenny a river, 635	Gluis, 20
Gamages, a family, 643	Gevisse, 294 c	Godiva the wife of Earle Leofric, 543 d. she freed Coventry from Tributes, 568 a
Gamlinghay, 485 d	Giants in Cornwall, 186	Gods house, 268 c
Ganoc, 669 f	Giants teeth and bones, 451 d	Godstow Nunnery, 376 b
Gaol, 22	Giddy hall, 441 f	Godmanchester, 498 b
Gargraves, knights, 691 a	Giffards a family, 581 c	Godmanham, 711 c
Garianonum, 477 a. b	Giffards, 365 f	Godolcan or Godolphin hill, 189
Garlick growing in plenty, 213 d	Giffards Earles of Buckingham, 397 d	Godrick or Goodrick a good and devout man, 74 a
Order of the Garter, 278 c	Giffards Barons, 396 a. 541 b	Godrus a Danish K. Christened, 223
Garumna, 20	Gilbertines a religious order, 534 c	Godwin or Goodwin Sands, 740 f
Garw, ibid.	Gildas, S. a learned professor, 378 f	Godwin or Goodwin the Earle of Kent his treachery, 295 c
Gascoignes an ancient family, 698 f	Gilden vale, 617 e	his equivocation, 307 a. his fraudulent fetch to get Barkley, 362 e
Gasheound, 263 f	Gillesland Barony, 782 e	Gold-Cliff, 634 e
Gastenoies, a family, 553 c	Gillesland Lords, 786 e	Gold and silver veins, 767 b
Gatehead, 743 b	Gilling, 730 a	Golden Harnish found, 816 e
Gavelkind, 325 d	Gillingham forest, 214 d	Gold and silver Mines in Cornwall, 186
Gaunlesse a riveret, 738 d	Gilbourgh, 507 f. a fort there, 508 a	Gomer and his posterity, 10
Gaunt Barons of Folkynham, 535 a	Gipping see Ornell, 463	Gomer what it signifieth, ibid.
Gawthorpe, 698 f	Gipping a village, 463	Goodwick, 481 c
Geat or Black Ambre, 719 d	Giralde of Windsor a valiant Captaine, 652 a	Gorlois Prince of Cornwall, 195
Gebenna, 21	Giralds or Giralduines a noble and renowned family, 652 b	Gorlston, 468 d
Geddington, 509 f	Giraldus Cambrensis Archdeacon of Brecknock, 627 b	Gorges a family, 364 e
Geaway or Godney Moore, 230 c	Giraldus Cambrensis, 8	Gormo or Guthrum the Dane, 463 d
Geduch, 18	Girwy, 743	Gormod, 21
Geffray ap Arthur, or of Monmouth, 5. his narration of Brutus and the name of Britaine discussed, 5 b	Gervus what people, 491 c	Gormon the Dane, 498 d
Geldable a part of Suffolke, 459 c	Gisburgh, 721 b	Goromberry, 413 d
Gelt a river, 783 b	Gises a family, 362 b	Goropius Becanus what he thinketh as touching the name of Britaine, 5
Geneu what it signifieth, 190	Gisleberi of Clare Earle of Hereford, 407 b	Goths language hath some resemblance of welsh and Dutch, 123
Saint Genovefs Fernham, 461 e	Githa Earle Goodwins wife, 207 b	Government of the Roman Empire under and after Constantine the Great, 76
Genounia a Province in Britain, 66	Glanoventa, 812 d	A Goth depainted, 123
Gentlemen, 177	Glanvils a family, 469 a	Goths a noble Nation, 123
George Duke of Clarence murdered, 462 e. drowned in a butt of Malvesey, 510 e	Glasse, 19	Goths and Vandals the same, ib.
Saint Germain in Britain, 132	Glasse houses, 306 e	they came from the Gete, 130
192. 410 c. he rebuketh Vortiger, 624 d. preached against Pelagians, 378 f. 707 d	Glamorgan shire, 641 a	Gowrmand, 21
Germans called Scythians, 122	Glanford a towne, 543 a	Gowrnates or Gornayes, 222 e
Germans whence they tooke their name, 26	Glasters first brought into England, 743 a	Matthew Gornay, 222 f. 364
German words agreeing with the Persian, 129	Glastenbury Abbey, 226 a	Hugh de Gornay a traitour, 472
Gernegans knights, 729 d	Glastum, that is, wood, 19	Gottes what they are, 237 b
Gernons a family, 537 b	Glawn, ibid.	Gower, 646 a
Gernston, 472 f	Gledaugh, 652 c	Grace Dieu, sometime a Nunnery, 521 f
	Glediau, 215 f	Grafton, 663 d
	Glemham, a towne and familie, 465 e
	Glen, a river, 534 d. 815 d

The Table of England.

Grafton, 506	Greystock Castle, 778 b	Hadley, 463 d
Grafton in Worcestershire, 574 e	S. Grimbold, 378 c	Pope Hadrian the fourth choked with a sie, 415 a
Grandebeef a Baron of Normandy, 712 c	Grimby, 542 c	Hadugate a Duke or Leader of the English Saxons, 138
Grandison Lord his descendant, 286 b	Grimstons-garth, ibid.	Hammond Abbey, 594
Grandison Lords, 617 d	Grimstons a family, 714 a	Haile a river, 193
John Grandison Bishop of Excester, 203 b. 206 d.	Gripbins a family, 507 b. 607 e	Haduloba, 138
	Grismunds tower, 366 d	Haimon Dentasus, 641 c
	Gron and Gronnes what they signify, 486 b	Robert Fitz Haimon subdueth Glamorganshire, 641 d
Grand-Sergeant, 406 c	Grooby, 520 f	Haked a kind of Pikes, 499
Grant a river, 486 a	Grosceff Castle, 630 b	Haledon, 805 d
Granceffer, 486 b	Grosceffours, commonly called Gravenour, a famous family, 604 b	Hales Monastery, 197 e. 365 a
Grantam, 537 d		Halefworth, 467 c
Hugh Grantmaismill, or Grantmaismill, 518 c	Grosthead or Grosfest a worthy Bishop of Lincoln, 540 b. c	Halfax, 691 f
Granvil, 645 f	Groun must fat and battle, 478	Halfax law, 692 b
Granvils a family, 646	Ground burnt for tillage, 674 c	Halton hall, 808 f
Gratianus surnamed Fanarius, and why, 77. perfidiously slaine by Andragathius, 81	Gruffin ap Conan a noble Prince of Wales, 670 a	Halyson, 812 f
Gratianus a Britain declared Emperour by the Army, 84	Guadiana, 297 a	Hamden a towne and family, 395
Gravefend, 329 b	Guaine, 21	Hameldon hills, 215 c
Grabams a family, 781	Gruain, ibid.	Hamon, 200 f
Gregory the great a means of the Englishmens conversion to Christ, 136	Gualt what it signifieth, 20	Sir Hamon Mascy, 610 e
Greleyes a family, 746 b	Guarth what it signifieth, 563 b	Hampton in Herefordshire, 620
Greeklade, see Creeklade.	Guarthenion why so called, 624	Hampton Court, 420 b
Greeks inhabited the Coasts, and along the Isles, 27	Gualth, see wath.	Hanged hills, 421 b
Greeks arrived in Britain, 28	Gueda wife to Earle Goodwin, 763 c	Hanging walls of Mark Antony, 763 c
Griesley Castle, 553 c	Guenliana a woman of many courage, 649 c	Hanley Castle, 577 b
Griesley an ancient family, ib. e	Guerif, 21	Hannere a place and family, 681
Grenvils, 196 a	Guerir, ibid.	Hannibal never warred in Britain, 92
West Greenwich, 326 d. Greenwich, 326 d	Gwif, 19	Hans a river, 587 c
Greenes a wealthy family, 507 a	Guild hall in London, 435 a	Hansacres a family, 578 b
Greenes Noyton, ibid.	Guilford, 195 b	Hansards a family, 543 a
Greenes noble Gentlemen, 510 c	Guilford a family, 352 b	Hantshire, 258
Grenhaugh Castle, 753 a	Guinech Urave, 19	Hanwell, 376 e
Gresbams Colledge, 415 b	Guineth, 659 f	Hanworth, 420 b
Gresbhamst, 482 a	Guiniad fishes, 666 b	King Harald slaine, 317 a
Greve what it signifieth, 330 a	Guiscard of Engolism, 502 c	Harald Lightfoot, 379 b
Sir Foulk Grevil a worthy knight, 517 e	Gundulph Bishop of Rochester, 333 a	Harald Haardred, 707 d
Sir Foulk Grevil father and son worshipfull knights, 565 f	Gunora a Norman Lady, 620 c	Harald Goodwins sonne usurpeth the crowne of England, 145
Greys of Grooby, 520 f	Gunpowder treason, 754 a	His worthy and Princely parts, 145
Sir Henry Grey Baron Grey of Grooby, 521 a	Gunters a family, 628 f	Harborrow or Haanburgh, 517 c
Greys of Sandacro, 553 d	Gworum what it signifieth, 325 c	Harbotle a place and familie, 812 f
Greys Earles of Kent, 553 c	Guortimer defeateth Hengist & the Saxons, 332 a. where buried, 340 n	Andrew of Harcla Earle of Carlile a traitour, degraded, 780 c
Th. Grey of Ruthin Marquesse Dorset, 217 e	Guvia, 19	Harcourts, 584 e
Henry Grey Marquesse Dorset and Duke of Suffolk, 217 f	Gwin, a colour, 26	Harden or Hawarden, 680 e
470 c. beheaded, 217	Gvoloppum, 132	Harde ancient Gentlemen, 339 d
Greys Barons of Wilton, 396 d	Guy Briens a Baron, 212 e	Harde-Cnus his death, 303 b
their badge, 621 a. 396 d	Sir Guy of Warwick, 267 a. 564	his immoderate feasting, ibid.
John Grey Earle of Tankervill, 663 d	Guy clifford Gibcliff, 564 e	Th. Harding, 298 e
	Gynacia, 263 c	Pitt Hardings Barons of Barkley, 223 a
Greystocks Barons, 778 c		Hard Knot a mountain, 765 e
		Hardwick a towne, 555 f. and a family,

The Table of England.

family,	ibid.	Haulton a towne and castle, 611	King Henry the second his fa-
Harefield,	419 c	Hauve,	ther, 465 a
Harford West,	653 b	The Haw,	Henry the seventh proclaimed
Haringtons or Haveringtons a		Hawsted,	King, 514 e family,	795 d	Hawthorn at Glasfenbury, 227 e	King Henry the sixth twice taken Haringtons Barons, 526 b. of old		Hay a towne,	prisoner by his owne subjects,
defcent,	ibid.	Hay castle,	509 e
Harington Lord,	226 e	Headon a towne,	Heorton,
Sir John Harington. Baron Ha-		Healy castle,	Heorthu,
rington of Exton,	ibid.	Healy castle,	135
Haringworth the honour of the		Healy castle,	Heptarchie of the Saxons decri-
Zouches Barons,	414 a	Heavenfield,	bed with severall fires under
Harleston,	472 e	Hebrews called Hues wherefore,	every Kingdome, 157
Harlestone a family,	ibid.	Heidons or Heydons Knights,	Heptarchie of the Saxons, 136
Harold Ewias,	617 d		reduced to a Monarchie, 138
Harold a Gentleman,	ibid.	Sir Christopher Heidon,	Herbert Bishop of Norwich,
Harprece,	223 d	Heil an Idol of the Saxons, 212	475 a
Harrow on the hill,	420 a	Heilston or Hellas,	Herbert Losenga Bishop, 472 a
Harrowden,	510 a	Heina a religious votary,	Herbert Baron of Shurland,
Hartle pole,	738 b	H. itbury,	334 b
Harts hall in Oxford,	381 d	Hien a religious woman,	Herberts Earles of Penbroch,
Havewich,	451 e	Helbeck,	559 a
Hawwood castle,	698 e	Helbeck a crag,	Sir Philip Her. rt Baron of
Hastlingbury,	453 d	Helena the mother of Constantine	Shurland, & Earle of Mont-
Hastings a noble family in times		the Great borne at Colchester,	gomery, past,	584 c		663 b
Hastings Lords of Abergevenny,	568 e	Helena a devout Empreffe,	Herberts an honourable family
		Helennum,	in Wales, 555 d
		Helion a family,	Le Herbert away in Wales, 665 f
Hastings Baron of Loughborow,	394 c	Hell-Kettles deepe pits,	Hercules whether ever any,
Sir Edward Hastings sole Baron		Helmet of gold found,	207 c
thereof,	521 b	Helvius Pertinax employed in	Herefordshire, 617
Baron Hastings and Hoc, 3. 10 b		Britan, 66. Proprietor in Bri-	Hereford Citie, 618 e
Sir William Hastings Lord Ha-		tan,	Hereford Earles, 621 b. c. & c.
stings,	318 f	Hemingston,	Hereford Duke,
Hastings great Gentlemen in		ibid.	Hereford Viscounts,
Suffex,	ibid.	Hempe the best,	ibid.
Hastings a towne whence it tooke		Hempsted,	Herring fishing by Hollanders,
the name,	317 f	Hen-Dinas,	& c. 717 f
Rape of Hastings, 318 d. Lords		Henets whence they tooke name,	Herrings in Yarmouth, 488 a thereof,	ibid.		Herrings frequent our coast,
George L. Hastings first of that		Hengham Lords,	Herlaxton,
name Earle of Huntingdon,	503 a	Hengist and Horsa brethren,	Herons or Heirons a family,
		127. they signifie an horse,	806 b. 815 e
Hatfield Bradock,	453 e	ibid.	Herlotta,
Bishop Hatfield,	406 f	Hengrave,	Herma,
Hatfield Poveril,	445 c	Herst hill,	Perst Monceaux,
Hatherton,	607 e	Henningham,	Herst what it is,
Hatfield Chace,	6. 00 e	Henly in Arden,	ibid.
Hatley S. George,	485 d	Henly hundred,	Hertlebury castle,
Hatterel hills,	611 c	Henly upon Tamis,	574 b
Sir Christopher Hatton Lo d		King Henry the sixth his vertues,	Hertfordshire,
Chancellor of England, 508		entered and translated, 294 d	405
his commendation, ib. d. his		King Henry the seventh his ver-	Hertford towne,
Monument,	509 a	ties,	407 a
Havelock a foundling,	547 d	Henry the fourth Emperour en-	Hertford Earles,
Haverds a family,	628 e	tered in Chester,	415 e
Handels Lord Burnell,	330 c	Henry of Lancaster claimeth the	called Earles of Clare, ibid.
Havering,	441 e	crowne of England, 680 d	Herty point,
Hawthorn Congreft,	401 e	Henry Fitz-Roy,	207 b
Hawthlee Castle,	464 a	King Henry the second his com-	Dofter Hervey his Causey,
Sir John Hawkywood,	450 b	mendation,	297 f
		Henry Prince rebelleth against	299 c
			Hervey first Bishop of Ely,
			493 d Herward a valiant Englishman,
			531 a Heston, Hefus,
			Hefelwood,
			695 c
			Hens,
			17
			Heve-

The Table of England.

Heveningham a towne and fami-		Holcroft a place and family,	Hotbams a family, 711 d. 722
ly,	467 c		747 d
Hexhamshire,	799 d	Holdernesse a promontorie,	Howards a Noble Family,
Hexold ariver,	807 d	Holdenby house,	472.0
Hexoldelham,	ibid.	Holdernesse a promontory,	Henrie Lord Howard, Earle of
Heyford warin,	377 a		Northampton,
Heyford Purcell,	377 a	Holdernesse honour,	516 e
Hides a family,	281 a	Holes within the Ground,	Henry Baron Howard, of Marn-
Hide what it is,	158.339 e		hil,
Highgate Castle,	778 c	Holland a part of Lincoln-shire,	215 e
High Crosse,	518 a	529. why so called,	Charles Lord Howard Earle of
High Dike a streete-way,	534 a	ibid.	Nottingham,
	64	Hollands a great family,	551 d
		and most noble,	Tho. Vicount Howard of Bindon,
High ridge,	ibid.	749	213 a
Highham a towne and family,	463 c	John Holland of Denhire, 205 a	Howards Earles of Surrey,
		his coat of armes,	304 e
Highham Ferrars,	510 b	John Holland Duke of Exce-	Thomas Lord Howard of Wal-
High-land men,	119.126	ter and Earle of Huntingdon,	den, 452. e. 470. d. Earle of
Higra 707. c. What it is,	357 e		Suffolke,
Saint Hilda a shee Saint, and her			ibid.
miracles,	718 e	Henrie Holland Duke of Ex-	Williams Lord Howard of Na-
Hills erected, for what purpose,	406 e	cester ibid. his miserable case,	worth, ibid f	783 b
Hilderham,	489. e	John Holland halfe brother to	John Lord Howard, duke of Nor-
Hildeards ancient Knights,	713 f	King Richard the second, be-	folk the first of that house, 483 headed at Plaisir,	ibid.
Hilton a Castle and familie,	742 e	Hollands Knights,	Thomas Howard his sonne van-
		Hollands Earles of Kent,	quished the Scotts,
		ibid.	483 c
		John Holland the younger his	Henrie Howard Earle of Sar-
		stie,	ry a learned Nobleman,
		502 f	ibid.
Himilco never in Britaine,	33.	Henrie Holland Duke of Exce-	Tho. Howard last duke of Nor-
Hinchbrook,	497 d	ster his fall,	folke,
Hinderskel or Hunderdskell a		502 f	ibid.
Castle,	723 e	Thomas Holland Earle of Kent	Houden and Houden-shire,
Hinkley a Barowie,	518 c	and Duke of Surrey, 304. e. be-	710 c
Hith or Hide a towne,	349 b	headed,	480 a
Hith what it signifieth,	ibid.	Holme Cultraine Abbey, 773 a	Hongill castle,
Hitching,	406 c	Holmesdale,	762 c
Ho,	329 c	294 b	Howley,
Baron Ho,	318. 319.	Holme Pier Point,	693 e
Hoes a family,	541 c	548 f	Howy, a brooke,
Hobarts Knights, and Attorneys		Holme castle,	608 e
Generall to Kings,	476	Holmes Chappell, a towne,	Hubert de Burge Earle of Kent,
Sir Edward Hoby Knight,	286 b	609 a	352
		Holme Lacy,	208 f
		Holt in Denbighshire,	ibid.
		Holt castle,	Huck new forest,
		Holly head,	592 c
		Holy Island,	Huddleston,
		814 e	696 e
		Hooten,	Hues,
		606 e	23
		Hope castle,	Hugh the Norman, 212. d. a
		681 a	traitour,
Hobelars,	272. 275 b	Horne church,	205 a
Hocke and Hocks old English		441 f	Hugolin, or Hugh Spenser,
for mire and dirt,	402 a	Horne castle,	642 b
Hoch Norton,	375 a	541 c	Hugh Earle of Shrewsbury slain,
Hockley in the bole,	402 c	Hornby castle,	672 d
Hodde hills,	215 c	753 f	Hull the river,
Hoddeson,	408 d	Honorius Emperour, 83. succour-	711 c
Hodington,	578 c	eth the distressed Britains a-	712 d
		gainst invasion of Barbarians,	Humsfrey Duke of Gloucester and
		86	his stiles, 369 c. The good duke
Hoddestons an ancient familie,	699. e. 765 d	Honoriaci what Souldiours,	and a favourer of learning, 382
		118	his death,
Hodens a family,	394 c	Honoriani,	561 c
Hodnet a towne and family,	594 b	127	Humber an arme of the Sea, 689
Hodney a river,	628 a	Horse running,	542 e
Hoel the good Prince of Wales,	650 c	723 d	Hamel or Hymell castle,
		Horse, the badge or cognisance	514 b
		of the old Dukes of Saxonic,	Hundreds or Centuries appoin-
		135	ted,
Holburne or Oldburn,	432 f	Horse beat,	158 d
Holcrofts an ancient family,	608 d	489 e	Hungerbourns,
		691 f	255 c
		596 c	Hungerfords,
			195
			Hungerford towne,
			282 e
			Hungerford Barons, 245. d. 182
			Hani-

The Table of England.

Hunbald a bald writer, 6	Ilands of what use, 478.d	Iscaw, 1
Hunthill a Fort, 509.d	An Island floating, 478.d	Isis haire or Isidis plocamus, 211
Hunstanton, 418.b	Isle of Ely, 485.c. why so called, 492.f	Isis a river, 241.c
Hunsdon, a Barons seate, 408.c	Il-bre, an Isle, 607.a	Isis a river in Gloucestershire. See Onfe.
Hunt Cliffe, 720.e	Ilcester, or Iwelcester, 221.e	Islip, 377.a
Huntercombe, a family, 394.c	Ilfarcomb, 207.a	Simon Islip, 332.c
Huntingdon castle in Herefordshire, 815.d	Ilkeley, 697.c	Is-trium Brigantium, 701.c
Huntingdonshire, 680.c	Il-freet, 603.e	Isbancester, 443.d
Huntingdonshire, 497.e	K. Ina, 226.c	Itium is whitsun, not Callan, 348
Huntingdon towne, 497.d	Innes of Court and Chancery in London, 427.c	Judeal de Totenais, 201.f
Huntingdon Earles, 502.c	Inborow what it is, 815.b	Ivel the river, 221.b
Huntingfeld towne and Baron, 467.c	Incubi, 17	Julham or Chilham, 336.b
Huntly Nab, 710.f	Infants of Spaine, 164	Julia freet, 639.c
Hurling, 186	Inglebeys a family, 535.f. 699.f	Julian the Apostata a usurper the Empire, 79. is declared Cesar, 78
Hurlers, 192	Ingleborne, 742.c	Julius Caesar attempteth Britaine, 34
Hurst castle, 260.d	Ingleborrow Hill, 749.e	Julius a Martyr in Britaine, 73
Huscarles what they be, 576.e	Inglefields an ancient family, 284.c	Juluber, 336.b
Hussy the first and last Baron of that name, 535.d	Inglini bipenniferi, 154	Ivo Talboys of Anjou, 532.f
Hyeritha a Shee-Saint, 208.b	Inus men, 24	Ivo a Persian Bishop, 499.a
I.	Insula Caruli, ibid.	A Jury of 12. men, 153
Iames the sixth of Scotland, styled King of great Britaine, 141. a mild and gracious Prince, 298.b	Inundations in Monmouthshire, and Somersetshire, 634.d	Justices of the Forest, 293.c
James the fourth King of Scotland, 483.c	Joan the faire maide of Kent, 353.b	Justices ordained by Ælfred, 158
Tho. James of Oxford a studious Antiquarian, 639.e	Joan de Acres, 369.b	Justices of Peace instituted by Edward the third, 160
Janus with two foreheads, 97	Johannes de Sacro bosco, 692.c	Justices of Assise, 160. 179
Japhets progenie how it was propagated, 10	John of Wearhamstvd., 7	Justice, or chiefe Justice of England, 178
Jarrow, 743.d	John Earle of Arbol cruelly executed, 336.a	Justices Itinerant, 179
Jberi whence they tooke name, 26	John of Gaunt his stile, 757.b	Justices in Eyre, ibid.
Iccius portus, in France, a port townelet, 36	King John called judicially into question in France, and ended for murdering his Nephew Arthur, 733.d	Justices of Gaule delivery, ibid.
Iccni, 456	Saint Johns Knights of Jerusalem, 428.a. 433.a	Justices of Nisi prius, ibid.
Ichnild-street, 456.d	Joseph of Arimathea, 68	Jute a people in Germany, 128
Iccni in Britaine discomfited, 43	Joseph Iscaucus a Poet, 204.d	why so called, 130
Ide a river, 550.d	Joseph Scaliger, 10	Juxing, 459.d
Iermis Knights, 461.d	Ispre towre, 319.d	K
Iermegans Knights, 468.e	Wilde Ispre, 332.c. Earle of Kent, 352.e	K Aderne, 18
Ierby a towne, 769.c	Ispswich or Gipwich, 464.c	Kainho a Barony, 401.d
Ierov or Jorvalle Abbey, 729.c	Ireland, the site thereof, 56	Katharine Dowager of Spaine entered, 513
Ierusalem in hand to be rededified, 79.	Irke a river, 746.a	Keian a Scot, 649.b
Jefstine a rebell against Prince Rhes, 641.e	Irchenfeld or Archenfield, 617.e	Kedelfton, 553.e
Jesu of Bethlems house, 297.e	Irt a riveret, 765.e	Keimes a Barony, 654.c
420.f	Irmsusfull. See Ermin, 64	Keina, a devout Virgin, 236.f
Jesus Colledge in Oxford, 383.b	Irthing a river, 782.f	Keirch, 20
John Jewell Bishop of Salisbury, 208. e. a profound Clerke, 248.e	Irtlington, 745.e	Kilhop a riveret, 738.c
S. Jies, 193	Irtwell a river, 745.e	Kelney, 714.a
Ikborowgh, 482.b	Iron or Tron mynes, 581.b	Kelley, 543.a
Ikenild freet, 64	Isa, a river. See Usa.	Ken a river, 753.f
Ikening street, 402.d	Isabel de Fortibus, 207.e	Kencheffer, 618.d
Ikesworth, 461.d	Isan parles a rock, 763.b	Kendale, or Kirkby Kendal, 759
	Iservier. See Ex.	Kendale Barons and Earles, ibid.
	Isca Danmoniorum, 203.f	K. Kenelm a Saint, 365.e
	Isca Silurum, 204.a	Kenelworth or Killingworth, 566
		Kenelworth castle, ibid.
		Dictum de Kenelworth, 567
		Kenei

The Table of England.

Kenet the river, 255 a
Keningbal, 472 c
Kenwalch vangunisheth the Brittans, 221 d
Kent, 323 why so called, ibid.
Kentishmen right courteous and valiant, 324 c
Kent Earles, 352 d
Kentish Percy-kings or Potentates, 37
Kent-sand, 713 f
Kentigern Bishop of Glasco, 679 c a great Clerke, 378 f
Kernaw, 183
Kernellare, what it is, 753 f
Kesar, for Casar, 326 c
Kesteven a part of Lincolnshire,
533 b
Keston, 326 c
Keswicke, 763 c
Ket a rebell, hanged, 473 b
Ketel, the name of a familie,
543 b
Kettleby, 543 a Kettering, 510
Keven, 21
Keven Caer, 661 c
Kevenles Castle, 624 a
Kevin, 21
Saint Kibie an holy man, 673 a Kidderminster, 573 f. a Barony,
514 a Kidwelly, 649
Kildale Castle, 721 e
Kighley, a place and familie, 693
Kilgarth, 192
Killey, 816 e
Kilgarran, 654 e
Killingworth, See Kenelworth,
Kilmaln Lhoyd, 650 d
Kilnsay Crag, 697 b
Kilpeck a castle and familie, 617
The Kings Champions, ibid.
Kilton castle, 720 c
Kime a noble familie, 535 e
Kimbolton or Kinnibantum Cafle, 501 c
Kindreton, 510 b
Kindreton Barons, 609 b
Kined a Saint, 646 c
Kinefage Castle, 644 d
King what it signifieth, 163. his soveraigne power, &c. ibid.
his roial prerogatives, 163
Kings of England made heires to their subjects, 485 e f
Kings in Britain during the Romans Empire there, 67
The Kings Courts of Justice, 177
Kings Bench, 178
Kingston Lacy, 216 f
Kings Cleare, 255 a
Kings knight or Taine, 293 e
Kingston upon Tamie, 297 b
Kings Delfe, 500 b
Kingston upon hull, 712 d
Kings Ditch by Cambridge,
488 c
Kings wood Abbey, 364 c
Kinnoburga, 502 b
Kinnerfley, 620 c
Kinton, 561 c
Kirkham, 709 d
Kirkby Bellers, 522 f
Kirkby Morfide, 722 c
Kirkby the same that Pontreifet,
695 c
Kirkby Lonsdale, 760 c
Kirkby Stephen, ibid.
Kirkby Thore, 761 c
Kirk Oswald, 777 f
Kirkton, 532 c
Kirklop a river, 781 d
Kirklings, 491 b
Kirton, 203 d
Kits Coty house, 332 b
Kitions knights, 461 e
Knariborow Castle, 699 f
Knebworth, 406 e
Knevers a familie, 472 c f
Knevet or Knivet, Baron of Ef-crick, 707 e
Knight what degree of Gentry,
170
Knights simply so called, 173
Knights of fower sorts, 171
Knights Banerets, ibid.
Knights of the Bath, 172
Knights dubbed Earles, 174
Knight a title of dignity, 175
Knights bow dubbed, 176
Knights Bachelars, ibid.
Knights twelve, employed in the Conquest of Glamorgan-shire,
641 e f
Knightles ancient knights, 508
Knighton, 623 e
Kniveton a place and familie,
553 e
Knocking Castle, 597 b
Knoll, 328 a Knolls Barons de Rotherfield,
389 e
Knots a dainty fowle, 543 c
Knotsford a towne, 610 c
Knute the Hardie, or Hardie
Knute, 143
Knute King of the Danes van-quisheth Ethelbert, 143
Kowain, 18
Kumero, 10
Kumbri or Kamby, 765 b
Kumari, ibid.
Kumeraeg, ibid.
Kwma a British drinke, 31
L
L Aberius Durus slaine by Kenilsmen,
Lac a riveret, 753 d
Lacie, 213 d
Lacies Conquerours of Ireland,
631 c
Lacie the Norman, 695 f
John Lackland, who hee was,
255 f
Laclos a family, 591 d
Laclozdam seemeth to be Stony Stratford, 397 b
Lalianns an usurper in Britaine murdered, 71
Latavia, 111
Lati, ibid.
Latsu a valiant Captaine, 69
Leford, by contraction, Lord, 168
Lane, 19
Lakes in Staffordsh. of a strange nature, 588 b c
William Lambard commended,
323 b
William Lambard his hospitall,
303 b
Lambith, 327 f
Lambley Nunnery, 799 e
Lamborne, 283 f
Lambourn Manour, 440 c
Lampreies, 574 c
Lane the name of a familie, 509 f
Lanadiffry, 649 d
Lancashire, 745
Lancaster or Loncaster towne,
754 b
Lancaster Lords, 755 f
Lancaster Earles, 756
Lancaster Dukes, 757
Lancamb, 463 d
Lanchester, 742 e
Landaff, 642 d
Lands end, 188
Lanercost Abbey or Priory, 782 c
Langerston, 785 e
Abbers Langley, 465 a
Kings Langley, 414 f
Langley, ibid.
Langho, 592 a
Langtons a familie, 750 a Langnam, 752 e
Lanbeath, 668 b
Lapis Tituli. See Stonar,
Lacelles a familie, 707 e. 724 e
Latham, 749 a
Latimer what it is, 598 c
Latimers, a towne, 394 e
Z z z z Latimers

The Table of England.

Latimers de Corby, a family,	507 b	Leofrike first Bishop of Excester,	204 a	John Lidgate a Monke,	ibid.
Latimers, Lords, 721 f.	729 d	Leofrike Lord of Brane or Burne,	533 a	Liesnes Abbey,	328 b
Latimer a surname,	598 c	Leofstane Abbot of S. Albanes,	393 c	Lieutenants in every County or	Shire instituted by King ÆL.
Lavatre,	732 d	Leolin Prince of Wales his beha-	viour to King Edward, 363 e	Lime river and towne,	210 b
Laver a river,	ibid. e	Lean Vaur a fabulous Giant,	604	Limestone great store,	694 f
Lavellin an high hill,	767 f	Laws of England in a tripartite	division,	Limits of the Roman Empire,	789 e, d. see Scotland.
Lawleyes, a family,	591 f	Leon Vaur what it signifieth, ib.		Limfries a family,	567 e
Lawlesse Court,	441 e	Leonell Duke of Clarence, 462 d		Lime a port towne,	549 e
Laws of England in a tripartite	division,	Leprosie why termed Elephantia-	sis, 522 d. when it came first	Line or flax of the best,	620 a
Law-courts of England,	177	into England,	ibid.	Lillinstone,	396 c
Laws, that is, Heapes of stones,	802 b	Leftoff,	468 d	Lincolnsire,	529
De la Lawnds, a family,	542 c	Leisterd,	191	Lincoln City, 538 b. whence the	name is derived,
Laurence Noel, repayer of our	188	Leisthriel,	190	ibid.
Saxons language,	188	Lettuy what it is,	399 f	Lincoln Earles,	544 e f
Laxton or Lexinton a towne and	name of a family,	Leuca,	21	Lindsey a part of Lincolnshire,	537 f
Layth,	21	Leven a river,	781 c. 782 b	Robert of Lincoln,	313 d
Lea or Ley a river,	406 e	Leveney a river,	628 c	Lincolne Colledge in Oxford,	381
Lea, the name of a family,	592 d	Levensand,	754 f	Linslock Castle,	778 a
Leach,	21	Lever Manr,	67	Lingeins a family,	665 d
Lead of Darbyshire,	556 e	Leventhorps a family,	408 c	Lin 480 d. why so called,	ibid.
League,	21	S. Lewis King of France taken	prisoners,	Old Lin,	480
Leakes Knights,	556 b	249 e		King Lin,	ibid.
Leam, the river,	507 e	Lewis of France his pretended ti-	tle to the Crowne of England,	Linnun Episcopi,	ibid.
Leama brooke,	561 d	ibid.		Linsperis poole,	668 d
Leamington,	ibid.	Lewis a towne,	312 e	Lina a river,	547 e
Leanminster,	17	Lewkyors,	312 e	De la Linde,	213 f
Leckhamsted,	396 e	Ley-mouth,	440 a	Linton or Lenton a towne,	547 d
Leddets, a family,	507 b	Lhan what it signifieth,	631 d	Lionesse,	187
Long-Leat,	245 a	Lhan Beder,	657 d	Lisls a family in the Isle of Ely,	494 d
Ladden a river,	620 e	Lhan Badern vaur,	658 a	Lisle a family,	276 a
Ledbury a towne,	ibid.	Lhan Stephen,	650 c	Lisle of Rougemount,	490 b
Lee, Knight,	280 c	Lhan Devi Brevi,	657 b	Listers a family,	592 e
Lee a place and family,	610 c	Lhanthony Abbey,	631 c	Viconet Lisle,	280 d
Sir Henry Lee,	395 f	Lhan Vaur,	672 e	Liver a river,	192
Leeds Castle,	331 c	Lhan Vethlin,	662 d	Littons a family,	406 e
Leeds,	694 e	Lhan Heron,	193	Litchfield in Hantsire,	272 c
Leegh,	441 c	Lhan Stuphadon or Lannstave-	ton,	Littleborough,	549 e
Leez,	445 c	196 c		Lites Cary,	224 f
Legeolium,	695 a	Lheir,	668 b	Littletons a family,	574 d
Leibourne,	332 c	Llewellyn ap Siffl Prince of Wales,	680 a	Littleton alias Westcot a learned	Lawyer and a famous,
Leiden Castle built by Hengist,	130	Llewellyn ap Gryffith the last	British Prince of Wales, 670 b	ibid.
Leightons knights,	593 a	Lhwellyn last Prince of Wales of	Brittishrace, 624 c. flaine. ib.	Llwyd his opinion concerning the	name of Britain,
Leighton Buzard,	402 e	524		Library in Oxford furnished,	381
Leighton in Huntingdonshire,	501 d	Lichfield, 585 b. an Archbepif-	copall See,	Lid what it is,	491 d
Leiton,	439 f	Lickey Hill,	574 d	Lidriver,	199 d. 781 f
Leightons a family,	667 d	Lid a towne,	351 a	Lid Castle, 781. Liddeisdale, ibid.
Leicestershire,	517	Lidgate a village,	461 f	London
Leicester towne,	519 d
Leike a towne,	587 c
Lemfer or Leinster,	619 f
Lemfer Ore,	620 a
Lemfer bread,	620
Lena,	17
Lenham,	331 a
Leofrike Earle of Mercians,	567 e

The Table of England.

London highway from Saint Al-	banes turned out of Watling-	streets,	415 b	Luthingland,	442 a	Maltravers Barons,	217 a
London or Londres, a family,	649 d	Lutter worth, 517 f. an Episco-	pal See,	Lygons a family,	577 b	ibid.	577 b
Manrice de Londres or London,	ibid. c	Th. de la Lynde,	213 f	Lygnorice in great plenty grow-	ing,	550 f	577 b
Lonchamps a family,	532	Lyrpoole or Litherpoole,	748 d	Maclesfield, a towne and	forest,	610 b	814 a
Longford a place and family,	553 d	M		Madin-boure or Madningbourne,	ibid.	Mamignot,	326 d
Long-Meg a stone,	777 e			Madning money,	ibid.	Maminots Barons,	332 d
Longvils a family,	397 c			Madock falsly dealt withall by	his Guardian John Earle of	Manchefer,	746 a
Lonisdale,	760			ware,	677 b	Manchet the finest,	420 a
Loa a river,	192			Maate,	796 d	Manchefer why so called,	747 a
Lophamford,	467 d			Magicke practised in Britaine,	234 a	Mandrubatius, See Andro-	gens oppressed by Castibili-
Lora Countesse of Leicester, a	forest,			Magnavills, alias, Mandevill,	452 b. Earles of Essex,	37
Lortie the name of a family,	221 d			ibid.	453 e	Mandruites a family,	591 e
Lothbrooke the Dane,	207 a			Magnavil his end,	ibid. f	Mangonells,	400 d
Lortery used by Saxons,	135			Magnentius an usurper, 77. cal-	led Taporus, ibid. a fortu-	Mannours or de Maneris a fa-	815 e
Lovain a family,	444 e			nate Prince, 77. killed him-	selfe,	ibid.
Lovels, 374. a family,	505 d			Magnus a Dane, 314 c. his mo-	numnt,	ibid.
Lords of Castle Cary,	514 a			Magoclanus a tyrant in Britain,	113	Margan Castle,	644 e
Lovers a family,	553 d			ly,	564 f	Marga,	20
Loughborough,	521 d			Magon a god,	803 d	Margaret Countesse of Rich-	mond,
Lowland-men,	126			Mabel Earle of Hereford,	358 f	216 d
Louth,	542 c			Maiden Castle,	212 c	Margaret Countesse of Salisbu-	ry beheaded,
Lowy of Tunbridge,	330 a			Maiden Bradley,	24	250 d
Lowy of Briony,	ibid.			Maiden way,	761 e	Lord Marchers,	589 c. 165
Luceni in Ireland,	121			Maiden-head or Maiden-Hith,	286 c	Marecley hill,	620 b. moveth
Lucensii in Spaine,	ibid.			Maidstone,	330 e	ibid.
Sir Rich. Lucy Lord Justice of	England became a Chanon,			Maidulph the Irish Scot,	242 c	Marcu made Emperour in Bri-	taine by the armies,
Lucies a family,	769 f			Main, what it signifieth,	569 c	84
Lucius King of Britaine,	67			Maioir of London first ordeined,	188	Marefchall Earle of Harlows,	294 b
Lucies Knights an ancient fami-	ly,			Main Amber,	328 e	Marefchall Earle of Penbroch	why so named,
Lucullea certaine speares,	63			Malcolm Can Mor, King of	Scots,	500 c	655 b
Ludgate,	423 c			Maldon, 446 e. forced by Queen	Boadicia,	448
Ludham,	478 d			Maldwit or Manduit,	570	Mary Hall in Oxford,	381 d
Ludlow,	590 c			Mallers a family,	223 e	Mary Magdalen Colledge in	Oxford,
Ludlowes a family,	594 b			Malliveries,	700 b	382 b
Luffelds,	396 f			Malmesbury,	422 b	S. Maries of Radcliff,	237 e
Luffenham or Lessingham,	525			Malpas, 603 e. Barons thereof,	ibid.	779 d
Lug, a river,	619 d			ibid.		Markham an uncorrupt judge,	Z z z z z Markham
Lugus, what it signifieth,	779 a
Lullington, a town and family,	184
Lumley Castle,	742 b
Lumleys Barons,	ibid.
Lune or Lone a river,	753 c
Lupicinus sent into Britaine,	78
Lupus Earle of Chester,	611 a
Lusorie naves,	811 d
Luthing, a lake,	468 d

The Table of England.

Markham a village and name of family,	550 e	Medeshamstede, alias Medeswold hamsted,	ibid.	Middletons a family,	698 d
Markham lord chiefe Justice of England,	550 e	Medeswold, a gulfe,	512 b	Middlewich,	607 f
Marle,	20.393 c	Medley,	693 f	Mikel barr,	701 f
Marleborough,	255 d	Medvan,	67	Milburga a devout virgin,	591 e
Marleborough statute,	256 a	Medway river,	329 d	Sir Walter Mildmay a worthy knight,	514 e
Marlow,	393	Meermarkes in old time,	515 c	Mildred a Saint,	340 b
Marmions a family,	729 e	Melbourn castle,	554 a	Milfons,	681 a.556 f
Marmions the kings Champions,	582 c	Melcomb Regie,	211 c	Milford haven,	651 d
Marney Baron,	213 a	Melfield,	815 d	Milsum castle,	765 d
Marnhill,	215 c	Long Melford an hospitall,	462	Mimmes,	415
Marquesites found,	720 f	Melienith,	624 a	Mineran what towne,	407 f
Marquesse what degree of honour,	165	Melin, what colour,	26	Minchins, that is, Nuns,	362 b
Marquesse how created,	ibid.	Melitus a Roman, Bishop of London,	426 c	Minshul a place and family,	608
Marchland,	690 e	Melkin a great professor of learning,	378 f	Minster,	334 a
Martin Bishop of Tours, against putting heretikes to death,	82	Melton Mowbray,	522 e	Minster what it signifieth,	245 c
Martin Vicegerent in Britaine, flabbeth himselfe,	78	Menai,	668 c	Minster Lovell,	373 f
Martins, lords of Keimes,	654 d	Mendip hill,	230 d	Missenden a towne,	394 e. de
Martins a family,	654 d	Mendlesham,	465 b	Missenden, Gentlemen,	394 e
Martys in Britaine,	73	Menev,	189	Mitford,	812 b
Masons first brought into England,	743 a	Menevia,	653 d	Milton,	731 b
Massages, Scythians,	121	Menils Barons,	721 b	Mittons a family,	665 d
Massham,	729 c	Merbury a place and familie,	609 f	Mixon,	274 e
Matrafall,	662 d	Mercians of the North,	559 b	Modwena or Mowen a religious Virgin,	569 e. 586 b. ber Epi- taph,	586 c
Mawde the Emperesse, Lady of the English, 453 e. King Henry the First his wife,	284 d	Merchenlage,	153	Mogontus,	196 a. 221 c
Mawde of Saint Valeri a fountaine,	623 c	Merworth,	330 d	Mohuns,	691 d
Saint Maudit Castle,	189	Mercury had the charge of waies,	64	Mohuns or Moions,	190 f
Maugre Llewellyn a Castle,	623 c	Mergate,	413	Moignes or Monkes of Essex a family,	245 b
Mauleies Barons,	709 c	Merionethshire,	667	Moielenly,	676 c
Peter Mauley,	719 c	Merivale,	569 d	Moinglath,	ibid.
Mault of Abbingdon,	280 a	Merkin,	188	Mole a river, why so called,	297
Mault how made,	485 b	Merlin the Britans Tager, where borne,	649 f	Mold,	681 a
Mannbury,	212 c	Mersey a river,	745 e	Molineaux a family,	748
Manwells,	641 e	Mesey mouth,	610 b	Mona Taciti, an Isle,	671
Maxey castle,	515 a	Merthland,	481 a	Mona subdued by Julius Agri- cola,	ibid.
Maximus usurper the Empire, 82. his vertues, ib. styled Tre- vericus Emperour,	ibid.	Merton a poole,	749 d	Monastical life or Monkerly when first professed,	603 a
Maximus the usurper vanquish- ed and put to death by Theo- dosius,	83	Merton Colledge,	302	Monasteries what they were,	603 c
Maxflock castle,	567 c	Statute of Merton,	302 e	Monasteries suppressed,	163
Meales what they be,	479 e	Merton brooke a riveret,	554 d	Monkchester,	810 b
East-Mean Hundred,	268 f	Metham a place and familie,	710	Monks, See Exceter,
West-Mean Hundred,	ibid.	Metaris or Maltraith,	529 c	Monks Laymen,	603 c
Meansborow Hundred,	ibid.	Mettingham,	468 c	Monkes a family,	208 a
Meanuari,	ibid.	Merlin Sylvester, the British Apollo,	640 a	Monkes regular or of the Cler- gie,	ibid.
Meaux Abbey,	712 e	Michael de la Pole Earle of Suffolke,	712 e	Monkes Weremouth,	742 f
Walter Medantinus an Official Earle,	621	Saint Michaels mount,	188	Monmouthshire,	61
Medaghom,	634 b	Michelham,	315 d	Monmouth towne,	632 b. the natall place of King Henry the Fifth,	632 e
Medcasses a numerous family,		Michael Scotus a great Mathe- matician,	773 b	Monmouth an Academy,	632 e
		Middlesex,	419	Monow, a river,	617. 611 c
		Middleton Abbey built by King Athelstane,	213	Montacute a place, why so called,	222 b

Montacutes

Montacutes

The Table of England.

Montacutes Knights,	510 a	The Mosses, 745 d. whence they come,	747 b	Needles,	274 e
Montacutes a family,	222 c	The Moto,	783 b	Needhams a family,	464 a
Earles of Salisbury, ibid.	349	Mont Sorel or Mount Soar Hill,	521 a	Needwood,	598 c
Th. Montacute Earle of Salisbu- ry slaine before Orleans,	250	Mowbray,	304 f	Neirford a town and family,	586 e
Mont Agle Barons,	753 f	Mowbraies a family, the originall of their race,	723 c	Neirborough,	481 d
Montchenfyes Barons,	329 a	Mowbray much affected the Templars,	566 d	Nen the river his head,	507 c
Guarin Montchenfye another rich Crassus,	463 b	Mowbraies whence descended,	481 c	Nen river,	497 a
Montferrant Castle,	709 b	Thomas Mowbray Duke of Norfolke,	482 e. banished,	Nen or Auson river overfloweth the flat Country,	513 c
Montfichets Barons,	453 c	Montfort Earle of Leicester,	523 e	Nesse, 351. a Promontory,	451 d
Montfichei Baron, 440 a. 809 e		Simon de Montfort the younger disloyall to his Prince,	523 e	Nesta a welsh Lady and a re- vengefull woman,	628 e
Montforts,	566 a	Simon Montfort another Car- line, 577 f. slaine,	578 a	Netherby,	781 d
Simon de Montfort		Montgomeryshire,	661	Netherwent,	640 b
Leicester,	523 e	Montgomery towne and Castle,	661 f	S. Neoth,	378 e
Simon de Montfort the younger disloyall to his Prince,	523 e	Montgomerie Earle,	663 b	S. Neots or Needs,	497 c
Simon Montfort another Car- line, 577 f. slaine,	578 a	Montgomerie made a shire,	677	Neotus an holy man,	191. 497 a
Montgomeryshire,	661	Mont-Turold a fort,	513 a	Neotflow,	101
Montgomery towne and Castle,		Montjoy,	555	Nero the Emperour how he stood affected to Britaine,	48
		Montthault Barons,	680 e	Nettlested,	463 e
		Monuments or Tombs in Pauls Church in London,	426 d. & c.	Neuern river,	654 d
		The Moore in Monmouthshire,	694 d	Nevills a family, their descent,	737 c
				Nevill Lord Faulconberg Earle of Kent,	353 c
				Rich. Nevill Earle of Warwick,	415 d
				John Nevill Marquesse Monta- cute,	222 c. 403
				Rich. Nevill Earle of Warwick,	ibid.
				Rob. Lord Nevill killed in adu- tery,	729 c
				Nevills an honorable name,	769
				Nevin a mercate village,	668 b
				Newark upon Trent,	549 e
				Newburg,	672 f
				Newborough Abbey,	723 b
				Newboroughs or de Novo Bur- go,	213 a
				Will. of Newborough,	723 b
				Newbury,	283 d
				New Castle upon Tine,	809 f
				New Castle upon Tivy in Wales,	650 e
				New Colledge in Oxford,	381 e
				Newenden,	351 b
				Newenham Abbey,	207 a
				Newgate in London,	423 c
				New forest,	259 b
				Newhall,	446 c
				Newlands,	767 a
				New-leame,	495 b
				Newmerch,	364 b
				Bernard Newmarch a valiant and Politicke Norman,	618 e
				New-market or Newmercate towne,	459 d
				New-market Heath, ibid. c. 490 d

Z z z z 3

The Table of England.

Newmarch the name of a family,	221 c	Northamptonshire,	505	Okenyate,	593
Newham,	401	North Elmham,	481 f	Oldbury,	269 d
Newham Regis,	562 d	North Leach,	366 b	Old man of Bullen,	345 c
Newham well,	ibid. e	Northwales,	659 c	Old Castle executed,	325 c
Newport Paine,	397 c	Northfolke,	471	Old street or Ould street,	540 e
Newport in Monmouthshire,	639 d	Northwich,	607 f	Old Towne,	617 c
Newport in Penbrockshire,	654	Norfolk men wrangling Law- yers,	471 c	South Okindon,	442 d
Newports a family,	605 d	Norwich a Bishops See,	472 a	O-Neall great Monarch of I- reland,	126
Newports Knights,	594 f	Norwich what it signifieth,	473 e	Onions hole,	271 b
Newsted,	547 c	Norfolk Earles and Dukes,	482 b	Onions Pennies,	ibid. a
Newstrambat country,	144	Norton in Suffolke,	464 a	Orbeies a family,	607 e
Newton in Northamptonshire,	509 f	Norton Dany,	507 a	Orcas what point,	x
Newton in Glamorganshire,	643	Norwich a City much endange- red,	475 c	Orchard the Honour of certaine Barons,	223 c
Newton in Montgomeryshire,	661	North-Riding,	717	Ordalium, what trial,	211 a
Nicen Creed established,	77	Northampton, 509 a. why so na- med,	ibid.	Ordutph his tomb,	199 c
S. Nicolas Isle,	200	Northamptonfield fought,	509 a	Ordgar,	ibid.
Nicolas of Tenkshury,	202 c	Northamptonshire,	ibid. f	Ore a river,	465 d
Nicolaus Fabricius de Petrico a good Antiquarian,	97	Northamptonshire Earles,	515 e	Oreford,	ibid.
Nicolaus de Albeniac an Inhe- ritrix,	364 f	Northumberland,	799	Orell a family,	748 a
Nid or Neath a river,	645 f	Norththil,	690 f	Oriall Colledge in Oxford,	381 d
Nidherdale,	ibid. e	Notley Abbey,	395 a	Originall of Nations and their names,	4
Niding a name of Reproach,	333 b	Nottinghamshire,	547	Ormesby a towne and family,	542 e
Niger usurper the Empire in Siria, 68. slaine by Septimius Seuerus,	ibid.	Nottingham, 547 d. why so cal- led,	ibid.	Ormeskirke,	744 a
Ninnius a learned professor,	378 f	Nottingham Earles,	511 b	Orthotes,	139
Ninius,	6	Northumberland Kings, Dukes, and Earles,	819 d	Orton or Overton,	502 b
Ninius or Ninian an holy Bri- taine,	118	Novatian hereticks,	84	Orwell a river,	463 f
Nobilis Caesar, what title,	104	Nun Eaton,	569 a	Orwell Haven,	465 a
Nobilissimus the sonne of Con- stantine an Emperour,	85	The first English Nun,	339 c	Orewood,	184
Nobility in England of two sort,	164			Osgodby,	543 a
Noels a family,	284 c			Ostib a virgin,	451 c
Nonestuch,	287 c			S. Ostiths a towne,	ibid. b
Normanton Fields for Dorman- ton fields,	511 f			Osney Abbey founded,	375 c
Norris,	384 a			Ostorius Lieutenant for the Re- mans,	590 a
Norris of Ricot,	384 a			Ostorius his adventures, and ser- vice in Britaine, 42. 43. his victorie, 44. honoured with Triumphant Ornaments,	45
Normans, why so called,	144			Oswald Bishop of Worcester, a maintainer of Monasticall life,	576 b
what outrages they commit- ted,	144			Oswald slaine by Penda,	597
Normans renowned for Marti- all Prowesse,	153			Oswald gloriously entombed,	540 f
Normans Conquest set downe at large,	145 &c.			Oswald,	690 f. 806 c
Normandie given to Rollo,	144			Oswald his Epitaph,	748 c
Normandy awarded away from the Kings of England,	733 d			Fables going of him,	540 f
Norrham a towne,	816 b			Oswaldslaw Hundred,	578 c
North Allertonshire,	723 f.			Oswestre,	597 c
saire there,	ibid. b			Otherhalfe stone,	191
North, Barous,	491 b			Otelands,	295 e
North, Hall,	415 d			Oxford,	328 c
				Otley,	698 d
				Ottadini,	796
				Ottery river,	206 c
				Otteryborne field,	803 c
				Ottery S. Maris,	ibid.
				Ottery pip in Kent,	335 a
				Okeham,	526 a
				Ouerburn,	640 b
				Oulney,

The Table of England.

Oulney,	397 c	Pasfham,	397 b	Britain,	156
Oundale, for Avondale,	510 c	Paston, a townlet and family,	478 f	Pennahel, what it signifieth,	117
Ounbery Hill,	721 d	Paston,	21	Pen-Elin,	187
Ousley,	505 e	Patern a Bishop in Wales,	668 b	Penfants,	188
Ouse a river in Gloucestershire,	367 a	Patishul, a towne and familie,	507 a	Pennant,	191
Ouse river first called Ure and Tour,	689	Patishulls,	399 d	Penal,	66 f
Ouse or Ouze river,	241	Pauls or Poul Church in Lon- don founded,	425 c	Penbroch or Pembroke,	551
Ouse the greater,	471 b	Pauls steeple burnt,	425 c	Penbroch towne,	555 a
Ousbourne a riveret,	701 d	Paul,	68	Penbroch Earles,	19
Owen Justice of the common Pleas,	592 a	Paul the Notarie, surnamed Arna,	78 b	Pen Maer,	669 c
Owen Glendowerdwy, or Glen- dour, a notable Rebel,	623 c	Paulinus first Archbishop of Torke,	693 d	Pen Maer Khan,	ibid.
Owers,	274 e	Paulinus preached Gods word in Lindsey,	539 e	Pen Maer,	811 d
Omeborow what it is,	815 b	Paunton, a towne,	53 a	Penbally Castle,	760 c
Oxfordshire,	373	Payn Peverell,	389 d	Penbally,	582 f
Oxford,	377 e	Penda a Christian prince dared,	512 e	Pkridge, a towne,	583 a
made an University,	380 f	Peag-Kirk,	515 a	Penfeth chace,	581 d
Oxford Earles,	389 d	Peake in Darbysh., 553. why so called,	556 c	Penhurst,	329 e
Oxney,	351 f	Peasen growe of themselves,	351 b.	Penworth or Penverdant,	752 d
		Peasen growe of themselves, 351 b. growing out of rocks,	466 b	Pentaphyllon,	19
		Peche's Court,	182	Pentney Abbey,	481 e
		Pecklers Court,	222 a	Peperking alias Peverell,	443 f
		Pecklers Court,	19	Percies a family,	312 b
		Pecklers Court,	19	Perciahes a family,	722 d
		Pecklers Court,	19	Percy Hotspur,	803 c
		Pecklers Court,	19	Percy Earle of Northumberland slaine by rebels,	724 d
		Pecklers Court,	19	Percepierre, an herbe,	237 a
		Pecklers Court,	19	Percegrine Berry, Lord Wil- longbie of Eresby,	541 f
		Pecklers Court,	19	Percegrines, Falkons,	654 b
		Pecklers Court,	19	Perennius a Minion of the Em- perour Commodus, 67. be- headed,	67
		Pecklers Court,	19	Perin,	190
		Pecklers Court,	19	Perith or Petriana,	777 a
		Pecklers Court,	19	Perles shell fish,	669 d
		Pecklers Court,	19	Perles,	765 e
		Pecklers Court,	19	Perkin Warbeck,	205 b
		Pecklers Court,	19	Perthor,	578 b
		Pecklers Court,	19	Pertinax, Emperour,	68
		Pecklers Court,	19	Peter in Britain,	ibid.
		Pecklers Court,	19	Peters Post a delse or quarry of stone,	696 e
		Pecklers Court,	19	Petre of Writtle Baron,	442 d
		Pecklers Court,	19	Saint Peters upon the Wall,	443 e
		Pecklers Court,	19	Sir William Petre his commen- dations,	446 a
		Pecklers Court,	19	Peterpence,	226 c
		Pecklers Court,	19	Peterburgh,	512 a
		Pecklers Court,	19	Peterril, a river,	ibid.
		Pecklers Court,	19	Petor,	19
		Pecklers Court,	19	Petorum,	ibid.
		Pecklers Court,	19	Petrarie,	400 d
		Pecklers Court,	19	Petrocks,	194
		Pecklers Court,	19	Petronius Turpilianus sent as propretor

The Table of England.

Proprietor into Britain,	52	Polesworth,	569 e
Pevensey or Pemsey,	213 e	Wil. de la Pole, Duke of Suffolk,	469 d. banished, 469 f. be-headed, ibid.
Peverells Lords of Darby,	558 d	Henry Pole Lord Mountacute,	222 d. 453 d
Peverells a family,	445 c	Pole, Cardinal,	206 a
Peveer a river and place,	609 e	Polsimore,	203 e
Pewter vessel,	184	Poltroffe a river,	799 f
Philips or Philips a family,	467	Pole,	193
Philbert,	269 c	Policletus a favorite of Nero sent into Britain,	52
q. Earle of Flanders, Earle	352	Pontes,	394 a
Pickers,	782 b	Poole, 606 f. Pontsbine County or Earldome in France how it came to the Kings of England,	394 b
Pickeringtowne,	782 b	Pomeries,	202 a
Pickert and Pickering a Li-	722 b	Pomponius Latius his opinion of the name of Britain,	5
bert and Sheriff,	722 b	Poph. on hill tops,	667 e
Picot Sheriff,	722 b	Pontfr.	223 e. 256 c
shire,	485 e	Pomfret, 695 c. in-	118
Pills wall,	789	famous in the blondshed of	118
Pills what it signifie,	789	Princes,	695 f
British,	789	Pont. a river,	809 d
Pie,	16	Port Gate,	808 f
Pills whence descended,	114	Port a Saxon,	210 d
the progeny of ancient natural	114	Portland,	210 e
Britains, 115. why so called,	114	Portchester,	768 a
when the Northern Britains,	114	Port Peris,	268
became so called, 116. divided	114	Portsey Island,	268
into two nations,	114	Portsmouth,	268 b
Pills, what become of them,	118	Portsway,	313 d
Piddle a riveret,	213 d	Potheridge,	208 a
Pier Gaveston,	198	Potton,	401 c
Pierpont a family,	548 f	Portleis,	603 d
Pigot,	401 c	Portmen,	477 e
Pilchards,	186	Portogan,	603 d
Pilgrimage to our Lady of Wal-	479 c	Portholme,	498 a
ingham,	479 c	Portkeveith,	633 f
Pimble mere,	666 b	Ponderbach Castle,	592 c
Pimbecnos,	15	Poultney a family,	517
Pinkneys Barons,	505 e	Povers a family,	377 a
Pinson a Noble Norman,	541 d	Powder treason of Rob. Catesby,	447
Pitt,	334 e. 440	Powick a Baronie,	445 a
Pitchford a village and family,	592 b	Powis Lords,	663 c
Placence,	327 b	Princes of Powis,	663
Plague in Tarmouth,	477 f	Powise Land,	659 c
Plaines of Salisbury,	245 d	Powlet Lord S. John Earle of	257 a
Planarat,	20	Wiltshire,	257 a
Plantius a governour in Britain,	447	Powlet his honorable titles,	267
Pleshi Plais, or Estre,	445 a	Powderham,	206 b
Plime river,	200 a	Powndbury,	212 c
Plimouth,	ibid. a	De Praetris a family,	607 e
Plimpton,	201 b	Prasutagus King of the Iceni,	457 a
Plin Limon an high hill,	658 b	Præfetti Prætorio under Con-	76
Plin Lin mere,	666 b	stantine the Great,	76
Plugenet a Baron,	618 a	Præfeturæ what it is,	422
Plumpton Parkes,	776 f
Pannius Posthumus killeth him-	52
selfe,	52
Poinings Barons,	215 d
Pointz Barons,	223 f
Points a family,	364 b
Poleland, why so called,	27
John de la Pole Earle of Lincoln	469 f. executed,
	470 b

Prerogative Court,	181
Præfidium,	563 a
Priests forbidden marriage,	201
Priests married,	576. 201 b
Priscus Licinius Propertor in	66
Britaine,	66
Priscillianists the first hereticks	82
condemned to death,	82
Priests marriage debated of in a	243 d
Synode,	243 d
Prifom,	623 e
Prichards, a family,	628 e
Probus Emperour,	71
Prefton in Anderneffe,	752 d. e
Prideaux,	194
Protolitia,	808 d
Prittelwel,	441 c
Provincial Latin affected by the	116
Britains,	116
Provinces 2. in England,	160
Prowes,	203 a
Princes of Wales,	683
The Prince, his place, and stile,	163. 164
Prudbow Castle,	808 d
Pseudocomites,	167
Puckerich,	408 a
Puclechurch,	364 a
Pudsey Bishop of Durrham and	741 f
Earle of Northumberland,	741 f
Pulein a professour in Divinity	379 e. 380 c
and favourer of learning,	379 e. 380 c
P-thealy,	668 b
Purbeck Isle,	211 e
Purcell, or de Porcellus,	377 a
Puseies,	280 f
Putney,	303 a
Pym,	19
Pyramides of Glaffenbury,	229
Pyramidall stones,	701 a
Pyran,	193
Pyrry, a drinke,	573 d

Q Matremans men of good	383 f
note,	383 f
Qeene Borough,	334 a
Queenes Colledge in Oxford	381 t
Querendon,	395 e
Quicke-sands in Holland,	529 f
Quincy Saer Earle of Winche-	267 b
ster,	267 b
Quintinus,	82
Quintins a family,	731 a

R Aby Castle,	737 b
Raculph Minster,	335 b
Radcliffes a family,	767 d
Radcliffe	767 d

The Table of England.

Radcliffe or Redcliffe,	437 d	Rerecrosse,	732 f	Robert Earle of Leicester,	466 c
Radcliffe in Bristow,	237 e	Renda,	126	Robert Crouchbacke Earle of	519 f
Radegund,	349 a	Rheda,	18	Leicester,	519 f
Radmilds,	312	Rheder,	ibid.	Robert Consul or Earle of Glo-	368 d
Radnorshire,	623	Rhedec,	ibid.	cester,	368 d
Radnor town,	623 c	Rhedecsa,	ibid.	Robert Fitz Haimon,	359 d
Radnore made ashire,	677 e	Rhead a river,	802 a	Rebin Hood,	693 a
Radwinter,	446 a	Rheadfale,	ibid. c	Robin Hoods bay,	718 c
Ragland,	636 c	Rheadiad,	18	Rech, a river,	745 f
Rahader Gowy,	623 a. b	Rhegium, why so called,	347 d	Roch Dale a towne,	ibid.
Raleghs,	208 e	Rhefe ap Gruffin,	623 a	Recheſter a caſtle,	802 c
Ralegh a town,	443 a	Rhefe ap Thomas a valiant	650 e	Recheſter city,	332 c
Ramsey Isle and Abbey,	499 b	knight,	650 e	Recheſter or Roſſes a family,	405 d
Ramsey mere,	499 d	Rbie a river,	722 d
Rammes foreheads, that is, Pro-	184	Rhidale,	ibid.	Rochford towne, and Hundred,	472
monories,	184	Rhia, Baron,	472	Rochford Barons,	ibid.
Ramesbury,	256 b	Rhre where of so called,	319 d	Recheſford Vicount,	ibid.
Rank-riders,	799 c	Rhodanus,	21	Rockingham Caſtle and Foreſt,	513
Ranulph Earle of Cheſter,	607 b	Rutupina littora what they bee,	342	Rock-Savage,	610 a
Rapes in Suſſex,	306 e	Ribel a river,	749 d	Roden a river,	594 c
Ratis,	20	Ribelcheſter,	750 b	Roding a river,	40 b
Ratcliffes Earles of Suſſex,	321 a	Ribald Liſle,	485 f	Roger the magnificent Biſhop of	243 a
Ravenglaſſe,	765	Ricall,	707 d	Salisbury,	243 a
Ravensburne river,	326	Richard the Second renounceth	680 d	Rogers Knight,	215. ibid.
Ravenſwath caſtle,	730 b	the crowne,	680 d	Roſſe a Lady,	405 b
Reads a family,	577 b	Richard Duke of Yorke claimeth	725 b	Roſſon,	ibid.
Reading,	284	the crowne,	725 b	Roſſes Croſſe,	ibid.
Readquire a mountaine,	802 a	Richard a renowned Earle of	197 d. his death and	Roſſe ſtones,	374 c
Reaſon the Danes Baner,	195	Cornwal,	197 d. his death and	Rollo the Norman, 144. his dream	144
Reche a towne,	490 c	ſepulchre, his ſonne Henry	197 f	and converſion,	144
Recall a river,	722 d	murdered,	197 f	The Roll of Wincheſter,	153
Rech dike,	ib.	Richard Cœur de Lion,	380 a	Rome called Conſtantina,	85
Reculver,	335 b	Richard the Third, a bad man	212 a	Romania,	24
Redcaſtle, or Caſtle Rou,	594 d	and a good Prince,	212 a	Romeswork,	343 f
Redin,	20	Richard, Duke of Gloceſter an	369 f. his praifes to many	Romans ſoiled and maſſacred in	51
Redhorſe vale,	561 c	uſurper,	369 f. his praifes to many	Britaine,	51
Redcolour giueſh name to many	525 d	win the crowne,	370	Roman Empire in Britaine at an	87
places,	525 d	Richard the Firſt his praifes,	285	end,	87
Redbourne,	413 d	Richard the Second his Reliques	translated to Weſtminſter,	Romans in Britaine,	34
Redbridge,	262 d			Romeſcot,	411 a
Red roſe and white, for Lanca-	725 e			Romara a Norman, Earle of	544 e
ſter and Yorke,	725 e			Lincoln,	544 e
Redthames,	126	Richard King of Romans, &c.	414	Roos Barons,	532 f
Redvers or Rivers Earles of	207 d	Richborow,	341 a	Roſamund Clifſord King Henry	375
Denſhire,	207 d	Richborow decayed,	ibid f	the Second his paramour,	375
Redverſes or de Ripariis,	201 c	Riches Barons,	441 d	Roſamunds bones translated, and	375
Redwald King of the Eaſt Sax-	465 c	Richard Lord Chancellour of	445	afterwards reduced againe,	376 c
ons,	465 c	England,	445
Reforming errorrs a Court,	180	Richards Caſtle,	619 e	Roſered and white for Lancaſter,	725 e
Reginald Pole his commendati-	216 b	Richmond ſhire,	727	and York,	725 e
on,	216 b	Richmond towne,	729 f	Roſſe,	190. 714 a Religious houſes diſſolved,	163	Richmond Earles,	733	Roſſeland,	190
Remney arver,	631 b. 642 a	Richmond the Kings houſe,	297	Roſſe in Penbrochſhire,	652 d
Remni what it ſignifieth,	642 a	Richmonds a family,	778 a	Roſſe in Cardiganſhire,	657 c
Remigins Biſhop of Dorcheſter,	539 c	Rickmansworth,	415 c	Roſſe Barons,	714 a
	539 c	Riſing Caſtle,	481 c	Roſſe Topping,	721 d
Rendleſham,	465 c	Riſingham,	803 d	Roſe Caſtle,	778 c
Renimed,	419 e	Riſh what it ſignifieth,	485 a	Rota temporum, that is, The	790 b
Reptaceſter or Richborow,	341 a	Rivers had Divine honours, be- heaped upon them,	698 a	webele of Times, an Hiſtory,	790 b
Repton,	553 f				320 a
Requeſts Court,	181	Robert bridge,	320 c	Rother a river,	320 a

Roſerfeld

The Table of England.

Rotherfield,	ibid.	Salt stones,	739 d	Scots whence they took name,	119
Rotherham,	689 e	Saltpit,	573 b,c	Scots of West Scotland are High-	ibid.
Rotherham Archbishop of Can-		Saltry Abbey,	500 b	land men,	ibid.
terbury,	689 e	Salt pits in Cheshire,	608 a,b	Scots came first out of Ireland,	120
Romcliff Castle,	781 c	Salutim Lucullus in Britaine,	62	Scots when they came to be of	125
Rouchefer,	809 e	Saltwood Castle,	349 c	name,	125
Round table,	265 b	Salwarp a river,	574 d	Scot what it signifieth,	124
Rowles in London,	428 c	Salmonds or S. Amands,	283 c	Scots a family,	349
Rouffes a family,	467 c	Salmonds or S. Amands Barons,	244 a, 366 e	Scotus, alias, Duns,	814 b
Routon Castle,	592 e, 662	Samorhea,	24	his pitifull death,	ibid.
Rugby,	562	Sampier growing abundantly,	434 a	Scovies,	20
Rudbeath Sanctuary,	609 a	Sandal Castle,	693 d	Screkingham,	535 c
Ruffes, fishes,	476 c	The Sand, part of Nottingham-	550 a	Screven a place and family,	700
Rugemond or Richmond Greies		shire,	19	Scroby,	551 b
in Bedfordshire,	734 d	Sandalum,	349 e	Scropes Barons,	729 b
Rugemont,	204 c	Sandgate Castle,	555 d	Scruffel hill,	767 e
Rumalds shrine,	396 d	Sandisacre or S. Diacre,	269 b, c, e	Scudamores a family,	621 a
Rumford,	441 f	Sandon,	343 a	Scutlon,	473 a
Rumon,	199 e	Sandy, See Saludica.	260	Scutary,	176
Rumney Marsh,	350 b	Sanctuaries,	342	Scythica vallis,	120
Rumney towne,	ibid.	Sandwich,	317 e	Scythians in Spaine,	121
Runkborne,	510 d	Sanguelac,	317 e	Scythicum a promontory in Spaine,	121
Rushbrooke,	461 d	Sapcots a family,	501 e	Seaton,	206 e
Ruston,	509 f	Sarajins-heads,	695 a	Sea Holly, See Eryngium.
Russel Lord Russel of Thornough		Sarmatians are Scythians,	121	Sea heard to grone,	720 c
Russels, Knights,	514 c	Sarn Helen a Portway in Wales,	666 a	Sea land good for ground,	199 e
Russels Earles of Bedford,	394 e	Sasson,	23	Sea is warme,	2
	403	Saxon language maintained by	200 a	Sea coles,	735 c, 799 d
Ruthin, 676. Ruthlan,	679 f	English-Saxons called into Bri-	100, 127	Seamen caught,	466, 720 b
Rutlandshire, 525. why so called,	525 b, c, d	tain,	100, 127	Seales how they sleepe and are	720 c
Rutland Earles,	426 f	Saxons, 119. their valour and	556 e	caught,	720 c
Rutters what they were,	812 b	cruelty,	134	Seavenshale,	801 f
		Saturn well affected to Britaine,	556 e	Seckinton,	569 e
		Savages a great family,	610 a	Seftron,	748 d
		Saulden,	396 c	Seghil,	ibid.
		Scarborough Castle,	717	Segonax,	37
		Scardale,	556 a	Segrave a towne, 523 b. a fami-	ibid.
		Schilpor, See Esquires,	176	ly,	ibid.
		Seava his valour and advance-	37	Segraves Barons,	568 c
		ment,	37	Stephen Segrave his rising and	501 c, d
		Scalbie Castle,	782 e	fall,	501 c, d
		Scilicester in the wall,	806 b	Jane Seimor mother to King	224
		Scipio Africanus, where buried,	340 a	Edward the sixth,	224
		Sclate-stones digged,	514 d	Seimors or Saint Maurs Earles	416
		Scorby or Scurvie-grasse,	328 b	of Hertford,	240 b
		Scordium an herbe growing plen-	491 f	Seimor Duke of Somerset,	240 b
		tously,	491 f	Seimor or Saint Maur Earle of	634 d
		Scotene a Barony,	542 c	Hertford,	634 d
		Scottishmen of East-Scotland,	129	Seneca a great Usurer in Britaine,	457 c
		right English-Saxons,	133	Sejont a river,	668 d
		their fashions,	133	Selwood,	233 a
		Scots wild or Highlanders ha-	737 e	Sel what it signifieth,	271 c
		bit fort well with the Gothes,	255 a	Selbeies a family,	812 f
			123	Selbittenden,	351 c
				Selaby,	737 e
				Selbury,	255 a
				Semarc or de S. Medardo a fa-	milij

The Table of England.

Emly,	714 d	Heningham or Heveningham,	239 c
Sempringham,	534 d	Sicily the Isle out from Italy,	220 c
Serjeanties,	213	Snite a brooke,	549 e
Seovenburgenses,	829 c	Sowrey,	724 e
Seton,	811 f	Sow a river in Staffordshire,	583 e
Sevenoke,	328 d	Sider a drinke,	20
Sevenoke Alderman of London		Sidius Geta his good service in	Southam,
his Hospitall and Schoole,	328 d	Britain,	41
Severn river, his head,	661 c	Sidmanton,	272 c
commended,	357 d	Sidnacester,	543 f
a noble river,	573 d	Sidneys,	329 e
Severus Propetor in Britaine,	65	Sir Robert Sidney Baron of Pen-	herets and Vicount Lisle,
Severus Emperour, his exploits,	67. hec entreteth Britaine,	69. fenster Britaine with a wall,	69. died at Yorke, 70. 703 b
his funerals,	ibid.	canonized a god,	70
Seward a Poet,	632 d	Sinbrech or Simon Brech,	126
Sexwulph first Abbot of Peter-	burgh Abbey,	512 c	Sion,
Sezay,	724 e	Sisters kirke,	714 b
Shafts,	184	Simards a family,	646 e
Shafisbury,	214 d	Simard Earle of Huntingdon,	502 c
Sharnborne,	480 c	Skales, Barons,	405 e
Shavington,	607 e	Skeffington a towne and family,	522 e
Scheaths,	609 d	Skeldaw an hill,	767 c
Sheafelds,	689 c	Skinffrith Castle,	694 b
Shene,	297 c	Skippton in Craven,	521 b
Sheep devour men, &c.	505 c	Skipwiths a family,	652 c
Sheffelds Barons,	544 d	Slebach a Commandery,	535 d
Shengay a Comm. undery,	485 e	Sleford,	498 f
Shelford a Barony,	472 e	Sleepe a towne,	607 e
Shepey Isle,	333 c	Smiths a family,	729 d
Ship of King Hiero,	32	Snath,	617 d
Shipston,	561 c	Snodhil Castle,	667 a
Shirburne a brooke running		Snowdon Forest,	ibid.
through Shirbourne,	696 b	Snowdon hills,	517 b
a towne and Castle,	214 a. A	Soar a river,	737 d
Bishops See,	214 b	Sockburne,	448 b
Shirley a place, and family,	313 c	Sodates Augustales,	364 c
Shires divided into Hundreds,	158	Sodbury,	493 a
Shirewood forest,	547 b	Soham,	775
Shires how many in England,	159	Solway frieb,	267 e
Shoad,	184	Solente frieb,	20
Shobery,	441 c	Soldarii what they are,	99
Shorne,	329 b	Solidarii,	171
Shobery Nefse,	ibid.	Solidus, a coyne of Gold,	567 a
Shochlach,	604 b	Solyhill,	782 a
Shoreham,	313 b	Solom Mosse,	397
Shorwich Castle,	606 e	Somerles Barons of Dudley,	581
Shrawerden Castle,	597 b	a noble family,	468 e
Shrewsbury,	595 a	Somerley,	499 a
Shrewsbury Earles,	599 b	Somerham,	220. whence it
Shropshire,	589	Somerfetshire,	took name,
Shugbury a towne and family,	561 d	Somerfet Dukes and Earles,	Simon
Shurland,	334 a
Sible Hemingham,	450 b, See

The Table of England.

Simon, Saint Liz or Selis the first Earle of Northampton,	509	in his minority,	73	Stratford upon Avon,	365 a
Simon de Saint Liz the second,	515 f	Stipper stones hill,	592 c	Stony stratford,	396 f
Saint John his knights,	241 f	Stoke battell, there fought,	549 a	Strait of Callais,	345 e
Saint Swithins feast rainie,	265 d	Stonars what place,	339 f	Stratfleur,	657
Staffords of Blatherwic knights,	514 b	Stoke Curry,	221 a	Strath what it signifieth,	117
Staffords of Grafton,	395 e	Stoke Pogeys,	394 c. 521 c	Stratton,	196 a
Staffords Dukes of Buckingham,	397 e	Stockepont a petty Barony,	610	Stream works,	184
Stafford of Suthwick Earle of Devonshire,	208	Stoke Fleming,	202	Strelleys knights, and Sturleys the same,	550 d
Staffords Earles of Wiltshire,	256 c	Stokesley,	521 a	Strelley Sturley or Strelleg a towne and family,	550 a. b
Staffordshire,	581	Stone a towne: why so called,	783	Sirenham,	578 c
Staffordtowne,	584 d	Stones made by art,	253 a. b	Strettons,	593 a. d
Stafford holdeth Carborough Castle,	717 e	Stoneheng,	251	Strettham,	737 a
Stafford a Citizen of London,	208	Stoneham,	261 d	Strighall castle, or Struggle,	633
Standard, what it was,	724	Stonely Abbey in Huntingdonshire,	501 c	Strigulia,	633 c
Standon,	408 a	Stonely,	562 e	Strigulia Earles,	ibid.
Standrop or Stainthorp,	737 b	Stonely Holme,	ibid.	Strickland a place and family,	762 e
Stanford upon Avon,	515 b	Stony serpents of S. Hilda,	718 e	Strongbow first Earle of Penbroch,	655 b
Stanford rivers,	440	Stones with stony serpents in them,	721 a	Strangbow,	633 c
Stanford upon Welland,	533 e	Stonie street,	349	Stroud a river,	362 b an Universitie begonne at this Stanford,	533 e	Stones resembling Cochles &c.	363 c	Studia the same that Universities,	379 c. 381 a
Stanford destroyed,	ibid.	Stony stroud,	21	Sudbroke,	633 f
Stanes,	419 d	Stonors a family,	389 a	Sudley the Barony of Chandos,	365 b
Stanes forest or waven,	421 c	Store a river,	408 c	Sudbury,	462 e
Stanley the Expensifull Bishop of Ely,	499 a	Bishop Stortford,	ibid.	Suffolke,	459
Stanlaw,	606 f	Stow on the would,	366 a	Suffolke Cheeses,	459 b
Stanleies a noble family,	583 f	Stow in Lincolnshire,	543 d	Suffragans to the Archbishop of Canterbury,	344 d
Stanleies whence descended,	606	Stomphs or Hoxe houses used much,	681 d	Suerby,	714 b. c
Stanleies Earles of Darby,	749 f	Stow in Suffolke,	464 b	Simon Sudbury Archbishop of Canterbury,	337 b
Stanemore,	732 e	Stour river in Suffolke,	462 a	Sully an Island & name of a man,	642 f
Stamaries, and their Lord Wardens,	185	Stour river in Dorsetshire,	214 c	Sueno King of Danes subdueth Ethelbert and England,	143
Stanhopes,	549 a	Stour mere,	462 a	Swining a Bishops See,	286 a
Stantons a family,	553 d	Stour a river,	573 f	Superstition of the Britans,	182
Stanwel,	419 c	Stour a river in Kent,	335 d	Surrey Earles,	304 a
Stanwicks,	782 e	called Wantsume and Inlade,	339 e	Suria the goddesse,	801 e
Star Chamber,	179	Stourbridge faire,	496 b	Susana in Spaine,	12
Stations or Mansions in Antoinine,	399 f	Stourminster,	215 c	Sussex,	306
Stansford,	547 c	Stourton,	245 a	Sussex Earles,	320 c. f
Steele,	187	Stourton Castle,	581 c	Suit in law betweene Edward Nevill and Dame Mary Fane determined in Parliament,	636
Steele point,	201 d	Stourton the Honour of the Barons de Stourton,	214 c	Sutton Colfeld,	567 b
Stewes,	434 d	Stourtons Barons,	245 b	Suthwicke, See Earle of Devonshire,	208 b
Stephanides, See Fitz Stephen,	406 e	their Crest,	245 b	Suthwell,	549 b
Steven Hauk a towne,	406 e	Stradlings or Esterlings a family,	641 f	Sutton Vantort,	200 a
Stibium found in Darbyshire,	556 f	Stradling knight,	641. 643 e	Sutton Prior,	ibid. a
Stiliard,	435 c	Strange a family of knights de-gree,	480 b	Suttons a family,	581 c
Stilton or Stichilton,	501 f	Strange de Blackmere,	365 f	Suttons Gentlemen of worth in Nottinghamshire,	549 e
Stilicho protector to Honorius	481 f	598 f. de Knocking,	597 c	Sutton in Darbyshire,	556 b
		Strangbow Conquerour of Ireland,	397 d	Swaffham,	481 f
		Strat Clud,	676 d		Swallow
		Strangwaies a family,	721 b
		Strangwaies,	212 f
		The Crosse there,	397 a

The Table of England.

Swallow hole,	297 a	Tanet Isle why called Thanatos,	honoured for his service,	81
Swale river,	729 e	Tanet inhabitants industrious,	Theodosius his sonne Emperor,	81. he triumpheth over Maxi-
Swaldale,	ibid. f	Tanet inhabitants industrious,	mus the usurper,	83
Swale the river used for Rap-		Tanfeld,	Theon the last British Bishop of tisme,	136	Tania what it signifieth,	London,	425 b
Swancomb,	329 a	Taranis,	Theophilus Antiochenus,	9
Suene Tiugs Kege a Danish Ty-	543 e	Taranis,	Ther a brooke,	471 d
rant,		Tarian,	Thetford, 471 d. a Bishops See,	ibid. f
Swerds desse,	501 a	Taseta what it signifieth,	Thin studious of Antiquities,	160
English Sweet whereof it comes,	24. 596	Task what it is,	Thins a family,	245 a
Suetonius Paulinus Propretor in		Taterhall a Barony,	Thireos,	18
Britain, 49. His oration and		Tasbai a British Saint,	Thirlwal Castle,	799 f
battell with Quene Boadi-		Tasfals a family,	Thirlwal a familie first called cia,	51	Tavistoke Abbey,	Wades,	800
Swidelm King of the East An-		Taw river,	Thirlwall, why so called,	ibid.
gles,	465 c	Tawstock,	Thirty tyrants or usurpers at
Swines pennies,	550	Tawton,	once,	71
Swift river,	517 d	Taxea,	Thirstleworth,	420 e
Swinborne a place and family,	806 b	Taximagulus,	Thonder dach,	17
Swinsey or Sinsey,	646 b	Teage river,	Thone river,	223 b
Synodes,	181	Tees or Teis a river head,	Thomas of Woodstocke Duke of Syrack tongue mother of all lan-		Tees mouth or Teis mouth,	Glocester smothered at Calais,
guages,	204 b	Teg what colour,	Thoneton or Taunton,	222
		Teg-Engle,	Thongcaster,	542 d
		Teigne river,	Thora a god, how portrayed,	135
		Tein a brook,	Thoresby,	774 c
		Teis or Tees river,	Thornangb,	514 c
		Telean,	Thornbury,	363 f
		Telen,	Thornndon,	442 e
		Temesford,	Thorney Abbey,	494 d
		Temd, a river,	Thornhills,	693 d
		The Temple at Brisflow,	Thornton,	396 e
		Temple,	Thornton in Lincolnshire,	542 f
		Temple Bruer a Commandery,	Thorps a family,	472 d
		Templars,	Thorpston, alias Thrapston,	510
		Tenby,	Thredling See Deben,
		Tenham,	Thresk castle,	724 c
		Terminations of places names,	Throcknortons a family,	565 e
		Terne a river,	Throgey a river,	634 e
		Terringham a towne and family,	Thurgarton,	549 a
		Test a river,	Thurkil,	326 e
		Teinal, or Theotenhal,	Thurland Twinstalls,	753 e
		Tetrachie erected by Alfrid	Thwengs a family,	721 e
		in his Monarchie,	Thwengi,	196 a
		Tevertan or Swifordton,	Thyrna river,	478 b
		Tentates,	Tibba a free Saint and patronesse
		Ten,	of Falcony,	526 d
		Tenkisbury,	Tiberius Caesar medled not with
		Thanes,	Britain,	4
		Thaxted,	Tibetosts or Tiptosts Earles of
		Thelsty a river,	Worcester,	549 c
		Thellesford,	Tibury or Tiburbury hil.	262 a
		Thelwall, 610 c. why so called, ib.	Tichburnes,	262 f
		Theobalds a stately house,	Tickhil,	699
		Theocus an Eremit,	Ticks hal,	584 e
		Theodosius an expert warrior	Tidswell,	558 c
		sent into Britaine, 79. his ex-	Tikenhal by Beaudly,	573 f
		ploits there, 80. he recovereth	Till a river,	815 b
		the Roman provincethere, 80

A a a a

Tilbury

The Table of England.

Tilbury,	440 d	Treboeth,	605 f	Valeff what hee is, 663. a wor-
Tillio's a family,	782	Trederman,	783 b	shipfull title,	713 c
Tilney a towne,	481 b	Trees under ground,	745 d	Valois a family,	465 f
Tilney's a family,	471 d	Tregon,	657 d	Valtoris,	193
Tilney's Knights,	481 b	Tregone,	190	Valuasores,	168
Tilney's smeth,	ibid.	Tregian,	ibid.	Vandals and Burgundians in
Tilney Abbey,	444 e	Tregoz Barons,	617 d	Britaine,	114
Tilnood castle,	614 a	Trelawnies,	192	Vandals brought into Britaine
Times of the world,	334	Trematon,	193	by Probus,	71
Timothie an heriticke in Britan,		Trenewith,	661 e	Vandelberia,	489 d
	87	Trent a riveret,	213	Vargæ,	19
Tin in Cornwall,	184	Trent a river,	547	Varia what it signifieth,	679 e
Tin of two sorts,	185	Trentham a Monastery,	583	Vaulx Barons,	786 b, 510
Timworkers common wealth,		Treshams a family,	509 c	Ubhanford,	816 b
	185	Trevilians,	196 c	Uchel,	21, 190
Tindagel,	194	Triadum, a British booke,	33	Vellius Bolanus,	53
Tindale,	802 a	Tribet,	29	Venables Barons of Kindreton,	609 b
Tine,	799 e	Tribunals or Courts of Justice in		Vandraeth Vehan, a river,	649
Time,	802 a	England,	177	Venedocia,	659 f
Timonth,	81	Tribunitian authority,	101	Venudius a Potentate of Britaine,
Tio, vel, Finga-Ceſter,	549 b	Tribine what it was,	159	Venudius a Potentate of Britaine,
Tippall, a river,	800 b	Trimarcia,	18	Venus what it signifieth,	679 e
Tirells a family,	396 e	Triperia,	20	Venus what it signifieth,	679 e
Tirbings or Decimes ordained,		Trophee in Cornwall,	188	Venus what it signifieth,	679 e
	158	Trubridge,	244 e	Venus what it signifieth,	679 e
Titus his warlike service in Bri-		True-place,	802 a	Venus what it signifieth,	679 e
taine,	42	Trusbut,	540 e	Venus what it signifieth,	679 e
Titus the worlds joy dieth,	56	Tuddington,	401 f	Venus what it signifieth,	679 e
Trove the river, 949 b. where he		Tufa a Banner,	195	Venus what it signifieth,	679 e
springeth,	657 c	Tuſco the Saxons ſtock-father,		Venus what it signifieth,	679 e
Todenay, or Tony,	536 b		135	Venus what it signifieth,	679 e
Todenay or Tony,	412 b	Tuſday,	ibid.	Venus what it signifieth,	679 e
Todington,	365 c	Tunbridge why ſo called,	330 a	Venus what it signifieth,	679 e
Tong caſtle,	594 a	Tunſall a worthy Prelate, 744 d		Venus what it signifieth,	679 e
Toiſure or ſhaving the Crowne,		Turbervell, or de Turbida villa,		Venus what it signifieth,	679 e
	118		213 c	Venus what it signifieth,	679 e
Topcliff,	731 a	Turbervell a family,	643 c	Venus what it signifieth,	679 e
Torbay,	202 d	Turkil a Coward,	464 c	Venus what it signifieth,	679 e
Torceſter,	505 f	Turkils of Arden,	565 d	Venus what it signifieth,	679 e
Torkſey,	538 a	Turkil the Dane,	500 b	Venus what it signifieth,	679 e
Torneaments,	407 d	Turuld Abbot of Peterborough,		Venus what it signifieth,	679 e
Toſto vanquiſhed,	145		513 a	Venus what it signifieth,	679 e
Totnes,	201 e	Turton Chappell and tower,	745	Venus what it signifieth,	679 e
Totneſſe ſhore,	202	Turpins Knights,	517	Venus what it signifieth,	679 e
Touchets a family, 584 b. Ba-		Turets a family,	594 e	Venus what it signifieth,	679 e
rons de Audley,	ibid.	Turoy,	399 b	Venus what it signifieth,	679 e
Tovie the Kings Standard bea-		Tuſcets or Touchets Barons Au-		Venus what it signifieth,	679 e
rer,	439 d	deley,	609 a	Venus what it signifieth,	679 e
Tovie, the river,	649 d	Tutbury Caſtle,	587 f	Venus what it signifieth,	679 e
Tower d'Ordre,	345 c	Twede the river,	814 e	Venus what it signifieth,	679 e
Tower of London,	423 e	Twifford,	813 c	Venus what it signifieth,	679 e
Towridge river,	207 f	Twinamburue,	259 c	Venus what it signifieth,	679 e
Towrington,	208 b	Tyrants in Britaine,	23	Venus what it signifieth,	679 e
Town battell,	696 d	Tzerzes a fabulous Greeke wi-		Venus what it signifieth,	679 e
Trabucks,	400	ter,	32	Venus what it signifieth,	679 e
Tracies,	365 d			Venus what it signifieth,	679 e
Tratford a place and family,	747			Venus what it signifieth,	679 e
Traith Maur,	666 a			Venus what it signifieth,	679 e
Traith Biſchan,	395 c			Venus what it signifieth,	679 e
Traith Taſſ,	642 c			Venus what it signifieth,	679 e
Trebellins Max. Propretor in				Venus what it signifieth,	679 e
Britaine,	52			Venus what it signifieth,	679 e

V

Vale a river, 189
Vale, 393 b
Vale of Ailesbury, 395 c
Vale Roiall, 608 d
Vallachians why ſo called, 11
Vale Crucis, 677 a

The Table of England.

Victoria,	271 b	Uſpianſ their venturous and me-		Walſſ a family,	364
Vitorinus a commendable go-		morable ſalt,	57	Walſſ, what it ſignifieth,	112
vernour under Honorius in		Uſke a river,	628 a	Walſingham,	470 e
Britaine,	85	Uſke a towne,	636 c	Walſingham a towne,	479 c
Vitorie what names it hath in		Uſceſter,	587 e	Walſingham Knights,	ibid.
divers languages,	457 e	Uſther Pendragon, 195. why ſo		Walter de Hemingford,	721
Vitoriones who ſo called,	117	called,	410	Walter,	752 f
Velloctus Ceſtrell to Venutius		Uxbridge,	459 e	Walter Eſpec,	709 d
marieſh his wife,	53			Waltham Croſſe,	437 d
Villocatus a Legion,	604 c			Waltham Foreſt,	439 e
Via,	244 a			Waltham Abbey or Waltham
Villa forinſeca what it is,	391 e			Croſſe a towne,	439 c
Villiers a family,	523 a			Walton in Darbyſhire,	556 b
Vineyards in Britaine,	71			Walton a place and familie,
The Vine,	269 d				572
Vines in England,	ibid. e			Watwick,	802 a
Vinyards in Glouceſterſhire,	357 f			Watworth a herbe called Dances
Vincent's Rocke,	239 a			blood,	452 b
Virus Lupus Propretor,	69			Wandleſworth,	303 a
Virgins eleven thouſand Mar-				Wandle a river,	287 f
tyrs,	197 a, 286 e			Wandſike,	241 d
Viſigothi,	294 e			Wantage,	281 a
Viſi Saxones,	ibid.			Wanſum, or Wentfar a riveret,
Viſcounts a family,				473 c. See Stour in Kent.
Viſan,	347 d			Ware a towne,	407 c
Vitruvius,	19			Wapentakes, what they bee,
Vitermus,	691 d				159
Ulpian Marcellus a brave marri-				Ware a Prieſt and Baron of the our, 66. his vigilancy and				Parliament,	746 a temperance,	ibid.			Waſt, Barons de la Ware,
Ulpus his horne,	704 e				312
Uſe a lake,	776 c			Warburgton a place, and familie,
Uſley,	773 a				610 b
Ulyſſes whether ever in Britaine,				Wards,	179
	32			Wardens of the Marches,	799 b
Ulyſſippo, that is, Liſbon whence				Warden of the Cinque ports,
it tooke name,	32				325 b
Ulverſton,	755 c			Wardon,	401 c
Umfravills a family, 806 b. 535				Wardon Hundred in Northamp-
University Colledge in Oxford,				tonſhire,	507 b
	381 c			Wardow a Caſtle,	246 a
University, a publicke ſchoole,				Wardſtaff,	440 c
	381 b			Warham towne,	213 c
Unſtrote a river,	138			Warkworth,	813 a
Uoſy Biſhop of Exceſter,	567			Warington,	748 b
Uortigern the laſt Monarch of				Warſford,	269 a
Britiſh blood, and the bane				Warre civill betweene Torke of his country, 624 b. burnt				and Lancaſter determined with Lightning,	ibid.			in the death of Edward the Uortigern alias Gourtigern ſen-				young Earle of Warwicke,
deth for Saxons,	128				570
Uortimer a valiant Britaine				Warwaſt,	201 e
where buried,	538 e			Warwickſhire,	561
Uppingham,	525 e			Warwick towne,	562 f
Upton,	577			Warwick Earles,	569 f
Uortiporius a Tyrant of the Di-				Warwicke in Cumberland, meta,	113				778 a
Urſula, an holy Virgin,	197			Waſh a river, or Gnaſh,	525 e
Urſus de Abrot, 570. Sheriffe of				Waſhes a dangerous arme of the
Worceſterſhire,	578 e			Sea,	480 d
Uſaſor Iſa, that is, Onſe a river,				Waſhburnes, villages and fami-
	296			lies,	577 d
				Waſts,

A a a a a 2

The Table of England.

Watts,	806 a	Monuments therein,	429 f	Wheatthamsted,	406 c
Waterfall,	730 c	Westminster hall,	431 c	John of Wheatthamsted,	ibid f
Water divided,	399 c	Westmorland,	759	Wherfe the river, 696 d. why so	ibid f
Water Germaner. See Scordium,		Westmorland Earles,	763 d	Whetstons,	339 c
Watford,	415 a	Westriding,	489 d	Whitehart forest,	213 f
Watch-tower erected by C. Caligula,	40	West Saxons bring the Heptarchie to a Monarchie,	138	whereupon so called,	214 a
Watesbury,	592 f	Westsexenlage,	153-159	Whitehart silver,	ibid,
Watling-street highway,	64	West Saxons kingdome,	294 c	Whitechurch in Shropshire,	598
Watling-street a towne,	593	West wales,	647 b	Whitgaraburge,	275 c
Wavency, a river,	467 d	West weales,	184	Whitgift Archbishop of Cambrury,	542 d. his good deeds,
Waver a river,	773 b	Wetherby,	699 a	Whitby,	718 b
Wauburn,	479 a	Wetherill,	778 a	White Hall the Kings house,	432
Wauburnham,	ibid.	Wever a river,	601 c	Whitbam,	446 b
Weaby,	620 b	Wever an hill,	586 f	Whitcheorse vale,	279 c
Weaby Ale,	ibid.	Wey river,	294 c	Whitney aplace and family,	618
Weald in Kent,	329 d	Whaddon,	396 d	Whitlan,	348 b
Weare a towne,	205 c	Wiatts a family,	331 c	Whitespurrer,	176
Weares the Decay of Excester haven,	205 c	Wiat his unfortunate end,	ibid.	Whittington,	598 b
Wedderborrow,	581 f	Wic what it signifieth,	326.355	Whorwel,	262 a
Wedenfay,	135	Wiceii,	354 f-573 d	Williams of Newborough,	8
Weden in the Street,	508 c	Wiches, that is, Salt pit,	573 b	William or Wilcock of Monthbury,	665
Weimouth,	211 b	Wich a towne,	575 b	William of York,	695 c
Well ebbing and flowing,	558 c	Wich wood forest,	374 b	William of Malmesbury,	242 f
Welles medicinable,	497 d	Wich a learned Canonist,	575 a	William Long-Eslee,	145.249 d
Welch Poole a towne,	662 b	Wichliff died,	517 f	Waine neere Damiaata,	249 e
Welles Barons,	541 c. 542 b	Wickham Bishop of Winchester,	265 c. his praise; 266 c. d. his equivocant mot,	Wiccombe, or wickham a towne,	393 d
Welles vicount,	542 b	Wiccombe, or wickham a towne,	393 d	Widdevoile or Woodvill a family,	506 c
Welles the City,	223 d	Widdevoile or Woodvill a family,	506 c	Widdevill Lord Rivers,	ibid.
Welland river,	505 b	Widdevill Lord Rivers,	ibid.	Earle Rivers, ibid. High Constable of England, ibid. & c. beheaded,	ibid.
Wellledon,	514 d	Widdevill, Earles rivers,	405 e	Widdevill, Earles rivers,	405 e
Welhop a riveret,	738 c	Wie river,	358 e. 618 a	Wie river,	358 e. 618 a
Wellingtonborow,	509 f	Wife demised to another,	312 f	Wigenball,	481 b
Wenlock,	591 c	Wigenball,	481 b	Wight Isle,	273 c. & c.
Wemme,	594 c	Wight Isle,	273 c. & c.	why so called, ibid. the Lords thereof,	276 c. d
Wenmans, a family,	384 a	Wight Isle,	273 c. & c.	Wiggin,	749 c
Went a river,	690 f	Wiggin,	749 c	Wigmore,	619 c
Wentbeck a river,	812 b	Wigton,	774 b	Wigton,	774 b
Wentdale,	727 e	Wilberhams or Wilburhams a family,	607 d	Wilberhams or Wilburhams a family,	607 d
Wentworth a place, and familie,	689 e	Wilberham,	490 b	Wilberham,	490 b
Wentworths Barons,	463 c	A wild man caught in the Sea,	466 a	Willebrode a learned Englishman,	137
Weorth what it signifieth,	582	Willebrode a learned Englishman,	137	Willebrode a learned Englishman,	137
Were a river,	738	Willebrode a learned Englishman,	137	Willebrode a learned Englishman,	137
Werbura or Warburga an holy virgin,	508 c. 583	Willebrode a learned Englishman,	137	Willebrode a learned Englishman,	137
Werburs Church in Chester,	605	Willebrode a learned Englishman,	137	Willebrode a learned Englishman,	137
Werith, what colour,	26	Willebrode a learned Englishman,	137	Willebrode a learned Englishman,	137
Werke Castle,	815 a	Willebrode a learned Englishman,	137	Willebrode a learned Englishman,	137
Werlam or Verlam Citie in great distresse,	51	Willebrode a learned Englishman,	137	Willebrode a learned Englishman,	137
Werlam-street,	64	Willebrode a learned Englishman,	137	Willebrode a learned Englishman,	137
Werminster,	245 c	Willebrode a learned Englishman,	137	Willebrode a learned Englishman,	137
Werymall,	754 d	Willebrode a learned Englishman,	137	Willebrode a learned Englishman,	137
West Barons de la Ware,	312 d	Willebrode a learned Englishman,	137	Willebrode a learned Englishman,	137
Westminster, sometime Thorney,	428 e	Willebrode a learned Englishman,	137	Willebrode a learned Englishman,	137
Westminster Church,	428 f	Willebrode a learned Englishman,	137	Willebrode a learned Englishman,	137

The Table of England.

Wimondly,	406 c	Woden,	241 d	shire,	522 c
Winander mere,	755 b	Woden a Saxons god,	135	Wreken an hill,	593 d
Winburne what it signifieth,	216 a	Woderington. See Witherington,		Wreshill castle,	710 a
Winburne minster,	215 e	Wold in Leicestershire,	523 a	Wrexham,	677 b
Wincaunton,	221 d	Wollaton,	547	Wriothelleys or Wriothelleys,	273 a
Winchelcombe towne & Abbey,	365 d	Woodvil. See Widvil,		Earles of Southamton,	273 a
Winchelsey,	319 b	Wolpher a Pagan King killeth his two sonnes,	583. became a Christian,	Wringecheffe,	192
Winchel. See Ore,		Wolsey Cardinal a Butchers sons,	512 d	Writtle, a large parish,	445 c
Old Winchester,	809 e. 269 a	Wolfebunts a family,	556 d	Wrotesley or Wrothesley a place and family,	581 d
Winchester,	262	Wolverton a towne and family,	397	Wrotham,	593 b
Winchester bishops,	265 e	Wolves destroyed,	665	Wroxhall,	566 d
Winchester tower in windfor Castle,	288 d	Wondy,	634 c	Wulfrune a devout woman,	581
Winchester Earles and Marquesses,	267 b. d	Woodbridge,	465 d	Wulfrunes Hampton or Wulver Hampton,	581 e
Winchendon,	395 f	Wooden, how portrayed,	135	Wulper,	463 f
Windlefor Barons,	289 a. 320 c	Woodball,	407	Wyre forest,	573 c
Windlefor a family,	419 c	Woodham Walters,	446 b
Windlefor towne,	285 d. e	Woodland a part of Warwickshire,	561 b
Windlefor Castle,	288 d	Woodnoths,	607 e
Windlefor forest,	293 b	Woodstock,	375 d
Windrush river,	374 a	Wooton Bassett,	473 a
Wingfeld in Darbyshire,	555 e	Woodrising,	573
Winfeilds Knights,	512 a	Worcester,	575 e
Winifride a learned Englishman,	137. the Apostle of Germanie,	Worcester Earles,	578 f
Winkles or cockles on Hil-tops,	203 d	Workefop,	550 f
Winster a river,	760 a	Workefop,	550 f
Winterton a Cape,	478 d	Workefop,	550 f
Winwidfield,	694 e	Workefop,	550 f
Winwicke,	748 b	World how it began to be peopled,	11
Wipped fleet,	340 a	Wormhill,	556 d
Wire a river,	753 a	Wormleighton,	561 d
Wire-dale,	ibid.	Wormgay or Wrongey,	481 e
Wirkington,	769	Worsted a towne,	478 c
Wurral,	601 e. 606 d	Worsted stuffe whence so called,	478 c
Wiske a river,	723 e	Wortley a place and family,	586
Withburga a Saint,	482 a	Wotton under Wever,	586
Witherington or Woderington a castle and name of a martiall familie,	812 e	Wottons a familie, and Baron Wotton of Merlay,	331 a
Wittlemere,	500 d	Wotton under Edge,	364 c
Witton a Castle,	738 c	Wounds what they be,	364 e
Wiza a riveret,	773 b	Wragby,	540 e
Wye a towne in Kent,	335 d	Wreke a river,	517 b
Wood,	19	Wreke a river in Leicestershire,	522 c
Woburn,	401 e

A a a a 3

THE

X. No British letter, 97

Y

Y Ale, 676 e
Y Tanesbury castle, 245 e
Yardley Hasting, 509 e
Yare, 721 a. a river, 468 d
Yarmouth, 476 f
Yarmouth, 177
Yeverin, 815 d
Y-kil what it signifieth, 714 n
Yorkes mold, 709 b
Yorkes City, 701
Yorkeshire, ibid.
Torke Earles and Dukes, 724 e
Tron Mynes and workes, 306 d
Ystwith, 658 a
Two Ellar, 675 c
Two Bach, 642 e

Z

Z Onches, 201 f. 202 c. whenae descended, 519 a Zouches of Haringworth and Ashby de la Zouch, 224 e
Zouch Mortimer, 514 a
Zouch killed in Westminster hall, 519 b
Zyithum, 20

THE NAMES OF SEVERALL Nations, Cities, and great Townes, Rivers, Promontories or Capes, &c. of Britaine in old time; such as Caesar, Tacitus, Ptolemæus, Antoninus, Notitia Provin- ciarum, and other Authours, have made mention of:

together with the later and moderne names.

A

A Ballaba,	Appleby in Westmorland.	761
Abone,	Avington or Avenon in Gloucestershire.	358
Abus æstuarium,	Humber in Yorkshire.	710
Æfica,	Netherby upon Eike in Cumberland.	781
Ad Anſam,	Neere Coggeshall in Essex.	449
Ad Pontem,	Paunton in Lincolnshire.	537
Adurni Portus,	Ederington.	313
Agelocum.	Little-borough upon Trent.	549
Alone,	Whitley in Northumberland.	794
Alannius flu.	Avon in Wiltshire.	243
Alaunus flu.	Alne in Northumberland.	813
Amboglanna,	Ambleside, haply.	760
Ancalites,	The Hundred of Henley.	389
Amnitum vel Samnitum Inſulæ,	Iſles upon the Weſt coaſts of Britaine in France, 221.p. 2
Andates Lucus,
Anderida,	Newenden in Kent.	351
Angli, ſive Anglo-Saxones,	Engliſhmen or Engliſh-Saxons.	127
Antona ſive Aufona,	Auſon.	507-508
Antiveſtæum,	The Cape of Cornwall.	187
Aquæ Solis,	Bath in Somerſetſhire.	233
Arbeia,	Ierby.	769
Ariconium,	Kencheſter neere Hereford.	618
Atacoti, or Attacotti,		127
Atrebatii, or Attrebatii,	Barkſhire.	278
Augusta,	See Londinum.
Axelodunum.	Hexham in Northumberland.	807

B

B Adiza,	Bath.	233
Bannavenna, or Bannaventa,	Weedon on the ſtreet.	508
Belerium,	The ſame that Antiveſtæum.
Belgæ,	Sommerſetſhire, Wiltſhire, and Haſtiſhire.	219
Bellifama flu.	Rhibell in Lancaſhire.	749
Bennotes,	High-Croſſe.	518
Bibroci,	The Hundred of Bray in Barkſhire.	289
Binovium,	Bincheſter.	738
Blatum Bulgium,	Bulneſſe in Cumberland.	775
Bleſtium,	Old towne in Herefordſhire.	787.617
Bonium,	Banchoir in Fliſſhire.	602.681
Bononia,	Bollonge in France.	349
Borcovicus,	Borwick in Northumberland.	809
	Brannodunum,

Names of antiquitie.

Brannodunum,	Brancerſter in Norfolke.	488
Brcmenium,	Brampton in Northumberland.	803
Bremeturacum,	Brampton in Cumberland.	783
Bremetonacum,	Overborrow in Lancaſhire.	753
Brigantes,	Torkſhire, Lancaſhire, E. of Durham, Weſtmoreland, Cumberland.	685
Brovonacum,	Brougham.	762
Bullaum,	Buelib in Brecknockſhire.	627
Burrium,	uſke in Monmouthſhire.	636

C

C Æſarromagus,	Neere Brentwood in Eſſex, fontè.	442
Calcaria,	Tadcaſter in Torkſhire.	698
Callena,	See Gallena.
Camboriturum,	Cambridge.	486
Camalodunum,	Maldon.	446
Camundolunum,	See Cambodunum.
Cambodunum,	Ruins neere Aldmonbury in Torkſhire.	692
Calagum,	See Galacum.
Canonium,	Chenſford in Eſſex.	445
Cantum,	Kent.	324
Cantium Promontorium,	The foreland of Kent.	342
Cangi,		231
Caſtra Exploratorum,	Burgh upon Sands.	773
Caſtra Conſtantia,	Conſtance in Normandy.	224
Caffii,	The hundred of Caſlow in Hertfordſhire.	393
Caffiterides,	The Iles of Syth.	227
Caturaſtonium,	Cataſtike in Torkſhire.	730
Cartiuechiani,	Buckingham, Bedford, and Hertfordſhires.	391
Caulennæ,	See Gaufennæ.
Cenio flu.	The river by Tregeny in Cornwall.	190
Ceni-magni,	See Iceni.
Cilurnum,	Colterford in Northumberland.	806
Claſentum,	South hanton.	261
Clevum,	Gloceſter.	360
Coccium,	Riblechoſter in Lancaſhire.	752
Colonia,	Colcheſter in Eſſex.	450
Candate,	Congleton in Cheſhire.	608
Concangii,	Baronie of Kendale.	759
Condercum,	Cheſter upon the ſtreete in the Biſhopricke of Dur- ham.	742
Combretonium,	Brettenham in Suffolke.	463
Conovius flu.	The river Conway in Wales.	669
Conovium urbs,	Caer hean upon Conway in Caernarvonſhire.	ibid.
Convonnos inſula,	Canvey at the Tamis mouth.	441
Congavata,	A place upon Caudbecke in Cumberland.	778
Corinium,	Circeſter or Cirenceſter in Gloceſterſhire.	366
Coritani,	Northamptonſhire, Leiceſterſhire, Rutlandſhire, Lin- colnſhire, Nottinghamſhire, Darbyſhire.	504
Cornavii,	Warwickſhire, Worceſterſhire, Staffordſhire, Shropſhire, and Cheſhire.	560
Corſtopitum,	Adorpit in Northumberland, fontè.	808
Coffini,		833
Croco-calana,	Ancaſter in Lincolnſhire.	537
	Cunctio

Names of antiquitie.

Cunetio,	Marlborow or Kenet in Wiltshire.	255
Curia,	Corebridge in Northumberland.	808

D

Danmonii,	Cornwall and Denbire.	183
Danmoniorum Promontorium,	The Lizard in Cornwall.	189
Danum,	Danaster in Yorkshire.	690
Delgovitia,	Godmundham in Yorkshire.	711
Derventio,	Auldby upon Derwent in Yorkshire.	709
Deva flu.	Dee in Cheshire.
Devana five Deva urbs,	Chester or West-chester.	604
Dictum,	Diganwey.	669
Dimetæ,	Westwales, Caermardinsbire, Penbrochshire, and Cardigansbire.	647
	Glocestersbire and Oxfordbire.	354
Dobuni, five Boduni,	See Dorovernum.
Dorobernia,	Dover.	344
Dubris,	The Creeke at Dunesby neere whiuby in Yorksbire.	718
Dunum finus,	See Corinium.
Ducornovia,	Dorsetsbire.	209
Durotriges,	Redborn.	413
Dur-co-brivæ,	See Durnovaria.
Durnium,	Caster neere Wandleworth in Huntingdonshire.	501
Durobrivæ,	Dorchester.	212
Durnovaria,	Rochester.	332
Durobrovæ,	Leueham in Kent.	331
Durolenum,	Old foord upon Lee in Essex.	439
Durolitum,	Gormonchester,	498
Durofiponte,	Canterbury,	336
Durovernum,

E

Eboracum,	Yorke.	701
Epiacum,	Papcastle in Cumberland.	768
Etoletum,	The wall in Staffordbire.	587
Extensio Promont.	Easton Nesse in Suffolke.	467

F

Fretum Britannicum,	The streight of Callis.	345
---------------------	-------------------------	-----

G

Gabranto vicorum portuosus finus.	Sureby in Yorksbire.	114
Gabrocentum,	Gateshead in the Bishoprick of Durham.	743.818
Gallatium,	Whealp-Castle in Westmorland.	762
Gallana,	Walle-wic.	802
Gallena,	Wallingford.	761
Ganganorum Promont.	Lbeyn in Caernarvonshire.	668
Garianonum,	Tarmouth.	477
Garienis flu.	Tare river in Norfolk.	476
Gauferonnæ,	Brig-Casteron upon Walsb.	534
Genuia,	Northwales.	660
Glannoventa,	Upon Wensbeck in Northumberland.	812
	Gleffaria,

Names of Antiquitie.

Gleffaria,		220
Glevum,	Glocester.	366
Gobannium,	Abergevenny.	635
Gefforiacum,	See Bononia.

H

Herculis Promont.	Hertypoint in Denbire.	207
Hunnum,	Sevenshale in Northumberland.	801

I

Iamefa,	See Tamefis.
Iccni,	Suffolke, Norfolk, Cambridgesbire, and Huntingdonshire,	456
Icianus,	Icborrow in Norfolk.	482
Idumanus flu.	Blackwater river in Essex.	448
Ilannavaria,	See Banavenna, for they seeme to be the same.
Isca flu.	Ex river in Denbire.	203
Isca Danmoniorum,	Excester.	ibid.
Isca, Legio Augusta,	Caer Lheon in Monmouthshire.	636
Iscaalis,	Iwelcester.	221
Isurium,	Aldburge in Yorksbire.	701
Jugantes, whom Tacitus mentioneth,	I wore not who they be, unless they were the Cantiani, that is, Kentishmen, whom the Welsh Britans were wont in their language to call Y-Gant. And yet it may seeme as probable, to read Brigantes, for Jugantes.	688
Itium Gallia,	Vissan.	348
Ituna flu.	Eden river in Cumberland.	760.776

L

Lactodurum, five Lactorodum,	Siony-Stratford.	397
Lagecium, vel Legeolium,	Castleford neere Pontfreit.	695
Legio II. Augusta,	See Isca.
Legio II. Victrix,	See Eboracum.
Legio xx. Victrix,	See Deva.
Lavatres,	Bowes upon Stanemore.	731
Leucarum,	Laghor in Southwales.	646
Lirtus Saxonicum,	East and South coast.	325
Lemanis,	Limehill or lime in Kent.	349
Lindum,	Lincolne.	538
Londinum,	London.	421
Longovicum,	Lanchester.	754
Luguvallum,	Carlisle.	778
Loventium,	Leveny in Brecknockshire.	628

M

Madus,	Maidston in Kent.	330
Magi,	Old Radnor.	623
Maglona,	Maclenish in Monigomerishire.	661
Magna,	Chester in the wall neere Halkwessell.	800.801
Magnus Portus,	Portsmouth, or Portchester.	268
Malcos,	Mula among the Westerne Isles.	215
Mancunium,	Manchester in Lancashire.	746
Mandeveffedum,	Manchester in Warwickshire.	569
	Magni,

Names of Antiquitie.

Magni,	See Magi.
Mediolanum,	Lhan Vellin in Monigomerishire.	662
Magioninium,	Dunstable.	402
Mearæ,	Northumberland.	796
Margid unum,	Neere Bever-Castle.	536
Mena,	Meneg in Cornwall.	186
Metaris æst.	The Washes betweene Lincolnshire and Norfolk.	480
Mictis,	See Vesta.
Morbium,	Morsby in Cumberland.	766
Maridunum,	Caermarden.	649
Moridunum,	Season in Devonshire.	206
Moricambe æst.	The Bay of Caerdronack.	773
Morini,
Morinorum Portus Britannicus,

N

N Idus,	Neash in Glamorganshire.	645
Neomagus, five Noviomagus.	Woodcote neere Croyden in Surrey.	302
Novus portus,	See Lemanis.

T

O Cropitarum prom.	S. Davids head in Penbrocksire.	653
Ocellum prom.	Kelmsley in Yorksire.	714
Olicana,	Ilkeley in Yorksire.	697
Olenacum,	Elenborrow in Cumberland.	778
Ocrinum,	See Danmonium.
Ordovices,	Northwales.	615.659
Ostidamni,		183
Otradini,	Northumberland.	796
Othona,	Ishan-cestre in Essex.	443

P

P Arifi pop.	Holderness in Yorksire.	709
Pennocrucium,	Penkridge in Staffordshire.	583
Pettuaria,	Beverley.	711
Pettriana,	Some place neere Peterill in Cumberland.	777
Picti,	The Picts.	114
Præfidium,	Warwicke.	563
Prætorium,	Patrington in Yorksire.	713
Pontes,	Colebrook in Buckinghamshire.	394
Pons Ælii,	Pont-eland in Northumberland.	809
Procolitia,	Coleceaster in Northumberland.	808

R

R Atæ,	Leicester.	519
Ratostibius flu.	Taf in Glamorganshire.	642
Regni pop.	Surrey, Sussex, and the sea coasts of Hantsire.	295
Regnum,	Ringwood in Hantsire.	259
Regulbium,	Reculver in Kent.	335
Ribodunum,	Riblecheste.	752
Rhurupia,	Richborrow neere Sandwich.	340
Rutunium,	Rouson in Shropshire.	592
	Sabrina

Names of antiquitie.

S

S Abrina flu.	Severn.	664
Salenæ,	Salady in Bedfordshire.	401
Segodunum,	Seion in Northumberland.	817
Segontium,	Caer Seion neere Caernarvon.	66
Segontiaci,	In Hantsire.	26
Setantiorum Palus,	Winandermer.	119
Scoti,	Scots.	684
Seræia æstuar. pro Deia,	Deemouth.	604
Segelocum,	See Agelocum.
Silures,	Southwales.	615
Sitomagus,	Therford in Norfolk.	471
Simeni,	See Icem.
Sinus salutaris,	See Gabrantovicorum.
Sorbiadunum,	Old Sarisbury.	246
Spinæ,	Spene neere Newbury.	283
Stuccia flu.	Stuyth in Cardiganshire.	658
Sulloniaca,	Brockley hill neere Ellestrey.	415

T

T Amarus flu.	Tamar.	196
Tamara,	Tamarion.	ibid.
Tamisis,	Tamis, or Teamis.	384
Tanatos,	Tanet.	339
Tefis flu.	Tese.	736
Tina flu.	Tine in Northumberland.	799
Toisobios,	See Conovius.
Tobius flu.	Tovy in Wales.	649
Toliatis,	Shepey.	333
Trajectus,	Passage neere Aust.	359.363
Trinobantes,	Middlesex, and Essex.	417
Tripontium,	Torcester.	505
Trifantonis Portus,	Southanton.	260
Tucis,	Berwick upon Twede.	816
Tucrobis flu.	Trove in Wales.	657
Tunocellum,	Tin-mouth.	811
Truxulensis Portus,	See Rhurupia, Tacitus named Trutulentis, for Rurupensis: as B. Rhenanus supposeth.

V

V Agniacæ,	Maidstone.	330
Valentia,		797
Vallum,	The Pits wall.	789
Varis,	Bod-vary in Flinshire.	679
Viroconium,	Wroxester.	593
Vedra flu.	Were in the B. of Duresme.	738
Veneti,	Guineh, or Northwales.	660
Venta Belgarum,	Winchester.	263
Venta Iccnorum,	Caster neere Norwich.	473
Venta Silurum,	Caer Went in Monmouthshire.	633
Vennones,	High-Crosse.	518
	Verlucio,

The Table of Scotland.

Verlucio,	Werrminster.	245
Verometum,	Burrow hill in Leicestershire.	522
Verolamium,	Verulam neere S. Albons.	408
Vertera,	Burgh upon Stanemore.	760
Uzella æstuar.	Ivel-moub.	221
Vicônia,	See Vinovium.
Vinonium aut Binonium,	Binchester in the Bishopricke of Duresme.	738
Villa Faustini,	S. Edmunds Bury.	459
Vindelis,	Haply old Winchelsey.	319
Vindobala,	See Vindomora.	776
Vindomora,	Wallefend in Northumberland.	811
Vindonium,	Silceaster.	270
Vindolana,	Winchester in the wall.	809
Vindogladia,	Winburne in Dorsetshire.	215
Virecium,	Wrocester in Shropshire.	593
Virofidum,	Werewic upon Eden neere Carlile.	778
Voluba,	Volemoub.	189
Voreda,	Old Perub.	776
Ufocona,	Okenyate.	593
Uzella,	Loft-Uthiel.	190.221.225

A Table or Index to Scotland.

A

A Berbroth or Arbrot, 44c	noble Ladie,	26a
Abercorn, 15d	Archibald Duglasse Earle of
Abercorn or Abercynning, 28d	Anguis,	12d
Abercorneth, ibid.d	Ar-Cluid what it is,	25a
Aberdon new and old, 46c	Armanoch,	52b
Ab-Thanes, 7d	Arrossan,	21c
Adain what it signifieth,	Argathelia or Argile,	37a
Aire a Sherifdome,	Argile Earles,	ibid.e
Ainza,	Argetorix a pety Prince,	32b
Albainy,	his wife how she answered Julia	ibid.b
Dukes thereof,	the Emperre,	ibid.b
Albinich who they be,	Argonauts,	38c
Alclith,	Armitage,	16c
Al-cluid,	Arran Isle,	22a
Alclum,	Arran Earles,	22b
Alexander Duke of Albanie kil-	Arrol, 42c. Earles thereof, ibid.
led,	Arthurs Chaire,	14c
Amber, 48b. name thereof, ibid.c	Arthurs Oven,	28f
Amund, or Almund a river,	Affshire,	52a
Andrews an Archbishopsrick, 7a	Athelftanford,	12d
Andrews,	Athol infamous for witches, 40b
Anguis or Angus,	Earles thereof,	40c
Earles thereof,	John Earle of Athol hanged on	ibid.
Annan a river,	high,	40d
Annandale,	Aubigni or Obigni Lords,	26b
Annandale a Territorie,	Eberad de Aubigni his de-	ibid.
Apollo Grammus,	vise and coat of Armes,	28c
Aptera,	Aven a river,	ibid.c
Arbella Steward a learned and	Azur gotten,	22c

190.221.225

Boides

The Table of Scotland.

Reides Barons,	21c	Coldingham, 10c. Colledge of	Dromund Barons, 36a. Women
Borderers, their behaviour,	18a	Justice,	of that race right beautifull,
Borthwick a Baronie,	13b	Columban,	ibid.
Boschain,	44f	Combat between Sir James Lin-	Drum Albin,
Borthwell Earles,	23d	deley and Baron Wels,	39b
Braid Albin,	39a	Comin or Cumena a mighty fami-	Drumem Castle,
Brankeney,	16b	ly,	36a
Brechin,	44c	Comin a mighty man murdered	Drumlanrig,
Brendanus,	22c	by Robert Brus,	17d
Brochty Crag,	43b	Commissioners,	Duff a King murdered,
Brun-Albin,	39b	Commissioners,	49f
Brus Lord of Annandale,	16c	Constabulary,	Duglasse or Duglasse a river,
Brus discomfisth the English,	30b	Constables of Scotland,	23a
Buchanan,	29a	Corner a river,	ibid.
Beavis Bulmer,	22c	Contry, the same that Sheriff-	Duglasse Earles of Angus,
Bugaban,	47f	dome,	36c
Bugaban Earles,	48d	Country Courts,	Duglasse Earles of Mortom,
Buth,	22c	Courts Civil,	17d
		Courts of criminal causes,	Duglasse a fast friend unto King
		Crawford Moore,	Rob. Brus,
		Crawford Castle and Earldedom,	23a
		Creightons a family,	Duglasse Earle of Wigton, Duke
		Cromarty,	of Tourain,
		Cromer,	23b
		Cross,	Duke a rite, when first brought
		Cruickston,	into Scotland,
		Culros, a Barony,	Dun a river,
		Cumbernald,	19f
		Cunningham a towne,	Dunbarre,
		Cunninghams a numerous family,	11c
		21f. their coat of Armes, ibid.	Dunbarton Sherifdome,
		Cunninghams Earles of Glencarn,	25c
		17c. 21f	Dunblan a Bishopricke,
		Cupre,	36c
			Dunbritton or Dunbarton,
			25a
			Dunbrittain frith, /
			18c Duncaves bay,
			54d
			Dun Dee,
			43c
			Dunfermling,
			32d
			Dunfermling Earle,
			32d Dunfrew,
			17d
			Dun pacis what they be,
			28c
			Dunkelden,
			41a
			Dunotry Castle,
			45d
			Dunnur a Castle,
			20a
			Dunsby,
			54d Dunstaffag,
			38d
			Duplin Castle,
			36b Dyrlton,
			12c

D

D Al,	37c
Dalkeith,	13b
Dalrea,	37c
Dalreudini,	ibid.
Dalrieta,	37d
Darly Lords,	24b
L. Darly husband to Mary	22c
Queen of Scots,	22c
David heire to the Crowne of	39c
Scotland, famished,	39c
David the first King of Scotland	10c
a religious Prince,	10c
Dales longest,	54b
Dee a river,	18c. 46a
Depth of the sea,	12c
Desic a french Captaine,	12a
Dicalidonis,	5a. 30c
Disert,	32c
Discesser first set out by Diony-	65
sius Bishop of Rome,	65
Donald of the Isles,	53a
Done a river,	46a
Dornock,	53c
Douglass. See Duglasse.

E

E bba Prioresse of Coldingham Nunnery, 10f. Her chastity and her Nunnes ib. daughter of Edelfrid king of Northumberland,	11a
Saint Ebbes promontory, ibid a
Eden or Eshan a river,	10c
Edenburgh,	13f
Edenburgh Frith,	ibid.
Eglington a Castle and family,	21d
Elfeingston a Barony,	39c
Elgina,	49c
John Eriskin earle of Mar,	47c
Th. Eriskin, Baron of Dryden
Vicomte Felton: first Vicount
in Scotland,	12c
Ern a noble river,	35f
Esk a river,	13b
Esther-

B b b b

The Table of Scotland.

Esterlings,	29 d	Hamilton Castle, 23 c. a family,	Kello,	10 e
F		ibid. their originall,	Ken a river,	18 e
Falkland,	34	James Hamilton Earle of Aber-	Kennedies a noble family,	19 f
Fast-castle,	10 f	corn,	Kennedie Earle of Castille,	ibid.
Fergus,	39 b	Hamilton of Peyle,	Kerrs a family,	10 b
Fergus Lord or Prince of Gal-		James Hamilton Regent of Scot-	Kerr Baron,	ibid.
loway, 19 b. His Armes; ibid. c		land, and Duke of Chastean,	Kerr Earle of Lothien,	15 f
became a Chanon,	ibid.	Herald in Poitoun,	Kilconath,	20 a
Fernherfts a Barony,	10 b	John Marquesse of Hamilton, 23	Kildrummi,	46 a
Fleanch the Sonns of Banquo,		Hay a strong and valiant man,	Kile,	20 c
	51 e		Kilflor,	49 f
Fleet a river,	18 e	Helior Boetius, an Elegant Hi-	Kilian a river,	52 e
Flemings, Barons,	29 c	toriographer,	Kilmarnocke,	21 b
John Lord Fleming Earle of		Height of Hills,	Kilmonerock,	24 f
Wigton,	18 e	Hellan Leneoc,	Kincardin,	36 e
Fife,	32 c	Hellan Tinoc,	King of Scotland,	7 e
Fife-Nesse,	ibid. f	Hepburnes a family,	Kinghorn Earle,	32 e
Fife Earles their priviledge,	35	Earles of Bothwell, ibid. 23 d	Kinlosse,	49 f
Forces,	49 e	Herris Baron,	Kinnadie,	37 d
Forbois Barons,	46 b	Hii an Island,	Kimroffe,	32 c
Fordon,	45 e	Highlandmen, 39 e. their de-	Kirkbird,	36 c
John de Fordon,	ibid.	scription,	Kirkonbright,	18 e
Forth or Frith,	12 e	Holy Ruid house,	Knapdale,	38 c
Frefianssea,	ibid.	Horesci a people,	Knights solemnly dubbed,	7 e
G		Henry Percy Hotspurre taken	Kyle, See Kile.
Algacoe Galauc,	31 f	prisoner by Montgomery, 21 d	L
Galloway,	18	Howburn,	Ladeni,	9
Galloway Eeles,	ibid.	Hume Castle,	Lairds,	7 e
Galloway nagges,	ibid.	Humes a great and noble family,	Lauric a Sheriffs dome,
Galloway Princes & Lords, 19 b		Hume created Earle,	Largis,	21 d
Gentlemen,	7 f	Hume Earle of Dunbarre,	Lauden or Lothien,	11 d
George of Dunbarre Earle of		Castle,	Lauber ariveret and towne,	10
Mersch,	11 b	I	Leave a lake,	38 d
Girnego,	53 d	James the second, King of	Leeth a river,	15 e
Glamys a Baron,	43 b	Scots untimely slaine and	Lennox,	24 d
Glasco an Archbishopricke,	7	much missed,	Lennox Earles,	25 d
Glasco an University and Arch-		James: the sixth, King of great	Lennox Dukes, their Armes,	26
bishops See,	23 d	Brittaine,	Lesley the noble Knight,	52 f
Glencare,	17 e	Jed a river,	Leith an Haven town.	15 c
Glines,	38	Jedburgh,	Levin a river,	29 d
Glotta, See Arran,	22	I-comb-kij,	Levinia,	ibid.
Gordons Earles of Huntly,	49	lland floating,	Levin a lake and river,	32 e
Gospatrick, Earle of Northum-		Inberow and Outborow,	Levingfions Barons,	29 c
berland,	11 b	Inch-Chafra,	Levington first Earl of Lithgo,
Goury a Country,	42 c	Inch Keith an Island,		15 c
Gouryes conspiracy,	12 b	Inverlothban,	Lin what it signifieth,	ibid. e
Grahams dike,	28 d	Inermeth,	Lindeseies a noble family, 22 f. 36
Granni, what they are,	13 e	Innermeth,	Lindum,	15 e
Grannzbain or Gramphil,	30 e	Innernes,	Lions a family,	43 b
Gries of Chillingham,	43 c	Johns towne,	Lithgo or Lindlithgo,	15 e
Guth what it signifieth,	15 d	John Duke of Albany honoured	Logh Aber a lake,	38 d
H		by the French,	Logh Cure a lake,	17 c
Hadinne or Hadington,	12	Johnstons a warlike family, 16 e	Logh Erre a lake,	35 f
Vicomte Hadington, ibid.		Irwin a river,	Logh Fin,	38 a
Haies Earles of Arol,	ibid.	Irwin a burrough,	Logh Kinkgram,	38 d
Haies family almost extingui-		Julius Hoff,	Logh Lomond,	24 d. 36 e
shed,	36 b	K	Logh Luthea or Louthea,	50 a
Haliburtons a family,	12 e	Aledon,	Logh Lorbes,	51 d
Haskhead,	24 b	Keiths a family ancient and	Logh Nefse,	50 a
		noble,	Logh Rbian,	19 b
			Lough Maaban,	16 d
			Loghquabrie,

The Table of Scotland.

Loghuabrie, 51 c
Longas a river, 20 f
Longus longus, 52 e
Lards who they be, 7 e
Lorigs slew Henry the Second K. of France running at Tilt, 5 a Lorn a family, 38 c
Lorn, ibid.
Loret Castle, 52 c
Loxa or Loxe a river, 49 e
Lowland men, 5 e
Loundoris a Monastery and Barony, 34 d

M
Ac-Consels, 38 b
Mac-Duff first Earle of Fife, 35 b
Maden Castle, or Virgins Castle,
14 c
Maitroff, 10 a
Malcolm Canmor, 11 a
Mar. 46 a. Earles, 47 c
Marchidun, 10 a
Marechals of Scotland, 45 e
Q. Mary deposted by her base brother James, 51 b Marquess a title, when first brought into Scotland, 7 e Maribha enamoured upon Robert
Brw, made him her husband,
20 a
Maxwell Earle of Morton, 17 e
Maxwels a family, 16 e
Menteith, 35 d. Earles thereof, ibide
Merch or Mers, 10 d
Merch Earles, 11 a
Mernis, 45 d
Methuen or Methuen a Barony,
42 b
Metellan Baron Thirlestean, 10
Monkes living upon their owne band labor, 10
Montgomeries a family, 21
Monuments of stone, with their inscriptions, 27-28
Montrosse, 44 c
Montrosse Earles, 36 e
Morton a place, 17 d
Mor wiridh, 12 e
Mull of Galloway, 19 b
Murduck executed, 35 d
Murray, 49 c
Murray Earles, 50 f
Murth-lake, 46
Muscamp, 36 b
Musselborow a towne, 13 b
Musselborow field, ibid. c

N
Abe a river, 53 f
Napier a learned man, 13 c

Nardin or Nan Sheriffdoms, 50
Nesse mouth, 52 d
Nesse a Lake, 38 d
Newbottle a Monastery and Barony, 13 b
Nid a river, 17 c
Niddisdale, ibid.
Nights shortest, 54 b
Ninian Bishop of Candida casa,
18 f
North Berwick, 12 e

O
Gilvi Barons, 44 f
Olipphant Barons, 36 b
Olorina an hearb, 49 e

P Palladius Apostle for the Scottish Nation, 45 f
Parliament, 8 a Pasley a Monastery and Barony,
24 b
Peblic a Towne, 10 c
Pennaet or Pennallon, 28 d
Perib the City, 41 b
Perth Sheriffdome, 40 b
Perth Earle, 42 a
Pitts divided into two Nations,
5 a
Pitts, 30 d
Pitland, 11 d
Pollac a fish, 24 d
Portus Salutis, 52 e
Ponny a fort, 21 c
Princes simply, 7
Prince of Scotland, ibid.
Prophecie of a Stone, 42 d

R
Ramsay, Vicount Hadington 12 b. his faithfulness and valour, ibid.
Ramsey Earle Bothwell, 21 d
Ratra a river, 48 a Ravinstrench, 32 e
Redhead a Cape, 44 e
Reginnud, 32 f
Reinfray a towne and Baronie,
24 a Retbuen the name of a Castle and Barony, 42 b
Reghuens Conspiracy, ibid b
Rhenda, 37 c
Rian a river, 19 b
Robert Bishop of Cathanes, Earle of Lennox and of Merch, 11 c
Rosburg or Roxburg, 10 a Rossia or Rosse, 52 a Rosse Earles, ibid. f

Roshe Barons, 50
Rothamay Castle, 49 b
Rothies Earle, 35 e 49 d
Rothies Castle, 49 d
Rothsay Castle, 22 c
Rothsay Dukedome, ibid. a Ronts, 38 b

S Salmons, 47 a Salmons breed, ibid. a Salmons hunted, 17 f
Salton Barons of Abernethy, 45 b
Sanctuary, 35 c
Sambquer Castle, 17 e
Barons Sambquer, ibid.
Scone 42 c. a Baronie, 42 e
Scottish Sea, 12 e
A troupe of Scotts in France, 25 e Scotland divided into seven parts, 56 d
Scouters, 12 f
Seimeler Barons, 32 e
Seikirk, 106
Sempil a place and Barony, 24 c
Sensschallies, 6 c
The Selson 8 d. by whom instituted and when, ibid.
Seton, 13. a towne and noble family, 13 a Sheriffdomes, 6 e
Sheriff, 8 c
Sheriff of Teviot Dale, 10 b
Slugh boundis, 186
Soland geese, 12 f
Solway a village, 17 d
Somervill Baron, 23 a
South Esk a river, 44 d
Spey a river, 45 d
Speyny castle, 49
Sterling Stewarty or Territory,
26 c
Sterling towne, ibid.
Sterlin or Strivelin a towne, 29
Sterling or Esterling money, ib.
States or Degrees of Scotland,
7 c
Stewarties, 6 c
Stewarts family how it began and arose, 51 f
Stewards a noble family of the bloodroyall, 20 f
Sir James Stewart gnardian to James Hamilton, 22 b
Stewarts the royall line of Scotland whence descended, 25 d
Walter Stewart Earle of Athol for his parricide cruelly executed, 40 f
Straith bolgy, 49 b
Strathern, 35 e
Straith Ern, ibid. f. Earles thereof, 36 d

B b b b b 2
Straths

The Table of Scotland.

Strath Naver,	53 f	honour,	10 c	Water of an admirable nature
Struthers,	34 b	Tine a little river,	11 f	Wemefcies a kinred,	48 a
Suit between Robert Bruce		Torricles, Barony of the Lord		Wemmie a Castle and noble fa-	35 c
John Bailioll,	17 a	Hercis,	17 e	mily,	32 e
Sutherland,	53 b	Tulibardin castle, 36 a. a Baro-		Whitberne, that is, Candida ca-
		nybid., and Earldome, ibid.		sa,	19 a
		Tweede a river,	10 c	Wifie, a river,	53 d
		Twededale,	ibid.	Wigton an Haven-towne,	18 e
			V	Wilford a valiant English Cap-	12 a
T		Turned into M.	45 d	taine,	54 a
Tichia, a Territory,	36 e	Uchiltrey Castle,	20 f
Tantallon Castle,	12 d	Uchiltrey Barons,	21 a
Toodunnm,	43 c	Ulbbred Fergus his sonne mar-
Tarbarth,	52 e	ried by his brother Gilbert,
Tarbar,	38 d
Tarus what it signifieth,	54 d
Taw the river,	35 e
Taw overfloweth,	41 a
Teifdale,	9 e
Teith or Taith, river,	36 d
Tenariff, an exceeding high hill,	52 c
God Terminus, 26 e. his temple,	28 f
TeViot a river,	10 d
Thames; d. what they are,	35 b
Thirlestean a place and Barons

A Table of the names of severall people and places of more ancient record in Scotland.

A Bravanus, Rian the river and Logh-Riantbe Lake,	Renfram Barony, Lenox, Stri- velin, Mensther and Fife,	22	Novantes. People of Galloway, Carick, Kyle & Cunningham,	18
19	Dea flu. Theriver Dee,	18	Merta, in Sutherland,
Alanna, about Sterlin,	30	Diva flu. The river Dee,	46	Novantum. Chersonesus five Promontorium. The Mull of Galloway,	19
Bodoera flu. The forth and frith, Edenborough Frith,	12	Epidii, people of Caledonia,	30	Nodius flu. Theriver Nid,	17
Caledonia and Caledonii, Cante, the people inhabiting Roffe,	52	Gadeni or Ladeni, Teifdale, Tweeddale, Merch and Lo- thien,	9	Orcas five Tarverdum. How- burne,	54
Carbantorigum, Caerlaverock,	17	Glota inf. The Isle Arran,	22	Randuvra. Reinfram,	24
Catini. The inhabitants of Ca- thaneffe,	53	Grampius Mons, Grantzbaire,	28, 30	Reinigonum. Bargen,	19
Cornabii. The people of Strath- navern,	53	Horefcii, haply the people inhabi- ting Esk-dale,	16	Selgorva. The people of Lidesdale Evesdale, Eskdale, Annandale and Nidsdale,	16
Castra alata or Castrum alatum, 52. Edenborough,	13	Iena. Theriver Ken,	18	Tamea, haply Tanea in Roffe.
Cerones, Afsimbive,	52	Ila flu. may seeme to be the river Wife,	53	Tatizali. The people of Bagnahan	47
Colonia Coldingham,	52	Ladeni, See Gadeni.		Tarverdum promont. See Orcas.
Colnie, flu. The river Killian,	22	Lelanonif flu. The river Levin,	24	Taus flu. Taus the river,	35, 41
Corda a town neere Logh-Cure,	17	Lencopibia, haply Candida Cafa or Whitherne,	18	Vacomagi. The people of Mur- ray,	49
Coria Damniorum, haply Came- lot,	29	Lindum, Linlithquo or Lithquo,	15	Vararis. Murray,	ibid.
Creones, See Cerones.		Littus altum seemeth to be Tar- barth,	52	Vermicones, haply Mernis,	45
Dampii, people of Clydsdale,		Longus flu. Loughlonges, ibid.		Victoria, haply Inch-Keith,	15
		Loxa flu. Theriver Loffe,	49	Vidogara, haply Aire,	20
				Vivodrum, See Orcas.
				Ucellum, a place in Enfdale,	16

THE

The Families of greater worth and honour in Scotland in this Booke mentioned.

[illegible]

A Table of Ireland, and the Isles adjoyning to BRITAIN.

A		Cassiles Archbishop,	82	Dunganon Baron,	115
Asbenties,	85	Casness,	224	Dunraguan Baron,	79
Admirall of England, ex-		Casle-Connell Baron,	81	Dunkellin Baron,	100
tent of his authority,	232	Caterlough County,	85	Dansany Baron,	95
Alderney,	214	Cattell,	63		216
Anglesey,	203	Cavanagh,	85	E
Antrim County,	112	Causes of rebellion,	101	Englishmen first entred Ire-
Annals of Ireland,	150	Caurus the winde,	59	land,	70
Annales of the Isle of Man,	205	Chamberlan,	214	Eastmeath,	95
Arran,	99.214	Cerne Island,	62	Essex Earle, 12. Lord Deputy,	117
Armagh County,	107	Chamber of Ireland,	90		216
Arkle, Lords thereof,	90	Chevers,	113
Arts and piety sowed among		Chairly Boy,
nations in sundry ages,	85	Clany-boy,
B		Clan-Morris,	75	F
Bagnall,	121 &c.	Clancar Earle,	76	Farn Island,	120
Bannomanna,	62	Clan-Donels,	101	Fermoy Vicount,	78
Barry,	78	Clan William,	81	Farn, Isle,	106
Base poole,	227	Clan Gibbon,	ibid.	Fermanagh County,	120
Bernacles,	204	Clogher Bishopricks,	115	Fitz Eustace Barons,	88
Barnwell,	94-95	Clare County,	98	Fitz-Parrie,	8
Bermingham,	100	Clan Richard Earles,	100	Fitz-Gerals,	82.87
Bingham,	101.103	Cogan,	70.79	Fitz-Stephens,	70.79.89
Biffes,	113	Connachs or Conaught,	98	Fitz-William Lord Deputy,	121. &c.
Bishopricks of Ireland, 73. Poore,	106	Colby,	86	Fitz Urse,	107
Blunt, Lord Montjoy,	77.105	Conaught Lords,	104	Fortunate Isles,	217
107. Deputy,	133. &c.	Constables of Ireland,	97	Frozen sea,	219
Boyle Barony,	103	Colran County,	114
Brebon Law,	140	Columb Saint,	215	G
Britainer inhabite Ireland,	65	Corke, County, 77. a kingdom,	79	Garney,	224
Britain herbe,	222	Courts of Ireland,	72	Gallaglasser,	101.147
Brittain Huis,	221	Coner Bishopricks,	111	Galloway County,	99
Brittish Armory,	ibid.	Curraghmore Barons,	79	Gavalock,	122
Brittish sea, 57. where deepeff,	227	Croft Sir Hugh flaine,	179	Genevill,	97.163
		Cwrcy,	71.77.53.209	Gersey,	124
		Cwrthbert a Saint,	220	Glinne,	90.113
		Cwirings, Coyne, Liverie,	76.101	Goodwin sands,	222
B				Gormanston Vicount,	95
Bark, 81. 100. 101. 104. 117		D		Lord Grey,	75
&c.		Darcy,	96
Burgus, what.	222	Deemstert,	204	H
Burb,	22	Delton,	96	Hawkes,	63
Busiphant Vicount,	78	Delvin Baron,	ibid.	Hereditarie territories of
Butler,	82.88. &c.	Deputies of Ireland,	71	England in France,	132
Burrough Baron, Lord Deputy,	115	Desmond Earles,	76	Hy, Island,	216
		Deslie Vicount,	79	Hirb,	ibid.
		Disenles in Ireland,	63	Hobies,	63
C		Deveraux,	90	Holy Crosse of Tipperary,	82
Celarea,	65	Dillon,	96	Holy Island,	62.220
Caven County,	106	Donell Gormy,	102	Holy-wood,	94
Cabir Baron,	82	Docwra,	133. &c.	Horles,	63
Carew,	76.79.85	Dublin County, 91. Citie and U-		Houth Barons,	94
Carick Earle,	82	niversity, 92. Marques,	94	Hussey,	95
Caransui,	88	Duke of Ireland,	ibid.
		Dunboin Baron,	85
				Ibarcan

The Table of Ireland, and the lesser Isles.

I		Mac Donells,	120	O-Tooles,	89
I Barcan Baron,	99	Mac Guir,	106.121	P
Ila,	215	Mac Genis,	109.120	P Alladius,	67
Jenevill, see Genevill.		Mac Mahon,	107	Pearles,	59
Jena,	ibid.	Mac Morogh,	69	Pelagius, an Arch-hereticke,	111
Iniskellin,	106.112.108	Mac William,	101.104	Perot,	103
Ireland called Ogygia, 64. called		Mac Tge,	77	Philipot, a good Patriot,	224
Scotia, 66. 117. inhabited by		Man Isle,	203.Lords, 213	Poëtz; Barons of Curraghmore,	79
Britaines, 65. not conquered by		Mac Swin,	117	Preßholm,	203
Romans, 66. entred by Henrie		Mac Shees,	83	Preslon,	91
the second, 69. devided, 71.		Majo County,	100	Professions hereditarie,	141
neglected,	118	Mandeviles,	109.213	Plonckets,	94.95.96
Irishmen out of Spaine,	66	Marshall E. of Penbrocke,	70.86
Irish Monkes, 67. 110. taught		Marshall of Ireland,	72	Q
the English to write, 68. their		Malachie a Saint,	108	Queenes County,	86
Manners,	140	Meth, 94. the Bishop, 95. the
Ireland neglected,	218	Lords,	96	R
K		Messier,	155	R Heban Barones,	86
K Erry County,	75	Monaghan County,	107	"Ridiculous conceit,	75
Kilkenny County,	84	Mont-Garret Vicount,	89	Ringrom Baron,	77
Kildare County, 87. Earles,		Mont-Norris,	107.134	Roeb. Baron,	78
Killalo Bishoppicke,	100	More,	105	Roscomon County,	103
Killin Baron,	95	Morley,	72	Russell Lord Deputy,	121
Kinfale,	135	Munster,	74	Rugge,	63
Kings County,	86	Muscogros,	99	S
Kernes,	147	N		S Almons,	59.114
Knight of the Valley,	81	N Angle,	96	Savage,	112
Konifoe battell,	100	N Navan a Baront,	95	Saint Bernard,	108
L		Negente or Nugent,	96	Saint Brigid,	87
L Acy,	82.95.96.&c.	Norris Sir John,	122.&c.	Saint Lawrence, Baron of Houn,
Leinster,	203	Normandie left,	226	94. Saint Michael,	86
Leinster Marquesse,	84	O		Saint Patrick Sepulcher,	110
Leicestre,	94	O'Brien,	82	Purgatory,	116
Lertrim County,	86	O-O-Brius,	89	Saint Owen,	227
Lertrim Baron,	103	O-Caban,	114	Saxons Islands,	220
Leisefon,	ibid.	O-Carell,	69	Sealmey,	202
Limerick County,	135	O-Conor Dnn,	102.104	Serk,	227
Lewis,	81	O-Donell,	117	Scotts,	117
Lewie,	216	O-Hagan,	109	Shaving of Irish,	107
Lindisfarn,	220	O-Hawton,	ibid.	Shires of Ireland,	37
Lixnaw Baron,	75	O-Kelly,	103	Shetland,	219
Lovell,	85	Ogygia,	62	Sidy, Lord Deputy,	97.121
Longford County,	97	O-Mahon,	76	Silly Isles,	227 &c.
Londry,	202	O-Mailly,	86	Slane Baron,	95
Louth County, 105. Earle, ibid.		O-More,	ibid.	Slego County,	102
Baron,	106	O-Mcale election,	114.120	Small Island,	201
Lycanthropia a disease,	83	Earle of Tir-Oen,	122.&c.	Smrys a stone,	225
M		Oleron,	232	Steward of Ireland,	80
Ma Andan,	85	O-Pharoll,	97	Spaniards in Ireland,	75.77
Mac Carry,	77	O-Quin,	131	Stanburff a learned man,	66
Mac-Clen,	216	O-Ryley,	106	Stepholme,	202
Mac Connell,	102.113.216	Orcaes Isles, 216. Earles,	217	Stella Maria,	230
Mac Gnilly,	113	Ormond,	82	Stockholme,	202
		O-Rorkes,	103	Strongbow,	69.87
		O-Smilivants,	76	Stukeley,	94
		Ossery Earle,	82	Surley Boy,	113
		Ongant,	88	Suffex Earle Lord Deputy,	121

T		Turlogh Lenigh, Tates,		115 96		W
T Albet,		79,80,94,155		V		VV Alsh,
Tanistry,		141		V Alensia Baron,		Warren,
Thule,		218		Verdon,		86,132
Three sisters,		84		Vernayle,		Waterford County, 79. Earles,
Tipperary County, 82. Earle,		ibid.		Verrard,		88
Tireconel County,		115		Vergivian Sea,		West Meath County,
Tirell,		91,96		Vesey,		61
Tiroen County,		114		Vines why not in Britain,		87
Teams or Tuon Archbisshopricke,		100		Ulster, 104. Earles,		63
Trimletstown Baron,		95		Upper Ossery Baron,		117
Twomond Earles,		99		Uringhts,		84
Tullo Vicount,		85 c. & f		Ushant,		114
				Usher,		231
				Uike-bab,		94
						63
						Y
						Y Dron Baronia,
						85

Ancient names of Places and Rivers in Ireland.

A Rgita flu.		117	Erdini,	106	Notium Prom.	76
Aufoba flu.		99	Gangani,	98	Oveca flu.	90
Anteri,		100	Hieron Prom.	89	Ravins flu.	102
Bingus flu.		84	Ibemi,	76	Rheba,	8
Boreum Prom.		117	Iernus flu.	ibid.	Rhobogdii,	115
Brigantes, or Brigantes,		84	Isannium Prom.	109	Rhobogdium Prom.	116
Buvinda flu.		95	Laberns,	94	Rigia,	97
Cauci,		90	Libinus flu.	91	Rigia altera,	116
Concani,		98	Logia flu.	116	Senns flu.	97
Coriandi,		77	Luceni,	74	Velabri,	76
Darnii neere Dorrie,		104, 116	Macolicum,	97	Vennicium Prom.	117
Daurona,		78	Menapia,	89	Vennicini,	115, 117
Dunum,		109	Medona flu.	84	Vidua flu.	117
Duri flu.		75	Nagnata,	89	Vinderns flu.	113
Eblana,		91	Nagnata,	102, 103	Vodia,	77
Eblani,		84	Nagnata,	ibid.	Voluntii,	104

Ancient names of the Isles adjacent to Britaine.

A Cmode,	220	Dumna,	216	Hebrides,	215
Amnitum, See Samnitum		Ebude,	215	Hesperides,	228
insule,	231	Ebuda prima,	216	Jera,	223
Adros called also Andium,	203	Ebuda secunda,	ibid.	Limnos,	202
Axantos, See Uxantifa,	231	Evodia,	214	Liga,	227
Barfa,	227	Eleutride,	220	Lifa,	ibid.
Berge,	218	Epidium,	215	Milia, haply Vellia,	223
Birchanis,	221	Edri,	203	Menavia,	203, 205
Ca/area,	214	Fortunate Islands,	217	Monas,	203
Cassiterides,	227	Gleffaria,	220	Monada,	ibid.
Cannes,	222	Glotta,	22, 214	Mula, or Malcos,	215
					Nerigon,

Nerigon,	218	Saxorum insula,	221	Thule,	218
Nessiada,	231	Sena,	231	Tolapio,	223
Ocetis,	216	Siambis,	ibid.	Veila or Vella,	223
Orcades,	ibid.	Siade,	227	Venetica insula,	231
Pomona,	ibid.	Sicdelis,	ibid.	Vindelis. Old Winchelsey,
Rigina, or Rieluna,	215	Silimnus,	203	Uliarus,	233
Sanitum insule,	231	Silina,	227	Uxantifa,	231
Sarnia,	225	Tanatos,	222

FINIS.

